We have thus discussed the first sin forbidden in this commandment: the worship of images. More sins are comprehended in this commandment, however, and we shall present them briefly. The second sin is to have a nonreligious disposition of heart. This occurs when there is no impression of God, no fear of God, and no love for God; no effort to either know, seek to know, or do His will; no esteem for the Word of God or for ministers; no desire to be united with the people of God, to confess the Lord, and to live to His honor; and therefore no coming to church, or doing so only on rare occasions when one does not know what else to do, or else merely to observe or to be seen. We read of this as follows: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Psalms 14:1); "But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised His words" (2 Chronicles 36:16); "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is" (Hebrews 10:25). The third sin is will-worship. This consists in serving God in a manner of our own devising, or in a manner which has been suggested to us by men -- doing so without concern and investigation as to the manner in which God wants to be served. We then imagine that God will be pleased with our work as long as we have a good intent to serve Him by means of that activity. The Lord Jesus rejects this in Matthew 15:9. The fourth sin is laxity and listlessness in the performance of religious duty. This occurs when there always seems to be an obstacle at the time for engaging in specific religious activity, and one is then satisfied if he is lawfully hindered. He goes up as a criminal to prison. It is quickly done, and, just as a child, he is glad when "amen" may be said. His conscience has then been put somewhat at ease. There is no time to read the Word of God, or if he reads it to do his duty, it is without desire and without attentiveness. He selects a short chapter or a short psalm, and is glad when he is finished with it. This will also be the case relative to public worship. For the least little reason he will stay out of church, and if he is there, he allows his thoughts to wander in all directions. He then goes to sleep and blames the minister -- his preaching being so unspiritual and long. To reflect upon what has been heard, or to relate it to others, is a task which is too cumbersome and not according to custom. When the sermon is finished, all is finished. To such it is applicable: "Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! " (Malachi 1:13); "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of My mouth" (Revelation 3:15-16). The fifth sin is to rest in such a routine performance. One has said his morning and evening prayer, read a chapter, been to church twice, never neglected the Lord's Supper, and given his alms. What more is needed? All is well; I have done my duty and with this one is satisfied. One is of good courage that the Lord will take him into heaven, even though he has neither knowledge of the way of truth nor of spiritual motions. Of such the Lord says: "Forasmuch as this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour Me, but have removed their heart far from Me ... therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29:13-14). The sixth sin is hypocrisy in religious practice. We practice this when in the engagement of religious exercise we have ourselves in view so that we may be honored by men. This occurs when a minister stirs up his gifts, appears to be filled with the spirit in prayer, preaches with much fire, but with all this, his objective is to be esteemed as godly and learned and to have the praise and esteem of the people. How abominable! This occurs when a person faithfully comes to church and sits there gravely and attentively in order to gain the reputation of being pious, or sings to let his voice be heard and how well he knows the tune. This also occurs when one sighs loudly during prayer, and makes worshipful and even foolish gestures in order to be seen and heard. This takes place when a person puts on a show of being very attentive during the sermon, while in the meantime he is secretly looking about to observe whether others see him. It is also the case when one casts but little in the basket of the deacon and is desirous that it sounds as if it were a great gift. In one word, hypocrisy is to create the appearance of serving God while in reality having men in view, and thus one's self (cf. Isaiah 58:2-3; Ezekiel 33:30-32). The seventh sin is to make physical representations of God in our minds. God reveals Himself to the soul of men as a Spirit, doing so in a manner much more devoid of the physical than can be expressed. When the natural man initially thinks upon God, however, he spoils this initial reflection upon God and changes that which is spiritual into something physical. One will either seek to maintain this physical representation of God, finding delight in creating various representations of God in the mind, or it will be contrary to the will of the person engaged in thought, who wishes to have spiritual thoughts of God but cannot do so -- this being caused either externally due to people speaking of God, or due to Satan's influence upon the imagination. The latter is not the sin of the person, but of Satan; that is, if the person is only passively involved, abhorring this, and laboring to resist it (John 4:24). The eighth sin is to have fellowship with idolatrous religious practices. This occurs when one goes to the mass out of curiosity for its idol (be it in their church or carried about on the street); or when one bows himself out of secret respect or reverence for their images; or if one observes the popish holidays known for their revelry (such as St. Nicholas, Three Kings, Copper Monday, Halloween, etc.) and revels, drinks, and plays likewise. One ought to follow in David's footsteps, who said, "Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god: their drink offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take up their names into my lips" (Psalms 16:4).

These then are the primary sins forbidden in this commandment. The Virtues Enjoined The virtues enjoined in this commandment are, first of all, the full surrender of one's self to the service of God in all things, with all things, and at all times. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Romans 12:1).

Secondly, the serving of God according to His will; that is, our entire conduct is to be governed by the will of God as revealed to us in His Word. This engenders purity in our religious practice. "As the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men" (Ephesians 6:6-7).

Thirdly, the serving of God with the soul; that is, with the spirit, in a spiritual manner, and with the intellect, will, and affections. "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name" (Psalms 103:1); "With my soul have I desired Thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek Thee early" (Isaiah 26:9); "They that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24).

Fourthly, the serving of God with a perfect heart; that is, without a divided heart, having and seeking something in addition to God. Rather, one must wholly and solely be devoted to this, doing so with exertion of all the faculties of the soul. "... know thou the God of thy father, and serve Him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind" (1 Chronicles 28:9); "... they had sworn with all their heart, and sought Him with their whole desire" (2 Chronicles 15:15).

Fifthly, the serving of God with a joyful zeal; that is, it must not be a burden, but a delight, rejoicing in the fact that God as yet wishes to be served by us. One must consider it a great privilege that he may serve God and that He commands him to do something; he shall therefore carry it out with great earnestness and zeal. "Who maketh ... His ministers a flaming fire" (Psalms 104:4); "(Be) fervent in spirit; serving the Lord" (Romans 12:11); "Be zealous therefore" (Revelation 3:19).

Sixthly, the opposing of false religion and eradication of idols and images. Everyone must do so according to his own station. The governments are charged to do this. "... ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire" (Deuteronomy 7:5).

Moses did this to the golden calf (Exodus 32:20); Hezekiah did this to images and the brazen serpent (2 Kings 18:4); and Asa did this to the dreadful idol which his mother had made, and therefore he removed his mother from being queen (1 Kings 15:13).

053. Chapter 48: The Third Commandment

----- CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT ----- The Third Commandment This commandment is also presented as a prohibition. It first of all consists of the matter forbidden, followed by a strong and urgent incentive. The Focus of this Commandment: The Name of the Lord

First of all we shall consider the matter forbidden. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." The object here is the name of the Lord. We understand this to refer:

(1) to the words Jehovah, Elohim, Lord, and God;

(2) to God Himself. "And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death" (Leviticus 24:16);

(3) to God's perfections: "And the Lord ... proclaimed the name of the Lord ... merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth" (Exodus 34:5-6); "Save me, O God, by Thy name" (Psalms 54:1); "...I will wait on Thy name" (Psalms 52:9);

(4) to God's help: "Through Thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us" (Psalms 44:5); "I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts" (1 Samuel 17:45); "The name of the Lord is a strong tower" (Proverbs 18:10);

(5) to the works of God by which God manifests His glory: "How excellent is Thy name in all the earth" (Psalms 8:1);

(6) to God's praise among the people: "Let them also that love Thy name be joyful in Thee" (Psalms 5:11); "... what wilt Thou do unto Thy great name" (Joshua 7:9).

We thus understand the name of God to refer to everything by which God reveals Himself and in which He is either praised or despised. "... to bear my name before the Gentiles" (Acts 9:15). The prohibition "Thou shalt not take ... in vain" pertains to this name. It thus pertains to saying or doing something by which God is neither honored nor acknowledged to be the God who He is, but rather is dishonored. "Vain" has the following meaning: that which is without purpose, unsuitable, thoughtless, irreverent, careless, frivolous, and without a holy objective -- thereby engendering an irreverent impression of God in others.

Secondly, the incentive added to this commandment is extracted from the threat of harm: "I will not hold him guiltless." Man may consider it to be a very insignificant matter, but God deems it to be a very great matter. Even though man is not sensitive to this and does not believe that he has committed a great sin, God considers him guilty and worthy of being punished, and He will also certainly punish him. For it is an act whereby one greatly despises God as well as a clear manifestation that he does not love God -- and thus a direct affront toward God. "... with the froward Thou wilt show Thyself froward" (Psalms 18:26). The Sins Prohibited The first sin prohibited is blasphemy. This occurs:

(1) When one ascribes something absurd to God, and with either words or gestures, despises or ridicules God, causing others to despise and ridicule Him also. "And the Israelitish woman's son blasphemed the name of the Lord, and cursed" (Leviticus 24:11).

(2) When denouncing the veracity, power, or other attributes of God, and denying and rejecting His providence, preservation, and government. "He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten. ... Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? he hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it" (Psalms 10:11;Psalms 10:13); "What is the Almighty, that we should serve Him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto Him" (Job 21:15); "the men ... that say in their heart, The Lord will not do good, neither will He do evil" (Zephaniah 1:12).

(3) If one attributes to others that which properly belongs to God alone and which He alone can perform. "But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils" (Matthew 12:24).

(4) If one despises, ridicules, distorts, and slanders the grace which God has implanted in someone as well as the manifestation of that grace -- that is, if one refers to the godly as hypocrites and to their godliness as hypocrisy. The Jews thus ridiculed Christ's confidence in God. "He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now, if He will have Him: for He said, I am the Son of God. Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias" (Matthew 27:43;Matthew 27:47).

(5) If one denies and ridicules the truth of God as revealed in the Scriptures. "That there shall come ... scoffers ... saying, Where is the promise of His coming" (2 Peter 3:3-4).

(6) If one has the name of being a partaker of the covenant, but does not live accordingly, thus causing others to blaspheme the doctrine of truth and godliness. "For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you" (Romans 2:24); "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of" (2 Peter 2:2).

Cursing The second sin is cursing; that is, to wish that God, the devil, thunder, or something else would manifest evil upon other people or one's self. The saints, inspired by God's Spirit and upon God's command, have cursed some men (cf. Psalms 35:4;Psalms 109:6;Psalms 109:20; 2 Kings 2:24). This is not to be imitated by others. Such curses are not prohibited in this commandment; instead, it pertains to such cursing which is done in mockery, playfully, without reflection, and proceeds out of hatred, vengefulness, or grief; or is done to confirm something and to be believed all the more fully. Forty men thus put themselves under a curse, so that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul (Acts 23:12). This was the sin Peter committed out of fear (Matthew 26:74), and in this manner Job, in sorrow, cursed the day of his birth (Job 3:1). Similarly, one person can curse another person. "... they bless with their mouth, but they curse inwardly" (Psalms 62:4); "... lest thou hear thy servant curse thee" (Ecclesiastes 7:21).

We must not give someone the opportunity to curse, and if someone curses us, we should not be disturbed, for it is not in the power of others to bring a curse upon us. "... so the curse causeless shall not come" (Proverbs 26:2). Rather, God will change the evil curses pronounced upon us into a blessing, as David said concerning the curse of Shimei: "Let him alone, and let him curse. ... It may be that the Lord ... will requite me good for his cursing this day" (2 Samuel 16:11-12). It is indeed our duty: "Bless them that curse you" (Matthew 5:44). The third sin is swearing unnecessarily, when, in general association with others, we swear an oath to confirm our words, without this being necessary and required. The Lord Jesus warned against this: "Let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil. ... Swear not at all" (Matthew 5:37; Matthew 5:34). The fourth sin is to swear falsely; that is, calling upon God's Name -- be it with or without imprecation -- to confirm a matter to be true which we either do not know to be true, or which we know to be false. This also occurs if we promise to do something we do not intend to do, or know in advance that we shall not do it. This can occur in the testimonies of a lawyer, defendant, or witness, and in accepting an office which is to be confirmed by oath. "I will bring it forth, saith the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by My name" (Zechariah 5:4); "And ye shall not swear by My name falsely" (Leviticus 19:12). The fifth sin is perjury. If we have sworn an oath to do something God has forbidden us to do, then we must not do so; we shall not sin by forbearing to do it. Rather, we have sinned by swearing an oath which pertains to such an evil matter. David swore that he would eradicate the house of Nabal (1 Samuel 25:22) which he nevertheless did not do and was happy that he was hindered from doing so (1 Samuel 25:32). If, however, we have sworn an oath which pertains to a good matter, we must be true to this oath, even if it were to cause bodily harm. "He that sweareth to his own hurt (Hebrew: to do evil, i.e., that which is to his own detriment), and changeth not" (Psalms 15:4). Since Saul killed the Gibeonites contrary to the oath which had been made toward the Gibeonites at the time of Joshua, there came a threeyear famine upon Israel (2 Samuel 21:1). "Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths" (Matthew 5:33). The sixth sin is the misuse of God's Name, when we carelessly, lightly, and without reverence say: "Oh Lord, oh God, oh Jesus! -- doing so out of custom, when astonished, in pain, upon sneezing, in toasting someone, in countermanding poor people, in sorrow, in foolish joking to stir up laughter, or whatever the case may be. To this also belongs the reading of vain books in which God's Name is misused; and being present unnecessarily at conversations in which God's Name is taken in vain -- as generally occurs during theater performances. To this belongs furthermore the irreverent hearing or reading of God's Word, for not only does God speak at that time, but the Name of God is then continually mentioned. Such is also true for thoughtless prayer and when one uses the Name of the Lord as a stopgap in the absence of verbal fluency. This also occurs when we make fun of Scripture texts, using them to engender laughter and to appear humorous. The seventh sin is to be silent when hearing God's Name blasphemed. "And if a soul sin, and hear the voice of swearing, and is a witness, whether he hath seen or known of it; if he do not utter it (that is, to those who are appointed to administer punishment), he shall bear his iniquity" (Leviticus 5:1); "He heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not" (Proverbs 29:24). We must make a distinction between the express blaspheming of God's Name and the misuse of God's Name. The first we must make known to the authorities, or else we are accomplices in this blasphemy. The second we must rebuke with our countenance, and also with words if time and circumstances permit this; that is, if there is opportunity. We are not to make bitter the person who is guilty of misuse (due to the shame which -- in his opinion -- is imposed upon him in the company of others), but rather to correct him. Or else one must find an opportunity afterwards to instruct and convince him in all humility, doing so without being pedantic and wanting to have the last word. All of this easily engenders bitterness. The eighth sin is the abuse of casting of the lot. The casting of the lot is an extraordinary or unusual request made to God that He would reveal His will in an important controversy which cannot be resolved by either wisdom, skill, or strength. It pertains to an issue that must be resolved, as there would otherwise be danger or great disadvantage to the country, church, or individual. From the injunctions given it is evident that the lot may be used (cf. Leviticus 16:8-9; Numbers 26:55-56); the saints have also made use of it (Acts 1:26).

God governs the lot and permits it to be cast according to His will. This is evident from Proverbs 16:33, "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." Casting the lot is a religious activity. It is the making of a request to God and must be preceded by prayer. "And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship. ... And they gave forth their lots" (Acts 1:24-26). In the casting of the lot one expects the outcome to be to the glory of God and the welfare of country and church. It is thus a religious activity and must be conducted with a religious heart. The casting of the lot is only to be done in important controversies and in the event of a significant circumstance upon which the welfare of society is contingent. It is also to be used in matters which otherwise cannot be resolved, or in matters wherein the hand of God must expressly be observed, such as the division of the land of Canaan, the selection of the two goats, and the election of the twelfth apostle. "The lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty" (Proverbs 18:18).

It seems that in the Old Testament the lot has also been used to discover the guilty party. In all likelihood Achan was singled out in this manner (Joshua 7:18). This is also true for Jonathan (1 Samuel 14:40-41), and Jonah (Jonah 1:7). However, this is not to be imitated. Even if Achan were singled out by the lot (which is not certain), it nevertheless occurred by divine revelation. Saul's behavior cannot be regulative, for he often did that which was not right. Finally, in Jonah's case the sailors were Gentiles.

Since the casting of the lot is a religious activity of an extraordinary nature by which important controversies are resolved, one must be fearful of abusing the lot either to satisfy curiosity, discover a secret, or neglect the use of the only rule of God's Word. The latter occurs when one asks God by means of the lot what needs to be done in doubtful cases in which he cannot make a decision, such as: whom to marry, the giving of counsel concerning a matter, the choice of a profession, whether or not one should move, etc. This would be a tempting of God and would arouse His wrath -- and rather than answering by means of the lot, He could let the lot fall to your disadvantage and destruction.

Abide by the Word of God and neither tempt nor provoke Him. If you cannot make a decision and are in doubt, then refrain from action, for you may not do anything except by faith.

Games of Chance

It is thus also evident that the abuse of the lot in games, entertainment, and gambling is a dreadful abuse of the providence of God. There are games which are played solely with one's skill or strength, and there are games played together with others such as chess, checkers, handball, fencing, shuffle board, etc. These are lawful in and of themselves, but they must be played with a holy objective: to refresh a weary mind, to preserve the health of the body, or to render one more fit for his next task. It must occur neither too frequently nor too long, for then you would fail to achieve the objective. You would waste your time and the heart would be estranged from God and become attached to the game. There are also mixed games which are partly played by chance and partly by skill, such as the game of cards, backgammon, etc. These are as unlawful as games of pure chance, for the casting of the lot also rules such games. If chance is entirely against someone, his skill will be of no avail. Then there are games which are entirely dependent on chance, such as games in which dice only are used, straws are drawn, etc.

It is unlawful to play games of chance, be it all by chance or in conjunction with skill. This is evident for the following reasons:

First, there is neither a command, example, nor argument in God's Word from which one can logically deduce the legality of games of chance.

Evasive Argument #1: This can also be said of other games in which use is made of either skill or strength.

Answer: This is not so, for it is founded upon God's Word that one may rest, sleep, eat, and drink, and at the same time, may endeavor to keep soul and body in good condition in order to be fit for the service of God.

Evasive Argument #2: A game of chance can also serve that purpose.

Answer: This cannot be so, since it is nothing but sin -- and a soul, if it were sensitive to sin, would be distraught. One may not draw a conclusion by relating that which is founded upon God's Word to that which is not founded upon it.

Secondly, the use of the lot is a religious activity governed by the Word of God, which states the circumstances when, the manner in which, and the purpose for which it may be used. It is a religious activity; that is, it is a seeking for guidance from the Lord and a making request that He would reveal His will. Therefore prayer precedes its use (Acts 1:24-26). It must be used in weighty circumstances wherein God's hand needs to be observed in an extraordinary manner. This was true for the selection of the two goats, the division of the land of Canaan, and the selection of a twelfth apostle. It must be done in faith, believing that the entire disposal is of the Lord (Proverbs 16:33), that He will reveal His will, and that one must rest in this with delight. It must also be used to settle disputes (Proverbs 18:18). All these dimensions are absent, however, in the game of chance, and it is thus unlawful.

Thirdly, the lot is an extraordinary means by which to discern God's will in a situation of extraordinary importance. However, in a game of chance there is neither a weighty matter to be determined, nor a dispute to be settled. One does not endeavor by such a game to know the will of God in order to be subject to it. Thus, to play a game of chance is to tempt God, and is therefore forbidden. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God" (Matthew 4:7). To tempt God is to depart from the ordinary way prescribed to us and to desire something extraordinary from God. It makes a mockery of God's providence and makes Him a servant of our foolish will.

Evasive Argument: The gambler may say: "I do not even think about this; I am only interested in honor and financial gain."

Answer: It is sinful to have such objectives, and it is even sinful not to think about God. One must think about God in everything. If one does not think about God in the act of lying, is it therefore no sin? Fourthly, the outcome of the casting of the lot -- which the gambler hopes to be to his advantage -- is not in the hands of the player; and yet he is hopeful. In whom does he put his hope -- in the devil? No. Is it fate (which the heathen designate as an idol) as if it were able to bring something about? No. Does one expect it then from the dice? Then one designates them to be his God. It is abominable to expect any happiness from any other source but God.

Evasive Argument: The gambler may say, "I do not expect the outcome from anyone; I only look to the outcome."

Answer: This would be the answer of the atheist; the outcome is ruled by God (Proverbs 16:33). It is thus inherent in the issue itself that one expects happiness from God in an extraordinary way -- this being by a game. This is nothing else but a tempting of and mocking with God, and to make Him a servant of one's lust.

Fifthly, games of chance -- not due to chance itself -- inherently engender harmful consequences. They draw the heart from God, which, due to His righteous judgment, is occupied with a bewitching power. If the outcome of the casting of the lot is disappointing, a silent fretfulness toward God arises in the heart, even though this may not be expressly stirred up. From this comes cursing, blaspheming, and displeasure toward the winner. The one loses his goods (be it much or little) and the other receives a profit which is corrupt and contaminated.

Sixthly, add to this the general witness of the godly and scholars of all ages, as well as of synods and imperial decrees. If there is occasionally one who favors games of chance, it is a papist or a worldly person who has no regard for the Bible. Or if there is an occasional scholar who approves, there are those who have refuted them and stopped their mouths. In doing so, such a scholar has brought a blemish upon himself and upon his other writings. Public Lotteries That which has been said also proves that public lotteries, instituted by the government to support the poor or churches, are unlawful.

First, games of chance and lotteries are essentially the same. The one is unlawful, and therefore, also the other. Consider therefore the reasons mentioned above as having been advanced here as well. The government's approval of the lotteries does not change the nature of the matter. Governments are not authorized to annul divine commandments and to make an unlawful matter lawful. The legality would supposedly be derived from either the government's approbation or from its objective. It cannot be related to the government, for one must obey God rather than man. The objective to support the poor and the churches can no more justify lotteries than Saul's objective in sacrificing to the Lord that which he had been prohibited to take. One must not do evil in order that good may come forth from it. A good objective must be attained in a lawful manner. The poor can also be helped in different ways, such as by charity, taxation, or other means which are founded upon God's Word. It is not even to the advantage of the poor, but rather to their detriment, for many who can scarcely earn a living, will in this way tend to poverty and must then also be supported.

Evasive Argument: Such ought not to participate in the lotteries.

Answer: They are forced by their landlord to participate in order to improve their circumstances. And if they cannot handle little, they will also not be able to handle much; everyone is obligated to preserve in an appropriate manner that which God has given him.

Secondly, lotteries take away from the one and give to the other, for many need to make a contribution and but few walk away with it -- doing all this without any skill, and apart from an inheritance and other honorable means.

Evasive Argument: The money is not taken from anyone, for they all contribute voluntarily.

Answer: No opportunity ought to be given for subjects to squander their goods, for God has forbidden this. Thirdly, participation in lotteries proceeds from the heart of a person who is not satisfied with his condition, wants to become rich, and consequently falls victim to foolish lusts. Everyone yearns for the highest prize, doing so in a way which has not been commanded in, founded upon, nor exemplified in God's Word, which teaches that the casting of the lot is a religious activity and an extraordinary means to ascertain what God's will is in a matter of dispute. This is not the objective of lotteries.

Evasive Argument #1: I participate in a religious manner; I am in need and have very limited means, and here is an opportunity to improve my condition. I expect the outcome from the Lord and pray for a blessing.

Answer: All religion is founded upon the Word of God; this is not true for lotteries. They are not a religious activity. One can therefore neither pray in faith nor expect a good outcome from God. It is a tempting of God, for one departs from the ordinary way and seeks it in an extraordinary way.

Evasive Argument #2: I do it religiously, for I give to the poor.

Answer: This is not valid. If you wish to give to the poor, give without expecting anything in return, for the poor will receive no more than a small percentage of your gain. You know in your heart that it is not your intent to give to the poor, but to acquire a good lottery ticket.

Evasive Argument #3: I have promised a good portion to the poor if I receive a favorable return from the lottery.

Answer: This is engaging in a business transaction with God: Give me this and I shall give Thee that in return.

Furthermore, it is nothing more than the price for a dog and the wages of a prostitute. God does not wish to have goods deposited in the offertory-box which have been acquired unlawfully. From these reasons -- together with those advanced against the playing of games of chance -- it is evident that lotteries are unlawful, just as games of chance are.

Fourthly, consider also that if lotteries were lawful, friends, neighbors, and acquaintances would then be permitted to establish lotteries among themselves. Everyone could then deposit something, and thereupon cast the lot as to who will have it all. This, however, would make the godly uncomfortable and the government would not permit it. The government thus admits that the legality of lotteries, which are of a religious issue, is contingent upon their judgment, or that lotteries are inherently either unlawful or detrimental in regard to the affairs of the republic.

We have thus demonstrated which sins are prohibited in the third commandment. The Virtues Enjoined The virtues enjoined in the third commandment are the following: First, to speak (and want to hear others speak) of God and divine things with all humility, reverence of heart, and manifestation of respect. It must become evident how glorious and awe-inspiring God is; and that He is worthy of being feared. Our very conduct must therefore cause others to have such an impression of God. How father Abraham humbled himself when he spoke to God! "Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and ashes" (Genesis 18:27). Even Eglon, the king of the Moabites, showed great respect for God, for when Ehud said to him, "I have a message from God unto thee," he "arose out of his seat" (Judges 3:20). The apostle exhorts us to speak reverently about God and divine things. "In doctrine showing ... gravity" (Titus 2:7); "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God" (1 Peter 4:11).

Secondly, to confess the Lord holily and boldly; that is, we must confess that He is such a God as He is, that we are loyal to Him, honor and fear Him, put our trust in Him, and that we are loyal to His truth, cause, and children. We must furthermore confess that we are not ashamed of this, but deem it to be the greatest honor to be known for this. "Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 10:32); "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ" (Romans 1:16).

Thirdly, to glorify God in all that we say or do. This is to be our objective and must stimulate us to declare His virtues. "But ye are a chosen generation ... that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9); "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by Him" (Colossians 3:17); "... do all to the glory of God" (1 Corinthians 10:31).

Fourthly, to be zealous for His Name and cause. This was true for Moses (Exodus 23:19-20), Elijah (1 Kings 19:10), and David as a type of Christ. "For the zeal of Thine house hath eaten me up; and the reproaches of them that reproached Thee are fallen upon me" (Psalms 69:9).

Fifthly, to call upon the name of the Lord; that is, to bow reverently before Him, worship Him due to His glory, and humbly request from Him all that you have need of in every given situation -- privately, or publicly with the church. "Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon His name; they called upon the Lord, and He answered them" (Psalms 99:6); "...My suppliants ..." (Zephaniah 3:10).

Sixthly, to swear by His Name in a holy manner. We shall dwell upon this a bit more in order that everyone may be instructed as to what an oath is, as well as all that it implies. This will be done so that everyone may examine himself in regard to the oath, and to give instruction, as well as to refute opposing parties. The Oath

We do not understand the oath to be a general reference to all that pertains to religious practice, such as we read in Isaiah 19:18 : "In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan, and swear to the Lord of hosts." Rather, we speak of it in the narrow sense; that is, the calling on God to be a witness in a certain situation. The Heidelberg Catechism describes the oath as follows: "A lawful oath is calling upon God as the only One who knows the heart, that He will bear witness to the truth, and punish me if I swear falsely." To swear an oath is to call upon God to be a witness. "Moreover I call God for a record upon my soul" (2 Corinthians 1:23); "The Lord be a true and faithful witness between us" (Jeremiah 42:5); "Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth" (Malachi 2:14). The oath is a calling upon God which renders one subject to either a blessing or a curse. "... upon my soul" (2 Corinthians 1:23). Sometimes this condition is not expressed and at other times it is. "So do God to me, and more also" (2 Samuel 3:35). The form differs. At times it is: "As the Lord liveth" (1 Samuel 20:21), and our form is: "So help me Almighty God!" The external form also differs; we raise the first two fingers. [Note: Such is the custom in the Netherlands until this day.] It is as much as if one says, "Oh omniscient, omnipotent, true, and righteous God, who dost delight in truth, whose eyes look for truth, and Thou who hatest all falsehood -- Thou who knowest the truth of this matter, my heart, and this my mouth and my deeds -- I pray Thee that Thou wouldest look down upon me in this case, and hear my voice, and that Thou wouldest be a witness of that which I now say and promise. I pray that Thou wouldest punish me in body and soul as an example to others, if I do not state and strictly adhere to the truth as far as I am acquainted with it (which I promise to do) -- and on the contrary, bless me according to soul and body if I state the truth and am faithful to that which I promise. Let it thus be evident that Thou art an omniscient, omnipotent, true, and righteous God." Who would then not fear to swear an oath?

There are five matters which belong to a proper oath: 1) by whom one must swear; 2) who may swear; 3) the matters which are to be sworn; 4) the manner in which the oath must be sworn, and 5) the purpose for which it is performed.

First, the One who is called upon in the oath and by whom one must swear is the only true God. One may not swear by angels and saints as the papists maintain and do, for 1) they may not be worshiped, as has been shown earlier; 2) they do not know the heart; 3) they have no power to either bless or punish; 4) God is angry with those who swear by something other than the true God, and punishes them. "They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy god, O Dan, liveth" (Amos 8:14); "... and them that worship and that swear by the Lord, and that swear by Malcham" (Zephaniah 1:5).

Evasive Argument: Those were idols, and were neither angels nor saints.

Answer: The reason why it was unlawful to swear by those mentioned was because they were not God. This is always applicable, for it makes no difference who is put in the stead of God when swearing an oath.

Objection #1: "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things" (1 Timothy 5:21). Paul swears here by the angels.

Answer: No mention is made here of an oath. Paul certifies Timothy in the presence of the elect angels. We do likewise in general conversation when we say: "I believe it, I confess it, or I say it before all who are here present."

Objection #2: Joseph swore by Pharaoh: "By the life of Pharaoh" (Genesis 42:15).

Answer: One is to conduct himself according to regulations, without which examples cannot be followed. For otherwise, one could conclude from this that we may swear by a living person -- yes, even by a heathen. Furthermore, there is here no calling upon Pharaoh and thus also no oath.

Secondly, those who are permitted to swear an oath may not be children, demented persons, drunkards, angry persons, liars, etc. -- not only because they are not credible, but also because they are not capable of having a right impression concerning God and the oath, and thus they cannot swear in a godly manner. In order to swear an oath rightly, one must be illuminated, regenerate, and godly. Since we cannot judge a person's internal state, however, all citizens are rightfully admitted to this. If they do not swear truthfully, they are responsible themselves. One thus accepts the oath of an idolatrous person and of others -- not because of the quality of their oath, but due to the condition which is placed upon them. It also urges them to be faithful, and it settles disputes.

Thirdly, concerning the matters which are to be sworn, the following applies: (1) These matters must be important, and it must be true that they cannot be settled in any other way (Exodus 22:11).

(2) Since the oath is a public testimony, one must be very sure of the matter and be without doubt, so that the oath be in truth (Jeremiah 4:2). "He that ... speaketh the truth in his heart" (Psalms 15:2).

(3) Since these are matters which one promises to do, they must be inherently good. Evil oaths, or oaths to do evil, ought not to be made (Mark 6:23; Mark 6:25-26).

(4) They must be matters which we can perform, which are within our power, of which we are conscious, and of which we are capable. Thoughtless oaths render us guilty (Leviticus 5:4-5). To this belong also the solemn obligations pertaining to specific promises to be faithful, it being in our power to do so. One can also add to this, promises made at baptism and at the Lord's Supper -- which are made upon the condition that the Lord gives grace and strength.

Fourthly, the manner in which one must swear must be as follows:

(1) It must be done out of love for the truth. "Therefore love the truth and peace" (Zechariah 8:19).

(2) It must be done with great respect for God, and while being conscious of His presence, for one speaks to God and by means of the oath calls upon God. "In Thy fear will I worship toward Thy holy temple" (Psalms 5:7).

(3) It must be done thoughtfully. "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God" (Ecclesiastes 5:2).

(4) It must be done when the government requires this, or even outside the courtroom if an emergency demands it; that is, if there are no other means to settle the dispute -- and thus to engender trust, so that the truth of a matter (which is of the highest significance) can be believed. "An oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife" (Hebrews 6:16).

(5) The oath must be stated clearly and distinctly, without disguising and distorting the matter, and without ambiguity. One may thus not say something which means one thing in his mind and suggests something different to the one who hears it, the words expressed having the meaning which the hearer assumed. These practices are generally referred to as Jesuit pranks, since they promote and make use of such practices. An example of this would be if one were to ask someone: "Have you seen that man?" and if having seen him, he were to answer "no," for he would understand it to refer to having seen him "on that tower," or "flying in the air."

Question: May not one make use of such ambiguous statements when swearing an oath or at other occasions?

Answer: The Papists answer in the affirmative and we in the negative. We do concede, however, that a person may say one truth, and be silent about another truth which is not asked. We also permit the use of words with a twofold meaning, doing so either artistically or to exercise the mind of others. Such are the riddles by which men have tested each other's intellect of old. Such riddles we also find frequently in God's Word, such as the riddle of Samson, the riddles of the Queen of Sheba to prove Solomon's wisdom, as well as the riddle of Jotham, Gideon's son, and of others. If, however, we are asked about a certain matter, or if a matter is to be confirmed by oath, we must answer clearly and distinctly in accordance with the intent of the questioner, lest he delude himself by interpreting our answer differently than we had intended, or that we would mislead him. This is evident for the following reasons:

First, to do so is lying, and the portion of liars is in the lake of fire, that is, in hell.

Evasive Argument: It is not a lie, because the words do not contradict the intent of the heart. One interprets it according to the manner in which it is said.

Answer: The circumstances at the making of an oath are such that one may not have a hidden meaning in his words. One's meaning must agree with what the words themselves suggest and be consistent with the meaning of the questioner. One not only lies if the words are contrary to what is in the heart, but he also lies if the words do not agree with the matter about which he is asked, and with which he is nevertheless acquainted. The oath is therefore restricted by those words, "without subtlety." If your answer is therefore without subtlety, you are not lying.

Secondly, to speak in this manner is to be deceitful. "The Lord will abhor the ... deceitful man" (Psalms 5:6).

Evasive Argument: One is not deceitful, since he says it as he means it.

Answer: This has already been answered, for it is expressly his intent to deceive. The objective is to mislead another by his words, who accepts that word or oath at face value. Thirdly, it renders oaths unprofitable and useless since one cannot depend on them, the oath being "an end of all strife" (Hebrews 6:16). It creates confusion throughout human society, for then one can believe no one else, and must always think that the person is adding something in his mind, secretly understanding it as such. All fidelity has then been removed.

Fourthly, then martyrs needed not to have suffered for the truth, for then one can answer in the affirmative to all errors, making them all to be the truth if he but gives a different meaning and intent in his mind.

Objection #1: The saints have made use of such ambiguous statements. Abraham said that Sarah was his sister.

Answer: It was the truth, for he was not asked whether she was his wife and thus he could be silent about that.

Objection #2: Samuel made an ambiguous statement when he said that he wanted to go to Bethlehem to sacrifice, since he really went there to anoint a king.

Answer: He was not asked whether he went there to anoint a king, and thus he could be silent about this. He spoke the truth when he said that he went there to sacrifice -- which indeed he did.

Objection #3: Christ made as though He would have gone farther, whereas He really wished to remain with them (the men of Emmaus).

Answer: Here is no verbal ambiguity. Christ, by making as though He would go farther, wanted to give them the opportunity to request Him to enter, upon which the Lord would be willing to do so. Nothing else is meant by this.

Fifthly, the purpose of the oath must be the glorification of God as being omniscient, omnipotent, true, righteous, worthy of worship, and majestic. Its objective is furthermore to promote fidelity and truth and to safeguard human communication. The Oath: Lawful for Christians

Having demonstrated what the nature and the required circumstances of the oath are, the following question presents itself:

Question: May a Christian swear an oath in the manner stated?

Answer: The Anabaptists answer negatively and we affirmatively. Our proof is as follows: First, the oath is a vestige of the law of nature, which is evident from its use among all nations. Secondly, it has expressly been commanded. "Thou shalt ... swear by His name" (Deuteronomy 6:13). Add to this all the cases in which God commands the use of the oath. It will not suffice here to say that this was for the Old Testament only, for it was not a ceremonial practice, but a moral practice, which is obligatory for all times. It has not been abolished anywhere in the New Testament; on the contrary, it has been used.

Thirdly, it has been prophesied that one would swear in the New Testament. "... that unto Me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear" (Isaiah 45:23); "... and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth" (Isaiah 65:16).

Evasive Argument: These texts do not refer to the swearing of oaths, but to the spiritual nature of New Testament religion.

Answer (1) The oath can therefore not be excluded, for it is an act of spiritual worship, it being a calling upon God's Name.

(2) We deny that especially in the last text mention is made of the spiritual dimension of religion; instead, it expressly speaks of the swearing of an oath. This is conveyed by the words, and the usage of the oath in the New Testament confirms this.

Fourthly, God has sworn (Hebrews 6:17), the angel has sworn (Revelation 10:6), and Paul has sworn (cf. 2 Corinthians 1:23; 1 Thessalonians 5:27). Thus, the swearing of an oath is a holy and lawful work. Add to this that the apostle determines the swearing of an oath to be a lawful matter: "For men verily swear by the greater" (Hebrews 6:16).

Fifthly, the purpose of an oath always remains the settling of disputes and controversies which cannot be settled in any other way but by oath. "And an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife" (Hebrews 6:16). Oaths, lawful Objection #1: The oath is dreadfully misused.

Answer: The abuse does not negate its use.

Objection #2: "But I say unto you, Swear not at all; but let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil" (Matthew 5:34;Matthew 5:37).

Answer (1) It is evident that Christ did not abolish the proper oath, for it is confirmed by the prophecies that one would swear in the New Testament.

(2) Christ refers to those oaths which the Jews were accustomed to swear. They swore by all manner of objects and made a distinction between them. "Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor!" (Matthew 23:18); And, "Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty" (Matthew 23:18). Christ is opposed to this swearing and in reference to this He says: "Swear not at all; neither by heaven ... nor by the earth ... neither by Jerusalem ... neither shalt thou swear by thy head" (Matthew 5:34-36). When the Jews swore a solemn oath, they would swear by Jehovah, but in common conversation they immediately had an oath ready for this or that situation. In reference to common communication Christ says, "Let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay." It is evil to go beyond this by adding an oath each time.

(3) There can be circumstances in which one may go beyond "Yea and nay," for Christ frequently uses the word "amen," and "verily," and the opposing party itself goes further than that when they confirm something by saying, "By the very truth of my manhood!" They thus cannot make use of this text here. The same answer also suffices for James 5:12, where almost the identical words are recorded. The Need for Self-Examination due to the Solemnity of the Oath

Many will be rebuked by what has been said thus far about the oath. This is true, in the first place, for careless individuals who can hardly say anything without adding an oath, such as: "By the truth of God!" or "by my soul!" and similar dreadful expressions by which God is provoked.

Secondly, many ought to be convicted of their thoughtless and perhaps false swearing of oaths in giving of testimony. This is true for the prosecutor who summons someone to court and under oath presents evidence, for the defendant who under oath must answer to the presented evidence, as well as for the witnesses. Let me ask you some questions, and answer them before the Lord. Did you indeed have a clear and distinct understanding of what you were going to confirm by oath? And if not, did you take the liberty to ask for the correct meaning of the evidence? Were you sure of your case? Did you proceed uprightly without distortion, ambiguity, or bias? Was the case indeed as you swore it to be? Did you swear with respect for God and out of love for the truth? Did you conduct yourself circumspectly?

Thirdly, many will thus be exposed who have taken the oath of office -- which is true for many who either hold minor or major offices. Were you acquainted with the contents of each article and each word, and did you know what each article required? Were you convinced of your competence to execute all the articles, as well as each one of them individually? Was there a heartfelt determination to fulfil each of them? Did you establish these articles as a rule of conduct from the moment you took the oath, so that they were always clearly before your eyes? Have you been true to your oath in every respect? Examine yourself by these questions, and realize that God knows it. Do not take refuge to this or that excuse, for they will not exonerate you.

Evasive Argument #1: It was my general intent to be faithful.

Answer: That is not sufficient, for with such an oath many would not have been admitted to their office. If the government would have been satisfied with this, it would not have formulated and designated specific articles.

Evasive Argument #2: The oath of fidelity implies a secret condition: as much as possible.

Answer: If you had expressed that condition when you swore your oath, you would not have received your office.

You have fabricated this condition yourself. This was not the intent of the government at all, and you should not have sworn an oath about something unless you knew yourself to be competent. And as soon as you discovered that you were not competent, you should have immediately turned over the office to another.

Evasive Argument #3: The oaths are defined in such a way that it is impossible for someone to be true to them. There is no one who faithfully observes his oath.

Answer: It is true that it is impossible to observe the oath as much as you would like. Furthermore, if it is absolutely impossible, you should neither desire the office, nor have taken the oath; or else you should resign immediately.

Evasive Argument #4: We are all weak men and we sin in all things.

Answer: One must not relegate perjury to the category of daily weaknesses. That which has been confirmed by oath must be within the realm of our competence or else one should not take the oath. The transgression has been committed knowingly and willingly, and by reason of the oath there is solemn onus upon you for punishment -- a punishment which you yourself have sought from the righteousness of God.

Consider the third commandment attentively. "The Lord shall not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain." Observe what is written in the following passages: "Or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered" (Ezekiel 17:15); "I will bring it forth, saith the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by My name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof" (Zechariah 5:4). Hear furthermore what the Lord says: "And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness ... against false swearers" (Malachi 3:5). Therefore, you who find yourself guilty ought to fear, and make haste to repent before judgment is executed upon you. From now on, observe your oath with diligence, or let go of your office. It is better to be poor and beg for bread than to be guilty of perjury and have abundance. Be fearful of the oath, and if you are called upon to swear an oath, do not hesitate to bear witness to the truth. However, give heed that you do it in a holy manner, lest you have remorse afterwards.

054. Chapter 49: The Fourth Commandment

----- CHAPTER FORTY-NINE ----- The Fourth Commandment This is the commandment which is contradicted by many, and is assaulted with highly elevated shields. If many would have had it in their power, it would have long been forgotten and rejected. As is true for all other commandments, it is still read to the congregation on every sabbath day as a rule of life, in spite of all who regret this. The Basic Contents of this Commandment The words of this commandment contain: 1) a short exhortation; 2) a declaration; and 3) incentives for observance.

First of all there is a short exhortation: "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy" (Exodus 20:8). At the very outset a nota bene is placed; that is, a word of great emphasis, which ought to make a deep impression upon our hearts. "Remember," that is, see to it that you do not contradict, reject, or forget this commandment. Remember it prior to the arrival of that day in order that you may order your affairs in such a manner that nothing will hinder you; prepare yourself for this day ahead of time. Be exhorted and be warned. The subject of this commandment is the sabbath day. This word is a derivative of the word shabat, which means to rest. The word "to rest" is used to indicate the cessation of something (Joshua 5:12). Wayyishbōth hamān, that is, "And the manna ceased (rested)." "To rest" is also to desist from the activity with which you have been occupied, and to refresh yourself after your labor. This is said of God: "...He had rested from all His work" (Genesis 2:3). Moreover, it is also said of men: "So the people rested on the seventh day" (Exodus 16:30). The earth is likewise said to rest when it remains dormant, is neither plowed nor seeded, and consequently brings forth no fruit. "Even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths" (Leviticus 26:34). From shabat are derived šabbāt (sabbath) and šabbā'at (sabbath), both of which signify rest. It also signifies a period of rest, be it when the word is used in isolation: "To morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord" (Exodus 16:23), or that the day or year is added to this: "What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane (yōm hashshabat) the sabbath day" (Nehemiah 13:17). In this commandment the word "day" is added one time and not the other time. The word "sabbath" has different connotations.

(1) It sometimes signifies a week of seven days or years which then terminates with the sabbath day. "Fulfil her week" (Genesis 29:27).

(2) It signifies the sabbath years (being the seventh year) in which one was neither permitted to plow, sow, nor harvest (Leviticus 25:10) -- and also the fiftieth year (Leviticus 25:10).

(3) It signifies the sabbath of weeks, lasting seven consecutive days, being the three feast days -- Easter, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles. There were also the sabbaths of days. These were the first and last days of the three feasts -- be it that they fell upon the sabbath or upon a different day. "On the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath" [Note: The Statenvertaling reads: "On the first day shall be a rest and the eighth day shall be a rest."] (Leviticus 23:39); there was the tenth day of the seventh month (Leviticus 23:27; Leviticus 23:32); and in addition to all these, it signifies the seventh-day sabbath which has its origin in the original seventh day, and which will endure until the end of the world. It is the latter which is referred to in this commandment. The activity being commanded relative to this day is being sanctified, that is, to be set apart for sacred use (Exodus 13:2). There must also be preparation (Exodus 19:11), a holy and lawful use (1 Timothy 1:8), and a regarding of this day (Romans 14:6). The Observance of the Sabbath The second thing to be noted relative to this commandment is its exposition or enlargement. This pertains to 1) the time of observance, 2) the manner of observance, and 3) the persons called unto its observance.

First, the sabbath is not to be observed every three, four, ten, twenty, or thirty days -- or whenever it pleases the government or the church -- but on the seventh day. "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God" (Exodus 20:9-10). It must then be one of the seven days, and it ought not to be repeated any earlier or later.

Question: Is it immaterial which of the seven days one observes, and if not, which of the seven is the sabbath?

Answer: The commandment conveys that it is the seventh, which follows upon six days of labor. "Six days shalt thou labor." This is not a command to work (which belongs to the second table), but a stipulation as to how long one may work, and a direction when one must cease to labor and when the sabbath begins. It says as much as that whatever we are under obligation to do must be performed in six days, for the seventh day is a time of rest; it is the sabbath of the Lord thy God. God rested on the seventh day and has thus given us an example. He has set this day apart for sacred purposes and has commanded man to hallow this day to the glorification of His Name. Secondly, the manner in which this day is to be hallowed is as follows: "Thou shalt do no manner of work." We are enjoined to serve God in the first commandment, and this encompasses all our activity of soul and body at all times, during both day and night. The fourth commandment, however, requires the service of God in the full sense of the word, that is, with cessation of labor. Not to work, or to rest, can be interpreted as doing nothing, being quiet, and being idle. It can also refer to nonactivity due to an injunction of God, commanding us not to work. It can also mean 1) not to do a thing or 2) not to work so as to enable us to do something else, since we cannot do two things simultaneously; or it can also refer to resting conjoined with being engaged in a different activity.

(1) Doing no manner of work does not refer to being idle, for God cannot be pleased with idleness.

(2) We are also not commanded to be idle, for God has not commanded that anywhere.

(3) The commandment not to work has also not been given to enable us to do something else in its place -- something spiritual. The implication would then be that one is not to be active, but rather to be engaged exclusively in the spiritual service of God. The cessation of labor would then be necessary due to labor being a hindrance to spiritual exercises.

(4) The command not to do any manner of work is also not conjoined to another element of sabbath observance, as if being idle and serving God were conjoined as two collateral activities. This would suggest that he who would have done no work would have observed this commandment partially, and this would likewise be true for him who had served God spiritually and nevertheless had done some work.

(5) Rather, doing no manner of work and religious worship must be conjoined as being one injunction. Doing no manner of work must be understood in a spiritual sense, so that it refers to the manner of religious engagement, and thereby is distinguished from religion in the general sense of the word as it is enjoined in the first commandment. It is not rest which is commanded, but rather, a holy rest. "To morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord" (Exodus 16:23); "... in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord" (Exodus 31:15). The work which is forbidden here is the labor of one's occupation, generally referred to as "work" -- be it traderelated labor, plowing, sowing, harvesting, business transactions, buying and selling, and all that whereby man earns his living. Not comprehended in this are:

(1) Religious labors, such as when ministers preach in the sweat of their brow, and whatever else transpires in the realm of religion. The priests killed the animals on the sabbath day and nevertheless did not sin.

(2) Works of absolute necessity, which are necessarily engendered by unexpected events on the sabbath -- be it that a fire breaks out, a person falls in the water, etc.

(3) Works of mercy, such as caring for the sick, and some of the labors of pharmacists, doctors, surgeons, and midwives (that is, as far as helping women in need and women giving birth to a child). This also pertains to feeding cattle in the winter, providing protection against the enemy, etc. Then it holds true: "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice" (Matthew 12:7); "The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath" (Mark 2:27).

Secondly, the persons by whom the sabbath must be sanctified are: "thy son ... thy daughter, thy manservant ... thy maidservant ... thy cattle ... thy stranger that is within thy gates" (Exodus 20:10). By this delineation, all men without distinction are forbidden to work. It is not sufficient that we rest ourselves, but we must also permit our children and servants to rest, and we must even oblige strangers who dwell or stay with us to rest. They are also men, and the commandment is applicable to them as well as to native residents and members of the church. Yes, even the cattle must rest, since they cannot perform work without the direction of man. God thus wishes to have complete silence upon the entire face of the earth. The third matter to be noted in this commandment is the added incentives. These are three in number.

(1) There is the example of God. God has created man after His image. This holy disposition of soul must also be manifested by man's deeds, and when he is thus active, he must be engaged in harmony with both God's commandment as well as His example. "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children" (Ephesians 5:1). God, after being engaged in the work of creation for six days, rested upon the seventh day, and by so doing has designated this as an example to be followed. Man must be motivated by this to do likewise.

(2) The second incentive is taken from that which is to our benefit. "Therefore the Lord blessed the sabbath say." This does not imply that inherent efficacy was bestowed upon this day in order to render it profitable to man. Rather, it is a promise of blessing made to the conscientious observers of that day; that is, the receipt of comfort, joy, and holiness for the soul, and to render the physical labor of the six workdays to be more prosperous and profitable. For everything is dependent upon the blessing of the Lord, and without this all our labor is in vain (Psalms 127:1-2).

(3) The third incentive is derived from God's command and the appropriateness of obedience to it. He hallowed it. The Lord has set this day apart for sacred usage in order that man may solemnly and uniformly glorify and serve Him with a holy rest. No one may therefore make this day a common day by using it as other days and spending it by working. Rather, according to God's command, we must acknowledge it as having been set apart and spend it in a fashion which is consistent with the purpose for which God has set it apart and designated it. As is true for the other commandments, we must also consider the sins which are prohibited as well as the virtues which are enjoined. The Sins Prohibited The sins which are prohibited can be enumerated as follows: First, we sin when we do not, with joyous approbation, set the sabbath apart from the other days, and when we fail to acknowledge that this day has been set apart by God by virtue of His example and command, having appointed it to be a day of rest, refreshment, and glorification of God. This sin consists in disobedience and a despising of privileges.

Secondly, we sin when we make a workday out of this day -- if we occupy ourselves with the work of our profession; that is, to be engaged as brewers, bakers, laundry men, cooks, tailors, and shoemakers. Furthermore, we sin if, in order to finish remaining work, we then bring work home, even if it is toward noon. This also applies to barbers, those who load and unload ships, those who labor upon ferries, luggage porters, and garbage men; it pertains to all the labor whereby one earns a living. To this also belong miscellaneous activities which one postpones to the day of rest or does on this day to be prepared for the next day; such as mending, washing of children, to either prepare wash, send it to the laundry, or receive it at home, writing out bills, and going shopping -- in one word, all that by which one gains money and time. On this day God wants universal cessation of activity upon the entire face of the earth. This is evident from the commandment itself.

Thirdly, we sin when we transform this day into a market day. This pertains to buying and selling by merchants, store owners, sellers of fruit, vendors of all sorts of edible material, sellers of fish, etc. (cf. Nehemiah 13:15-16; Nehemiah 13:19-21).

Fourthly, we sin when we make this day into a day of worldly pleasure. The sabbath is a delight -- however, a delighting in the Lord. It is a dreadful desecration of this day, however, when we abuse it by delighting ourselves in worldly things and in the lusts of the flesh. This pertains to sailing, horse-riding, fishing, bird-hunting, playing tennis, playing ball, or to the entertaining of one's self with such things that are lawful at the appropriate time and place, in the appropriate company, and with the appropriate objective. This pertains even more to games of chance, playing cards, and playing with dice (cf. Isaiah 58:13-14). However, strolling in the fields or in gardens (be it alone or with others) does not belong to the forbidden sins, if we do so for the purpose of observing the works of God, to glorify Him thereby, and to be refreshed according to soul and body. Even if the world does this in a sinful manner, this cannot prevent the believer from doing it in a spiritual manner.

Fifthly, we sin when we make this day into a day of sin, attiring ourselves with all manner of hideous, worldly garb, and even daring to come thus to church and thereby before God's countenance. This pertains to drinking in bars and inns, where one can hear the violin, the vain chatter and jeering of drunkards, and the playing of drums. This pertains to having cold buffets in one's yard, elaborate meals in the home, and being engaged in all manner of foolish talk and gossip. This pertains to going courting -- as young men and women are accustomed to do in many villages. In one word, we sin if we spend this day in all manner of looseness and licentiousness. Such sins are double in measure -- yes, they provoke God in an extraordinary manner.

Sixthly, we sin by making this a day of idleness, [Note: à Brakel uses the graphic expression "ezelsdag" here, which literally means: "a donkey's day"!] spending the entire day in a lazy and slothful manner, sleeping the major part of the morning. Having nothing to do, one can then catch up on sleep.

Thus, there are many who sleep away the morning service, eat during the afternoon service, and walk away the evening service. Even if one has attended the worship services once or twice, he may possibly have slept there or have been occupied with other thoughts, and thus derived no more benefit from this than a donkey would. Such persons nevertheless imagine that they have spent the sabbath well, for they have rested and have been to church.

Seventhly, we sin when we reject and speak against the sabbath; draw others away from hallowing this day and give them liberty to do so; ridicule those who conscientiously hallow the sabbath according to God's command, railing at them by calling them ignorant, hair-splitters, and hypocrites (how abominable!); are unwilling to hallow the sabbath ourselves; draw others away from doing so; and mock with those who sanctify this day. The Virtues Enjoined The virtues enjoined in this commandment are comprehended in preparation, observance, and reflection. The necessity of preparation is apparent from the command: "Remember the sabbath day." That this was practiced in the church is evident from Mark 15:42, "It was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath." This is as yet practiced by the Lutherans in many localities -- which ought to convict the Reformed churches. To this preparation belongs:

(1) the knowledge of and acquiescence in our obligation to hallow this day, and the actual separating of this day from other days according to the command and example of God -- thus being engaged in an activity which is so delightful, beneficial, and God-glorifying;

(2) a spiritual desire for this day in order that one may quietly approach unto God and rejoice in Him, so that this day is a delight rather than a burden;

(3) prayer for strength and ability to hallow this day, so that in some measure we may be inclined toward spiritual things -- this in view of the aversion which the flesh has for this day;

(4) the timely cessation of one's daily labors, lest by working until late in the evening one render the body unfit, which in turn prevents the lively frame in which the soul ought to be, and lest there be no time left for preparation;

(5) the provision and preparation of food for the family for that day, so that no shopping need to be done on that day and there be little required as far as cooking is concerned.

Observation not only consists in resting -- as if that were the whole or part of its observance. It also does not consist in serving God in a more spiritual manner than on other days. Neither does it consist in a narrow-minded "touch not and taste not," nor in asking, "May I do this or may I do that?" The sabbath is not a snare, but rather a day of delight -- not, however, for sinful flesh. Those who are spiritually minded will almost always know what either favors or impedes the spirituality of the sabbath and the hallowing of this day.

Sabbath observance consists, first of all, in focusing upon the commandment and example of God which are held before us to be followed. This must be accompanied by obedient subjection and a love to imitate this.

Secondly, it consists in spending this day in holy resting and being completely withdrawn from the world, in being elated and joyful in God, and in holy jubilation.

Thirdly, it consists in occupying one's self in beholding the works of God in creation, preservation, and government. It furthermore consists in meditating upon the great work of redemption through Christ, in all this acknowledging and rejoicing in God's goodness, wisdom, power, truth, omnipotence (and of all that is revealed of God of this in our hearts), and thus glorifying and praising God. It is to be occupied with that sweet work of angels!

Fourthly, it consists in attending the public gatherings of God's people, as well as in rejoicing in the fact that one may be among them and with them, appear together before God's countenance, sing His praises, worship Him, hear the voice of the Lord come to our ears and hearts, and receive the benediction.

Fifthly, it consists in visiting the sick and the destitute, to bestow something of which they are deprived, to read something out of God's Word, and furthermore if they are unconverted, to convince them of sin and judgment and make them acquainted with the Lord Jesus. It also consists in comforting the converted and in stirring them up to be patient.

Sixthly, it consists in exercising the communion of saints; that is, in having sweet fellowship with godly acquaintances in private gatherings where they occupy themselves with the reading of God's Word, the singing of psalms and spiritual songs, and in mutual conversations, exhorting and comforting each other.

Seventhly, it consists in contributing, with a joyful and compassionate heart, something of one's profit -- earned in the previous workdays (or else something of one's belongings) -- to the poor, the common fund of the deacons, individuals with whom one is acquainted, and others whom the Lord causes us to encounter.

Reflection is also needful to preserve the sabbath disposition and blessing. First, this consists in reflecting upon how the day was spent publicly and privately, and upon the sins which one has committed; that is, laxity, listlessness, lack of spirituality, and the failure to abhor these. Confess this with sorrow before the Lord, and seek forgiveness through Christ.

Secondly, it consists in reflecting upon the good we have performed on this day, upon the upright objective to hallow the sabbath, and the efforts to do everything in such a manner as is pleasing to God. It furthermore consists in reflecting upon the blessings, refreshments, comforts, illumination, and quickening we enjoyed from the Spirit of the Lord. One must acknowledge this and rejoice in this, even if it were ever so little. Even if the insatiable desire of our soul has not been satisfied, we should yet thank the Lord for the good we received.

Thirdly, it consists in the acknowledgment of God's goodness to His church in giving her the sabbath, enabling her to gather publicly and conduct all her public worship services, and for the privilege to enjoy a holy rest.

Fourthly, it consists in yearning and longing for the rest which remains for the people of God (Hebrews 4:9), in rejoicing in this hope, in forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Blessed is he who thus begins, observes, and ends the sabbath.

Additional Incentives for a Proper Observance of the Sabbath

Even though the above mentioned matters will motivate a godly person to earnestly observe the sabbath, it will nevertheless be beneficial that we add some incentives in order to stir you up. They are derived from that which is detrimental to transgressors and from that which is beneficial to conscientious observers.

First of all, reflect attentively upon the harm that befalls desecraters of the sabbath -- that which pertains to the sin as well as the punishment. The desecration of the sabbath is a dreadful sin, for:

- (1) it is a violation of God's commandment, and it is all the more sinful because one at the same time rejects the example of God which ought to be followed;
- (2) it destroys external and common religion in its entirety, for all the commandments of the first table converge in this commandment;
- (3) it is a despising of God's friendship and goodness from which the gift of the sabbath has proceeded, and which God demonstrates to His people upon the sabbath, letting them taste of this.

Secondly, God pronounces dreadful judgments upon the desecraters of His day.

- (1) One robs himself of the spiritual and temporal blessings which God has promised to pour out upon those who hallow the sabbath.
- (2) The general curses which pertain to transgressors of the law are applicable to such persons. "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them" (Galatians 3:10).
- (3) An entire register of plagues is pronounced upon desecraters of the sabbath (cf. Leviticus 26:2; Leviticus 26:14-16, etc.).
- (4) Set your heart upon the following passages as well: "What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city" (Nehemiah 13:17-18); "But if ye will not hearken unto Me to hallow the sabbath day ... then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched" (Jeremiah 17:27); "Yet also I lifted up My hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them ... because they ... polluted My sabbaths" (Ezekiel 20:15-16). Consider also Amos 8:11-12. God enumerates several sins in this chapter -- among others, an aversion for the sabbath. Thereupon several judgments are threatened, among which is the removal of His Word. "I will send a famine in the land ... and they shall wander ... to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it" (Amos 8:11-12). He who therefore fears such judgments as are mentioned in these texts, ought thereby to be discouraged from desecrating the sabbath -- this being the cause of these judgments. In the second place, meditate on the other hand upon the benefits which have been promised to those who hallow the sabbath. The commandment comprehends all this with the words: "Wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day."

(1) It is a delight for a believer to hallow the sabbath, even if there were no other promises. "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto Thy name, O most High: to show forth Thy lovingkindness in the morning, and Thy faithfulness every night" (Psalms 92:1-2). This is the work of the sabbath and all that is good and sweet is inherent in this work.

(2) The work of the sabbath is to glorify God, and this is the highest form of felicity. That is the entire content of the above mentioned psalm for the sabbath. See this also in Isaiah 58:13, where we read, "If thou ... call the sabbath a delight," in order that the Lord, who is worthy to be honored, may be sanctified.

(3) It is then that God promises to come to His people, and He brings them to Himself. Felicity, all salvation, and refreshment for believers is to be found in this mutual approach unto, and fellowship with, each other. The Lord Jesus thus revealed and glorified Himself to His disciples, doing so even on two successive sabbaths (John 20:1; John 20:19; John 20:26). It is in this manner that the Lord Jesus glorified Himself to the apostle John and brought him in the Spirit on the Lord's day, making him fit to receive the revelation (Revelation 1:10).

(4) God promises many blessings to those who hallow the sabbath day in soul and body. Regarding this, consider the following two passages: "Blessed is the man ... that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it. ... For thus saith the Lord unto the eunuchs that keep My sabbaths ... even unto them will I give in Mine house and within My walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off ... every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of My covenant; even them will I bring to My holy mountain, and make them joyful in My house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon Mine altar" (Isaiah 56:2; Isaiah 56:4-7). Consider also this passage: "If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on My holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honour Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it" (Isaiah 58:13-14).

He who therefore desires all these benefits ought to hallow the sabbath -- the promise being that they will be given on this day. The Fourth Commandment: Ceremonial or Moral in Nature?

It now remains for us to deal with the great point of contention -- a consideration which we wanted to append since we must express ourselves somewhat more comprehensively here in order to promote the honor of God, His holy service, and the observance of His holy day. The point of contention is this: Does the seventh-day sabbath, as proposed in the fourth commandment, belong to the ceremonial law given to Israel alone, so that it has thus been fulfilled and abolished by Christ? Or does it belong to the unchangeable rule for a holy life -- as is true for the other commandments of the law -- thus obligating all men of all ages to obedient observance, both prior and after the incarnation of Christ?

Many opponents present themselves, who, however much they may differ from each other in other matters, join focus in opposing the sabbath.

First, the Jews -- to whom must be added some heretics in the early church -- admit that the sabbath is of eternal duration. They insist, however, that the seventh day after creation (or the day which has always been observed by the Jews) is to be observed.

Secondly, the Socinians, Anabaptists, and Antinomians (opponents of the law) reject the entire law -- and thus also this commandment.

Thirdly, there are others who designate nine commandments as an eternal rule of life, but who fully eliminate the fourth commandment, considering it to be entirely ceremonial. They state outright that we now do not have ten commandments, but only nine. However, this sentiment has no adherents except ignorant people who neither know what they are saying nor what they are affirming.

Fourthly, there are others who are less offensive with their words, but in very deed reject the entire commandment. They maintain that there is something moral as well as ceremonial in this commandment (which foreshadows Christ). They consider the moral aspect to be the requirement of public worship without any reference to day or time, and that the seventh day is ceremonial, typifying the resting of Christ in the grave. Thus, it has been abolished with the resurrection of Christ.

Fifthly, there are others who interpret it as follows: Prior to the fall God obligated Adam to work all the days of his life. However, his work was to be neither burdensome, grievous, nor tiring. This remains the obligation of all men outside of the realm of the church, and they must do so with grief and pain as a punishment for sin. They maintain that God established the covenant of grace on the seventh day, accompanied by the promise of the coming of the Messiah. He thus would have given His partakers of the covenant a day of respite and relief: the seventh day. Prior to Christ's coming this would have typified the resurrection of Christ, and subsequent to His coming it would have been a memorial thereof. At the same time, it would have signified in both dispensations the benefits merited by Christ's resurrection -- both in this, as well as in eternal life. The church of all ages has been opposed to these propositions. We therefore maintain that this commandment is of the same moral nature as the other nine and does not typify Christ in the least. This commandment not only enjoins public worship, but also the hallowing of the seventh day following six workdays, and that this day be spent in holy resting. In enlarging further upon this we must make a distinction between the commandment and the incentives for observance. It is true that occasionally an incentive is taken from something which was peculiar to Israel alone, such as in Deuteronomy 5:15, "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day." These words were neither declared from Sinai nor inscribed in the tables of stone, but were used by Moses, as a faithful servant of God, upon repeating the law. He used this incentive to stir them up to let their servants rest on the sabbath.

It must also be noted that the word "ceremonial" is not found in the Bible and that one therefore ought not to dispute about this word. The common usage of the word signifies an ecclesiastical duty, or an external circumstance, deed, action, or transaction. In this respect there are also ceremonies in the church of the New Testament: preaching with either a covered or uncovered head, sprinkling once or thrice in holy baptism, either immersion or sprinkling at the administration of baptism, either sitting or standing when partaking of the Lord's Supper, etc. These are ceremonies which neither add to nor subtract from the essence of the matter. It is common among theologians, however, also to refer to the types of Christ as ceremonies due to their external mode of administration. We maintain, however, that there is no typification of Christ in the fourth commandment. It is in this sense that we maintain that there is nothing ceremonial in it. If, however, one considers an external circumstance which is changeable to be ceremonial -- the essence of the matter being preserved -- then we can indeed say that there is something ceremonial in it, understanding thereby only the change of day. In the Old Testament this was the last day of the week, and, as is surmised, the seventh day in reference to creation. I repeat, as is surmised; for one cannot be certain, as precise chronological calculations cannot be made retroactively to Adam. Furthermore, men's lives in the east or the west can differ twelve hours and thus half of a twenty-four-hour day. They especially cannot maintain that the sabbath which Israel observed was exactly the seventh day after creation, maintaining that there was no sabbath prior to Moses' time, and that no one was acquainted with such a day. This we deny, even though we would surmise that the hallowing of this day was sometimes very much neglected. Therefore, the essence of the sabbath did not consist in hallowing the exact seventh day after creation, thereby implying that the commandment is violated if one were to miss it by half a day. This has absolutely never been the intent of the fourth commandment; rather the intent is the hallowing of the seventh day which would follow six workdays. This does not imply that they had the choice to select one of the seven days arbitrarily, selecting a different one of the seven each time as it suited them; rather, Israel knew which of the days was the seventh day they had to observe and hallow. Thus it was prior to Christ's coming; but after Christ's coming the day was changed from the last day of the week to the first day of the week, according to Jewish calculation. This change of day did not come about by the will of man, however, but in consequence of the instruction of Christ and of the apostles (on behalf of Christ). The essence of the sabbath remained in full force, and it returns each time after six workdays.

We have thus identified the nature of the argument. It is now necessary to verify our sentiment and then to respond to the objections of opponents. The Sabbath, Having been Instituted Prior to the Fall, is Not Ceremonial Proof #1. We derive this from the institution of the commandment which predates the fall. From this we make the following conclusion: If the commandment pertaining to the sabbath was given to Adam prior to the fall, it then belongs to the unchangeable rule of holiness -- just as the other commandments of the moral law do. It thus obligates all men of all ages, and neither belongs to the ceremonial law, nor has it been fulfilled and abolished in Christ. Instead, the sabbath has been given to Adam prior to the fall. Consequently, etc. The thrust and veracity of the first proposition is evident from the fact that Adam represented the entire human race prior to the fall. This was due to the covenant of works then in force, and because Christ was neither necessary, known, nor promised at that time. Thus neither the gospel nor the ministry of shadows could have any function. These matters are beyond all argumentation. The second proposition, namely, that the sabbath has been given to Adam prior to the fall, is evident from Genesis 2:1-3, "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended His work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it He had rested from all His work which God created and made." In order to perceive the thrust of this argument, note the following:

First, consider the connection and the historical relationship between the first seven days apart from any intermediary issues. (It must be understood that there are no chapters in the Hebrew text, and therefore read the first and second chapters as one chapter.) It is related there what God performed on each day, and at the same time what function and approbation God attributed to each day. In thus arriving at the seventh day we observe the same sequence. We are told that there was then no work left to be done, but that it had all been completed in the previous six days. We are furthermore told that God rested on this day from His labors and that God -- as He did on the other days -- expressed His approval of the seventh day and assigned it its function. He blessed and hallowed it, not blessing Himself, but the day -- and He hallowed it. He did not do this to the natural day itself, but rather the day as having been designated for sacred usage -- as is pointed out in the fourth commandment. When His rest is given as the reason for blessing and sanctification, God has not only given a commandment to rest on the seventh day, and appointed this example to be followed, but He has established an express ordinance and has blessed and hallowed this day. What else can hallowing a day in this case mean but designation for a sacred purpose?

Secondly, note that this ordinance of the seventh day was made prior to the fall. This is evident for the following reasons:

(1) The sixth and seventh days are joined together (as the other previous six days were) without any intervening matters, and also without any reference to the fall. It is therefore audacious to insist on adding something to this.

(2) The fall is recorded as having occurred after the seventh day, for it is recorded in Genesis 3:1-24, subsequent to the first seven days and all that transpired in them, being described in a continual and uninterrupted fashion.

(3) The Holy Spirit bears witness that all was still very good upon the completion of the seventh day. "And God saw every thing that He had made, and, behold, it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day" (Genesis 1:31). The fall had thus not occurred.

(4) The Lord rested on the seventh day; that is, He observed all His works with delight, rejoiced in them, and was refreshed. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day He rested, and was refreshed" (Exodus 31:17). When God saw the sin of man, it is written, "And it repented the Lord that He had made man on the earth, and it grieved Him at His heart" (Genesis 6:6). If man had fallen upon the sixth day, then God, rather than having been refreshed, would have had sorrow and grief of heart. This was not so, however, but He refreshed Himself. Instead of pronouncing a blessing, God would have cursed man and the earth. We thus perceive from all this that man did not fall upon the sixth day and that the sabbath was given him prior to the fall -- and thus the sabbath existed prior to the fall.

(5) Although this argument, when considered independently, carries no weight to either confirm or convince anyone, it nevertheless yields some further clarification when joined to the other arguments. It is not credible that man, having just opened his eyes upon this world, would have fallen immediately and that he would not have had time to delight himself in God and to rejoice in his holy and glorious state. It is credible, however, that God gave him some time to experience that which was good. Man, to some degree, was therefore already acquainted with God, for by the cool of the day he already recognized God's approach unto him (Genesis 3:8).

Evasive Argument #1: Is this text not the announcement of an event prior to its occurrence, [Note: à Brakel uses the peculiar word "voerverhaal" here. Since this word is probably a neologism, it can only be translated in a descriptive manner.] so that Moses, when speaking of the basis for the sabbath, uses this occasion to add to this commandment the institution of the sabbath as it occurred during his time? We do find more such prior announcements in God's Word.

Answer (1) By asking questions one can cause the unstable sentiments of himself and others to totter. Eve herself was deceived by questions. Instead, one ought to state that such is the case and that there is proof. We deny it, for where is the proof?

(2) It is true, as is often the case with historical documents of human origin, that such announcements prior to the fact relating to future events are also found in the Holy Scriptures. However, then the subject matter at hand demands this and its purpose is obvious. Here neither the one nor the other is true. Refrain from such reasoning as: It could be thus, for it is occasionally true elsewhere. Such are evil teachers who cause the soul to be prejudiced and unfit to perceive the truth.

(3) This cannot be an announcement prior to the fact. This is evident from the text itself, for it is stated what God did upon the first seventh day, and not what He did about 2400 years later. Furthermore, when God speaks of the sabbath at the time of Moses, He speaks of it in such a fashion as being a matter which had been instituted on the first seventh day (cf. Exodus 20:11). It is indeed contrary to all probability that God, commanding something after 2400 years, would derive a reason from something which had transpired so long ago, and of which there would have been no knowledge during all that time. Also, if the sabbath were only pointing to Christ, God's resting upon the seventh day in the past could not have been foundational for the sabbath.

(4) If this were an announcement prior to the fact, no original institution of the sabbath could be found in God's Word, for the sabbath was already observed prior to the giving of the law upon Sinai. It was already observed when the manna was given in the desert. Mention is then made of the sabbath as being a known institution, and thus, not instituted at that time.

(5) Such an announcement prior to the fact was devised for the purpose of designating the sabbath as ceremonial. However, this renders the announcement itself invalid. For this announcement would have been made at the occasion when a reason or argument was given for the sabbath, which looked retroactively at God's rest, and not forward to the Messiah.

(6) If such a statement were to have any semblance of validity, it would first have to be determined that the entire book of Moses -- and particularly the first chapters -- were written by Moses after the exodus from Egypt and subsequent to all that transpired at Horeb. However, there is no evidence of this whatsoever, and thus the notion of an announcement prior to the fact is without foundation.

Additional Evasive Argument: God intended at that time to give this day to His people, and had decreed to do so 2400 years later; but He did not enjoin Adam and his descendants to keep this day.

Answer: This is contrary to the text, which does not speak of an intention but of an actual institution. It is an ordinance which is comparable to the resting of God. God's resting was, however, not an intention to rest sometime in the future, but an actual resting. Likewise, the blessing and hallowing of this day were actual occurrences which did not pertain to God but to man. It was thus a commandment given to man, and this at the very outset of time.

Evasive Argument #2: The sabbath was not applicable to Adam prior to the fall for he neither had to work nor became tired. Furthermore, he glorified God every moment, so that the sabbath could not have been given to him then.

Answer (1) Adam had to work indeed. "And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it" (Genesis 2:15).

(2) The purpose of the sabbath is to rest, that is, to cease from labor -- even if there is no fatigue.

(3) Although Adam was able to glorify God every moment, it was nevertheless God's will that he would do so on the seventh day by ceasing from his labor and hallowing that day.

(4) The law was not given to Adam as an individual, but as being the father of the entire human race, which -- upon multiplication -- would be under obligation to celebrate this day by coming together before the countenance of God to unitedly praise and glorify Him.

Evasive Argument #3: Prior to Exodus 16:1-36 one does not read that either Adam or the fathers who followed him were either acquainted with or observed the sabbath. It is therefore not probable that the sabbath had already been given then.

Answer (1) Little is recorded of the first 2000 years. It has pleased God to record particularly what has transpired with Abraham and his seed. One cannot conclude, simply because it has not been recorded, what they have or have not known and done.

(2) It does not matter what Adam and the men following him have done, but rather, what they were obligated to do according to the commandment. Circumcision was also neglected in the wilderness, and yet it remained a command. This is also true of the sabbath.

(3) Men spoke of the seventh day prior to Moses. "Fulfil her week. ... And Jacob did so, and fulfilled her week" (Genesis 29:27-28). It must be noted that in the original text the word shebua is recorded. This in turn is related to the word shebigni (i.e., the seventh), which is recorded in this commandment.

(4) When God gave the law, He spoke of this as a matter which already existed and was known. It reads:

"Remember (not the seventh day but) the sabbath day." It furthermore reads: "Therefore He blessed (not blesses) and hallowed (not hallows) it." And such was indeed the case. "And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses. And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said, To morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord: bake that which ye will bake to day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning" (Exodus 16:22-23). The elders did not understand the reason why the bread had thus been multiplied. Moses, in instructing them, brings to mind the instituted and blessed sabbath, which (as they knew) would be the following day -- a day upon which God willed that they should rest, and that He therefore had provided for them ahead of time.

(5) Paul speaks of a rest and, pointing to Genesis 2:1-25, of a rest of the seventh day -- an institution which had been in place since the foundation of the world. "If they shall enter into My rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world. For He spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, and God did rest the seventh day from all His works" (Hebrews 4:3-4). From all this we can observe that since the time of Adam and prior to the giving of the law, man has had the institution and the knowledge of the sabbath.

Evasive Argument #4: If there is already mention of the hallowing of the seventh day in Genesis 2:1-25, does this pertain to the hallowing of that one day only, it being done once in reference to God rather than man?

Answer: No; this was the hallowing of the seventh day which chronologically reoccurs. It is very evident from Exodus 20:1-26 that this is for man's benefit, for there the hallowing of the seventh day in chronological order is commanded due to God having blessed and hallowed this day, solely because He -- in view of Genesis 2:1-25 -- rested on the first seventh day. This at once makes it evident that God has given this day to man.

Evasive Argument #5: It appears that God did as yet do some work on the seventh day, for Genesis 2:1 is the conclusion of the six-day creation, and in verse 2 mention is made of some work again: "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made." From this it can be concluded that God executed the work of redemption on the seventh day by restoring man.

Answer (1) This is an erroneous conclusion. It is not stated here that God did some work on the seventh day, but that on the seventh day He had already ended the work which He had made; it was finished at that time. To have ended work does not imply the doing of work, but rather the completion of work and the not doing of any work subsequent to that.

(2) This is expressly refuted in Exodus 20:11, for there it is stated that God rested on the seventh day, in contrast to His labor of six days. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day."

(3) If God had done most of His work on the seventh day -- for the work of redemption excels the work of creation -- then God's example of resting on the seventh day after six days of labor could not be held before man as the reason for resting on the seventh day, as is the case here.

(4) If the thought would occur that God had accomplished the work of redemption on the seventh day, it would first have to be a known fact that man had already sinned. Not only is this not so, but the very opposite is proven.

All this proves it to be immovably true that the sabbath was given to Adam prior to the fall -- and thus to the entire human race. Consequently, it is not a ceremonial command, but of the same nature as all other moral commands which are a perpetual rule of holiness for all men. The

Sabbath is Not Ceremonial: Its Observance is Regulated by the Moral Law

Proof #2: This is derived from the commandment in Exodus 20:1-26. I draw the following conclusion from this: Whatever commandment is a commandment of the moral law, is not ceremonial, but belongs to the eternal rule of holiness, obligating all men. The fourth commandment is a commandment of the moral law, however, and it thus follows, etc. The first proposition is irrefutably true. The nature of the whole is also the nature of each part. If the entire law is moral in nature, also each commandment is moral in nature. The second proposition is confirmed as follows: The moral law is the law which God Himself declared from Horeb out of the midst of the fire in the ears of all Israel. God Himself engraved this law, which is the law of love (Matthew 22:1-46), into two tables of stone. This is the royal law (James 2:8-10) which contains in it the requirements of the covenant of works upon which, apart from the gospel, eternal life would follow (Romans 10:1-21). This law is the law of the ten commandments (Exodus 34:28; Deuteronomy 4:13). Every reader will have to agree with this. The fourth commandment is a statement from this law, however. This is evident from the record of the law in Exodus 20:1-26 and Deuteronomy 5:1-33, and it is dealt with in the same way as the other commandments. From this it follows, etc.

Evasive Argument: The law of the ten commandments is indeed the moral law, but one commandment must be removed, namely, the fourth--that is, to the extent that it is ceremonial and of a different nature.

Answer (1) This is not recorded anywhere.

(2) Then there would only be nine commandments. One must give heed not to subtract from or add to the law (Deuteronomy 4:2), nor to nullify the least commandment (Matthew 5:19).

(3) There is nothing in this commandment which resembles anything of a ceremonial nature. It cannot be demonstrated anywhere in the entire Scriptures that the seventh-day sabbath points to Christ nor in which respect it points to Christ. One could say that it points to Christ's resting in the grave, but 1) Christ was in the grave three days. 2) Furthermore, Christ's burial was a step of His humiliation and He was holden of death. 3) How could such a joyful, happy, refreshing, and God-glorifying rest on the seventh day be an example of Christ's state of death when there was to be nothing but mourning? 4) Scripture says nothing of this sort. 5) It is contrary to reason, for the commandment is given in reference to something which has preceded and not to something which was to be in the future. There is not even a semblance of this.

(4) The entire subject of the fourth commandment predicates its moral nature. The matter which is commanded is a holy and God-glorifying rest. The reason for this commandment is God's institution of this rest from the beginning. The example given us to follow is God's very own activity. To our knowledge, He has never made Himself an example in any ceremonial commandment. If we consider all these things together -- the substance of, the reason for, the example for, and the law of which this commandment is a part -- then it will powerfully convince the person (who listens more to the commandment of God than to his own confusing ideas) that the sabbath of the fourth commandment is not ceremonial, but moral in nature, and is thus obligatory upon all men at all times. The Eternal Duration of the Moral Law and thus of the Fourth Commandment

Proof #3: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 5:16-19). The objective of the Lord Jesus in this passage is to demonstrate that by His coming, conscientious godliness was not abolished. The reference here to the moral law can be determined for the following reasons:

- (1) It is that law which is the rule for good works and thus for a holy life (Matthew 5:16).
- (2) It is that law which Christ did not come to disannul, since He did come to disannul the ceremonial law.
- (3) It is that law which Christ has fulfilled (Matthew 5:17), so that by His obedience we are made righteous (Romans 5:19).
- (4) It is that law which will endure as long as the earth will remain (Matthew 5:18).
- (5) It is that law which one was not permitted to break upon the coming of Christ, but which one was obliged to do and teach (Matthew 5:19).
- (6) It is that law in which murder, the false and unnecessary swearing of oaths, revenge, and adultery are forbidden, and in which generosity and sincere love (even toward enemies) are commanded, this being evident from what follows in this chapter. However, this is the moral law -- the law of the ten commandments. Thus, the reference here is to the moral law. Now, neither jot nor tittle of this law will pass away as long as the heaven and the earth endure. Therefore, since the fourth commandment is a full-fledged commandment of that law, also this commandment will remain and not pass away. Consequently, this commandment is not ceremonial, but an eternal rule of life, as is true for the other commandments.

Evasive Argument #1: The reference here indeed is to the moral law, and the fact that it will not pass away. It cannot be concluded from this, however, that the sabbath will not pass away, for this does not belong to the moral law. Simply because it is listed among the ten commandments does not prove that it is moral in nature.

Answer: This has already been proven in our second proof. Examine the entire New Testament and you will observe that wherever the law is contrasted to the ceremonial law and the gospel, the focus is upon the law of the ten commandments. If one replies, "No, but the focus is upon the moral law," then I ask, "Where do we find the moral law? Is it not contained in the ten commandments?" If one says, "Yes, but with the exception of one," then I reply, "But where is that written?" It is nowhere to be found, and it is thus but an idle thought. The law of the ten commandments is called the moral law, and thus all ten commandments are moral in nature.

Evasive Argument #2: We do not deny that the fourth commandment belongs to the moral law and is thus of eternal duration. However, the moral aspect in it pertains to the public worship of God and not to its ceremonial aspect which is the hallowing of the seventh day.

Answer: This is a self-made fabrication. Let it be demonstrated once that public worship constitutes the moral content of this commandment. Not one jot or tittle can be produced in support of this. This argument is thus rejected as readily as it is advanced. The language of the commandment indicates that the essence of this commandment consists in the hallowing of the seventh day. We have sufficiently shown above that nothing of a ceremonial nature is comprehended in this. Therefore, if this commandment is of eternal duration -- which is according to the intent and understanding of this party -- then the entire commandment is of eternal duration. It cannot be viewed from a twofold perspective. The essence of this commandment is the hallowing of the seventh day after six workdays. The Observance of the Sabbath to Continue After the Abrogation of the Ceremonial Laws

Proof #4: "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath day" (Matthew 24:20). It is evident from verse 3 that the return of Christ and the end of the world is discussed in this chapter. It is beyond controversy that the destruction of Jerusalem -- forty years after Christ's ascension -- is also discussed here.

Immediately upon Christ's death, resurrection, and ascension, the ceremonies had completely lost their efficacy, and from that very moment it was sin to use them in the Jewish manner, that is, as being shadows of the future Messiah. Nevertheless, the external performance in a general and religious sense was tolerated for some time in order not to hinder those that were weak in the faith, and thus to allow time for instruction to prepare them for their full abolition.

However, prior to the destruction of Jerusalem, the Christian church had long separated itself from the Jewish church, and the ceremonies had become as dead to them. They were thus neither permitted to strive nor pray for this.

Nevertheless, we see it expressly stated here that there would still be both sabbath and winter, for no injunction can be given about something which does not exist. We do not maintain that there is an injunction here to hallow the sabbath, but that this injunction concerning the sabbath indicates that there would still be a sabbath. Thus, the sabbath is not ceremonial but of eternal duration.

It also needs to be noted that this chapter does not only speak of the destruction of Jerusalem, but also of the dreadful persecution which would come upon the church of the New Testament, which frequently has come to pass since then. At that time the ceremonies had indeed disappeared, and yet the sabbath, like the winter, would remain.

Evasive Argument #1: Was not this injunction to pray that their flight would not occur on the sabbath, made to Jews in order to inflict temporary misery upon them, since they were not permitted to flee on the sabbath?

Answer: They were permitted to flee, for this was not forbidden in the law. This is evident from various examples in God's Word.

Evasive Argument #2: Was not this injunction intended for weak Christians for whom it would be objectionable to flee on that day?

Answer: They were indeed permitted to flee, for the ceremonies had been abolished and one was no longer permitted to pray in reference to this.

Evasive Argument #3: Was not this injunction given to prevent the Jews -- who would see the Christians fleeing on the sabbath -- from killing them?

Answer: There is neither proof nor argument for this. The reference is here not to a general flight, but to flight which would occur as frequently as they would be pursued. The Jews no more concerned themselves with the Christians than they did with the Gentiles. Furthermore, Jews, Gentiles, and Christians were permitted to flee on the sabbath.

Evasive Argument #4: Why then did they have to pray that fleeing upon the sabbath be prevented? Answer: Since God had appointed this day for refreshment and the enjoyment of an extraordinarily joyous rest, they would then have to miss this, and lose the opportunity to praise God with the congregation and to both edify and be edified. Thus, fleeing on the sabbath would be double misery for the soul -- just as fleeing in the winter would be a double misery for the body.

The Observance of the Sabbath: Practiced by Christ, the Apostles, and the Early Church

Proof #5: In addition to the proofs mentioned above that the sabbath is not ceremonial, but moral and of eternal duration, we wish to consider the practice of Christ, the apostles, and the early church. The Lord Jesus honored the gathering of His disciples upon the first day after His resurrection with His presence, this being the first day of the week. Eight days later the Lord repeated this (John 20:26). Concerning the journeys of Paul we read in Acts 20:6-7, "And we ... came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow." Take note here that a different day is never mentioned in the New Testament, but that the first day of the week is mentioned repeatedly. It is stated as a matter of course that the congregation gathered on that day and that Paul preached on that day in their assembly, and that he would travel the following day. It can thus be clearly observed that they observed the sabbath on the first day of the week.

Consider furthermore what is written in 1 Corinthians 16:1-2 : "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." Again the first day of the week is mentioned as the familiar day for worship and assembly -- not for some private individuals, but for the congregations. The apostle John, having been banished to the island of Patmos after the destruction of Jerusalem, indicates that the Lord's day was celebrated in a sacred manner. This day he celebrated, calling it by the name familiar to all -- the Lord's day. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day" (Revelation 1:10). Concerning the sabbath, it is written in the fourth commandment: "But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God" (Exodus 20:10). This is the day which the Lord has instituted, hallowed, and blessed.

Add to this the practice of the churches of Christ from the time of the apostles until today. Take as an example the testimony of ministers in the church who lived shortly after the time of the apostles.

Irenaeus: "God Himself has proclaimed the words of the ten commandments, and they therefore remain with us, having neither been diminished nor nullified by the coming of Christ" (Adv. Hoeres. lib. 4. cap. 31).

Basilius calls the Lord's day the sabbath (Epis. ad Caesar. Pater). Epiphanius: "The first sabbath is that day which God has decreed from the beginning and incorporated into the creation of the world, which from that day on (take note!) until now continues in the sequence of seven days" (Hoeres. 51).

Athanasius: "Formerly they of old greatly honored the sabbath, and this glorious day the Lord Jesus has changed into the Lord's day" (de Senin).

Eusebius: "Christ has obligated all men, wherever they are in the world on water and on land, that they congregate on one day of the week."

Augustine: "The apostles have instituted the Lord's day in the stead of the sabbath of the Jews" (Epist. 3 ad Magn). "One ought to know that not only has this been commanded by our holy forefathers, but rather by God Himself: we must rest upon the Lord's day" (Serm. de Temp. 251).

Justin Martyr: "Upon the day which is called Sunday, an assembly of all takes place" (Orat. ad. Aut. P.). Chrysostom: "This doctrine God has already revealed to us from the beginning, teaching that in the rotation of one week, an entire day must be set apart and be used for spiritual work" (Gen. Hem. 10).

Constantinus Magus: In "Teste Eusebio in vita constantini," he gives this injunction: "Let the entire soul be occupied on that day with the service of God, and that men rest from the work of the market, from legal transactions, and from plying a trade" (lib. 4. 18). The first Christians were also very conscientious in hallowing the sabbath. As the sabbath was previously a sign that God sanctified the Jewish church and took her to Himself as a people, the sabbath was likewise such a sign among the first Christians. The heathen would lie in wait on that day to overtake the Christians, and if they had caught someone, the person was asked whether he had also observed the Lord's day. They would then answer resolutely that they were Christians who had observed the Lord's day with the proper religious zeal because one was not permitted to neglect the observance of this day.

Behold, there you have some evidence from the early churches. We can observe from this that they have celebrated the seventh day by divine ordinance. Now consider all this together. The seventh day has been instituted prior to the fall and has been commanded in the fourth commandment of the moral law -- of which neither jot nor tittle will pass away. Christ declares that the sabbath will endure after His time, and Christ, the apostles, and the early churches have observed the sabbath. How can anyone therefore reject this day with good conscience? Ought not everyone to be convinced of the eternal duration of the sabbath, be ashamed over his unsteadfastness and grieve over its desecration, and furthermore, be stirred up to a conscientious observance?

Various Objections Answered Objection #1: The Sabbath Does not Issue Forth from the Character of God

All commandments which are enduring moral rules, issue forth from the nature of God, are inherently virtuous, and have something of the image of God. These commandments are known from nature, obligate all men, and do not flow out of a voluntary institution which God can either command or not command. The sabbath, however, does not issue forth from the character of God, has no inherent virtuousness, nor anything of the image of God. This commandment is of a temporal nature, is not known by way of nature, and is not an obligation for all men. Since the heathen have no knowledge of this commandment, they also do not sin in violating the sabbath, which was given to Israel only. It rather issues forth from a voluntary divine institution, so that God potentially could have not commanded the observance of the sabbath. Consequently, the commandment of the sabbath is not an enduring rule of life, nor does it pertain to us in the New Testament.

Answer: Both the first and second propositions are not logical, and rest upon unfounded thoughts proceeding from a darkened and corrupt intellect.

First, we deny the first proposition, for it is not founded upon God's Word and is nothing but imagination. Whether a commandment issues forth from the character of God, it being impossible for Him not to give the command, or a commandment issues forth out of pure sovereign good pleasure, so that He could either give or not give it -- in either case it is equally binding upon man.

Secondly, it is injurious to the sovereignty of God to suggest that He would neither be permitted nor be able to issue commands at will -- commands not necessarily flowing forth from His character -- as an eternal moral rule for the entire human race. His will must be sufficient for the creature; He is the sovereign Lawgiver. You -- whoever you may be -- do not begrudge Him His right.

Thirdly, the darkened nature of man does not understand why God's laws are appropriate under given circumstances for rational creatures. He therefore cannot judge the appropriateness of the laws which he but observes in an external sense, without penetrating to the very essence of them. He is also not acquainted with the character of God, and thus cannot judge what would flow forth from the character of God relative to a creature under given circumstances. It is intolerable to think that such an ignorant creature would have the audacity to summon God before him and demand a reason as to why He has given such and such a law, and that such a fool would dare to establish a rule by which it can be determined what is of eternal duration and what is not.

Fourthly, man's corrupt nature is also not acquainted with all the commandments of the eternal moral law. Paul says concerning the tenth commandment: "For I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet" (Romans 7:7). One must make a distinction between the holy and the corrupt nature. We who are darkness do not know what a holy nature would teach us. Man's corrupt nature cannot judge in this, and is thus not the touchstone whereby commandments are to be examined. It furthermore suffices that God has placed the human race under obligation by way of a commandment. Irrespective of whether man has lost that knowledge through carelessness or still has that knowledge, it obligates him just the same.

Fifthly, man, in observing the commandments, must focus upon the will of God. If he then but perceives that the sovereign Lawgiver has commanded this and that it is His will that he do this, this ought to be sufficient for man, "... doing the will of God from the heart" (Ephesians 6:6). The second proposition is abominable: The sabbath does not issue forth from the character of God, does not inherently have any virtue or anything of the image of God, cannot be known by way of nature, has been given to Israel only, and is only a positive command which God can either give or take away. Since the first proposition does not agree with the truth, it is immaterial whether the sabbath is a necessary or voluntary command. One need but perceive whether or not we have been commanded to do so. In particular, it should first be stated that to say that the sabbath does not flow forth from the character of God is more easily said than proven. Our corrupt nature cannot be our judge in this respect. If you maintain that it pertains but to a limited time frame, I answer that this is invalid. It pertains to a holy rest at a given time, as God has exemplified this by designating His doings to be an example to be followed by us. And why would it not be possible that the circumstance of time be moral in nature, as well as the circumstances of persons or matters? And if the sabbath did not flow forth from the character of God (which we do not admit), then what? The sabbath can still therefore be both enduring and moral in nature. The will of God obligates man.

Secondly, we deny that the sabbath does not inherently have some virtue and something of the image of God in it. It is virtuous to hallow the sabbath for it is the doing of the will of God. Obedience to this commandment belongs to the image of God, for it is a loving acquiescence with the will of God -- yes, it is an act of imitation of and conformity to God, for God has rested upon the seventh day and has therefore given us that day in order that we would follow His example (Exodus 20:11). We are under obligation to be "followers of God, as dear children" (Ephesians 5:1).

Thirdly, it is an invalid argument that the sabbath cannot be known from nature. (1) Furthermore this is no reason to remove a commandment from the moral law. (2) We cannot maintain that man's holy nature would not have instructed him about the sabbath. We believe that man's holy nature, being acquainted with the example of God, would have been instructed to observe the sabbath as well as the other commandments. Man's corrupt nature knows very little of the spirituality of the moral law, except for some external and broad issues, thus excusing it.

(3) The heathen have already spent much time in celebrating special days -- yes, they are even acquainted with the seventh day.

Fourthly, we deny that the sabbath has been given to Israel only. It was given to the church, which at that time existed within the seed of Israel. However, it had previously been given to Adam and thus to all men.

Evasive Argument: Something is stated in this commandment, however, which can only have reference to Israel. "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt ... therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day" (Deuteronomy 5:15).

Answer: One must make a distinction between the commandment and its circumstantial application. The first is always the same, but the second can be changed time and again. For if one were to conclude from the fact that the circumstantial application pertains to Israel alone, that then the entire commandment pertained to them only, by way of the same conclusion, one would then have to conclude that the entire law is not applicable to us due to the preamble which is applicable to Israel alone. The argument stated there -- which is here advanced in Deuteronomy 5:15 -- is the same: the deliverance from Egypt and from the house of bondage. One could thus conclude in like fashion that the fifth commandment also does not pertain to us, there being a promise which only pertained to Canaan (and thus Israel). Nevertheless, both the entire law and the fifth commandment are moral (Ephesians 6:2).

Objection #2: The Sabbath Is Part of the Ceremonial Law

"Moreover also I gave them My sabbaths, to be a sign between Me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them" (Ezekiel 20:12).

(1) It appears that God, having declared the giving of institutions and judgments -- which if a man do, he will live thereby -- says subsequently: "For that purpose I gave them My sabbaths," thereby indicating that the sabbath is of a different nature than the other institutions.

(2) The sabbath is called a sign here, and it is thus a reflection and shadow of Christ. Consequently, the sabbath belongs to the ceremonial law and is presently not a rule of life for us.

Answer: This is contrary to their own proposition, for according to their own exposition they understand the ordinances to be ceremonial laws, and if then the word wagam (= and moreover) were to indicate that the sabbaths were of a different nature, then the sabbaths would have a moral connotation. However, we shall answer the matter as follows:

First, the word wagam (= and moreover) has as its primary meaning "and also," so that the word "moreover" must be understood in such a sense as meaning "and also." This does not constitute a contradiction, as if the one would be of a different nature than the other. Rather, it frequently indicates that two or three matters are being joined together, without there being an implication of the joining of natures. Such is the case in the following passages: "There is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Psalms 14:3); "And Joseph wept when they spake unto him. And his brethren also wept" (Genesis 50:17-18); "Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord ... I will go also" (Zechariah 8:21). Everyone can readily perceive that the little word "also" does not imply a contradiction of nature, but rather an enlargement of what has preceded. Thus, also here the words "moreover," "or," and "also" imply as much as, "I have given you My ordinances and judgments, and more specifically my sabbaths." The seventh-day sabbath belongs as much to the law -- which Stephen calls the living oracles in Acts 7:38 -- as the other commandments. It is expressly stated concerning the sabbath that, "the eunuchs that keep My sabbaths ... even unto them will I give in Mine house and within My walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off" (Isaiah 56:4-5). Furthermore, we read in Isaiah 58:13-14, "If thou ... call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable ... then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father." It is thus evident that there can be no contradiction here between ordinances and judgments (life being attainable through them) and the seventh-day sabbath -- implying that life could not be obtained through it. Thus, a contradiction can neither be deduced from the word "sabbath," nor from the subject matter under consideration.

Thirdly, it is also evident that the reference is not to the weekly sabbath. It is generally referred to as sabbath, whereas the ceremonial ordinances are referred to as sabbaths. And even if they have the name in common, they are not equal in nature. Arguments would thus have to be presented that the weekly sabbath must also be comprehended in this. As far as the second objection is concerned, namely, that the sabbath is called a sign, this will readily disappear if one notes, first of all, that the entire moral law is also referred to as a sign. "And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand" (Deuteronomy 6:8). Divine plagues are also referred to as a sign: "And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder" (Deuteronomy 28:46). Isaiah -- as is true for other prophets as well -- is likewise referred to as a sign. "Like as My servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and upon Ethiopia" (Isaiah 20:3). The Lord Jesus Himself is also referred to as a sign: "This child is set ... for a sign which shall be spoken against" (Luke 2:34). The extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit are also referred to as signs. "And these signs shall follow them that believe" (Mark 16:17). A sign does not always refer to something future, but also to something in the present. "Show me a token (or sign) for good" (Psalms 86:17). From all these texts it is sufficiently evident that all that is referred to as a sign is not necessarily a ceremony or shadow pointing to Christ, nor does it necessarily signify something in the future. It is expressly indicated here that this sign symbolizes a current matter: "a sign ... that I am the Lord that sanctify them."

Secondly, one matter can have many objectives. By stating one objective, one is thereby not negating another objective. Something which existed previously, but did not function as a sign, can become a sign of something while preserving its original function. Thus, the rainbow, which already existed previously, became a sign of the covenant established with Noah (Genesis 9:12). Such is also true for the sabbath, which already had been given to Adam. This day, while preserving its moral nature, could indeed become a sign, when God -- upon the entire world becoming ungodly -- took a people unto Himself from all nations. It was a sign that they were God's people and that it would be recognized by the observance of the sabbath, for sabbath-observance is very noticeable. It is the most unique and public of all religious observances.

Objection #3: The Sabbath was Abolished by Christ

"For the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath day" (Matthew 12:8). It appears that Christ defends His disciples as far as picking corn was concerned, by giving them liberty to do this on the sabbath. Since He was Lord of the sabbath, He thus showed that He was abolishing the sabbath. Or else man has been designated as lord of the sabbath and may do with this day as pleases him.

Answer: First, there is not one word which implies abolition. Simply because someone is lord of something does not mean that he therefore does away with it; rather, he preserves, uses, and governs it. Secondly, this is not a case of sabbath-desecration, for it was indeed permitted on the sabbath to walk through the field, to pick ears, to rub them in the hands, and to eat the kernels of grain. It was but a superstition of the Jews to consider this to be unlawful. This is evident from Matthew 12:3; Matthew 12:5, where we read, "Have ye not read what David did, when he was an hungred, and they that were with him; or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?" Thirdly, if the sabbath were a type of Christ in the grave, then it could not have been abolished here, for the antitype had not yet been fulfilled. Fourthly, Christ Himself observed the sabbath: "And he came to Nazareth ... and, as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the sabbath day" (Luke 4:16). Fifthly, Christ taught His disciples to pray that after His death no discomfort would befall them on the sabbath (Matthew 24:20). Sixthly, Christ thus wished to say hereby that He, as the Lord of the sabbath, knew the right meaning of the sabbath and was able to explain it.

We shall respond to the second objection as follows:

(1) It was Christ's common manner of speech to call Himself the Son of Man. Having referred to Himself by the one nature, He ascribes to Himself that which belongs to the essence of His other nature. It is He to whom the Father has given "authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man" (John 5:27). Thus, "the Son of Man" must be understood as a reference to Christ Himself, rather than to every man.

(2) By way of the Son of man the reference was to the entire human race, and thus the sabbath was given to the entire human race, and it is consequently a moral commandment which pertains to all men.

(3) To go a step further, if "the Son of man" signifies the Jews -- although such is contrary to Scripture and reason -- even if this were so, then what? Being the lords of the sabbath, they therefore could act as they wished. Then they would not have sinned if they transgressed the sabbath -- also not prior to that time. If this were understood as referring to the disciples who as lords would have abolished the sabbath, the type would have been removed prior to the coming of the anti-type or the fulfillment.

(4) There is here therefore only a defense of the fact that the disciples had not sinned, and that the plucking and eating of ears upon the sabbath was lawful. Even though it was not permitted without due cause, it would nevertheless be no sin here, since there was due cause, and it would be as much as to say that when those two come into conflict -- man and the sabbath -- injury must be done to one of the two. Either man would have to do something to the deliverance of another man, which, apart from this case, would not be lawful on the sabbath, or that person would have to perish. In such a case the deliverance of the person must have precedence and the sabbath must yield. Man is superior to the sabbath and mercy must have precedence over the sacrifice (Matthew 12:7) -- and thus nothing is stated contrary to the sabbath.

Objection #4: The Sabbath Is Detrimental to the Gospel

"One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it" (Romans 14:5-6); "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain" (Galatians 4:10-11); "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ" (Colossians 2:16-17). The difficulty which would present itself in these texts is this: It seems as if the distinction of days is removed so that one may not judge another about this. Furthermore, it appears that the keeping of days is detrimental to the gospel, and thus there neither is a sabbath in the New Testament nor may it be observed.

Answer: First, these texts cannot be used as an argument against the sabbath if one maintains that there is still a moral element in the fourth commandment, even though there was merely an obligation to set apart some time for public worship (irrespective of what time this may be and to what extent one may do so). This implies a distinction of time, even if it were but every twentieth day, if it were but a half day or some hours. Thus, according to that presupposition, these texts do not speak of a distinction between times or days which is enjoined in the fourth commandment -- and that is the point in question. And thus in harmony with the sentiments of the opponents themselves, these texts cannot be advanced as an argument against the sabbath.

Secondly, it is a well-known truth that the apostles commanded the churches everywhere to observe the Lord's day (refer to the above). It is common knowledge that there was neither any contention concerning that day, nor was there any intent to force or eradicate the observance of this day contrary to the wishes of the apostles. It is thus evident when the apostle, in the texts mentioned, opposes those who wished to introduce the observance of days, that he does not have the Lord's day in view, and that no one in the first congregations had any such thoughts as far as this day was concerned. Rather, everyone understood very well that the apostle did not speak of this day, but of other Jewish ceremonial days. If, however, the apostle does not speak in these texts of the Lord's day, one can neither make use of them to prevent the observance of the Lord's day, for one would thus miss the point of the question completely, which is: Ought one to observe the seventh day, which is the sabbath, and is called the Lord's day?

Evasive Argument: These texts are presented, not to prevent the observance of the Lord's day, but to demonstrate that one is not to observe this day by virtue of some divine commandment, and that we observe it only as an institution of men.

Answer: If the apostle does not speak of the Lord's day at all, then he also does not say whether it is to be observed either by virtue of a divine commandment or a human institution. Thus, neither proposition can be confirmed or refuted by these texts. The apostle is referring to the Jewish ceremonial days, so that one would first have to prove that the seventh day -- the sabbath or the Day of the Lord -- is a ceremony and shadow. Only then can one produce these texts in order to refute the observance of the sabbath. To maintain, however, that the apostle forbids the observance of ceremonial days, and that the sabbath is consequently ceremonial, is an invalid conclusion.

Thirdly, if all distinction between days had been forbidden here, the apostles could not have instituted the Lord's day. The church would then also not be able to either institute or observe the Lord's day, prayer days, or days of thanksgiving, as the distinction of days of which Paul speaks in this text is harmful to the gospel. Such observance would thus be contrary to the command of the apostles, and would be such will-worship as is condemned in Matthew 15:9. Indeed, since the distinction of foods is here placed on the same level with the distinction of days, the former being a sign of the antichrist and a doctrine of devils -- "commanding to abstain from meats" (1 Timothy 4:3) -- then the institution of the distinction of days (if the apostle were condemning this in a general sense) would lean greatly in that direction. It is thus very evident that the apostle does not speak in a general sense against the observance of times and days, but he speaks against the observance of Jewish and ceremonial days. One can thus not conclude that the distinction of days, and thus also the sabbath has ceased. And as long as one has not proven that the observance of the sabbath or the Lord's day (by virtue of God's command) is Jewish and ceremonial, one may not advance these texts as an argument against it. If, however, such were the case, only then would they be applicable, and not any earlier.

Fourthly, if we may not judge each other in the observance of this day -- indeed, if those were the strongest in the faith who do not observe such a day and if such observance were injurious to the gospel -- then no one is under obligation. Yes, the best thing to do would be to work on the Lord's day and let those go to church who wish to do so. However, no one will admit to that. It is thus evident that these texts are not general, but refer to the Jewish ceremonial days. However, then they do not pertain to the question whether or not the Lord's day should be observed by virtue of God's command or by virtue of human institution; for this is an entirely different question. We readily subscribe to and contend for the interpretation that the apostle speaks of Jewish ceremonial days, and that they may not be instituted again. What proof does this yield, however, in opposition to the sabbath of the fourth commandment, which had already been instituted prior to the fall (Genesis 2:1-25)? The proof derived from these texts is thus: The Jewish days must be abolished and consequently the sabbath must be abolished. The Jewish days are ceremonial in nature and thus the sabbath is ceremonial. Who cannot see that such a conclusion is invalid? One would first have to determine that the sabbath is Jewish and ceremonial and then conclude that it must be abolished. However, the first cannot be proven from these texts, as we have demonstrated. Let us now consider each text in particular. As far as Romans 14:5-6 is concerned, the question is whether the observance of all days should be tolerated. The believers among the Gentiles (who constituted the church) understood correctly that one was not bound to the Jewish days, and that the distinction of foods had also ceased. The weak believers among the Jews, who had joined themselves to the congregation, understood indeed that the ceremonies were to be eliminated, for they confessed that Christ had already come; however, they deemed that the Jewish days still had to be religiously observed, and that one as yet was not permitted to eat all foods. The believers among the Gentiles could not tolerate this. Paul exhorts that for the time being one must bear with those who are weak, and that the ceremonial days were not observed in a ceremonial sense, but engaged in as religious exercises. They would thus observe them unto the Lord, which could be tolerated for some time. The Jews, in turn, had to tolerate that the Gentiles did not observe these days. Thus, this text does not apply in the least to the Lord's day, that is, the sabbath.

Let us consider Galatians 4:10-11. Rather than tolerating the weak believers among the Jews (Romans 14:1-23), the apostle does not want it to be tolerated that the Jews would forcefully defend the entire ceremonial service (and thus also the Jewish days), reintroduce it, and compel others to do likewise, as the Jews attempted to do (cf. Galatians 3:1, etc; Galatians 4:9). That which can be tolerated in someone who himself is weak but quiet, cannot be tolerated when someone becomes bold thereby and forces his errors upon others. Not one word is mentioned here as to whether the sabbath is either ceremonial or moral, or whether it ought to be abolished or remain in force. In these general answers it has now been demonstrated that these texts are not to be interpreted in a general sense, and that from a general proposition concerning all Jewish days nothing can be concluded in opposition to the sabbath.

Evasive Argument: This must be understood as a reference to all the holy days of the Jews -- even of the weekly sabbath. Mention is made here of years (to which belonged the seventh year and the year of jubilee), and of times, which are the three solemn feast days Passover, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles. It also mentions months (which are the new moons), and days, which can be nothing else but the seventh day, that is, the sabbath.

Answer: First, it must be proven that the apostle understood by these words the feast days mentioned. Secondly, even if it were admitted that it refers to years, months, and times, it nevertheless does not follow that one must understand "days" to refer to the sabbath of the fourth commandment -- unless they, in addition to the times mentioned (years, months, and seventh day) had no other days. However, they had other high-days in addition to those, as is to be observed in Leviticus 23:1-44 and will soon be demonstrated from Colossians 2:1-23. The other feast days were of the same nature as those times, years, and months. Thus, by reason of the mention of "days" here, it does not follow that the sabbath must be counted among them. Since the seventh-day sabbath is, however, not of the same nature as the other days, but is moral, and is advantageous rather than detrimental to the gospel, it is evident that the apostle does not speak of the sabbath here. Add to this the answers given to the general questions.

Let us consider Colossians 2:16-17. In order to understand this text, it must first be noted that the Jews had many sabbaths. There were the fifteenth day of the first month (Leviticus 23:2-7), the last day of the Passover, and in Leviticus 23:21 yet another feast day is mentioned. Furthermore, there are the first day of the seventh month (Leviticus 23:27-28), the tenth day of the seventh month (Leviticus 23:27-28), and the eighth day of the Feast of Tabernacles (Leviticus 23:36). All of these were ceremonial in nature. In addition to these there was, however, one which already had been there from the beginning, and which has been commanded in the fourth commandment of the moral law. This sabbath was of an entirely different nature; it was of a moral nature.

Secondly, matters of a different nature may have the same name. Judas the traitor and Jude, the author of a powerful epistle, have identical names. In Dutch these two names are identical in spelling. Nevertheless it may not be said of both what is said of Judas. One may thus also not say of all sabbaths what is said of the sabbath, for they are distinct. There are ceremonial sabbaths -- which bear the name sabbath together with the moral sabbath, due to having rest as a common focus -- as well as the moral sabbath.

Thirdly, an unrestricted manner of speech may not be made applicable to all matters which bear a given name; rather, one must limit himself to the subject matter under discussion. This will be understood by every intelligent person. In order to demonstrate this to the inexperienced, however, let us take note of this text. The words "food" and "drink" are used here in the same unrestricted sense as the word "sabbaths." It can readily be understood, however, that under the words "food" and "drink" not all food and drink must be comprehended, even though it bears the name of food and drink. Rather, it only refers to that food and drink in question, which are not vegetables, bread, etc., but the foods forbidden in the ceremonial law, which the apostle gives them the liberty to use. Once more, "For this is the love of God, that we keep His commandments" (1 John 5:3). One may not conclude from this that he ought to keep the ceremonial laws in the New Testament merely because they bear the name of commandments. Rather, one must understand this to refer to the commandments which are now in force. And thus there are numerous texts in which unrestricted usage must be interpreted according to the context, and it must not be extended to all that bears that name. If you apply this rule to the word "sabbaths," the difficulty will have been removed. In the Old Testament there were many sabbaths. Matters of a different nature do bear the same name. From an unrestricted manner of speech one may not make applications to all that bears that name. This being irrefutable, it is likewise irrefutable that one may not come to the conclusion that the seventh-day sabbath has been abolished simply because the apostle uses the word "sabbaths" in an unrestricted sense. Rather, one must apply this to those sabbaths which are of one and the same nature as food and drink, that is, which were ceremonial and typical, as is to be observed in Leviticus 23:17. One may thus not conclude that the seventh-day sabbath is a shadow merely because there are food, drink, feast days, and sabbaths which are shadows.

Fourthly, it can readily be observed that it is not the apostle's intention to prove what is typical and what is not, but rather what needs to be abolished due to being typical. Among them he mentions the sabbaths, but neither does he say "all sabbaths" or "such and such a sabbath," for it is evident to which sabbaths he refers here. It is likewise understood which sabbath he did not refer to, since the seventh-day sabbath was observed by the congregation, and there was no question concerning this. One ought therefore first to prove that the weekly sabbath belonged to the shadows, and then this text will be applicable as far as abolishing the sabbath is concerned.

Fifthly, consider furthermore that it reads "sabbaths," and not "sabbath," since the seventh-day sabbath is generally referred to in God's Word by the singular form "sabbath"; if "sabbaths" occurs, then it occurs due to the continual repetition of every seventh day. It also needs to be considered that Paul is not speaking here to Jews who were external to the church, so that Christians would be contrasted with Jews and he was thus rebuking their religion, but to those who were within the church and by whom the weekly sabbath, also called the Lord's day, was observed.

Objection #5: The Sabbath is Typical of the New Testament Dispensation

"Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. For we which have believed do enter into rest, as He said, As I have sworn in My wrath, if they shall enter into My rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world. For He spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, And God did rest the seventh day from all His works. And in this place again, If they shall enter into My rest. Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief: again, He limiteth a certain day, saying in David, To-day, after so long a time; as it is said, To-day if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts. For if Jesus had given them rest, then would He not afterward have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from His. Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief" (Hebrews 4:1-11). The apparent strength of the argument lies herein:

(1) The rest which remains is understood to be the deliverance from the ceremonial law, and thus represents the New Testament dispensation.

(2) This rest -- said to be the New Testament dispensation -- was depicted by God's rest on the seventh day and by the rest in Canaan.

(3) Since the New Testament dispensation is now upon us, the seventh day -- being a shadow which no longer exists -- has been entirely eliminated. Answer: First, these texts cannot be advanced by those who hold to some moral dimension in the fourth commandment, and who consider the continuation of a day of worship a necessity. For this text absolutely denies the seventh day and all rest -- except the other rest which yet remains.

Secondly, we absolutely deny that by "the rest which remaineth" is understood the abrogation of the ceremonies, that is, to the New Testament dispensation.

Neither in the matter itself nor in the text is there the least proof; instead, heaven is understood by this.

(1) Each and everyone whom the apostle addresses here (also unbelievers) was already discharged from the ceremonial law. Christ had already abolished all shadows and thus all would then enjoy this rest. Nevertheless, the apostle declares that no one but true believers and all the people of God shall enter into this rest which remains.

(2) The apostle exhorts the godly -- who already had been delivered from the ceremonies -- that they should give diligence to enter into this rest which yet remains and is yet in the future for God's people.

Thirdly, the apostle here speaks of such a rest of which they also who lived in the Old Testament could become partakers if they believed, and from which they were deprived by nothing other than unbelief (Hebrews 4:2). Thus, this rest is not a discharge from ceremonies, but something else which one could obtain while partaking of the ceremonies, and which one, due to unbelief, could come short of subsequent to having partaken of the ceremonies, that is, come short of heaven.

Fourthly, we deny at the same time that the New Testament dispensation was typified by the rest in Canaan and by the rest of the seventh day. For 1) God's Word states this neither here nor elsewhere. 2) To designate God's rest on the seventh day as being typical of the New Testament dispensation, and of the abolition of the ceremonies of the Old Testament -- which must necessarily be maintained by those who wish to advance this text contrary to the sabbath -- is without proof, too farfetched, and too brazen an assertion. Since the seventh day existed prior to the fall, it could be no ceremony of something which points to Christ and the New Testament dispensation. It is thus evident that the seventh day was not a depiction of the days of the New Testament.

Fifthly, the apostle demonstrates here that neither Canaan nor the sabbath was the true rest, but that believers must have a different rest in view -- a rest which they as yet did not possess: the eternal rest in heaven, which believing souls would enjoy as soon as they depart from this life. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them" (Revelation 14:13). This blessed rest is declared by the gospel to both the church of the Old Testament and also now in the days of the New Testament (Hebrews 4:2, etc.).

Objection #6: The Sabbath Is to Be Observed on the Seventh Day Following Six Workdays

If the fourth commandment were to belong to the moral law -- and thus be binding upon us -- then the seventh day after creation ought to be celebrated. However, not this day but rather the first day of the week is celebrated.

Answer: To remove the burden of this difficulty, the following matters ought to be noted. First, in one and the same commandment various things which belong to each other can be commanded, yet in such a manner that the focus is primarily upon one matter. The others being subservient to this are commanded as well. For example, a government commands a specific individual to pay certain taxes on a given day. Three matters are commanded there: the time, the tax, and who will receive them. Everyone can perceive, however, that the tax is the primary issue, even though the other two injunctions must also be obeyed. Such is also the case here. Time and matter are commanded in the fourth commandment, that is, holy rest and the seventh day to that end. The holy rest has the primary position in the commandment. "Remember (not the seventh day, but) the sabbath day to keep it holy." The time is indicated subsequent to this: "The seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord." These two may not be separated; nevertheless the holy rest is of primary importance.

Secondly, there is no mystery concealed in the moment as to when the seventh day after creation occurs, for when God commanded the human race in Paradise to hallow the seventh day, it would have been impossible for all men occupying the globe to begin the sabbath at the very same hour. It must have differed as much as twelve hours. Thus, when the one part of the world began and observed its sabbath, the other part was still permitted to work twelve hours, and whereas the other portion was finished and had again begun to work, the other was still observing the sabbath. For when it is day for one portion of the world, it is night for the opposite portion. We also know that during the time of Joshua there was a week which was approximately twenty-four or twelve hours longer, and thus an entire day longer than other weeks (Joshua 10:13). Consequently, all sabbaths subsequent to this came twenty-four or twelve hours later than the previous sabbaths. It also has never created a problem for the dispersed Jewish church that the one began and finished the sabbath a few hours earlier than the other, this being contingent upon whether they were dispersed toward the east or toward the west. We thus observe that there is no mysterious element in the moment itself -- be there a difference of twelve hours -- and that such can occur while the matter itself remains in force in its entirety.

Thirdly, one must make a distinction between the commandments and the circumstances surrounding the commandments. The circumstances indeed change, but the matter nevertheless remains.

(1) For example, the second commandment dictates the manner of worship. However, in the Old Testament God wanted to be served by external elements, as being shadows. God abolished this entire method in the New Testament and replaced it by an invisible manner of worship -- without this ceremonial framework -- although the commandment remained in force. This change is significantly greater than the continuation of some hours. Even though it is not expressed in the commandment, it is a known fact that the ceremonial laws, in regard to their foundation, must be related to the second commandment.

(2) Once more, the fifth commandment promises a long life in Canaan; this only was applicable among the Jews. God abolishes this in the New Testament and replaces Canaan by everyone's residence (Ephesians 6:3), and thus the commandment remains in full force. One must therefore in the fourth commandment also make a distinction between the matter which is commanded, and the attending circumstances. Likewise also here the matter itself can be preserved, even though there is some continuation of some hours, or of one day.

Fourthly, one must strictly observe this commandment and neither add or take away anything, due to prejudice, nor give anything a different meaning. If we thus approach the fourth commandment, we shall find there the injunction, application, and argument for observance. The injunction is: "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God." Not a word is mentioned here of the seventh day in the order of creation, but only of the seventh day which follows after six workdays. However, how will one know which seventh day? Is it a matter of indifference? Is this left to the freedom of each man? No. God had already made known since Adam that He wanted the seventh day observed (consistent with the order of creation) -- which is to be observed from the reason added to this commandment. Thus, this attending circumstance of the seventh day as being in precise harmony with the sequence of creation does not belong to the essence of the commandment. If God thus causes the commandment to remain in force -- that is, the hallowing of the seventh day -- and He changes something in the attending circumstance which preserves the holiness and the hallowing of the seventh day; and if by the advancement of some hours on a given day it no longer is the seventh day in chronological order from creation, no change occurs in the essence of the commandment, but only to a small degree in the circumstances. However, God has indeed advanced the sabbath by one day, so that the sabbath is no longer the seventh day from creation in a chronological sense, but it nevertheless remains the seventh day which follows six workdays. This change has not come about by human initiative, but by the initiative of Christ and His apostles. This is first of all evident from Christ's appearance on that day to His gathered disciples and the repetition thereof on the subsequent first days of the week. We do not read of an express institution here, but it shows, nevertheless, that since the resurrection of Christ, the first day of the week has been observed according to the reckoning of the Jews.

Secondly, consider furthermore the ordinances of the apostles -- who were moved by the Holy Spirit -- and of Christ who instructed them in the forty days prior to His ascension in those things which they were not able to bear prior to that. Consider also the continual practice of the church during the apostolic age, as is to be observed in Acts 20:7, "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow." Why is mention made here of the day, that is, of the first day of the week? Why did the church gather on this given day and celebrate the Lord's Supper? Why is it recorded that Paul preached on that day? Why is it added that he was ready to depart on the morrow? This confirms that the sabbath was observed on the first day of the week.

Consider furthermore 1 Corinthians 16:1-2 : "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." Why was it the first day of the week? Why were alms gathered then? Does not this again clearly indicate that the sabbath was the first day of the week, and that the work pertaining to the sabbath had to be performed? By what other argument and on what other basis did they observe this day, except the institution of Christ commanded to His disciples, be it orally or by His Holy Spirit? For the apostles would not have tolerated any human institutions.

Add to this Revelation 1:10, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Observe again how this day is acknowledged. But why is it called "the Lord's Day"? This is so because the Lord has instituted it. For the same reason it is called the sabbath of the Lord, and the Holy Supper is called the table of the Lord. It is also suggested that this day is called the Lord's day because Christ arose from the dead on that day. To this I reply that the matter is indeed true, for the first day of the week is indeed the day of Christ's resurrection. It will never be proven, however, that the apostle focuses only on this in the text. This manner of speech, in harmony with God's Word, points to its institution.

Thirdly, consider also the continual and common use of this day from the resurrection of Christ until this day -- as recounted in the foregoing. From all this it is evident that the change of this day is not a human but a divine institution. It therefore remains unchangeable, and not a single specific church has had the heart to change that day.

Evasive Argument: Should not the change in the New Testament have been conveyed by an express command?

Answer: We have no right to give God directions. If we did not wish to adhere to this commandment, and did not understand its meaning due to our blindness, would God then be obligated to give us that command by renewal, doing so with words which we ourselves would formulate? That one commandment ought to be sufficient for you, for it is not a new commandment, but only a change in circumstances. Thus, if you presently do not observe the sabbath, you are transgressing the commandment. If there is a sabbath, would you then desire any other day except the day which Christ and His disciples have observed and imposed upon the church -- this being confirmed by the practice of the church for a duration of seventeen hundred years?

Question However, what is the reason for the change of this day?

Answer: It is foolishness to demand a reason from the sovereign Lawgiver. If His commandment is not sufficient for you, no reason will satisfy you. In the entire New Testament I observe a very great change in the entire manner of worship. I observe that the Redeemer of the world has risen on the first day of the week. I observe that by the observance of the first day of the week the church is separated from the Jews, Muslims, and heathen. I observe that thereby the entire Jewish religion stands condemned, and that the heathen ought to be convicted of their ungodliness. This suffices for me and ought to be satisfactory to everyone.

Objection #7: The Sabbath is a Ceremony Typifying Spiritual Worship Would it not be possible to say that we ought to observe the sabbath in the New Testament by reason of the fourth commandment, doing so because it is a ceremony -- the ceremonies being examples of the spiritual worship of the New Testament? Does not the fourth commandment obligate us in that respect to a spiritual rest and a public glorification of God?

Answer: From every angle this objection is fraught with errors and absurdities.

(1) If one maintains and teaches that we must observe the sabbath by reason of the fourth commandment, and one keeps silent about his perception as to the manner in which this is to be understood, he is deceitful by way of aequivocatio, or allusion, for he appears to be orthodox, whereas his sentiments are entirely to the contrary.

(2) One establishes a false foundation, namely, that the fourth commandment is ceremonial. It is, however, entirely moral in nature and literally has nothing ceremonial or typical in it, which we have demonstrated comprehensively. The foundation being contrary to truth, all that is built upon this argument is contrary to truth.

(3) It is also untrue that the ceremonies of the Old Testament are exemplary of the spiritual worship of the New Testament. We are entirely and completely free from the ceremonial law, and are under no obligation to it in any part or in any respect. The ceremonies were typical examples of the Messiah, the Lord Jesus Christ, and have been fulfilled and abrogated in Him. One can indeed learn many things from the ceremonies about God, Christ, and the duties of true partakers of the covenant, and cause them to bear upon us by way of application, "for whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning" (Romans 15:4); however, they do not place us under obligation. Not the ceremonial law, but the moral law is our rule -- our perfect rule. Only the moral law obligates us to all that is spiritual and to all that must be performed by us; we must live according to that law and not according to the ceremonial law.

(4) To maintain that, by reason of the fourth commandment, we must observe the sabbath in such a sense, is to fully subject us who are in the New Testament to the ceremonies again by observing them from the very beginning. For every ceremony would then obligate us to such and such a spiritual duty -- whatever one can deduce by way of application. The duty can be good, but the efficacy which obligates us proceeds from the moral law; or else, it would again become touch not and taste not.

055. Chapter 50: The Fifth Commandment

----- CHAPTER FIFTY ----- The Fifth Commandment The entire law is love, and this love has two objects -- God and our neighbor. Therefore there are two tables of the law. We have discussed the first table in the previous four chapters, and we shall now proceed to discuss the second table. The first commandment of this table pertains to the relationship between superiors and subordinates. We must note here the commandment and the incentive. The commandment pertains first of all to the subject and subsequently to the work or the duty related to that subject. The Full Scope of the Words "Father" and "Mother" The subject is expressed by the words father and mother. Various persons are denominated as such and likewise various individuals are comprehended under the words "father and mother" -- that is, within the family, church, and civil state.

Within the family circle there are fathers and mothers of different rank.

(1) There are natural parents relative to children whom they have begotten. This pertains not only to the father, but also to the mother, and thus to both of them without distinction -- whether rich or poor, of a high or low station in life, good or evil, or young or old. "Hearken unto thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old" (Proverbs 23:22). Yes, in order that the mother (who generally and more readily receives less esteem) be not despised, she is at times mentioned before the father. "Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father" (Leviticus 19:3). They are both comprehended under the word "parents." "Children, obey your parents in the Lord" (Ephesians 6:1).

(2) There are grandfathers and grandmothers and earlier ancestors (Numbers 2:34).

(3) There are stepfathers and stepmothers who support and maintain children. In this capacity Joseph is called the father of the Lord Jesus (Luke 2:48; Luke 2:51).

(4) There are fathers-in-law and mothers-in-law. Jethro was such as far as Moses was concerned (Exodus 18:17; Exodus 18:24; Exodus 18:27), and Naomi in regard to Ruth (Ruth 3:1).

(5) This is true for the husband in reference to his wife, for he is her lord (cf. Genesis 18:12; Psalms 45:11).

(6) This is true for uncles and aunts, particularly when they have taken the place of deceased parents. To this also belong guardians, and those who have adopted someone to be their child -- as Mordecai did with his cousin Esther (Esther 2:7).

(7) This pertains to masters in regard to their servants. In the church the following are comprehended under fathers:

(1) the ministers; in this respect Elisha called Elijah his father (2 Kings 2:12), the king of Israel called Elijah his father (2 Kings 6:21), and Paul calls himself a father of the Corinthians (1 Corinthians 4:15);

(2) the elders are the coregents, protectors, and caretakers of the church and therefore worthy of double honor (1 Timothy 5:17);

(3) the deacons are as fathers to the poor, collect that which is needed for their support, and distribute according to everyone's need. In civil relationships the following are comprehended as fathers:

(1) The governments--at the highest as well as the lowest levels, each according to his rank. The word "father" is therefore mentioned in association with their name--such as, Abimelech, my father the king. David thus called Saul his father (1 Samuel 24:11), and Deborah called herself a mother in Israel (Judges 5:7).

(2) The elderly and prominent in reference to those that are young and of a low station. "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man" (Leviticus 19:32); "Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father ... the elder women as mothers" (1 Timothy 5:1-2).

(3) It pertains to school teachers, master craftsmen, and women, and furthermore, all who function in some relationship with others as superiors and subordinates. Whoever you may be, you are subject to some relationship; or else you are in some respect in either a superior or subordinate position to others. This either has been the case, or is presently true. Call to mind how you have behaved yourself in this respect and what is as yet required from you. The required action toward the subjects is expressed by the word to honor, which implies the duties of superiors to subordinates and of subordinates to superiors. We shall deal with each individually and then make a contrast with the forbidden vices of each party. The Virtues to which Superiors are Enjoined The virtues of superiors toward subordinates are: First, to maintain the station in which God has placed each person, to preserve respect in all dignity, and to adorn this station. "When I went out to the gate ... the young men saw me, and hid themselves: and the aged arose, and stood up" (Job 29:7-8).

Secondly, tender love must be manifested in all their governing, so that it will become manifest that all is executed in a good-natured and loving manner toward the subordinates.

Thirdly, there must be a good example toward others who are in a superior position in order to teach subordinates how they must conduct themselves toward their superiors, so that one may be able to say: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ" (1 Corinthians 11:1).

Fourthly, there must be a concern for the well-being of one's subordinates in regard to soul and body, knowing that the superiors are there for the subordinates. The king is there for his subjects, the minister for the congregation, the school teacher for the children, and the master craftsman for the laborers. The subordinates also exist, however, for the benefit of the superiors, thereby upholding them in their station, which in turn is to the benefit of the subordinates. "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith" (1 Timothy 5:8); "... the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children" (2 Corinthians 12:14).

Fifthly, the subordinates must be instructed, exhorted, rebuked, and if necessary, be punished in order to mend their ways and preserve them. "Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" (Ephesians 6:4); "He that spareth his rod hateth his son: but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes" (Proverbs 13:24).

Sixthly, the weaknesses of subordinates must be overlooked and patiently endured; the heart may not be withdrawn from them for this reason. "I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him" (Malachi 3:17). The Virtues Enjoined of Subordinates The virtues of subordinates to superiors are the following: First, they must be honored. This includes:

(1) Having respect for superiors as having been placed over them by God. "Esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake" (1 Thessalonians 5:13).

(2) Subjection to them as being subject to God. "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God (Romans 13:1).

(3) The obligation of paying homage to them in words and gestures, doing so either by bowing, the uncovering of one's head, or in a different manner -- all according to the custom of the land.

Secondly, they must be loved -- not only as fellow men, but also relative to that relationship. Even if the person is not lovable and behaves himself unworthy of either love or esteem, he must nevertheless be loved in that relationship as having been placed over us. It is the ordinance of God to love them -- it pleases God, and it is also very beneficial.

Thirdly, there must be faithfulness in maintaining the relationship to the superior in all that this relationship mandates.

(1) As much as possible, we as subordinates must preserve their belongings and give diligence that they be not wasted due to our carelessness.

(2) We must render every service which this relationship toward the superior requires. "Not purloining, but showing all good fidelity" (Titus 2:10).

(3) We must support our superiors according to our ability or as far as the relationship obligates us to do so. "But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents" (1 Timothy 5:4). David did this (1 Samuel 22:3), as well as the Lord Jesus (John 19:26).

(4) We must promote the honor of our superiors, and not tolerate their being despised. Fourthly, we must obey them; that is, comply with their orders and diligently execute them. "My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother" (Proverbs 1:8); "Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh" (Colossians 3:22). This is not only true when their government is gentle and good-natured (as it ought to be), but also when they are froward and cruel. If superiors commit evil, they are accountable. The subordinate must, however, be obedient -- not only because this is right and desirable, but also because the superior demands this, his injunction being regulative for the subordinate. "Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward" (1 Peter 2:18). There is only the following exception: If they command what is contrary to God's law, one may not obey them. Then the direction of Peter is in force: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye" (Acts 4:19).

Fifthly, we must have patience with their weaknesses. They are people, and for the most part are without grace. They give offense, live ungodly lives, and do not behave themselves well toward subordinates. We must pity them for this and pray for them. The latter is particularly true of those who fear the Lord. "Despise not thy mother when she is old" (Proverbs 23:22). To mock with them is the work of Ham (Genesis 9:22; Genesis 9:25). The Sins Prohibited The sins against this commandment can easily be deduced from the commanded virtues by defining the contrary. We shall briefly add them here. The sins of superiors to subordinates are the following: First, they sin when they render despicable the station to which they have been appointed by means of evil and tyrannical conduct, by a careless neglect of duty, by an ungodly life, or by unrighteously taking advantage of subordinates.

Secondly, they sin when they hate their subordinates, have a hostile disposition toward them, treat them cruelly and as slaves, conduct themselves as if the subordinates merely exist for them, to do their bidding, and conduct themselves proudly and arrogantly toward them.

Thirdly, they sin when they give an evil example, are disobedient toward those who have been placed over them, speak evil of them, and despise them. This will cause their subordinates to follow in their footsteps and also deal likewise with them. They sin when they do not perform their duty toward others and yet strictly demand that others perform their duty toward them.

Fourthly, they sin when they do not seek the advantage of their subordinates, but rather their own, utilizing them in such a manner as if they but serve their superiors to help them to gain honor, money, and profit -- getting as much out of them as they can in demanding: give, give.

Fifthly, they sin when they do not care about the welfare of their subordinates, allowing them to go on without any instruction, exhortation, and rebuke; when they allow them to grow up without restraint, and do not care for the physical and spiritual welfare of the children and servants.

Sixthly, they sin when they mete out severe and cruel punishments to their subordinates for their weaknesses -- even the most insignificant weaknesses. They do so not for their benefit, but because they are of the opinion that their own dignity and respect have been violated -- as if they were God and everyone must bow before them. If they are but injured in the least, their wrath arises in order to vindicate themselves. The sins of subordinates toward their superiors are the following: Obedience, lack of causes problems First, they sin when they have no esteem in their heart for their superiors, despising them, not willingly submitting to them, and are impolite, sullen, and conduct themselves contemptuously toward them. "How shall this man save us? And they despised him, and brought him no presents" (1 Samuel 10:27).

Secondly, they sin when they are inwardly opposed to and have an aversion for their superiors. This can be the result of the superior being too insignificant in their eyes -- as is true for some children who, having advanced somewhat in the world, are ashamed of their parents, do not want to see them, wishing that they were either far away or dead. This can also occur when a superior makes himself hateful by pride, miserliness, drunkenness, or other sins, and because subordinates desire to be the master themselves.

Thirdly, they sin when they are unfaithful; that is, when they do not take care of the belongings of their parents -- such as when they foolishly waste or neglect money or clothing. They sin when they secretly rob them of something delightful, or deprive them of other things, as if they had more liberty to do this than when stealing from others. "Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same is the companion of a destroyer" (Proverbs 28:24). They sin when they are lazy and lax in learning to read, write, or in learning a trade; or else when they make no effort to help their father and mother earn a living and keep the family solvent. To this also belongs involvement in fraudulent transactions -- generally referred to as smuggling -- whereby one, as much as possible, renders the government incapable of promoting the general good of the nation.

Fourthly, they sin when they are disobedient, not acknowledging the fact that God has given their superiors a position over them, but reject this. This is manifested by resisting this reality, not doing what the superiors command, doing what they forbid, grumbling, talking back, arguing, and wanting to withdraw from the duty of obedience. It can furthermore be manifested by wishing to compel superiors not to give certain orders, by wishing to dominate them, and by compelling the superior to do as it pleases the subordinate.

Fifthly, they sin when they mock with their superiors, or ridicule them when they see their weaknesses, are rancorous and chagrined, grumbling and snapping when they find fault in them -- or, when they are of the opinion that their superior does not conduct himself correctly and wisely, imagining that it ought to be otherwise.

Consider all this together and observe all who are comprehended in the words "father and mother." Consider in which subordinate and/or superior relationship you are to others. Consider furthermore the duties of superiors toward subordinates and of subordinates toward superiors, and then examine yourself as to how you have conducted yourself to any who are superior to you, and how you have conducted yourself toward those who are in a subordinate relationship to you. Consider your sins, humble yourself concerning them, and seek forgiveness. Be stirred up to order your way in the future in harmony with this commandment. To that end there needs to be a vivid reflection upon the incentive conjoined to this commandment. The Incentive Conjoined to this Commandment The incentive added to this commandment is as follows: "... that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee" (Exodus 20:12). Death, which is unnatural, has come upon the human race, and even though for believers it is not a punishment for sin, they must nevertheless all die. Life itself is a blessing, and therefore a longer life is a further blessing. Life is desirable, and no one delights in death. The longer one lives, the longer he enjoys that which is delightful. "What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good" (Psalms 34:12).

Objection: Is it not better to be in heaven than upon earth? Is an early death therefore not better for the godly? How can the promise of a long life then be desirable?

Answer: First, there is no distinction here between an eternal, felicitous life and temporal life, but between death and life. Secondly, a believer can perform many things upon earth which are subservient to the glory of God and the welfare of both the church and other people. No one can do this in heaven and the saints were therefore very desirous to live, saying, "For in death there is no remembrance of Thee: in the grave who shall give Thee thanks" (Psalms 6:5). From this perspective a long life is a blessing. Thirdly, one must not only apply the blessing of a long life to individual persons, but also to a family -- that is, each in his tribe and the nation in general. Israel would thus remain long in Canaan, each nation in its own land, and every tribe would continue its lineal descent. The lengthening of days is not only promised, but there is also added: in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. This refers to a long and peaceful life in one's own land in contrast to exile and banishment outside of the homeland. For Israel, this land was Canaan -- a fruitful and delightful piece of land which God had promised to Abraham and his seed. Israel had to occupy this land because the Messiah had to be born there. For every believer, however, it is that country which is his homeland or the country of his residence. This is according to Paul's testimony: "That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth" (Ephesians 6:3). It is a blessing to live long and peacefully in one's own country. "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness" (Proverbs 16:31).

Exhortation to Superiors

You, therefore, who have been placed over others, be diligent to conduct yourself well, in harmony with this commandment.

(1) The names "father" and "mother" necessitate this, amiably and efficaciously obligating you to do so.

(2) Nature teaches that a superior ought to engage his entire person and ability for the benefit of his subordinates. Go to the animals and they will teach you; go to the heathen and they will convince you.

(3) God has given you an honorable position for that purpose and adorned you with this glory.

(4) You will have to give an account to God for your government, and if you have been unfaithful, the damnation of subordinates will certainly be required from your hands in the day of judgment.

(5) However, if you are faithful, a blessing will come upon your children and upon others who are in subordination to you. How sweet it will be to be able to say on the last day, "Behold, here am I and the children whom the Lord has given me!"

Exhortation to Children and Subordinates And you children, and all who are in a subordinate position to others -- see to it that you neither grieve nor cause your parents, and those who have been placed over you, to groan due to your disobedience and opposition, for:

First, it is a dreadful sin, a sin associated with the most ungodly times. "In thee have they set light by father and mother" (Ezekiel 22:7); "For the son dishonoureth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter in law against her mother in law; a man's enemies are the men of his own house" (Micah 7:6); "... disobedient to parents" (Romans 1:30; cf. 2 Timothy 3:2). It is an assault upon God, human society, and is contrary to nature -- so that it is the most abominable of all abominations, even being repulsive in a natural sense.

Secondly, such persons will not escape the wrath of God. Hear the threatenings which God pronounces upon them. They do not only subject themselves to the curse pronounced upon all transgressors of the law, but these specific judgments will also come upon such: "Whoso curseth his father or his mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness" (Proverbs 20:20); "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it" (Proverbs 30:17). This means that they will come upon the gallows. "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother. And all the people shall say, Amen" (Deuteronomy 27:16). They will be cursed both here and forever.

Thirdly, consider the following examples: There is Ham, whose son Canaan and all his descendants were cursed by God (Genesis 9:22;Genesis 9:25); there is Reuben, who was rejected from the right of the firstborn and whose tribe was the first to be eradicated (Genesis 49:3-4); the sons of Eli, who perished miserably (1 Samuel 4:11); Absalom, who was killed in a frightful manner in battle and was buried with contempt under a heap of stones (2 Samuel 18:14;2 Samuel 18:17); and there are the forty-two children who mocked Elisha and were torn apart by bears (2 Kings 2:24).

Final Incentives Given for Obedience

Just as we must be deterred from these sins by prior judgments, we must, nevertheless, not be satisfied with refraining from evil. Rather, with our whole heart we must endeavor to honor and obey father and mother, and all who have been placed over us -- each in their own rank. Consider to that end:

First, the express command of God -- the majestic, glorious, sovereign, all-knowing, and righteous Lawgiver -- who is able to save and destroy. You neither sin against men only, nor are disobedient to men only, but you do so against God Himself.

Secondly, take notice of the authority with which God has vested father, mother, and all superiors. Yes, consider it to be a reflection of God's majesty, and let this motivate you to be respectful and willing to joyously honor and obey them.

Thirdly, consider the love, care, and labor which they expend, in order that all may be well with you. Consider the joy and delight which they experience when you conduct yourself well toward them, and their sorrow and grief if you despise them and are disobedient to them. If there is therefore a spark of natural love in you, you will be motivated to honor and obey them.

Fourthly, meditate much upon the blessings which the Lord bestows upon obedient children. Shem and Japheth were blessed by the Lord because they honored their father, and it was promised to them that the church and the means of grace would be among their children (Genesis 9:26-27). The following remarkable text ought to be imprinted in the hearts of all children, and parents ought to make them memorize it in their youth: "And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you: therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before Me for ever" (Jeremiah 35:18-19).

056. Chapter 51: The Sixth Commandment

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-ONE ----- The Sixth Commandment The sixth commandment pertains to human life, which is the most precious thing that man possesses. God created man to live, but due to sin, death has come into the world. However, God Himself wants to be the executioner of the sentence, and thus forbids all men to do so, saying: "Thou shalt not kill" (Exodus 20:13).

Murder is the removal of human life by abusing the body to such an extent that the soul can no longer remain there. This neither applies to the vegetative life of trees and herbs, nor to animal life, for God has given both to the benefit of man. (The killing of animals may, however, not proceed from cruel motives.) Rather, the killing which is forbidden here pertains to human life. God gives the following reason for this: "For in the image of God made He man" (Genesis 9:6). Even though man has lost the image of God, He nevertheless created him in His image in the beginning, and man has still retained the picture frame which at one time contained the painting: the spirituality, invisibility, and immortality of the soul. He is still gifted with the faculties of the soul -- intellect and will. It is therefore God's will that one person not kill another person.

All Homicide Not Forbidden The following four instances are not included in the homicide forbidden here. First, there is the putting to death of a murderer by the government. For God has commanded this: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Genesis 9:6); "For he (the government vested with authority) is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil" (Romans 13:4). He who forgives a murderer is opposed to the commandment of God and is an accomplice to the murder. "Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he shall be surely put to death ... for blood it defileth the land: and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it" (Numbers 35:31; Numbers 35:33). Yes, even if the murderer fled to the altar in the temple, he had to be taken from there and be put to death. "Thou shalt take him from Mine altar, that he may die" (Exodus 21:14). Popery does exactly the opposite by designating their churches and monasteries as neutral zones for murderers.

Secondly, the killing of an enemy in a lawful war also is not included in the homicide which is forbidden. A war is lawful when enemies conspire to attack a nation that has not offended them, but which dwells quietly and peacefully -- these enemies robbing them of their goods and making the people their bond servants. If the government of such a country then arms itself against such enemies, resists violence with violence, punishes them, and renders them incapable of returning, this is a righteous undertaking whereby the wicked are punished, and good persons are protected both personally as well as relative to their religion and belongings. The legality of such wars is not only abundantly evident in 1) the Old Testament, where God commanded them and prescribed the time and manner of attack, as well as promising to deliver up the enemy, but 2) also in the New Testament. John the Baptist baptized soldiers and rather than commanding to forsake warfare, he exhorted them to be satisfied with their wages and not to be a burden to anyone (Luke 3:14). The centurion is praised for his faith and was not dismissed from his service (Matthew 8:10; Matthew 8:13). Cornelius the centurion, a godly man, was visited by Peter, and while Peter was preaching he received the gift of the Holy Spirit. There is no word of rebuke, however, nor of being dismissed from his service (Acts 10:2; Acts 33:34). Paul declares that the government is of divine origin and that it bears the sword to take vengeance upon the wicked and to protect the good (Romans 13:1-3).

Objection: The Anabaptists, having had a bad experience at Munster, no longer approve of wars, and maintain that it is unlawful to engage in war. In support of this they advance Matthew 5:39-40; Matthew 5:44 "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. But I say unto you, Love your enemies."

Answer: These texts do not refer to the work of civil authorities, for they have been commanded to do so. Rather, Christ commands that private individuals may not take vengeance upon each other, but instead must bear with and yield to each other. Yes, their heart must be inclined to do good to their enemies and to pray for them. The rebuke addressed to Peter upon drawing the sword is of the same nature, the declaration being that those who take the sword will perish with the sword (Matthew 26:52). The Lord Jesus speaks of private individuals -- and not of the civil authorities -- of taking the sword and not of receiving the sword from God (Romans 13:4).

Thirdly, inadvertent manslaughter also is not included in the homicide which is forbidden. This is true, for instance, when a person falls down from a house and dies; or if upon using an axe, its head slips from the handle and kills a bystander or passer-by without the person using it having any intent to do so. This is evident in the following passages: "And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee" (Exodus 21:13); "Whoso killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time past; as when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the ax to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of those cities, and live" (Deuteronomy 19:4-5). One can, however, be guilty of carelessness here.

Fourthly, the slaying of one's neighbor out of self-protection is also not included in the forbidden homicide. This occurs when either a murderer, a person who is in a fit of wrath, or a demented person attacks someone in order to slay him. The person being attacked flees as far as he can and is overcome in such a way that he can no longer flee. He calls for help, warns the attackers, but there comes no relief. He either must permit himself to be killed, or he must in self-defense kill the attacker. If he kills him, he is not guilty of bloodshed; rather, this is referred to as moderamen inculpatae tutelae, that is, self-defense. One is obligated to preserve his life and this is the only objective here. If this culminates in the death of the other person, the attacker is guilty and not the person being attacked. The Sins Forbidden The homicide which is forbidden here can be considered either in regard to the object (or the external deed), or in reference to the internal disposition of heart. The objects are either man himself or his neighbor. The first major sin is suicide. This sin varies in degree.

(1) This sin is committed when a person actually and intentionally deprives himself of his life, be it by way of hanging, drowning, use of sharp objects, poison, or in any other manner. Such people are of evil dispositions, fretful and peevish, and are neither able nor willing to endure discomfort. They renounce God, heaven, and hell, and imagine that with their death they will put an end to their unpleasant circumstances. This is the work of ungodly men, and is tantamount to plunging alive into hell and eternal damnation.

(2) To this also belongs the doing of injury to one's health by wasting one's strength through indulging in lascivious lusts. By this one will bring illnesses upon himself which God inflicts in retribution upon such sins. This also pertains to overindulgence in eating and the drinking of alcoholic beverages, excessive sleeping, or by robbing the body of what it needs by withholding food and shelter.

(3) To this belongs the departure from ordinary conduct by unnecessarily endangering one's self by mountain climbing, diving, and approaching too near to the enemy out of curiosity.

(4) To this belongs fighting in a duel in response to an intentional challenge to do so, for one knows that he will either be killed, become a murderer himself, or be killed and commit murder simultaneously. Such people are not courageous, but reckless fools with unstable emotions who are captive to their passions and cannot tolerate being wrong. The example of David and Goliath cannot be used in defense of this, for that pertains to a public war. David did this by faith and in the name of the Lord in order to punish Goliath for his blasphemy, doing so upon the order of King Saul.

(5) Furthermore, to this belongs the letting of a ship explode if one can no longer defend it. One thus does not permit the enemy to get it in its power; however, he does kill himself. Such was the deed of the ungodly Saul. In doing so, one kills all who are on the ship simultaneously, who in all probability are not aware of such intent, and would not have acquiesced in it. The end, however good it may be, does not justify the means. One cannot do evil in order that good may come out of it. The example of Samson does not vindicate such action. We must live according to rules and not according to examples. That example meets with no approbation anywhere in Scripture. The case is also not identical. If one can no longer defend himself, he must surrender. It is a matter of courage to fight as long as possible, and it is a matter of wisdom to yield to the conqueror.

(6) We can also add to this the murder of souls due to neglect and rejection of, opposition and disobedience to the means of grace, as well as the willful and reckless perseverance in sin -- for the wages of sin is death. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." All of this belongs to the sin of suicide, from which everyone must most carefully abstain. The second major sin is the killing of one's neighbor. This is done, first of all, in deed with sharp objects, by drowning, by strangling, with poison, by withholding food and shelter, by leaving someone in the water or in some other danger, whom we were obligated to help, and either could have helped ourselves, or by calling for help.

Secondly, one can do so with words:

(1) By using sarcastic and biting language, thereby revealing one's own wrath and provoking the wrath of others to such a degree that they will kill. This almost cost Nabal and his household his life (1 Samuel 25:10). Murder, definition of

(2) By falsely accusing someone, upon which the death of the accused and of others could follow or does follow. Doeg thus killed eighty-five priests with his accusation (1 Samuel 22:18).

(3) By betraying others by word or letter. It is thus that the pious Uriah perished (2 Samuel 11:15).

(4) By stirring up others against someone; in this manner the death of the Lord Jesus was required by the people (Matthew 27:1-66).

(5) By betraying others in times of persecution for the sake of true religion, by which they could be killed or also shall be killed. "...And we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren" (1 John 3:16).

(6) By arguing, which provokes mutual wrath. Having an argument frequently degenerates into fighting and this in turn culminates in murder. "He loveth transgression that loveth strife" (Proverbs 17:19).

Thirdly, one can sin with his countenance, by looking at someone with a surly, cruel, and wrathful countenance -- laughing at him, shaking the head, motioning and threatening with the fist, or with some other spiteful and provocative gestures. Thereby the murderous heart reveals itself and provokes others to wrath and murder. This is to be observed in Cain, Laban, Israel, and in the Jews with reference to Christ.

Fourthly, one can furthermore add to this the spiritual murder of his neighbor, which is done by ministers if they do not warn the ungodly (Ezekiel 13:18; Ezekiel 13:22). This is true when one either brings soul-destructive errors and heresies in vogue or promotes them; gives evil examples whereby others are enticed, deceived, or offended; keeps others away from the Word and the practice of religion; or persecutes and resists others for their godliness. The third major sin is to have a murderous disposition of heart, although this may be restrained by reason, fear for punishment, the restraining power of God, or restraining grace. To this belongs, first of all, intense and wrenching envy or jealousy. This manifests itself in an inner gnawing, in being grieved if others fare well or even better than we, and if others receive more honor and love than we do personally. This begets unfriendliness both toward those who are doing so well, and against those who show so much honor, love, and favor to the others. The result of this is that we cannot deal with them in love, cannot bear to hear their voice, and cannot see them without being stirred within. We shall search out whether or not we can find fault, and if so, we shall make the most of it; and if we are too sly to do it publicly, we shall secretly deal with them in contempt and by underhanded methods. We are glad if we find someone who hates that person in question and speaks evil of him. We shall laugh and be delighted if the person being envied experiences something which is detrimental to his honor and good. If there are many who do not give heed to their heart and thus do not perceive this hidden serpent, or if there is no opportunity for this envy to manifest itself, one will readily recognize it by its mother, self-love, and sisters, miserliness and ambition. This envy belongs to murder, for one would like to see this person removed, and it occasionally engenders murder. This we observe in Cain (Genesis 4:1-26), in the patriarchs relative to Joseph (Acts 7:9), and in the priests relative to Christ (Matthew 27:18).

Envy is an abominable sin and an offense to all of humanity. People are therefore ashamed of this and conceal it as much as possible.

(1) It corrupts and consumes people's strength and health. "... but envy is the rottenness of the bones" (Proverbs 14:30).

(2) It is the cause of all confusion among people. "For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work" (James 3:16).

(3) It is a work of the flesh -- and sin which proceeds from sin, ends in sin, and ends in death. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these ... envyings" (Galatians 5:19-21).

(4) It opposes the Holy Spirit, who dwells in the hearts of believers. "Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy" (James 4:5).

(5) It is a devilish sin to have an evil eye, for God is good. It is to accuse God of unrighteousness when He gives things to someone who is not worthy of it and ought not to have it. It is a desire that God be obligated to give the one more than another, a denial of God's providence, or a refusal to be subject to it. It is tantamount to designating one's self as a God. "... but who is able to stand before envy" (Proverbs 27:4).

Secondly, there is hatred. This is a deep-seated anger. At times this proceeds from envy and at others times from wrath, which cannot run its course, but instead is restrained, and one can thus not avenge himself. One will harbor this until time and opportunity are there. Absalom waited about two years before executing his hatred toward Ammon. He who has such hatred is repulsed by the company of the one who is hated, and it is increased when he sees him or hears him speak -- and even becomes greater the better the hated person fares. He strives for the demise of this person by slandering, dishonoring, and scorning the person. If he could or would dare to contribute more to his demise, he would do so.

Listen attentively to what God says concerning hatred. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (1 John 3:15); "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart" (Leviticus 19:17). To this does not belong, however, the hatred against sin and sinners as such. In this manner David hated all vain thoughts and all who hated the Lord (Psalms 119:113; Psalms 119:118). The congregation of Ephesus was praised because they hated the works of the Nicolaitans (Revelation 2:6).

Thirdly, there is anger. This is good if it correctly pertains to sin and sinners. It is thus stated concerning the Lord Jesus: "And when He had looked round about on them with anger ..." (Mark 3:5). However, that anger which is forbidden here is a sinful anger, which is an intense hastiness to do evil to one's neighbor -- a brief moment of frenzy. "Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous" (Proverbs 27:4).

(1) It is murder in God's sight and very frequently it ends in actual murder. "Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment" (Matthew 5:22).

(2) Anger is enumerated among the works of the flesh (Galatians 5:20).

(3) Anger prevents all good work and yields nothing but evil fruits. "For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God" (James 1:20).

(4) Anger is the work of fools. "Anger resteth in the bosom of fools" (Ecclesiastes 7:9).

(5) Anger is a cursed sin. "Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel" (Genesis 49:7).

Fourthly, there is revenge. This is the inclination to retaliate against someone for a wrong actually committed or an imaginary wrong -- yes, they are not satisfied with a retribution of a similar degree, but the least wrong which has been done to them is deserving of death in their eyes. This we observe in Lamech who said: "Hear my voice; ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt. If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech seventy and sevenfold" (Genesis 4:23-24). It is a dreadful sin, for:

(1) It is putting of one's self in the stead of God, an act of outright opposition toward God, and an accusation against God for not immediately slaying the offender. Yes, such a person is not satisfied if God does it, but his own hand and his power must be observed here; he must execute it himself. God says, "To Me belongeth vengeance, and recompense" (Deuteronomy 32:35).

(2) It is to render the devil the opportunity to incline his heart toward all evil according to his will. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath: neither give place to the devil" (Ephesians 4:26-27).

(3) As long as someone harbors revenge in his heart, he is not permitted to pray -- and if he prays, he is praying against himself. When the Lord Jesus taught His disciples how to pray, He immediately adds: "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matthew 6:15).

(4) It is a sin upon which God pronounces a curse (Genesis 49:7). These are some of the chief sins against this commandment. If someone transgresses this commandment, he brings upon himself the curse which is pronounced upon transgressors of the law. He excludes himself from heaven and makes himself worthy of eternal damnation. "Ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him" (1 John 3:15); "But the ... murderers ... shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Revelation 21:8). The Virtues Enjoined The virtues enjoined in this commandment are the following: First, there must be love for life. This particularly relates to the life of our neighbor; that is, when we do not begrudge him his life, and rejoice in that he lives and prospers. We shall thus give diligence that his life be preserved, and utilize everything which would be subservient to that end. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (Romans 13:10); "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth" (1 Corinthians 10:24).

Secondly, there must be tolerance; that is, any wrong that has been committed must be considered insignificant, and there must be no inclination toward retribution. It ought to be overlooked, as not having been committed, while maintaining a quiet and calm disposition toward him in love. "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any" (Colossians 3:13); "... forbearing one another in love" (Ephesians 4:2).

Thirdly, there must be a seeking after and preservation of peace; that is, we should not tolerate that our heart be displeased in the least degree toward anyone, and to endeavor that the heart of someone else also be thus inclined toward us. We shall then not be offended by someone's misbehavior toward us, and we shall be no less friendly toward him. "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Ephesians 4:3); "Seek peace, and pursue it" (Psalms 34:14); "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men" (Romans 12:18).

However peace must not be attained by covering or doing injury to the truth and godliness. "Therefore love the truth and peace" (Zechariah 8:19); "... righteousness and peace have kissed each other" (Psalms 85:10).

Fourthly, meekness is the very opposite of being stern, fretful, and irritable (so that one cannot touch or deal with the person). Rather, to be meek is to be as tender as a mole and as soft as silk, so that it is a delight to have dealings with such a person. It is to have a quiet and dispassionate disposition, and to manifest this by the enduring of wrong, by maintaining a consistently tender disposition, by forgiving wrongdoing as if it had not been committed, and by rendering good for evil -- all this so that everyone may be convinced of their wrongdoing and cease doing wrong against us. A meek person is as a smooth beach upon which tempestuous waves break and then gently flow away, interacting, so to speak, in a playful manner with it.

(1) Meekness is an excellent ornament. "Whose adorning ... be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Peter 3:3-4).

(2) It is the garment of the saints. "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering" (Colossians 3:12).

(3) A meek person is fit to serve God and God invites him to seek Him, being especially pleased with such a disposition. "Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought His judgment" (Zephaniah 2:3).

(4) This is the foundational virtue from which many other virtues issue forth. The Lord Jesus therefore exemplified this and commanded that this be imitated. "And learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart" (Matthew 11:29).

(5) The meek have the promise that "they shall inherit the earth" (Matthew 5:5). This does not only imply that they will possess the new heaven and earth after the last judgment, but also now they will have a peaceful portion, and enjoy what is theirs in quietness. People will not rage against such, but much rather will protect them, and if there comes opposition, they will overcome it with meekness. Solomon therefore says: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city" (Proverbs 16:32).

Fifthly, Compassion there must be compassion if people experience some measure of trouble. We must have compassion with such persons and, so to speak, put our shoulder under their burden to help them carry it. We must be inclined to help them, doing so according to our ability, giving them food, drink, and clothing, serving them upon their sickbeds, and seeking to rescue their business. This is a precious disposition. "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy" (Matthew 5:7); "Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble" (Psalms 41:1).

Sixthly, there must be friendliness. The opposite of this is to be gruff, impolite, arrogant, and to speak in a biting and grumbling manner. This is how Cain behaved himself toward Abel, Joseph's brothers toward Joseph, and Laban toward Jacob. Instead, friendliness is the manifestation of a loving heart, revealing itself in one's countenance and words. "And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men" (2 Timothy 2:24).

057. Chapter 52: The Seventh Commandment

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-TWO ----- The Seventh Commandment Marriage: Divinely Instituted

After having created and adorned the heaven and the earth, God created living creatures. He created many animals at once, but He initially created only one human being -- a man. Subsequently, He caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, during which God removed a rib from him. From this He created a woman, Eve, and brought her to Adam to be his wife. Just as they were first one and subsequently became two, the Lord, by way of marriage, made them one again after this. "And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh" (Mark 10:8). After God had brought Adam and Eve together, He "blessed them, and ... said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth" (Genesis 1:28). Thus, God instituted marriage and gave His blessing upon it, not only prior to the fall, but He also repeated this after the fall (Genesis 3:16; Genesis 9:1). God Himself decrees who one's wife will be and gives her to every man (Genesis 24:44). "A prudent wife is from the Lord" (Proverbs 19:14). The Lord Jesus gave His approbation to marriage by honoring a wedding with His presence (John 2:11). Thus, "marriage is honourable in all" (Hebrews 13:4). This is also true for ministers, for Paul calls the prohibition of marriage a doctrine of devils (1 Timothy 4:1), and it is furthermore a sign of the antichrist. Godly ministers, both in the Old and New Testaments, have been married. Aaron was married and had sons (Leviticus 1:7), Samuel was married and had children (1 Samuel 8:2), Peter had a wife (Matthew 8:14), and Paul had license to take a wife, as was also true for the other apostles (1 Corinthians 9:5). As God instituted marriage, the Lord likewise created in man the ability and inclination to procreate. This inclination is good in and of itself, but after the fall everything in man has become corrupted and distorted. Man is also in this respect distorted and frequently desires the means more than the end. Yes, he frequently fears the end, and with heated fervor entertains himself with the means. Consequently he indulges in various sins in this respect, as to both manner and objects -- sins which are forbidden in the seventh commandment. The Sins Prohibited The sins which are forbidden here are numerous. We shall organize them under the following main headings: actions, gestures, words, thoughts, lusts, and opportunities. To unchaste actions belong the following:

First, there is adultery, which occurs when a married man or woman has a relationship with another person -- either married or unmarried. If this sin is committed by two married persons, then there is double adultery. If it is committed by a married and an unmarried person, there is single adultery. Not only does the married person commit adultery, but also the unmarried person.

Secondly, there is the desertion of one's spouse without adultery being the cause. "For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that He hateth putting away" (Malachi 2:16); "Whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery" (Matthew 5:32); "If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away. But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases" (1 Corinthians 7:12; 1 Corinthians 7:15). If the one spouse commits adultery, then the other spouse may leave the adulterous one, file for divorce, and remarry. The person that has been divorced due to committing adultery may not remarry, and whoever marries such a person also commits adultery. If a spouse divorces rashly, that is, without fornication being the cause, such a spouse will be the cause of sin if the one who has been divorced commits fornication. The one who is the cause of the divorce may not remarry, even though this was practiced in Israel. In such a case, where the sin remained, there was the stipulation that the one who was deserted be given a bill of divorcement (Matthew 19:7). This is, however, contrary to God's commandment. "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" (Matthew 19:6). The one who has been divorced, however, is not obligated to remain unmarried, but rather is permitted to remarry. However, to divorce for reasons other than fornication is adultery.

Thirdly, there is incest; that is, if persons who are too closely related enter into a relationship, be it outside of marriage or within marriage (although it is no marriage). The blood relationship is too close if the relationship is closer than cousins, that is, the children of brothers and sisters. Marriage between first cousins is not prohibited anywhere. The Lord has left man free in this, and such persons do not need to be secretly troubled about this in their heart. The degrees of relationship which are forbidden are parents with their children and grandchildren, this being true in all generations. It is also considered to be incest if one marries either two sisters or two brothers; that is, the one after the death of the other. It is incestuous to marry children of one's sister or brother; that is, if an uncle or an aunt marries someone whose uncle or aunt they are; or if a nephew or niece marries an uncle or an aunt in all descending degrees. To determine who are too near of kin, one must refer to Leviticus 18:6-18 and Leviticus 20:11-12.

Fourthly, there is sodomy; that is, when men have intercourse with men and women with women (cf. Genesis 19:5; Leviticus 20:13; Romans 1:26-27). This is also the case when a human being has intercourse with an animal (Leviticus 18:23).

Fifthly, there is fornication; that is, when two single persons engage in intercourse with each other. This is prohibited everywhere (cf. Acts 15:20; 1 Corinthians 6:9; Galatians 5:19). This is aggravated when one has intercourse with various persons and thus is promiscuous, like dogs. This is also true if one uses his home as a brothel, engages prostitutes in the house for that purpose, or uses his home as a trap to allure and entangle all manner of persons. Persons engaging in this are an abomination, as well as those who could prevent this, but fail to do so (Deuteronomy 23:17)!

Sixthly, there is the commission of personal fornication (which Onan was guilty of), also referred to as "evil concupiscence" (Colossians 3:5; 1 Thessalonians 4:5), and uncleanness and lasciviousness (Galatians 5:19).

Seventhly, there is polygamy; that is, to have more than one wife simultaneously. This sin was initially committed by Lamech (Genesis 4:18), and subsequently became common practice among Jews, Gentiles, and Moslems -- both prior to and after the time of Christ. It is, however, contrary to the command and institution of God. "... and they twain shall be one flesh" (Matthew 19:5); "Let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband" (1 Corinthians 7:2). Thus, to have more than one wife is the continual commission of adultery. The fact that it has been common practice, was practiced by the godly themselves, and was tolerated by God at that time, does not negate the sinfulness of these deeds. Fornication Eighthly, there is concubinage; that is, when two unmarried persons without a lawful relationship live together as husband and wife. This is a continual act of fornication, confessed by the Samaritan woman (John 4:17-18). The rule is this: "But if they cannot contain, let them marry" (1 Corinthians 7:9).

Ninthly, there is premarital intercourse of engaged persons. This is contrary to what Joseph and Mary did (Matthew 1:18), as well as contrary to 1 Corinthians 14:40 : "Let all things be done decently and in order." It is an act of uncleanness. If the man dies, the woman is then considered to be a whore and the child as the child of a whore. It frequently takes away the blessing from the marriage, having been begun in sin.

Unchaste gestures are committed first of all with the eyes; that is, when by way of observation one stirs up and stimulates his own filthy lusts. The Lord Jesus says concerning this: "But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart" (Matthew 5:28; cf. Ezekiel 23:14;Ezekiel 23:16). Peter speaks of "eyes full of adultery" (2 Peter 2:14). One also commits fornication with the eyes if, by ogling or casting lewd glances, one seeks to allure others to commit fornication.

Secondly, sin is also committed by making motions with hands, feet, and other members of the body, revealing one's intention in such a way that it is readily understood by others. "Thou hast ... opened thy feet to every one that passed by" (Ezekiel 16:25).

Thirdly, carousing, kissing, and immodest caressing (Ezekiel 23:3;Ezekiel 23:8) belongs to this. "So she caught him, and kissed him" (Proverbs 7:13).

Fourthly, the wearing of inappropriate clothing and the attire of harlots, as well as the making bare of those members which for decency's sake ought to be covered, also belongs to this. This is the manifestation of a heart that is bent on fornication and on alluring others to indulge in it.

Verbal unchastity is committed by recounting stories or fables that relate to fornication, by using indecent language, and by reading or listening to lewd books. This is indicative of an impure heart. "... for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh" (Luke 6:45). And such language is able to stimulate yourself and others to commit fornication. "Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners" (1 Corinthians 15:33).

Unchaste lusts and thoughts are those which, upon arising at certain occasions, are retained and reflected upon. This also applies if a specific occasion is not the initial cause, but you stir up your own lusts by creating images in your fantasy, mentally reflect upon past fornication, or fantasize about given situations (of which one knows that they will not come to pass) in consequence of which fornication issues forth. "For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications" (Matthew 15:19); "The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 15:26); "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed" (James 1:14); "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness" (Colossians 3:5). The opportunities for fornication are many. These opportunities partly present themselves and partly are sought for.

First of all there is dancing. Even though the dancer, while dancing, has all to do to heed the musical instrument and to watch his step, fornication is nevertheless stimulated by way of observation.

(1) Dancing has always been despised by the saints and held in contempt by civilized heathen.

(2) It neither proceeds from God nor is commanded anywhere; rather, it proceeds from the world and belongs to the lusts of the flesh and the lusts of the eyes (1 John 2:16), as well as to the unfruitful works of darkness (Ephesians 5:11).

(3) It cost John the Baptist his life (Matthew 14:6; Matthew 14:10), the daughters of Shiloh to be abducted (Judges 21:1-25), and Dinah to lose her honor (Genesis 34:1-2). I do not believe that a dancer would be willing to die and appear before the judgment seat while dancing.

Secondly, there is the involvement in, or watching of, comedy. If one were to remove from comedy the vain use of God's Name, pagan idolatry, the devil, abduction, rape, the manifestation of love between men and women, and foolish jesting, and would but display a historical event, then comedy would be no comedy. There would not be many who would watch it. However, those matters mentioned (and others of similar nature) provide the entertainment and it is therefore to be found in all comedies. This makes the heart exceptionally vain and fully occupies it, so that one reflects on this for days and nights. One imagines himself to be one of the players, or to be personally involved in a romance. This will ignite the lewdness which is hidden in the heart. One's attendance, therefore, is not for the purpose of approaching unto God, but to find delight in vain pleasure. God's judgment is not withheld from such, but He generally gives them over to themselves and to their vain and lewd heart. Occasionally He will punish some persons with insanity or even with death. We have experienced an example of this, that a person laughed himself to death at a comedy. No one will dare to say that comedies proceed from God, but one must rather acknowledge that they proceed from the world -- a world which a Christian must not love, for he who loves the world does not have the love of God in him (1 John 2:15), and is also deemed to be an enemy of God (James 4:4).

Thirdly, idleness has a great effect upon the heart and will stir it up to commit fornication; David experienced that (2 Samuel 11:1-27). The young widows who idly wander from house to house wax wanton, according to Paul (1 Timothy 5:11; 1 Timothy 5:13). A pagan states: Remove idleness, and you will remove fornication.

Fourthly, there is rioting and drunkenness, to which the apostle adds wantonness. "Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness" (Romans 13:13); "Look not thou upon the wine ... thine eyes shall behold strange women" (Proverbs 23:31; Proverbs 23:33).

Fifthly, there is social interaction with men and women who are inclined toward fornication. Being in wrong company will cause you to err. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise: but a companion of fools shall be destroyed" (Proverbs 13:20).

Sixthly, there is the viewing of lewd paintings. The heart will be moved by whatever the eye sees. The fornication of the women in Israel was stimulated and they were enamored by seeing the images of the Chaldean men (Ezekiel 23:13-16).

Seventhly, there are marriages between those who are unequal in years, the one spouse being old and the other young. The young spouse may readily acquire an aversion for the older spouse. If one then desists from the use of one's spouse, one will readily be enticed by unchaste lusts -- if not deeds.

Eighthly, there are domestic quarrels. Quarrels between husband and wife will cause them to be estranged from each other. This then prevents one from fulfilling the obligations which love requires, and thus one's corrupt nature will get the opportunity to manifest itself. The Abominable Nature of this Sin and the Special Judgments Which God Executes upon It

These are the main areas of sin, and hereby you will have to examine yourself as to how innocent or guilty you are. In order to deter everyone from this sin, we shall demonstrate its abominable nature and the special judgments which God brings upon man due to this sin.

First, consider this sin in all its abominableness.

(1) It is the captain of all sin and is listed first among all the works of the flesh. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness," etc. (Galatians 5:19-21). Yes, the man who is addicted to this sin loses his heart. "Whoredom and wine and new wine take away the heart" (Hosea 4:11). Such a person is vulnerable to all sin. "Abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (1 Peter 2:11).

(2) It runs counter to the indwelling of the Holy Spirit who dwells in believers as in a temple. There He illuminates the heart, comforts, engenders prayer, answers prayers, and leads in the way of holiness. This sin, however, desecrates this temple. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (1 Corinthians 3:16-17); "Flee fornication ... he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body. What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost" (1 Corinthians 6:18-19).

(3) It runs counter to the suffering of Christ, who thereby has redeemed believers and made them His property. "Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid. For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Corinthians 6:15; 1 Corinthians 6:20).

(4) It runs counter to the heavenly calling whereby believers have been translated from the kingdom of Satan to the kingdom of Christ. "For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness" (1 Thessalonians 4:7).

(5) It is a dreadful act of contempt toward God and a provocation against Him. The presence of a person -- yes, even a child -- will prevent the commission of this sin due to being ashamed before him. Would not God's presence then arouse shame? Would one dare to commit this sin before the eyes and the countenance of a holy God?

Secondly, consider and take note of the special judgments which God sends upon fornicators.

(1) There is a giving over to self and to sin, whereby one will lapse into the commission of the abominable acts of uncleanness -- yes, even sodomy (Romans 1:27). One will be given over to spiritual adultery and idolatry and to a dying in sin. "But she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth" (1 Timothy 5:6).

(2) God brings great wrath upon them according to body and soul. Let Sodom be an example to you, of which Peter says, "The Lord knoweth how ... to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished: but chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness" (2 Peter 2:9-10). Consider also the example of the fornicating Israelites in the wilderness. "Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand" (1 Corinthians 10:8); "... whoremongers and adulterers God will judge" (Hebrews 13:4).

(3) Many will be eternally damned because of this sin. "Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind ... shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Corinthians 6:9-10); "For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, ... hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God" (Ephesians 5:5); "But ... whoremongers ... shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Revelation 21:8). The Virtues Enjoined

First, there must be in one's heart a hatred and aversion for, and hostility toward all uncleanness of heart and whatever issues forth therefrom. "Hate the evil" (Amos 5:15); "Abhor that which is evil" (Romans 12:9); "... hating even the garment spotted by the flesh" (Jude 1:23).

Secondly, one must endeavor to have a heart marked by modesty, purity, and shamefacedness. "... that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty" (1 Timothy 2:9); "A bishop then must be sober. Even so must their wives be ... sober, faithful in all things" (1 Timothy 3:2; 1 Timothy 3:11); "He that hath ... a pure heart" (Psalms 24:4); "Blessed are the pure in heart" (Matthew 5:8); "... that women adorn themselves ... with shamefacedness and sobriety" (1 Timothy 2:9).

Thirdly, one must be chaste in all his actions -- also those that pertain to the body. "... that I may present you as a chaste virgin" (2 Corinthians 11:2); "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit" (2 Corinthians 7:1); "... keep thyself pure" (1 Timothy 5:22).

Exhortation to Strive for Purity of Heart

Everyone ought to be on guard so that, consistent with the exhortation of the apostle, everyone may possess his vessel in sanctification and honor (1 Thessalonians 4:4).

(1) We must know that we have the enemy within ourselves, that we carry the seed of uncleanness within, which will very readily shoot up if we do not carefully watch against this. Happy is he who has a true heart of a virgin, for when this sin takes hold, it cannot very easily be driven out. Therefore, watch!

(2) Carefully avoid all occasions which would stimulate this sin -- be it via the eye or the ear. One must therefore watch very carefully over these two senses. "I made a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid" (Job 31:1).

(3) If an unclean motion arises in your heart, immediately shake it off as you would shake off fire from your clothes. Divert your thoughts immediately to something else. Here, fleeing is the best option. If, however, you do not reject the initial thought and you allow your thoughts but to reflect on it for a moment, you are conquered. This sin will flourish rapidly and will at once exercise great power.

(4) Be always engaged in honest activities. Even when you are free from obligations, do not let your flesh be idle. Arouse yourself to be engaged in your task with delight and earnestness, so that it may occupy your heart, and thus there will be neither room nor time for this filthiness.

(5) Be moderate in eating, drinking, and sleeping, for if there is a lack of moderation in these things, the body will be vulnerable for this sin and the lust for and yearning after this sin will arise that much easier.

(6) Avoid such people who are inclined toward this sin -- be it that they are giving license to the flesh or that they are battling this sin. There can very easily be a word or something else which ignites a virgin heart. Furthermore, this sin will take hold all the more readily if one also is battling against this sin himself.

(7) Arm yourself with fear for God's presence and omniscience. Pray continually: "Create in me a clean heart, O God." If it is common for this sin to frequently assault you, have days of fasting for this -- and the Lord will help the person who is engaged in this battle.

(8) Always consider the consequences of this sin. It yields but a brief delight for the flesh and a long and bitter aftertaste for the soul. And if this aftertaste presents itself as a lively reality for you, you will then be able to reject its brief delight that much easier.

058. Chapter 53: The Eighth Commandment

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-THREE ----- The Eighth Commandment The eighth commandment pertains to the possessions of our neighbor. The heaven and the earth are the Lord's. "The world is Mine, and the fulness thereof" (Psalms 50:12); "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath He given to the children of men" (Psalms 115:16). It is not true that everyone has an equal right to, and would equally enjoy each portion of, this world. However, just as God apportioned Canaan to Israel by lot, He likewise gives everyone his portion in this world, giving the one a greater portion than the other. That portion he will have -- no more and no less. "Feed me with food convenient for me" (Proverbs 30:8). Man must be satisfied with this portion and expect it from the Lord by the means which have been ordained to that end. God has therefore expressly forbidden the acquisition of our portion, or a desire for increase, through unlawful means by saying, "Thou shalt not steal." To steal is to take the possessions of our neighbor for ourselves. The perpetrator does this knowingly and without the knowledge of or contrary to the will of the owner. The Sins Prohibited The sins prohibited in this commandment can be reduced to the following heads: 1) the object to which these sins relate, 2) the means whereby they are committed, 3) the manner in which they are committed, and 4) the cause from which they proceed. As far as the object is concerned, there are the following types of theft: 1) ecclesiastical theft, 2) the theft of men, 3) the defrauding of the nation, 4) the theft of cattle, 5) the theft of property, 6) armed robbery, and 7) to be an accomplice of thieves.

First, ecclesiastical theft consists in the following:

(1) Taking to one's self goods and privileges -- for the purpose of either increasing one's own wealth, or to give it away to others -- which have been given either for the maintenance of the church or of the poor. "It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy" (Proverbs 20:25); "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed Me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed Thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed Me, even this whole nation" (Malachi 3:8-9). Neither does the government have the authority to dispose of these goods, nor is anyone permitted to receive such goods, even if they are given by the government.

(2) Simony also belongs to this. The word "simony" is derived from Simon the Sorcerer, who wanted to buy the gifts of the Spirit from the apostles (Acts 8:18-20). This sin is committed if one purchases the ecclesiastical goods from those who have taken upon them the management of these goods. This sin is committed if one either receives or gives money to award a ministerial position to someone; or to receive it from those who claim to have the authority to either approve or disapprove. The latter is actually church robbery. It is a double offense if one uses that which has been usurped through robbery to either sell this position or to purchase the position from such a usurper -- be it that one does so either personally or via friends, and then subsequently gives it back to the perpetrator. Such persons are thieves and murderers who do not enter the sheepfold through the right door (John 10:7-10). This sin is also committed when the elders of the church, who are authorized to elect ministers and elders, do this to gain the favor of men or of friends.

Secondly, there is the theft of human beings. (1) This sin is committed in those countries where slave trade is practiced. This is stated in Exodus 21:16 : "And he that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death" (cf. 1 Timothy 1:10).

(2) They who steal children sin, where they are enamored with their charm, or that they are to be used for beggary, in order to move people to pity -- all this while abusing them and making them miserable.

(3) Included are monastery thieves -- be they male or female -- who lure children who anticipate a good inheritance from their parents, to make a vow to live in their monasteries without the knowledge of their parents. Or else they do so to give to the monasteries or the priests that which they have defrauded from their parents. "But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free. Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition" (Mark 7:11; Mark 7:13).

(4) To this also belongs the abduction of young females, the engagement of minors with the promise of marriage (without the knowledge of, or contrary to, the will of the parents), eloping, and engaging young people for sexual purposes. In doing so parents are robbed of their best possession, and of those toward whom they exercise the most love. "Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same is the companion of a destroyer" (Proverbs 28:24). Experience teaches that God generally sends a curse upon such people. A third type of theft is the defrauding of the nation by either the government or citizens. Government officials are guilty of this if they do the following:

(1) secretly use general tax revenues for themselves;

(2) under cover of a different name, give a gift and charge their tenants in order to share the expense;

(3) solicit contracts for work or ships and cause a certain party to receive the contract if there is a certain amount of money in it for them;

(4) extend the time for commissions in order to collect that many more fees;

(5) inflate the bills for incurred costs, thus enabling their carriage occasionally to be drawn by two horses;

(6) either give away or sell official positions to friends who are not qualified. They do not own these offices and it is to the detriment of the country if these positions are awarded to unqualified persons. Those who purchase those positions are generally dishonest people who, in a dishonest way, try to regain their money from this position;

(7) when draft officials count shadows for soldiers and allow multitudes of sailors to remain at large unless the captains give them bribes.

Consider the following passages in reference to this: "Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards" (Isaiah 1:23); "Her princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey" (Ezekiel 22:27); "... her rulers (what a shame it is!) with shame do love, Give ye" (Hosea 4:18).

Citizens are guilty of defrauding the nation when their billing for delivered goods is higher than it ought to be, and when they conspire with corrupt government officials to share the profits of that in which they are mutually involved. It occurs when they deal fraudulently, smuggle, or are guilty of illicit dealings in reference to tariffs, excise fees, valuation charges, etc. This is contrary to what we read in the following passages: "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's" (Matthew 22:21); "Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom" (Romans 13:7). If you argue that the government takes too much, and that you thus cannot remain profitable, then you ought to know that we must be subject "not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward" (1 Peter 2:18).

Fourthly, there is the theft of cattle. The stealing of horses, cows, sheep, and swans belongs to this, as well as the trapping of forbidden game by those who are not authorized to do so. To this belongs also the trapping of rabbits on leased land, the catching of fish in ponds and rivers which have been leased, and fishing with illegal nets and at illegal times. "If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it, he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep" (Exodus 22:1).

Fifthly, there is the theft of commodities; that is, when one steals personal property such as silver, gold, jewelry, clothing, grass, corn from the field, fruit out of orchards and gardens, and whatever else it may be. Such theft is aggravated when it occurs by breaking into a house, and even more if the break-in occurs by night (Exodus 22:2-3). The following passages relate to this: "But let none of you suffer as ... a thief" (1 Peter 4:15); "Nor thieves ... shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Corinthians 6:10).

Sixthly, there is armed robbery, which takes place on water or on land. Robbery at sea is referred to as pirating. To such robbery belongs the violent vanquishing of merchant ships belonging to citizens of a hostile government. The intent of such robbery is not to do damage and injury to the enemy so that he can do less harm; it is not done in obedience to the government and out of love for the homeland. Rather, it is motivated by a desire to enrich one's self with the business proceeds of other businessmen. Such robbery is called robbery of the privileged. If such robbery occurs on land it is called highway robbery. This is distinguished from general theft in that it is accompanied with the use of violence toward the owner, and is committed covertly. The following passages speak of such robbery. "Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him" (Leviticus 19:13); "We shall fill our houses with spoil" (Proverbs 1:13); "... nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Corinthians 6:10).

Seventhly, it is prohibited to be an accomplice to thieves; that is, to harbor them and provide them with a safe abode in order to share in that which has been stolen. This includes the purchase of commodities of which one knows or suspects that they have been stolen, doing so since one can get them for half price. If there were no receivers (or fences) for stolen goods there would be no thieves; the receiver is as bad as the thief. Consider the following passages: "When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him" (Psalms 50:18); "Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul" (Proverbs 29:24). The Means Whereby Theft Is Committed The means whereby theft is committed are the following: First, there is usurpation; that is, the oppression of those who are of low social status by either not paying them, or by having or retaining that which is theirs. This occurs if one files suit against those from whom one has purchased something, or if one keeps litigation pending against those of lower social status who have no recourse. "Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats" (James 2:6). This is what the ungodly Jezebel did to obtain Naboth's vineyard (1 Kings 21:15). The apostle warns against this. "That no man go beyond ... his brother in any matter" (1 Thessalonians 4:6).

Secondly, there is the deceit of one's neighbor while creating the appearance of right. "That no man ... defraud his brother in any matter" (1 Thessalonians 4:6); "Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour" (Leviticus 19:13).

(1) This can occur relative to weight; that is, one uses weights which are too heavy when purchasing and weights which are too light when selling. This also occurs when the scale is faulty or if one manipulates the scale in a deceitful manner.

(2) This can occur relative to measurement; that is, if one over-measures when purchasing, and one undermeasures when selling; or if, when measuring the material, one skillfully cuts it short or stretches it.

(3) This can occur relative to volume; that is, enlarging the volume when purchasing and decreasing it when selling; or if one shakes up the merchandise in such a manner that the measure appears to be full -- this however not being the case. "Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have" (Leviticus 19:35-36); "Divers weights, and divers measures, both of them are alike abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 20:10); "A false balance is abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 11:1).

(4) One can be deceitful as far as merchandise is concerned; that is, by displaying and selling merchandise of a certain quality and delivering merchandise of poorer quality. One does this by corrupting the merchandise, intermixing it with something else -- for instance, when mixing chaff with the flour and then subsequently selling it as good bread. One does this by making the merchandise moist or by intermixing it with some heavy material which results in the weight being less than it ought to be. One does this by means of deceptive illumination, causing material to look differently. One does so by downplaying merchandise he wishes to purchase in order to cause the salesman to sell it below value; or, if one elevates the value and promotes it as such in order to sell it above value. "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth" (Proverbs 20:14); "The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death" (Proverbs 21:6). One does so if he demands too high a price for merchandise; hereby the ignorant are deceived.

Question May one sell merchandise for a lower price than was originally demanded?

Answer: One may demand the highest price which is current at the market, and also receive it without the buyer being deceived. If, however, one wishes to reduce this reasonable profit somewhat -- and thus gain less -- he is permitted to bargain downward to some degree.

(5) One can be deceitful with coins; that is, knowingly spending money which is either too light, of a false alloy, or counterfeit, and giving it out as good money or intermixing it with the good, allowing it to pass into circulation unnoticed.

(6) One can also steal by means of usury. If one purchases the merchandise for a low price and in the meantime the price increases (yes, 50% or more), and if he then sells according to current market price, the profit is not unlawful, even if his gain were to double. Profit is not unlawful if one skillfully improves the merchandise -- even if he can transform something which is worth a nickel into something worth fifty cents. Profit is also lawful if one collects interest for money which has been loaned out. This must be consistent, however, with the current rate and according to the rule of love and righteousness. However, profit is unlawful (which is called usury among us) if one gains interest from his money and merchandise which supersedes the current rate. The more excessive this usury is, the greater is the theft. Merchants who bleed the poor as blood suckers are guilty of this. They extend credit to the poor, but sell them the merchandise far above the common market price, giving them the poorest quality as well.

Question Must one also not charge something for the long absence of one's money as well as for the risk involved (since it happens occasionally that one never sees his money again)?

Answer: You ought to make known to the borrower up front that you intend to charge much more for the merchandise, the extended credit, and the risk involved, so that the poor may know this and make the choice themselves as to whether they wish the interest to be that high. Furthermore, the interest must be charged according to the rule of love and righteousness. It is better at the outset to refer the poor to the deacons than to first bleed them. To the sin of usury also belongs the activity of pawnshop operators who take all manner of securities from the poor, such as essential clothing and tools whereby they must earn a living, and who furthermore charge such excessive interest that within a short time their entire capital is gone. "If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down: for that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep" (Exodus 22:26-27). The Various Manners in Which Theft is Committed The manners in which theft is committed are of such a diverse nature that all cannot be enumerated. Every rogue acts consistent with the trade he plies.

First, there is the case when lawyers and prosecutors keep legal cases pending to extort the parties involved, and who knowingly defend evil cases.

Secondly, there is the drafting of fraudulent wills, contracts, obligation, and receipts for the sake of making illicit gain. This also pertains to fraudulent billing.

Thirdly, there is the withholding or reduction of wages. "Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth" (James 5:4).

Fourthly, there is purchasing on credit, while knowing all along that one either will not or cannot pay. Bankrupt persons who take out loans everywhere are guilty of this. They are especially guilty if they know that their estate is insolvent and they have the intent to disappear or file for bankruptcy. "The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again" (Psalms 37:21).

Fifthly, there is the establishing of a monopoly; that is, the conspiring of some to have the market to themselves, especially if they do this relative to grain and other edible commodities, not selling them below such an excessive price. "He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him" (Proverbs 11:26).

Sixthly, there is the undermining of a neighbor's business. This is not to imply that one may not live where he pleases or seek the trade of his choice in lawful ways; rather, this occurs when he seeks to rob the other of his trade by deceit, slander, and libel.

Seventhly, there is the idling away of time by loafing and loitering, just to spend the day doing as little as possible. "He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand" (Proverbs 10:4); "The hand of the diligent shall bear rule; but the slothful shall be under tribute" (Proverbs 12:24).

Eighthly, there is laziness: "He also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster" (Proverbs 18:9); "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard. ... So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man" (Proverbs 6:9; Proverbs 6:11). Concerning laziness the following is true:

(1) God hates laziness; every firstling of an ass either had to be redeemed or the neck had to be broken (Exodus 13:13).

(2) A sluggard is abominable to everyone; he is "as vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes" (Proverbs 10:26). (3) A sluggard is a fit instrument for the devil -- an accomplice to the devil (1 Timothy 5:12). (4) A sluggard is a burden to himself, and his way "is as an hedge of thorns" (Proverbs 15:19). (5) A sluggard makes himself poor (Proverbs 6:11). (6) Laziness engenders fornication and theft. Ninthly, there are squanderers, who always want to eat something good, carouse, drink, dress expensively, and thus not only squander their possessions, but subsequently borrow everywhere and at last are unable to pay back. Gambling belongs to this, for if you win, your gain is unjust, and if you lose, you are either robbing yourself or your loved ones. "Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished" (Proverbs 13:11); "Be not among winebibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh: for the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty" (Proverbs 23:20-21).

Tenthly, there are healthy beggars, who go either from door to door or to certain benevolent persons -- all because they do not want to work. When they do have some funds, they consume all that they have in an excessive manner, and thus live from the sweat of another. "If any would not work, neither should he eat. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread" (2 Thessalonians 3:10-12).

Eleventhly, there is the maintenance of bars for drunkards and gamblers -- bars which make their living from whatever wives and children are deprived.

Twelfthly, there is the secret concealment of goods that have been found, keeping them for one's self, without making any effort to strive that the owner receives them again. "Thou shalt not see thy brother's ox or his sheep go astray, and hide thyself from them: thou shalt in any case bring them again unto thy brother. And if thy brother be not nigh unto thee, or if thou know him not, then thou shalt bring it unto thine own house, and it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it, and thou shalt restore it to him again. In like manner shalt thou do with his ass; and so shalt thou do with his raiment; and with all lost things of thy brother's, which he hath lost, and thou hast found, shalt thou do likewise: thou mayest not hide thyself" (Deuteronomy 22:1-3).

Thirteenthly, there is the inappropriate use of rented and borrowed items; that is, to ruin them in such a way that initially it is not visible, but becomes evident soon afterwards.

Fourteenthly, there is cruel behavior toward impotent debtors. "The rich ruleth over the poor, and the borrower is servant to the lender" (Proverbs 22:7). For by such cruelty -- even wanting to get something where nothing is to be had -- one may force them to engage in evil practices. The Cause of Theft As far as the cause of theft is concerned, it issues forth from covetousness. (1) This manifests itself in the disposition of the heart which lusts after many possessions and after that which is beautiful, glorious, and delightful to the eyes. One then seeks to take possession through either just or unjust means. "... an heart they have exercised with covetous practices" (2 Peter 2:14).

(2) It manifests itself in a greedy pursuit after profit and in finding delight in making gain -- yes, even if it is in an appropriate manner. This is something which seldom remains true. Covetousness blinds one for seeing what is right. Covetousness deludes wisdom: "But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows" (1 Timothy 6:9-10).

(3) It manifests itself in miserliness, be it that one neither meets his own needs nor provides for his own nourishment, or he does not help another, leaving him destitute in his need. If something needs to be given, it is as little as possible and given with much reluctance, although it appears to be a very great matter in the eyes of the miser, and he will long reflect upon the fact that he has given such and such. To the root and cause of thievery one can also relate slothfulness, squandering, and other sins mentioned in the foregoing. The Virtues Enjoined The virtues commanded in this commandment are the following:

First, we are enjoined to love righteousness. "To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice" (Proverbs 21:3); "... and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly" (Micah 6:8).

Secondly, we are enjoined to be diligent. "... that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread" (2 Thessalonians 3:12). For:

(1) diligence renders all labor effective;

(2) God commands diligence;

(3) the Lord commands His blessing there and through diligence one comes to honor (Proverbs 13:24 (4) diligence makes rich (Proverbs 10:4; Proverbs 13:4);

(5) all is done with ease, and work becomes a delight. Thirdly, we are commanded to be moderate in eating, drinking, and clothing. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world" (Titus 2:11-12).

Fourthly, we are commanded to be generous, and to use our possessions to meet the needs of those who are truly poor -- thus preventing that they will stretch forth their hands to unrighteousness. "But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (Hebrews 13:16).

Fifthly, we are enjoined to be content. "Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have" (Hebrews 13:5); "But godliness with contentment is great gain. And having food and raiment let us be therewith content" (1 Timothy 6:6; 1 Timothy 6:8).

Sixthly, we are enjoined to follow the golden rule. "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them" (Matthew 7:12). Exhortation to Self-examination

Now turn to yourself and examine yourself in light of the virtues and vices mentioned above. How do you fare? Open your containers and closets, and observe your money, clothing, home decorations, as well as your homes, orchards, and fields -- and then answer this question: How did you acquire all these? If you perceive that you have not acquired them lawfully, restore that which you have obtained in an evil manner, for otherwise you are not permitted to pray (Isaiah 1:16-17; 1 John 3:20).

Evasive Argument #1: I have stolen so much; if I had to return everything I would be a beggar. Answer: It is better to be a beggar than a thief. Evasive Argument #2: I will come to shame.

Answer: There are ways whereby one can make secret restitution so that the owner receives again what is his, and yet does not know from where it originates.

Evasive Argument #3: I am not acquainted with those whom I have shortchanged.

Answer: Then give it to the poor; however, not as an alms, but in order that you may be relieved from your debt. If you maintain that it is beyond your means to make restitution, then go to the Lord and confess your sins. May it grieve you that you cannot make restitution; moreover, seek forgiveness in the blood of Christ. In the future guard against this sin, for:

(1) theft is an atheistic deed; it denies the providence of God; (2) it is idolatrous, for you are putting your trust in possessions, so that you may live from them: "Covetousness ... is idolatry" (Colossians 3:5);

(3) it spoils your own possessions, for God sends forth a curse upon that which is stolen. "I will bring it (the curse) forth, saith the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief" (Zechariah 5:4). In order to be kept from this sin, arm yourself with the fear of God, who sees everything, and "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him; and he shall bring it to pass" (Psalms 37:5); "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee" (Psalms 55:22); "... be content with such things as ye have" (Hebrews 13:5).

059. Chapter 54: The Ninth Commandment

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-FOUR ----- The Ninth Commandment The ninth commandment pertains to the reputation and the good name of our neighbor. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches" (Proverbs 22:1). Having a good name enables one to be of benefit to his neighbor both in society and in the church. Not having a good name, however, incapacitates a person and it even renders him incapable of having pleasant interaction with men. A pagan said, "Even if you would lose everything, take special care of your good name, for once you have lost it, you amount to nothing." Man loves his good name, and the law requiring love also teaches us to love the name of our neighbor, promote it, and abstain from injuring it. The contents of this commandment are as follows: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour" (Exodus 20:16). Our neighbors are not only our bosom friends and neighbors, but all children of Adam. They are all men who could be in need of our help and friendship (or we of theirs), as the Lord Jesus teaches in the parable of the man who fell into the hands of murderers. He was neither helped by a passing priest nor by a Levite, but by a stranger and a Samaritan (Luke 10:30-37).

Witness is a declaration, and thus an announcement, concerning the good or evil conduct of our neighbor. To bear false witness is to make a declaration contrary to the truth of the matter and contrary to that of which we are aware -- which is even more abominable if it occurs to the detriment of our neighbor. To this also belongs bearing witness with an evil motive, in an evil manner, and with an evil objective. The Sins Prohibited

We organize the sins against this commandment under the following headings: 1) bearing false witness; 2) the twisting of someone's words; 3) backbiting; 4) slander; and 5) the deceitful use of words.

First, we can bear false witness either within the courtroom or outside of it. This occurs in the courtroom when:

(1) A judge, due to inability to see through the matter, being remiss in making a sufficient effort to be thoroughly acquainted with the case, fear of man, wanting to do someone a favor, or in anticipation of a bribe, issues an unrighteous sentence, injures justice, or executes it erroneously. "And said to the judges, Take heed what ye do: for ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. Wherefore now let the fear of the Lord be upon you; take heed and do it: for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts" (2 Chronicles 19:6-7); "He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 17:15). This was David's sin when he rashly, on the basis of Ziba's accusation, judged Mephibosheth (2 Samuel 16:4). Job conducted himself differently, for he says of himself: "The cause which I knew not I searched out" (Job 29:16).

(2) The prosecutor brings someone into court about a matter which he either knows not to be right, or is in doubt about, and who, together with a clever lawyer, seeks to guide this case through, as the Jews thought they could do with Tertullus against Paul (Acts 24:1). Against Paul they produced many and serious accusations which they could not prove (Acts 25:7).

(3) The defendant denies that of which he knows himself to be guilty, seeking to rectify this by plea-bargaining, being richer than his opposing party. Thus, Cain, having been summoned, denied that he knew where his brother was whom he had killed (Genesis 4:9).

(4) Lawyers, solicitors, and notaries know, or are able to know, that certain matters are evil and untrue, but give it a different twist in order to keep them pending for filthy lucre's sake. "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness" (Isaiah 5:20).

(5) Witnesses, not being well-acquainted with a matter, deliberately bear false witness, or cause the case to lean toward the party whom they favor most. They are guilty if they act hypocritically by using ambiguous words, or by either recounting or holding back circumstances, thus obscuring the truth. Such were Jezebel's witnesses against Naboth (1 Kings 21:13). Hear what Solomon says concerning such: "These six things doth the Lord hate: A false witness that speaketh lies" (Proverbs 6:16; Proverbs 6:19); "A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall not escape" (Proverbs 19:5). In common conversation, that is, outside the courtroom, false witness is borne in various manners. Secondly, there is the sin of twisting someone's words. This occurs when one indeed recounts someone's words, but by omitting or adding something changes their meaning (cf. Matthew 26:61). One can also recount the very words themselves, but give them an entirely different meaning than the speaker had in mind. This was the device of the devil (Matthew 4:6). Or else one can recount the very same words and matters, but change the circumstances of time, locality, and related matters, recounting it with a changed voice and gestures whereby the hearer will interpret the matter differently than had been expressed by the initial speaker. Observe this in Proverbs 4:24 : "Put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee."

Thirdly, there is backbiting. There is no sin which is so common among all manner of individuals as this vicious serpent which disturbs peaceful societal living and injures the honor of our neighbor.

First, this sin is committed by the speaker if he:

(1) States untrue things, that is, lies, in the absence of his neighbor, as Potiphar's wife toward Joseph (Genesis 39:17), Saul's servants toward David (1 Samuel 18:22), and Absalom toward his father (2 Samuel 15:2).

(2) We sin if we recount things of which we are not certain, knowing them from hearsay and not knowing whether they be true or not. Or we sin if we add: "I do not know, but I have been told this, and I can mention the person who told me." This is nevertheless something which does not promote the honor of our neighbor but only serves to create an evil impression of him. "Thou shalt not raise a false report" (Exodus 23:1).

(3) We sin if we have a suspicion that someone has done this or that and we express that suspicion to others. The princes did this concerning David to their king Hanun (2 Samuel 10:3).

(4) We sin if we recount the true faults of our neighbor -- be it that they were hidden or that everyone knows of them. Thereby we show our delight that he has done wrong and we make the guilty party hateful by renewal -- even if we then claim that we are troubled by it and that we would not say it if it were not so, and therefore are asking you not to repeat it. Even if one then recounts his virtues by adding the word "but," the backbiter is nevertheless not excused. This causes the gossip to be the more readily accepted. "The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly" (Proverbs 26:22). This does not apply if we make someone's committed offenses known to the elders of the congregation, for this is motivated by love and according to the command of the Lord Jesus (Matthew 18:16). This is also not applicable if someone is in danger of being deceived by a mischievous person -- be it by servants or in a different situation. Neither is this applicable when we are either asked or not asked about the conduct of such a person, and when we warn against such a person, knowing with certainty that someone is unfaithful. To do so is an act of love, which cannot be exercised in any different way than by identifying the unfaithful person.

(5) We are also guilty of backbiting if we but ask: "Have you heard this about so and so?" This also occurs if we make a great fuss about something without identifying what it is, implying that the issue is significant, while in the meantime remaining silent about it. This furthermore occurs if we indicate with our gestures that we despise such and such a person and harbor an evil suspicion about him. This is also the case if we casually recount something which in and of itself is not evil, but which nevertheless is capable of stirring up some thoughts which engender certain conclusions. In one word, we are guilty of backbiting if we say something about our neighbor which is capable of making him less esteemed and less loved. Regardless of whether this occurs intentionally, with evil motive, out of hatred, moved by envy, or due to thoughtlessness or talkativeness, the sin is committed, for there is a lack of love and a quiet aversion toward the neighbor in the heart.

Secondly, the hearer is guilty of backbiting:

(1) if he inwardly delights that his neighbor is depicted in such a fashion and with relish listens to this;

(2) if, due to curiosity, he gives another person the opportunity to gossip;

(3) if, by smiling, nodding, or by saying, "What are you saying? Is that possible," he stimulates the backbiter to continue in order to either hear more, or because he dares not let the backbiter be the only speaker -- especially if he is a person of some prominence;

(4) if he does not speak but is silent instead and allows the backbiter to proceed rather than opposing him with words and gestures. "The north wind driveth away rain: so doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue" (Proverbs 25:23). This is the most common sin among all manner of people, which is nevertheless dreadful and devilish. Therefore, in order that everyone may be deterred from this sin the following matters ought to be noted:

(1) You yourself would not like it if someone would thus gossip about you, and therefore you ought not to do so concerning others. "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them" (Matthew 7:12). There is with God the judgment of retribution, so that if you gossip about someone else, another person will gossip about you. "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged" (Luke 6:37).

(2) You rob your neighbor of that which is most precious. "A good name is better than precious ointment" (Ecclesiastes 7:1).

(3) The supreme Lawgiver expressly forbids it. "Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people" (Leviticus 19:16).

(4) It is the peculiar work of the devil, who spoke evil of Job (Job 1:11), and does so of the godly. "For the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night" (Revelation 12:10). He stirs up to backbiting, for the devil sits upon the tongue of the speaker and in the ear of the hearer.

(5) It is a sin attributed to the most evil of times when man's conduct would be most abominable. "For men shall be ... false accusers" (2 Timothy 3:2-3).

(6) God hates backbiters. "These six things doth the Lord hate: ... a lying tongue ... a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren" (Proverbs 6:16-17; Proverbs 6:19).

(7) God excludes them from heaven, this being evident by way of reverse argument. "He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour" (Psalms 15:3); "A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall not escape" (Proverbs 19:5); "Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son ... I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes" (Psalms 50:20-21). The fourth sin which is forbidden here is slander. The distinction between slander and backbiting is this, that the one occurs in the absence of the neighbor (behind his back), and the other in his presence. Since the latter sin is of a more brazen and evil nature, it is thus all the more abominable.

(1) This sin sometimes occurs at a moment of seething wrath. This is what Shimei did toward David (2 Samuel 16:78). This also occurs when we make a fool out of someone and mockingly accuse him of all sorts of evil -- as the children did toward Elisha (2 Kings 2:23-24). It occurs when we make sarcastic remarks, subtle digs, and snide remarks; that is, subtly attribute some evil to someone as having been committed by him, doing so in such manner that the other person has no recourse. One then considers himself to have handled this well, delights in it, and tells others how he fooled the other person. David refers to that as having a tongue as sharp as a razor (Psalms 52:2), sharpening one's tongue as a serpent (Psalms 140:3), and as a false tongue, which is as "sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper" (Psalms 120:3-4). It also occurs when we make faces, laugh others to scorn, shoot out the lip, and shake the head -- as the Jews did toward Christ (cf. Psalms 22:7; Matthew 27:39). Concerning them Solomon says: "Judgments are prepared for scorers" (Proverbs 19:29). Paul excludes revilers from heaven (1 Corinthians 6:10) and he forbids the godly to have fellowship with them (1 Corinthians 5:11). The fifth sin is lying. To lie is knowingly (or if one could have known) speaking contrary to the truth.

(1) There are lies with harmful intent; that is, to injure a person in regard to either his honor or possessions.

(2) There are lies for the purpose of entertaining others with fabricated stories. "They make the king glad ... with their lies" (Hosea 7:3).

(3) There are lies by which we seek to avoid dishonor, harm, or punishment, relative to ourself or our neighbor.

We can also seek to gain advantage for ourself or others, be it in business transactions or other cases -- as Gehazi did, for which he was stricken with leprosy (2 Kings 5:25). The midwives of Egypt did this. Nevertheless, they were blessed by the Lord, not because they lied, but because they did good toward Israel (Exodus 1:19).

(4) There is a speaking of lies out of custom. There are habitual liars who speak evil, or they lie without reason and without premeditation, due to their heart being estranged from the truth. They want to be perceived as a great person who knows much and who has done great things. In order to be deterred from lying, it ought to be known that:

(1) God frequently forbids lying. "Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour" (Ephesians 4:25); "Lie not one to another" (Colossians 3:9).

(2) It is an abomination before God. "Lying lips are abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 12:22).

(3) It is the devil's work. "When he (the devil) speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it" (John 8:44); "I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets" (1 Kings 22:22).

(4) Liars readily become known and are despised by everyone.

(5) God punishes them temporally and eternally. Ananias and Sapphira were immediately punished with death because of a lie (Acts 5:2-3). We read furthermore: "Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing" (Psalms 5:6); "All liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Revelation 21:8).

Sixthly, there is the deceitful use of one's words or countenance. Deceiving for profit was discussed in the eighth commandment. However, here the act of deceiving will be considered as far as being contrary to the truth, and when words and gestures are not consistent with the heart.

(1) This occurs when we act hypocritically. Cain acted hypocritically when he showed friendship to his brother Abel in order to kill him (Genesis 4:8). Simeon and Levi acted hypocritically toward Hamor and Shechem (Genesis 34:14; Genesis 34:26), and Absalom did so toward his brother Amnon (2 Samuel 13:26-29).

(2) This occurs when we praise someone with flattery in order to snare and trap him. The Pharisees did this toward Christ (Matthew 22:15-17). Observe this in Psalms 12:2 : "They speak vanity every one with his neighbour: with flattering lips and with a double heart do they speak." At such a moment they can even express their words in a heartfelt and passionate manner -- as if they meant it. The objective and reasoning within their heart are, however, illdisposed toward that person. To this belongs the excessive praising of someone for the purpose of humiliating him all the more, or to puff up one's neighbor in order that his foolishness might become manifest.

(3) This occurs when one uses equivocal language; that is, language by which one intends to deceive his neighbor by causing him to interpret words differently from what they were secretly intended to mean. This has been discussed when we considered the third commandment. When engaged in such deceitful behavior, several sins coalesce and it is therefore all the more abominable in the eyes of God and of men.

(1) The Lord forbids this sharply. "Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour" (Leviticus 19:13).

(2) Flatterers will become manifest and be put to shame. "He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him" (Proverbs 27:14).

(3) Flatterers will not avoid their judgment, for the saints pray against them. "The Lord shall cut off all flattering lips" (Psalms 12:3).

(4) God pronounces a woe upon hypocrites, doing so seven times in one chapter (Matthew 23:14-29). "Woe unto you, hypocrites." The Virtues Enjoined

It is not sufficient to abstain from forbidden sins, but also this commandment enjoins the practice of opposite virtues.

First, we are to promote with all our strength the good reputation of our neighbor. We must render him honor and respect and preserve his reputation as much as the truth will allow us to do. If he has faults, they are to be covered rather than recounted. They should not be denied, for then one would lie; rather, we must be silent about them, and those who recount his faults should be rebuked as being guilty of backbiting. In rebuking such backbiters, one should, however, not justify these faults. Jonathan promoted David's honor in such a fashion, speaking good on his behalf (1 Samuel 19:4). "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things" (1 Corinthians 13:4-7).

Secondly, we are to love the truth. If the heart is truthful and loves the truth, it will bring forth truth, and man will be prevented from lying -- be it that this is either to our advantage or disadvantage, or that the person is either friendly or hostile toward us. "... therefore love the truth and peace" (Zechariah 8:19).

Thirdly, we are to speak the truth, promote the truth, and bear witness to the truth at every occasion -- whether this pertains to us or to our neighbor. "Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth" (Zechariah 8:16); "Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour" (Ephesians 4:25); "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Php 4:8).

Final Arguments for Observing this Commandment

(1) God is a God of truth (Isaiah 65:16), God desires truth within (Psalms 51:6), and God's eyes are upon the truth (Jeremiah 5:3).

(2) Those who love the truth and speak the truth are esteemed by everyone, are able to be an ornament in the church, and be beneficial to others.

(3) Such always have an unfettered and quiet conscience. They are not afraid of being caught in their words due to distortion of words, backbiting, slander, flattery, and hypocrisy. Even if the one whispers against the other, he is not moved by it; though if he is reproached he remains calm, for his conscience does not gnaw. Even if one rises up against him, he will stand firm, and he will be as bold as a young lion (Proverbs 28:1).

(4) God will be with such persons and help them, and their light will shine forth as the noonday. Those who, in faith, speak and act to God's honor and according to His law, are the true members of His church and they are the heirs of salvation -- for it is an evidence of their grace. "Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in Thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour" (Psalms 15:1-3). He who desires to speak and act in such a fashion, and who thus wishes to conduct himself toward his neighbor, ought:

(1) To desist from ambition and lust for money, and renounce all that is of the world -- for such a disposition generally engenders the sins against this commandment.

(2) To be on guard, for he carries within his heart the seed of the sin against this commandment. He ought to be cautious in speaking, always remind himself of the omniscience of God, and unite his heart to the fear of God. "The heart of the righteous studieth to answer" (Proverbs 15:28). David did this: "I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle" (Psalms 39:1).

(3) Continually to pray to God with David: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord" (Psalms 19:14); "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips" (Psalms 141:3).

060. Chapter 55: The Tenth Commandment

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-FIVE ----- The Tenth Commandment

David says: "I have seen an end of all perfection: but Thy commandment is exceeding broad" (Psalms 119:96). All the commandments have broad dimensions, but this is particularly true for the tenth commandment. They are broad 1) as far as the objects are concerned, and the branches which come forth out of the stem, 2) as far as the earnestness and zeal with which the task must be accomplished, and 3) as far as the spiritual manner of observance: in love, godly fear, and obedience. An unconverted person takes no note of this, and believes the external observance to be sufficient. Some -- with the rich young ruler -- allow themselves to believe that they have observed all these things (Matthew 19:20). Many of the converted do not focus so much upon this, until they learn that they see but little, and those who begin to perceive this become desirous for more light, and pray, "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law" (Psalms 119:18). Many indeed hold the law before them as a mirror in order to discern their deformity in it and to govern their lives accordingly. There is, however, but little knowledge concerning the tenth commandment and it is generally passed over. It is one of those commandments against which we sin most frequently, and therefore it is essential that this commandment also be explained as far as its correct meaning is concerned. He who correctly observes this will be startled concerning himself, not having known that he has been continually sinning.

Man Created with Desire for God The Papists and Lutherans make this one commandment into two -- something which we have previously refuted. Paul refers to it with one word in Romans 7:7 -- covetousness. Covetousness, as far as impurity and unrighteousness are concerned, belongs to the seventh and eighth commandments; however, covetousness is mentioned here without such connotations. Man is not self-sufficient; he cannot satisfy himself with himself. He is but an empty vessel, only capable of receiving something. He must find his fulfillment by matters which are exterior to himself -- both according to soul and body. He must have food, drink, air, and light, will it be well with his body. According to the soul, he must have something spiritual and infinite -- that is God Himself -- in order for his infinite desire to be satisfied. In order to be fulfilled, God has created an innate desire within Roman Catholic Church, false views of man. This desire, considered in and of itself, was a perfect desire. As long as man was in the state of perfection, that desire was directed toward the right objects in a right manner. In regard to the soul, his desire was only directed toward God in order to be continually satisfied in having fellowship with and finding delight in Him -- and as far as the body was concerned, his desire was directed toward that which it needed. It was the food of Christ's soul to do the will of His Father (John 4:34), and according to the body He had a desire for temporal food and drink. He hungered (Matthew 4:2), and He thirsted (John 19:28).

However, after man had sinned, desire remained but it has been distorted and corrupted, both as to the manner in which it functions, as well as relative to its objects. He has no desire after God and his desires are therefore not directed toward God as being the satisfaction of his soul. His desire is after this world, whereby he seeks to satisfy his spiritual soul, and according to the body he has unlawful desires toward that which is lawful in and of itself. These desires furthermore extend themselves toward forbidden objects. This is the sin forbidden in this commandment.

Refutation of the Notion that Covetousness is No Sin

Natural man and the Papists are of the opinion that covetousness is no sin if a person's desires are not accompanied by either impurity or unrighteousness; if there is no intent to carry out these desires, there being no deliberation as to the means to use to accomplish this -- and thus if his will did not acquiesce in this. There would then only be a desire for a given matter, with the supposition, however, that one desires to attain this by proper means. This would then be no sin.

Proof #1: The tenth commandment itself refutes them for the following reasons:

(1) Even though impure desires toward our neighbor's wife and an unlawful desire for our neighbor's possessions belong to the realm of the seventh and eighth commandments, the law nevertheless explicitly prohibits coveting in this commandment.

(2) Since there remains no other coveting of our neighbor's wife, house, or possessions but a coveting which does not translate into the unlawful pursuit of these things -- and thus a coveting in which the will does not acquiesce, as the object of our desire is presently still our neighbor's possession and may therefore not be ours -- then that very desire is sin.

Proof #2: The apostle states expressly that covetousness is sin. "I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet" (Romans 7:7). He knew that covetousness relative to adultery and theft was sinful, for that is evident from nature. He speaks of a covetousness which was concealed from nature, however, and thus also from him, being in the state of nature. He thus speaks of covetousness in an unrestricted sense, unrelated to the acquiescence of the will -- a covetousness which he nevertheless was not permitted to have as it pertained to the wife or possessions of his neighbor. He was therefore not permitted to covet, even if it were but a passionate desire, such as: "If only I had that woman or that house." He declares such a desire to be sin. "Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law."

Proof #3: Covetousness by its very nature brings forth sin. First there is only covetousness, but, once this arises, it draws man further away and entices him. He will then proceed with the commission of sin. However, that which gives birth to sin is sin itself, for a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit. Observe this in James 1:14-15 : "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." The Sins Prohibited The sins prohibited in this commandment are the following: First, the evil disposition of soul and body is prohibited, for original sin consists in the absence of the image of God and in the possession of the image of the devil. The soul misses true light, love, life, peace, and holiness -- yes, God Himself. Instead, she is in a state of darkness, death, unrest, and pollution. Furthermore, the disposition of the body is evil, as a result of which it has numerous inordinate inclinations and thus stirs up the soul to lust in a variety of manners. This disposition is the fountain of all kinds of sinful motions.

Secondly, dissatisfaction with our current circumstances is forbidden, which manifests itself:

- (1) in a howling emptiness and a greedy yearning for something which is not possessed;
- (2) in a restlessness, fretfulness, and stirring of the heart due to not having that which could satisfy, even though it is not limited to a specific thing -- it just wants to have something;
- (3) in an active lust and desire for something which appears to be able to delight the heart, reasoning as follows:

"If I had the wife or husband which my neighbor has -- if I had that house, that garden, that piece of land, that horse, that cow (even if one does not desire this in an inordinate manner) -- or if I had a different profession, would practice that trade, held that office, had such an amount of money (even if this does not relate to his neighbor), then I would be happy." Such a person is thus as a "troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt" (Isaiah 57:20).

Thirdly, disagreeable temper is forbidden. This manifests itself in an aversion for all that is good, and in the quenching of the motions of the Holy Spirit (Ephesians 4:30).

Fourthly, an untamed heart is forbidden; that is, to be without restraint, to be as a wild animal, and to be as a Belial without a yoke.

Fifthly, one is forbidden to delight in sin; that is, in the sin of others, as well as in reflecting upon his own, previously committed sins.

Sixthly, to entertain vain thoughts is forbidden. This does not pertain to the reflection upon matters which one intends to carry out (for this pertains to other commandments), but rather to those one does not intend to execute but only thinks about and finds delight in doing so. Someone may imagine himself to be in the position of a mayor, businessman, count, prince, or king, and reflect upon what he would then do. Or he imagines himself to be poor, cast out, etc., and how he would then fare. Yes, even if one does not wish to build such castles in the sky and reflect upon such vain things, it can be that such thoughts arise in his heart contrary to his will.

However, to these do not belong those suggestions and interjections of the devil in which his own heart is not involved. The devil goes about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. He deviously leads man to such opportunities and objects which he knows are suitable to ignite a specific inclination in him. He is like a peddler who asks: "Do you not wish to do this? Do you not have a desire for this? This is beautiful and delightful." As long as one does not listen to this, or inclines himself in any way, but chases such suggestions away as flies from his countenance, it is not his sin, but the devil's. Such temptations are not a man's thoughts, but rather the devil speaking to a man. If, however, inclinations begin to stir within the heart and one begins to listen, then he is guilty, even though the initial cause may have proceeded from the devil. I say, "may have proceeded," for man's heart itself continually generates all manner of vanity and sinful lusts, and it is thus necessary to distinguish whether the initiative came from the devil or from one's self. For as soon as there is the least inclination of the heart, there is sin. It is also difficult to discern this, but he who is very watchful over his own heart and who has made some advancement in spiritual life, will know better whether the initial impulse proceeds from the heart, or whether it comes or is suggested by an external source -- and what it is that will either take hold or not take hold. The interjections, buffetings, and fiery darts of the devil are more easily discerned, since they are entirely contrary to the nature of man. Such is true for blasphemous thoughts toward God. I call them thoughts -- not that they are thoughts, but those who are assaulted are of the opinion that they are their own thoughts. They become extremely distraught over this and conclude that they have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost. They cannot pray, but think that they will be damned. This even adversely affects their mental faculties and exhausts the body. That such thoughts are not man's own, but are only a hearing of the revilings of Satan is evident for the following reasons:

(1) They arise in a frightful manner, for we are somewhat favorably inclined toward that which proceeds from the heart, giving such thoughts either full reign or being naturally inclined to reflect upon them. The thoughts interjected by Satan, however, are resisted due to the absurdity and abominableness of the matter, since they are contrary to the natural conscience, or they are resisted by the grace, fear, and love of God.

(2) They are recognized by the fact that they come from without, and thought after thought is forcefully impressed, contrary to all opposition. This is similar to a person putting his fingers in his ears in order not to hear what the other person is saying. The other person calls out so loudly, however, and comes so close that he nevertheless hears it. Everyone will then perceive that it is not the sin of the hearer, but of the one who speaks evil. Such is also the case here. Therefore, the one who is assaulted must note this as a trial from God (who gives the devil free reign) as a sorrowful cross, and not as his sin. This consideration will strengthen him and enable him to endure these onslaughts all the better. All he needs to do is flee the temptation and divert himself with some serious physical activity. He must especially not concern himself with it, but rather despise it as an abomination of the devil, who will for this reason be punished. Such a person cannot repel this, but it will strengthen him to give no heed thereto, and it will thus be less injurious. And if he receives some breathing room, he must earnestly pray to the Lord -- yes, during these assaults he must cry with his heart to God. He will have that much more liberty to do so if he takes note that it is not his sin, but rather that he is being tormented with these thoughts. The Virtues Enjoined The virtues which are enjoined in this commandment are the following: First, we must be adorned with the image of God. We must have that pure light and knowledge of God, and there must be holiness and righteousness relative to the will and affections. This blameless spiritual disposition is suitable to engender all manner of spiritual motions and exercises. Furthermore, there must be a blameless and proper disposition of heart and moderation of the body, having nothing but orderly motions.

Secondly, we are to be satisfied with having union and communion with God, as well as with the will of God, if we do not have that which the well-being of soul and body seem to require. "Be content with such things as ye have" (Hebrews 13:5). We must also joyously embrace the will of God in that which we must undertake, and we must accomplish it out of love. To be satisfied while missing what we would desire to have does not preclude our being sensitive about this, nor the use of means to obtain that for which we have a holy desire. It does preclude emotional upheaval and torment, however, and consists in being quiet, calm, and content -- this being the will of our Father and to our advantage.

Thirdly, there must be a hatred against sin. "I hate vain thoughts" (Psalms 119:113), and a heartfelt love for that which is good. "... but Thy law do I love."

Fourthly, in our heart, thoughts, words, and deeds we must hold forth the law of God, as the will of God -- as our only rule of life. "I have chosen the way of truth: Thy judgments have I laid before me. Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart. I have inclined mine heart to perform Thy statutes alway, even unto the end" (Psalms 119:30;Psalms 119:111-112).

Behold, here is a mirror in which you may see your sins, and here is a rule according to which you may direct your ways. May the Lord send forth His light and truth, and may they lead us! Amen.

061. Chapter 56: The Glorification of God

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-SIX ----- The Glorification of God

There are no virtues which are not comprehended in the perfect rule of life, the law of God. We have pointed out the most prominent aspects of each commandment in the previous chapters. We shall now consider some of these matters more explicitly, and thus stir up the soul that delights in holiness to practice it.

Virtue: Its Nature and Goal

Virtue is that within man which perfectly harmonizes with the will of God as presented in the law. One may consider virtues in their propensity or in their manifestation. The propensity is the virtuous disposition which God has infused at regeneration and is acquired by way of many exercises. Due to this propensity the virtuous person is active in a holy fashion toward various objects.

He who has one virtue has them all. This is true not only because they are all united -- for one virtue does not exist independently, and in the exercise of one virtue many merge together -- but also because the disposition of the heart is virtuous and capable of being exercised in harmony with the requirement of the object. The holier this disposition is, the holier the ensuing deeds will be. By reason of the exercise of the one virtue, this holy disposition is increased and thus becomes more competent to exercise other virtues. The one virtue (when considered as such) is not superior to another virtue, for they are in perfect harmony with the law under all circumstances. Any conformity to the law less than that is a fault, and therefore sin. However, the objects and circumstances are either greater or less, and in that respect the manifestation of the one virtue is greater than of the other. Furthermore, since man is imperfect, one man has more of this virtuous disposition and its actual manifestation than the other. In regard to the ultimate goal of a virtue, the consideration of the virtue precedes its manifestation. The more that man is illuminated, the more he will focus on loftier matters, setting them before him in order to attain them. A beginning Christian perceives the dreadfulness of eternal condemnation and has confused notions about salvation. This causes him to aim at being delivered from the one and to acquire the other. As such a person is increasingly illuminated, he will focus upon loftier matters and will strive to acquire them. He will do so until he is acquainted with and delights in the highest goal: the glorification of God. Being motivated by this, he uses all means at his disposal to attain to this. A younger Christian, having lesser matters in view, nevertheless ends in the glorification of God, giving thanks for the good that was received. The more mature a Christian becomes, however, the more he will engage himself from the superior to the inferior; that is, love for the glory of God motivates him to do everything which serves to that end. This ultimate goal, the glorification of God, we posit as the primary virtue.

God Glorifies Himself in the Works of Nature and Grace

God first of all glorifies Himself when He reveals His perfections to His creatures -- both in the works of nature as well as in the works of grace.

(1) God glorifies Himself in the works of nature, that is, in creation and preservation. Consider the following passages: "O Lord our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth! When I consider Thy heavens ..." (Psalms 8:1); "In wisdom hast thou made them all" (Psalms 104:24); "For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead" (Romans 1:20); "Nevertheless He left not Himself without witness, in that He did good ... from heaven" (Acts 14:17).

(2) God glorifies Himself in the work of grace, by manifesting therein His righteousness: "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness" (Romans 3:25); His wisdom: "To the intent that now ... might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God" (Ephesians 3:10); His mercy and grace: "To the praise of the glory of His grace" (Ephesians 1:6); His love: "But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared" (Titus 3:4). And thus "the whole earth is full of His glory" (Isaiah 6:3).

Secondly, God glorifies His Son, the Mediator Jesus Christ: "The God of our fathers, hath glorified His Son Jesus" (Acts 3:13), and the Son in turn glorifies the Father: "I have glorified Thee on the earth" (John 17:4).

Thirdly, God glorifies His children in this life when He adorns them with His image and exalts them before the eyes of the world. "Since thou wast precious in My sight, thou hast been honourable" (Isaiah 43:4); "And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect through My comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord GOD" (Ezekiel 16:14). God glorifies them after death: "For it became Him ... in bringing many sons unto glory" (Hebrews 2:10); "Moreover ... whom He justified, them He also glorified" (Romans 8:30). The Lord has all honor and glory infinitely within Himself -- also when there was no creature to acknowledge this. He is "the God of glory" (Acts 7:2), the "King of glory" (Psalms 24:8), and "the Father of glory" (Ephesians 1:17). From this glory emanates a brilliance which even the angels cannot endure. Therefore they cover their faces and cry out, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts" (Isaiah 6:5). When surrounded by this brilliance, man disappears and cries out, "Woe is me! for I am undone ... for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isaiah 6:5). The glory of God can neither be decreased nor increased by a creature. His glory remains the same, irrespective of whether man despises or magnifies it. It is pure goodness of God -- who is light, and who covers Himself with light as with a garment and dwells in an unapproachable light -- that He reveals His glory to men in some measure, permitting them to rejoice in this, to glorify, acknowledge, magnify, and praise Him, and to make Him known to others as such. This is felicity and the work of angels. "Glory to God in the highest" (Luke 2:14). This is felicity and the work of glorified souls. "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power" (Revelation 4:11). This is felicity and the work of believers upon earth who have been formed to the praise of His glorious grace and to show forth His praise (Isaiah 43:21). Every godly person delights in this activity as David did. "I will speak of the glorious honour of Thy majesty, and of Thy wondrous works" (Psalms 145:5). The Glorification of God To glorify God is to acknowledge Him, praise Him, and to make Him known unto others with love, joy, and reverence, in response to beholding His perfections. The glorification of God flows forth from beholding His perfections. The knowledge of God is in consequence of faith or as a result of beholding. The apostle distinguishes between these two in 2 Corinthians 5:7.

Faith acknowledges God to be as He has revealed Himself in His Word. In the Word of God the perfections of God are described as they manifest themselves in the works of nature, and particularly as they shine forth in the face of Jesus Christ -- that is, in the great work of redemption. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord" (2 Corinthians 3:18). Faith takes notice of all that the Word expresses about God, and particularly as He made Himself known to Moses. "The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth" (Exodus 34:6). Faith establishes these as certain truths and acknowledges God to be thus. Such faith causes man to conduct himself toward such a God as He is worthy of and is appropriate for him. Yes, to believe is to glorify God. "He (Abraham) ... was strong in faith, giving glory to God" (Romans 4:20). Even if a believer had nothing beyond faith that God is such a God in Christ and such a God for him, and did not perceive the sensible manifestation of this within himself, he must proceed on that basis, rejoice, and in love and joy acknowledge, magnify, and praise Him as such. This is the error of many gracious souls -- they do neither sufficiently esteem the view of faith, nor accustom themselves to glorify God thereby.

Even though the Lord has reserved this immediate beholding for heaven, He nevertheless grants His children some measure of this according to His promise. "I ... will manifest Myself to him" (John 14:21).

Although all believers are not placed with Moses in the cleft of the rock when the Lord proclaimed His Name, are not all taken along to the mountain where Jesus was glorified, and are not all drawn to the third heaven with Paul, the Lord occasionally gives His children a superior view of Himself by faith and a clearer view of His perfections. Faith, and this clear view of God, is the fountain from which the glorification of God proceeds. This view of God begets love to the glory of His Name. He who beholds the perfections of God will immediately be ignited in love -- not only to be personally united with the Beloved One, but to exalt and praise all the attributes of God, and also to make them known to others, so that the Lord may be glorified by many. "Let such as love Thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified" (Psalms 70:4). Out of this knowledge and love issues forth joy, and a delightful acquiescence that God is such a glorious and blessed God. "The humble shall see this, and be glad" (Psalms 69:32); "Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous; and give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness" (Psalms 97:12).

Such a person having been rendered capable through knowledge, love, and joy, makes the glory of God his ultimate objective. Motivated by love, he does whatever he can to promote that objective, relates everything to that objective, and ends in that from which his activity originated. Many psalms begin and end with hallelujah. "For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever" (Romans 11:36). This is the command: "Do all to the glory of God" (1 Corinthians 10:31); "... that God in all things may be glorified" (1 Peter 4:11). The Manner in Which God is Glorified

Having a delight in this objective, and making this their goal in all things, the godly endeavor to glorify God personally and together with others. They personally glorify God with the heart, tongue, and deeds.

First of all, they glorify Him with the heart.

(1) They do so when they observe God in all His works, occupying themselves in the beholding of the perfections of God which manifest themselves in these works. "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord" (Psalms 107:43); "How precious also are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them! If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with Thee" (Psalms 139:17-18); "My meditation of Him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord" (Psalms 104:34).

(2) They do so when between God and their soul they in adoration lose themselves in the glories of God and acquiescently exclaim, "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised; and His greatness is unsearchable" (Psalms 145:3); "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it" (Psalms 139:6).

(3) They do so when, with holy motions within, they exalt the Lord above everything and praise His Name in solitude. "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts" (1 Peter 3:15).

Secondly, they glorify Him with the tongue. The heart, being filled with holy meditation, sets everything in motion. Not being able to refrain themselves, they express themselves in solitude as David did: "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name" (Psalms 103:1); "But I will hope continually, and will yet praise Thee more and more. My mouth shall show forth Thy righteousness and Thy salvation all the day; for I know not the numbers thereof" (Psalms 71:14-15). The soul, forgetting herself in the beholding of the perfections of God, breaks forth in jubilation, and the high praises of God will be in her mouth (Psalms 149:6). Such reflections cause the "lips of those that are asleep to speak" (Song of Solomon 7:9), and give "songs in the night" (Job 35:10). "Yet the Lord will command His lovingkindness in the daytime, and in the night His song shall be with me" (Psalms 42:8); "... singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord" (Colossians 3:16).

Thirdly, they glorify Him with deeds. They do so,

(1) when, with the objective to render God honor and glory, they humble themselves before the Lord as a sinner and as one worthy of condemnation, and flee to Him for grace, thus rendering Him honor for His mercy;

(2) when they request all that they desire from the Lord, thus acknowledging Him as the origin and giver of all good things;

(3) when they humbly bow before Him to honor Him in His adorable majesty;

(4) when they, motivated by the fear of God, subdue a stirring sin, thus rendering Him honor for His holiness and stupendous majesty;

(5) when they take refuge to Him for protection and without fear hide in Him, thus glorifying Him in His omnipotence and faithfulness;

(6) when they make themselves available to God for service, saying, "Oh Lord, surely I am Thy servant, I am Thy servant," thus rendering Him honor for His sovereign dominion and His worthiness to be served;

(7) when they, in all manner of crosses, silently subject themselves to Him, thus rendering Him honor for His wisdom and compassion. They do so in all circumstances and exercises, thereby rendering Him honor for those attributes which manifest themselves at such occasions. If you engage in these and other activities, the glorification of God is indeed implied in this -- even though you are then most sensitive to your own salvation. You must, however, strive for loftier objectives and accustom yourself to magnify God in response to lively views of Him, and thus begin and end everything with the glory of God.

We glorify God relative to others with words and deeds. We first of all do so with words if we -- having as our objective to make the glory of God known to others so that they also may glorify that God who is worthy of all honor -- instruct others in the way of salvation, and in various ways lead them to the Lord Jesus, stirring them up to faith and repentance, and by admonishing and rebuking them.

We also glorify God if we speak of Him and His deeds to others in order to show them the glory of God in all His works. "O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon His name: make known His deeds among the people. Sing unto Him, sing psalms unto Him: talk ye of all His wondrous works" (Psalms 105:1-2); "... declare His doings among the people, make mention that His name is exalted" (Isaiah 12:4).

Secondly, we do so with deeds and our entire life if we, having as our objective the glorification of God, conduct ourselves in such a fashion in the presence of people that the image of God shines forth. God is invisible and the natural man neither knows nor sees God in either the works of nature or the works of grace. If, however, a child of God who is a partaker of the image of God manifests this image in his conduct, the heart of an unconverted person will frequently be powerfully convicted that there is a God -- and that He is to be honored, feared, loved, and served. It is a means whereby some begin to seek the way of salvation and are converted. A regenerate person, seeing the image of God shine forth in another, is stirred up in the love and fear of God, and some who are in a backslidden state thereby come to repentance and are restored to their former zeal. And even if our conduct does not have this effect, we nevertheless glorify the Lord as far as we ourselves are concerned; that is, if the intent is there to show by our conduct that God is such a God. As a reward, one will carry a sweet peace of conscience homeward. This is the command of the Lord Jesus: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 5:16); "Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John 15:8). The apostle Peter desires that women would thus endeavor to win their husbands: "... that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives" (1 Peter 3:1).

Man's Grievous Failure to Glorify God The manner in which one glorifies God is evident from the foregoing. He who loves God and finds delight in honoring Him and in the glorification of His Name will experience much grief when he observes the conduct of men in this respect.

First, let your eyes scan the entire earth for a moment. Observe how, on the one hand, God does not leave Himself without witness in that He does good -- gives rain and fruitful seasons from heaven, and fills the hearts of men with food and gladness. Observe how God in His works manifests His eternal power and Godhead, His glory and awesome majesty, and His longsuffering and mercy. Over against this, observe the conduct of men. The hearts of all men (with a few exceptions) are turned away from the Lord. They forget Him and neither acknowledge, thank, nor glorify Him. They act as if God does not exist, is not indeed glorious and worthy of all honor, and as if all that they are and receive does not proceed from Him. They are all as the swine who, with their faces downward, gather the acorns, but who do not look up toward the tree from which they fall. Such is also the case with man. Man eagerly accepts all good things but does not look up to the Lord who gives them -- yes, even abuses them against Him. A lover of God's honor, attentively observing this, finds reason to sorrow and mourn. Ought not the high, exalted, and glorious God be honored for all His benevolence? Oh corrupt, crooked, and perverse generation! In focusing upon man he will grieve over his misery -- that he does not answer to the purpose for which he was created, is void of that felicity, and thus becomes and remains subject to the wrath of God.

Secondly, you who are lovers of God's honor, consider the church for a moment. Is not that a people who should glorify God, who have been formed for that purpose, and who should be the glory of Christ? How sad is the condition of the church in regard to this! A great number -- the exception being the godly who by the extraordinary goodness of God are still present there -- are void of knowledge, void of love, void of the fear of God, void of a desire to approach unto God, void of the appearance of godliness, and void of a striving to render God honor. Men are generally worldly, live according to their lusts, and hate that which is good and those who do good; some are worse in their conduct than other sects -- yes, more than the heathen. For their sake the name of God is blasphemed. Seek solitude and mourn over this; let tears quietly drip from your eyes, call them Ichabod, and complain, "How has the faithful city become a harlot, and how has the crown fallen from her head!"

(1) There are those who openly serve the world and who mock with godliness and the godly. There are drunkards, gamblers, dancers, show-offs, backbiters, liars, rancorous individuals, and men of evil temper -- in one word, all manner of ungodly men. It would be one thing if these people were outside the realm of the church; however, they are to be found within her, and thus they rob the church of her glory and dishonor God and Christ, the Head of the church.

(2) Others attend the public worship services; they join in singing the praises of God, arise or bow down during prayer; both write and say, "Praise and thanks be unto God," speak of God and His Word, and yet manifest by their deeds that it is merely routine, custom, and the work of the mouth and not from the heart. In this they follow hypocritical Israel, of whom we read in Psalms 78:36-37, "Nevertheless they did flatter Him with their mouth, and they lied unto Him with their tongues. For their heart was not right with Him, neither were they stedfast in His covenant." God speaks against such. "Forasmuch as this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour Me, but have removed their heart far from Me, and their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29:13-14).

(3) Others are of the opinion that they perceive, love, and magnify the glory of God in an exceptional manner when they consider creation with amazement and delight, even though they do not get beyond creation. This occurs when they are in ecstasy about the elegant features of the heavens (be it in the evening, at night, or in the morning), when they rejoice in a beautiful forest or meadow, or when they attentively observe the formation of animals and vegetation, and show this to others. Their verbal reference to the Creator when speaking of this -- while they neither observe

Him in that work, rejoice in His attributes which manifest themselves in that work, nor lovingly praise Him -- does not qualify as the glorification of God, but rather as the adoration of the creature. In such a case they do not point others to the Creator, but frequently to themselves as being so wise in searching this out and finding such delight in glorifying God. However, the adoration of the glory of God in the works of nature is something entirely different from this and cannot be explained by the natural man.

(4) Others go beyond this and yet do not glorify God. There are those who make the Word of God the object of their study, search out its mysteries, find delight in acquiring knowledge about a mystery, and are amazed about the wisdom of its structure -- that is, about the fulfillment of the prophecies, the wondrous matters which still must come to pass, yes, even about heavenly matters. Such are of the opinion that they are doing a holy work and are thereby glorifying God. Furthermore, the result of this is that sins which the world commits, and which they also have committed previously, have no effect upon them. They are so earnestly involved in acquiring knowledge of biblical matters, that this earnest endeavor engages all their affections and occupies all their time. Since they now find satisfaction in this knowledge, they have no need of being entertained by other things. Furthermore, external knowledge results in external purification. "For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ ..." (2 Peter 2:20). All of this does not constitute a glorifying of God, but is a case of not getting any further than the external. 1 Corinthians 13:2 speaks of this: "And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." Temporal believers, who receive the Word with joy (Luke 8:13), can attain to this. Of such Paul says: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come ..." (Hebrews 6:4-5). Balaam spoke of himself in this manner: "The man whose eyes are open hath said: he hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open" (Numbers 24:15-16). Let no one therefore be satisfied with these things, being of the opinion that he glorifies God, lest he be deceived at the end. Instead, we must endeavor in all things to behold God as our God in Christ, be kindled with love toward Him, and praise God by virtue of such a disposition. This is what constitutes glorifying God. The Serious Consequences of Not Glorifying God

Therefore, you who desecrate the Lord's Name and do not glorify the Lord, give heed! The purpose for which you were created and the reason that the Lord has bestowed so many temporal and spiritual blessings upon you is to glorify God. Even though this may not appear to be a sin to you, and you lightly step over it, it is nevertheless a fierce evil and makes you subject to the dreadful wrath of God. Pay careful attention to what I shall briefly say to you, and may it cause you to repent.

First, it is a truth known to all that whatever does not meet the objective of its existence is good for nothing. You have been created to glorify your Creator. All the blessings which God has bestowed upon you obligate you to this. You are, however, ignorant of that purpose; you do not love it, do not strive for it, and do not engage yourself in it. Rather, you dishonor Him and show contempt for Him in all that you do. What is even worse, you furthermore embolden yourself to intermingle with His people, sit with them at the Lord's table, and profess to be one of God's children. With that reputation, you live an ungodly and worldly life and thus cause the name of the Lord to be blasphemed (Romans 2:24). You thus observe that you do not meet the objective of your existence and ought to be cast away as an unworthy one. Take notice that the following is said to you: "If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned" (John 15:6). To abide in Christ is to remain united to Him by faith and to bring forth holy fruits by virtue of that union, in which the Father is glorified (John 15:8). This, however, is not true for you, and you will therefore be cast out with contempt and be burned.

Secondly, you have brought yourself into a situation -- this being true as long as you remain this way -- which does not permit you to engage yourself in those activities by which God is glorified by His own. You were not willing to do it, and now you will also not do it; God does not even want you to glorify Him in such a manner. Observe this in Psalms 50:15-16 : "And call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me. But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare My statutes, or that thou shouldest take My covenant in thy mouth?"

Thirdly, since you do not honor God, but despise Him, God will also despise you and make you contemptible. You envision glory and honor, but God will cover you with shame. "Them that honour Me I will honour, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed" (1 Samuel 2:30). This will come upon you; the Lord says it and He will also do it. Apply to yourself what is written in Malachi 2:9 : "Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept My ways." When you die, you will leave a stench behind, you will have the burial of a donkey, and you "shall be an abhorring unto all flesh" (Isaiah 66:24). And when you will arise at the resurrection, you "shall awake ... to shame and everlasting contempt" (Daniel 12:2). This will be the end for all who did not glorify God in this life.

Fourthly, since you do not glorify God, He will give you over to the commission of all manner of sin -- particularly the dishonoring of your own body by filthy lusts. "Because that, when they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, ...wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves" (Romans 1:21; Romans 1:24).

Fifthly, let me bring this to a single conclusion: God will glorify Himself in you by manifesting His righteousness and by punishing you in an extraordinary manner. What a dreadful condition it is to be the object of God's wrath! It will be such that men and angels will see it and with approval will acquiesce therein, saying, "Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy judgments" (Revelation 16:7). When Nadab and Abihudid not glorify God, God consumed them with fire from heaven, and it is stated in addition to this, "I will be sanctified in them that come nigh Me, and before all the people I will be glorified" (Leviticus 10:3). Of Pharaoh we read in Romans 9:17, "For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show My power in thee, and that My Name might be declared throughout all the earth." If God glorifies Himself by punishing those who do not glorify Him, then He does not wish that we lament for them. Instead He says, "Hold thy tongue: for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord" (Amos 6:10). On the contrary, it is God's will that we would rejoice and glorify the Lord when He executes His righteous vengeance. "The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance: he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked. So that a man shall say, Verily there is a reward for the righteous: verily He is a God that judgeth in the earth" (Psalms 58:10-11). Hear this, despisers of God, and tremble, for your judgments are approaching. Repent and flee from the wrath to come. The Shortcomings of God's Children in Glorifying God

Lovers of God's honor, consider also for a moment the precious daughters of Zion. Rejoice indeed if you perceive in them that secret yearning, weeping, waiting, praying, rejoicing over comforting experiences, thanking for received blessings, and a willingness to live a life pleasing unto God and to fully surrender to the service of God. However, what weak and feeble children they generally are! How little beholding there is of God! How little determination there is to glorify God personally as well as in the presence of others! How readily this objective disappears from our thoughts! How little zeal, earnestness, perseverance, and display there is in this respect! How frequently they are faint-hearted! How much weakness and sinfulness manifests itself in their walk! Oh, if only the godly would walk as lights in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, and that one could see that the love of God possesses their hearts, that the fear of God is before their eyes, and that they are adorned with the image of Christ! Then one would be able to observe that they have died to self, their own honor, the love of others, advantages, conveniences, and the fear of man. Then it would be observed that they exist not only for the honor of God, but that God's honor is their objective in all things, and is maintained as the goal of all their deeds. "How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed!" (Lamentations 4:1). Therefore lament and mourn that God is glorified so little, even by His own children, and let this grieve you in your heart.

Exhortation to Glorify God

However, you yourself ought to especially endeavor in the future to glorify God while you are still here. It should not be sufficient for you to hate and flee sin, live a godly life and do godly deeds in which the glorification of God is implied. Rather, elevate your heart to a higher level of godliness, which consists in having the glory of God as your objective in your entire conduct. Focus continually upon this goal so that by continual exercise you may attain to a habitual tendency in this respect. I will endeavor to stir you up to that end, and you must also endeavor to be stirred up by this.

First, let God's requirement and continual exhortations penetrate your heart. Consider attentively these few texts selected out of many. "Glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Corinthians 6:20); "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Corinthians 10:31). I do not hold these texts before you to teach and confirm an unknown truth to you, but by means of my pen to deeply impress this matter upon you and to incite you to engage in this with an obedient heart, knowing that this is not a peripheral activity, but that you ought not to do anything else but this. Have you yourself not determined to obey the Lord and have you not frequently asked Him, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" This then is His answer to you: "Glorify Me; let that be your objective in all things. Let that be the principle motivating you to engage yourself, and let that be the goal where you end and in which you rest." Therefore do so at this very moment and begin at once, lest you prove to be an insincere inquirer.

Secondly, on this occasion I will hold before you the example of the Lord Jesus and His saints. Examples are highly effective in motivating others. Do not harden your heart, but become pliable and willing to imitate them. You love the Lord Jesus, do you not? Love strives for conformity. Your Jesus has left you an example in order that you would follow in His footsteps. And is it not your personal prayer, "Draw me, and I shall run after Thee"? It was, however, Jesus' objective in all that He did to glorify His Father. "... that Thy Son also may glorify Thee ... I have glorified Thee on the earth" (John 17:1; John 17:4). Thus, join yourself to Jesus, learn this from Him, and follow Him in all that you do. Whose heart would not become desirous for the glorification of God when discerning with what measure of love and burning zeal the saints have been engaged in, having exhorted everyone to do likewise? Hold before you the example of David and hear him speak thus: "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy Name" (Psalms 103:1); "I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live: I will sing praise to my God while I have my being. My meditation of Him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord" (Psalms 104:33-34); "But I will hope continually, and will yet praise Thee more and more. My mouth shall show forth Thy righteousness and Thy salvation all the day; for I know not the numbers thereof. I will go in the strength of the Lord GOD: I will make mention of Thy righteousness, even of Thine only" (Psalms 71:14-16). He knew indeed that in and of himself he was not able to attain to such a lofty and glorious work, and therefore he prayed that he would be permitted and enabled to do this. "Let my mouth be filled with Thy praise and with Thy honour all the day" (Psalms 71:8). He could not fully satisfy himself with praising the Lord and he is not content to say but once or twice, "Praise the Lord," but in Psalms 136:1-26 he exclaims twenty-six times, "For His mercy endureth forever." In various psalms he begins and ends with "Hallelujah, praise the Lord." Yes, perceiving the infinity of the glory of the Lord, and that he was too insignificant to magnify this glory commensurate with his desire, he therefore summons the angels, men, and all things to assist him, and ends as follows: "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord" (Psalms 150:6). Therefore join him in this and also cry out, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever" (Revelation 5:13).

Thirdly, consider for a moment from whom your life, breath, and whatever you possess proceed -- the air which you breathe; the sun, moon, and stars which illuminate and delight you; the heavens which cover you; the earth on which you walk; the food and drink you partake of; and the animals which you use. Does all this proceed from you? Are you worthy of them? Is not all this the Lord's? Is it not He who, each day again, grants you His goodness in spite of your unworthiness and sinfulness? Yes, children of God, is it not the Lord who has granted you that precious Savior, who grants you the Holy Spirit, who graces you with spiritual light and life, and who has prepared eternal glory for you? Everything will return from whence it proceeded. Therefore let your heart, while conscious of your insignificance and reflecting upon the inestimable value of the blessings and goodness of the Lord, also bring all this to Him, and with a heart filled with love and adoration cry out, "For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen" (Romans 11:36).

Fourthly, consider the purpose for which God has placed you upon the earth. Is it only to labor and to rest, to eat and to drink, and to return again to nothing after many troubles and activities? Dic, cur hic? Tell me, why are you here? Is it to know, acknowledge, and glorify your Maker? And, children of God, to what end has He regenerated you and placed you in His church? Did He do so without purpose? Is it merely to lead you by that way to heaven? No, but it is that you would glorify Him upon earth. Observe this in the following passages: "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise" (Isaiah 43:21); "... that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He might be glorified" (Isaiah 61:3); "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9). You would not have been born, you would not live, and you would not receive and have what you enjoy, if this were not the purpose. If this is the purpose, what else is there to do for you but this? God has, to some degree, been pleased to place His interests and honor into your hand, and has appointed you to be the heralds of His Name. Ought you then not to see to it how you preserve this precious gift entrusted to you, and how you answer to God's purpose and engage in this inestimable activity? Well, arise therefore, and engage in it with delight.

Fifthly, God is worthy of it, and it is His due that both you and all that exists glorify Him, even if neither salvation, sweetness, nor advantage were to be gained from this. He is worthy of being glorified even if we had not been created for that purpose; even if it were our choice to do or abstain from something without sinning. He is worthy of being glorified even if we were not obligated to do so in light of many benefits received. If but a small ray of the Lord's glory were to irradiate the soul, one would say, "It suffices me that God is God, and that He alone is worthy of all things. I choose to magnify Him, and desire that this be my only work both in this life and to all eternity." God is worthy to be eternally glorified, even if there were no creature in heaven or upon earth. As soon as a creature exists, however, the Lord obligates this creature to glorify Him for the sole reason that He is God. This reason cannot motivate man unless God reveals Himself to him and causes him to see and experience the power and glory of the Godhead. The faint light of nature and the clarity of Scripture may convince an unconverted person of his duty, and in a natural way he may initiate something. If, however, the light of grace, unveiling the glory of the Lord in the face of Jesus Christ, irradiates the believing soul, she will truly engage herself in rendering God honor and glory. She may do so when being ashamed before His holiness, while sinking away before His majesty, revering and trembling before His grandeur, adoring His incomprehensible infinity, being filled with love due to His preciousness, or rejoicing in His goodness, and so forth -- all according to the manner in which the Lord reveals Himself to the soul. Then, if man had a thousand bodies and a thousand souls, he would willingly surrender them to be spent in the glorification of God. He would consider them all too insignificant to be permitted or be able to proclaim the praises of the Lord, and he would consider it a sufficient reward to be consumed in doing so. Then, yes, then one will rejoice that everything is subject to the Lord and that everything stands ready when He but speaks. It is the delight of such a person to think that all angels and the souls of the perfectly righteous in heaven and all the children of God upon earth have their eyes focused upon Him, expecting all salvation from Him, loving Him, rejoicing in Him, reverently bowing before Him, joyfully jubilating the honor of the glory of His majesty, and infinitely exalting Him above all praise. They consider themselves as being unworthy of seeing, thinking, or speaking anything concerning the Lord, it being an inexpressible grace that a creature be permitted to do so. Is not this able to lift up your heart and to exclaim with them, "Lord! Thou art worthy to receive glory and power"? Therefore, ready soul, render the Lord honor, because He is worthy of it. The Spiritual Advantages of Glorifying God

Sixthly, since the Lord wishes to stir us up by that which is to our advantage, we must therefore let ourselves be stirred up by this. Consider therefore the advantage afforded to a soul which glorifies God.

(1) It is a great honor to be a means whereby God is glorified, for it is the greatest, most holy, and most exalted task. Of Moses, Aaron, and Samuel it is said to their honor, "Moses and Aaron among His priests, and Samuel among them that call upon His Name" (Psalms 99:6). It is the work of angels, for they cry out, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory" (Isaiah 6:3). They shouted for joy when God formed the earth (Job 38:7), and they sang upon the birthday of Christ: "Glory to God in the highest" (Luke 2:14). The saints in heaven are engaged in this and this will be the eternal occupation of the elect (Revelation 4:11).

(2) It affords the soul great joy. The glorification of God is not such a heavy, grievous, melancholy, or detrimental task, so that many incentives need to be used to pressure someone to engage in this -- for it is man's felicity. Felicity is to find delight and joy in the Lord's perfections, to love them, and to magnify the Lord in them. They who are as yet unacquainted with this remain unacquainted with their highest felicity. How David delighted himself in this and how delightful did he hold this out to be! "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto Thy name, O most High: to show forth Thy lovingkindness in the morning, and Thy faithfulness every night, for Thou, Lord, hast made me glad through Thy work: I will triumph in the works of Thy hands. O Lord, how great are Thy works! and Thy thoughts are very deep" (Psalms 92:1-2; Psalms 92:4-5); "Praise ye the Lord: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely" (Psalms 147:1).

(3) It is pleasing to God. He is delighted when His children glorify Him, deem it to be their delight, joy, and felicity, and do so as much as they are able. "But Thou art holy, O Thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel" (Psalms 22:3); "I will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify Him with thanksgiving. This also shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs" (Psalms 69:30-31). This is as a burnt offering. "The humble shall see this, and be glad" (vs. 32).

(4) The Lord rewards them abundantly. "Them that honour me I will honour" (1 Samuel 2:30). While Paul and Silas sang praises unto God, the doors of the prison were opened and the bands of all the prisoners were loosened (Acts 16:25-26). If someone promotes God's honor, God will also care for his honor. If someone renders glory to God among men, God will also cause him to find honor, love, and favor among men. If someone is for God, God will also be for him. "Because he hath set his love upon Me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known My name. He will call upon Me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honour him. With long life will I satisfy him, and show him My salvation" (Psalms 91:14-16).

(5) If God's honor is our objective in all things, all our endeavors will be performed in a more pure and holy fashion. The goal stimulates the laborer, dictates the means to him, and makes even heavy labor light. If we love God's honor, we shall deny our own. We shall follow a straight pathway to that goal and will not be concerned about what is either to our advantage or disadvantage. We shall overcome all opposition and step over all obstacles. We shall have rest after the task has been accomplished, for our objective was pure and the means were in harmony with God's precepts. We shall not fear the light, but shall desire to be seen and examined, "that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God" (John 3:21).

(6) It is a means to the conversion of the unconverted and it quickens the godly to magnify God. Behold, there you have the benefits which are comprehended in that holy and glorious work. Therefore, you whose soul indeed delights to do this, considering them blessed who practice this, engage yourself to do so. "Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house: they will be still praising Thee" (Psalms 84:4).

Exhortation to Persevere in Endeavoring to Glorify God

Objection: Some of the godly who read or hear this will look up against this as a matter too high for them. Others will be grieved, perceiving on the one hand the gloriousness and preciousness of this matter, and on the other hand, how far they come short, and how impossible it is to come to such a state. Others will excuse themselves, either to aggravate their misery or to quietly excuse themselves, pacifying their conscience somewhat in not striving for this. They reason as follows: I do not behold the glory of God; I do not perceive any sweetness or efficacy in this. If I make a start, it is but the work of my mind and I do it more rationally than with a loving heart. I am too sinful; sins overwhelm me and hold me captive. I am therefore all too happy that I may flee to Jesus time and again to make use of Him unto justification, and thus resolve afresh to guard against sin. I cannot determine what my spiritual state is and I do not know whether I have been regenerated and am a child of God. I am so entangled in the care of earthly things that I generally cannot perceive any stirrings in my heart. I am so overwhelmed by my cross -- one calamity following another -- that I always remain down so that it is even difficult to observe my devotional time. When I do observe it I perceive myself to be confused, listless, and discouraged. How would I then be capable of such a lofty work -- to initiate everything from a view of and out of love toward the glorification of God, and to end in this?

Answer (1) Your state is at once to be pitied as it is subject to rebuke. See to it that you do not flatter yourself, for it will not excuse you to have neglected this great work. You were created to that end, the Lord has blessed you to that end, and He has begun His work of grace in you to that end.

(2) The Lord has children of various ages and sizes, but they nevertheless have the same Spirit and the same spiritual life. That life also functions identically in all, although not to the same degree. The least of them has some knowledge of the Lord, and not only knows that it is his duty to glorify the Lord, but already has a desire for and an inclination toward this. He already glorifies God by the fact that the world knows him not to be one of them, but that, as they say to their own condemnation, he has become one of those strict ones. They also manifest to some degree that the Spirit of Christ is in them and their good works begin to manifest themselves, even if this is as yet in a very small measure. And even if the little ones are as yet not capable of being motivated to undertake something out of love and with that end in view, they nevertheless end in the glorification of God -- thanking Him if they have received something from the Lord and grieving if they have done anything whereby godliness, the godly, and thus also God are dishonored.

(3) Therefore, follow the inclination lying at the bottom of the heart: to glorify God. Begin by making this more and more your objective. Remain within the sphere of your spiritual strength; that is, let a child be a child, a young man a young man, and a father a father, being satisfied with the measure of grace which you presently have, while having a strong desire and striving to attain to a higher degree of such grace in the future. The obstacles mentioned frequently spring forth from neglect to glorify God and are removed by diligent endeavor. Therefore do not wait until these difficulties are removed, for then you will never initiate it. Rather, engage in this task as much as you are able, along with all the shortcomings which manifest themselves contrary to your wishes. Do not desist if you fall, but arise again and strive increasingly to break through, and the Lord will help, for "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength" (Isaiah 40:29).

(4) Do not cease to pray that you also may be granted the privilege to glorify God, and that you may receive the ability to do so. Look to others who have made more progress than you have; fellowship with them and learn from them. Accustom yourself to have that objective always in view -- however far you may be astray from your objective -- and you will experience that you will increase in this; and as you increase in this, you will increase in all things. May the Lord send forth His light and truth to you, that they may lead you. Amen.

062. Chapter 57: Love Toward God

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-SEVEN -----

Love Toward God The contents of the law is love, and it is therefore expressed with one word in Romans 13:9-10 : "If there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Love in essence has no other object than that which is most eminent, most cherishable, most satisfying, and unchangeable -- which is God Himself. This love engenders love toward whatever God wills us to love -- and thus toward our neighbor. Prior to the fall, Adam knew and was united to God in an immediate sense, and he also loved God in an immediate sense. However, after the fall man lives in enmity toward God and does not love Him. When God grants His children the privilege to be permitted and able to love Him again, then such occurs by reason of the mediation of a Mediator who has removed the enmity and who restores the elect again into friendship with God. This friendship is exercised by faith, by which the regenerate person, receiving the merits of Christ as a ransom, finds peace with God, enjoys the love of God toward him, and in having fellowship with God increasingly loves Him. Faith thus stirs up love and makes it active. In this respect "faith ... worketh by love" (Galatians 5:6). This is what distinguishes the love of believers from the love which Adam had. All love which is divorced from and functions apart from faith is no true love. Natural men may write and speak of love, but it is only the work of blind men. They may refer to God as "dear Lord" and imagine that they love God, but they deceive themselves -- they do not love God. They may judge that God is to be loved and be rationally motivated to conduct themselves in a manner which resembles this, but their heart is cold and void of love.

Love Toward God Defined

Love is the sweet motion of the heart toward God -- infused into the hearts of believers by the Holy Spirit -- whereby they, by virtue of union with Him and in view of His perfections, delight themselves in God, and in a joyous embrace of His will, fully surrender themselves to His service.

(1) Love is a motion. Love is compared to fire; fire is swift in its motion and love is likewise vehement in its motion. "For love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame" (Song of Solomon 8:6). Love is a sweet motion. The heart is subject to many and various motions; some are grievous and some are joyous. Love refreshes the heart and is a sweet motion. Among men it is sweeter to love than to be loved. "O love, for delights!" (Song of Solomon 7:6).

(2) Love has God as its object. Man has the aptitude to love and is inclined to love. Being ignorant of the worthiness and preciousness of God, however, he chooses something physical to be an object of love. He is remarkably attached to physical things in an inordinate manner, so that he corrupts himself and abuses that glorious principle that is within him. However, when the believer begins to perceive who God is, all that was beautiful and delightful before loses its luster. He withdraws his love from it -- yes, he cannot love it, for he hates it, as it is opposed to the love of God. Instead, God becomes and remains the object of his love; he rejoices that he may love God, and he cannot be satiated in this love. It grieves him greatly that he does not love God more; God is and remains the most eminent of all objects that He can love. Yes, He is the only object and he does not wish to delight in anything except it be for God's sake. "O love the Lord, all ye His saints" (Psalms 31:23); "I will love thee, O Lord, my strength" (Psalms 18:1). God is the object of love because He is God -- and thus, for His own sake and because He is worthy of it. All that can generate love is to be found in God. "God is love" (1 John 4:19). Our love is set in motion by His love toward us. "We love Him, because He first loved us" (1 John 4:19). Our love is also kindled by the benefits of God. "I love the Lord, because He hath heard my voice and my supplications" (Psalms 116:1); "O love the Lord ... for the Lord preserveth the faithful" (Psalms 31:23). These are indeed stimuli, but the basis and actual reason for love is God Himself -- because He is God, is love, is adorable, and is worthy. The purpose of this love is not to acquire something else as a result of this -- for then there would be something superior to God which one loved more.

(3) This love is neither begotten by our own activity or ability, nor can a creature give it to us. A heavenly minded minister may preach with a heart of love about love, but he is not able to kindle love in anyone's heart. Love is not for sale for all the belongings of one's house, but is only a free gift of God. The Holy Spirit kindles this divine spark in the heart of man. "Because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (Romans 5:5); "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God" (2 Thessalonians 3:5); "And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart ... to love the Lord thy God" (Deuteronomy 30:6).

(4) The Holy Spirit, kindling love in the hearts of God's children, operates in harmony with man's nature. Man cannot love what he does not know and his love cannot go beyond that which he knows. The Holy Spirit thus also works this love by the medium of knowledge. God gives enlightened eyes of understanding to His children. He reveals Himself to them, they know His perfections, and the love of God is thus kindled in them. "Every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love" (1 John 4:7-8); "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind" (Matthew 22:37).

(5) God is a consuming fire to man who has sinned. Man cannot approach unto God, and even though God is most adorable, he nevertheless cannot love God. Love strives for union. The perception that one who is adorable and has power over us, were to hate us and take vengeance upon us, would thus cause us to flee. Therefore, a union must first be established. Union between God and the sinner is brought about by the Mediator, the Lord Jesus Christ. He brings them to God (1 Peter 3:18) and in Him they become one with God. "... that they also may be one in us ... I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one" (John 17:21; John 17:23). Man can only love God when he can consider God to be his God, for otherwise the presence of God causes him to fear and flee from Him. Reverence and love go hand in hand, but fear and love cannot coexist. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear" (1 John 4:18). From man's side this union with God comes about by faith. By faith the soul approaches unto God. "In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of Him" (Ephesians 3:12). By virtue of this union, one begins to love God. Love will then endeavor to exercise this union more and more and to preserve it -- this being an exercise of friendship as between friends and between a father and children. "He (Abraham) was called the Friend of God" (James 2:23); "I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of My Father I have made known unto you" (John 15:15).

(6) To love God is a privilege of the elect. They, as others, were the children of wrath. However, God draws them out of the state of sin, gives them life and a childlike disposition, and thus also a loving heart. Since they are born of God, and since God is love, their nature resembles the nature of their heavenly Father, and they love Him. Their intellect, will, and affections have not only been rendered capable, but they are also active in love toward God. It is not sufficient for them to nourish love within, but they are active in manifesting this with their tongue, eye, and entire body. They are thus known as lovers of God and are therefore also referred to as "those that love." "Ye that love the Lord, hate evil" (Psalms 97:10); "They that love His name shall dwell therein" (Psalms 69:36). The Deeds Whereby Love Toward God is Manifested The love of God manifests itself in many deeds. We shall present them with the objective in mind to declare more clearly the nature of this love, so that an unconverted person, examining himself by means of this, will be convinced that he does not love God, and that gracious persons may be convinced that they love the Lord.

Wherever there is love toward God in the heart, God will first of all be esteemed and exalted exceedingly far above all that exists, this being true not only as far as judgment is concerned, but also with the entire will. Whatever is glorious, adorable, and eminent vanishes before the glory of God, and in esteem for that glory one will say with full acquiescence, "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty" (1 Chronicles 29:11).

Secondly, there is joy in love. If the soul is permitted to have an intimate view of God, she cannot mourn, but that view rejoices the heart so that all reason for sorrow disappears. "In Thy presence is fulness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Psalms 16:11).

Thirdly, there is reverence in love. If the soul in a loving disposition lifts herself up to the Lord, the glory of the Lord will illuminate her in such a measure that she dares not look unto the Lord with uplifted eyes, but will bow down and be astonished that she is permitted to love the Lord. Being irradiated with divine love, she will sink away in her nothingness. She will conduct herself as David did in the presence of the Lord. "In Thy fear will I worship toward Thy holy temple" (Psalms 5:7).

Fourthly, love is active. Love motivates the seeking of communion, and the soul is intent upon this. It searches out all opportunities to draw near, and brings herself into the presence of the Lord, so that the Lord might cast an eye upon her and look upon her, and that she might also see Him. At one time she will turn to the Word, then to prayer, then to attending church, and then to joining the company of the saints -- all this with the objective of finding the Lord. At times she may become lax, listless, and discouraged, but the heart will time and again turn upward, the eye will repeatedly look up, doing so at one time with quiet tears, then with a sigh, then again with a manifestation of her desire. "By night on my bed I sought Him whom my soul loveth" (Song of Solomon 3:1); "With my soul have I desired Thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek Thee early" (Isaiah 26:9). There is a strong yearning in the soul. It is true within, "O when wilt Thou come unto me" (Psalms 101:2); "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God" (Psalms 42:2).

Fifthly, where there is love, there is delight in the enjoyment of this love. When the soul is near to God and can delight herself in mutual love, she can do without everything else; she will then be well-satisfied. "As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons. I sat down under His shadow with great delight, and His fruit was sweet to my taste. He brought me to the banqueting house, and His banner over me was love" (Song of Solomon 2:34); "My meditation of Him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord" (Psalms 104:34).

Sixthly, where there is love, there will be grief over absence and being at a distance. A loving soul will readily perceive if she is near or afar off. This will immediately trouble her. "My beloved put in His hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved for Him ... my soul failed when He spake: I sought Him, but I could not find Him" (Song of Solomon 5:4-6). Since He is her light and the strength of her life and the God of her joy and delight, how can it then be otherwise than that she will mourn if the Lord hides Himself, or if she, due to her conduct, has been the cause of estrangement? This is the cause for these sorrowful complaints: "How long wilt Thou forget me, O Lord? for ever? how long wilt Thou hide Thy face from me" (Psalms 13:1); "For these things I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the Comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me" (Lamentations 1:16).

Seventhly, where there is love, there is willing obedience. There will be joy if one may render a service to the loved one, in doing something in which the loved one finds delight. Such is also the case here. If we love God, then we will also find delight in His will. We shall be united with this will and be very desirous that "whether present or absent, we may be accepted of Him" (2 Corinthians 5:9). This the Lord Jesus indicates: "If a man love Me, he will keep My words" (John 14:23); "For this is the love of God, that we keep His commandments" (1 John 5:3).

Eighthly, where there is love, the objects of love and hatred will be identical. The enemies of the one will also be the enemies of the other, and the friends of the one will also be the friends of the other. "Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate Thee ... I hate them with perfect hatred: I count them mine enemies" (Psalms 139:21-22); "I am a companion of all them that fear Thee, and of them that keep Thy precepts" (Psalms 119:63).

Ninthly, where there is love, one will sacrifice everything for the loved one. Such is also the case here; he who loves God will readily surrender to God all that he has. When honor, possessions, life, etc., stand in opposition to God, His will and honor, a lover of God willingly surrenders everything, rejoicing that he may have something which he may sacrifice to God. Paul testified concerning the believing Hebrews: "For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods" (Hebrews 10:34). And he said of himself: "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 21:13).

Tenthly, love cannot be satisfied unless there be a most intimate and perfect union. Therefore, since a lover of God cannot find full satisfaction of this love in this life, and knowing that perfect and immediate union with God will only exist in heaven, he longs to die in order to find perfect satisfaction in this love. "... having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ" (Php 1:23).

Indications of the Absence of Love Toward God

Everyone knows by experience that love and its effects are indeed such as we before have stated it to be. Apply the nature and the deeds of love to its most adorable object, namely God, and examine your heart accordingly, and you, as in a clear mirror, will perceive whether or not you love God. You will perceive whether you have but a natural love for God as the Supreme Good -- which is more a judging that God is worthy of adoration and that man is obligated to love Him, rather than a sweet motion of the heart which manifests itself in the previously mentioned deeds -- or whether you love God in Christ as your God and Father, and although love may yet be small and imperfect, you nevertheless love in truth. If many were to search their hearts and examine themselves in this respect, it would become evident to their conscience that the love of God was not in them. Come, examine yourself -- may it be a means to your conviction and thus to your conversion. Listen therefore attentively to me and may it touch your heart!

First of all, if you miss that mentioned above, you do not love God. Is there to be found in you esteem, joy, reverence, yearning and seeking, a delighting in the enjoyment of these matters, a grieving over their absence? Is there also found in you obedience, hatred toward sin, and love for the godly? Are you willing to sacrifice honor, possessions, life, soul and body for the Lord's sake and do you yearn for felicity? Natural man, must you not answer: "These things are truly not to be found in me"? If one does not love God unless these motions are to be found in him -- of which I am now also convinced -- I therefore do not love God. I have indeed said, "Dear God; dear Lord!" I imagined, without self-examination, that I loved God, but now I perceive that I have deceived myself.

Secondly, he who loves the world does not love God, for God and the world stand in direct opposition to each other. He who loves the one hates the other. This is declared by the mouth of truth: "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Matthew 6:24). The apostle John confirms this: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John 2:16). If you ask what the world is, then I answer: all that is visible, is upon earth, and occupies your heart -- such as, "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" (1 John 2:16). If you ask what love to the world is, I answer you: to cleave intently to visible things, nourishment and clothing, money, honor and prestige (each in his own situations and circumstances), the love of man toward you, delicacies, revelry, lasciviousness, etc. and to have all your concerns, desires, thoughts, and endeavors comprehended in them. The eye focuses upon them, the ear listens to them, the mouth speaks of them, the hands touch them, the feet run after them, and everything -- soul and body -- is engaged to attain to them, and, having attained them, to hold on to them. Such a person will be either joyous or sorrowful, this being commensurate with whether everything proceeds according to his wishes. Thus, that which is of the world is all his delight and enjoyment. Although one may judgmentally say, "All this is vanity, and salvation is greater," while the heart is yet in the world, the objective of life is that which is of the world, and all activity is focused upon that which is of the world, such a person is most certainly worldly and a man of this world -- a person whose portion is in this life. You therefore who are convinced of this, be further convinced that you love the world and, consequently, that you do not love God.

Thirdly, you do not love God if you are still entirely permeated with self-love. This is not entirely dead in believers, but it no longer has dominion. It is acknowledged to be what it is, declared to be an enemy, striven against, and mourned over. However, wherever self-love has dominion, there can be no room for the love of God. It is entirely contrary to the nature of this love to love and seek self. "Charity ... seeketh not her own" (1 Corinthians 13:4-5). Paul posits love toward God and pleasures as two contradictory matters. "... lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" (2 Timothy 3:4). One lives in self-love if in his entire conduct he has himself in view; that is, if he only seeks to obtain and keep things for himself. This is also true if hatred, envy, wrath, and vengeance are aroused against those who hinder him in his pursuit of self. This proves that one does not love God. This will be all the more evident if, in religion, one does not proceed beyond that which can coexist with self-love -- renouncing religion fully or partially if it is detrimental to either our honor or possessions.

Now consider these three matters together and draw the following conclusion: He in whom the nature and deeds of love toward God are absent; and he who loves the world and lives in self-love -- he does not love God. Since, however, the nature and the deeds of love toward God are absent in me, and since I do love the world and I am completely wrapped up in self-love, I therefore do not love God. The Wretched Condition of Those Who Do Not Love God

Having convinced you that you do not love God, we shall furthermore show you your miserable condition, in order to thereby lead you to repentance.

First, be assured that you hate God. To hate God will be such dreadful abomination to you that you would not say this of yourself. You will be unwilling to admit this, and will say, "Oh no! I do not hate God." It is nevertheless the truth. Do not flatter yourself now that your unrighteousness, which is hateful, is found out. It is beyond doubt that there are those who hate God. Observe this in the following passages: "... them that hate Me" (Exodus 20:5); "... let them also that hate Him flee before Him" (Psalms 68:1); "... haters of God" (Romans 1:30); "... but now have they ... hated both Me and My Father" (John 15:24).

Objection: Although there are those who hate God, I nevertheless do not hate God -- of this I am very much convinced.

Answer (1) You have been convinced from the previous discussion that you do not love God; from this it is certain that you hate God, for there is no intermediate position here. Relative to people and other things, it can be true in certain cases that not loving does not imply hatred -- namely, when there are people with whom one is not acquainted nor has seen; one does not love them, but also does not hate them. He leaves it at that. However, those with whom we are acquainted, such as our employer, those with whom we continually work side by side, and with whom we continually have dealings -- toward such persons we cannot be neutral. In our heart we shall either perceive interest and inclination, or aversion and disinclination. Inner aversion, even if it does not stir the passions to the highest degree, and disinclination are tantamount to hatred. Aversion and repulsion are equivalent to hatred.

(2) Furthermore, your aversion for all by which God reveals Himself as being holy and righteous, causing your conscience to become restless, indicates all the more that you hate God. The very thing that stimulates one to love or to hate will be loved or hated more and more. However, you hate, have an aversion for, and are repulsed by the light of true godliness since it discovers you to yourself and makes you restless in view of the impending judgment. God testifies of this: "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved" (John 3:20); "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you ... because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (John 15:18-19).

(3) Furthermore, since you continually sin against God with pleasure and delight, is that not an unwillingness to have God be Lord over you? Do you not thus reveal your desire to be your own master and to live according to your will rather than His will? You thus despise and reject God. However, despising and rejecting issue forth from hatred and are evidences of hatred -- just as the submissive rendering of honor, recognition, and obedience are evidences of love.

(4) Furthermore, since you love the world and those who are of the world, it is thus infallibly true that you hate the opposite. God and the world are opposites; he who loves the one hates the other. Therefore, from your love to the world you can conclude that you hate God. Behold therefore, you who are convinced that you do not love God, you are in that condition which is so abhorrent to yourself, namely, that you hate God.

Secondly, all you who do not love God, be it known that God also does not love you. God hates you and you are God's enemy. "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God" (James 4:4). Hear once how God is disposed toward you. "Thou hatest all workers of iniquity" (Psalms 5:5).

Thirdly, God's wrath is upon you and will destroy you. "But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us. But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before Me" (Luke 19:14; Luke 19:27); "All they that hate Me love death" (Proverbs 8:36). What are you -- you who do not love God? You are a wretched man in yourself. You -- who are so abominable -- are hated of God, the Lord Jesus, the holy angels, and the godly. You have nothing else to expect but to be eternally subject to the wrath of God. Poor creature! Have you not lived long enough in such a way? Is it not now time to awake ere it is too late? Therefore, arise and flee the wrath to come.

However, you who are lovers of God and who have read attentively what I have said concerning the nature and deeds of love, examine your heart relative to this. Did not your heart approve of all this and did it not receive a desire for the love of God? Did not your heart become convinced that you truly love God, even though this love is still very small and imperfect? Rejoice therefore in this most precious gift, for it is not due to the goodness of your nature that you have begun to love God; it has been given to you out of grace and been bestowed upon you due to God's love for you. It is an evidence that God has known you from eternity. "But if any man love God, the same is known of Him" (1 Corinthians 8:3).

Believers Stirred Up to Love Toward God

If there is then a small beginning of the love of God in you, stir it up, so that the spark may become a flame. You, who grieve that you love the Lord so little and desire with your whole heart to love Him more, hear and permit your soul to be instructed regarding the love of God.

First, love is the purest of all virtues and no virtue is comparable to it -- yes, a virtue is no virtue if it does not derive its luster from this virtue. We never resemble God so much as in love, for "God is love" (1 John 4:8). He who loves is a partaker of the divine nature. In such a person there is light, purity, warmth, holiness, joy, and all that can be related to salvation. You have already perceived how that your soul was enamored with love when you heard the exposition of the nature and deeds of love, as well as when you observed the passions of the soul which loves God (or heard this recounted by others). Therefore yield to your desire and be enamored with that which is so lovely.

Secondly, God is most adorable in Himself, and all that is adorable is to be found in God. To adore that which is beautiful, delightful, glorious, and lovely, is not a heavy task. It is naturally attractive to the heart. All this is true concerning God in an infinite manner, and he who beholds God cannot but love. Words are too insignificant, passions too feeble, and everything falls short in showing forth the beauty of the Lord. No one knows what God is but he to whom God has revealed Himself; and the heart of him to whom God reveals Himself will be kindled in love, because He is God -- because He is the Lord who is worthy of all honor and love.

Thirdly, believers, the infinite God who is the eternal Love, loves you! "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love" (Jeremiah 31:3); "For the Father Himself loveth you" (John 16:27); "But God, who is rich in mercy, for His great love wherewith He loved us" (Ephesians 2:4). The sun cannot shine upon a mirror or it will reflect, nor upon some polished metal, or it becomes warm and reflects warmth in return. Can a man resist the love of Him who is most lovely and adorable, and who desires to be loved in return, without love being activated? Would not then the love of God toward you -- the God in whom you believe -- having indeed seen and tasted a small ray of that love, set your hearts aflame with that love? "We love Him, because He first loved us" (1 John 4:19).

Fourthly, in addition to this meditate upon all the great benefits which the Lord has bestowed, does bestow, and eternally will bestow upon you; they proceed from love and are evidences of it. The heart of man is so loveless that all the benefits which someone bestows upon him cannot persuade him to love that person. One receives the benefits, but the heart remains cold toward the giver. However, if benefits issue forth from love, and from one who is most adorable within himself and whom we ourselves love, then this will engage the heart. God, the adorable One, who loves you and who is somewhat loved by you, manifests His love to you, along with inestimable benefits as tokens of love. Out of love He gives you His Son as a Surety and Redeemer. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him" (1 John 4:9). He draws us, out of love, to Himself. "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee" (Jeremiah 31:3). He adopts His own, out of love, as His children. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God" (1 John 3:1). He chastises them, out of love, to their advantage. "For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth ... that we might be partakers of His holiness" (Hebrews 12:6; Hebrews 12:10). If they are sorrowful, His love is stirred up to comfort them. "God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace" (2 Thessalonians 2:16). Have you not become partakers of these benefits? If you know this to be so, and then perceive that they all proceed from a fatherly love, but your love is not kindled, I know not what will do it.

Fifthly, proceed to consider how delightful this is to God. You are privileged that you may love the Lord -- and if you love Him, the Lord has delight in this and, according to His promise to those that love Him, will reward this love with love in return as well as benefits. What a wondrous goodness this is! This love originates with Him. By His love He enables them to love, and when they love Him, He rewards that love with love in return. "And he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father" (John 14:21). The Lord's eye is upon them and He keeps them from all evil. "The Lord preserveth all them that love Him" (Psalms 145:20). He bestows benefits upon them which exceed all comprehension. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him" (1 Corinthians 2:9). Yes, even the evil which appears to be to their destruction will be reversed to the advantage of the lovers of God. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Romans 8:28). A lover of God is not only pleasing to God, but he is also loved by the Lord Jesus, the holy angels, and all believers. Everyone will behold such a person with pleasure and delight.

Sixthly, love is holiness and begets holiness -- which believers long for and desire so strongly. Love preserves a believer in communion with God. "And he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him" (1 John 4:16). This is not only a sweet, but also a holy and sanctifying disposition. Love teaches what duty is, stirs up to perform the duty, and guides in the execution of duty. Without love the very best deed is deficient (1 Corinthians 13:2). Instead, all must transpire in love. "... that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love" (Ephesians 1:4). The entire law is comprehended in love. (Matthew 22:37). "Now the end of the commandment is charity" (1 Timothy 1:5). Love cannot remain concealed, for it is a holy fire. It is operative externally and is a strong incitement. "For the love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Corinthians 5:14). God, love The apostle therefore speaks of the "labour of love" (1 Thessalonians 1:3). Love renders all labor easy, conquers all danger, penetrates through all opposition, and glories in tribulation. "We glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts" (Romans 5:3-5). He who therefore wishes to be holy, let him become active in love toward God. "Ye that love the Lord, hate evil" (Psalms 97:10).

Seventhly, follow the example of the Lord Jesus who loved the Father (John 14:31). Join yourself to the godly, for they are lovers of God and are frequently denominated as such (cf. Song of Solomon 1:3; Psalms 69:36; Isaiah 41:8). Exercise yourself to increase in love. "O love the Lord, all ye His saints" (Psalms 31:23); "Keep yourselves in the love of God" (Jude 1:21).

Believers to Abstain from That Which Hinders an Increase in Love

You therefore who delight to walk in the love of God, henceforth abstain from that which until now has hindered you from increasing and from breaking forth in love (Isaiah 54:3). These hindrances are the following:

(1) Ignorance. Little knowledge begets little love. Search the Word of God attentively, and thoughtfully give heed to His work without and within you. Focus upon getting a view of the Lord and labor to keep yourself near to the Lord.

(2) Partial love. Believers still have the old Adam within themselves which continually hankers for that which is of the world; self-love is not yet dead. If one yields somewhat to this love, it will increase all the more, and the more self-love increases, the more love toward God will be diminished. He who therefore wishes to increase in love toward God must resist and cast out the other love. This halting between two opinions prevents growth.

(3) Infrequent communion with God. Love wants to be exercised or else it will become cold. Separate yourself from all that you are permitted to separate yourself from, so that the Lord alone will have your heart. Continually pray, meditate, ask counsel, be dependent, and particularly observe your devotional time strictly. This will, time and again, restore you, and you will become more adept in acquainting yourself with the Lord.

(4) Unbelief. "Faith worketh by love"; if one does not believe that he is loved by God, he also cannot be stirred up by this love. However, if one believes that God loves him, his heart will in turn be kindled with in love toward God. "We love Him, because He first loved us."

(5) Fearfulness. If, for the sake of God's cause, we are in danger of losing our honor in some measure; if harm, shame, and the loss of life are feared; and if we then shrink back, come up with excuses, and hide ourselves, love will then be very much injured, and it sometimes takes a considerable effort to recover a loving disposition. However, if we then break out of this when it comes to the point, love will receive double strength. Perfect love casts out fear -- not only a fear for God, which causes a fleeing from God, but also the fear of danger.

Counsel for the Increase in Love Toward God However, if you wish to increase in love:

(1) Take your life, honor, possessions, and all that you have, and surrender them to the Lord. Let Him care for them and do not concern yourself about them, so that you can readily part with them if love toward God requires this.

(2) Display the image of God which is in you -- however small or great it may be -- and show the world that you have a different nature, being in covenant with God.

(3) Believe in God's love toward you and rejoice in this.

(4) Pray for the increase of love.

(5) Have continual fellowship with those who love God, and be their companion.

(6) Abstain from willful sins and be zealous to do the will of God. If you fall, do not continue in this sin, but with sorrow humble yourself, as having sinned against love, and arise again -- holding fast to the unchangeable love of God and the immutability of the covenant. While thus acquainting yourself with the Lord, you will go on from strength to strength and become more abundant in love. "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God" (2 Thessalonians 3:5).

063. Chapter 58: Love Toward Jesus Christ

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-EIGHT ----- Love Toward Jesus Christ Jesus Christ: The Object of Love Revealed in the Gospel The law requires love toward God and toward everything which God enjoins us to love. Prior to the fall, love had no other object than God and man (comprehended under the word "neighbor"). The law of nature indeed does not teach anything beyond this. However, God has presented an additional object of love in the gospel -- the Lord Jesus Christ, the Mediator between God and man. The law requires the act of love, and the gospel makes known the object of love. The Lord Jesus is both God and a holy man. One must love Him as God (of whom we have just spoken). We consider Him here, however, as Immanuel -- God and man in one Person -- as Mediator and Savior, and in that capacity He is the object of our love. We have discussed the nature of love and it is thus not necessary to repeat it. We shall therefore stir you up to manifest such love toward the Lord Jesus. The Lord Jesus has few who love Him in the world. He would have more if He willed to have more, but He deems most not worthy of this. It is a great privilege and grace for the few who have been granted to love Him -- and those who love Him, love Him so much that they will even give their life for Him. They will love Him until their death and to all eternity. The Grievous Sin of Being Acquainted with Jesus and Yet Not Loving Him The heathen, not having the gospel proclaimed to them, do not commit sin in not loving Him. They have not been commanded to do so, as He has not been declared to them. The Jews and Mohammedans know of Jesus; it is therefore their sin that they do not love Him, that they hate Him, and all who, after His Name, are called Christians. The Antichrist, even though he boasts of the name of Christ, sins in that he and his followers do not love Jesus, but persecute Him and His church and become drunk with the blood of the saints. Heretics, who wish to be called "Christian," are also guilty of sin in not loving Him -- hating Him in His truth and in His children, while persecuting every one of them with all their might. These will all endure their judgment and it will be unbearable for them.

However, those who are in the church, of which the Lord Jesus is the Head, ought indeed to love Him; but how few are to be found in her who love Him!

(1) Many have no dealings with Him whatsoever. They hear His name mentioned, hear Him described and recommended in the sermons, make mention of Him themselves, but nevertheless are indifferent as to who and what He is. He is a stranger to them and they have no desire to know Him. They also make no effort in that respect, and if anyone wishes to make Him known to them, they respond, "Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of His ways." They leave Him for what He is, and since they do not know Him they also do not love Him. For it is impossible to love someone we do not know. There is no sorrow over missing Him, no yearning for Him, no uniting of the heart to Him, and no grief over the fact that they do not love Him.

(2) Many know Jesus according to the letter, but not internally by the illumination of the Holy Spirit. Consequently, such also have no love for Him. They do desire Him as a servant to protect them from hell and to help them get into heaven -- of which they also have no correct perceptions.

Beyond that they have no use for Him. There is no entering into covenant with Him, no surrendering to Him, no receiving of Him by faith unto justification and sanctification, no heart-union, and no exercising of fellowship with Him. They are neither acquainted with His presence nor with His absence. They are satisfied if they are but good church members, partake of the Lord's Supper, live honestly, and have the illusion that they will be saved. On that basis they proceed -- even though Jesus remains a stranger to them, remaining outside of their heart and thoughts. Since you are acquainted with human love, you will thus perceive that you have no love to Jesus whom you ought to love more vehemently than men. You may say that you love Jesus. But then I ask you, "How is this evident? Is there esteem and reverence for Him? Do you grieve and long for Him? Do you endeavor to live in immediate union with Him? Is there a resemblance between your nature and His? Are you obedient and do you keep His commandments? Is there love for the most eminent among the godly? Is there an aversion toward the unconverted, of whom we have dealt with in the above, and of whom you yourself are convinced that they are such? If you consider your love toward men and apply this to love toward Christ, then you must be convinced that you do not love Jesus -- whatever good thoughts you may have concerning yourself."

(3) Many who are in the church show publicly that they do not love Jesus. They live in a worldly and ungodly fashion. They curse, gamble, dance, drink, eat excessively, commit fornication, secretly commit all manner of unrighteousness, hate the godly and persecute them with their tongue and deeds, doing whatever an enemy of Jesus would do. Such are baptized, stay with the church, and imagine that they will yet be saved. We declare to them, however, that they are enemies of Christ; they do not love Christ, but hate Him. It would have been better for them if they had never heard Christ mentioned, than that they, being adorned by the name "Christian," oppose Christ to such a degree. They do not inflict injury upon Christ -- for He is highly exalted above them -- but upon themselves. The Wretched Condition of Those Who Do Not Love Jesus

All who do not love Jesus, focus for a moment upon your wretched condition. You can first of all be convinced by the Word of God that it is impossible to be saved without faith. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36). To be disobedient to the Son is not to believe in Him; [Note: à Brakel makes this statement considering that John 3:36 reads as follows in the Statenvertaling: "Die de Zoon ongehoorzaam is, die zal het leven niet zien," that is, "He that is disobedient to the Son shall not see life."] it is contrasted with believing in the Son. "... but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:16). You do not believe in the Son, even though you believe that He is who He is, and that He is a Savior for all believers. For you do not love Him and wherever there is no love, there is also no faith -- "faith which worketh by love" (Galatians 5:6). Faith without works is dead (James 2:26). If you do not wilfully want to deceive yourself, then you must pronounce the sentence of not being saved upon yourself.

Secondly, Jesus does not love you. "I love them that love Me" (Proverbs 8:17). If He only loves those that love Him, then you do not belong to His beloved ones. He has died for those whom He loves (Ephesians 5:25). Not to be loved by Him is not to be redeemed by Him. Those who do not love the Lord Jesus are the objects of His hatred and wrath. Love and hatred stand in opposition to each other. "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated" (Romans 9:13). If you do not love Jesus, Love of Christ Jesus also does not love you, and if Jesus does not love you, He hates you. "Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness" (Psalms 45:7); "The froward mouth, do I hate" (Proverbs 8:13). It was a dreadful experience for the bystanders "when He had looked round about on them with anger" (Mark 3:5). How dreadful it then will be if Jesus, who is not only a Lamb but is also called a Lion (Revelation 5:5), will look upon you in wrath on the Day of Judgment! Consider this attentively, and place yourself among those (for you belong to them) of whom it is written: "And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand" (Revelation 6:16-17). How wretched you then are who do not love Jesus, for Jesus does not love you and you are no partaker of His suffering and death. He hates you and is provoked to wrath against you. Therefore tremble!

Thirdly, you who do not love Jesus are the most cursed creature under the sun. Listen to the following passage, and make application to yourself -- a passage which cannot be read without terror: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema (= accursed) Maranatha" (1 Corinthians 16:22). It is the greatest curse imaginable. Not only will this curse come upon such, but they themselves will be the curse, and therefore "shall be an abhorring unto all flesh" (Isaiah 66:24). You will eternally be in that condition if you do not repent in this life. You will experience what is written in Luke 19:27 : "But those Mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before Me." Oh, that the terror of the Lord would persuade you to believe!

Impediments to an Assurance of a Love for Jesus As wretched as those are who do not love Jesus, so blessed are they who do love Him. He who does not love Jesus readily imagines that he loves Jesus, but he who loves Jesus in truth frequently fears that he does not love Him. Such a person finds two reasons within himself causing him to have such suspicion about himself: He does not feel the sweet motions toward Jesus which, in his opinion, ought always to be inherent in love. Furthermore, if he loved Jesus, he would be more obedient to Him and live a holier life.

Such ought to know first of all, that the probability of love being present is very great if one is so suspicious of his conduct. If this is accompanied with a desire to love Him, and there is grief that he does not love Him; if this does not only proceed from a fear for the judgment which will come upon those who do not love Him, and a desire to be saved (thus desiring love as but a means to acquire something), but these concerns proceed from and are accompanied with the desire to love Jesus -- since one delights in the act itself of loving Him -- then there is not only a probability, but proof that one loves Jesus. It is natural for upright souls to distrust themselves if they do not clearly perceive a matter within themselves. Such is the conduct of God's children. "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting" (Psalms 139:23-24).

Secondly, one must note the distinction between the propensity, veracity, and the sensitivity of the passions of love. One can have a true and genuine love which is very strong -- even if he does not have sweet and sensible passions. Does a mother not love her child simply because she is not caressing, embracing, kissing, and delighting herself in viewing the beauty of her child? One knows that her heart has a loving disposition toward her child -- also when she does not think upon it and is engaged in something else. One knows that love will surface time and again upon seeing the child, and that the distress experienced when the child is missing or meets with some discomfort proceeds from love. Her entire conduct is directed to seek the welfare of the child, even though she is not mindful of her objective. Such is also the case here. Even if you are not always occupied with sensible expressions of the heart and are not always engaged in embracing Jesus and exercising sweet communion with Him, the love of Jesus can indeed be truly in the heart, manifesting itself in deeds. Sweet frames in believers are generally engendered by the receipt of tokens of love from Jesus -- when He kisses the soul with the kisses of His mouth, when His left hand is under her head, and when He embraces her with the right hand. However, this is a rare hour of short duration. Yet steadfast love is anchored in the heart, manifests itself at given occasions, and reveals itself in the objective of our conduct.

Thirdly, deficiency in sanctification is indeed indicative of the imperfection of love, but no proof of its total absence. Love is still small, and besides that, the old Adam is still present; these two strive against each other. Our corrupt nature prevents love from breaking through -- and furthermore, sins do not proceed from love but from our corruption. Love is, however, not strong enough to prevent and overcome these sins; love groans under them and is grieved by them. "Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me" (Romans 7:17). Wherever there is aversion for, hatred for, and opposition to sin; wherever there is a desire and love for godliness, prayer to the Spirit for sanctification, and elements of a desire to please Jesus (motivated by love), there is true sanctification. Believers, from this you now observe that your reasons for concern are unfounded and that they ought not prevent you in the expressions of your love toward Jesus. Concern and fear are impediments in this respect. To further assure you that you love Jesus, consider the following matters.

Marks of Love for Jesus

First, if you correctly understand the nature and deeds of love which have been presented in the previous chapter, you will be convinced that what has been said there is descriptive of true love. Examine now your heart in light of this in the presence of an omniscient God -- being assured that if there is love, you do not have it of yourself but that it is a gift of God's grace to you -- and if you thus compare yourself with matters presented in that chapter, you will have to say, "Truly, I love Jesus!"

Secondly, place all that you love upon earth next to Jesus and observe then toward which side your heart leans. Would you rather be in the presence of those whom you love dearly, or would you rather be with Jesus if you were given and permitted to delight yourself in His love? Do you prefer money, valuables, and that which is beautiful, and delightful -- or do you prefer Jesus? I do not ask for your judgmental observation, but what the issues of your heart are. If you were to make such a comparison, would you not say: "For me it is a thing of great importance. It is Jesus and Jesus only. Everything else, apart from Jesus, would only be grievous to me. To have Jesus, however, while having to do without everything else, would gratify me, and I would wilfully forsake everything for Jesus' sake as long as I might live with Jesus in the enjoyment of love toward Him."

Thirdly, if you had the assurance that you were saved, would you then have everything you desire? Would you then live joyously and peacefully? Do you say: "I would rejoice in this; however, it would not gratify me in this life. I must have Jesus and I must live in the enjoyment of mutual love with Him. If I would have to stay away from Him in this life, I would end my days in sorrow. It is not sufficient for me to receive the benefits of Jesus. Rather, my desire is after His Person and to live with Jesus in love. "Jesus only is the wish of my heart, and, instead of everything else and while having to do without everything else, Jesus is sufficient for me."

Fourthly, what is the reason for your sorrow? What is the focus of your yearning? When are things well with you? Is it when you earn a profit, are loved by many, and have success in everything according to your wishes? Is your answer: "No, but in the midst of prosperity I become sorrowful if I think that my Jesus has departed. If I hear or see someone who loves Jesus, my heart is overwhelmed, my tears quietly run down my cheeks, I lift my eyes upward toward Jesus, and I sigh, =Where could my faithful, sweet, and beloved Jesus be? Why does He tarry so long?' He is my love, my joy, my life, my rest, my all, and I can no longer live in estrangement from Him. Oh, that He would turn to me, visit me, kiss me with the kisses of His mouth, and ignite my love by His love! How I would then delight myself, and how I would sit under the canopy of His overshadowing love! I would become drunk with love. And if He refreshes me with His presence, the earth is too low and the world too small for me. My soul then wishes to be delivered from this and I must be in heaven. Then I long to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. Here soul and body are too weak to endure the influences of love; here Jesus departs again; after light comes darkness; and after warmth, coldness. Therefore, oh blessed eternity! Oh, to be eternally with Jesus!"

Fifthly, tell me, why do you go to church? Why do you turn to your Bible? Why do you so frequently seek for solitude? What do you do there? What do you seek there? Do you answer: "My Jesus is gone; He has departed; I seek Him whom my soul loveth. I mourn over my foolishness that I did not open unto Him when He knocked. There I mourn that I have caused Him to depart due to my sin and that I have grieved His Holy Spirit. There I sigh, weep, and pour out my bitter complaints. There I become discouraged when I think how others live in the enjoyment of love, how sweet Jesus is to them, that I must always stand from afar, and that Jesus hides Himself from me and does not allow Himself be found of me. For that reason I go to hear His Word if per adventure He might be there; for that reason I turn to my Bible if perhaps I might hear His voice there. For that reason I frequent the fellowship of the godly, if peradventure He might be pleased to reveal Himself in love to me there." It is thus Jesus whom you are after.

Sixthly, with whom do you associate in the world -- with worldly people or with the godly? Do you say: "I can readily reply to that. Worldly and natural men have the stench of death, and I thus cannot tolerate to be in their presence. I consider them to be a detriment to me and I am not able to unite my heart with them. They are repulsive to me, and their religious conversation is abominable to me, since I perceive that they neither know Jesus nor are sincere of heart. They become intolerable to me if I perceive that they oppose those who are truly godly. If, however, I find someone who loves the Lord Jesus, such a person is precious in my eyes and my heart is wonderfully united with such a person -- even if I have never before met or heard of this person. Those who love Jesus are glorious to me; my heart yearns for them; I love them, and with my entire heart I am one with them. With them I wish to be esteemed and despised, and with them I wish to live and die. I rejoice when I meet them, and deem myself too insignificant to be in their presence. Yet it is to my comfort, and I deem myself happy if I, as the least, may have fellowship with them and be their servant."

Consider all this together. Even a natural man would maintain that such a disposition is a loving disposition, and that such deeds are true evidences of love. You yourself must be convinced of this -- particularly if you read what has been said in the previous chapter. If you were to secretly listen to someone and would notice that his heart was thus engaged, would you not consider him to be happy? Would you not say to yourself, "Truly, this person loves Jesus"? Would you not love this person? Would not your affection for Jesus be stirred up? As you turn to yourself, you are indeed convinced that the above-mentioned disposition and motions are to be found in you. Therefore you must come to the following conclusion: "I cannot deny it and I do not want to deny it: I do and must say that I love Jesus, even though a quiet fear stirs somewhat within me."

Neither allow yourself to be robbed of this, nor rob yourself of it -- either by thinking that this is a matter too great for you or that you would deceive yourself, or because you are so sinful. Cast these thoughts away from you as being harmful to you, for they will prevent the sweet exercises of communion and the free communion with Jesus as being your own, and you being His. The livelier your faith is that you love Jesus -- even though there is much that ought not to be there -- the more love you will beget. Life is life and truth is truth. The Blessedness of Those Who Love Jesus

How blessed are you who love Jesus, for God loves you! "He that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father" (John 14:21); "For the Father Himself loveth you, because ye have loved Me" (John 16:27). The Lord Jesus loves you: "He that loveth Me ... I will love him" (John 14:21). If you are loved by God and the Lord Jesus, They will accomplish in you all that proceeds from eternal love. Would God then not behold the beloved of His soul, deliver them from all that would harm them, and provide for them in all their necessities? "Be Thou exalted, O God, above the heavens: and Thy glory above all the earth; that Thy beloved may be delivered: save with Thy right hand" (Psalms 108:5-6); "For so He giveth His beloved sleep" (Psalms 127:2). [Note: The rendering of the Statenvertaling differs significantly from the KJV. It reads as follows: "Het is alzo, dat Hij het zijnen beminde als in de slaap geeft." Literally translated this reads, "He gives it to His beloved as during their sleep."]

Oh, how great is that good which the Lord will give to His beloved! "I ... will manifest myself to him" (John 14:23); "We will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John 14:23); "That I may cause those that love Me to inherit substance" (Proverbs 8:21). God's heart is inclined toward you, God's eye is upon you, God's hand is for you, and all discomforts come upon you in love (Revelation 3:19) -- all things must work together for you for good (Romans 8:28). All that is subservient to your salvation and can satisfy you is intended for you (1 Corinthians 2:9). Of you it may be said, "Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency!" (Deuteronomy 33:29). The very zenith of your felicity is love itself and the privilege to love eternally -- without end to remain satisfied with the immediate manifestations of love, and the mutual enjoyment of love with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

Exhortations to Increase in Love Toward Jesus

Love is imperfect here, and we are therefore continually in need of exhortations. Therefore you who desire to become more abundant in your love toward the Lord Jesus, consider these matters:

First, consider Jesus in His preciousness. After the bride had described Him from His head to His feet, she concludes, "His mouth is most sweet: yea, He is altogether lovely. This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem" (Song of Solomon 5:16). According to His divine nature He is the brightness of His Father's glory and the express image of His person. He possesses all divine perfections to an infinite degree. According to His human nature He is perfectly holy. He who delights in holiness must find delight in Him. As Mediator He is crowned with honor and glory, and He is most benevolent, friendly, compassionate, and loving. Grace and love are poured out upon His lips, and He is full of grace, truth, righteousness, and benevolence, so that He is simultaneously majestic and lovely. If there is therefore anything that will beget and stir up love within you, it must be the Lord Jesus -- that is, if He would but reveal Himself to you and you could but behold the King in His beauty.

Secondly, love begets love. Jesus, however, loves you with the greatest love imaginable. Since He is love, He can therefore love those that are not loveable, and delight Himself in blessing His beloved ones. His love toward you is an eternal love, and thus without beginning and without end; it is a most intimate and vehement love. Meditate for a moment upon all in which he manifests His love toward you.

(1) He came into the world for your sake, assumed your nature, and became like unto you in all things, sin excepted. He even took upon Himself the form of a servant. He thus put Himself in your place, became your Surety, took your sins away from you, took them upon Himself as if He had committed them, and bore the punishment due upon your sins. "Even as Christ also loved the church, and gave Himself for it" (Ephesians 5:25).

(2) How He has been despised and what griefs He has borne! Everything was against Him; God was angry toward Him, and poured upon Him His righteous wrath against your sin. Go to the manger and follow Him to the cross. Behold Him there in His utmost distress and anxiety, and imagine that in His deepest sorrow He were to address you as follows: "Look at Me, My elect, My beloved. Love to you brought Me into this condition. My love is so great that I would be willing to suffer a thousand times more before I would allow you to perish." In love He paid your ransom, accomplished eternal redemption for you, reconciled you with God and established peace between Him and you, and led you to Him as a reconciled Father.

(3) You are still bound upon His heart. He continually thinks upon you, prays for you, is your Advocate with the Father, and His eye is upon you to preserve you.

(4) Consider in what a lovely manner He has drawn you to Himself. For your sake He sent the gospel to the locality where you were to be born, and when your time came He called you, allured you, and, while knocking, stood before your heart waiting for you to open to Him. When you were averse to His way and disobedient, He bore you with longsuffering, He regenerated you, illuminated you, gave you a heart that fell in love with Him so that you yourself sought Him and ran after Him.

(5) How frequently He has spoken to your heart! How many kisses of love has He given you! How frequently has He comforted you in your sorrow, delivered you in your perplexities, and encouraged you in your discouragements! With how much longsuffering has He borne with your weaknesses! Time and again He has manifested His goodness to you, as if you had not sinned against Him at all!

(6) He will at last bring you unto Himself into heaven in order that you may be eternally with Him. There He will glorify you; there He will cause you to rejoice; there He will cause you to be perfect in love. He will thus be with you eternally and you with Him, to eternally satiate you with love. Meditate upon this, and believe this, for if this cannot stir up your heart to love in return, you are indeed void of love. Therefore stir up your love.

Thirdly, there is joy in love, and the heart of man is inclined toward joy. There is no joy in the world for you. That which is most delightful grieves you when Jesus has departed. You will have to acquiesce in a song I once made about the month of May:

How sweet is the time of songs and flowers, in which animal and man rejoice!

Yet it is nothing but sorrow to me as long as I miss the love of Jesus. But if He would but speak to my soul, "Thou art Mine and I am Thine eternally," And cause my sinful life to disappear -- then it is for me the time of songs and flowers!

If the soul may sit in the shadow of the love of Jesus, and if her love sweetly issues forth to her Beloved, she has a heaven full of joy, and only then is she in her element. Then she wishes that this love would never be disturbed -- just as the bride expressed it, "I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till He please" (Song of Solomon 2:7). Jesus rejoices in the expressions of His love to you. "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee" (Isaiah 62:5). Likewise a loving soul also rejoices in the expressions of her love to Jesus, and in the sensible enjoyment of Jesus' love toward her. "The King hath brought me into His chambers: we will be glad and rejoice in Thee ... the upright love Thee" (Song of Solomon 1:4).

Fourthly, consider attentively how Jesus is the object of the love of the Father, the angels, and believers.

(1) The love of the Father goes forth to Jesus; God loves Him. "For the Father loveth the Son" (John 5:20); "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matthew 17:5).

(2) The holy angels love Him, rejoice in beholding Him, worship Him reverently (Hebrews 1:6), and are ready to serve Him (Matthew 4:11) -- as seen at His birth, in His suffering, and at His resurrection. At His coming unto judgment they will accompany Him with joyful willingness and love.

(3) Believers on earth love Him, their hearts go out after Him, and He is the focal point of the passions of their love. "Therefore do the virgins love Thee" (Song of Solomon 1:3). The bride continually has the word Beloved in her mouth. Just consider how each believer mourns when Jesus is absent; how they long for His coming to them; and how delighted they are when they may sweetly enjoy His fellowship. All their asking, crying, and weeping is for Jesus. In Jesus only do they find all their satisfaction. What beautiful expressions we find in the meditations of believers! "It is much better for me to die for Jesus than to rule over the world -- My love is crucified -- If you were to cut my heart in a thousand pieces, on each piece you would find the name Jesus written with golden letters -- Lord Jesus, I love Thee more than my possessions, than my loved ones, and than myself -- Money must perish (with all those who love possessions more than fellowship with Jesus for one day)," etc. Shall the heart of each believer bring forth a flame of love, and shall your heart then also not be set aflame? Come, join yourself to all who love Jesus, and say with them, Jesus, sweet Jesus -- Jesus is the most eminent of all who I can find delight in. Jesus, if Thou dost desire to have me, I desire to have Thee and desire none other than Thee. To all creatures I say, "No!" If Jesus were to ask you, "Lovest thou Me?" would you then not answer, "Yea, Lord, Thou knowest that I love Thee"? Therefore hold fast to this and continually immerse yourself in this love. Let it give you wings to render you fit to run your course with joy. Let the love of Jesus compel you to live a life pleasing to Him, in order to glorify Him here, and patiently wait until He takes you to be eternally with Himself.

Guards Against All That Impedes the Exercise of Love Toward Jesus

Henceforth be diligent in maintaining, increasing, and frequently stirring up this love. To that end you must be on guard for some matters, and despise others.

First of all, be on guard against ignorance. Knowledge begets love, and one must therefore strive to increase in the knowledge of Jesus. Those who have but little knowledge are generally very deficient and unstable in love. If the Lord comes to them in an extraordinary manner, it goes well, but if that ceases, their love immediately becomes more faint. However, those who by the Word have become more acquainted with Jesus in all that pertains to Him, are more able to view Him from nearby and to become enamored with Him. Their love is more steadfast -- also when such sweet encounters are not experienced so sensibly.

Secondly, be on guard against partial love. If the world and all that is in it is still desirable and attractive to the eye and the heart, and if you are still so set upon your own will, honor, and delight, the love for Jesus cannot be very strong. Jesus wants to have the heart for Himself. If the enemy gains entrance, Jesus departs; and if He departs, your love will become weaker. Therefore, do not halt between two opinions. If you wish to love the world and to be loved by her, then love it in its entirety and let go of Jesus. If, however, you wish to love Jesus and be loved by Jesus, then love Him and Him alone and let go of the world. Pay no attention to it any longer.

Thirdly, be on guard against a lack of fellowship. Love wants to be maintained. If we are too far from the fire, we shall become cold. The very closest of friends will become estranged due to lack of fellowship. Such is also the case here. Jesus wants to be sought for and perceive that His friendship is of great value to us. Jesus wants to be waited on and to have time made available for mutual manifestations of love. You must therefore frequently endeavor to speak to Him and to tell Him again what your heart's disposition toward Him is, while in an intimate manner expressing your desire toward Him, and your grief that you cannot love Him more. That stirs up love.

Fourthly, be on guard against unbelief. If we readily doubt our portion in Jesus, if we have no confidence that He loves us, if we are actively contradicting all arguments that He has manifested love toward us, readily acquiescing in arguments to the contrary -- yes, searching them out as if it were a masterpiece to conclude that Jesus does not love me and that I do not love Jesus -- then, you will be incapable of exercising love and receiving love in return. Be on guard therefore neither to quarrel against love, to hold Jesus' love suspect, nor to deny the graces which are evidences of Jesus' love, for that is the direct way to cause Jesus to depart.

Fifthly, be on guard against willful sins. Jesus is holy, delights in holiness but hates ungodliness. He has compassion with daily weaknesses and improprieties, and will not withhold the manifestation of His love for that reason. However, willful sins are committed against love -- and then Jesus will withhold His love and His Spirit will be grieved. And when Jesus withholds His love, you will also not be able to love Him. Willful sins will render you incapable of exercising love. The conscience will be troubled, you will lose your freedom, and you will not dare to approach in prayer. You have ruined too much and there has come too great a separation. At times it will take much effort before a loving disposition will be restored.

Sixthly, be on guard against fearfulness, that is, to be in some measure ashamed to confess Him. You wish to exercise love in secret, but do not wish this to be known by others. One is ashamed of Him for fear of harm or shame, and thus withdraws himself. If you enter into situations requiring that love toward Jesus, His honor, and His cause be manifested, you then hide and dare not say, "This is my Beloved, yea, this is my friend." Jesus readily perceives this and it displeases Him. It is the cause that Jesus will hide Himself from you and it is evidence that you have but little love -- love which is very much diminished by such conduct.

Exhortation to Stir Up Love Toward Jesus It can be deduced from the foregoing what it is that stirs up love, and what is to be observed to that end.

(1) You must believe that He loves you and acknowledge every true grace to be evidence of His love toward you.

(2) You must continually separate yourself from everything and only find delight and satisfaction in love toward Jesus.

(3) You must surrender your all to Jesus, without holding anything back, and offer yourself and all that you have to Jesus, declaring a willingness to do without it for His sake.

(4) You must declare Jesus' beauty and preciousness to others, to the end that they also would begin to love Jesus -- and that He thus shall be loved by many.

(5) You must joyfully wear His livery, being desirous for everyone to know that you have Jesus as your Lord.

Furthermore, if anyone were to do anything toward Jesus which would be disadvantageous, he will have us with soul and body as his opponent, and we shall defend His honor with all that we have.

(6) With tender carefulness you must be on guard against that which displeases Him and endeavor to please Him, to be conformed to Him, and to resemble Him in His nature.

(7) You must take time to delight yourself in mutual love, and if some estrangement has occurred and darkness has come, you must endeavor to restore familiarity.

(8) You must yearn, and stir up this yearning time and again -- to depart and be with Christ -- doing so by continually reflecting upon what will be above and how sweet it will be to always be with the Lord. Amen.

064. Chapter 59: The Fear of God

----- CHAPTER FIFTY-NINE ----- The Fear of God

Love toward God (which we have discussed), engenders the fear of God -- which we shall now consider. Love and fear are conjoined in Deuteronomy 10:12 : "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all His ways, and to love Him."

The Word Fear Defined

Fear is either expressive of reverence or terror. Fear as terror is generally expressed by the Hebrew words magor, and pachadh, and by the Greek word phobos. Fear as being reverence is denominated in Hebrew as yirah, and in Greek as eulabeia. However, these words are occasionally also used without this distinction. [Note: The sentence which follows here in the Dutch version is only applicable to the Dutch language and has therefore not been translated. This Dutch sentence reads as follows: Wij noemen vrezen ook vruchten, afkomstig van het Hoogduitsch; op zich zelf wordt het nu zelden gebruikt, maar wel in samenvoeging in het woord godvruchtig, 't welk hetzelfde is als godvreezend.]

Fear issues forth from love -- either for ourselves or for God. Self-love engenders fear when something occurs which could deprive us of something good or whereby some evil could befall us. We fear deprivation, or the evil itself, and whatever or whoever would deprive us of that which is good or whereby evil could be inflicted upon us. God has created self-love in man and wills that we make use of it. The law requires that we love our neighbor as ourselves (Matthew 22:39). It is therefore not sinful to fear deprivation and evil. This fear was inherent in Adam's nature prior to the fall, even though there was no occasion for this fear to arise in him. The Lord Jesus also had such fear (cf. Matthew 26:37; Hebrews 5:7). One may indeed be fearful of death and other discomforts, and thus also of wild animals and evil men. This fear becomes evil, however, if it begets the use of evil means -- either to preserve or acquire that which is good, or to avoid evil. This is true if we fear man more than God and, in neglecting both the fear of God and obedience toward His commandments, we seek to get man on our side in sinful ways. We then give no heed as to whether we displease God; as long as we can please men in order that they will do us no evil, but good. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Matthew 10:28).

Since we must have love for ourselves, and fear issues forth therefrom, we must have more fear for evil which relates to the soul than to the body. Since, the soul's well or woe is dependent upon God, we must be fearful out of love for our own salvation, and must fear God's wrath and judgments. "My flesh trembleth for fear of Thee; and I am afraid of Thy judgments" (Psalms 119:120). An unconverted person must also, by fear for the eternal wrath of God, be persuaded to believe (2 Corinthians 5:11). A converted person must, for fear of spiritual harm, stir himself up to be earnest. "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it" (Hebrews 4:1).

Two Kinds of Fear: Slavish and Filial Fear

Relative to this fear, a distinction is made between slavish and filial fear. Slavish fear causes a slave to do the will of his master for fear of being struck. Such slavish fear of God is better than a stubborn and insensitive despising of God and His judgments. It is useful if someone is brought to repentance by this (cf. Matthew 3:7; Amos 4:12). Someone who is presently converted need not be concerned whether or not his conversion is genuine, because he was driven to Christ out of fear for damnation rather than love to God, for we have shown that we must cherish our well-being and fear that which is evil for us -- this compelling us to repentance. Slavish fear is evil, however, if it is nothing more than terror causing us to flee from God. We repeat: Man, out of love for his salvation and out of fear for his damnation, must fear God and thereby be compelled to repentance and obedience. Self-love is, however, not the basis for filial fear. To be fearful of provoking God to anger because He has power to punish; to be obedient so that He would not withdraw His favor from us, but manifest more of it to us -- this is not the nature of filial fear, even though the matter itself is good and characteristic of God's people. The motivation for the filial fear of God is not self-love, but love to God because He is God and with view to His majesty -- even if this were to result neither in good nor evil on our behalf. The Definition and Nature of Filial Fear

Filial fear is a holy inclination of the heart, generated by God in the hearts of His children, whereby they, out of reverence for God, take careful pains not to displease God, and earnestly endeavor to please Him in all things.

It is a motion of the heart. The noble soul is gifted with emotions, and dependent upon what the objects are, is moved to either joy or sorrow, love or hatred, fear or fearlessness. As far as the fear of God is concerned, man is insensitive, hard, and without emotion. "There is no fear of God before their eyes" (Romans 3:18). In regeneration, however, the heart of stone is removed and a heart of flesh is received which is soft and pliable, and is very readily moved upon beholding God, dependent upon the measure in which God reveals Himself to the soul. If God is perceived as being majestic, a motion immediately arises within their soul -- a motion which is becoming to the creature in respect to God.

It is a holy motion. Since an unconverted person is in essence nothing but sin, also all that proceeds from him is distorted. The ability to fear is directed toward an erroneous object and is exercised in a disorderly fashion. Believers, however, having been sanctified in principle, are also sanctified as far as their inner motions are concerned. Their fear has a proper object and consequently functions in a holy manner, that is, in faith and love. They are devout and fear God (Acts 10:2).

God generates this holy motion. By nature man is totally unfit for any good work. He finds no delight in God and has no desire to fear the Lord. He may be terrified of God, but he cannot fear Him rightly. However, God enables His own to fear Him. "... but I will put My fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from Me" (Jeremiah 32:40). The Holy Spirit is therefore called "the Spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord" (Isaiah 11:2). This filial fear is found in the hearts of God's children. The heart is the seat of all motions -- evil as well as good.

God has enclosed this precious gift in the hearts of His children, and all the motions relative to fear proceed from the heart. Their fear neither consists in talk, refraining from evil and doing good, nor in the appearance of fear, but rather in truth. The heart, intellect, will, and affections are involved here and the heart brings forth various deeds which manifest the fear of God. Only God's children fear the Lord, and therefore those who have this virtue are called God-fearing people. "... the same man was just and devout" (Luke 2:25); "... devout men" (Acts 2:5); "And devout men carried Stephen to his burial" (Acts 8:2). [Note: Wherever the word "devout" is used in the KJV, the Statenvertaling uses either the word "godvrezend" or "godvruchtig." Both words would be translated as "god-fearing."]

Filial fear is engendered by reverence for God. God is the object of this fear. "O fear the Lord, ye His saints" (Psalms 34:9). God is eminent, glorious, and majestic within Himself -- also if there were no creatures. "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty" (1 Chronicles 29:11). Hereby God is aweinspiring in and of Himself. With the advent of intelligent creatures which observe the brilliance of His glory, it cannot but be that they have reverence for Him who is both infinite and majestic. A natural man does not know God. Therefore he may be fearful of His judgments, for calamities, and sometimes may acknowledge God to be terrible (although he generally does not progress this far), but he cannot have reverence for Him. That is the privilege and blessedness of believers. A sinful person cannot tolerate God's majesty. He would flee in terror from God, for He is to him a consuming fire. However, in Christ God is a reconciled Father to His children, and therefore they simultaneously love and revere Him. "Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling" (Psalms 2:11).

Reverence requires, first of all, a knowledge of and beholding of God's majesty. "For we ... were eyewitnesses of His majesty" (2 Peter 1:16).

Secondly, there must be a delightful acknowledgement and a wholehearted approbation that God is so majestic. "Who would not fear Thee, O King of nations? for to Thee doth it appertain" (Jeremiah 10:7).

Thirdly, there must be a reverent bowing before the Lord and a worshiping of Him. "... in Thy fear will I worship toward Thy holy temple" (Psalms 5:7); "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker" (Psalms 95:6).

Fourthly, there must be a covering of the countenance, not daring to behold the brilliance of His glory. Thus the angels covered their faces (Isaiah 6:2), and of Moses it is written, "Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God" (Exodus 3:6).

Fifthly, there must be a trembling as a result of not being able to endure the Lord's majesty. "Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at My presence" (Jeremiah 5:22); "And when He had spoken this word unto me, I stood trembling" (Daniel 10:11).

Sixthly, reverence for God engenders in God's children a careful guarding against displeasing God by disobedience and the commission of sins, and a being active to please Him in all things. Solomon frequently presents these manifestations of the fear of God in his proverbs. "Fear the Lord, and depart from evil" (Proverbs 3:7); "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil" (Proverbs 8:13); "By the fear of the Lord men depart from evil" (Proverbs 16:6). We also read this in Jeremiah 32:40, "I will put My fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from Me." We read furthermore, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge" (Proverbs 1:7); "The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death" (Proverbs 14:27). This is the nature of the fear of God.

Exhortation with the Intent to Convict Those Who Do Not Fear God

What does it avail us if we understand the nature of a virtue and do not practice it? No one is acquainted with the beauty of virtue, except the one who practices it. God requires this from all men and enjoins His children to do so. Let the voice of God enter into your hearts. "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God" (Deuteronomy 6:13); "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep His commandments: for this is the whole duty of man" (Ecclesiastes 12:13). He who loves God and His honor will cry out with David, "Let all the earth fear the Lord: let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of Him" (Psalms 33:8). Even if the world does not fear God, the church and God's children must indeed do so. "Fear Him, all ye the seed of Israel" (Psalms 22:23); "O fear the Lord, ye His saints" (Psalms 34:9). They are therefore denominated as God-fearing persons.

If we now observe the world, it is evident that the fear of God is absent in the heart of man. One must think of the world as Abraham did of Gerar. "And Abraham said. ... Surely the fear of God is not in this place" (Genesis 20:11). If we consider the church, then most members declare that the fear of God is neither before their eyes nor in their hearts. And what about you? Examine yourself. What will you answer upon the question, "Do you fear God?" Is your focus in your walk of life upon the Lord? Does reverence for His majesty arise within when you think about Him, speak of Him, or hear mention made of Him? Do you reverently bow before Him, and do you tremble if you are about to address Him in prayer? If a sinful thought or motion arises within you, does the fear of God motivate you to suppress it? Does the fear of God prevent you from all sinful association with men, fornication, unrighteousness, lies, backbiting, cursing, wrath, and other sins? Does reverence for God motivate and urge you to the practice of religion and to do whatever the Lord has enjoined you to do as being pleasing unto Him? Or do you love the things of this world? Are all your concerns related to the acquisition and preservation of these things? Do you look to people as if they were able to give or withhold them from you? Do you seek to please them even if it displeases God, and are they the measure of your fear? Reflect for a moment upon your former life and give attention to the current disposition governing your deeds. If you are inwardly convinced that, until now, you have not served God in truth, then take your wretched condition -- both current and future -- into consideration, and it possibly could be a means whereby the terror of the Lord would persuade you to believe. Give ear for a moment -- you who neither fear the Lord, nor give heed to Him but who despise the Lord, His Name (Malachi 1:6), and His holy things (Ezekiel 22:8). Give ear, you who arrogantly and proudly oppose the Lord. David says concerning you, "Thou hast rebuked the proud that are cursed, which do err from Thy commandments" (Psalms 119:21). The Serious Consequences of Being Void of the Fear of God

(1) Be assured that God will give you a fearful and trembling heart as long as you do not fear Him, so that you will find neither rest nor safety anywhere -- rather, your own heart and conscience will be continually tormented. The wish of David will come upon you. "Put them in fear, O Lord" (Psalms 9:20). Be assured that the curse which the Lord threatens will come upon you. "The Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life: in the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou shalt fear" (Deuteronomy 28:65-67); "I will send a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth" (Leviticus 26:36); "And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of His majesty, when He ariseth to shake terribly the earth" (Isaiah 2:19).

(2) Be assured that if you continue on without fear for the Lord -- even though you may peacefully approach your end -- the terror of the Lord will at last come upon you. When you will be forsaken by everything, the Lord will be a terror to you and strike terror into you. Oh, how many are there who breathe their last breath with consternation and full of terror! Remember Belshazzar, and consider that you will also experience this. "Then the king's countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another" (Daniel 5:6). In that condition he departed from life.

(3) And even if no terror were to come upon you in this life and at death, you will nevertheless be overcome with fear on every side after your death. Then wrath and anger, oppression and consternation will eternally be upon you. Then you will know what it is to fall into the hands of God. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Hebrews 10:31). Give heed to what is expressed in Psalms 76:7 : "Thou, even Thou, art to be feared: and who may stand in Thy sight when once Thou art angry?" It is in this manner that the prophet presents this terror: "The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us will dwell with the devouring fire? who among us will dwell with everlasting burnings" (Isaiah 33:14). Oh, that you would quietly reflect upon, and apply all this to yourself -- and that you would believe it! The Fear of God in Believers

We shall now turn to you, believers. You will indeed observe your deficiency in this, but you will also be able to perceive that the Lord has put the principle of His fear within you.

(1) Do you not desire that disposition of the fear of God as we have described it in the foregoing? You do not only acquiesce in this, judging it to be good and becoming, but you grieve that you have so little of it and are desirous for a greater measure of it. This is an indication that you are already a partaker of it, for the servants of God are described as such. "...Thy servants, who desire to fear Thy name" (Nehemiah 1:11).

(2) Do you not perceive heartfelt intentions and initiatives to walk in the fear of the Lord? Can you find any delight in having subdued a sin and in having done some good, unless this has been done in the fear of God? And perceiving your deficiency and impotence toward that which you love, is it not frequently your earnest prayer to God that He would fulfil His promise to you in giving His fear in your heart? Behold, there you have evidence that you have the nature of those that fear God. This was David's prayer: "Unite my heart to fear Thy name" (Psalms 86:11).

(3) Is your desire for the fear of God entirely impotent and your prayer entirely fruitless, or do you perceive the principles of it in your actions? Does not God reveal Himself to you in His majesty? Does not your heart say that the Lord is indeed worthy to be served? Are not reverential motions stirred up within you toward God? Do you not at times bow in reverence before Him? Has it not been your experience that, due to a sense of His majesty, you have cast your eyes downward, closed your eyes, and covered your face with your hands? Did not a holy trembling come upon you at times, and was it not your delight if these motions became more sensitive -- yes, did it not cause you to rejoice when thinking upon this afterwards, wishing it to recur and that it would always be thus? Would you not have committed many sins, and neglected many good things if the fear of the Lord had not prevented you? Does not the fear of God nip many sins in the bud, and does not this motivate you to perform your duty? If these things are within you, you must be convinced of the truth, even though the measure is yet small. You will observe your disposition in Job: "For destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of His highness I could not endure" (Job 31:23). Such was also true for Nehemiah: "... but so did not I, because of the fear of God" (Nehemiah 5:15). Acknowledge therefore this received grace, and it will render you capable to read the following rebuke and exhortation with fruit.

Believers Rebuked The more clearly you will be convinced of the principles of the fear of God within you, the more you must grieve over your deficiency in, as well as your sinning against the fear of God. These manifest themselves in the disposition of the heart, the penetration of sinful thoughts, words, and deeds contrary to the revelation of God's presence, and in the fear of man whereby the fear of God must consequently yield.

First, we are to be severely reprimanded, if, knowing that God is majestic, having experienced how good it is to humbly walk with the Majestic One, and knowing how invigorating it is to walk in the way of uprightness, we nevertheless neglect to thus focus upon the Lord and fear Him continually. This makes us vulnerable to all manner of sin. When the doorkeeper sleeps with the door wide open, every lust can then enter and exit without any impediment -- and even if we are aware of this, there is nevertheless no strength to oppose it and we are overcome before realizing it. If then, with Samson, we wish to offer resistance, we shall have lost our strength.

Secondly, this is followed by a disposition which is yet more evil, namely, when we even proceed to satisfy this lust, doing so not only when our conscience points out its evil and counsels us not to begin; and upon having begun, counseled us to desist from and subdue the lust, to be silent in the midst of an evil discourse, and to refrain from the sin which we are currently committing; but also when our conscience causes us to reflect upon God and His majesty. Indeed, this is especially true (which is most abominable) when God manifests Himself to the soul, sensibly discourages the soul, and, so to speak, shakes the finger and says, "I am here, and I certainly see what you are doing. Cease, or else I shall cause you to feel My displeasure." It is a setting aside of the fear of God, a grieving of the Holy Spirit, and the inflicting of a deadly wound upon the soul when, due to the agitation of sin, we are driven onward and seek to hide ourselves from the presence of God in order to be able to proceed, and then actually prevail in carrying out the sin which is at hand. If God were not infinitely longsuffering and immutable, He would cast away such impertinent souls. The third sin committed against the fear of God is to fear man -- a sin to which the godly are still vulnerable. If we have not yet fully denied ourselves in regard to honor, love, advantage, and pleasure, nor are much inclined to acknowledge the insignificance of man (that is, that man can neither stir nor move, can do neither good nor evil to us), and we have not accustomed ourselves to see the hand of the Lord in all things, thus perceiving that God alone does everything, and that all men are but instruments in His hand, being used either to do good or evil unto us -- this will engender a looking unto man. In time of war we consider the multitude and courage of the soldiers and we stand upon our sword (Ezekiel 33:26). "Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations" (Jeremiah 21:13). If, however, we perceive that the might of the enemy supersedes ours, we are fearful and the heart is moved "as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind" (Isaiah 7:2). We fear man when in sickness, legal cases, business transactions, in the plying of our trade, in pursuing our desire which must be attained to by the instrumentality of men, etc.; we look to men and, in our thoughts end in them -- as if it had to come from them. We vehemently seek to have them on our side, and we are fearful of losing their favor. In our association with men we fear the one for his wisdom (which is no match for ours), the other for his status and imposing personality, the third for his wickedness, and the fourth for his benevolence which we would not like to lose. Now if such a person has no desire for godliness and would become angry if you were to manifest the image of God and perform your duty, and if, out of fear for him, you were to hold back and accommodate him in the commission of sin, behold, then the fear of God is rendered inferior and must yield. There God is on the one side, and man on the other side. There the fear of God is on the one hand and the fear of man on the other hand. If, however, the fear of man motivates us to do something which is contrary to the fear of God, then we reject the fear of God because of the fear of man. This is a dreadful sin, for first of all God has forbidden it. "Fear not them which kill the body" (Matthew 10:28); "Who art thou, that thou shouldest be afraid of a man that shall die" (Isaiah 51:12). Secondly, it is the greatest act of contempt toward God if He must yield to man for you. It is idolatry and a sin of the heathen. "Who ... worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator" (Romans 1:25). Thirdly, it is a denial of the providence of God -- as if God did not reign; as if the creature could function independently. Fourthly, it affects and troubles you continually. Fifthly, it causes you to fall from one sin into the next, and you ought therefore to be ashamed of your previous fear of man. Be warned and give heed to the exhortation of the Lord: "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of" (Isaiah 2:22). Follow David in his noble courage. "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me" (Psalms 118:6).

Incentives for the Fear of God

It is not sufficient to be on guard against the sins which are contrary to the fear of God; rather, it is our great duty to conquer them all by the fear of God. The livelier the fear of God is, the less sin will have any effect. Therefore in the future commit yourself fully to tenderly fear the Lord your God in order that the fear of God may guard you and direct your thoughts, words, and deeds. Oh, if only I could make you more lively in this! Give careful attention to the following incentives; may you be tender and pliable.

First, does not God have all the perfections within Himself which are able to engender reverence? He is majestic, glorious, omnipotent, holy, good, and awe-inspiring; that is His nature. How can anyone therefore be in the presence of God without fear and reverence? Consider what has been expressed in the Word of God: "Who is like unto Thee, O Lord, among the gods? who is like Thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders" (Exodus 15:11); "That thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE Lord THY GOD" (Deuteronomy 28:58); "For great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised: He also is to be feared above all gods" (1 Chronicles 16:25); "O Lord God of heaven, the great and terrible God" (Nehemiah 1:5). His wrath upon the sinner is dreadful. "Who knoweth the power of Thine anger? even according to Thy fear, so is Thy wrath" (Psalms 90:11). His goodness begets reverence in order that He may thus be feared in love. "But there is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared" (Psalms 130:4). Is it not proper, becoming, and requisite that you, having been created by God and having received grace from God, fear this majestic God and tremble before Him?

Secondly, the root of the matter is indeed in you. You desire it and you cannot hear the fear of God mentioned, or your heart is inclined to it and your desires are stirred up. Why would you subdue this desire? All that has a principle of life is desirous for growth and perfection -- which is thus also true for you in this respect. It is indeed natural if a servant fears his master and a child his father. You have chosen the Lord to be your Lord, and has not He given you the Spirit of the adoption of children and set you among the children? Have you not entered into covenant with Him that He would be a God unto you and that you would be the recipient of His favor? This must stir you up to fear your Lord and your Father. "If then I be a Father, where is Mine honour? and if I be a Master, where is My fear" (Malachi 1:6). Acknowledge this relationship and it will beget filial fear in you.

Thirdly, the fear of God is the fountain of all the holiness which delights you. Sinful lusts will lose their potency, corruptions which surface will readily be subdued, you will be stopped in the middle of sinning, and you will find yourself inclined toward the practice of all manner of virtues. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Proverbs 9:10); "The fear of the Lord is the instruction of wisdom" (Proverbs 15:33); "The fear of the Lord is clean" (Psalms 19:9); "The fear of the Lord tendeth to life: " (Proverbs 19:23); "... perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Corinthians 7:1).

Fourthly, the Lord has pleasure in those that fear Him. It ought to be a very precious matter to us that God is pleased with us. It ought to be our great desire and earnest endeavor to be pleasing to the Lord. God is, however, pleased with the fear of God, for therein the acknowledgement and the glorification of His perfections coalesce. "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear Him" (Psalms 147:11). How lovely it is when man delights himself in God and when God finds pleasure in man!

Blessings Promised to Those Who Fear God

Fifthly, although love for our own well-being is not the basis for the fear of God, we nevertheless may and must be stirred up by it. It is noteworthy that so many blessings are expressed and so many benefits are promised to the godly. Consider the temporal benefits.

(1) There is satisfaction: "Better is little with the fear of the Lord than great treasure" (Proverbs 15:16).

(2) There is sufficient daily supply: "There is no want to them that fear Him" (Psalms 34:9); "Behold the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear Him, to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine" (Psalms 33:18-19); "He hath given meat unto them that fear Him" (Psalms 111:5).

(3) There is sacred protection: "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him" (Psalms 34:7).

(4) There is abundance: "By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honour, and life" (Proverbs 22:4).

(5) There is all salvation: "Surely His salvation is nigh them that fear Him" (Psalms 85:9).

Consider the promises relative to the soul.

(1) There is the revelation of heavenly mysteries: "What man is he that feareth the Lord? him shall He teach in the way that He shall choose. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him; and He will show them His covenant" (Psalms 25:12;Psalms 25:14).

(2) There is divine compassion: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear Him" (Psalms 103:13;Psalms 103:17).

(3) There is the answering of prayers: "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear Him: He also will hear their cry, and will save them" (Psalms 145:19).

(4) Let me thus bring it all to a conclusion: "Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord" (Psalms 112:1); "Surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God" (Ecclesiastes 8:12); "Oh how great is Thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee!" (Psalms 31:19). If it pleases the Lord to stir you up by so many benefits and promises, it ought to please you to be stirred up by them. Being desirous for the promises, you must seek their fulfillment in the way whereby the Lord wishes to do so, for the fear of the Lord is so desirable in and of itself. Be therefore resolved to do so and make it your great endeavor; you will learn from being thus engaged. And since we are too corrupt, turn therefore to the Lord, praying, "Unite my heart to fear Thy name" (Psalms 86:11). Make yourself familiar with the Word of God; it is a means whereby you may fear the Lord. "He shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the Lord his God" (Deuteronomy 17:19). May the Lord bless these words. "Fear God, and give glory to Him" (Revelation 14:7). Amen.

1 The sentence which follows here in the Dutch version is only applicable to the Dutch language and has therefore not been translated. This Dutch sentence reads as follows: Wij noemen vrezen ook vruchten, afkomstig van het Hoogduitsch; op zich zelf wordt het nu zelden gebruikt, maar wel in samenvoeging in het woord godvruchtig, 't welk hetzelfde is als godvreezend.

2 Wherever the word "devout" is used in the KJV, the Statenvertaling uses either the word "godvreezend" or "godvruchtig." Both words would be translated as "god-fearing."

065. Chapter 60: Obedience Toward God

----- CHAPTER SIXTY ----- Obedience Toward God The word obedience is a derivative from a word which means "to hear" -- which is also true in the Greek and Hebrew languages. "To hear" frequently means "to obey," "to listen to a voice," "to be pleased with a command and to execute it."

Obedience is the willing subjection of God's child to God, as Lord and Father in Christ, in order to comply with His commands. The Object and Subjects of Obedience The object is God. All that obligates us to obedience and all that can incite us thereto is to be found in God. He is the First, and the One who alone is majestic, glorious, and holy. He is the Creator from whom man originates and through whom he exists in his motions. He is the One who is worthy to be obeyed and the only lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy. Every man is obligated toward obedience by virtue of the nature of God and of his own position relative to Him. That obligation is upon everyone and is acknowledged and subscribed to by everyone -- even by the heathen. God requires it from His people in Scripture. This is not so because God has need to be served by man's hands, but because He is worthy, human nature mandates it, and it constitutes the well-being and felicity of man. It is a manifestation of God's goodness that He wills something in reference to man, issues him a command, and wishes man to do something toward Him. On the other hand, if God reveals Himself to man and causes him to behold His perfections, man cannot but subject himself to God with delight. Man needs no other reason nor any other incentive for obedience except that God is God. God is to be viewed here both as Lord and as Father in Christ. As Lord, as possessor, and as the most eminent One, He was the object of Adam's obedience prior to the fall. After the fall, however, God is to be viewed not only as Lord to His people -- that is, Jehovah who is, who was, and who shall be -- but also as their Father in Christ, so that both reverence unto God as Lord and love to Him as Father coalesce. "Obey the voice of the Lord your God" (Jeremiah 26:13). The subjects are the children of God. Christ is involved in every aspect of the covenant of grace; hence everything must transpire by faith in Christ. God does not want to be served by His enemies -- even if it were in a manner becoming to Him. In order to serve God there must first be reconciliation, which alone is accomplished through Christ and applied by faith. That faith is active in serving God as a reconciled Father in filial love. The law is not a burden to God's children but a delight; it is not a condition of the covenant of works, but a loving rule to prevent error. The partakers of the covenant are here not to be viewed as slaves who, for fear of being beaten, are compelled to work, but as children whose delight it is to obey their Father. The unconverted do not know God in that relationship, and even if they do something which God commands, they do not do so in the manner enjoined and with the required objective. Furthermore, they have no desire to obey God; they are neither willing, nor do they engage themselves to do so. God reveals Himself to His children, however, as the One who is worthy to be obeyed. He grants them faith to come to Him through Christ, as children to their father. He gives them both filial love toward as well as fear for Him, so that they only are the suitable subjects to render obedience to the Lord. This obedience is therefore referred to as the obedience of faith

(Romans 1:15), and believers are called obedient children (1 Peter 1:14). The Nature, Goal, and Manner of Obedience The nature of obedience consists in subjection to God. Man, by his very nature, has been placed in subjection to God. Adam acknowledged this subjection with delight and joyfully subjected himself to the Lord. However, after the fall man's nature is rebellious toward God. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be" (Romans 8:7). However, the man who has been born again and has received a new nature, does not only know and acknowledge the fact that he is naturally subject to God, but he willingly subjects himself to God, renders himself available to Him for service, and says with David, "O Lord, truly I am Thy servant; I am Thy servant" (Psalms 116:16). He surrenders himself with his entire heart. "But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you" (Romans 6:17). This subjection consists:

(1) In an actual knowledge of, and being exercised with, the majesty and other perfections of God which are worthy of the rendering of obedience. The obedient person reflects upon them and continues to focus upon them with his thoughts. He thus acknowledges that God is truly worthy to be obeyed by all creatures.

(2) In delight and joy that God is worthy of all service and obedience. He cannot get enough of observing, acquiescing in, or rejoicing in this.

(3) In acknowledging the relationship in which all men are toward God as Creator and creature respectively, who in every respect -- without exception -- are dependent upon God. As far as the believer himself is concerned, he not only acknowledges the obligation which devolves upon him as creature, but he also views himself as being in a Father/child relationship in Christ. He thus lovingly perceives how becoming it is to obey this majestic Lord and benevolent Father, so that his affections are ardently inclined toward obedience.

(4) In an actual subjection, surrender, and offering of oneself to the service of the Lord. This is not an activity which subsides, but this act is repeated time and again, and is renewed on every occasion. He thus acquires a propensity and a submissive disposition, from which all actions proceed time and again -- and thus "his deeds ... are wrought in God" (John 3:21). The goal of submission is the carrying out of the Lord's command. This sovereign Lord and Father in Christ also exercises chastisements toward His children which are distasteful to nature and are unpleasant when they are being inflicted. A child of God must not respond rebelliously to this; he must neither be sorrowful, murmur, stubbornly resist and harden himself against this, nor avoid the cross, and go astray by sinning. Rather, also in this respect he must have a pliable, submissive, and obedient heart, saying, "I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against Him" (Micah 7:9). We shall discuss this under the subject of patience; here our focus is upon submission in doing His will. The Lord is also King, the Lord is lawgiver, and the Lord makes His will known to His children. He teaches them His precepts, all of which are included in the ten commandments. It is His will that they walk according to this rule, without either deleting or adding something. These commandments contain all matters which are either to be performed or abstained from, the manner in which all these are to be adhered to, and the goal which is both the motive and the objective for the performance of or the abstinence from everything. There is no room here for human institutions or personal opinions. The obedient person commits Himself to the performance of these commandments. It is not sufficient for him to have an internal love and desire for this, but he also wants to perform them as commandments of the Lord, and because they are His commandments. "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee. Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever. I have inclined mine heart to perform Thy statutes alway. O that my ways were directed to keep Thy statutes! ... Teach me Thy statutes, etc" (Psalms 119:11;Psalms 119:111-112;Psalms 119:5;Psalms 119:26). The manner of obedience consists in willingness; obedience is a willing subjection. It neither grieves the obedient person nor is it a grievous burden to him that he is subject to God even in a natural sense. He would never desire not to be subject to God -- yes, even if he were free and it were his choice whether to be subject and obedient to God, he would out of love subject Himself and fully surrender himself to God in order to be obedient to the Lord in all things. He therefore willingly embraces his subjection and is determined to obey the Lord on a completely volitional basis. "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land" (Isaiah 1:19). This willing disposition consists in

(1) A ready willingness of the heart. "My heart is fixed, [Note: The Statenvertaling reads as follows: "Mijn hart is bereid," that is, "My heart is ready."] O God, my heart is fixed"¹⁵ (Psalms 57:7); "So, as much as in me is, I am ready" (Romans 1:15).

(2) An offering of oneself for this work. "Amasiah the son of Zichri, who willingly offered himself unto the Lord" (2 Chronicles 17:16); "Here am I; send me" (Isaiah 6:8).

(3) An asking for counsel if something needs to be done. "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do" (Acts 9:6).

(4) A listening for an answer: "that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Romans 12:2); "I will hear what God the Lord will speak" (Psalms 85:8).

(5) The desire and the intent to do whatever is according to the Lord's wishes and is pleasing to Him. "Wherefore we labour, that we may be accepted of Him" (2 Corinthians 5:9).

(6) Immediately engaging in the duty which one knows that God presently commands. "I made haste, and delayed not to keep Thy commandments" (Psalms 119:60).

(7) Finding delight in and loving this duty. "Make me to go in the path of Thy commandments; for therein do I delight" (Psalms 119:35); "Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in His commandments" (Psalms 112:1).

(8) Doing the work joyously. "I have rejoiced in the way of Thy testimonies, as much as in all riches. Thy statutes have been my songs ... for they are the rejoicing of my heart" (Psalms 119:14;Psalms 119:54;Psalms 119:111).

(9) The zeal and ardor with which the duty is performed. "Who maketh his angels spirits; his ministers a flaming fire" (Psalms 104:4); "(Be) fervent in spirit; serving the Lord" (Romans 12:11).

(10) The fearless performance of the duty; that is, fearing neither the loss of honor, goods, relatives, nor life. "And many of the brethren ... speak the word without fear" (Php 1:14); "For I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 21:13).

(11) Being courageous and bold in the performance of the duty. "For the Lord of hosts ... hath made them as His goodly horse in the battle. And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, because the Lord is with them, and the riders on horses shall be confounded" (Zechariah 10:3; Zechariah 10:5).

(12) The steadfastness, determination, and commitment with which the work is performed. "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" (1 Corinthians 15:58). A Convicting Question: are We Obedient Toward God?

We have thus held before you the nature of obedience. The truth is as a clear mirror to you, revealing whether you are obedient unto God. It is not necessary to prove to you that this is your duty. Man's nature teaches this sufficiently, the heathen will convince you, and God requires it in Scripture. "Now therefore, if ye will obey My voice indeed, and keep My covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me" (Exodus 19:5); "Only rebel not ye against the Lord" (Numbers 14:9); "Thou shalt therefore obey the voice of the Lord thy God, and do His commandments and His statutes, which I command thee this day" (Deuteronomy 27:10). Conclude this to be so and set yourself to it, saying, "I am under obligation and must be obedient to God." Then ask yourself, "Am I already obedient?" You will be able to answer yourself by reason of what has been said about the nature of obedience. An unconverted person is not obedient to God. He is also not capable of this for he does not know God, does not come unto God by faith, and his conduct is not motivated by obedience. Therefore, examine yourself attentively. Do you submit yourself to the Lord? Are you acquainted with the Lord's majesty and His worthiness to be obeyed? Do you know of conscious transactions with Christ as Surety and Mediator, thus to be reconciled with God by His suffering and death, and as a child to serve Him as a Father in filial love? Do you render yourself available to the Lord's service in all things -- doing so with a heartfelt willingness? And how do you fare relative to the performance of your duty? Is there consistency, tender carefulness, and zeal? Does all this manifest itself? If you wish to deal uprightly with yourself, you will perceive whether there is true obedience to be found with you. A Reprimand for the Disobedient

Give ear, all you who are disobedient; I will declare the word of the Lord to you. In order to do this more effectively, it is needful for me to first show who the disobedient are, since there is great diversity among them.

First, all of you who do not manifest the nature of obedience as delineated above, all your deeds, however good you may esteem them to be, are but apples of Sodom and grapes of Gomorrah. They are but splendid sins which have an appearance of being good -- however, not in truth.

Secondly, there are those who do not even want to hear the voice of the Lord. "Therefore they say unto God (if not in words, then with the heart and in deeds), Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of Thy ways. What is the Almighty, that we should serve Him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto Him" (Job 21:14-15).

Thirdly, there are those who, while hearing, are not willing to be obedient. "And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as My people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them" (Ezekiel 33:31).

Fourthly, there are those who have intentions and make promises; however, it comes no further than this and nothing comes of it. "Master, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest" (Matthew 8:19); "He answered and said, I go, sir: and went not" (Matthew 21:30).

Fifthly, there are those who do something, but only as far as it is consistent with their interests -- no more than that. "When he (Herod) heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly" (Mark 6:20). Saul said, "I have performed the commandment of the Lord" (1 Samuel 15:13), but in the meantime he had destroyed that which was despicable and had kept the best for himself, the pretense being that he was going to sacrifice it to the Lord.

Sixthly, there are those who only comply in an external sense and make much ado about this. Such compliance, however, is void of internal obedience and faith in Christ. They intend to get to heaven by reason of that activity, and are as the Pharisees who cleanse the external, but allow the internal to remain unclean (Matthew 23:27). They are like graves which appear beautiful from the outside, but within are filled with stench and dead bones (Matthew 23:27).

Seventhly, there are those who reject obedience, are recalcitrant, rebel, and indulge in sin -- be it in secret or in open manifestation of ungodliness. "Let us break Their bands asunder, and cast away Their cords from us" (Psalms 2:3); "Ye have been rebellious against the Lord from the day that I knew you" (Deuteronomy 9:24); "For he stretcheth out his hand against God, and strengtheneth himself against the Almighty. He runneth upon Him, even on His neck, upon the thick bosses of His bucklers" (Job 15:25-26).

Eighthly, there are those who are obedient to the devil, the world, and their own lusts. Whatever the devil wills, they do willingly. "And that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will" (2 Timothy 2:26). Whatever the world dictates, they desire likewise. If the world dictates that one adhere to such and such a fashion, they comply immediately. If the world dictates that one use vain language, dance, gamble, and fornicate together with her, they willingly participate. If they are able to gain someone's favor, no sin is too gross. They fear nothing, except that the world were not to acknowledge them as belonging to her, were to despise them, and perceive them as one of those strict ones. "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God" (James 4:4). They yield, with delight and with all their heart, to whatever lust arises, and they are thus the servants of sin (Romans 6:17). "(They) do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness" (Romans 2:8).

I address the Word of the Lord to you and declare to you your abominable condition as well as the dreadful judgments which will come upon you. May it be a means to your conversion.

First, it is a most abominable condition, for it is a departing from God, a separating yourself from God, and an ignoring of God. Shall a creature, a worm of the dust, and one who is dependent in all things depart from God, the living God, the Fountain of Life, his Maker -- that God who is majestic, all-glorious, and most worthy of obedience? Shall he divorce himself from God and reject Him? Yes, disobedience is recalcitrance, rebellion, opposition to God, striving with God, and whatever else one can denominate as evil. "For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry" (1 Samuel 15:23). It is not a being disobedient to parents, a rebelling against authorities, and a transient sinful deed, but it is a disobedient disposition of the heart -- a heart which is averse, resistant, and recalcitrant. If you could observe this disobedience in its true nature, you would be frightened of yourself. Scripture calls such a heart an evil heart, and such persons are regarded as abominable and unto every good work reprobate. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God" (Hebrews 3:12); "... being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate" (Titus 1:16). Oh, that this would sink into your heart!

Secondly, consider furthermore that you are in a condition in which you cannot perform any religious duties. Whatever you do, even your prayer, is an abomination before God. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination" (Proverbs 28:9); "Ah sinful nation ... they have forsaken the Lord. ... When ye come to appear before Me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread My courts ... your appointed feasts My soul hateth: they are a trouble unto Me; I am weary to bear them. And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide Mine eyes from you" (Isaiah 1:4; Isaiah 1:12; Isaiah 1:14-15). Prayer is the refuge of the destitute; however, your prayer is an abomination. Woe unto you, Oh wretched man!

Thirdly, since you are disobedient toward God, depart from, and are rebellious against Him, God has also departed from you and is therefore also your enemy. You thus belong to the devil. "If ye forsake Him, He will forsake you" (2 Chronicles 15:2); "With the froward Thou wilt show Thyself froward" (Psalms 18:26); "... the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Ephesians 2:2). Yes, by reason of this disobedience you are, so to speak, trapped in a prison. You cannot escape it, you are given over to it, and you cannot but be disobedient. "For God hath concluded them all in unbelief" (Romans 11:32). You even stumble over Him in whom alone there is salvation, namely Christ. "... unto them which be disobedient, ... a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence" (1 Peter 2:7-8).

Fourthly, furthermore, take to heart the judgments of God which will come upon you. If you could but perceive what they were, your hair would stand up straight in terror. This God whom you disobey is stronger than you are. As great as His goodness is to the obedient, so great is His hatred and anger against the disobedient. Where will you flee when He will avenge Himself upon you? "The Lord will take vengeance on His adversaries, and He reserveth wrath for His enemies. The Lord hath His way in the whirlwind and in the storm" (Nahum 1:2-3); "Thy children have forsaken Me, and sworn by them that are no gods: Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not My soul be avenged on such a nation as this" (Jeremiah 5:7; Jeremiah 5:9). Do not imagine to possess either grace or salvation as long as your heart remains in the state of disobedience, for there is neither grace nor salvation for you. Nothing but wrath, curse, and condemnation is reserved for you. Hear and tremble about the declarations which are made toward you. "But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth ... indignation and wrath" (Romans 2:8). "Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience" (Ephesians 5:6); "Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant" (Jeremiah 11:3). For the disobedient, nothing remains but eternal destruction. That will be their end, as it was the end of the disobedient first world (1 Peter 3:20). Know therefore and consider that it is an evil and bitter thing for you to have forsaken the Lord your God -- and if the becoming nature of obedience and the majestic glory of God cannot move you to obedience, then permit the fear for God's wrath and judgments to do so. A Reprimand for God's Children

I will now turn to God's children to whom the Lord has given an obedient heart. They have the old nature still within them, however, and thus also a principle of disobedience. This frequently exhibits itself strongly and manifests itself in many deeds through negligence; that is, neither giving heed to God as Lord nor to God's command given to them. The Word goes past them and is forgotten; they transgress without noticing it. There can be carelessness, as if they were not surrounded by enemies, and before knowing it, they are caught in a snare. If obedience would have more of an effect, they would neither be so careless nor proceed so thoughtlessly. There can be a resistance toward obedience. At times disobedience manifests itself in a more powerful and sinful manner. The desire to commit a sin can at times be so strong that the sin breaks through, even when the obedient heart manifests itself, and, while not striving much against it due to weakness, it nevertheless groans under it. It can even go so far that for a long time a believer goes about with a disturbed heart, and cannot come to a lively, earnest, and perfect intention and determination to fully and permanently abstain from that sin. Sometimes it even goes further, so that the will, for a time, seems to dominate. It is as if he is not willing to come to such a resolution. Upon engaging in prayer the sin can become so lively that the conscience says, "Now you ought to make a complete resolution before the Lord." The will is silent, and one can even come so far that it is as if he is not willing to pray for strength against this sin and for a complete determination and intention to abstain from it. This is due to the lust being so strong and spiritual life being in a stupor. If he progresses to the point that the entire will has been won over and that he comes to full resolution, praying with the entire heart for strength, then he will yet be unstable, since sin has retained too much of its strength. Not long thereafter he will again fall into the same sin. This is a very dismal condition, and it reveals that our old nature yet remains inclined toward disobedience. Believers ought to acknowledge, mourn over, and confess their disobedience, and, time and again, restore themselves by faith in Christ. On the other hand, however, they ought to be on guard against unbelief and the rejection of their state, as if they, as others, were entirely concluded under disobedience. They can perceive from that mentioned above that it is in truth with them and that they have an obedient heart. This is manifested by the many motions and deeds of obedience which it brings forth -- by the fact that there is a hatred for and displeasure toward the disobedience of the flesh, and that the regenerated man within strives against, groans under, and prays against it.

Engage in all earnest therefore in this battle, for you know:

(1) That the devil, the world, and the flesh are masters which are too despicable than that you, who are of divine origin, are partakers of the divine nature, and are gifted with a princely spirit, should subject yourself in obedience to those foul, despicable, and hateful monstrosities.

(2) That they are hard and cruel taskmasters who never say, "It is enough." They always demand more. Whether you are weary or no longer find delight in it, you have to yield again when the opportunity is there. They will give you no time to calm down, to think about God and His sweet service, and to be obedient to the Lord in any matter. Rather, they want your entire heart, all the members of your body, and all your time -- and even then they are not satisfied.

(3) How detrimental it is for you to be obedient to them! This yields nothing but a restless heart, an anxious conscience, bondage, terror, and fear. It makes life too fearful for you and death too dreadful. "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed" (Romans 6:21); "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness" (Ephesians 5:11). An Exhortation to Obedience

Find delight in obeying the Lord. In order to stimulate you to do so, consider thus the preciousness of obedience from every perspective.

First, look unto the Lord. By virtue of being God, He is indeed worthy of all obedience. You acknowledge this with delight, and you have frequently wished with your whole heart that all that exists in both heaven and earth would be subjected to the Lord in obedience. It has indeed grieved you when you observed that God was not obeyed by men. Shall you then not render obedience to this great God, saying, "Behold, here I am. What wilt Thou have me to do?" Furthermore, "Is not He thy Father that hath bought thee? hath He not made thee, and established thee" (Deuteronomy 32:6). When you did not exist, He created you and made you to be a man. He has given you food and clothing until now, and by His oversight has preserved your breath. He has granted you His own Son, drawn you with lovingkindness, placed you among His children, and chosen you to be His heir. Shall not all this obligate you to obey Him as Lord and as Father, and cause you to say, "Surely, I am Thy servant, surely I am Thy servant"?

Secondly, obedience is a very sweet work. The Lord does not impose a hard service upon His children, nor does He cause them to serve Him with hardness. "His commandments are not grievous" (1 John 5:3); "For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light" (Matthew 11:30); "Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good" (Romans 7:22); "Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee; in whose heart are the ways of them" (Psalms 84:5). They are smooth and delightful ways. "Great peace have they which love Thy law: and nothing shall offend them" (Psalms 119:165); "It is joy to the just to do judgment" (Proverbs 21:15). Your own heart chooses this way, and you yourself find delight in it. What Paul says of himself, you say likewise: "For I delight in the law of God after the inward man" (Romans 7:22). Therefore lift up your heart in the ways of the Lord, embrace the will of God, and incline it toward obedience, for "her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace" (Proverbs 3:23); "Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble" (Proverbs 3:23).

Thirdly, the Lord is extraordinarily pleased with an obedient heart, and with the deeds proceeding from such a heart. Even if they are imperfect, in Christ He will overlook the deficiency. David was a man after the Lord's heart by reason of having such an obedient heart. He stumbled many times -- yes, even fell deeply -- and yet the Lord says concerning him, "Because David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from anything that He commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite" (1 Kings 15:5). No work -- however holy it may be in and of itself -- can please God if it does not proceed from an obedient heart; God demands the heart. Yes, even we demand the heart of those who serve us; only then do we delight in their service. If there is an obedient heart, God will then be pleased with our work. "To obey is better than sacrifice" (1 Samuel 15:22). God delights in sacrifice, for it is written concerning Noah's sacrifice, "And the Lord smelled a sweet savour" (Genesis 8:21). If, however, we place sacrifice and obedience side by side, then God is more pleased with obedience. A righteous child delights to please his father, and thus it is also with you: delight yourself in rendering to the Lord a service pleasing to Him. You will do so in the way of obedience. Shall the Lord fulfill your desire (Psalms 145:19), and should you then not fulfil His desire?

Fourthly, it is, furthermore, not in vain to serve the Lord. Let that be the opinion of the ungodly who obey God in an external sense to obtain temporal blessings. If they do not obtain them, then with sorrow they leave the service of the Lord. Upright ones, you know, however, that the Lord is a good and benevolent God who richly rewards His faithful servants. "I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye Me in vain" (Isaiah 45:19); "Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on Mine altar for nought" (Malachi 1:10). God promises all manner of temporal blessings to the obedient: "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land" (Isaiah 1:19). Yes, obedience has the promise of salvation in Christ. "And being made perfect, He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him" (Hebrews 5:9). Even though the benefits are not the basis for obedience, we must nevertheless be stimulated by them. Moses "had respect unto the recompence of the reward" (Hebrews 11:26).

Fifthly, the examples of others are suitable to stir us up; therefore take note of the examples of the obedient. The Lord Jesus is the most perfect example of obedience. He has left us an example, so that we would walk in His footsteps. He, the servant of the Lord, "humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross" (Php 2:8). The holy angels are obedient servants of the Lord. "Bless the Lord, ye His angels, that excel in strength, that do His commandments, hearkening unto the voice of His word" (Psalms 103:20). The saints upon earth are examples for us; obedience was their delight and activity. Noah was obedient to the Lord in all things. Even though the entire world mocked him when building the ark, he heeded the Lord's command. Abraham -- the father of the faithful, whose footsteps we must follow -- how obedient he was! He did all that God said and went wherever God sent Him. He obeyed blindly and left everything, went out not knowing whither he went, and did not spare his son. Moses is generally denominated as the servant of God. "My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all Mine house" (Numbers 12:7). The measure of David's obedience toward the Lord is abundantly conveyed by the history of his life recorded in the books of Samuel and in his Psalms -- particularly Psalms 119:1-176. If mention is made of a godly person elsewhere in the Word, you will at once observe his obedience. Focus upon the godly, be desirous to walk in obedience as they did, and together with them you will glorify God in your life and be glorified of God -- both here and in eternity. May the Lord incline your heart toward His precepts, so that you may serve Him with a willing soul. I conclude with David's exhortation to his son Solomon, "And thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve Him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind" (1 Chronicles 28:9).

066. Chapter 61: Hope in God

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-ONE -----

Hope in God

God gives His children great and glorious promises, but He does not always fulfil them immediately. He postpones at times the fulfillment and occasionally allows many difficulties to come between in order to test their faith. Nevertheless, to be able to proceed courageously, hope is needed, and this we shall now discuss. Hope is expressed in Hebrew by the words: tikvah, tocheleth, sebber, all of which mean "expectation," and are translated by the word "hope." There is also kislah, kesel because the foolish world hopes without foundation, and ridicules the expectation of the godly. Furthermore, there is bittachōn, which is expressive of trust without fear. In Greek the word is elpis which signifies: to build upon faith, to be free of anxiety, to anticipate with certainty. Occasionally it signifies the matter hoped for; here it signifies the motion of the heart.

Hope is a propensity infused by God into the hearts of believers by means of the Word, whereby they patiently, actively, and with assurance anticipate future promised benefits.

Hope is a propensity. Propensities are generally distinguished as being either acquired or infused. Acquired propensities complement either the intellect, the will, or actions, thus enabling one to engage in artistic activity. These skills are acquired by way of much exercise. The infused propensities are faith, hope, love, etc. Man, due to his blindness, evil disposition, and impotence, cannot acquire these by his own activity; rather, they are infused into the soul by God. Having been infused, they, by the cooperation of the Holy Spirit, are improved by way of many exercises. God does not infuse them repeatedly with every act, implying that man would time and again be destitute. Rather, when God makes the soul spiritually alive, He gives her a virtuous disposition and the competence to be spiritually active. By reason of this competence the regenerated man, by the coinciding operation of the Holy Spirit who must continually influence him, brings forth various virtues. Such is also true for hope, for it is not a transitory act, but rather a propensity -- a disposition of spiritual competence from which deeds proceed. The Nature of Hope The nature of hope consists in a sure expectation. Hope is not the equivalent of possession; whatever one possesses, one cannot hope for. "Hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for" (Romans 8:25). Hope expects and anticipates that which has not been observed as yet, is not yet present, but which is yet to come. "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it" (Romans 8:25). The apostle therefore conjoins expecting and hoping -- the latter explaining the former. "According to my earnest expectation and my hope ..." (Php 1:20).

Hope is a sure expectation. It is not a wish such as, "I wish I had this and that" -- as Baalam said, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!" (Numbers 23:10). Such is the hope of the unconverted. They are neither partakers of the promise nor of the matter, and yet they say, "I hope to be saved." Thus, their hope is but a wish which shall come to naught. "When a wicked man dieth, his expectation shall perish: and the hope of unjust men perisheth" (Proverbs 11:7). It also does not consist in doubting and vacillating between hope and fear, issuing forth from whether it is probable that the desired matter be attained. This vacillation does not constitute hope; instead, there is certainty in hope. I repeat, there is certainty in hope, but not in the ones who exercise hope, for everything is imperfect in believers. As far as hope in man is concerned, there can be no complete certainty, since man can be or become untruthful, changeable, and impotent. This cannot be applicable, however, to hope in God, since He is true, immutable, and omnipotent. If He promises something absolutely, has no condition contingent upon man, there can be no doubt in hope. However, when it comes to faith, those who exercise hope are weak in all respects. Therefore, there is also weakness in hope, as is to be observed in the disciples who travelled to Emmaus. "But we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done" (Luke 24:21). This does not, however, remove the certainty in hope, and a believer is obligated to strive for the full assurance of hope. "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast" (Hebrews 6:19); "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith" (Hebrews 10:22); "Hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ" (1 Peter 1:13). Hope is thus a sure expectation. The object of hope consists in the promised or future benefits. God Himself is the supreme good and the complete felicity of man. In the covenant, God promises Himself to believers and God is thus the object of hope. God is, however, also the Promiser and Giver of all salvation to His children, and He is thus once more the object of hope. Those who exercise hope look to Him, expect from Him, and rest in Him as the One who is good, true, immutable, and omnipotent. "Hope thou in God" (Psalms 42:5); "And have hope toward God" (Acts 24:15). He is therefore called "the hope of Israel" (Jeremiah 14:8). "For Thou art my hope, O Lord God" (Psalms 71:5). Hope expects benefits from God. These benefits are either temporal, spiritual, or eternal in nature. Hope is also exercised relative to temporal benefits, for God has also promised temporal benefits -- this referring in a general sense to all that they stand in need of to serve Him according to His purpose in this life. "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Hebrews 13:5); "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Corinthians 10:13). A believer may and must take hold of this promise, let go of all fear, and expect its fulfillment with certainty.

Question Man comes into many situations in which his temporal welfare is contingent upon the outcome of such situations. This engenders a desire that he may succeed according to his objective, as well as a fear for an evil outcome. How must he conduct himself as far as hope is concerned?

Answer: Both the desire and the fear are natural; he must not suppress them, but rather sanctify them. He must hope in God's general promise of help and care, securely and quietly rely upon this, and expect its fulfillment with certainty. If he intends to involve himself in a matter which is pleasing to God, and he deals with it in a manner enjoined by God, he will thus have freedom to ask God for a good result and make his desire known to God by prayer and supplication. In the use of the means there will be a lively sense of dependence upon God and an encouragement regarding the outcome, leaning toward that which is desired. This is particularly true if God gives him a special measure of freedom in believing and earnestness in prayer -- and if, while trusting in and enjoying the nearness of God, he may use the means in the strength of God. This also occurs if God manifests Himself in an extraordinary manner and gives him a strong confidence that the matter will have such a desired outcome. I repeat, this is so when God does this, rather than he himself; that is, by being encouraged by either the probable outcome, or by the grace enabling him to pray and to be dependent upon God. It is then that the matter could miscarry. Since, however, we do not have specific promises for specific temporal circumstances, we can also not expect to have a certain expectation that, apart from an extraordinary revelation of God, this specific matter will have the outcome aimed for and desired. We can, however, be sure of this: Regardless of what the outcome may be, it will be blessed and be to our best advantage. If it turns out according to our desire, it will be a blessing. If it turns out differently, it will be much more advantageous and blessed than if our objective had been achieved. For, relative to God's children, all things must work together for good (Romans 8:28). We must see to it that we are not bent on having our way -- as if we could not be blessed unless we would receive precisely that matter. We must be active to deny our own desire, to acquiesce in the wisdom and goodness of God, and to be satisfied with and delight in the general promises of God: He careth for thee; He will make it well; He will not forsake you. If God acts according to our wishes, this will cause joyous gratitude; if not, we must be satisfied with the will of God, learn to esteem that which is of the world as being of no value, and learn to live out of the hand of God. Be therefore on guard against unbelief and fretfulness. This is how we are to conduct ourselves in poverty, persecution, and other prosperities or adversities. The exercise of hope also pertains to spiritual benefits. Sometimes a believer experiences spiritual desertion, darkness, and strife, or is in bondage to a corrupt inclination. At other times he has a strong desire for the assurance of his salvation, for extraordinary comfort, or for sanctification (be it in a general sense or relative to a specific virtue). Here he must conduct himself in like manner as with temporal circumstances (which have just been dealt with). Also here general promises are applicable. "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God" (Psalms 92:13); "Being confident of this very thing, that He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ" (Php 1:6); "If ye shall ask any thing in My Name, I will do it" (John 14:14). In response to this general promise the believer must also entertain a general hope and assuredly expect its fulfillment. Since, however, the Lord has promised neither the time, measure, nor manner of fulfillment, a believer cannot entertain a specific and certain expectation about this. The general promise is sufficient for him to heighten his desire, to stir him up to prayer, to strive sufficiently (doing so with the hope and certain expectation that the Lord will hear and give), and that the Lord will preserve his faith, sanctify him, and guide him with His counsel. He must deny himself as to the measure of its fulfillment. The Objects of Hope

Hope has as one of its objects eternal felicity. Hope is a "hope of salvation" (1 Thessalonians 5:8); "The hope which is laid up for you in heaven" (Colossians 1:5); "... hope of the glory of God" (Romans 5:2); and the hope of eternal life (Titus 1:2). All that is of this world is transitory and to be esteemed of little value, but that which is eternal is everything. If eternity weighs down upon the heart, and man considers himself as having to depart from here either into glory or eternally to be in a place of horror, he will shake and tremble. He cannot be at peace unless he is assured of his eternal felicity. God promises this to believers and they must hold this before them as the goal to be attained, and therefore strive and reach out for it. Since God promises salvation, they must hope for, anticipate, and expect it with assurance. That will engender comfort and a zeal for godliness.

Hope focuses upon promised benefits. Where there is no promise there can also be no hope; and if there are promises, there can likewise be no hope unless these promises have been made unto us. Only believers are heirs of the promise and therefore they alone are able to hope. When Scripture therefore speaks of hope, it simultaneously speaks of promises, and is thus called "the hope of the promise" (Acts 26:6); "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began" (Titus 1:2). The heathen are therefore said to be without hope, due to being "strangers from the covenants of promise" (Ephesians 2:12).

Hope focuses upon future benefits. Faith and hope both ascertain the reality of a matter. Faith focuses upon future benefits as much as hope does. They differ, however, in that faith represents these future benefits as if they are a present reality. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Hebrews 11:1). Hope, however, postpones the matter and considers it as yet having to come to pass. "Not as though I had already attained ... but I follow after ... I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Php 3:12; Php 3:14). The person who exercises hope says, "It is true; I do not have it as yet, but I shall have it." He does not say, "Maybe," nor, "There is a good probability," but rather, "It is certain and infallibly true. It cannot miscarry; it is definite; I shall have it. I commit myself to this with such certainty as if I already had it. I adjust my conduct accordingly, for I am counting on it and I proceed in reliance upon this." So much about the object of hope. To the object of hope we join the subjects of hope -- who are the children of God. An unconverted person has no basis for hope, since there is no promise for him whatsoever. Furthermore, being dead, he can also not bring forth the deeds of life. To have hope is the privilege of God's children only. In regeneration they have received life and thus also the ability to exercise hope. "... which according to His abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope" (1 Peter 1:3). The promises are made to them only, and therefore they alone have a basis for hope. "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it by an oath: ... to lay hold upon the hope set before us" (Hebrews 6:17-18). Hope is therefore called "the hope of the righteous" (Proverbs 10:28; Galatians 5:5). They only hope, and they only are exhorted to hope. "I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait, and in His word do I hope. Let Israel hope in the Lord" (Psalms 130:5; Psalms 130:7). It is grievous that they who may and are able to hope do not more frequently engage therein. The Cause and Means of the Exercise of Hope The cause of the exercise of hope is God alone. God promises the matters: "And this is the promise that He hath promised us, even eternal life" (1 John 2:25). God gives the matter which is hoped for and has been promised: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing" (2 Timothy 4:8). God infuses into them the ability to hope and in actuality causes them to hope. "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost" (Romans 15:13); "God, even our Father, which ... hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace" (2 Thessalonians 2:16). The means is the Word. In the Word, God presents the matter in its beauty and preciousness. In the Word, He presents the Mediator by whom the promised matters have been merited, and by the Word God works faith in the Savior -- and by faith hope is wrought in us.

All blessings contained in the promises are founded upon and confirmed in Christ, who, by His blood, has removed the partition between God and man, and who, by His merits, has merited salvation for the elect. "For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen" (2 Corinthians 1:20). A believer, hoping upon the promise, focuses his eye upon the Lord Jesus in order to attain the fulfillment through Him. The Lord Jesus is therefore called "our hope," "... which is Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Colossians 1:27). And He is designated to be the object of our hope. "Remembering ... your ... patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thessalonians 1:3); "...Jesus Christ, which is our hope" (1 Timothy 1:1). No one becomes a partaker of Christ -- and thus also not of the benefits of the covenant -- except by faith. Faith, being exercised toward Christ by receiving Him and claiming Him as one's own, views the promised benefits as being his own. Thus, hope proceeds from faith, expecting the receipt of the benefits as being one's own, and that these benefits will be most certainly given to him at the appropriate time. In that respect faith is the foundation of hope. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Hebrews 11:1); "... with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope" (Romans 15:13).

Since the Word of God reveals Christ, is the means unto faith, and presents all the glorious benefits which are promised, the Word is the means unto hope. Hope is therefore called "the hope of the gospel" (Colossians 1:23). Observe this also in Psalms 119:49; Psalms 119:81 : "Remember the word unto Thy servant, upon which Thou hast caused me to hope. ... I hope in Thy word."

Patience: The Adjunct and Result of Hope

Hope has as its adjunct patience. There is much time, much cross-bearing, and much strife between promise and possession. Then hope comes and shows the glory of the benefits and the certainty of becoming a partaker of them. This is followed by patience, which supports hope so that it does not succumb due to tribulations, the latter being the way in which God leads to the possession of the promised matter. Since there is no other way, and since we must either let go of the benefits and forego them, or along with the end must simultaneously choose the way, hope becomes thereby a patient expectation. The believer commits himself to bearing it, wishes to bear it, and bears it willingly and with a quiet heart, for the glory and certainty of the benefits infinitely make up for this. The Lord Jesus has thus gone before, "who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame" (Hebrews 12:2). Therefore we also must "run with patience the race that is set before us" (Hebrews 12:1). The apostle therefore says in Romans 8:25, "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it," and he also speaks of a "patience of hope" (1 Thessalonians 1:3). The result of hope is holy industry. Hope neither causes us to be inactive nor will it tolerate occupation with other things; instead, it engenders holy industry to attain the end in the right way. The end in view causes us to be active and to take the means in hand. God, who has promised to give the end, leads His children to this end by means of holy industry. He causes them to forsake the world, focus upon heaven, and lay aside all burdens and the sins which so easily beset them. They thus courageously overcome all the obstacles that stand in the way and hinder them. He causes them to walk in the way of His commandments and to seek glory, honor, and immortality by persevering in well-doing. This is conveyed by the following exhortations: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate" (Luke 13:24); "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Corinthians 7:1). A Call to Serious Self-Examination

Having considered the nature of hope, you must now turn to yourself and observe whether this hope is to be found in you. You need no other mirror to be made acquainted with yourself than the truth itself. You will agree with me that the person for whom all hope of ever being saved is cut off is most wretched indeed.

Evasive Argument: I am not in that condition as yet; I still have a good hope of being saved.

Answer: It is indeed true that an unconverted person -- yes, even the most ungodly person -- is not yet cut off from the hope of being saved. This is not so because he can expect any salvation as long as he remains this way, but because he lives under the gospel ministry and does not know whether or not God will yet convert him at a given time. This is, however, not the matter which is currently under discussion. The question is: What do you say concerning yourself? Do you have reason to expect salvation, and do you exercise this hope in actuality? You, unconverted one, may perhaps say, "I know that I have a hope upon eternal life." I will ask a further question: "Is your hope a good hope? Is there a basis for your hope, and do you hope in truth? Is not your hope but an illusion? Is it more than the wish of a Balaam?" There is a hope which deceives and makes ashamed. Is it not then a matter of the utmost importance for you to search out carefully if your hope is also a true hope upon which salvation ensues, or whether it is nothing but deceit?

Evasive Argument: I am most satisfied with my hope; leave me alone. I will not allow my hope to be taken away. Answer: Good gold can endure examination and good work does not shun the light. If you do not want others to know what your condition is, endeavor nevertheless to ascertain it for yourself. To that end read what I have to say in quietness and solitude. If your hope is good, then I do not wish to take it away from you. If, however, it is a deceitful hope, it is time for you to awake while there is yet time. Answer for yourself the following questions:

First of all, are faith in Christ, reconciliation with God (and the sense of this), the despising of the world (and all that pertains to it), the denial of your own lusts, the love of God, a sanctified life, and felicity after this life your portion and are they precious to you? Are you acquainted with them, do you recognize yourself in them, do you long for them, is it your objective, and do you reach forth unto them in order that you might attain them? Upon finding promises in the Word of God, you will find qualifications conjoined to them, indicating to whom the promises are made. Do you have these qualifications, so that you may perceive that these promises are made to you? Do you approach God with them as the One who is true and omnipotent, and do you rest with them in the promising God? Do you expect the receipt of these benefits, are you intent upon them, and do you strive for them with all that is in you? Are you opposed to all that hinders you and do you overcome these obstacles? Do you endure everything to that end, reach forth to it, seek to apprehend it, and does it sanctify you? How does your heart respond? If you are inwardly convinced that these things are not to be found in you, you do not have this hope, and your insistence that you nevertheless have this hope is nothing but deceit. Your hope will truly be deceived if you die in this condition.

Secondly, answer once again: Are not your anticipation, your expectation, your hope, and your rest related to men? Do you not expect it from that gentleman or that friend who will help you, expecting it now to go well? Do you not -- in your heart -- end in them, their presence, their favor, and their power? Do you not put your trust in money and belongings, and endeavor to find rest in the pursuance of them? Are you not encouraged when you have them and does this not remove your fear? Are you relying upon your skills, your deftness, and your strength? If you cannot find help or rest anywhere, do you then not fix your hope upon a change of season, reasoning that you cannot help this, but that it has to be this way, and that therefore you will exercise patience? If your heart responds affirmatively and acquiesces that this is an accurate representation of your condition, then be assured that you are without hope in God and upon salvation, for these are contradictory to each other and cannot go hand in hand.

Thirdly, answer once more: You have a hope of being saved. But do you have a basis for this hope, or is it only because you would like to be in heaven when you can no longer bear it here, since it is better there than to be in hell? Is it because your own spirit testifies that you will indeed be saved and does that put you at ease? Or is it because you are baptized, faithfully attend church, partake of the Lord's Supper, pray to God, give alms, and lead a life beyond reproach? If your heart responds that such is the case, I say to you that you have no basis for your hope and that no promises are made to such persons. Your hope is vain.

You, therefore, having been convinced by a threefold variety of questions that you do not have a true hope, consider how wretched you are, for there is not a single promise to be found for you in the Bible -- there is not one whereby you can comfort yourself. Rather, all the threatenings and curses recorded in the Word of God are applicable to you. They will become a reality for you if you do not repent. Hear for a moment what the Lord says concerning your hope. "The hypocrite's hope shall perish: whose hope shall be cut off, and whose trust shall be a spider's web" (Job 8:13-14). It is indeed woven together, but it is the weakest structure there is. When removed by either the wind or a mop, it lies there -- fully undone. "But the eyes of the wicked shall fail, and they shall not escape, and their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost" (Job 11:20). What will it avail you that you have deceived yourself with an imaginary hope if you find yourself to be excluded? Therefore, awake and repent! The Godly Rebuked and Exhorted The godly are also to be rebuked for the feebleness with which they exercise hope. For they have reason to hope, and the principle of hope is already within them -- something they ought to be convinced of in answering the three questions presented above. Yes, it is a great error that they are more engaged in striving against their hope than to stir it up -- as if they had only then accomplished something when saying, "My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord" (Lamentations 3:18). All promises have been made to you. Why do you not acknowledge this to be so, being judgmentally convinced that it is true within -- the Word of God being the judge here? How is it possible that the heirs of the promises have so little dealings with them, and so rarely strive for possession of, hope in, and longingly and joyfully expect the fulfillment of the promises?

There are matters which prevent them from doing so.

- (1) The promised matters are frequently obscure, so that they cannot perceive the glory and beauty of them. This impedes the longing for them. This is generally caused when the contemplation and a continual focus upon these matters are neglected.
- (2) There is the commission of sins, in consequence of which they doubt their spiritual state and are fearful of not being a partaker of Christ and all His benefits.
- (3) They are overwhelmed by the grievousness and the long duration of the cross. This causes their soul to be cast down (Psalms 42:6).

(4) Historical faith is under attack, or it is too weak to ascertain matters with certainty and infallibility as to their clarity and veracity. By all these the godly are thus prevented from being exercised in hope. I maintain, however, that these ought not to hinder them. They ought to labor with the little grace they have, and submit to their judgment as having been convinced of it. For to neglect the exercise of hope will confuse them more and more, rob them of their strength, and cause them to sink down in listlessness and discouragement -- yes, to sink away in despondency. They dishonor God in His goodness, truth, faithfulness, and omnipotence, and give the devil the opportunity to toss them back and forth. And rest assured that you will not prevail effortlessly here. One overcomes by way of striving, and the more a person exercises hope, the more earnest he shall be in his endeavor. Therefore do not yield to hopelessness -- even if your heart is not sensibly desirous for spiritual benefits, does not find any sweetness in the exercise of hope, and your unbelieving heart vehemently opposes this. Proceed then with your judgmental perception that you are a partaker of the promises. You will then perceive that hope will be quickened within you.

Therefore, lethargic soul, lift up your heart, for felicity is not to be found here below. "In the Lord have I righteousness and strength: even to Him shall men come" (Isaiah 45:24). Consider the help of the Lord to be a certainty in all temporal and spiritual matters. Establish your salvation as being certain and immovably steadfast because He who has promised is faithful. Speak as follows: "I shall be helped. The Lord shall most certainly lead me by His counsel and take me into glory." Rejoice in your blessedness and in that great salvation that has been promised you. Count on it and embark upon the way which leads to it. Endure all things and do not succumb to anything -- it will yet all work together for good. Anticipate felicity, fully hope in it, and overcome all obstacles with a steadfast and brave heart. Everything will have to surrender to you, and the outcome will not fail. You will gain the upper hand, inherit the crown of life, and receive the end of faith, for:

First, the benefits which are the object of your hope are so precious and attractive that it will kindle the desires of all who reflect upon them attentively. To be cared for by God in this life and thus to be without care as to the outcome of a given matter is glorious and most desirable. Then we are dependent upon God in our activity and know that the outcome (whatever it may be) will be for the best, yes, anticipate grace, light, comfort, and sanctification in this life, and blessed fellowship with God hereafter. God has promised these matters to you, however, and you will be partakers of them. Are not these matters worthy to be desired by you, to be expected in hope, to be striven for, and should not your conduct be governed accordingly?

Secondly, the promises pertaining to these matters are certain. God will neither change, nor will any creature rob you of them, for they rest upon:

(1) God's truth, faithfulness, and omnipotence. "... for He is faithful that promised" (Hebrews 10:23); "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee" (Isaiah 26:3); "... neither shall the covenant of My peace be removed, saith the Lord" (Isaiah 54:10).

(2) Christ as upon a certain and immovable foundation. "Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on Him shall not be confounded" (1 Peter 2:6). Could that which Christ has merited miscarry?

(3) The Word of which the Lord Jesus says, "Thy word is truth" (John 17:17); "For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen, unto the glory of God by us" (2 Corinthians 1:20).

(4) The eternal and immutable testament confirmed in the death of the Testator (Hebrews 9:15-17). "And I appoint unto you a kingdom" (Luke 22:29).

(5) Eternal love. "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love" (Jeremiah 31:3). Those whom He has foreknown, predestinated, called, and justified, He will also glorify (Romans 8:29-30).

(6) The oath of God. "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that ... we might have a strong consolation" (Hebrews 6:17-18).

(7) The given earnest which is worth infinitely more than the promised matter itself. "... in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Ephesians 1:13-14).

(8) Fellowship with Christ. Since He is the head and already is in heaven, the members will most certainly follow. "And hath ... made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" (Ephesians 2:6). Therefore the apostle says, "For we are saved by hope" (Romans 8:24). Who will refuse to depend upon such a certain assurance?

Thirdly, hope is a strong consolation in cross-bearing, and in all the tribulations of this life; in all things it causes the focus to be upon the promised benefits. "So shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words" (1 Thessalonians 4:17-18). The person who exercises hope will adduce the following proof: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Romans 8:18). Hope perceives the profit of tribulations and the glory which will follow it. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Corinthians 4:17).

Fourthly, hope will cause the believer to battle courageously, for it ascertains the certainty of the victory. "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air" (1 Corinthians 9:26); "Now He that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God ... therefore we are always confident" (2 Corinthians 5:5-6).

Fifthly, hope rejoices the heart; man cannot live without happiness. However, in the world the godly endure many tribulations, and if they had nothing but tribulation they would succumb. All that man strives for is related to happiness, for a joyful heart begets strength for soul and body. Hope, however, causes the believer to "glory in tribulations" (Romans 5:3), and there is thus a "rejoicing in hope" (Romans 12:12).

Sixthly, hope sanctifies the soul. The imagination and the wish leave the work undone, but a sure hope stimulates activity. Since the matters hoped for are spiritual and holy, they thus also sanctify the person exercising hope. This is all the more so since the way in which God leads His children to glory is the way of holiness. This is to be observed in 1 John 3:3: "And every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." Hope in and of itself is precious, and it is furthermore precious since it engenders courage, joy, and holiness.

Seventhly, in addition to all -- this being the most eminent virtue -- hope glorifies God and the Lord Jesus. It acknowledges God's sovereignty in either accepting or bypassing a sinful person; God's free grace to grant such a one salvation in spite of his sins; His truth, immutability, and faithfulness; the fact that He keeps His word and will most certainly fulfil His promises; His omnipotence in preserving them unto salvation in spite of all their enemies, as well as in granting it to them; and the love of God and of the Lord Jesus to give Himself as a Surety and in meriting salvation for His own by virtue of His satisfaction.

Therefore, all who desire to glorify God, be active to exercise hope continually. Be continually engaged in seeking for all manner of promises in the Word of God, appropriating them to yourself, and relying upon them. Do not cease to pray that the Lord may cause you to hope. Stir up others, and let the exhortation of others to hope steadfastly, find entrance into your hearts. While you are thus engaged, you will experience that your hope will not make you ashamed, but that you, upon patiently anticipating their fulfillment, will most certainly become a partaker of these blessings at the appointed time.

067. Chapter 62: Spiritual Strength or Courage

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-TWO ----- Spiritual Strength or Courage Not only does much time elapse between the promise and the possession of the matter which hope assuredly anticipates, but also much opposition from enemies is to be expected. Therefore, the person who exercises hope needs to be valiant in order to endure all things and overcome all obstacles. We thus add to hope spiritual strength or courage.

Spiritual strength is an undaunted steadfastness of heart, given by God to His children, whereby they, while entertaining a lively hope of acquiring the promised benefits, overcome fear for all danger and opposition, unyieldingly engage in warfare, and courageously persevere in obedience toward God. The following is a true proverb: Ardua quae pulchra, or, eminent matters are difficult to be obtained. This is true in both natural and spiritual matters. Those spiritual matters to be acquired are most eminent. He who is not acquainted with them, however, will neither trouble himself about them, nor risk any danger for them; but he who is acquainted with them will risk everything for them and will fortify his heart with hope. This fortitude, even though the world designates it as being stubborn and strong-willed, is nevertheless an eminent virtue. It is an ornament for the Christian which is pleasing to God, dreadful to the world, and personally beneficial. It is a virtue which God requires and to which believers are frequently exhorted, namely, "Be strong." The seat of spiritual strength is to be found in the soul, intellect, will, and affections of the believer. All of these are fully engaged relative to the objects at hand. It is not a physical activity (even though this is also essential in the execution of this strength), but rather an activity of the soul. It is not merely an activity of the intellect, observing this virtue in its beauty, but all faculties are active. It is not an activity which is occasionally engaged in, but rather it is a propensity, a habitual disposition and competence, which initially is infused by God, but which is exercised by the influence of the Holy Spirit, and by much exercise improves and becomes stronger. "His heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. His heart is established, he shall not be afraid" (Psalms 112:7-8). The heart of the unconverted is not the subject of this strength, for they are unto all good work reprobate (Titus 1:16). They have no promise, no faith, no hope, nor internal spiritual life. What spiritual strength and courage could they then have? Only the regenerate are the courageous ones and they have what we have just mentioned -- something which the unconverted do not have. All "the righteous are bold as a lion" (Proverbs 28:1). To those who are called to be saints the apostle says, "Quit you like men, be strong" (1 Corinthians 16:13).

Both object and goal are identical here. Spiritual strength relates to the good that is to be acquired and the evil that is to be overcome. God promises many benefits to His own according to body and soul, doing so, however, upon the condition that they will be acquired via the means commanded and ordained by God. The spiritually valiant person is acquainted with them, loves them, believes the promises, and anticipates them in hope. With this perspective he initiates his endeavor, follows after it, and seeks to apprehend it. In this work much resistance is encountered: loss of honor, possessions, and even life. One will encounter shame, contempt, ridicule, hatred, opposition from every perspective, poverty, illness, and all manner of adversity. All of that has the potential to engender fear, and through fear to cause either full or partial cessation of the endeavor. Spiritual courage will not yield, however, but will persevere all the more vehemently. It cannot be moved by anything; it does not even count life dear (Acts 20:24). While thus engaged, the soul may suffer from spiritual desertion and strife. Faith may be assaulted, and hope both shaken and tossed to and fro, so that the inner turmoil is frequently overwhelming. The courageous person, however, proceeds as if blind, does not succumb, keeps courage, and battles as a courageous hero, defending himself and inflicting injury to the enemies. However, an additional evil arises -- an evil which has a more far-reaching effect than the previous evil: the old Adam. It flatters, entices, and causes the person to go astray. Here he stumbles, there he falls, then he receives a grievous wound and then again a deadly wound in his soul. That which is good is neglected, the evil is committed, and this is able to make a spiritual soldier unbelieving concerning his state, and cause him to feel hopeless and become discouraged. However, spiritual strength looks beyond that as well. If the believer cannot remain upright with his burden, he will crawl with it, and if he succumbs to it, he will rise again and renew the battle with new courage. If he cannot see his way through, he believes in and relies upon the Lord Jesus, commends the outcome to Him, and is determined to persevere, regardless of what the cost may be. If the enemy is too strong and he is overcome, he will nevertheless do his best and not surrender -- he who is put to the worst in the battle is also fighting. Thus, both good and evil are the objects of the activity of spiritual strength.

The Essence of Spiritual Strength The integral essence of spiritual strength consists in a valiant steadfastness of heart. This in turn consists, first of all, in there being a lively hope. The benefits hoped for are so desirable that they can endure all that is uncomfortable. Hope in the faithfulness and truthfulness of the promising God makes acquisition such a steadfast and unquestionable fact, that the stronger the believer is in this respect, the stronger his courage will be.

Secondly, it consists in victory over fear. Nature shrinks back from suffering and seeks to avoid it. The courageous person conquers fear, however, for he sees that there is no other way to obtain the desired benefits, while at the same time he realizes that everything which is in opposition has no power to conquer him and prevent him from reaching his objective, omnipotent help being on his side. Thus, fear disappears. "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid" (Psalms 27:1); "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil" (Psalms 23:4).

Thirdly, it consists in perseverance in the performance of one's duty. This consists in a courageous entering upon the way which leads to the possession of the benefits hoped for, while awaiting all that may be encountered. Thus, such a person proceeds, in dependence upon God and Christ and relying upon His help.

These three matters constitute valiant steadfastness of heart, or spiritual courage. Observe this disposition in the following passages: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life ... nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Romans 8:35; Romans 8:37-39); "Be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 15:58). The Origin of Spiritual Strength The origin of this strength is God. "He shall strengthen your heart" (Psalms 31:24); "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength" (Isaiah 40:29). This necessitates a closer examination to ascertain how God is operative in this respect, and how He causes man to be active by various means -- they being secondary causes.

First, God grants a clear vision of the glory of the end to be attained, that is, of the benefits to be acquired. He presents the acquisition of them as being a certain and immovable fact. The more clearly the intellect perceives the end in view and the more powerfully the heart is assured of its certainty, the greater spiritual strength will be and the more fervent its manifestation will be. Observe this in the Lord Jesus, "who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame" (Hebrews 12:2). Observe this also in Moses, who esteemed "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward" (Hebrews 11:26). Secondly, God assures the soul of His help and support, and impresses upon the heart His promise relative to this. "Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of My righteousness" (Isaiah 41:10). A believer receives these promises by faith and strengthens himself by means of them. As someone who in a storm finds himself too weak to remain standing takes hold of a post or a tree and remains standing due to its immobility, the courageous person likewise takes hold of the strength of the Lord, and thus remains strong and unyielding. "Let him take hold of My strength" (Isaiah 27:5). This is what David did. "But David encouraged himself in the Lord his God" (1 Samuel 30:6).

Thirdly, the Lord shows the limitations, insignificance, and impotence of all that opposes. He shows that the honor of man, their love, the goods of this world, and all that appears beautiful and glorious in it, are in reality nothing, and that he can miss all this and nevertheless be joyful (Habakkuk 3:17-18). The Lord shows that He is his portion -- his all-sufficient portion (Lamentations 3:24), and that all that is beautiful in this world when compared to this portion is but dung (Php 3:8). He shows that all the hatred, evil, and persecution of men is nothing more than a bag of air, since they can neither move nor stir apart from the will of God -- and that poverty, adversity, etc., are but a light tribulation which will very readily pass by (2 Corinthians 4:17). Hereby souls are fortified to such an extent that they even take "pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake," for when they are weak, they are strong. They thus glory in their tribulations in order that the power of Christ may rest upon them (2 Corinthians 12:9-10).

Fourthly, the Lord shows them the goodness and righteousness of the matter which they are undertaking -- showing them that He has commanded them to do so and that it is not their cause but His. This makes them courageous in the battle. They deem it to be to their honor that they, for Jesus' sake, may battle against the enemies and that they are wounded in this battle. This enabled the apostles -- in an astonishing manner -- to speak with freedom before the great council (Acts 4:13), and having been scourged, to depart "rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name" (Acts 5:41).

Fifthly, the Lord shows them the ungodliness and the unrighteousness of those who oppress them. As they acknowledge the Lord to be a righteous Judge, they thus observe that He hates their persecutors, their cause, and their objectives. He Himself will therefore strive against them and reward them according to their iniquities. This engenders courage, and while triumphantly exulting over them, they say, "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me? All nations compassed me about: but in the name of the Lord will I destroy them" (Psalms 118:6;Psalms 118:10). This encouraged David in the battle against Goliath, in that he had defied the Lord (1 Samuel 17:45).

Sixthly, the Lord shows them the help which He has previously afforded them -- both according to body and soul. It is as if He says, "When you considered everything lost; when you had already pronounced the sentence of demise and death upon yourself; when unrighteous things had the upper hand over you, your faith succumbed, your hope was almost at an end, your spiritual life was in a stupor, and when you indeed thought, 'It is done and it will never be right with me again,' have not I then frequently delivered you?" This experience renders much strength. "The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, He will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine" (1 Samuel 17:37); "Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that He will yet deliver us" (2 Corinthians 1:10).

Seventhly, the Lord comforts the soul engaged in warfare by inwardly assuring her of His grace. It is as if He says to her, "My grace is sufficient for thee. If I am your God, if I forgive you all your sins, love you, preserve you by My power, and shall eternally glorify you, is all then not well? Therefore, I do this and shall do it. I shall neither leave you nor forsake you. Be therefore courageous and I shall be with you. The evil which you fear either cannot or will not be able to bring upon you what you fear. Or else, I shall give you sufficient strength to bear it and I shall cause it to turn out for your best. =When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee' (Isaiah 43:2) -- I shall be with thee. Be therefore of good courage and fight valiantly." When the soul is comforted in such a manner, it is as if she receives wings to mount as an eagle, to run and not be weary, and to walk and not faint.

Eighthly, despair at times also generates strength -- which is most amazing. If, due to fear, you do nothing but shrink back; if you have given in to everything; if you are in the lowest condition and have despondently succumbed to the cross; if in all things you go along with the world; if during persecutions you have hidden yourself, been hypocritical, and have denied the truth; if in every respect you have followed your lusts and appear to have been conquered by them, behold, then that life which is still concealed within begins to manifest itself and you will receive strength from your weakness. You will wax "valiant in fight," and turn "to flight the armies of the aliens" (Hebrews 11:34). Just as fire breaks forth all the more vehemently due to being compressed by surrounding cold or something else, so it also occurs with the believer. The conscience is aroused, faith becomes active, and fear disappears, for he has nothing to lose -- it cannot be worse. He will thus come forward again and manifest who he is. He will become stronger than he has ever been before. The weak person will say, "I am strong" (Joel 3:10). This we occasionally observe in those who have denied the truth, namely, that they recant and endure the fire with much more courage than someone who has remained steadfast. The Effects of Spiritual Courage The effect of spiritual courage is a courageous prevailing in the battle and perseverance in obedience toward God. That competence or propensity which never translates into deeds is useless. God has given His children grace for that very purpose -- not that it would remain dormant and concealed within them, but in order that they would labor with it. Particularly, this courageous valor cannot remain hidden if the opportunity is there -- and there always are opportunities. The enemies are always engaged in battle against grace in the believer for the purpose of eradicating it, or to prevent it from being exercised. Believers are always surrounded by the Lord's injunctions to either do or refrain from something. There is thus always opportunity for the exercise of spiritual courage.

First, the believer perseveres in the battle. A Christian must continually be in armor, for he is in the church militant. The enemies, the devil, the world, and the flesh are continually active and continually make assault upon his life. He must therefore continually be active in resisting them. The command is: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate" (Luke 13:24); "Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" (Jude 1:3); "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life" (1 Timothy 6:12).

(1) In a battle something desirable is at stake, which in this case is spiritual life here and felicity hereafter. The enemies rise up against this, wish to rob the believer of this, and prevent him from manifesting this life.

(2) The believer knows the enemy -- he knows who he is and what his objective is. Believers are indeed acquainted with the devil, the world, and their own flesh, and the enemies are in turn acquainted with them.

(3) There is enmity in the heart. Thus, there is here not only a total contradiction of natures, which cannot but seek to expel each other, but these also stand in each other's way and mutually rob each other of joy. Therefore they cannot tolerate each other's presence.

(4) There is subtlety in trying to gain the advantage. Enemies are cunning in taking advantage of every opportunity, and thus a Christian, even though he is as harmless as a dove, is also as wise as a serpent.

(5) There is the use of violence. Enemies have great power which they exercise to the utmost with no regard for either body or soul. The believer in himself has but little strength, but by the omnipotent help of God he resists them in everything and does not yield in anything.

(6) There is the ultimate outcome of the battle. During the battle first the one and then the other will have the upper hand, but believers will at last be more than conquerors.

Since the Christian has such enemies, he is in need of strength and courage -- both of which he uses. Having overcome fear, he, attacks them with spiritual weapons and courageously breaks through their battle arrays and tramples them under foot.

Secondly, a courageous person is not satisfied with repelling and expelling his enemies; rather, at the same time he also perseveres courageously in order to effect obedience toward God. He lifts up his heart in the ways of the Lord as Jehoshaphat did (2 Chronicles 17:6). Secretly, as a matter between God and himself, he does what the Lord wills him to do, and externally manifests himself to be a Christian by his deeds. He does what needs to be done and says what needs to be said. He is not disturbed by the barking of those dogs and lets them know this. He courageously proceeds and causes them to yield, saying with David, "Depart from me, ye evildoers: for I will keep the commandments of my God" (Psalms 119:115). Such is the nature of spiritual courage.

The Unconverted: Void of Spiritual Valor and Courage

Having thus presented the nature of spiritual valor and courage, this will be a satisfactory mirror to show the unconverted that they do not possess it at all, and to convince the godly of their deficiency in this respect.

First, the unconverted have neither part in nor desire for the spiritual and eternal benefits of the covenant of grace. They are without promises, without hope, and are not exercised concerning the acquiring of them. They therefore also have no enemies which try to rob them of these. In this respect there is nothing but peace with the devil, the world, and the flesh. If they have troubles, these are related to either the acquisition or preservation of earthly things. If it pertains to a refraining from sin, there will be a battle between the conscience and the will. If they are troubled about their salvation, it relates to God's pronouncement of the sentence of condemnation in their heart if they fail to repent, and sometimes it already is the beginning of condemnation itself. Whatever it may be, there is no valor proceeding from having received strength from the Lord Jesus.

Secondly, when they are or will be engaged in some external religion, all they do is but of a lukewarm and feeble nature. It is only a soothing of the conscience or to acquire something of an external nature. If they can attain this without the external practice of religion, even the most insignificant issue is capable of drawing them away from the practice of religion. Even all that they do in this respect is, when considered in and of itself, a burden and weariness to them, and their proceeding is no more than at the pace of a donkey and a turtle.

Thirdly, there are those who have somewhat more light and also some inclination to repent, live godly, and confess the truth of the gospel. Something remote occurs, however, which could yield them some harm and shame; or it is the time of persecution and there is the prospect of imprisonment, the stake, the gallows, the sword, or being sent to the galleys. Fear will then come upon them and prevent them from proceeding any further, which causes them to dissemble, saying, "Stop, enough of this!" Where is there evidence of the courage here which conquers fear out of love for God and toward spiritual benefits?

Fourthly, some fear damnation and wish to be in heaven subsequent to their death. They also perceive what the way to heaven is, but they do not see how they can traverse this way, and thus yield to desperation and despondency. That halts all their activity, and they have nothing left but an anxious and terrified heart. Or they will drive this despondency away by yielding to their sinful lusts, and thus the conscience is numbed. Or else they may commit suicide, and thus jump into the very hell which they feared.

Fifthly, there are those whose disposition resembles spiritual courage to some degree. Nothing is further from the truth, however. They join themselves to the godly, finding delight in being loved and esteemed by them. They speak in a haughty manner, rebuke others, engage in disputes, persevere, and neither fear harm nor shame. They are, however, neither motivated by love for spiritual benefits, by an assured hope, in dependence upon and reception of Christ's strength, nor by obedience toward God. It is nothing more than a foolish passion which does not fear danger -- either due to not being acquainted with the danger or due to imagining that it neither exists nor will come to pass. It may be the pursuit of their own glory, as if they were saying, "See my zeal for the Lord." Or they have a brazen and bold disposition, this being the principle which motivates them. They are engaged without having the proper objective in view, without being united to Christ and being active in His strength, and without Christian prudence governing such valor. This is therefore not spiritual courage, but a sinful foolishness, feignedness, and brazenness.

All whom we have discovered as to who you are, be it known that you have neither spiritual life, faith, hope, nor spiritual valor. How will you be saved if, first of all, the violent take heaven by force (Matthew 11:12), if no one will be crowned except they who have fought a lawful fight, and if only they who run obtain the prize (1 Corinthians 9:24)? What is to become of you who are lazy, fearful, hotheaded, foolish, reckless, brazen, and bold? Secondly, impress it upon your heart what God says of such as you are, "And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" (Matthew 25:30). That which is written in Revelation shall come upon you: "So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of My mouth" (Revelation 3:16); "But the fearful ... shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone" (Revelation 21:8). The Godly Rebuked for Their Deficient Strength

Now I shall address myself unto you, the godly. I would rather comfort you; however, I cannot endure sin and I must therefore address a word of rebuke unto you so that you may become well. You have observed the nature of spiritual valor and this will already have shown you your deficiency in this respect. We shall present this a bit further to you so that you may abhor its unseemliness and sinfulness, and that you lift yourself up out of your deficiencies.

First, many spend but little time in reflecting upon the benefits -- which, so to speak have been put on display for the purpose of obtaining them by way of valiantly striving for them. We ought to live in reflection upon eternal glory until it far excels all that is desirable, delightful, joyous, and lovely; so that it would excite our desires to acquire them as our only salvation. How delightful it ought to be to us, in this life, to walk with God in love, fear, and obedience, and thus to behold the invisible things with a heart that is elevated above all that is visible! We are very neglectful in this respect, however, and thus, the desire to attain this becomes weaker and the natural desire for that which is visible becomes greater. The result will then be that the goal in view will not strongly motivate to activity. Since the heart focuses upon various matters, it will be less intent upon that one thing it ought to focus on, and we shall then not be able to find satisfaction with the spiritual unless this be complemented with temporal matters. This is the fountain of all restlessness and weakness in the activity.

Secondly, we shall then neither be aware of the enemies, nor that the devil goes about us as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. We shall not be aware that the world will alternately seek to steal the heart and draw it to itself, either by way of endearment or by way of disfavor -- and thus bring us into snares which cannot be disentangled. We shall not be aware that our corrupt nature is continually engaged in obstructing us in doing that which is good as well as in enticing us to sin. This will render us more careless as far as preserving what we possess and in acquiring that which the regenerated nature would delight to have. We do not fear where we ought to fear, and thus the hands will hang down and the knees will be feeble.

Thirdly, when we increasingly lose sight of our objective and focus on earthly things instead, fear will grip our heart. We fear where we ought not to fear. The prospect of injury, shame, the backbiting of many by the deceitful saying of all manner of evil, poverty, persecution, death, and whatever else is contrary to nature, have great power in us to stir up fear in spite of all exhortations to the contrary. "And fear not them which kill the body" (Matthew 10:28); "Fear not, little flock"

(Luke 12:32); "Why are ye fearful" (Matthew 8:26); "Be careful for nothing" (Php 4:6). In spite of such truths, we tremble and shudder for the present, and mostly for the future. This fear robs us of courage, hinders us in our duty, and draws us away to that which is not becoming. Where the spiritually courageous person overcomes fear, we who ought to be courageous will be overcome by fear. We allow ourselves to be abused by the enemy, and the heroes perish in the battle. Where is this bold steadfastness?

Fourthly, we are weak in all spiritual activity; that is, in prayer, striving against the enemies (particularly our besetting corruptions), in the exercise of virtue -- all of which our circumstances continually demand. We shall engage in some activity, for spiritual life is existent. Everything is performed in such a lethargic fashion, however, and it is such a heavy task. It proceeds so intermittently, and the initial zeal and fervency have grown so very cold. We do not manfully persevere in obedience toward God. A temporal cross will make us immediately discouraged, and if matters do not proceed according to our wishes, we immediately become weak in faith in regard to our spiritual state. We shall doubt the love of God, His hearing of prayers, and His providence. Everything comes into a state of disarray and we proceed as if half asleep or as if near collapse. "If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small" (Proverbs 24:10).

Although God will not bring upon His children those judgments which will come upon the unconverted due to their unprofitableness, lukewarmness, and fearfulness, they nevertheless need to be deterred from such sins, "for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience" (Ephesians 5:6). Furthermore, the lack of courage yields them nothing but unrest and spiritual anxiety. It entangles them more and more in all manner of sin, and the enemies become more powerful, holding them captive for a longer period of time. One will not overcome this by yielding to a lack of earnestness. "(Be) not slothful in business; (be) fervent in spirit" (Romans 12:11); "Be zealous therefore, and repent" (Revelation 3:19).

Exhortation to be Courageous

Therefore, all you who fear the Lord, who find yourself under the yoke of your enemies, who have little strength to offer resistance, and who moreover use that little strength ineffectively, give ear and permit your heart to be of a willing disposition to be aroused as I engage myself to stir you up to be courageous in the battle.

First, hear the voice of the Lord and permit His address to you to lift up your hearts. As Lazarus arose from the dead upon hearing the voice of Christ, may you thus also be quickened from your lukewarm indolence to a noble courage. This is the Word of God to you: "Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them" (Deuteronomy 31:6); "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong" (1 Corinthians 16:13); "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not" (Isaiah 35:4); "Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees" (Hebrews 12:12).

Secondly, should not you be courageous in the battle? There is no other way to heaven except by way of courageous warfare. This is the way ordained by God: "And I will put enmity" (Genesis 3:15). You have chosen this way when you entered into the kingdom of Christ and placed yourself under His banner. Or on the other hand: you must either sever yourself from the covenant, as a villain walk away from this ensign, and relinquish God, heaven, and everything else; or you must courageously engage in battle in order thus to conquer the devil and his cohorts, the world and all that is in it, as well as sin and all its lusts. The crown of glory must be worth so much to you; so precious must spiritual life and fellowship with God be to you, and such pleasure must you find in the will of God, that you will be willing to battle valiantly all the days of your life. Do not let this weigh heavily upon your heart, thinking, "Must I be in arms and engage in warfare my entire life? Must there be such an exertion of strength my entire lifetime? That is indeed a distasteful way and there is no way whereby I will persevere." Yes, heaven must be that precious to you; or else you must relinquish it. Be it known, however, that to battle courageously is not such a heavy task as you allow yourself to believe. To always battle and succumb, or always to be equally matched in force, causing the outcome of the battle to be in doubt, is indeed a heavy task. It is a joyous task, however, to conquer as you are fighting, to proceed while conquering one city after another, and to humiliate the enemy battle after battle. Such will be the case if you but conduct yourself courageously, commensurate with your strength -- be it that you battle as a child, a young man, or a man. You are so fearful of the battle because you do not proceed courageously; instead, due to your laxity, carelessness and lack of seriousness, you give the enemy the opportunity to get the advantage over you. This makes them more courageous and you become weaker. Therefore, lift yourself up in the ways of the Lord and courageously engage yourself. Resist the devil and he will flee from you.

Thirdly, reflection upon your spiritual state is suitable to stir you up to be courageous. The Lord has chosen you unto salvation, has drawn you out of the power of your enemies, and called you as He called Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees and Israel out of Egypt. He has placed you among His children in the kingdom of His Son. You have been born of God, and are thus God's offspring, children of the King (Psalms 45:9; Psalms 45:13), and kings (Revelation 5:10). You have a free and princely spirit (Psalms 51:12) and the heart of a lion (Proverbs 28:1). The Lord has made you to be as "His goodly horse in the battle" (Zechariah 10:5). And He says concerning you in verse 5: "And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle" (Zechariah 10:5). These are they who proceed through thick and thin so that the earth trembles at every step, "because the Lord is with them, and the riders on horses shall be confounded" (Zechariah 10:5); that is, a foot-soldier shall cut down the rider of the horse. Would you then allow yourself to be conquered by the devil, a despicable citizen of the world, or a vile corruption? A king is too noble to allow himself to be captured by an insignificant soldier. You ought therefore also to be courageous in a manner commensurate with your spiritual state and not yield to the despicable enemy. Do not forget your nobility, lest you bring shame upon your ancestry.

Fourthly, attentively take note of both the nature and the strength of the enemies, and this will make you all the more valiant. They are so evil that they will neither tolerate the least manifestation of good, nor the least motion of spiritual life. The more you yield to them, the more they demand from you and the more they gain in strength. They will neither cease nor become tired until they would have dragged soul and body into hell. They directly oppose the majestic and holy God as well as your beloved Lord Jesus. Can you witness and endure this in good conscience? Furthermore, they are despicable, vile, abhorrent, and abominable. Who can think about them without being indignant? And would you allow yourself to be overpowered by them? They have already been conquered by the Lord Jesus, for He has bruised the head of the devil (Genesis 3:15; Hebrews 2:14), conquered the world (John 16:33), and robbed sin of its dominion (Romans 6:2; Romans 6:14). They thus can neither harm you nor are they able to pull one hair out of your head. It would be too great an act of cowardice to fear the squirming of an enemy which is half dead. Therefore, do not allow yourself to be conquered by such an evil, despicable, and impotent enemy; rather, battle valiantly and trample upon them as dirt under your feet. Conduct yourself as the armor-bearer of Jonathan, who followed him and, coming behind him, killed the enemies. Follow the Lord Jesus likewise, for He goes before you and slays the enemies before you. You may then push them toward Him. Therefore, be courageous in the battle and the victory over such enemies will be sure.

Fifthly, take notice that everyone's eye is upon you, and give heed as to how you conduct yourself in this battle. You have entered the arena together with the enemy, and the spectators are standing roundabout to witness the battle. On the one side stands your King, together with the holy angels and believers. Their heart is one with you, and they are desirous that you would be the victor. Christ's cause is yours and your cause is His and theirs. They will rejoice and glory if you are victorious. On the other side are the devils and the world. They gnash their teeth and would love to see harm done to the cause of Christ by your being conquered. Will you therefore be weak in the battle? Will you allow yourself to be conquered in the presence of everyone? Will you cause this indignity to come upon Christ, who is a witness of this battle, has invited everyone to observe your courage, and inspires you to be courageous? Will angels (if this were possible) as well as the godly be covered with shame and be grieved because of you? Will you permit the enemy to triumph as conquerors? How would you dare to come to your King and lift up your countenance to Him? No, no -- so it ought not to be. You must be courageous as a hero so that Christ would boast of you as the Lord boasted of Job's steadfastness (Job 1:1-22; Job 2:1-13).

Sixthly, recognize what your own strength is, and look to your helpers and brothers-in-arms. It is true that you have no strength by nature, and that, having been born again, you have but little strength (Revelation 3:8). Having received Christ's strength, however, it is yours and thus you may do all things through Christ which strengthens you (Php 4:13). Therefore, make use of it; run with Him through a troop, and with Him leap over the wall, in order to take hold of your enemies in their strength (Psalms 18:29) -- for He girds you with strength and teaches your hands to war (vss. 32, 34). Therefore, jubilate: "The Lord taketh my part with them that help me: therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me" (Psalms 118:7).

Seventhly, reflect upon those who have engaged in battle before you and consider how blessed the outcome has been for them.

They are now crowned as conquerors -- as is to be observed in the register of the heroes of faith, Hebrews 11:1-40. "Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. ... Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord" (James 5:10-11). Consider Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness" (2 Timothy 4:7-8). Consider other believers who live with you -- how each of them battles according to his strength. Should all of that not arouse your courage? He who therefore may behold such a King, may be in such a magnificent army, and is surrounded by so many valiant heroes who have each decided to give their life for the Lord Jesus and to battle unto death -- should he not battle courageously?

God's Promises for Courageous Warriors

Eighthly, take seriously to heart the promises which God has promised to courageous warriors. God will sustain you while you are engaged in battle. "Be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart" (Psalms 27:14).

(1) The Lord then causes believers to have a clearer view of the promised benefits in their preciousness, and to have a more lively hope toward them.

(2) He shows them the limitations and weakness of the opposition, so that believers can look beyond them and already consider themselves to be conquerors.

(3) He shows them the help He has previously given them.

(4) He comforts and encourages them.

(5) He removes fear of the opposition.

(6) He infuses strength and girds them with strength, so that even a weak believer says, "I am a mighty one." The Lord promises the crown of glory. Consider the promises found in Revelation 2:1-29 and Revelation 3:1-22 "Him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life ... shall not be hurt of the second death ... will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone ... will I give power over the nations ... I will give him the morning star ... the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before My Father, and before His angels ... will I make a pillar in the temple of My God ... and I will write upon him the name of My God ... will I grant to sit with Me in My throne" (Revelation 2:7; Revelation 2:11; Revelation 2:17; Revelation 2:26; Revelation 2:28; Revelation 3:5; Revelation 3:12; Revelation 3:21). He who desires all these glorious things must and will obtain them by battling courageously. Therefore, engage yourself courageously!

Final Directions for This Warfare

Endeavor to conduct yourself well, however, and to engage in this task properly. "And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully" (2 Timothy 2:5).

First, arm yourself therefore from head to toe. Paul teaches us what these weapons are. "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God: praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit" (Ephesians 6:13-18).

Secondly, in this warfare be on your guard against:

(1) Carelessness. Do not imagine that you already have overcome when you have a good intention. Such intentions easily lose their vigor. Do not imagine that the enemy has already disappeared, for he lies in wait for you. Therefore, "Be sober, be vigilant" (1 Peter 5:8).

(2) Despondency. When the enemies are too strong for you, the warfare too heavy, and God is distant, do not give up courage, for that is as much as casting away your weapons and holding forth to the enemy (from whom no grace is to be expected anyhow) your defenseless hands. Therefore in reliance upon the strength and infallible promises of God, "Be strong and of a good courage" (Joshua 1:6).

(3) Pride and boasting in your own strength. Remember Peter who said, "Yet will I never be offended" (Matthew 26:35); "Yet will I not deny Thee" (Matthew 26:35). Then the defeat is imminent. Therefore, "Be not highminded, but fear" (Romans 11:20).

Thirdly, in this warfare:

(1) Exercise caution, and do not go beyond the boundaries of your calling. Do not engage in things which are beyond your reach and beyond your competence. Do not hastily and with impulsive passion engage yourself. Do not imagine by yourself that you have enough wisdom, but always first seek the counsel of the Lord -- however insignificant the matter or circumstance may be. A maid was strong enough to cast Peter down. In special cases seek the counsel of the godly. "He that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise" (Proverbs 12:15); "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise" (Ephesians 5:15).

(2) Flee from those opportunities from which you are permitted to flee, and especially those by which you have frequently been entrapped. He already makes good progress who, in order to avoid sin, avoids the opportunities for sin, and does not engage in a specific endeavor unless called to do so.

(3) Be especially opposed to the sin which you are most inclined to commit, toward which your nature is most inclined, and which is related to your calling. Carefully guard against the initial manifestations, for then it is easiest to resist it. Smother the children in the cradle, catch the little foxes, and remove the dead fly which can cause the most eminent substance to stink.

(4) Always take refuge to Christ, for He is a sun and a shield (Psalms 84:11). As you permit your heart to wander away from Him, the arrow of the enemy will immediately hit you. Emulate David in this respect: "Deliver me, O Lord, from mine enemies: I flee unto Thee to hide me" (Psalms 143:9).

(5) Be continually engaged in prayer, for all your strength must come from the Lord -- and God, when He is to do something, wants to be inquired of. "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matthew 26:41).

068. Chapter 63: The Profession of Christ and His Truth

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-THREE ----- The Profession of Christ and His Truth

Spiritual valor manifests itself at specific occasions. It reveals itself, in word and deed, in the manifestation of the grace which is within us, our faith in Christ, our love toward Him, and our hope in Him. The enemies cannot tolerate this light, and they therefore resist it and assault those who cause this light to shine forth. The valiant person does not yield to them, however; he presents himself publicly with that much more freedom by way of a steadfast confession. The word "confession" (or profession) means: to make known, to reveal, to admit, to declare publicly, to promise, and to thank. All of this applies, for a confession is a revelation of the disposition of our heart toward certain matters. Sometimes it is used in reference to the confession of sin -- which one admits to have committed -- either against God: "I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord" (Psalms 32:5; Matthew 3:6); or to each other: "Confess your faults one to another" (James 5:16).

However, we are here discussing a profession as it pertains to making a declaration 1) about God: "Every tongue shall confess to God" (Romans 14:11); 2) about Christ: "And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord" (Php 2:11); 3) concerning true holiness and godliness: "... professing godliness" (1 Timothy 2:10); and 4) concerning true doctrine (Titus 1:9).

Profession of the truth is the unwavering witness, in word and deed, of the truth of God as it is revealed, acknowledged, and believed -- a truth which leads man unto salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ. This profession is to the glory of God and the salvation of our neighbor.

It is a witness. God neither wants His truth, nor the grace which He has bestowed upon someone, to remain hidden; rather He wills that light would shine forth out of darkness. Furthermore, He wills that those in whose hearts the light has shined and who are light in the Lord would let their light shine before men (Matthew 5:16). Such are called witnesses for Christ. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (Acts 1:8); "...Antipas was My faithful martyr (Revelation 2:13); "The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through Him might believe" (John 1:7). The act of witnessing pertains to the revealed truth of God, or generally speaking to all that God communicates in His Word -- and in particular the way whereby God leads the elect unto salvation. Occasionally, without any further modification, this is referred to as truth. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8:32); "... even as thou walkest in the truth" (3 John 1:3). At times there is modification: "The way of truth" (2 Peter 2:2), "the word of truth" (James 1:18), "the truth of the gospel" (Galatians 2:5), "the truth of Christ" (2 Corinthians 11:10). Believers rely upon this truth, and to this truth they bear witness, while rejecting all errors.

Christ is the marrow of this truth. The truth reveals Christ as to who He is in His Person; who He is in His divine and human natures and in His offices of Prophet, Priest, and King; and who He is in His states of humiliation (that is, His suffering and death and its efficacy unto reconciliation and the meriting of salvation for the elect) and exaltation: His resurrection, ascension, sitting at the right hand of God, and coming to judgment. This Jesus is the object of confession. "Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men ..." (Matthew 10:32); "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus ..." (Romans 10:9). The Lord Jesus is the eternal way of salvation. "Neither is there salvation in any other" (Acts 4:12); "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me" (John 14:6). He is therefore called "the captain of their salvation" (Hebrews 2:10). A professor of the truth bears witness to Him as He is revealed in His Word, and declares that all men who are outside of Him perish and that all who believe in Him are led unto salvation by Him. In order for someone to bear witness to this truth, he must both be acquainted with and believe it. Thus this profession is the witness of a truth which is both acknowledged and believed. To profess something with which we are not acquainted is nothing but foolishness.

Such is the practice of the papists: "I believe what the church believes." To profess that which we do not believe is nothing but hypocrisy. Scripture therefore speaks of "knowledge of the truth" (Romans 2:20), "the acknowledgment of the mystery of God" (Colossians 2:2), "the knowledge of God" (Colossians 1:10), "the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18), and "knowledge of salvation" (Luke 1:77). He must not only know the truth but he must also believe it. Knowledge and faith are therefore conjoined. "And we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God" (John 6:69); "... add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge" (2 Peter 1:5). Profession of the truth does not only require that we bear witness to the truth that Christ is the only way of salvation, but it is also a declaration of our faith in Him and of our hope upon Him. "King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets" (Acts 26:27). This profession is therefore called "the profession of our faith" (Hebrews 10:23). The apostle confirms this: "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear" (1 Peter 3:15).

Profession of the Truth is in Word and Deed This profession occurs in word and deed. It occurs with words if we declare the truth of God to others by speaking of it for the purpose of instructing those who are not acquainted with it, to build up and strengthen those who have but little knowledge, and to the conviction of those who oppose the truth and persecute us because of the truth. Observe this in the following passages: "... with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Romans 10:10); "Every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord" (Php 2:11).

We profess the truth with deeds if we:

(1) Publicly join ourselves to the true church and persevere in fellowship with her, that is, with the people of God and Christ who own the cause of Christ by bearing witness to it and who affirm the following: "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise" (Isaiah 43:21); "But ye are a ... peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9).

(2) Display the image of the Lord Jesus in a holy walk and if Christ is formed in us (Galatians 4:19), and we bear the image of the heavenly Adam (1 Corinthians 15:49). The luster of holiness conveys to everyone that we associate with Jesus. "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35). Hereby the counsel knew that Peter and John had been with Jesus (Acts 4:13), and persecutors identified true Christians as follows: he does not lie, he does not gamble, etc. and he is thus a Christian. Upon this they were arrested.

(3) Endure all suffering for the sake of the truth of Christ. God has put enmity between Christ and His own on the one hand, and the serpent and his seed on the other hand. All unconverted men who live according to the flesh always persecute those who live according to the Spirit -- this being due to opposite natures, objectives, and manner of conduct. As soon as someone becomes a partaker of the nature of Christ, places himself under His ensign, and stands up for Him, everything at once opposes him. Someone will not be persecuted for the hope of salvation itself, unless it would be by those who deny the resurrection of the dead. Rather, the issue is the way by which one seeks to obtain salvation. The name of Christ is so hated by the Jews and the Mohammedans that they will persecute someone unto death for this. Among those who bear the name of Christian one will not readily be persecuted for having a general hope of salvation in Christ. If, however, someone knows Christ in truth, and confesses Him to be such as He is and to be the Savior that He is, all false Christians will come against this. Such is the case with Socinians (who also wish to bear the name of Christian), and with Arminians -- as was shown to be true in the beginning of the previous century and would still prove to be so if they had the power. This is also the case with all the unconverted within as well as outside of the church. This is particularly true for the Antichrist, who is drunk -- and still drinks himself drunk -- with the blood of those saints whom he can grasp in his clutches. When a true Christian manifests himself as he is, he will become the focus of everyone's opposition. All who are thus inclined, according to their power, will persecute him with heart and deeds, and will not rest until he is out of the way. If someone conducts himself faithfully under such circumstances, he professes Christ, and whoever is killed because of this witness is a martyr. The latter is the Greek word martyr which means to be a witness. The Qualities of an Unwavering Witness of the Truth This profession is an unwavering witness. In this definition we make mention of one characteristic, but it implies several others.

First, this profession must occur out of love to the Lord Jesus and His revealed truth. Someone can die for his testimony of the Lord Jesus merely for the sake of being honored, without having delight in the truth. He also can only be motivated merely by the pressure of his conscience since he knows it to be the truth. Or he can also do this with the imagination that he shall be saved. This enables Papists to allow themselves to be killed by Mohammedans and the heathen. This enables all manner of heretics to die for their sentiments. Suffering itself does not make a person a martyr; rather, it is the cause for which one suffers, as well as the love which one has for this cause. If one dies for the truth, then his death is indeed a testimony; however, the one who suffers will not benefit from his suffering if it does not issue forth from love. "And though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing" (1 Corinthians 13:3). It is love which caused the bride to say, "This is my beloved, and this is my friend" (Song of Solomon 5:16), and Paul, "For the love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Corinthians 5:14).

Secondly, it must occur voluntarily. Human nature fears suffering; however, such fear does not contradict voluntary willingness. When death and the profession of Christ stand in opposition to each other, the faithful professor of the truth will choose his profession and death above life and denial. Neither does he do so reluctantly and scarcely, but with his whole heart. Even though suffering and death make him fearful, and he cannot cast this fear away, he nevertheless conquers this fear, so that he neither yields to this abiding fear nor consequently recants. He chooses to confess Jesus all the same -- come what may. He inwardly desires this and freely offers himself to the Lord, saying, "Here I am." "Thy people shall be willing in the day of Thy power" (Psalms 110:3).

Observe how sorrow and willingness are conjoined in the disciples (Luke 22:45). To them the Lord Jesus said, "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak" (Matthew 26:41).

Thirdly, there must be boldness. Fear indeed remains, and this in itself is not sinful. Boldness conquers fear, however, and perseveres. It renders a man willing to put everything on the line -- even life itself -- due to having such high esteem for Jesus, His truth, and His cause, and to seeing in it so much glory for Jesus and ourselves, and so much benefit for others. Boldness will cause us to own His cause and to despise derision and grief. One will then not show himself to be of a servile disposition; that is, he will neither be filled with shame, tremble, be captured against his will, be forced to give a testimony, nor to present himself as being miserable in order to obtain mercy from the enemies -- thus prompting them to deal gently with him. The enemies have no compassion, for the mercies of the wicked are cruel. They will do what the Lord has decreed concerning them -- no more and no less. In such a display of humility there is some semblance of succumbing and the enemies will become all the more courageous, thinking, "We already have him under control, and we shall be able to push him a little further." Instead -- both by words and countenance -- we must present ourselves as courageous champions who have now entered the arena to oppose our enemy. Such was the case with Peter and John: "Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled" (Acts 4:13). With such boldness Stephen stood before the council, so that all who belonged to the council, steadfastly beholding him, beheld his countenance as being the face of an angel (Acts 6:15). When our life is at stake, we must be as bold as we would be in time of freedom.

Fourthly, there must be caution. This is a beautiful word and many continually have it in their mouth when they do not want to engage themselves. This is as much as being remiss in duty. To yield relative to the cause of Christ is then considered to be peace-loving and wise. Those who boldly own His cause are, in the opinion of such, viewed as unwise, headstrong, and imprudent. They will deem it to be his own fault if such a person gets into an uncomfortable situation and causes others to suffer likewise. Be on your guard against such devilish cautiousness, abhor it, and arm yourself against those who practice such caution -- they betray the church, prevent the confession of Jesus, and are a hindrance to other professors of the truth. Rather, caution must govern us in our engagement. We must not step beyond the boundaries of our calling and condition, run where we have no business being, or cast pearls before the swine. The latter are those whom we have found to become more wicked and stubborn when trying to bring them to repentance by means of the gospel. We must carefully watch against speaking too much or too little while engaged in defending the cause of Christ -- as well for pride, a pedantic attitude, and the seeking of our own honor. We must see the evil from afar and avoid it, unless other circumstances dictate to us that we anticipate it. When the Lord Jesus sent forth His disciples to preach the gospel, He gave them the following instruction: "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves" (Matthew 10:16).

Fifthly, there must be uprightness. All hypocrisy and ambiguity must be far removed from such a profession. That was the sin of Peter, and his first effort to disguise himself is considered as much a denial of Christ as the second and third denial (Matthew 26:34; Matthew 26:70). Rather, in our profession of the truth we must fully own and state the truth of the gospel -- stating clearly, explicitly, and without pretense what is to be found in our heart. We shall have more peace in our heart if we have said too much in seeking to express our faith in evangelical truths succinctly, than if, due to a quiet fear, we have said too little. "In doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity" (Titus 2:7).

Sixthly, there must be an unwavering commitment. It is not sufficient to have great courage before there is a need for it, and to triumph prior to the battle and the victory -- as many have done who have shamefully succumbed and were guilty of denial when it came to the point. It is not sufficient to begin, to persevere for some time, and yet to yield in the end. Rather, we must remain steadfast until the end. You should know from the very outset that, in times of persecution, the antichrist will so conceal his intent and will give in to you in so many ways, that it appears that we are entirely free to remain with the truth and religion -- yes, as if popery is now so reformed as to be almost of one faith with the true Reformed Church. It is but a minor point which is to be overlooked and then you will be free from death and everything else -- indeed, even be amply rewarded. One will be asked to affirm, for example, that he embraces and believes all the truths which are in the Romish church. For popery does indeed believe many truths of the Reformed church, and one must only forsake the errors of Calvin or of those who are in the Reformed church. What does Calvin matter? He was but a man. Furthermore, the Reformed themselves admit that he has erred here or there, and there are many quarrels within the Reformed church, for what the one says the other denies. Thus, without doing any violence to your conscience, you can declare and affirm that you embrace the truth of the Romish church and reject the errors of Calvin, as well as those that are to be found in the Reformed church. Thus, life or death is contingent upon this, and it is but a small point of contention. Be it known, however, that everything hinges on this point of contention (as insignificant as one may make it), for if this point were so insignificant, and if they are so nearly in agreement, why would they then kill anyone for such an insignificant point of contention? It is therefore not so insignificant. It is a departing from, renouncing, and forsaking of the true church and of Christ, the Head of that church, as well as of the truth of which the Reformed church is the pillar and ground. It is a transferring into the assembly and army of the antichrist, who persecutes the true church, sheds the blood of the saints, and opposes Christ. On the basis of that argument one can also become Jewish or Islamic, for some truths are yet to be found with them. It is true that our faith is not based upon Calvin, for he was but a man. We do not wish to defend that in which he has erred. It is also true that the Reformed church is not perfect, and we do not wish to defend the errors of given individuals. If the errors are grievous, then their proponents are expelled. However, to make such a declaration relative to the profession of truth is but a snare to entrap the upright. We must therefore be steadfast in all things and, with Moses, neither leaving one hoof behind nor disengage the least link in the chain. This is the steadfastness which the Lord Jesus requires: "But he that endureth to the end shall be saved" (Matthew 10:22). The Purpose of Profession of the Truth The purpose of this profession is the glorification of our God and the salvation of our neighbor. It is not suffering but the cause which makes the martyr -- and not the cause alone, but it is the objective which makes a good martyr. This profession must proceed from love and be made for a holy purpose. The purpose is, first of all, to glorify God; that is, to make known the perfections of God -- His goodness, righteousness, truth, etc., which come to the foreground in the salvation of man -- through Christ in word and deed, and by giving expression to this by way of a holy life. For, says the Lord Jesus, "Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John 15:8). This occurs when we patiently endure everything which befalls us for the sake of the truth, for when someone suffers for the sake of the truth, the truth will become manifest and be searched and known all the more. "This spake He, (that is, Christ of Peter) signifying by what death he should glorify God" (John 21:19). It is grace to have this as the objective in speaking, conduct, and suffering, and that in turn begets a martyr who is pleasing in the sight of God, angels, and men.

Secondly, it is to the salvation of our neighbor. A Christian does not only desire to be saved himself, but he has love for his neighbor, also greatly desiring to bring his neighbor to the knowledge of the truth, and to repentance and salvation. He perceives that the confession of the Lord Jesus is a fruitful means to that end. He therefore owns His cause in time of peace as well as in time of persecution, and he is glad when he has opportunity for this. He knows that the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church, and that by means of speaking and experiencing the truth others are won. This is his objective according to the apostle's instruction: "... but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers" (Ephesians 4:29). He shows furthermore that suffering for the sake of the truth also has that fruit. "Inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye all are partakers of my grace" (Php 1:7). To love that goal and to have this as the objective in his profession of truth is a glorious and holy endeavor.

God Requires Profession of the Truth

We have thus held before you the nature of professing the truth. This, however, is the duty of everyone who wishes to be saved; salvation or damnation is contingent upon it. Impress the following upon your heart: "Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before My Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 10:32-33). Consider furthermore what is written in Romans 10:9-10 : "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Some seek to pacify themselves in a time of persecution by deluding themselves, "Merely to have but true faith in the heart is sufficient unto salvation. Even if our mouth is silent and even if we externally join the church of the antichrist, this is but an external ceremony which neither benefits nor detracts. He is foolish who thereby endangers his belongings and his life -- belongings and life which are surely worth participation in a mass." This argumentation is refuted by the apostle, however, when he says, "and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Wherever true faith dwells in the heart, there the mouth will not be silent. "I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak" (2 Corinthians 4:13). Add to this: "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God (that is, to be the Savior He is and is declared to be in the Word of God), God dwelleth in him, and he in God" (1 John 4:15). Make as many excuses as you wish, you will but deceive yourself to your eternal damnation, for salvation and damnation are contingent upon this confession. When the church prospers, a multitude of all manner of men will join her; however, they are not all fit to confess Jesus.

(1) Such is true for the ignorant, who do not know God's way unto salvation. They cannot give an account of their faith, for what would they say? They are inexperienced in the Word, the truth is hidden from them, and they have not known the way of peace.

(2) Such is true for those who do not believe in Christ. They may have some book knowledge of Christ, but they know of no transaction with Him to receive Him, cause Him to dwell in the heart by faith, be in Him, and grow in Him.

(3) Such is true for those who have no love for God, for the truth, or for the upbuilding of the church -- those to whom salvation is not glorious and desirous, and who perceive more glory, sweetness, and advantage in earthly things, this life, and the temporary enjoyment of sin.

(4) Such is true for those who daily and in very deed live for that which is visible; that is, in all world conformity and in the indulgence in all the lusts of the eyes and of the flesh as well as the pride of life, while in the meantime satisfying themselves with an external religion of form and custom. All such are not professing the name of the Lord, but are already denying the Lord Jesus in time of peace. To you Titus 1:16 is applicable: "They profess that they know God; but in works they deny Him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate." When persecutions come for the Word's sake, they will drop as ripe plums. The honor of the world, money, and convenience will be worth much more to them than Jesus and all His fullness. They will not be willing to endure either injury or shame for the love of Jesus. Yes, they themselves will become persecutors -- if not the most bitter ones -- of the true confessors of Christ. Many already persecute the truly godly. Know that the Lord Jesus has already -- so to speak, with His finger -- identified you during His sojourn upon earth. "But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it; yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while: for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended" (Matthew 13:20-21); "They ... which ... in time of temptation fall away" (Luke 8:13). And what will be your end? It will be what Paul writes: "Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things" (Php 3:19). Christ, in the day of judgment, will deny you before His Father, before the angels, and before men. "And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity" (Matthew 7:23).

Believers Exhorted to Confess Jesus Boldly

Now I will turn to you, true believers, to stir you up to confess the Lord Jesus boldly. Prepare yourself for the trial of your faith, and strengthen yourself to be steadfast in your confession, for we shall also have our turn. God has always dealt with His church in this manner. God traverses from nation to nation in bringing persecution upon the church. Presently the church in France is having her turn, and it will perhaps soon be our turn, for the church has rarely been so long at peace, as she has been in The Netherlands. The church of The Netherlands is not only entirely corrupt in a moral sense, but also in the manifestation of all manner of new doctrine. Wherever ignorance prevails, errors will surface. It is a certain sign that The Netherlands will be visited by way of either external or internal persecution -- persecuted by men who will not tolerate sound doctrine and who hate holiness of life. The godly will be tried so that the truth of life and doctrine of the few faithful may shine forth according to Paul's prophecy: "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Timothy 3:12). Therefore, be prepared, so that when persecution comes, you may be ready and steadfast to confess Jesus and thus receive the crown of martyrs. In order to stir you up in this respect, I shall add a letter here which I have previously written to some persecuted and oppressed brethren. A LETTER OF EXHORTATION to Be Steadfast in the Confession of the Lord Jesus Christ and His Truth in Time of Persecution and Martyrdom My beloved brothers in the Lord Jesus Christ, who have been deemed worthy by Him to be His witnesses, to suffer for His cause, and to oppose the antichrist! Grace and peace be multiplied to you from the God of all grace and all comfort! As your suffering and steadfastness have come to my knowledge, I think of the words of the apostle: "Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also (evil entreated) [Note: These words are added in italics in the Statenvertaling.] in the body" (Hebrews 13:3). I must also think of the declaration of the Lord Jesus to be made at the time of the general and final judgment: "I was in prison, and ye came unto me" (Matthew 25:36). Since I cannot physically pay you a visit, I will therefore endeavor to visit you with my pen, praying that the omnipotent and good God may bless my address to you to the strengthening and comfort of your soul. Be courageous, you champions of the Lord, and do not succumb in the battle. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong" (1 Corinthians 16:13). Do not give heed to either internal or external persecution. When spiritual light has driven away the clouds of the soul, the heart is strengthened by grace, and internal assaults are rebuffed and have lost their potency, you will then be able to be publicly manifest as a "goodly horse in the battle" (Zechariah 10:3). Our heart is inclined to be tossed to and fro by internal assaults; and even if we persevere, these will cause us to lose courage and joy when enduring suffering. Among the most prominent of these assaults are:

(1) No one knows of my suffering, for it transpires in secret. If I were permitted to suffer publicly upon the scaffold, the Lord Jesus would yet be glorified by me, the gospel would yet be confirmed, believers would be strengthened, and others would be convicted; however, my suffering is now useless and fruitless.

(2) I do not suffer so much for the truth as for my sins. God punishes me for my previously committed misdeeds, and therefore I can only expect distress in my suffering rather than comfort.

(3) I suffer from a bad reputation and crimes are laid to my charge. The best they can do with me is laugh about me, calling me a martyr -- not of the Lord Jesus, but of Calvin.

(4) I do not suffer in consequence of love for Jesus and His truth, but only due to the compunction of my conscience, which cannot believe what one knows to be a lie, nor deny what one knows to be the truth. Or, I suffer and do not recant because I am fearful of being condemned after my death if I were to be guilty of denial.

(5) My suffering is of such long duration, and there is not the least hope of ever being delivered; this makes me discouraged and sorrowful.

(6) It is but an insignificant matter and is merely form and custom. I maintain faith in the heart, even though I join myself externally to them and conform to them; it is all compulsory.

(7) Other godly souls fare so well. Why am I in such misery?

(8) I am always full of fear -- either for death, prolonged and severe suffering, the wickedness of men, or man's craftiness. It is for this reason that I am drawn into suffering and compelled to suffer, rather than that I endure it willingly and courageously. This suffering is too severe for me and I can no longer endure it. I am furthermore concerned about my loved ones who have denied the faith, and above all about my children who have been put into monasteries and who drink in idolatry from their youth.

I shall first endeavor to remove these concerns, and then I shall stir up your souls to be steadfast, courageous, and patient.

First, it is the practice of the enemies to cause believers to die a thousand deaths in secret, for they know by experience that public executions produce more believers than that are put to death. On the other hand, believers wish to suffer in public, being of the opinion (due to their misconception) that they will then glorify Jesus more. You ought to know, however, that the Lord Jesus and the holy angels observe secret suffering as much as public suffering, and God brings your secret suffering to the knowledge of the church and your suffering is spoken of throughout the entire world. Public suffering is frequently intermingled with the seeking of self. The soul will then not be without strife as to whether she is steadfast to gain her own honor, to be free from the shame of recantation, and for other reasons. This will confuse the soul and deprive her of such purity, comfort, and courage in suffering as are experienced in secret suffering. Therefore do not select the manner of suffering -- neither a greater nor lesser degree. The sovereign Lord, who, in His unsearchable wisdom and unfathomable love, imposes upon every faithful martyr whatever befalls him, is pleased to go such a way with you. This way is neither the result of the cunningness and wickedness of the enemies, nor a consequence of our choice, carefulness, or carelessness; rather, it is according to the Lord's decree. It is in this manner that He wills to be glorified by you and to bring you to glory. Those who are suited for suffering of long duration are frequently not suited for public suffering. Fear for a violent death has caused many to recant and deprived them of all composed thoughts relative to faith, hope, and love -- which they at times may have in more abundance when suffering in solitude and for a lengthy period of time. Secret suffering will not always remain hidden. It will all become manifest in the day of judgment and all men will acknowledge you as a faithful martyr. Therefore be silent before God and say with blind submission, "Thy will be done and do with me as it pleases Thee; only give me strength to bear it."

Secondly, there is a spiritual assault by which the soul can be greatly vexed; namely, that one is not suffering for the cause of Christ, but that this is a judgment of God upon prior committed sins and for previously denying Him. Even though such an assault will rob us of courage in our suffering, it does happen to be very beneficial, for this causes the soul to examine herself and thereby is led to Christ. Everything is turned upside down, our previous sins and sinful life come to mind in a lively sense. We begin to doubt whether we have ever possessed grace, are converted, and if everything has not merely ensued from an enlightened understanding. We shall be terrified by death, and be fearful of being damned. See to it that you do not avoid these thoughts; rather, reflect upon them and permit your concerns to have a more intense effect. This is followed by unsettling strife, and this godly sorrow works repentance unto salvation not to be repented of. We shall begin anew as if we had never rightly done so. We shall long for Jesus in order to be a partaker of His blood, and to have Him as a ransom for the forgiveness of our sins. We shall pray, weep, and wait, as well as yearn for Christ to have Him as our Surety. We shall choose Him, receive Him, and by faith bring Him into the heart, surrendering ourselves to Him without any reservation and recantation.

Then there are additional concerns -- such as: am I elect? Is it not too late? Is not the time of grace past? It becomes dark, Jesus hides Himself, the Lord seems to cast the soul away, and it appears as if there is no grace to all eternity. This is followed by an inclination to deny Christ since we feel to be no partaker of Him anyway. See to it that you also do not avoid this battle, for when the battle will be most vehement, grace will break through. We shall then come to Jesus with more composure, perceiving that He offers Himself in the gospel. We shall enter into the covenant of grace, rely upon Jesus with more confidence, give our soul into His hand, and without fear entrust it to Him. We shall thus become conscious that our sins are forgiven for the sake of Christ's blood and that salvation has been merited. From this issues forth peace of conscience, spiritual joy, ardent love for Jesus, and a courageous willingness to suffer and die for His name. Behold, such is the lovely disposition which the soul acquires from the temptation that we are suffering for our sins rather than the truth. We then perceive the contrary, namely, that God has been satisfied, that sins have been forgiven, that God has imposed this suffering upon us, that He calls us to confess His name and glorify Him, and that in this way He will place the glorious crown of martyrs upon us. That which is eternal then becomes glorious and that which is of the world despicable, and this joy makes all that is bitter to be sweet. From our weakness and our earlier denial we shall derive strength, and we shall increase in strength. We thus make improvement by no longer trusting in self, but by standing in the power of God, and, with joyous courage, endure everything to which the Lord calls us by His grace and of which He deems us worthy.

Thirdly, there is the temptation of suffering from an evil reputation of being disobedient to the government, of having committed a given evil, of being stubborn, and being but a martyr for the sake of Calvin and his errors. You must skillfully resist this temptation for you know very well that they do not have an evil deed as a basis for torturing you, but they rather do so to cause you to deny the truth. They have but fabricated this evil reputation. You know indeed that Calvin is not the issue; you do not esteem him more highly than other faithful ministers. You do not rely upon his word but only upon the Word of God. God, angels, and believers also know this -- yes, it is even known to the enemies, and they take occasion to harden their heart and render yours weak by way of this evil reputation. Thus, the Jews dealt with the Lord Jesus and said, "For a good work we stone Thee not; but for blasphemy" (John 10:33); "This man calleth for Elias...let us see whether Elias will come to save Him" (Matthew 27:47; Matthew 27:49). It is therefore no wonder that the enemies, having the same nature, do the same things. The Lord will reveal the reason for your suffering in the day of judgment, and your glory in heaven will not be diminished, but be increased. Be therefore faithful.

Fourthly, it is even a greater trial to be assaulted with the following thoughts: "I am not suffering for the truth but only because my conscience compels me to do so. It is not love for Christ that motivates me, but rather fear of being damned if I recant. My faith, relative to my spiritual condition, is weak. I doubt whether I already have been regenerated, whether Christ is my Savior, and whether I shall be saved -- even if I am suffering and dying for the truth. The unconverted can also suffer and die due to being compelled by their conscience and being convinced of the truth." It is indeed true that salvation or damnation is contingent upon whether we confess or deny the truth. Impress the following texts vividly upon your heart: "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Romans 10:10); "Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before My Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 10:32-33). You thus observe here that it is better to be faithful in your confession -- even if you do so in a deficient manner and due to being compelled by your conscience -- than to recant and do violence to your conscience. Furthermore, if you are mostly motivated by the compulsion of your conscience, do not insist that this is not intermingled with love for Jesus and His truth. You are conscious of the one since it manifests itself most strongly, but if you were to carefully examine yourself and focus but a little upon Jesus, you will experience that you love Him too much to deny Him. You will then say, "Beloved Jesus, I do not desire to deny Thee." Love will indeed manifest itself in sweet affections, but in essence it consists in the will being engaged by the intellect. Therefore, whenever the will consciously values and chooses Jesus, and motivates us to confess Him, then such is a confession of Jesus out of love. Therefore do not let this confuse and discourage your soul, but rather rejoice that your conscience is enlightened and lively, and acknowledge that it is not only your conscience motivating you in your faithful confession. Even if, however, the conscience were silent -- yes, if it were more quiet than the intelligent will -- love would manifest itself all the more. When the sun is down, the stars can be observed much better, for even though they are also present during the day, they cannot be seen due to the presence of a greater light.

Regarding your spiritual state, if there is a heartfelt sorrow, loathing, grieving, and shame about both former sins and your sinful heart at present; if you are exercised to receive Christ as Surety and to apply Him to your soul (even if it is in darkness, strife, and without assurance); if a tender watching over the heart proceeds from this to refrain from sinning; if the inclination arises to cleave to Jesus in all faithfulness and to suffer and die for His name (even if it pleased Him not to give much light and comfort), then it is in truth and there is life and faith. Rely then upon the promises and the Lord will indeed favor you with grace and comfort, even if it be at the very end of your life. It is a much more courageous deed to remain faithful to Jesus in darkness and while being subject to internal strife, than when you enjoy many sweet frames and the comforts of the Spirit. Oh, what a great grace it is to jealously guard your heart, be humble, and run after Jesus with tears in your eyes, for such are frequently most genuine in their spiritual exercises and at times become the strongest Christians! Keep courage.

Fifthly, there will be another temptation in conjunction with the others -- all of which will reenforce each other in bringing us to recantation. The argument is as follows: The difference in viewpoint is but very insignificant. They are only desirous that we would deny the errors of Calvin, and this we can do quite readily, for Calvin has errors which I do not wish to support, and I do not need to suffer for Calvin's sake. They will also permit me to adhere to my faith in my heart. They will not inflict suffering upon me for that reason as long as I externally conform to their conduct, attend the mass, and physically bow before the wafer and their images. This external performance is but ceremonial, and salvation is contingent upon the faith we maintain in our heart. Circumstances are not the same as during the persecutions of the heathen, at which time one was obliged to renounce Christ. The parties in question now confess the truth: Christ is the Savior.

Answer: Many, in denying the truth, have stumbled over this stone. We must therefore consider all the more carefully what snake is hidden in the grass. Everything depends on this small difference -- even if that small difference were ten times smaller. To subscribe to this is tantamount to transferring into the church of the antichrist, thus uniting oneself with that people who persecute the church of the Lord Jesus and have shed the blood of the saints as water. You thus bring upon your soul all the blood of the saints, and you are guilty of all the persecutions as if you yourself had performed them personally. You will not escape the wrath of God over the blood of His saints. Yes, even if they did not require a declaration from you, the attendance of the mass, or the rendering of any reverence to their images, being satisfied that you have left the Church of the Reformation and called yourself a member of the Romish church, then you would have denied Christ, His truth, and His church, and you would have transferred into the bloody empire of the antichrist. Even if you then confess the name of Christ, you are denying Him in deed. Why else do they persecute those who confess Christ in word and deed? They nullify the efficacy of Christ's one perfect sacrifice by sacrificing Him daily unto the forgiveness of sins, and by denying that Christ has also paid for actual sins committed subsequent to baptism. They worship a piece of bread as if it were the glorified Jesus, which is just as much a total denial of Christ as transpired during the persecutions of the heathen. Therefore, give heed. If, however, one goes further than that and attends the mass, bowing before the god of bread and the images, the excuse will not hold that you do it only with the body and not with the heart, for God also wants to have the body (1 Corinthians 6:20). God requires a confession; however, to behave in such a manner is a denial before men rather than a confession. Furthermore, it is hypocrisy when there is a contradiction between the heart and your deeds. Do not think that all this is but ceremonial. It is an actual deed -- an act of idolatry which is expressly forbidden. "Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them" (Exodus 20:5). The faithfulness of the seven thousand who were left in Israel consisted in that they had not bowed their knees to Baal (Romans 11:4). The faith of the heart is of no value if the confession of the mouth differs from it. True faith and the confession of the mouth always go hand in hand. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart...thou shalt be saved" (Romans 10:9); "I believed, and therefore have I spoken" (2 Corinthians 4:13). Also the fact that you were compelled to do this will not absolve you before God. The love of Christ must influence you to such a degree and salvation must be worth that much to you that you will not permit yourself to be compelled and that you are willing to endure all torture for Jesus' sake. Therefore be encouraged -- the suffering which has transpired has already been eliminated and you do not know what suffering will yet come. Only your present suffering is reality and that transpires as rapidly as time passes. Live and let your care be for the day, for you know not what tomorrow will bring. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof" (Matthew 6:34).

Sixthly, there is yet another temptation which brings unrest in the soul: There are so many godly who traverse through this world with ease. They have rest, sit under their grape vine and fig tree, enjoy their possessions in peace, and die in faith. I, however, am plagued all the day, and I am chastened every morning. Why does it go so ill with me, whereas others fare so well? My answer is: "Is not the Lord sovereign? May He not do with His clay as pleases Him? Is it not grace that long since you have not been cast into hell?" It behooves us to embrace His sovereignty with love and to be in subjection to it without quarreling -- especially since we know that all things must work together for good for those who are His (Romans 8:28), and that it is all goodness and love which He, according to His foreknowledge and determinate counsel, causes us to encounter. "For He performeth the thing that is appointed for me" (Job 23:14). Do not be envious of the happiness of others. May not the Lord give as well as take? May He not give of His own to whomever He wills? Is your eye evil because the Lord is good? You ought rather to rejoice that God shows you that He is good. Above all this, however, the Lord shows you greater goodness than all those who spend their days peacefully according to the body. I shall not mention to you the illuminations of the Holy Spirit, the kisses of the Lord Jesus, the sweet comforts, the submissive dispositions, and the disposition of a martyr -- all of which the Lord visits you with at times. There are others who spend their days in darkness, weakness of faith, and in the commission of many spiritual sins -- even though they prosper according to the body. Is the body therefore more than the soul, and the prosperity of the body more than the prosperity of the soul? God on the contrary bestows upon you the greatest favor which a creature on earth can enjoy; that is, to be a witness for Jesus, to show that love toward Jesus can overcome everything, that many waters cannot quench love, to be engaged in battle as a champion against the antichrist, and to anticipate the crown of martyrs. It is the purpose of man to glorify God. The more someone answers to His purpose, the happier he will be. Each of you are more to the glory of Jesus, however, than a thousand others of the godly. Therefore be well-satisfied with your portion and rejoice in it. Thank the Lord that He has deemed you worthy to be martyrs.

Seventhly, the last temptation which I shall propose is this: "My suffering is too severe and it lasts too long; I can no longer bear it and I will yet come to the point where I will be guilty of denial. And besides that, I am very oppressed, since I have been deprived of my loved ones. They have recanted, and my children have been put into monasteries and are raised in an idolatrous environment. Wretch that I am; where shall I flee and what shall I do? I am at the end of my rope." You ought to know that you deem your cross to be too heavy and its duration too long. The fear for suffering prior to its arrival is more severe than the suffering itself. When we are subject to it, and when God calls us to be a martyr, He generally also grants a martyr's spirit. If you become discouraged at times, the Lord will again grant courage and will comfort the soul with inward grace. When grace fills the soul, suffering is no suffering. If Jesus comes in view and His love kindles the love of the soul, you will step over the mountains of suffering as if they were molehills. God knows how much you can bear, and He will not tempt you above that you are able to bear. He will either moderate your cross according to your strength or increase your strength in accordance with your cross. With the temptation the Lord will grant deliverance, doing so by granting you to be content with His will so that His grace is sufficient for you and you can glory in your infirmity, and so that you will "take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake," being strong when you are weak (2 Corinthians 12:10). It can also be that He will make the cross lighter and give you some breathing room, for it is all inflicted upon you by men, but not of men. It is inflicted upon you by God who has counted the hairs upon your head. As He sends it to you in love to glorify you, so He can also diminish your cross -- be it by entirely delivering you from it or by setting you at liberty, all things being possible to Him. Or He may also translate you into glory, saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matthew 25:21). As far as being deprived of your loved ones and their recantation is concerned, it is true and it aggravates your suffering. Jesus must, however, also be worth that much to you. "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me" (Matthew 10:37). Thank the Lord that you have some in this world who are dear to you, so that by forsaking them you may demonstrate your superior love to Jesus. As far as the recantation of so many thousands is concerned, it is indeed true that they are wretched, for they have denied Jesus. Next to the Reformation, however, the antichrist has not received a heavier blow than the one inflicted by their recantation, for thereby a great multitude is now intermixed with popery who hate popery in their heart, and through them more light is kindled among the papists. They perceive the inferiority and falsehood of their religion as well as the veracity of the Reformed religion. They are capable of turning away from popery and transferring to the Reformed camp when times change -- a change which is imminent. As far as your children are concerned who are confined to monasteries, God will care for them according to His immutable covenant, namely, "to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee" (Genesis 17:7). The Lord is providing for them as far as their sustenance is concerned, and preserves them from the many vanities of the world in which they otherwise perhaps would have drowned. He can preserve them in the truth, or, if they are not acquainted with the truth as yet, reveal it to them. If one day times change, God will then cause them to acknowledge, confess, and experience the truth. Let there be much prayer for them and surrender them to a faithful Lord. Therefore let nothing disturb you, and in all things prevail as a champion. Let none of these things move you, and neither count your life dear unto yourself (Acts 20:24); "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Revelation 2:10); "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses" (1 Timothy 6:12). My beloved brothers, from whom the luster of glory emanates, permit me to encourage you to be valiant and steadfast. If you are not in need of such encouragement, being sustained by the Spirit of liberty Himself, having striven valiantly until now, it is nevertheless my duty and inclination to share with you what the Lord has granted me. Permit me therefore to show my love to you, so that I may hear in the Day of Judgment, "I was in prison, and ye came unto Me" (Matthew 25:36).

First, consider the examples of so many thousands of martyrs who, striving uprightly, have received the crown of glory and who are now triumphant in heaven. It is God's way throughout all ages to call some to be blood witnesses in order that the Lord Jesus may be glorified, the world be brought under conviction, and the church be strengthened. If I may understand something about the Revelation of John, it appears to me that the fourth vial is now being poured out and that the fifth vial is about to be poured out upon the throne of the beast (that is, Rome) which not long after that is destined to be destroyed, whereby the empire of the antichrist will be obscured. Some time subsequent to this, the beast himself will be eradicated and a glorious state for the church will follow upon this. It thus appears to me that you are among the last who have the privilege of being martyrs for Jesus. I repeat, "among the last," for I believe that the church, also in other lands, must expect persecutions -- however, they will be short. Therefore do not succumb in the end, but take as an example of suffering and steadfastness all who in former times have been martyrs for Jesus' sake -- who were persecuted, tortured, and killed by Jews, the heathen, and the antichrist for the name of Jesus. In all this, however, they remained conquerors, kept the faith, and confessed Jesus until the very end. It would be an impossible task to enumerate all their glorious testimonies, severe and lengthy suffering, valor, and faithfulness. This is not subject matter for a single letter. I shall only present the register recorded in Hebrews 11:35-39. "Others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: and others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith," etc. Behold, such was the steadfastness of the martyrs -- yes, many having too great a desire for martyrdom have imprudently offered themselves, did not hesitate to encourage the martyrs engulfed in flames, and at times would cry out, "I am also a Christian." Women would even hasten to the places where believers were gathered, having heard that the enemies were on the march to murder them all. These women would be fearful that they would come too late; they also took their children along so that they also would be privileged to become martyrs in their youth. Would you then succumb who are called to martyrdom? Will their steadfastness not stir you up to endure everything -- as they did -- steadfastly and resolutely for the name of Jesus? The greater the suffering, the greater will be the glory. Do as the companions of Daniel did, who would not worship the image upon the command of Nebuchadnezzar, and said to him, "O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and He will deliver us out of thine hand, O king. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we shall not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up" (Daniel 3:16-18).

Secondly, compare your suffering for a moment with eternal glory. What do you have to lose? You will say: "Honor, possession, father, mother, children, conveniences -- yes, even life." And what have you to suffer? You will say, "Hunger, cold, nakedness, stinking prisons full of abominable vermin, heavy chains, bloody labor, merciless beatings, scarcely being able to lie down to get a little sleep -- and then in the end to be abused, burned, hung on the gallows, and to be eaten of dogs." Know, however, that all these are but light tribulations which will readily pass. Paul refers to them as such in 2 Corinthians 4:17. Will recantation yield you all those desirable things again, and will recantation enable you to flee all these miseries? You yourself know that such is not the case. If by recanting you would get that wish, and you then would have an unbearably turbulent conscience which would not give you rest day nor night; and the wrath of God filled your soul with terror and anxiety and your body with painful stones, with unbearable gout, with evil sores, with painful discomfort, exhausting you to the very bone so that you would then seek death without being able to find it; or your wretched soul, having been restored to all freedom, perhaps in all luxury, would depart with the sense of hellish agony some days after you had recanted, would you then have gained anything? Be assured that as soon as you would have recanted, you will regret it, and you will wish and seek to be in that state again. By their fallen cheeks, their dejected countenance, and the pallor of death, it is to be perceived how the internal condition is of those who have denied Jesus and retained their possessions. They elevate your state a thousand times above theirs. You are now in this state and you cannot recover what has been lost. The wrath of God would pursue you if you again regained everything. The presence of your wife and children would only aggravate the distress of your soul. The avoidance of the water would be the equivalent of jumping into the fire, and all would at last end in damnation. Be assured -- for experience teaches this daily -- that the enemies do not believe your recantation. You would still be hated by them, for they seek after your life. Is it then not better to remain steadfast in your confession of Jesus, since you cannot gain anything by recantation? And if you could gain the whole world with it and would do injury to your soul, what would you give as a ransom for your soul? "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for My sake shall find it" (Matthew 16:25). Place eternal glory over against all your suffering and the pleasures of the world, and you will come to the same conclusion as Paul did: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Romans 8:18). Oh, how blessed, how sweet, and how glorious it will be, regardless of what the manner of your death may be, to be ushered into heaven by the holy angels after death! Oh, how all the inhabitants of heaven will arise when they witness the triumphant entrance of a valiant champion of the faith who has overcome! How friendly will be the manner in which the Lord Jesus will welcome such a soul! What joyous hallelujahs will resound because of your victory! It exceeds our understanding. Our tongue is too weak. No eye has seen it, no ear has heard it, and it has never arisen in the heart of men what God has prepared for those who love Him -- and particularly for His faithful blood- witnesses. The inheritance of the saints in glory, the immediate communion with God, the life of beholding Him, to be satisfied with the Lord's all-sufficiency, to be irradiated by the light of His countenance, to be embraced by His love, to be surrounded by His omnipotence, to be filled with His goodness, even to shine forth in pure holiness, to be aflame with love, to be incomprehensibly joyful in God, to be among the angels, to be in the company of the souls of the most perfectly righteous men, and while being in His immediate presence, together with them behold and experience the perfections of the Lord, and thus magnify and praise these perfections -- that is felicity and that is glory. To be united with one's own and yet glorified body; to be conformed to the glorious body of Christ; to stand at the right hand of King Jesus in view of the entire world -- particularly of those who have tortured and killed them; there, according to soul and body, to be glorified and crowned as conqueror; to be ushered into heaven by the Lord Jesus and there to eternally experience undiminished fulness of joy without end and without fear -- all this is the great benefit which the Lord has laid away for all those who fear Him and put their trust in Him before the sons of men. Attentively consider the following passage: "After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number...stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;...What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?...These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple: and He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Revelation 7:9; Revelation 7:13-17). Now compare all your suffering and all that is glorious and delightful upon earth with this eternal and felicitous glory, and you will not be able to make a mental comparison, since the difference is too great. Would this then not cause you to rejoice in your suffering? Will this not make you courageous in the warfare in which, by the power of God, the victory is sure and the crown a certainty?

Thirdly, view the Lord Jesus from every perspective. He is so eminently glorious that it is our greatest glory to confess Him as our Lord and King. We are therefore not to be ashamed of Him. God the Father makes confession about Him by declaring from heaven, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." The angels bore witness to Him at His death and resurrection -- yes, all angels worship Him. How boldly and joyously have all martyrs professed Him and sealed their profession with their death! Would you then be ashamed of Him? Is He not worthy of a measure of suffering? He is worthy a thousand times to be professed by you while suffering in some measure. How much good has He done for you! Out of love for you He left His glory, took upon Himself your human nature, doing so in the form of a servant, became poor so that He had nothing upon which He could lay His head, and took upon Himself your sins and put Himself in your stead as Surety. How heavy a task it was for Him to deliver you from eternal damnation, to reconcile you with God, and to lead you to glory! God's wrath upon sin caused Him to crawl over the earth as a worm and to wallow in His own blood -- blood coming forth as sweat due to the hellish agony within His soul. He was betrayed, shackled as an evildoer, and led away captive. The ecclesiastical authorities judged Him worthy of death as a blasphemer of God, He was beaten with fists, and they spat in His blessed countenance. He was smitten in the face, and He was mocked in a most contemptuous and grievous manner. He was delivered to the Gentiles, dragged from the one court to the other, led along the streets of Jerusalem with a robe of mockery, placed on a duo with a murderer, and had His death demanded as if He were the most wicked among the people. He was scourged in a most wretched manner and crowned with a crown of thorns, which was pounded into His head with sticks. He was led outside the city while bearing His cross, and died on the cross in the greatest distress of soul while suffering the most extreme measure of scorn and pain. All this He suffered out of love for you in order to deliver you from sin and damnation. He made a good profession, namely, that He was the King and the Savior -- a confession which cost Him His life. Would you now be ashamed of Him and deny Him? Would you not suffer somewhat for this loving and loveable Jesus, and not show by your suffering how dear and precious He is to you? The Father, in consequence of His suffering, bestowed this honor upon Him: "And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Php 2:11). Would you then withdraw yourself from the opportunity to render Him glory? Would you, in response to all His love and goodness to glorify you, defame Him, be ashamed of Him, and deny Him? Far, far be it from anyone that this would arise in one's heart. Therefore let the love of Christ constrain you, and let nothing be so precious to you that you would not be willing to set it aside for Him, thus to glorify Him by way of a bold profession. Rejoice in the fact that you still have a body and a life to demonstrate thereby that you love and honor Him. Be joyful that your suffering continues somewhat longer, so that your profession should continue that much longer, and you should glorify Him for a lengthy period of time upon earth.

Fourthly, acknowledge the grace which God has manifested toward you. Others He permits to remain choked in sin, permitting them to walk on the way to destruction. However, He has bestowed the riches of His grace upon you. How wondrous are the ways by which He has drawn you to Himself! Every deed and every step is an evidence of His love. Reflect upon the entire way along which the Lord has led you since your youth. His eye remained upon you when you departed from Him. He was longsuffering when you persevered in your stubbornness. All the day He stretched forth His hands to you when you were gainsaying. He allured you, drew you with love, convinced you of your wretched state, revealed His Son to you, gave you faith whereby you received Jesus as your Surety, made you a new creature, gave you a new heart, and caused you to walk in His holy ways. How frequently has He comforted you and spoken to your heart! He enabled you to remain faithful when He called you to suffer, has sustained you hitherto, and kept you in the faith by His power. He grants you His Spirit which makes you bold and courageous, and makes you willing in the day of His power in the beauties of holiness. He gives you power when you are faint and increases your strength when you have no might. At times He causes you to behold the crown and causes you to taste how good it is to be near to God. He causes you to esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of the world and addresses you as follows: "My son, be valiant, be of good courage, and fear not, for I am with you. Be not perplexed for I am your God. I take hold of your right hand, strengthen you, and sustain you with the right hand of My righteousness. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee" (Isaiah 43:2). Will not all this divine benevolence kindle your love, so that you will say, "I shall cleave to the Lord; He is my portion and therefore I shall hope in Him. I surrender my body and soul to Him; let Him do with them as pleases Him. May He but give me faithfulness as I presently suffer for His Name's sake, and may He make me steadfast to valiantly endure all that is yet to come. For nothing will befall me except it be through His hand. I look beyond my enemies, for God commands them as follows: "Curse David, and inflict such and such upon him." That -- and no more -- will they be able to do to me." Therefore, as champions of God, be vigilant and strong, and the Lord will strengthen your heart.

Fifthly, the faithful profession of Christ and His truth is of an unspeakably great advantage for the church in general as well as for specific individuals. The church will not be eradicated by torturing and putting martyrs to death, but she is built up by it. When persecutions for the Word's sake come about, the church is purified, the chaff blows away, the gold is separated from the dross, the luster of the church becomes brighter, and she inspires more awe in the eyes of the world. The church is much more glorious when she is small and pure than when she is a large, mixed multitude. If in the one locality the church is eradicated due to having been thoroughly corrupted, the number of the truly godly being extremely small, and there being practically nothing left, she will raise her head in a different locality all the more gloriously. If there were as yet many godly left, their dispersement would grant them the opportunity to let their light shine in other localities. Every individual believer becomes, so to speak, a minister and establishes a little church in those localities where he resides -- as occurred during the persecution of the church recorded in Acts 8:4. It is true that prospects are gloomy and will even become more gloomy. Furthermore, I believe that other churches will also be refined by persecutions. I am assured, however, from the Word of the Lord, that the antichrist will no longer have dominion in such a general sense as in the past. The Lord will preserve for Himself a portion that will persevere and not lose courage. Rather, they will remain standing as champions and battle against the antichrist with the word of their testimony until the Lord -- one day, suddenly and unexpectedly -- will pour out His judgments upon him and will glorify the church.

Brothers, you are the pillars of the church. You are the voice whereby the glory of the Lord Jesus is declared and your testimony resounds throughout the world. See to it, therefore, that you remain steadfast, for every eye is upon you. Thus, the enemies will not be able to rejoice, and the godly will neither be put to shame nor be grieved for your sake. Your steadfastness causes many to come to themselves, and they begin to seek after the truth of the gospel. Who knows how many children you will beget in your bonds! Those who stumble along are strengthened, and those who for fear have succumbed and recanted when the first storm arose, will, by reason of your steadfastness, become bold to reverse their recantation and by renewal to strive and suffer for the truth. Due to your steadfastness the enemy will have much more work than he had first anticipated.

Maybe God, who brings forth new martyrs by the thousands, will cause your church to arise from its ashes to the remorse of her enemies. For indeed I anticipate something great from the restoration and steadfastness of such an innumerable multitude. When fire is restricted, it will burst forth all the more vehemently. If the enemy would have left alone those who by renewal united with them and would have been satisfied with their recantation, then the church in that locality would, humanly speaking, be finished. However, now there is yet hope. Behold therefore what a great matter the Lord has entrusted to you! Those who have become bold by your steadfastness would again succumb due to your cowardice and recantation. Therefore, quit yourselves as men and you will prevail with your testimony.

Sixthly, and as far as you personally are concerned, has not your martyrdom yielded you much benefit? Prior to this you lived in, or rather fell into, many sins which now do not have the least effect upon you. Perhaps some of you have been converted who were unconverted while enjoying freedom. Some of you who for fear have denied the truth now courageously endure everything. Has not your knowledge of divine truths increased and become more spiritual? Has not your heart become holier? Have not your prayers become more vehement? Do you not have more frequent and intimate communion with God? Do you not see more of God's friendly countenance? Do you not enjoy more comfort? Are you not able to rejoice more in the hope of glory, and has not all that is of the earth decreased in value in your eyes? And even if there come days of darkness, weakness of faith, and strife, are not your wrestlings that much stronger and does not the Lord time and again strengthen your soul? Would you be willing to exchange your condition for the crown of a king and all the luxuries of the ungodly? Observe therefore and gratefully acknowledge the grace which God bestows upon you. Oh, how precious you are in the eyes of all the godly throughout the world! How many texts are there not in the Bible which declare you blessed! Permit me to bring them to your remembrance. "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you" (1 Peter 4:14); "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven" (Matthew 5:11-12). Consider Paul's triumphant declaration shortly before his death as a martyr: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing" (2 Timothy 4:7-8). Lift up your heads; by faith make the words of Paul your own, and emulate him by saying, "Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For Thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Romans 8:33-39).

Therefore, my beloved brothers, be courageous in the battle. Do not withdraw yourself from the battle, and do not surrender one inch, for the more you capitulate, the more your enemies will exact of you. They are never satisfied. It is safer to stand firm in a matter, in which you in certain circumstances would perhaps concede, and which stand could be called impudent, than it is to concede too much. You will be more secure and avoid many snares. Your conscience will enjoy ten times more peace concerning the first than over the latter. The more courageous you are, the more the enemy will lose courage, the more you will gain in strength, and the more glorious will be your victory. Let them do with your body as they please, or rather, what God wills that they will do to you, and, with David, strengthen yourself in the LORD your God.

Possess your soul in patience -- of which you are truly in need. Arm yourself against any desire for revenge even entering your heart. Yes, even if you could avenge yourself, do not do so, but be as a sheep that is dumb before her shearers. Pray for those that persecute you, and reward them good for evil. Let the Lord Jesus continually be an example for you in order that you may follow His footsteps. The weapons in our battle are not carnal, but nevertheless are strong Godward. Arm yourself therefore with the entire armour which the apostle proposes in Ephesians 6:1-24. The meek person is to be preferred over the strong person. Patience not only reduces the suffering, but it yields luster to the one who is patient, and it convicts and even conquers the enemies. Consider therefore that time is short, and that your suffering is transitory. It proceeds from the hand of the Lord and is to the glory of Jesus. Let patience therefore do her perfect work; that is, suffer all things with quiet patience for the duration of this suffering, for the victory and the crown will ensue.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 15:58). Be faithful unto death and the Lord will give you all the blessings which He promises to those who overcome. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. I will give thee a crown of life. He...shall not be hurt of the second death. To him...will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it; to him will I give power over the nations: Confession, and conduct and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of My Father. The same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before My Father, and before His angels. Him...will I make a pillar in the temple of My God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of My God, and the name of the city of My God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from My God: and I will write upon him My new name. To him...will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in His throne" (Revelation 2:1-29; Revelation 3:1-22). Behold, such are the invaluable promises which God makes relative to faithfulness and the endurance of a small measure of suffering. Therefore, be faithful unto death. I conclude with the benediction of the apostle: "But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto His eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you, Amen" (1 Peter 5:10-11).

Beloved brothers who are adorned with glorious, divine luster, I remain with my whole heart, Your loving fellow brother in Christ.

Final Exhortation to Believers

Citizens of the Netherlands, we shall now turn again to you. If this discourse has stirred up your heart and you have become desirous to confess the Lord Jesus, make work of this at once. You are living in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation which neither knows God and the way of salvation, nor has a desire after godliness. Come out from among her, having as your objective to confess Jesus by a godly life, so that every one may come under conviction by reason of your self-denial, humility, meekness, love, and good-naturedness; and so that everyone may perceive the heavenly nature which is within you. Speak of Christ, of the necessity and efficacy of His suffering, and of the nature of faith and regeneration.

Join yourself to the godly so that it may become manifest that you are one with them in your support for Christ and your opposition to the world. Remain with the true church and be diligent in attending public worship and in partaking of the Lord's Supper. Thereby one confesses the Lord Jesus. To separate yourself from her and to remain on your own is a quiet denial of Christ and His cause. If shame and injury come upon you due to your confession, rejoice in this, for it is a small beginning of martyrdom. When the Lord brings persecution upon the church by the world, if errors are stubbornly adhered to in the church and if she persecutes such ministers and others who promote the truth and godliness -- then oppose such and be a companion of those who fear the Lord and profess His truth. If you are cast out by those who persecute you, are compelled to join them, are robbed of your possessions due to refusal to do so, are cast into prisons, are treated as criminals -- yes, are threatened with the sword, the gallows, and torture, or even put to death -- then pause for a moment and reflect upon the fact that the Lord calls you to martyrdom. It is one and the same thing whether persecution takes place by those from within or from without by the antichrist. Your confession is the same, your faithfulness is the same, and your reward is the same. Do not be disturbed if men cause you to suffer under an evil name, for that is an old practice. The Lord Jesus was also persecuted and killed due to an evil reputation, for they said, "We do not stone thee for any good work, but for such and such a reason." The old pretenses are: "You are disobedient to your government, you are resisting her, you are instigating rebellion, you are causing schism in the church, and you are promoting soul-damning errors and heresies, seeking to promote them. Enough of this fuss; away with him." I repeat, do not be troubled concerning them, but remain steadfast in cleaving to the truth, as well as in bearing witness to it in words, conduct, and suffering.

If persecutions proceed from the antichrist, you are permitted to flee as far as you can in order that you may be spared for better circumstances. However, do not flee where you feel you can best get through the world, but whereto the godly flee, where there is a church, or wherever there is a possibility to institute one. Do not esteem worldly possessions that highly that you would bring yourself into danger for them.

One may flee the persecutions of the antichrist; however, you may not do so if persecutions arise within the church, where the antichrist already has been eliminated and cast out -- who now does nothing else but quarrel with fire and sword. One may not flee persecutions arising within the church, but must stay in order to bear witness against the persecutors -- and if necessary, to seal the truth with his death. New persecutions require new martyrs. If, however, we cannot escape the hands of the antichrist by way of fleeing, we must know that God calls us to bear witness to His cause and to remain steadfast. When speaking of fleeing, we do not understand this to refer to ministers and elders. The exception is when their congregations, in fleeing, call them to accompany them and they thus remain with their congregations. Otherwise, they must remain with their congregations as long as they remain in those localities and are in a condition for them to do service there, even if it means the sealing of the truth with their death before their eyes. In order to arm yourself against persecutions -- whatever their nature may be -- do the following:

(1) Read frequently the Word of God. Do so not only for the strengthening of your faith, but also to be confirmed more and more in the truth, and thus to be more qualified to fight and suffer for it. It is the sword of the spiritual soldier.

(2) Frequently read books about martyrs -- be they either old or new ones -- for then you will get a lively impression of their spirit and valor, as lively as if you were present. This will enliven the heart and give a desire for martyrdom, and if your turn comes, these well-known examples will be in your memory to strengthen you. You will also observe the mistakes they have made, providing you with good beacons of warning.

(3) Have much fellowship with the godly, speak together about giving witness both in times of peace and of persecution, and encourage each other.

(4) Pray frequently that the Lord may give you a bold spirit, knowing that if the Lord would withdraw His hand, you would not be able to stand, but that even a little fear would cause you to recant. Know your weakness and distrust yourself, however much you may currently be convinced of the truth. Cleave to the Lord so that you may be faithful in the hour of temptation.

(5) Frequently exercise faith in Christ in order to be assured of being a partaker of Him, and to learn by experience how good it is to be near to the Lord, so that faith may be all the stronger -- also then when the feeling disappears and faith is assaulted from all sides.

(6) Be very diligent in sanctification, so that you may lead a blameless life and have a conscience void of offense before God and man, for "the righteous are bold as a lion" (Proverbs 28:1).

069. Chapter 64: Contentment

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-FOUR -----

Contentment

Since profession of the truth generally has an adverse effect upon one's temporal belongings, and since this impedes so many in being bold in their profession, it is therefore necessary that we endure such adversity by being content with the will of God in regard to temporal circumstances. This we shall now discuss. The word "contentment" in Hebrew is dai, that is, fullness, abundance, and sufficiency. Frequently this word is attributed to God. The Lord calls Himself El Shaddai; that is, the God who possesses everything and who is able to bring forth everything out of His fullness. It is generally translated as "the Almighty One." In Greek the word is autarkeia which is a coalescence of two words: "being sufficient" and "self." This is indicative of having sufficiency for ourselves or with ourselves, for no one can be content unless he has enough, and we have enough if we no longer desire anything. Thus, contentment does not consist in the multitude of possessions, but in the fulfillment of desire. If the desire is great, then much is needed for the fulfillment of this desire; if it is small, only a little will suffice. A little will fill a little bottle and much is needed to fill a large barrel. Man needs but little to live in the service of God, and if his desires are commensurate with what he needs, a little is sufficient to fill his desires and his stomach.

Contentment is a Christian virtue consisting in a correspondence between the desire of God's children and their present condition--this being true because it is the will of their God in Christ and according to His sovereign determination. In this they rest with delight, in quiet confidence, joyfully, and with gratitude, trusting that the Lord will cause the present and the future to turn out to their advantage. This causes them to utilize their present condition to the advancement of their spiritual life and to the glory of God.

Contentment is a Christian virtue of God's children. The unconverted are to all good works reprobate and are not acquainted with the nature of this virtue. When they perceive it in God's children, they despise it as a low level of intelligence, day-dreaming, stoic insensitivity, and deem them unfit for loftier matters -- this being a treasure which is hidden for them. God's children, however, have this virtue in principle, and they, perceiving the beauty of this virtue, make diligent effort to possess this in greater measure. The heart is the true seat of this virtue. Contentment is not a matter of words. It is not of a compulsory nature, nor does it consist in refraining from pursuing the goods of this world. It is not a mental determination to keep ourselves satisfied, but it is a disposition of the soul. The intellect, the will, and the affections are in a contented disposition, and out of this propensity actions issue forth which are consistent with this disposition. This disposition is only to be found in the children of God -- in the godly. "But godliness with contentment is great gain" (1 Timothy 6:6). The Object of Contentment The object of contentment is our current condition. Believers, being and remaining in the state of grace, encounter many things according to soul and body. Sometimes the condition of both agree in a general sense with their desires, and sometimes there is a very great discrepancy between the two. It is easy to be content if the Lord grants the desire of the heart. If, however, our circumstances do not agree with our desires, it will be a difficult task to bring our desires in harmony with our circumstances. The Christian is exercised about this. Possessions do not yield contentment. Man can be either discontented or contented, irrespective of whether he is rich, of average means, or poor. One who is rich or one of average means must strive just as much to be contented with his state as the poor person in his. We may not strive to be in different circumstances, thinking that we shall then be better off. Rather, we must labor to conduct ourselves well in the condition in which we are. A poor person thinks, "If I were only of average means"; one of average means thinks, "If I were only rich"; a rich person, "If only I had more"; a single person, "If only I were married; " a married person, "If only I were single"; a sailor, "If only I had an occupation on shore"; a craftsman, "If only I were a businessman"; etc. These are foolish thoughts. Contentment does not consist in this, but in a being contented that the condition in which we are is best for us. The exhortation is as follows: "Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have" (Hebrews 13:5). The Nature of Contentment The nature of this virtue consists in there being harmony between our desires and our present circumstances. Man is not naturally self-sufficient; he is but a vessel into which something can be inserted. And, in order to be filled, he has desires which -- as hands -- reach out for that which he deems to be fulfilling to him. After the fall our desires have become inordinate, both in reference to the matters desired, which cannot fulfill, as well as to the manner desired; doing so too vehemently and passionately. This vice is still partially present in the children of God after regeneration and yields them much grief. They, even though they are judgmentally opposed to this, also desire much. They desire that all be well according to their aspirations. These are such, however, that they cannot be filled with that which is of the earth, whereas their desires ought to be moderated according to the good which they have -- be it much or little.

We must not eliminate all desires -- as if the absence of desire would constitute true contentment. That would be to dehumanize man and to make him less than an animal. Our desires must be contrary to that which is evil. That which is evil must be a burden to us, must grieve us; one must feel pain under it, and must have the desire to be delivered from it. That which is good must be desirable to us and our desires must be focused on its enjoyment. We must pursue these desires by using those means which are subservient to this. Thus, contentment neither excludes the having of desires nor the use of the means, but it excludes all those desires which are focused on sinful matters. This relates to all desires for all that which exceeds our needs; all vehement and passionate desires for something which normally could be lawfully desired; all mental anguish, heartache, and pouting if things do not go our way; and the use of all evil means for the fulfillment of our desire -- whereby all lawful means are neglected, and God is tempted.

However, all of this does not yet constitute contentment. Contentment consists in the correspondence of our desires with our present circumstances, and in a willingness to be in the circumstances wherein we are and in none other. Prior to being in such circumstances we may indeed have desires (a matter which we deem to be essential); however, we must do so with a true and righteous judgment. Also, if we come into difficult circumstances, we may then indeed desire to be delivered from them and to come into better circumstances. This is not contrary to being contented. However, while we are in our present circumstances -- whether they be good or evil -- we must be content with the present and regulate our desires in harmony with the conditions in which we presently are. Even natural men -- who adhere to a fatum stoicum (that is, it must be this way; nothing is to be done about it) -- being desirous to quiet themselves, say, "If one cannot do what he wishes, then one's wishes must be according to his ability." Thus even they demonstrate that contentment consists in a correspondence between desires and current circumstances. The godly have much more reason to regulate their desires according to their circumstances and to cause their will to be in harmony with this -- it being the will of God. This is not only applicable to the physical but also to the spiritual. To be contented when things do not go according to our wishes is a difficult task in both respects; however, this is much more true in the spiritual realm. If we are in spiritual darkness, suffer from spiritual desertion, are spiritually assaulted, and are subject to the power of corruption, then we must also be content and regulate our desires according to our circumstances. We must do so not because such circumstances are desirable to us or ever could be, and not because we should not endeavor to be delivered from them, but because it is the will of God not to give us more grace presently, since it pleases Him to lead us along that way to salvation and the glorification of His Name.

The Foundation of Contentment The foundation upon which our present circumstances are based, and why we are satisfied with them is because that such is the will of our God in Christ Jesus, and He has directed these circumstances to be thus. Man cannot love that which is grievous and desire it as such. Rather, there is a different reason why believers embrace current circumstances which are evil and grievous -- the reason being that it thus pleases God. It is one thing to appease ourselves simply because our condition is according to God's will (which cannot be opposed), and that all must yield to God's power and hand. Then there is not a desire that such be the case, for the desires do not correspond with the circumstances. Rather, it is a being compelled to acquiesce, and this does not differ much from pagan fate. It is quite another thing to embrace the will of God as being most eminent in and of itself, and as desirable to them. In order for the will of God to be efficacious unto contentment, we must consider God to be our God -- our reconciled God in Christ Jesus. The exercise of faith is of great significance here -- be it while expressly receiving Jesus as offering Himself, and thus coming unto God, or be it that faith is operative reflexively and with assurance concerning our state of grace. The exercise of faith is also of great significance when one may consider himself as being reconciled only by virtue of the propensity of faith, apart from a renewed manifestation of assurance, and when one only cleaves to Jesus in order to have a part in Jesus, thus coming to God through Him while exercising hope. The stronger faith is, the greater the contentment with the will of God will also be. This believing disposition engenders love toward God, and love acknowledges the majesty of God and the suitableness of subjection. Love engenders a delight in the will of God, and thus love for the will of God conquers and prevails over love for self. In the meantime, one will grieve over that which is evil; this may and must remain. The love toward God's good pleasure has the upper hand, however, and therefore the desires of the believer correspond with his circumstances. He will desire it to be so -- even if it is with tears in his eyes -- because the Lord wills it to be so. This will is precious to believers above everything else and makes all that is bitter to be sweet and that which is heavy, light. Observe this in the perfect example of the Lord Jesus: "For I came down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (John 6:38); "Nevertheless not as I will, but as Thou wilt" (Matthew 26:39).

The Effects or Fruits of Contentment The effects or fruits of contentment are:

(1) A being pleased with given circumstances since it is the will of God. "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities" (2 Corinthians 12:10).

(2) A quiet confidence. This is not a being careless and insensitive, but an active embracing of the will of God which causes believers to be silent -- not reluctantly or in discouragement, but in believing submission. "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth; because Thou didst it" (Psalms 39:9).

(3) A cheerful or joyful disposition. This does not pertain to one's tribulations as such. "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous" (Hebrews 12:11). The will of God makes that which is bitter sweet, however, and therefore the apostle says, "We glory in tribulations also" (Romans 5:3); "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations" (James 1:2).

(4) Gratitude. A Christian views the hand of God as being the hand of a loving father. He knows from experience that it is good for him to be afflicted and that He afflicts in faithfulness. Therefore he gives thanks to God in everything (1 Thessalonians 5:18), and says with Job, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job 1:21).

(5) A resting and trusting in the Lord's providence. A contented person finds such delight in the will of God that he has neither concern for the present nor for the future, since he believes that God is his Father and that therefore all -- whatever God brings upon him -- will be well and to his advantage. He is therefore confident and well-satisfied. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in Him will I trust" (Psalms 91:1-2).

(6) Spiritual growth. By way of contentment we shall escape many obstacles which hinder us in the practice of godliness. Malcontent either engenders many sins and keeps us in a sinful condition, or it impedes the practice of many virtues. By way of contentment we shall "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us," which will enable us to "run with patience the race that is set before us" (Hebrews 12:10). Only when we bear our cross with contentment, will the cross be to our benefit and we be sanctified by it (Hebrews 12:10). If we may glory in tribulation then tribulation will work "patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope" (Romans 5:3-4). Then the cross becomes a school. "Blessed is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of Thy law" (Psalms 94:12).

(7) That God is glorified thereby, for believers thus demonstrate that the Lord is sovereign and may do with His creature according to His good pleasure. They then manifest that God is all-sufficient and that, when having God, we can miss everything else. Then it will become manifest that God is good, faithful, true, wise, and omnipotent. "That the trial of your faith ... might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Peter 1:7); "Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf" (1 Peter 4:16). The truth we have presented and explained is suitable to convict the unconverted of their evil condition and the godly of their deficiency and sin.

Discontentment: A Characteristic of the Unconverted The unconverted are discontented.

(1) Something is always wrong. He either has no child or he has one too many. He has learned the wrong trade, for "if I were a storekeeper, knew a trade, or had such and such a skill, then I would be much better off. In whatever I begin, I go against the stream; where will it ultimately end? Such and such get all the customers and enjoy love and esteem; however, they turn their backs upon me. Everyone opposes me; they shortchange me, deal with me and my family in an ungodly manner. They slander me, rob me of my honor, and everyone is after me." They are always surrounded by bears so that neither day nor night can they find rest due to external and internal unrest.

(2) Another person may be lethargic and lazy -- and thus insensitive.

(3) Another person has a sweet and tender disposition and can endure everything. (4) Others use reason and perceive how matters are, or else they perceive that there is no way out. Therefore, patience par force; that is, there is nothing to be done about it. Or they will engage themselves in such a manner that all will go well.

(5) Others, when the shore eludes them, hold on to a floating patch of grass and occupy themselves with one thing or another.

(6) Others become completely discouraged and despondent and would be inclined to hang themselves in order to bring their suffering to an end.

(7) Others, even though they can handle the present, are concerned about the future. Every evil tiding causes them to tremble, robbing them of the peaceful enjoyment of the present.

(8) Others want to find their satisfaction in eating and drinking, money, prestige, and the gratification of their sinful lusts.

(9) Others seek gratification in the work of their hands and burrow as moles in the earth to derive their gratification from that. Or they seek it in men by being obsequious, flattering, and by worshipping them in order to gain their favor. Every unconverted person seeks rest in this manner without finding it, and his contentment is nothing but unrest.

(10) Another will fare somewhat better and, according to his saying, is satisfied with the will of God -- even though he has never sought nor obtained reconciliation with God and therefore cannot expect God's help or favor.

All whose disposition agrees with what has just been stated ought to know:

(1) That you are without God and Christ, and that God is not for you, but against you. If He stirs things up, who will then quiet matters down? If He forsakes you, what will then be of assistance to you? Then you cannot but be filled with fear -- within and without.

(2) That all your tossing and turning, and all your contentment and discontentment, are nothing but sin and filth in which you wallow as a swine wallows in the mud. It makes you increasingly abominable in the eyes of God and increasingly a stench for the truly godly. And if you imagine your current circumstances to be either satisfactory or unsatisfactory, the outcome of all that you pursue will have evil consequences for you and will issue forth nothing but discontent, sorrow, terror, apprehension, and fear -- until eternal damnation will rob you of all that with which you now occupy yourself to some degree. The wrath of God and the fire of hell will then forever occupy you. Therefore, turn to the Lord and seek reconciliation with God in Christ. He will then be your satisfaction, and being satisfied in Him, all things will work together for good. The Godly: Also Subject to Discontentment

I shall now address the godly. It is sad that those who have God as a reconciled God, who have chosen God to be their only and all-sufficient portion (while rejecting all that is not God), yet have so much discontentment, because they, both according to body and soul, do not fare in this world as their nature would desire to have it.

(1) Their eyes and heart look too much to that which is of the world; that is, to that which is lofty, beautiful, and good, as well as to food, drink, and clothing -- as if that could yield them any satisfaction.

(2) They also want to have their way, and if this does not occur and men do not yield to them, they are sorrowful, fretful, and angry.

(3) They eat their bread with discontentment since the quantity and the taste is not such as they would desire it to be.

(4) They tremble and quiver as far as the future is concerned. They say, "What shall we eat and wherewithal shall we be clothed?"

(5) Anxiety troubles the heart, and concerns take away the joy of life.

(6) They waver in regard to God's providence.

(7) They immediately perceive God as being angry with them.

(8) They reject their spiritual state.

(9) They make themselves vulnerable to the assaults of the devil who then easily gets hold of them, tossing them to and fro.

(10) Spiritual life will lose its vigor, and if the Lord were not faithful and immutable, they would be corrupted in body and soul -- so severely can worldly tribulations injure them. In such a condition they delight in being pitied and desire to be comforted, but in a manner concurring with the receipt of their desire -- then they would be encouraged. Sorrow must first disappear, the matter must first be attained, they must first see and possess that from which they will live, and then comfort will have an effect. Then they would be able to live carefree and serve the Lord. The Godly Exhorted Not to Be Fretful

What shall I say? Shall I pity you? That I shall do, but in such a manner that I shall neither harm nor encourage you in your sin. Rather, I shall do so by stirring you up to overcome these unproductive anxieties, this wicked discontentment, and these concerns which drag you down.

First, as we uncover all this, you yourself will perceive that you are yet very carnal and that you focus your attention upon things which are insignificant. Are you then still of this world as others are whose portion is in this life? Is that which is of the world able to satisfy you? When you entered into the covenant of grace, did you not stipulate that whatever would befall you according to the body would be to your satisfaction, or did you change your mind and have you rescinded this? Why should there be more concern for your body than for your soul? Why should bodily deficiencies be more grievous than the deficiencies of the soul? Be ashamed before God and man that you are yet so carnal.

Secondly, do you not perceive that this is idolatry? There is a secret departure from God, a neglect of depending upon Him, and a secret denial of God's providence. There is a secret accusation of cruelty and unwillingness on His part to care for you, of mutability, and of not being faithful to His promises. Under pretense of being concerned about necessities, there is a desire to rely upon temporal things and a living by bread alone -- and even if one does not solely put his trust in temporal things, it is nevertheless partially true. God and the things of this world together must grant you satisfaction. Or else, do you serve God in order that He would give you temporal things? What an evil disposition this is! How far removed this is from Asaph's disposition: "Whom have I in heaven but Thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee. My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever" (Psalms 73:25-26)! Upon coming before God, be therefore ashamed about your sinful disposition.

Thirdly, these concerns and anxieties which cause one to tremble issue forth from a proud heart -- relative both to God and to man. It is pride relative to God, as it implies that one is worthy of something and that God is obligated to serve us according to our wishes. If one were truly conscious of his sinfulness and guilt, and would reflect upon this, he would come to a lower place and sink away in amazement that God has still borne with us -- yes, and has given us so much above others who have much less than we do -- considering that we have sinned so grievously and are perhaps even more sinful than they are.

It is also a manifestation of pride relative to our neighbor, for we look toward those who are superior to us and ask, "Why not I as well as he?" Very seldom does the concern truly pertain to what is presently lacking, for as far as temporal needs are concerned, little suffices. Instead, it pertains to our lust to possess, to have as much as the other, and the retention of dignity by not being despised due to being poor and having to depend on the church or others. It is true that this, when considered in and of itself, should not be a matter of indifference to us. It is God's will that we have desires for our well-being and that our journey through this world be with dignity. However, we must overcome and deny these desires when God wishes to humble us and keep us humble. Therefore, concealed under the cover of being concerned about necessities, dignity, and being able to serve God, is pride. God wishes to be served by the one while having a higher position in the world, and by the other while in a more lowly position. The will of God must be our delight in whatever circumstances we are. Discouragement about being in a lower position is nothing but pride. Therefore, become humble and you will be delivered from many unprofitable cares.

Fourthly, all your concerns are in vain and you will not gain one penny by them. God has already decreed from eternity how much you will have. There is a "convenient" portion (Proverbs 30:8) which God has appointed for everyone and which He gives at His time. No one will take away this portion from you nor will it be diminished. With all your concerns and anxiety you will neither add one nickel nor break or change the determinate counsel of God. There were covetous Israelites who gathered much manna; however, when they came home, they had no more than their measure. There were others who, either due to lack of strength or being at a location where not much had fallen, had gathered little. When they came home their measure was also full. The one had no leftovers and the other did not lack anything (2 Corinthians 8:15). "Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? For after all these things do the Gentiles seek" (Matthew 6:25; Matthew 6:27; Matthew 6:32).

Fifthly, you dishonor God and harm yourself, for by way of these nagging concerns you show that it does not suffice you to have God alone as your portion and that you cannot be satisfied with Him unless you have as many temporal goods as you deem necessary. Would it not be a dishonor to a father who has sufficient wealth if he were to permit his children to suffer want in spite of their cries and supplications? Are you then not also the cause that others by means of your dissatisfaction and fruitless concerns would begin to think about the Lord in this manner, as if He had neither love, mercy, compassion, nor care for His children? You would glorify Him, on the contrary, if you would be satisfied with your present circumstances, and if your felicity consisted in the enjoyment of God Himself. As far as you yourself are concerned -- you bring yourself into continual unrest, apprehension, fear, and anxiety. You rob yourself of delighting and rejoicing in God. You impede your growth, since your disposition displeases God, and renders you unfit to appropriately use the means for spiritual growth. Your concerns will cause the Word and your good inner motions to be choked, thus rendering them unfruitful (Matthew 13:22). Unbelief has opportunity to surface and will toss the anxious soul to and fro. The desire for religious exercise decreases and free access to God is hindered. The thoughts that these adversities come upon you in God's wrath cause the soul to tremble. Thus, to a great extent quietness, dependence upon God, a childlike confidence in God, and walking with God disappear. Would you lose all this for a greater or lesser quantity of bread, for getting your way, for your own honor, and for the future, of which you do not know how it will be? Oh, these matters are too insignificant to permit the well-being of your soul to dissipate.

Sixthly, after the Lord will have delivered you from your perplexity -- which He certainly will do in His time -- then, due to your previous dissatisfaction and grumbling, you will have made yourself incapable of being truly grateful to the Lord, and a sense of shame about your prior distrust will cause your soul new grief. It can also happen that the Lord, upon having fulfilled your inordinate desire, will send a leanness into your soul. You will then be confounded and wish that you were in the previous strait when you were in a better spiritual condition. Therefore conduct yourself well while you are in a school in which you can learn much that you cannot learn in a time of prosperity. Take heed therefore, and be on guard not to be murmurers and complainers about your condition while walking according to your lusts (Jude 1:16). Rather, possess your soul in patience and be satisfied with the present. You will then be fit to serve the Lord in both prosperity and adversity.

Exhortation to Strive for Contentment

Therefore, children of God -- either rich, of the middle class, of limited means, insignificant, poor, oppressed, or tossed with tempest -- whoever you may be and whatever your circumstances may be, you are all in need of an exhortation, for no circumstances in and of themselves yield contentment. Learn to adjust your desires to your circumstances -- regardless of what they may be -- and do not endeavor to adjust your circumstances to your desires, for there would be no end to that. Cast dissatisfaction far away from you as being a harmful pestilence for your spiritual life, and possess your soul in contentment. To that end you must first of all meditate upon all forceful exhortations. Hear them from the mouth of the Lord, speaking to you in this way: "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass" (Psalms 37:5); "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee: He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved" (Psalms 55:22); "Be content with such things as ye have: for He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Hebrews 13:5); "Therefore take no thought ... for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things" (Matthew 6:31-32); "Bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure" (Isaiah 33:16); "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you" (1 Peter 5:7). Do not readily pass over these texts, but give attention to each one -- yes, to every individual word. Take note of these words as being addressed to you by the God of heaven. He not only commands you to take no thought, but also to be content. Does not the command of God suffice so as to motivate you to render obedience? Is not His exhortation sufficient to stir you up? Take also notice, however, of the promises which the omnipotent, good, and true God makes in addition to this: "He shall bring it to pass; He shall sustain thee; He shall not forsake thee; your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things; He careth for you." Are the promises of God not enough for you? Would He say it and not do it? Therefore, be satisfied, delight yourself, and rejoice in His promises, which will most certainly be fulfilled. It is true that the Lord does not always fulfill His promises when we judge it to be most suitable for us. However, the Lord will most certainly do it at His time. It is thus best if we do not receive it at our time; there is yet something to be learned by us and we must first be capable of using the promises well. It is the Lord's wisdom and goodness that He postpones the matter; however, the fulfillment is beyond doubt. He has not promised to give you a certain quantity, but rather as much as you will have need of. That ought to be sufficient for you and He will most certainly give it to you. Therefore, "though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry" (Habakkuk 2:3). Even if you do not perceive any means by which or from where it will come, He is almighty. He can also do it without means and sustain you and your children without food. Or else He will provide the means -- even if ravens would have to bring it to you; even if He would cause bread to rain down from heaven; even if He would have to multiply flour and oil; or even if He would have to close the mouths of the lions and cause the fire to have no power. Therefore, be still and see the salvation of the Lord.

Secondly, is not God, who is your Father, sovereign? Would you wish that He were not so? You will indeed reply, "No I am glad that He is so and do not wish to stand above Him. I approve of His sovereignty, and even if He were to kill me, I would worship His sovereign majesty." However, here the will of God stands over against your will. You say, "I wish to have this," and God says, "I do not wish to give this to you; such and such is the measure that you will have." Whose will shall have the upper hand, however -- God's will or yours? Since you know that you cannot prevail against God, will you therefore fret and grumble, as children sometimes do toward their parents? That would indeed be a striving against God. Since He is sovereign, however, His will is supreme, and you approve of it with delight, subject your will to His will, and will what He wills. Delight yourself in your circumstances, since it is the will of God concerning you -- especially since God is your Father to whom you pray daily, "Thy will be done." Since you subject yourself to His will in prayer, should you then not also subject yourself to His will in His dealings with you -- even if they are not according to your desires? Submit yourself therefore to God and glorify Him in doing so.

Thirdly, did not God, by saying, "I am your God!" cause Himself to be your portion so that you would enjoy all felicity in Him? If you have the all-sufficient One as your salvation, are you then still in need of anything else? Is He not better to you than a thousand worlds, a piece of money, or a piece of bread? Therefore, speak and practice what the godly did. "The Lord is my portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope in Him" (Lamentations 3:24). As you consider God -- the only blessed God, the God of full salvation -- to be your portion, turn to Him in times of distress, take refuge with Him, delight yourself in Him by faith -- even if it pleases Him not to give you the measure of enjoying Him as you would desire. This is laid away for you in eternity. Delight yourself in having Him as your portion, and let this satisfy you while foregoing the things of the world which you would desire to have. To that end, hold before yourself the example of Habakkuk: "Although ... the fields shall yield no meat ... yet I will rejoice in the Lord" (Habakkuk 3:17-18).

Fourthly, the very God who has given you what is most precious to Him, namely, His own Son Jesus Christ, in order to deliver you from your wretched state and to bring you to eternal glory (which He has laid away as an inheritance for you (Romans 8:32)) -- would He permit that you would truly lack anything as far as the needs of your body? "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things" (Romans 8:32). Behold, Christ has been given you as a Savior, you are partakers of all the benefits of the covenant of grace, and salvation is your eternal inheritance. Is that not sufficient for you? Must a piece of money and a piece of bread yet be added to this before you will be satisfied? Be ashamed that you think such thoughts. Would He who has given you that which is superior and eternal deny you that which is needful for your body? Would not He who has given you your life and body, also give you food and clothing? "Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment" (Matthew 6:25). How do you dare to think such a thing? Therefore, be content with your present circumstances, and it will suffice you. Adjust your desires to your circumstances.

Fifthly, what is the world to you? What is it that you are so desirous for? What is it that you are so concerned about? Is it not all transitory? You yourself will not remain here eternally, and you, as well as all that exists in the world, do but exist for a moment. Why then do you trouble yourself so much about it? When death comes, it will not grieve you that you had so little in this life, nor will it render you joy if you had an abundance; you will not die any more peacefully because of it. If you were to consider every day as being your last and you were to imagine continually that you are presently dying, you would not be disquieted by whether you have either more or less -- which you presently are doing. Therefore, remain focused upon the transitory nature of your existence and the insignificance of all that is of the world. Simultaneously focus upon the promises of God: He, as an added benefit, will bestow the things of the world upon you as you have need of them, and will care for you. You will then learn to be content.

Sixthly, has a godly person ever lacked anything? If you read the entire Bible, you will not find a single example. Consider your own case. God cared for you when you were small. He provided clothing for your convenience, breasts to be suckled, a bosom at which you could be cherished, bread and clothing as you grew up, and He has nourished you from the moment of your existence until now. And when you came into perplexing circumstances, did He not frequently deliver you? Would God then cease at this moment? He who grants the young ravens food when they cry to Him, provides food for the birds of heaven and sustains all that lives, who grants the ungodly food and gladness, would He forget you? Would He refuse to give you that which you need? Therefore, be content, trust in Him, and be satisfied with His dispensation. Even if the measure is not according to your desires, it will be as much as you have need of. That is sufficient and that ought to be sufficient for you. The Blessed Benefits Issuing Forth from Contentment

Seventhly, contentment engenders many good things. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Romans 8:28).

(1) There will be a quiet spirit, which is of great price in the sight of God (1 Peter 3:4). There will be a great inner delight. A contented person tramples upon all that is of the world, lives above that which is visible, and is beyond the reach of all the arrows of the enemies.

(2) There will be alienation from the world. Man by nature is greatly occupied with his body and with making provision for it by way of temporal things. There is still much to be found of this in a regenerate person. If, however, he becomes content with the will of God, he then begins to disassociate himself from the world and does not seek gratification in it, but sojourns in it as a stranger.

(3) It is a state in which there is prayer and communion with God. Since God is the believer's portion he delights himself in this and observes God's hand in all that he encounters, believing that it is to his advantage -- even when a knife is used to cut open a boil. If he is in need of something, he prays in faith and believingly anticipates that which he has need of.

(4) There is a frequent experience of the help of God. To perceive that God looks upon him, hears his prayer, and delivers him, is ten times more precious to a believer, yielding him incomparably more joy than if he were to be translated from a state of extreme poverty to extreme wealth. This experience strengthens him in believing that the Lord will also deliver him time and again in the future. He who has delivered me from the bear and the lion will also deliver me from this Philistine. He who has delivered me from six troubles will not forsake me in the seventh.

(5) There will be gratitude. If we lack everything and see no way out, and God then grants us His help, a piece of bread will taste better than all delicacies enjoyed in prosperity. Then a shelter behind which there is refuge against rain and wind is more delightful and convenient than a palace previously would have been. The soul then lifts herself up to the Lord, acknowledging Him as the Giver. Then the soul will rejoice in the Lord and acknowledge herself not worthy of the least of all the Lord's mercies. The confession will be, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits. Who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies" (Psalms 103:2;Psalms 103:4).

(6) There is a longing for the state of glory. Then the believer will perceive that it is not to be found here below, but in heaven. He will therefore long to depart and to be with Christ. He will comfort himself with this expectation and will thus be strengthened and encouraged to endure all tribulations. He will then rejoice that rest has been laid away for him, and he will be hastening to enter into that rest.

(7) There is the manifestation of holiness. As the cares of this world are the thorns which choke the good seed, contentment likewise renders one fit to deny self, to be humble, to trust in God, to delight himself in God as being his portion, to freely own the Lord's cause, and to demonstrate that there is an all-sufficiency in God. Here is the fountain of all godliness.

Objection: Some may perhaps say, "I would indeed be content if I but knew that I was a child of God, that the Lord was near to me, and that He would cause me to sense His goodness."

Answer: This is as much as to say, "If I were only in heaven, I would be satisfied." No, we must find satisfaction here below in the will of God, by faith. Unbelief concerning your state issues forth from discontent and not from your lack. As long as you are not satisfied except your desire be fulfilled, so long will you also be tossed to and fro as far as your spiritual state is concerned, and your soul will be as "a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed" (James 1:6). In order for faith to be exercised, you must be content with the present, and upon being content you must then exercise faith; these two belong together. May the Lord grant you both!

Objection: Others will say, "The Lord does not hear me, I am not delivered, and my perplexity becomes greater all the time. How can I then be content?"

Answer: Do you now see that your contentment is contingent upon possession? No, not to possess and yet to be satisfied with the will of God, trusting that there will be deliverance -- that is true contentment. The reason the Lord does not give it to you is because you do not yet need it. The Lord wants to teach you to be content with Him alone. He wishes to guide you into the proper use of what is good. He wishes to comfort and help you in a different manner from what you would prescribe to God in your foolishness.

Guidelines for Learning How to Be Content If you wish to learn how to be content, then practice the following:

- (1) Always consider what you deserve, and you will then be happy that you are not yet in hell.
- (2) Look at others, and you will not want to exchange your condition with theirs. The one will have much less, and will be much more wretched than you are according to the body and will be an example to you as far as contentment is concerned. The other person will be without grace, and you would certainly not wish to trade places with him.
- (3) Live only by the day and do not take upon you the difficulties of two, ten, or a hundred days. This would be too great a burden for you. Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof.
- (4) Your difficulty is perhaps not as great as you make it out to be -- this in consequence of your desire being excessive. You must therefore make more of an effort to adjust your desire to your circumstances -- considering it to be the will of God -- rather than seeking to improve your circumstances in accordance with your desire.
- (5) Make use of the means with all diligence and faithfulness so that your conscience will not accuse you, and leave the outcome to the Lord. Trust in His promise and He will make it well.
- (6) Let your focus continually be upon heaven, and consider the insignificance of all that is upon earth. The nearer you are to God, the more you will be at a distance from the creature. Everything will pass away, but he that doeth the will of God shall abide forever.

070. Chapter 65: Self-denial

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-FIVE -----

Self-denial The denial of self issues forth out of love for the will of God, and a being content with that will. In Greek we have the word aparneomai, which is derived from arneomai. This means a total, complete, and radical rejecting and casting away of property and honor. It means a relinquishing dominion over, denial of, renunciation of, a not knowing or acknowledging something to be one's property, and thus a forsaking of and desisting from it (Hebrews 11:24). It is also referred to with other words, such as the mortifying of one's members which are upon earth (Colossians 3:5), the putting off of the old man (Ephesians 4:22), and a crucifying of the flesh with the affections (Galatians 5:24).

Self-denial Defined

Self-denial is a Christian virtue, granted by God to His children, whereby they, out of love for God's will, neither give heed nor yield to their intellect, will, and inclinations insofar as they are in opposition to the will of God -- and oppose and suppress them instead. They do so by a voluntary forsaking and rejection of all that pertains to their natural well-being, if God's cause demands such from them -- this to the honor of God and the welfare of their neighbors.

Self-denial is, first of all, a Christian virtue. Pagans have observed that their inner peace has been disturbed by their lusts. Some therefore sought to extinguish them by way of reason and appeared to practice self-denial in regard to some things. However, it did not issue forth from the right motive -- love for the will of God. They did not have the right objective in view, but rather it was a seeking of self (be it in a different manner from others), resting in this as their peace and seeking to be honored by men. Their self-denial was thus a splendid sin which had a counterfeit luster, and was not accompanied by deeds. Our reference here, however, is to the self-denial of a Christian as being exclusive of all inordinate self-love (and self-reliance which issues forth from this) and seeking of self. Such self-denial issues forth from love for the will of God and culminates in the glorification of God.

Secondly, the moving cause of self-denial is the Lord and not man himself. Man is too deeply immersed in self-love to be able to rid himself from it. And even if he could divorce himself from this, he would not be able to bring himself into the opposite virtuous disposition. Self-denial does not consist in a negation, but is rather a propensity. It is the Lord who grants this grace to His children, for He grants them spiritual life in regeneration (Ephesians 2:1; James 1:18). Through this virtuous disposition He causes them to be active and thus works in them to will and to do (Php 2:13). He particularly works in them the mortification of sin: "... but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live" (Romans 8:13). God, having given life in the soul, stirs up this life and renders it active by His prevenient and cooperative power. The believer, uniting himself by faith with Christ -- and through Christ with God -- takes hold of His strength as his own, and by reason of this received strength is active in mortifying sin within him. God is thus the original cause, and man having been affected by this power, is himself active in the casting out of sinful self-love and its consequences, as well as in purifying and adorning himself with the contrary virtue. "Let us cleanse ourselves" (2 Corinthians 7:1); "... work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do" (Php 2:12-13).

Thirdly, the subjects of self denial are the children of God. The unconverted are void of all spiritual life and therefore the motions and operation of life cannot come forth from them. Rather, it is a gift to God's children as presently being in a converted and believing state. They are those who are Christ's disciples and follow Him (Matthew 16:24). Self-denial does not consist in a few deeds, but is rather a propensity and disposition of the heart. Their heart has been turned away from self-love and a seeking of self -- albeit imperfectly. The one has made more progress in this respect than the other. The stronger this disposition is, the stronger and more pure the deeds will also be. What is true for all virtues is true for this virtue: In their essence they have been infused by God and are strengthened by way of much exercise. This is the reason why the one progresses in the one virtue and the other in another virtue. Once this virtue has become deeply rooted, the person who practices self-denial will have much inner peace. He will not so readily be enticed to entertain ulterior motives, or be envious, wrathful, and guilty of misuse of words -- all of which frequently issue forth in a rash manner due to self-love and a seeking of self. He does not fear evil tidings, harm, or whatever may externally affect him, but is quiet and thoughtful, while at the same time engaging in his duty with boldness. All of these do not move him, and all that he does renders him pleasant to all -- before God and before men.

Fourthly, the object of self-denial is man himself. God has created self-love in man, and mandates the exercise of this love in the second table of the law by giving command that we are to love our neighbor as ourselves (Matthew 22:39). After the fall, however, love has become entirely distorted, as it causes man to be opposed to God, to make himself as God, and wanting all to end in man. This principle governs fallen man in his operations, and he wants everyone to function toward him in harmony with this principle.

What Self-Denial is Not

One must not deny his spiritual self, that is, one's regenerated self, which Paul refers to as I in Romans 7:20. This is the sin of many true, but nevertheless weak, believers: Upon falling into a sin, the arising of a sinful thought, and an assault by the devil, they immediately reject their spiritual state and think, "I have no grace; I have deceived myself and it has been nothing more than imagination." To do this is to deny received benefits and in some measure a grieving of the Holy Ghost. This is a manifestation of pride, for it suggests that we are naturally much more virtuous than others, as well as that the former good spiritual frames, motions, and deeds had come about by our own strength. Therefore, refrain from rejecting your spiritual state; preserve what you have, and render honor to God.

One must also not deny his natural self; that is, the inclination to promote the well-being of the body or one's health, the inclination for food, drink, clothing, etc. "For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church" (Ephesians 5:29). If, however, this inclination stands in opposition to Christ and His cause, we must deny all this and deem it to be but loss and dung.

We must also not deny the desire for the well-being of our soul, the fear of hell, the desire for faith, hope, and love, and a desire for communion with God and felicity. This was one of the erroneous arguments of the Labbadists whose activities the Lord has overturned.

They insisted that love for all this -- since it would make us happy -- should be rejected as impure and abominable before God and that one ought not to come to Christ with such love in order to become a partaker of Him. They insisted that one should first have died to and denied this, for else one would make Christ a servant of sin and of the sinner; or else, one should only come to Christ from the perspective of and out of love for the glorification of God for His very own sake. In this they hindered poor souls, as they would first teach the denial of love for these spiritual benefits and their salvation, bring them to view the glory of God and stir up love to glorify Him for His very own sake. Only then they would lead them to Christ. They thus misled longing souls, and made themselves guilty of the damnation of the souls of those who, as a consequence of this, have died unconverted among them. They thus opposed the Word of God which stimulates man, either by fear for evil or by a desire for salvation, to run to Christ and to believe in Him. For a more comprehensive treatment of this refer to our work Doctrine and Life of the Labbadists, beginning with page 15. The Specific Aspects of Self-Denial

Instead one must deny his sinful self; that is, there must be a denial of the old Adam in general with all his motions and desires -- whatever the nature and contrary to whatever commandment these motions may be, and whatever the faculty of the soul and of the body may be by which such motions are executed.

Specifically, one must, first of all, deny his natural and darkened intellect; that is, to refuse to make a rule of doctrine and life. We do so when we say, "I understand =x' to mean this, and I cannot comprehend it any other way. This I may abstain from, this I may do, and this is not sin." One then relies upon such argumentation. However, the natural man does not understand the things which are of the Spirit of God (1 Corinthians 2:14). We must renounce this corrupt intellect and not give heed to or follow it. "Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ" (2 Corinthians 10:5).

Secondly, we must deny our own will. Man wants to have his own way -- no matter what the cost. If he has an impure lust, it must be satisfied. If he has the lust of gluttony, it must be satisfied. He wants to do whatever pleases him, and he says, "Who is lord over me?" Others must also behave according to his wishes and, as a king, he would wish to prescribe laws and to have that all would end in him, as if he were a god. If this does not occur, he becomes dissatisfied, envious, wrathful, and vengeful. The man who seeks himself thus becomes an abomination before God and man. The Lord Jesus said, "... not as I will" (Matthew 26:39), and He teaches us to pray, "Thy will be done" (Matthew 6:10).

Thirdly, we must deny our inclinations. Natural man is empty and desires to be filled. He does not know God as the all-sufficient One and he has no desire after God. His passions therefore focus on the creature and he says to whoever appears to be capable of entertaining him, "be thou my satisfaction." He does not cease desiring until he gets what he wants; and if he does not get it, he becomes restless and fretful. To such inclinations we must not yield. "Dearly beloved, I beseech you ... abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (1 Peter 2:11).

Fourthly, we must deny our own honor. There is no sin more common to man and more deeply rooted in the heart than a desire to be honored. Even if one has the most despicable disposition and even if his conduct is abominable, he nevertheless wishes to be honored and somewhat esteemed. In all that he does he has his honor in view, wanting others to acknowledge and treat him according to what he imagines himself to be and considers himself worthy of. He who fails to do so, or does something which appears to dishonor him, must expect his wrath. Such an objective and such a desire we must purge ourselves of. "Let us not be desirous of vain glory" (Galatians 5:26); "Let nothing be done through ... vainglory" (Php 2:3).

Fifthly, we must deny our desire for possessions. Man's corrupt nature focuses on the physical. He desires to possess much, puts his trust in it, and determines to live from it. If he lacks all this, he is discouraged; all his passions, objectives, and seeking are solely focused on possessions. If he acquires it, he is encouraged and rests in it. A person who denies himself, however, is satisfied with necessities and purges himself of a desire to have much. If he does not have much, he is well satisfied; and if he prospers, he does not set his heart upon it. We find the following exhortation in 1 Timothy 6:8-9 : "And having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." If the cause of Christ requires it, the person who denies self will relinquish all that he has -- even that which is needful -- and deem all that stands in opposition to Christ to be no more than loss and dung, as Paul did (Php 3:8).

Sixthly, we must deny our friends. Man will very readily cleave to another person who either loves or pleases him. Father, mother, children, husband, or wife are very dear to the heart. God commands appropriate love in the second table of the law; however, we so readily make an idol of them, cleave to them in an inordinate manner, and rely upon and put our trust in them. The person who denies self purges himself of such inordinate cleaving -- particularly if it draws him away from the genuine practice of religion and the profession of the Lord Jesus. Then he knows no father, child, or friend. "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me" (Matthew 10:37); "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14:26).

Seventhly, we must deny our life. It is the duty of a Christian to preserve his life. To cleave to it, however, as if it were tantamount to salvation and felicity itself -- and thus to quake and tremble when thinking about death -- issues forth either out of ignorance concerning eternal glory, from not believing that we are partakers of this, or due to a condemning conscience conveying to us that we shall be eternally damned if we die in such a condition. A Christian must therefore not be so attached to his life, but must by faith commend it into the hands of his Father and rest in this. If then the cause of Christ is at stake, and we must either forsake our life or forsake and deny Christ, the person who denies self will surrender his life and will be glad that he has something precious which he may yield to Christ. "If any man come to Me, and hate not ... his own life also, he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14:26); "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself" (Acts 20:24). The Motivation for Self-Denial: Love for the Will of God The essence of self-denial is that its acts ensue out of love for the will of God. It is the believer's desire neither to give heed nor yield to his desires concerning the aforementioned matters, insofar as they are contrary to the will of God, but rather to oppose and purge himself of them.

(1) He does so out of love for the will of God. Man will not forsake that which he loves except there be something superior which he loves more. A person who denies self loves God above all that exists -- also far above himself. Since he loves God above all, he also loves God's will above all -- also above his own will. Since God loves holiness and hates sin, and since God commands the one thing and forbids the other, he also loves the one and hates the other.

(2) From this love proceeds that he does not give heed to his lusts. He does not lend his ear to them, nor does he even consider whether he will conform to his desires.

(3) He does not yield to them. He does not do the will of the flesh nor of the mind. He is neither a servant of his desires and lusts, nor does he obey them.

(4) Rather, he resists his lusts when they surface, suppresses them, and promptly casts them out -- as one, without hesitation, would shake off fire from his clothes.

(5) Yes, he roots them out, for he cannot endure that lusts continually arise in his evil heart. He is not satisfied with rejecting lusts as they arise, but does not even want them to arise. He therefore seeks for a purer motive. He purifies his heart by faith, strives for communion with God, and endeavors to fear and love God, so that his heart may attain to a holier disposition. Desires will arise out of such a heart which are more holy and less sinful, and thereby the regenerated man will have more power to deny the lusts of the flesh.

(6) Yes, if the cause of Christ necessitates it, he will be more ready and willing to depart from all that which he was permitted to have and enjoy without sinning in doing so -- it being the will of God that he surrender all for Him and His cause. In this manner the person who denies self will know whether having possessions is contrary to or agrees with the will of God. The Objective of Self-Denial: The Glory of God and the Welfare of Our Neighbor The objective of self-denial is to glorify God and to promote the welfare of our neighbor.

(1) The objective is not to eradicate all desires -- and thus to be without fear for evil and a desire for that which is good. To do this would be to dehumanize man and to render him incapable of serving God according to His will and being of benefit to his neighbor.

(2) The objective is also not to receive honor from man, nor to be esteemed as a saint; for that would be the ultimate in hypocrisy.

(3) The objective is also not to merit thereby something before God. Such is the practice of some within blind popery, who, due to their erroneous objective, use erroneous means. They deprive themselves of lawful foods, walk about in a hairy garment, do not sleep upon a bed, scourge themselves, and perform similar examples of will-worship, which are "not in any honour to the satisfying of the flesh" (Colossians 2:23).

(4) It is also not the objective to base one's salvation upon this self-denial. That would be a pagan activity. Rather, the objective in self-denial is,

[1] the glorification of God as being holy, worthy of obedience, and the only lawgiver. This is true for themselves, and also to others they reveal that God is to be acknowledged as such, and ought to be obeyed. And if the cause of Christ necessitates it, then with the denial of all that is dear to us (which apart from such circumstances would be lawful to desire and enjoy), one has the objective to glorify God in that He is both sovereign as well as that He may require again all that He has given. We thus indicate that He is so precious that we would let go of that which is most precious for His sake.

[2] In self-denial one's objective will also be to be beneficial to one's neighbor; that is, to adorn godliness so that the ungodly may be convicted and converted, and the godly be aroused to deny their sinful self also, and willingly to forsake everything for the cause of Christ. The Converted and Unconverted Distinguished

We have thus presented to you the nature and the attending circumstances of self-denial; this can serve as a mirror for you. The unconverted may thus perceive his failure to deny self, and his living for and cleaving to the world and his own lusts. A converted person may thereby also detect his faults, the extent to which the old man is still present within him, and in what measure he still cleaves to his sinful self. In order to make this even more clear to you, we shall place a person who does not deny self in contrast with a person who does deny self. A person who does not deny self:

(1) Is a slave of his lusts, makes that which is of the world his portion, and insists that his lusts be satisfied at any cost. He clings as tenaciously to worldly things as a bat bites into bacon -- even though it has been nailed to a piece of wood. It is either a desire for money, honor, entertainment, immorality, or food and drink which ignites his lusts, and he must have it even if it is contrary to his judgment, and even if he is tired of sinning.

(2) Entertains great thoughts about himself. The one is beautiful and attractive in his own eyes, the other is wise, the third is of noble descent, the fourth is rich, and the other is a scholar. And thus everyone has something which he imagines himself to be -- even if in reality this is not true. He will puff himself up concerning this as a balloon filled with air.

(3) Has a proud disposition of the heart engendering a desire to be honored and perceived as such. He is worthy of this, and it is his due. Even though he is conscious himself that he is not what he imagined himself to be, he nevertheless wishes to be honored, served, revered, and loved.

(4) Has himself in mind when he is or intends to be in the presence of people -- not to take care of that which is honest in everyone's view, but to be honored by men. This is his objective when he dresses himself. His choice of color and fashion; his decision to join or abstain from certain company; the manner in which he carries himself; and his speaking or being silent are all governed by a seeking of self. If his ego did not stir him up, he would be lazier than a donkey, grimmer than a hog, more careless than a beggar, more foolish than a fish, and more talkative than a fool. However, his ego is the wind in his sails that renders him active.

(5) Takes careful notice of what everyone says of him. If he is praised -- even if it is in his presence -- he is wonderfully delighted. With delight he allows this to transpire and as a result thinks a bit more of himself.

(6) Will immediately be displeased at heart if, in his estimation, he is not loved, served, and revered according to his wishes; or if this is manifested more to others than to him, displeasure will immediately arise in his heart and he will abhor such a person. He hates them and will no longer have fellowship with such persons. His anger is aroused and he avenges himself as much as he can -- be it with words or with deeds.

(7) Is envious of others if they receive more love and honor, and do more business than he does. Even if the other person is more worthy of this, he nevertheless imagines by himself that he deserves it as much as others. And even if he is personally convinced of his own unworthiness, he not only wishes to be treated equally, but wants to be honored and esteemed above the other. Those who are elevated above him, as well as those who elevate such a person above him, are his enemies.

(8) Becomes sorrowful and despondent if others do not fulfill his desires. His work stagnates, he functions at a slower pace, and he may even go in the very opposite direction of his previous course. The wind is no longer in his sails, for he can neither attain love nor honor. Thus, a person who does not deny self shows that he is not satisfied unless everything ends in him. In his activity he has himself in view, ends in self, and also wants others to behave in this fashion toward him.

(9) Will be a zealous Christian in the realm of religion, as long as he can gain love, honor, and profit -- yes, he even wants to be counted among the most orthodox. If, however, that does not materialize and the very opposite occurs, his religion is also finished. Before losing esteem, position, or possessions, he would rather let go of Christ and His cause. Once having denied Him, he will then become the greatest persecutor in order to make his apostasy all the more honorable. Such is the person who does not deny himself.

Over against this we shall present a person who practices a great measure of self-denial -- as is generally true for a godly person -- so that everyone may perceive how it ought to be, may be enamored with that condition, and endeavor to increase in it.

(1) A person who denies self desires no honor of men. He does not wish to do anything that would render him dishonest and despicable, for that would be sin and to the detriment of godliness. If he receives honor and love, he acknowledges himself to be unworthy thereof and becomes smaller in himself. He does not want people to end in him, but is desirous that God be glorified through Him. He thus lets all things pass him by or, through him, allowing them to end in God. However, he neither desires nor strives for honor in himself. Yes, even if honor did not belong to anyone and were, so to speak, lying upon the street, he would not pick it up out of a love for honor itself. He perceives that if any one should receive it, he would not be the one, since he is acquainted with his abominableness. Since he does not desire to have it, he can thus accept it if another person receives it -- and that from all sides. He is not envious, for he neither desires it, nor is worthy of it -- yes, he does not want people to end in him. This would be burdensome and grievous to him. Honor is therefore not his objective in all his activity. He is neither grieved nor becomes fretful if he is not honored for his accomplishments. He does everything out of God, through God, and unto God. It is sufficient to him to serve the Lord -- he has surrendered his honor to the Lord Jesus, and it thus no longer belongs to him.

(2) The person who denies self does not desire love. To be loved is even more deeply ingrained in us than to be honored. The person who does not deny self wants to have the heart of the other person, but the person who denies self neither desires nor seeks this. He judges himself aright and knows himself to be hateful, defiled, and abominable. He perceives that all that he does is so maimed and deformed, that it would rather stir up repulsion instead of a being pleased. He would therefore demand something unreasonable if he were to desire that others would love him. He finds delight in loving others, and this he pursues with his entire heart. He rejoices in the fact that others are loving and exercise the virtue of love -- even if it is toward him (although he considers himself the wrong object). If he is loved, he uses it as a suitable opportunity to be of benefit to those who love him. However, he neither seeks nor has in view the love of others unto himself. He does not find delight in the fact that he is loved for the sake of who he is. He is also neither grieved nor becomes ill-tempered when he is not loved. He is not envious when another person receives more love than he, for he is not worthy of love. And, if anything of Jesus' image is to be perceived in him which is truly delightful, he desires that this be delighted in. This is not of himself, however, and he therefore does not want the expression of love to end in him. He neither wants to be attached to another person in an inordinate manner nor does he wish to be someone else's idol. He jealously guards against receiving from others who are attached to him anything which would be God's worthy due and thus cause the Lord to be loved less. With such a heart he loves his God -- a heart which is divorced from the creature. This suffices him and he stands amazed that he is loved of God.

(3) The person who denies self also does not desire to be revered. A person who does not deny self also wants to be revered, since he imagines himself to be worthy of honor and love. He imagines himself to be in possession of awe-inspiring traits. He imagines that his riches, circumstances, and position -- all of which render the other person of lesser importance than he is -- make him awe-inspiring; he is the man and she is the woman who inspires awe. When he is seen and speaks, others ought to tremble and shake for his wrath. Poor worm! A person who denies self, on the other hand, does not consider himself to be in possession of awe-inspiring traits but of despicable traits. Therefore, he does not wish to be revered. External riches and prestige he knows to be but as a garment cast about his shoulders, which do not change him personally. He therefore considers it great foolishness if anyone were to revere him for this external garment. If he has been placed over others in government or within the home, he will uphold this position and insist that others acknowledge, respect, and revere him in this capacity -- not in view of his person, but because of God's command. He is thus humble in his elevated position, wants to be revered, and yet at the same time, not be revered.

(4) A person who denies self also does not wish to be served. A person who does not deny self is of the opinion that he has a right to everything and that everyone must be ready at his bidding. Those who are subordinate to him will never be able to satisfy him; he becomes angry if there is the least deficiency in their obedience. A person who denies self, however, always desires to be of service and of help to others -- that is his delight. It is more a burden to him than a delight when others run around, sweat, labor to serve him, and are ready to obey at his bidding; for he does not consider himself worthy of being served. If he requires service of someone who is subordinate to him, he does not do so for his own sake, but because the Lord has established that order. When others serve him, he is quickly satisfied and graciously overlooks faults. He tenderly cares for his servants, seeing to it that they neither become too fatigued nor toil too much in his service. He is even compassionate toward his cattle.

(5) The person who denies self also does not desire riches. He has chosen God to be his portion, thereby renouncing all earthly possessions. He entrusts the care of his body to God. He knows that he is not worthy of one bite of bread in his mouth nor of any sackcloth to cover his skin. He also considers the goods of this world as being too insignificant and unstable as to concern himself with them. He is satisfied with such food and clothing as are necessary. He lives out of the hand of God and is therefore neither envious of the possessions of others nor of the great profit they earn. It does not matter to him if others boast of their possessions and tower above him; the lowest place suits him best. He is not discouraged if he has little and loses possessions -- for they were not his portion. It suffices him to diligently use the means to earn his living. If he fares well, he does not cleave to it, but becomes humble by it, as the patriarch Jacob. He does not squander it, but is all the more generous to the poor. And if the cause of Christ necessitates this, he willingly renounces everything and can joyfully witness being deprived of his belongings. In such a manner the person who denies self lives in this world -- in union with God and divorced from everything else. The Need for Self-Examination

Behold, this is the mirror; examine yourself in it. An unconverted person will be able to perceive that he is entirely void of self-denial and still lives according to his own lusts, is a servant of sin, in all things seeks himself, and wishes all things to end in him. You who do not deny self -- consider in what condition you are! First, it is a clear evidence that you are as yet unregenerate and cannot thus enter heaven (John 3:5). Secondly, you are not a partaker of Christ and His merits (Luke 14:26). Thirdly, you are a worldly-minded person and your portion is only in this world (Psalms 17:14). Fourthly, in this life you will experience nothing but sorrow as you either seek, find, or miss the things of this world, and after this life there will be eternal destruction. "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die" (Romans 8:13). The godly can also perceive hereby how much or how little of such self-denial they have. How much their heart still yearns for honor, love, respect, service, and the possessions of this world! Here their ulterior motives originate which at times pollute their very best works, cause them much grief, and rob them of all joy in their work. This is the cause of discouragement and lack of freedom, estrangement from each other, wrathfulness, quarrelling, and a boasting and speaking of one's own performance -- be it more openly or in a more subtle and concealed manner. Oh, you who are godly, examine yourself closely. Seek to ascertain what it is that your heart still cleaves to and consider the abominableness of being self-focused and of such seeking of self. Consider that it is the dead fly which causes the precious ointment to stink. Consider that it is an abomination to God and that it irritates others, for it will readily be perceived by both the converted and unconverted alike. Consider that, to a large extent, you render yourself unprofitable to make gain with your talent and to be of benefit to others. Therefore, abhor yourself, resist it, and strive against it. For if you have not denied self now in time of peace, how will you then fare in time of persecution?

Exhortation to Self-Denial

It is thus necessary that we courageously resist our sinful self and endeavor to arrive at a disposition and propensity of inward self-denial, as well as the manifestation of self-denial in all circumstances which occur. Take the following to heart:

First, consider your own state. Who are you that you would pride yourself in anything and seek anything for yourself? God answers you, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Genesis 3:19). Bildad the Shuhite answers, "How much less man, that is a worm? and the son of man, which is a worm" (Job 25:6). Job replies that we are "a leaf driven to and fro" and "dry stubble"

(Job 13:25). And if that were yet too lofty, David answers: "Man is like to vanity" (Psalms 144:4). Even that is yet too lofty and therefore he says, "Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie: to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity" (Psalms 62:9). Such is true for you. Are you then worthy of honor, love, and esteem? Do you now dare to pursue something in order to cause it to end in you?

Secondly, what is it that you desire and cleave to? It is also as insignificant and vain as you yourself are. Are you any better off if a dead dog -- which every man is -- renders you honor, love, and friendship rather than if a piece of peat or wood were to bow to you? Are you any better off than if you were to gather a heap of shells or shards as children do, and if this were to render you attractive in your own eyes? Be ashamed that you would turn your heart and eyes to that which is nothing at all. Why would you pollute your soul with the pursuit of such trifles and thus displease both God and man by pleasing yourself? Therefore, divorce yourself from this.

Thirdly, believers, has not the Lord granted and laid away better things for you? The Lord has granted you that steadfast and durable benefit, consisting in the enjoyment of God, communion with Christ, the experience of peace and joy, and eternal glory. He has granted you this in principle, and He will cause you to possess it in perfection. God says therefore: "This I have given you and I shall as yet add such and such to it. Now, it is My will that you only keep that in view, only seek that, and only delight yourself in that. It is My will that you would look away from all that is of the world. Neither focus upon, nor seek it, but be divorced from it, and deny self in regard to these things. If I give you a measure of them, it is only that you would use them for your growth in grace and to glorify Me." Therefore, if the cause of the Lord necessitates it, be content with eternal things and renounce that earthly filth.

Fourthly, it is a righteous thing to deny self as far as the things of the world are concerned, for all honor, reverence, service, and possessions are the Lord's; you are not entitled to them. Shall a man rob God? Give unto God that which is God's. It is unrighteousness if you desire to be esteemed and to be something, considering that you are nothing; to desire to be loved, considering you are hateful; and to be revered, considering you are nothing but a slave of the lowest order. It is an unrighteous thing to consider yourself to be something and hypocritically appear to be what you are not -- wishing others to acknowledge you to be what you are not or to be of a more elevated position than you are. Recognize this sin therefore, hate it, and flee from it.

Fifthly, self-denial engenders great peace. All your restlessness is the result of a seeking of yourself. For then your conscience convicts you of sin, you do not get your desire, someone else is in your way, people oppose you in words and in deeds, and you receive the opposite of what you are striving for. Something is always wrong and everywhere there are thorns to prick you. There is much you must care for and preserve, and there is nothing but restlessness and sorrow. However, there is much peace in a heart where self is denied -- which is content with Jesus. Such a heart is elevated above the earth and is beyond the reach of the world and all that is to be found in it. One then dwells in the secret place of the Most High and abides in the shadow of the Almighty. Therefore, cast self away as being a troublesome burden. Speak as follows: "Away sin, away pride, and away self-love; I have been plagued by you long enough. I no longer know you, I no longer desire you, and I wish to live in peace with my God, perform my task with freedom, and run my course with joy."

Sixthly, a person who denies self has freedom, for he has nothing to lose. He fears neither shame, hatred, nor damage to his possessions, for he has renounced all this -- and whatever the Lord has loaned to him he will readily return to Him if He requires this. Therefore he says what needs to be said, and he is silent when the Lord commands him to be silent. He lets his light shine in spite of all those who hate this and for this reason would wish to cause him grief. He is under no obligation, and is loose and free from everything. In such a manner a person who denies self manifests himself. His path is as a shining light; he proceeds and sheds forth light until it is full noon; he proceeds from strength to strength. He remains steadfast in his course and increases in strength. Therefore, undertake this task and proceed in it with the courage of a man.

Seventhly, continually hold before you the example of the Lord Jesus and His saints. The Lord Jesus has denied Himself for your sake. Would you then not renounce self for His sake? He who was rich became poor; He who was in the form of God, took upon Him the form of a servant. The Lord of glory was ridiculed and despised, and He who is love was hated. He who is worthy of being served by all, came to serve. The Prince of Life was crucified for you, and would there then be anything too precious to you to relinquish for His Name's sake? Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob left their homeland and everything else. The prophets renounced everything in order to be faithful to the Lord. The apostles left everything and followed Jesus. The godly martyrs witnessed the spoiling of their goods joyfully, and willingly they surrendered their lives for the sake of the Lord Jesus. Do therefore likewise and no longer seek yourself.

Eighthly, even though all that we possess is not ours, and all that pertains to the body is not worthy of attention, God wants to reward abundantly for whatever one has renounced and relinquished upon His command out of loving obedience toward Him, and for His Name or cause. If we renounce our honor, He will give grace and glory (Psalms 84:12). If we deny ourselves love, the Lord will love us (John 16:27). If we deny possessions, the Lord will be our abundant gold and our plentitude of silver. Since the Lord will not permit a service to be unrewarded, He will also not permit all that we relinquish out of love for Him and for His Name to be unrequited. Observe this in the following passages: "He that loseth his life for My sake shall find it" (Matthew 10:39); "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for My Name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life" (Matthew 19:29); "But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life" (Mark 10:30). Much true profit can be gleaned from casting away that which is sinful, from ridding ourselves of that which hinders us, from returning that which was loaned, and then receiving in return such great and glorious matters. That truly ought to stimulate us to deny self. If God is willing to promise this, we ought to be made lively by the promises.

Final Advice for Those Who Desire to Deny Self

If you are desirous to be in such a holy condition and have such liberty, and to be weaned from all and whatever the Lord wants us to be weaned from, then:

(1) Make a firm resolution -- not only in a general sense, but also pertaining to whatever you are most attached, hinders you most, and most pollutes your walk.

(2) Do not imagine, however, that all has been accomplished if you have lively desires for that condition and activity, and now fully want to commit yourself to this, for your own "I" is strong. It was the first to reside in you and it does not readily want to depart. It is not so easy to deny self. Therefore, be aware of the strength of the old man and the weakness of the new man, and call upon the Lord for help and strength.

(3) Be on your guard in all that you do as far as your conduct is concerned, lest your self be mingled with it. You will soon perceive this if you but take notice, and it will bring much strife upon you.

(4) Be encouraged, however, for self must be removed, and you will increase greatly if you are but determined to do so. It will steadily become easier.

(5) Take note of the first stirrings, and smother your own self when it initially surfaces.

(6) And if you cannot root this out so easily, do not cease with this labor, but practice the virtue as well as you can, and you will experience that you will improve.

071. Chapter 66: Patience

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-SIX -----

Patience

Contentment and self-denial engender patience, which in Greek is hupomene. It is a compound consisting of hupo -- which occasionally means through, sometimes under, and sometimes over -- and meno, which means to remain. The combination yields hupomene; that is, to remain, to remain steadfast, to persevere), and also hupomene patience. It means as much as: to overcome suffering, to remain the same during suffering, to move beyond suffering, and to remain steadfast. In our language it is a derivative of patient, which in turn is a derivative of the Latin verb pati, to suffer. Patience is thus the ability to endure suffering.

Patience is the believer's spiritual strength which he has in God whereby he, in the performance of his duty, willingly, with composure, joyfully, and steadfastly endures all the vicissitudes of life, having a hope that the outcome will be well.

Patience is to be strong in God. Spiritual valor or strength which we discussed in chapter 62 consists of the following: 1) a trusting in God's help, whereby one courageously undertakes his duty; 2) steadfastness, whereby one continues and perseveres in his duty; 3) patience, whereby one repels all that comes against this duty, so that it is no impediment. Patience is thus a type of strength or valor. Valor is a courageous disposition whereby the believer perceives the vicissitudes of life as being capable of hindering him. He not only understands the necessity of conquering them, but also of bringing glory to his Lord. As a champion he thus overcomes these circumstances. The patient person derives such strength from God. Spiritual life is feeble, the body is tender and readily suffers if not well, the flesh is evil and would readily succumb under discomforting events. However, the patient person takes hold of the strength of the Lord, and in this strength proceeds. "Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee" (Psalms 84:5); "Through God we shall do valiantly" (Psalms 60:12). The exercise of patience is a task of great magnitude. It is valiant to endure affliction well, to take hold of God's strength, and to be engaged by reason of this strength. It brings matters to a glorious end. The subject--that is, the seat of this virtue--is the soul of the believer. The unconverted are entirely incapable of being patient. They do indeed also endure affliction -- yes, they encounter severe trials. Some who are motivated either by glory, or by the unavoidability of the circumstances can endure them manfully, doing so without any display of fear, anxiety, or pain. They cannot be patient, however, since they do not have a divine duty in view, desiring to uphold this duty and to perform it well. They do not derive their help from God through Christ, and they have no hope that the outcome will be well, for there are no promises for them. Therefore even though they steel themselves in their affliction, they are not patient. However, patience is the ornament of a Christian. A believer views himself as being reconciled with God, and considers all affliction to come to him from God in order to promote his welfare. He has promises that the outcome will be glorious and therefore only believers exercise patience. "Here is the patience of the saints" (Revelation 14:12). In order to demonstrate that no one can be patient except he be a believer, faith and patience are frequently conjoined (cf. Titus 2:2; 2 Timothy 3:10; 2 Thessalonians 1:4). Patience most particularly resides in the soul. This virtue neither consists in a boasting with the mouth, nor in a restraint of one's gestures, but is of an internal nature which in turn manifests itself externally. It is through the custom, not so much of suffering, but of continually exercising herself to possess this virtue, that the soul will acquire a patient disposition and propensity; the soul will then be patient. "In your patience possess ye your souls" (Luke 21:19). An impatient person does not have control over his heart; it is of no use to him. However, a patient person has his heart under control and makes use of it as such, permitting no inordinate thoughts and motions to be entertained in the heart relative to affliction. The object of patience is all the vicissitudes of life, that is, all manner of affliction. The tribulations, both bodily and spiritual, of the righteous are many -- those that come upon them without human intervention, as well as those that come their way by means of men -- be it during a peaceful time for the church or during time of persecution for the Word's sake. Some tribulations are light, some are more severe, others are dreadful, and there can even be a cruel death. They are all grievous to man and are capable of both assaulting faith and tossing it to and fro -- and if it were possible, to drive out hope, love, and other virtues, as well as their manifestations. Patience opposes this, doing so not to be delivered from affliction (for that would be in vain), but in order to endure it. The patient believer will not allow himself to be deterred from his virtuous intentions and their manifestations. He will neither permit himself to exercise these virtues in a lesser degree of holiness nor with less boldness. Thus, the soul perseveres in her affliction and continues to endure her affliction; yes, she prevails that much more strenuously and derives strength from her weakness. In view of this, patience is called "the enduring of the same sufferings" (2 Corinthians 1:6). This is neither to suggest that one finds delight in affliction, nor that a person may and must not pray for deliverance; rather, he must suffer in subjection to the will of God. The Essence or Nature of Patience The essence or nature of patience consists in the enduring of affliction willingly, with composure, joyfully, and steadfastly.

(1) We endure affliction if we take the cross upon ourselves as being laid upon us by the Lord (Matthew 16:24), follow Jesus with that cross, and perform our duty as between God and the soul only, as well as toward our neighbor. With that cross one proceeds -- even if it were from Jerusalem to Golgotha -- in order to die. Irrespective of whether it is a wooden, iron, or leaden cross, believers do not wish to exchange it. They desire to have it, for it suits them best, and they thus carry it to heaven.

(2) It is a willing enduring of affliction. Affliction is certainly contrary to natural desire and it can oppress the soul and body to such an extent that tears will burst forth from our eyes. Nevertheless, such endurance is not forced; it is not of a compulsory nature. Rather, patience embraces this and is willing because the Lord wills it. The Lord's will is the soul's will -- irrespective of whether this is Mt. Tabor or Golgotha. God's will is God's will, and this renders everything welcome and delightful. "... the spirit indeed is willing" (Matthew 26:41); "The cup which My Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it" (John 18:11).

(3) It is exercised with composure or a quietness of spirit. Patience precludes murmuring, discouragement -- and if our affliction is inflicted by men, it also precludes wrath and vengeance. It does not trouble the soul as a storm would do to a sea, but the soul permits the waves and billows to go over her. Such a soul is as a smooth beach upon which the waves, so to speak, playfully run dead; or she is as a rock which remains immovable and breaks up the sea as it bears down upon it. David endured all manner of affliction in this manner. "Truly my soul waiteth upon God" (Psalms 62:1). The church is exhorted to conduct herself as such. "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. He sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because He hath borne it upon him. He putteth his mouth in the dust" (Lamentations 3:27-29).

(4) Yes, not only does the patient soul maintain composure, but she even rejoices in affliction, be it that she already enjoys the blessed fruit of this, receives many comforts from the Lord, or suffers for the sake of godliness and for the name of the Lord. This was the wish expressed by the apostle toward the Colossians; namely, that they would be "strengthened with all might ... unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness" (Colossians 1:11). Concerning the Thessalonians he says: You have "received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost" (1 Thessalonians 1:6), and concerning himself he says: "I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation" (2 Corinthians 7:4).

(5) The patient person endures affliction with steadfastness. One can have much courage prior to affliction being inflicted, and courageously accept it. If, however, we experience the reality of affliction, and it seems to last quite long, one would desire to cast away this troublesome burden and avoid it -- even if would have to sin in doing so. And if we cannot rid ourselves of it, everything is turned upside down within and without, and impatience with all its consequences gets the upper hand. However, patience does not impose limits upon the Lord as to what the measure ought to be, or how long it ought to last. The patient believer is satisfied with the goodness and wisdom of the Lord. He proposes to himself that it may be all his life, for so precious is salvation to him. If deliverance comes earlier than that, he rejoices, and if not, it is also well. He thus endures in patience until his affliction comes to an end. "But let patience have her perfect work" (James 1:4). This is neither to suggest that patience itself is perfect in the godly, nor that it renders something perfect. Rather, one designates something perfect (or complete [Note: The Dutch word "volmaakt" can be rendered both as "perfect" and "complete" in English.]) to which the finishing touches have been applied, even though someone else could have performed this task in a far more excellent manner. In like manner, patience adds the finishing touches to our affliction; that is, it lasts as long as the affliction lasts and will not separate itself from affliction prior to that. Such is the exhortation to the congregation of Smyrna: "Be thou faithful unto death" (Revelation 2:10).

(6) Patience endures affliction with a hope of a good outcome. In this instance the proverb is true: Hope is the comfort of affliction. Patience cannot exist without hope. When there is no longer hope, patience will no longer be exercised. There is no patience in hell due to the absence of hope. Hope supports patience. "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it" (Romans 8:25). We err when we define our hope in a good outcome too narrowly, that is, within a certain time frame and by reason of such circumstances. This frequently miscarries, since the Lord's ways are not our ways. The patient person therefore holds to the promises of God in an unrestricted sense; namely, that the Lord will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that we may be able to bear it (1 Corinthians 10:13); that affliction will bring forth the peaceable fruits of righteousness (Hebrews 12:11); that it will be to our advantage in order that we may become partakers of His holiness (Hebrews 12:10); that the crown of life will be awarded in consequence of this (Revelation 2:10); and that upon much affliction a greater measure of glory ensues (Revelation 7:14). The patient person hopes upon these promises and anticipates their fulfillment. Jesus is his example in this,

"who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross" (Hebrews 12:2). The apostle therefore calls patience the "patience [Note: The word "patience" in this text is rendered as "endurance" in the Statenvertaling. There is thus an obvious verbal relationship in the Statenvertaling between Hebrews 12:2 and 1 Thessalonians 1:3.] of hope" (1 Thessalonians 1:3). The cause of patience is not to be found in man himself. A natural man may clench his teeth, control himself, remain silent, suppress all emotions, and, control himself by way of reason -- all this in order to reap the glory of being steadfast. However, he will not be able to make himself patient. Also a godly person will not be able to bring this about in his own strength. The Lord must work it in him and He is therefore called "the God of patience" (Romans 15:5). The Lord grants the godly faith and gives them a lively view that He inflicts this affliction upon them with His fatherly hand. He secretly sustains them by strengthening the inner man. In their affliction He comforts them much according to the soul and permits them to taste His grace. He causes them to perceive the lightness, advantage, and transitory nature of affliction. He shows them how advantageous and glorious the outcome will be. This causes them to be quiet and encouraged. They are then willing to suffer, and tribulation will then work patience, and that experience and hope which maketh not ashamed. The purpose and result of patience is that believers may execute their duty well. The patient person does not end in his affliction, his suitable disposition, in enduring his affliction well, and in the manifestation of a patient disposition. He has something much higher in view. He possesses his soul in patience in order not to be hindered in his performance, but rather to be more capable of carrying out his task. He does so by his own personal godly exercises, by letting his light shine forth, by manifesting a godly walk among men, by being an example to others, by leading others to Christ, and by boldly confessing Him. That is his objective, and that he seeks. He perceives that affliction would hinder him in this if he were not to behave himself well. He furthermore perceives that in behaving well, his affliction will be to his advantage in pursuing his objective. He therefore strives for patience. Consequently, taking up the cross and following Christ are conjoined: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me" (Matthew 16:24). This is also true for patience and running the race: "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us" (Hebrews 12:1). Patience and other virtues are likewise conjoined: "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ" (2 Thessalonians 3:5); "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity" (2 Peter 1:5-7). The Conviction of the Unconverted This truth as presented to you is sufficient to convince the unconverted that they are void of this virtue. Whether they are entirely insensitive, or have a gentle disposition, or are able to endure a sickness well, or do so either by bearing up under it by way of reason while perceiving that they cannot be relieved from affliction anyhow and thus exercise patience, or in order to get glory from steeling themselves and being strong -- all of this does not constitute patience. From that which has been said they will be able to perceive that their patience is not spiritual strength in God, as being their God in Christ, and that their patience does not issue forth from faith in Christ nor from their union with Him. They will perceive that they do not endure affliction willingly, with composure, joyfully, steadfastly, as having a hope for a good outcome, to make them holier, and to lead them to felicity. The reason for this is that they have no basis for appropriating a single promise to themselves. They will perceive that they do not desire patience in order to be more fit to exercise all manner of virtues. Even if some have the appearance of being patient, they are, nevertheless, generally irritable and fretful. They become more wicked and ungodly, and their wrath is expressed toward God Himself; they are as ungodly Israel in the wilderness. At one time they had no bread, then no meat, and then again no water -- and they would therefore immediately murmur, depart from God, insist on returning to Egypt, and even blaspheme God. When God chastises such, they will revolt more and more (Isaiah 1:5). If God does not help, they say, "Behold, this evil is of the Lord; what should I wait for the Lord any longer" (2 Kings 6:33). They wish to be delivered from their affliction at any cost: Flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo; that is, If God does not want to help me, I shall ask for the help of the devil. Thus, they proceed from wickedness to wickedness until they have brought themselves into hell where patience does not exist. The Impatience of the Godly

Having had the nature of patience presented to them, the godly will be able to observe on the one hand that they possess this virtue in principle; however, they will also observe on the other hand how much impatience is still to be found within them. When a spiritual cross comes upon them, when it becomes dark, when God hides His countenance and withholds His comforting influences, when He appears to neither hear their prayers nor immediately to grant the desires of their soul, then they are at once discouraged, unbelieving, and irritable. When they are surrounded by all manner of bodily afflictions, and their afflictions are of long duration and of an excessive nature, then where is their patience?

Then, with Jonah, they are peevish (Jonah 4:8), and are as discouraged as Israel was, saying, "The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me" (Isaiah 49:14). They immediately despair and think, "There is no hope" (Jeremiah 2:25); "My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord" (Lamentations 3:18). If their affliction lasts long and is excessive, their faith falters and they think that all this comes upon them in wrath. Thus, they complain, "Will the Lord cast off for ever? and will He be favorable no more? Is His mercy clean gone for ever? doth His promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath He in anger shut up His tender mercies" (Psalms 77:7-9).

They stumble in regard to God's providence (Proverbs 30:9) and accuse the Lord of hardness, saying, "Thou art become cruel to me: with Thy strong hand Thou opposest Thyself against me" (Job 30:21). Then they will question whether the Lord's dealings are right, would demand an account of Him as to why He deals thus with them, and contend with the Almighty (Job 40:2). At times despair surfaces, so that the soul chooses strangling and death above life (Job 7:15). "Oh that I might have my request; and that God would grant me the thing that I long for! Even that it would please God to destroy me; that He would let loose His hand, and cut me off! What is my strength, that I should hope? and what is mine end, that I should prolong my life" (Job 6:8-9; Job 6:11).

Seeing the prosperity of the wicked, resentment arises in the heart, and they say, "Behold, these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning" (Psalms 73:12-14). When they observe that many of the godly prosper in the world, they are envious and think, "Why do I not fare as they do?" If their cross is inflicted upon them by man, they become angry, vengefulness surfaces, and, as a dog, they bite the stone being cast at them. At times God's children, to their shame and grief, become conscious of such turbulence; and, they rightfully ought to be ashamed and grieved, for:

(1) While being impatient, many sins merge together. An impatient person is a breeding ground for all manner of corruptions which grievously pollute the soul. There is unbelief toward God's promises, lovelessness and stubbornness toward God's will, pride (as if they were superior), envy and vengefulness toward their neighbor, and a holding in esteem the things of this world.

(2) They render themselves unfit to serve the Lord and to edify their neighbor. They offend those that are weak, and cause the world to mock with godliness.

(3) They bring heavier judgments upon themselves, for the Lord will prevail when He executes judgment. They are the cause that their affliction is of longer duration, is more severe, and does not yield the benefit it otherwise would.

(4) They themselves remain restless and anxious due to seeing their sins continually, and not being able to shake off the cross. "Who hath hardened himself against Him, and hath prospered" (Job 9:4). Therefore refrain from impatience, and rather "humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time" (1 Peter 5:6); "Despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of His correction" (Proverbs 3:11).

Believers Exhorted to Be Patient

Believers, possess therefore your souls in patience. Give heed to the following motives in order that you may be stirred up to that end.

First, it is your desire to obey the Lord, is it not? How frequently have you not offered yourself to the Lord, saying, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" The Lord, however, commands you to be patient, and therefore listen to this exhortation as coming from the very mouth of the Lord. The Lord Jesus says to you, "In your patience possess ye your souls" (Luke 21:19); and the apostle says, "(Be) ... patient in tribulation" (Romans 12:12); "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us" (Hebrews 12:1); "But let patience have her perfect work" (James 1:4).

Secondly, it is a matter of absolute necessity, and you cannot do without it. "For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise" (Hebrews 10:36). There is no other way to heaven except by way of tribulations. You can neither avoid nor sidestep them. On the other hand, there is much work to be done by you in order to promote your sanctification, without which no one will see the Lord. How will you persevere (for you wish to persevere and you will persevere until you are in heaven) except by way of patience? This causes us to accept affliction, not to hinder us in our way, but that it render us fit for the performance of our duty. Therefore strive for this as being absolutely necessary. Exercise yourself in this until you develop a habitual disposition in this respect.

Thirdly, consider where your affliction originates. It does not originate with yourself, for you love yourself too much for this. It does not originate with men, for they cannot so much as move without the will of God, nor pull one of your hairs out. Rather, it is the Lord Himself who sends this upon you -- the sovereign Lord whose hand none can stay and to whom no one can say, "What doest Thou?" It is your reconciled Father in Christ who sends this upon you in His wisdom, goodness, and love, doing so to your advantage. "For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth" (Hebrews 12:9). Would you then render opposition to the Lord? This is indeed neither your desire nor are you able to do so. "Shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live" (Hebrews 12:9). Say rather, "I will bear the indignation of the Lord" (Micah 7:9); "I opened not my mouth; because Thou didst it" (Psalms 39:9). That will be well-pleasing to the Lord.

Fourthly, when considering affliction itself, its nature is not such that you should sin relative to it by way of impatience.

(1) Affliction is light; the fear of it is ten times greater than the affliction itself. This is unanimously confessed by all who have experienced it, and you will have to admit this as well. Paul calls his great tribulations -- to which ours cannot be compared -- "light afflictions" (2 Corinthians 4:17). The reason for their severity is due to your failure to submit yourself to it, for if the apostle judges them to be light, then how do you dare to call them severe? Do not bodily afflictions pertain to the body only? Should you then be so concerned about your body which is but dust and will become dust -- and which will also be glorified? Therefore do not act as if a piece of straw is that heavy.

(2) Your affliction is but for a short season; it readily passes by. What is past is past, what is future is not yet upon you, and you do not know what will or will not come. You only have the present. And even that will pass momentarily. Even if the same affliction would last your entire life, it would also not be long, for your life itself is short, it being nothing more than vapor. Such is therefore also true for all affliction in this world. Paul calls it "our light affliction, which is but for a moment" (2 Corinthians 4:17). Peter says: "Though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness" (1 Peter 1:6). Should you then be impatient concerning affliction which so readily passes by?

(3) The extent of this affliction has been determined. It will last that long -- not any shorter or longer. It will be that severe, and this severity will be neither more nor less than the Lord has ordained. The Lord restricted the devil as to the measure in which he could touch Job; he could not add one ounce to it (Job 1:1-22; Job 2:1-13). Job acknowledged this: "For He performeth the thing that is appointed for me" (Job 23:14). Irrespective of whether you are fretful, discouraged, and desirous to escape it and cast it off, it will remain with you to the end. Is it then not better to take it upon you patiently and to endure it?

Fifthly, affliction is very beneficial; it is medicine for the soul.

(1) It humbles the soul in light of committed sins. "I, even I, will tear and go away; I will take away, and none shall rescue him ... till they acknowledge their offence" (Hosea 5:14-15). It causes the soul to be as a weaned child. "Surely I have behaved and quieted myself, as a child that is weaned of his mother: my soul is even as a weaned child" (Psalms 131:2). It causes the soul to take pleasure in submitting to the Lord's chastisement. "... if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity" (Leviticus 26:41); "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God" (1 Peter 5:6). It causes the soul to be ashamed.

"Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised. ... Surely after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed" (Jeremiah 31:18-19). It causes the soul to withdraw itself and to be weaned from all things. "I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house top" (Psalms 102:7).

(2) It will cause us to cautiously guard against sin and to strive for holiness. "I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul" (Isaiah 38:15). This is God's objective: "For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but He for our profit, that we might be partakers of His holiness" (Hebrews 12:10). This was David's experience, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn Thy statutes" (Psalms 119:71). The prophet bears witness to this: "For when Thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness" (Isaiah 26:16). Affliction causes the graces in the soul to be lively and active. It is then that prayer-life revives. "Lord, in trouble have they visited Thee, they poured out a prayer when Thy chastening was upon them" (Isaiah 26:16). Necessity teaches us how to pray. He who is not able to pray ought to become either a sailor or a married man. Faith will then be revived. When Abraham endured a trial of the greatest magnitude, he believed "against hope ... in hope" (Romans 4:18). David says concerning himself, "I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living" (Psalms 27:13). Then hope is strengthened. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise Him for the help of His countenance" (Psalms 42:5). Then love is revived. "Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it" (Song of Solomon 8:7). The moon and the stars are seen best when the sun is absent. It is such with love. In bearing the cross the godly perceive that missing the Lord is what weighs them down the most, and when the Lord is near, that their affliction is no affliction. Then they have enough and would rather enjoy communion with God with the cross, than to be estranged from Him without the cross. Believers, since all these matters are indeed your delight and are the desires of your heart, why then would you not also desire the way by which you obtain these matters? And if you desire the way of affliction for its benefits, it behooves you patiently to take this affliction upon you and to endure it as being a wholesome -- although bitter -- medicine.

Sixthly, patience is a precious ornament and a profitable disposition for a believer. A patient soul is a soul which is childlike, willing, quiet, meek, self-denying, believes, hopes, and loves God. Therefore the patient person is precious and pleasant in God's sight and a suitable object for God's mercies. God also does not leave Himself without witness to such by manifesting His mercy, love, support, comfort, and help for their deliverance. "...God, that comforteth those that are cast down" (2 Corinthians 7:6); "Who comforteth us in all our tribulation" (2 Corinthians 1:4); "But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Peter 3:4).

Patience renders the cross lighter, so that one can bear it with ease. One will possess his soul, so that inordinate desires are held in check -- and the intellect and will shall be under his control in order to utilize them in harmony with God's will. In this manner they will reap all the benefits from affliction which we have enumerated above, for affliction as such does not engender these benefits, but they are brought forth through patience in affliction. The Lord is then glorified by us, our neighbors become convinced of the power of godliness, and the godly will thereby be strengthened in their afflictions, being encouraged to bear them also with patience. Then the present affliction and chastisement will have their appropriate effect, and "afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby" (Hebrews 12:11). One will then rejoice when the Lord has removed the cross and will thank the Lord for this. "I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right, and that Thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me" (Psalms 119:75); "O Lord, I will praise Thee: though Thou wast angry with me, Thine anger is turned away, and Thou comfortedst me" (Isaiah 12:1).

Seventhly, hold before yourself the examples of the Lord Jesus and the saints so that you may be stirred up to imitate them in their patience. The Lord Jesus, being such a glorious example for us in our entire walk, is also exemplary in patience. "... yet He opened not His mouth: He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He openeth not His mouth" (Isaiah 53:7); "... but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow His steps" (1 Peter 2:20-21).

Add to this the example of all other saints who have gone before you. "Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy" (James 5:10-11).

Since all those who are now bearers of the crown have been bearers of the cross, you must emulate them in the bearing of the cross in order that, with them, you may inherit the crown of life.

(1) Be sensitive concerning your cross and be on guard against hardness.

(2) Cease from having esteem for all that is to be found in this perishing world. Consider the brevity of time which as yet is left you for affliction.

(3) Consider that the way to heaven is the way of affliction, and that we cannot walk upon this way except by way of patience.

(4) Be continually engaged in exercising faith in the promises and have hope therein that all will certainly come to pass.

(5) Persevere in reading the Word, which has been written for us to teach us patience and to comfort us (Romans 15:4).

(6) Continually pray for patience (Romans 15:5). If with such patience you may exercise yourself in all things -- also in the least, -- you will increase while you are thus engaged. "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ" (2 Thessalonians 3:5).

----- 1 The Dutch word "volmaakt" can be rendered both as "perfect" and "complete" in English.

2 The word "patience" in this text is rendered as "endurance" in the Statenvertaling. There is thus an obvious verbal relationship in the Statenvertaling between Hebrews 12:2 and 1 Thessalonians 1:3.

072. Chapter 67: Uprightness

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-SEVEN -----

Uprightness

Uprightness is denoted by several different words in the Hebrew language, each of which renders its meaning from a different perspective. There is yashar, which means: to be right, to make right, to govern, to make smooth. From this perspective uprightness is as an even and smooth pathway which is straight and without bends, guiding the pedestrian in a straightforward manner to his goal. This agrees with the meaning of our English word: right -- rightness, to be upon the right way, to proceed in the right manner. There is tom, which is a derivative of tamam. This means: to complete, to fulfill, to perfect. Thus, uprightness renders everything perfect and applies the finishing touches to every virtue; without it everything is imperfect and invalid. There is also nakoach, which is a derivative of nokach. This means: for, against, over. Uprightness thus pursues the proposed objective, holds it in view, and does not deviate from this -- neither to the right nor to the left. Then there is emeth. When the Hebrews speak uprightly, they say, "It is beemeth (=in truth)," that is, amen, truth; it is all harmonious. In Greek we have to gnesion. This means to be born lawfully, since only that is born and proceeds lawfully from man which is the result of upright conduct. There is aptharsia, which actually means incorruptibility, and is thus indicative of uprightness, of the purity of something, of not having the principle of corruption in it, and of that which always remains immutably the same. Then there is eilikrineia, which describes that which can be distinguished by the light of the sun, for uprightness can endure the light and may be observed in sunlight. "But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God" (John 3:21).

Uprightness is a Christian virtue which God, by means of the Word, has planted in the heart of believers, whereby they do the will of God in truth.

We designate uprightness to be a virtue. It is not a specific virtue which is only applicable in certain situations. Rather, it is a universal virtue which encompasses all virtues. Thus, whatever man does is not a virtue unless it is accompanied by uprightness and he, so to speak, is imbued with it. Perfection pertains to the possession of all virtue. Wherever there is a deficiency, there is no perfection. Uprightness pertains to the manner in which virtues are exercised, however, and thus there can be uprightness even if that which is performed is deficient.

Uprightness is a Christian virtue. In some unconverted persons there is a natural uprightness; not all their actions are hypocritical. As they deal with and walk among the people, there are many things -- also as far as their religion is concerned -- which they do with their heart. They miss the matter itself, however, and what they do is only of an external nature. They miss the disposition of heart, and their heart is neither spiritual nor regenerate. They do not have in view the spiritual objective which they ought to have. Therefore, in spiritual things they also lack uprightness, and it is thus nothing but a natural work. If the Lord Jesus commands them to do something in which they find no delight, then with the rich young ruler they depart sorrowfully (Matthew 19:16-22). Christian uprightness is of an entirely different nature, however; it has different objects, proceeds from a different heart, has a different objective, and differs in manner. It proceeds from union with Christ and there is thus conformity with Christ. It is therefore referred to as Christian uprightness. The subject of this virtue is the heart of the believer. Prior to regeneration, God's children are as all other men: blind, evil, impotent, unwilling, and dead in sins and trespasses. However, the Lord grants them His Spirit, who illuminates, regenerates, and quickens them by uniting them to Christ, so that Christ lives in them and they in Christ. Therefore in all circumstances they do everything out of an entirely different principle and in an entirely different manner. The seat of uprightness is neither to be found in the countenance, the clothing, the mouth, nor in their actions, but in their heart. Their intellect is illuminated by a wondrous light, their will embraces the spiritual matters which are revealed to them by that light, and their passions go out after those matters in order to have them in possession and to perform them in a manner pleasing to the Lord. They thus have an internal propensity which shines forth in their countenance, clothing, words, and deeds.

Believers are the upright. "The upright love Thee" (Song of Solomon 1:4); "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright" (Psalms 37:37). They are upright in heart: "...God, which saveth the upright in heart" (Psalms 7:10); "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart" (Psalms 97:11). They are upright in their ways and walk: "Righteousness keepeth him that is upright in the way" (Proverbs 13:6); "Blessed are the undefiled in the way" (Psalms 119:1). The object of uprightness is the will of God. God has revealed to His church in the law what He enjoins and what He forbids. The upright person embraces this will willingly and joyfully as being the will of God -- without any exception as far as matter, manner, time, or place are concerned. Such is the manner in which the upright person deals with the law. His intellect is engaged in keeping this rule in view, the will loves it, and the affections go out after it. The singular objective of the upright person is to do the will of God and in this will he ends without any ulterior motives. "Let my heart be sound [Note: The Statenvertaling reads: "Laat mijn hart oprecht zijn tot uwe inzettingen," that is, "Let my heart be upright towards thy statutes."] in Thy statutes" (Psalms 119:80); "I will behave myself wisely in a perfect [Note: Again, the Statenvertaling speaks of "den oprechten weg," that is, "an upright way."] way" (Psalms 101:2). The Pattern of Uprightness: Truthfulness The pattern of uprightness consists in doing all things in truth. Pilate once asked, "What is truth?" but he did not wait for an answer. You, however, hear what truth is. First, God is truth (Deuteronomy 32:4). He is nothing but truth, essence, life, eternity, holiness, and glory. God is the origin of all that truth which is external to Him. His work is truth and His words are truth. Secondly, the Lord Jesus is the truth (John 14:6), for He is the antitype and the embodiment of the types and shadows. Thirdly, the word of God is truth (John 17:17), and it is the object and rule that must be believed and performed. Fourthly, there is also truth which is to be found within man. "Behold, Thou desirest truth in the inward parts" (Psalms 51:6). It is the latter which we shall discuss here. To this belongs truth as it relates to our mind, heart, mouth, works, and objectives.

(1) There is truthfulness which pertains to the intellect. Thus, the intellect, being illuminated by the Holy Spirit, perceives and understands the divinely revealed matters -- which pertain to the way of salvation through Christ -- in such a manner as is consistent with their very essence. There is harmony between their perception and the matters themselves. "... the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness" (Titus 1:1). This is to have "the mind of Christ" (1 Corinthians 2:16). "If so be that ye have heard Him, and have been taught by Him, as the truth is in Jesus" (Ephesians 4:21); "The truth of Christ is in me" (2 Corinthians 11:10).

(2) There is a truthfulness of the heart, which is the acquiescence of the will with those divine truths to be believed and performed. The heart is united with this will so that with desire and love it believes and does this will. Thus, that which is truth in the Word of God is also truth within them. "O how love I Thy law!" (Psalms 119:97); "For I delight in the law of God after the inward man" (Romans 7:22).

(3) There is a verbal truthfulness, which is the harmony of words with the heart -- the heart which, as has just been stated, is now illuminated and exercises love. This transpires when we speak of divine matters, confess the truth, and in our fellowship with people, express the matter as it is and as it is to be found in the heart. "My mouth shall speak truth" (Proverbs 8:7); "I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not" (1 Timothy 2:7); "Speak every man truth with his neighbour" (Ephesians 4:25).

(4) There is a truthfulness of performance when our countenance and conversation -- regardless of whether this pertains to the spiritual or civil realm -- agree with the heart which knows and loves the will of God as revealed in the Word of God. "O how love I Thy law! it is my meditation all the day" (Psalms 119:97); "But be ye doers of the word" (James 1:22); "I will direct their work in truth" (Isaiah 61:8); "I found of thy children walking in truth" (2 John 1:4). There is a truthfulness of objective when our objective is in harmony with the will of God, as well as our heart, mouth, and deeds. In being upright it is particularly required that the goal we have in view be in harmony with all that we say -- or else it is all corrupt. An evil objective corrupts good means and evil means corrupt a good objective. "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me" (Psalms 66:18); "The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness" (Matthew 6:22-23). Now consider all this collectively; it all must harmonize. When all this harmonizes, there is truthfulness; and this truthfulness constitutes the true essence of uprightness. Where such truthfulness is lacking in some measure, uprightness will not be functioning.

God: The Origin of Uprightness

God is the cause of uprightness, for God grants light to know the truth, gives love for the truth, and gives truth in the heart. Thus, this is also true for uprightness in all actions which issue forth out of the heart which is spiritually alive. "I will direct their work in truth" (Isaiah 61:8). David recognized that this has to proceed from the Lord and he therefore prayed for it. "Let my heart be sound in Thy statutes" (Psalms 119:80). Although God touches and reforms the heart directly, He nevertheless uses the Word as the means. "Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth" (John 17:17). The nature of this virtue having been presented, everyone is obligated to exercise it. God required this from Abraham and all who are His children by faith. "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect" (Genesis 17:1); "Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God" (Deuteronomy 18:13); "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves" (Matthew 10:16). Your heart will inwardly be convinced of the justness of this requirement and the obligation to it. As you turn to yourself, however, and hold before you the above mentioned truth as a mirror, what manner of person are you? Do you belong to the upright? It is necessary to bring those who are not upright under conviction by showing them their wretched state; may it be a means unto their conversion. It is also necessary to convince the upright of their deficiency in this respect.

Hypocrisy: The Sin of the Unconverted

First, you truly still belong to the hypocrites if you are yet in an unconverted state. How can your heart be upright before God if you do not know Him in the face of Jesus Christ? How will you walk in the way of uprightness if the right way unto salvation is still hidden for you; if you have neither an inward desire nor love to enter upon the way to God through Christ and to tread upon the way of holiness; and if you have not even placed your foot upon that way, but yet have your darkened understanding, your stony heart, and your life in this world? All within you is corrupt and is entirely contrary to God and His will, and thus, there can be no uprightness. Even if your objective and some of your deeds -- be they civil or of an externally religious nature -- are in harmony with your heart, there is nevertheless no uprightness, for the heart itself is not right and therefore all that is in harmony with it is not right. Even if you are not a hypocrite, you are, nevertheless, not upright before God.

Secondly, you are an avowed hypocrite if you seek yourself in all that you do -- and if in all things you are striving for honor, love, and gain, and to that end conduct yourself differently from what you are. You rarely examine yourself and are so accustomed to being two-faced that it does not even occur to you when you do this. We shall therefore now depict your life and show you what you really are in your social and religious walk.

(1) As far as his social walk is concerned, it is as if the hypocrite had been educated by Cain. He speaks friendly to his neighbor and draws him out, doing so, however, to kill him. From Saul he has learned the trick to engage others, to praise someone in order to catch him in the net, or to shower him with many favors: "I shall give my daughter to David in order that she may be a snare to him." He has copied from Joab how one can express joy to someone, inquire about his well-being, and then thrust a murderous weapon into his heart. Absalom teaches him how to arrange for a meal in order to kill Amnon. Judas has instructed him how he can betray someone with kisses. David describes such as follows: "... the wicked ... speak peace to their neighbours, but mischief is in their hearts" (Psalms 28:3); "They bless with their mouth, but they curse inwardly" (Psalms 62:4); "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart: his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords" (Psalms 55:21).

(2) As far as religion is concerned, the church will be filled with hypocrites during a season when godliness is in esteem. How desirable it would be if the hypocrite would stay away from the pulpit, and that one would not find such there who study with all their might! The one does this to acquire the reputation of being a scholar, although this is in reality not the case. If he has a conscience which points out his wrong motive, he will pacify it by insisting that after having acquired a reputation he will be better able to edify. The other pursues this in order to be esteemed as being eloquent, and the third to arouse adoration for the fact that he has a voice and gifts which are such that they bring men into ecstasy and press tears from their eyes. A fourth, while praying, appears to be drawn into heaven, and preaches as an angel. However, all this is but to gain the honor, esteem, and acclamation of the people. Upon coming from the pulpit, such men will inquire in what measure they have delighted the people. It is a balm upon their soul if many people have been in attendance, the congregation has been moved emotionally, and people say, "This is a remarkable minister." They prefer to be in that company where they are praised and people make an idol of them. The devil can change himself into an angel of light, and thus also his servants can indeed put on the hairy mantle of Elijah and the robe of John the Baptist in order to lie (Zechariah 13:4). However, the one is able to put on this garment better than others. There is no more abominable and loathsome thing under the sun than a minister who is a hypocrite.

We shall now turn to the members. The hypocrite observes how the godly conduct themselves, and he imitates this in order also to be esteemed as a godly person. Evil is thus not to be found in the external manifestation -- as if all who conduct themselves as such are hypocrites, for then the hypocrite would avoid all that. For he does not seek to be known as a hypocrite, but as a godly person. Thus, those who slander the godly refute themselves when they call the godly hypocrites, for it is evident to everyone's conscience that one ought to be godly and live as the godly do. When hypocrites seek to imitate this -- and precisely because the hypocrite seeks to appear to be such a one -- then, for the one who possesses the essence of that appearance, it is godly indeed.

However, the vice of the hypocrite is to be found in his heart and objective: He does not endeavor to be what he wishes to appear to be. He neither is nor strives to be as such, but only has the name in view. Once he has the name, he is satisfied and will know how to use this name to his advantage. In order to get this name, he will diligently frequent the church. Irrespective of what the circumstances may be, he must be present and one must not miss him there. He goes to hear the minister whom the godly delight to hear most, and then will specifically find a seat where he can be seen by all. When there is singing to be done he will also take a book in his hand -- even if he should not read one letter in it. He will also lift up his voice, doing so not to stir up himself and others to praise God, but that others would hear what a beautiful voice he has, or else how well he knows the tune. He will therefore start before the lead-singer and will, at the end, give the final sound. In prayer he will bow himself with much ado, or else will stand up. During prayer he will manage to heave sighs and after prayer will wipe his eyes as if he had cried. During the sermon he gives the impression of being very attentive and will occasionally arise. He will not take his eye from the minister, and it appears as if he draws the words out of his mouth and, so to speak, eats them. Occasionally he will open his Bible and will fold one of the pages as if he were marking a given text -- even if it is far removed from the text which the minister mentions. In the meantime he secretly glances sideways to see if it is being observed that he is so attentive, even though there is nothing he thinks less about than the sermon. He may perhaps be counting the panes in the windows, the pipes in the organ, or observing the engravings on the pulpit. When the deacon comes to gather alms, he pretends not to notice until the deacon is near, pretending to be disturbed by him in his attention. If he gives a coin, he selects the thinnest one so that it will sound as if it were a piece of silver. If he gives a bit more, he would wish that it would resound throughout the entire church. After the worship service, our hypocrite departs and visits this one and that one with his Bible in hand in order to show that he has come from church. He will speak very highly of the sermon and relate that it has been so edifying for him, even though he cannot say a word about it and complains about his poor memory. When hypocrites offer a prayer or read a chapter, it must be done so loudly that others would be able to hear it -- even if they were on the street. If they expect the minister for family visitation, the Bible especially must be open and sometimes two or three books will be added to this. They will be reading so attentively that they do not notice the minister -- even when he has entered the room, and will then act startled. They make acquaintance with the godly and speak to others about the familiar relationship which they have with other godly persons. Occasionally they will hold their heads a certain way, be very particular in the manner in which they measure the words of the godly (as if they gave careful heed to their words), and they even imitate some of the bad habits which some of the godly have unconsciously acquired. Yes, to stand out even more, they will make the carrying about of an insignificant thing a matter of conscience. They are very zealous about external things and conduct themselves with an air of superiority in rebuking others. Their mouths are always filled with complaints about the corruption and decay of the church. They presume to instruct ministers as to how and what they ought to preach, and have something to say about every minister and every sermon -- particularly about those whom the godly hear the least.

Hypocrites conduct themselves as beggars do: The one pretends to be thus and the other as such a person, each one understanding his art of beggary best. Likewise, the one hypocrite functions best in this respect and the other in that respect. The one is so rude in his hypocrisy that everyone can detect it, and the other can be so sophisticated that he would deceive the very best among the godly. Some have learned the art so well that they deceive themselves, and for failure of giving heed to their heart, imagine that they are sincere. If it were possible, they would even deceive God Himself. Be ashamed, hypocrites! With great aversion I have occupied myself with discovering you to yourself in order, if it were possible, to bring you to repentance. To that end consider:

(1) What an abominable monster you are in yourself, for you are not even human in the true sense of the word! Everything about you is convoluted, abominable, and evil. Are you not afraid of yourself as you resemble a devil more than a man?

(2) How abominable and hateful you are to honest people -- in a godly as well as a civil sense! Do not imagine that you will remain unknown. For a while you may be able to create the impression that you are upright in both a social and religious sense, but it will not last long before people will detect you, and then you will be the most despised man that is alive. Even if you remained undetected, what more do you have but a handful of flies?

(3) God, with whom you have to do, does know you. He is thoroughly acquainted with you and takes note of your wicked objectives and of all your hypocritical subterfuge. How abominable you then must be in the eyes of God! Hear what David says of this: "Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing: the Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man" (Psalms 5:6).

(4) Job asks, "For what is the hope of the hypocrite ... when God taketh away his soul" (Job 27:8). Read the answer: "The hypocrite's hope shall perish" (Job 8:13); "Fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites" (Isaiah 33:14). In Matthew 23:1-39 Jesus pronounces woe upon hypocrites eight times. A hypocrite will not be saved, but in hell will be under the most unbearable circumstances, for when the ungodly are threatened with hell, it is said that they will be with the hypocrites. "And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" (Matthew 24:51).

Impress this upon your heart -- you who are not upright and you hypocrites -- and repent before it will be too late. "Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded" (James 4:8).

True Believers: Upright in Principle True believers are principally upright, for:

(1) They have spiritual light and life, are partakers of the divine nature, and Jesus has been formed within them.

(2) They perceive their wrongdoings, are grieved over them, confess them, by faith seek forgiveness in the blood of Christ, and do battle against them.

(3) They are concerned about this, since they mistrust their hearts and become conscious of their corrupt impulses. They bring their heart before the Lord and pray, "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting" (Psalms 139:23-24).

(4) This is true in a general and universal sense of the word as far as matters, time, and place are concerned; they make no exception whatsoever. Regardless of whether they fall more into the one sin than the other, it is nevertheless contrary to their intent and the wishes of their heart; it grieves them. Yes, in secret they are much more upright than they are in the presence of men, and their heart is even more upright in principle than it is in its manifestation. They can and dare say to the Lord: "With my whole heart have I sought Thee: O let me not wander from Thy commandments. Therefore I esteem all Thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and I hate every false way" (Psalms 119:10;Psalms 119:128).

All these matters are true evidences of uprightness. With this, believers may support and comfort themselves when they, due to detecting so much deficiency within themselves, are concerned as to whether or not they are upright. Nevertheless, they must humble themselves over their deficiencies and transgressions. To that end we wish to hold before them their faults.

(1) Reflect upon what we have said about hypocrites and thus examine yourself as to whether you have not made yourself guilty in one respect or another.

(2) Consider whether an intention suddenly surfaces which battles against the conscience and prevails. Or you may seek to pacify your conscience with spurious arguments that there is something good in it. Nevertheless, the objective is not pure, but is intertwined with a seeking of self, so that there is a discrepancy as far as the heart, countenance, words, or deeds are concerned.

(3) Carefully give heed as to whether your corrupt nature is continually engaged in suggesting ulterior motives, for example that there is not a lively and strong endeavor to have the proper objective in view; that the corruption is not sufficiently mortified and subdued; that we are careless and do not give heed to our heart; that there are circumstances in which we make room for the temptations of the devil, not earnestly battling and praying against them. Corruptions thus gain strength to stir up self-seeking motives. Sometimes when the devil tempts us to seek self, these temptations will have no effect and will be shaken off without harm being done. Sometimes he will accuse us -- be it deceitfully -- that with a given task we have self in view and thus prevent the performance of that which is good and so trouble the person. A believer, not being acquainted with his vices, is of the opinion that he truly seeks self in this endeavor and is thereby troubled and accused in nearly all things. He continually says, "This is the reason why I am doing it," and in a different situation says, "I am doing it for such and such a reason." If, however, a believer is acquainted with such assaults, he will not be disturbed by this, but will proceed with the performance of his task -- even if he does so as a man who proceeds on his way during a hailstorm. However, corrupt nature and ulterior motives will frequently surface.

(4) It is also contrary to being upright if we do a task partially. This is not to suggest that those deficiencies which are to be detected in the very best works render a man as not being upright. Such is the case, however, if our heart is not in our work and if we do it listlessly and in a lukewarm and sluggish manner, the task is performed but not with the whole mind, will, and strength, and with every effort to have a holy objective. Our own intellect, will, activity, and seeking of self will intermingle, so that the task is performed but in a half-hearted manner. Consider if you also do not perceive yourself as being guilty of this. If so, then know that:

- even though you are pleasing in Christ as far as your person is concerned, the Lord is nevertheless displeased with your lack of uprightness.

-

- your lack of uprightness will soon be detected by others -- particularly by the godly. It will grieve them if they are strong Christians and it will arouse aversion and antipathy against you if they are little in grace.

-

- it will render godliness suspect to those who are of the world, and for your sake there will be a widespread slandering of the godly. They will say all the more, "See, such people are they; they are a group of hypocrites."

-

- you yourself will have a troubled conscience and will lack freedom in all things.

-

Therefore humble yourself greatly before the Lord, be grieved over it, and let the view of the wickedness of your heart and deeds cause you to loathe yourself, and may you thus be fearful of the sin of not being upright. May it cause you to battle against it all the more earnestly and to strive for uprightness. The Necessity of Being Exhorted to Be Upright Be determined to be upright and to conduct yourself as such, for uprightness is, in the first place, an absolutely essential characteristic of the Christian, for a Christian is indeed upright. "... the upright love Thee" (Song of Solomon 1:4). Of Job we read: "That man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil" (Job 1:1); of David: "I was also upright before Him" (Psalms 18:23); of Hezekiah: "Remember now, O Lord, I beseech Thee, how I have walked before Thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in Thy sight" (Isaiah 38:3); and of Noah: "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations" (Genesis 6:9). Uprightness is also an inseparable attribute of all virtues. Uprightness is a requisite in prayer: "God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24); of faith: "Now the end of the commandment is charity ... of faith unfeigned" (1 Timothy 1:5); of love: "Let love be without dissimulation" (Romans 12:9); of the entire disposition of the heart: "And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless" (1 Thessalonians 5:23); and of our entire conversation: "Therefore let us keep the feast ... with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (1 Corinthians 5:8). Since uprightness is thus such an essential and inseparable characteristic of the Christian as well as of his work, what shall we then undertake unless we do so with uprightness?

Secondly, uprightness is desirable and befitting for a Christian, for the God with whom we have to do is pure light, is the only searcher of the hearts whom we cannot deceive, who perceives the least deviation, desires truth in the inward parts, whose eyes are upon the truth (Jeremiah 5:3), and who delights in those who are upright in their way (Proverbs 11:20). Does having fellowship with such a God not require uprightness? The Lord Jesus in whom we put our trust is perfectly upright and there is no guile in His mouth. The Holy Ghost who dwells in you as in a temple, is the Spirit of truth (John 14:17), who leads His children in the truth (John 16:13). He would be grieved if you were to corrupt your ways and deviate toward unrighteousness. The Word of God by which you have been regenerated, which is your food and the rule of your life, is truth (John 17:17); it is the word of truth (Psalms 119:43). Ought this not to motivate you to be truthful in all your dealings? The spiritual life which is in you, and the image of God which you bear, "is created in righteousness and true holiness" (Ephesians 4:24). Pursue therefore the principle of uprightness of spiritual life, follow the leading of the Holy Spirit, and in all uprightness walk before the all-seeing eye of your God. See to it that your deeds are in harmony with your name.

Thirdly, uprightness is a very precious ornament, and insincerity renders all virtues which someone may possibly possess despicable. However, uprightness renders all other virtues glorious, adds luster to godliness, and causes the upright to be loved by natural men, by the godly, and by God Himself.

(1) They will be loved by natural men. As much as they may mock with the godly, they have esteem for the upright. They say, "They are a group of hypocrites; however, so and so is genuine and is upright and with such a person I would wish to die" (even though it is mostly out of self-love in order not to be deceived). The words of the upright find entrance with them, and the upright are able to win others also without words. If uprightness were to shine forth in all the godly, what a luster godliness would have in the world!

(2) The uprightness of others is precious to the godly; they do not desire to have fellowship with two-faced people (Psalms 26:4). Rather, their eyes are upon the faithful and upright ones (Psalms 101:6). Even though someone has been regenerated in essence, but his uprightness nevertheless is penetrated with a seeking of self, the godly can have no fellowship with him. It is their desire to love them, walk sweetly with them, and take counsel with them; however, there is inner resistance. They cannot unite their heart with them; such cause them labor, toil, and sorrow. However, the heart is at once united with the upright, and the godly find delight in and are edified by their company. Lydia used uprightness as an argument with Paul by saying, "If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there" (Acts 16:15).

(3) However, all this is superseded by the fact that God Himself finds pleasure in the upright. "Such as are upright in their way are His delight" (Proverbs 11:20). Just as we delight in observing those whom we love, so it is written of the Lord, "His countenance doth behold the upright" (Psalms 11:7). The upright are harmless and do not wish to use evil means to help themselves. Rather, it is the Lord who "saveth the upright in heart" (Psalms 7:10). God adopts the upright to be His intimate companions upon whom He bestows a special measure of His goodness. "Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in Thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart" (Psalms 15:1-2). The Lord causes the heart of the upright to be joyful. "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart" (Psalms 97:11). If there is anything that ought to motivate you, this ought to be it. Be therefore upright, for the upright are loved by everyone, whereas hypocrites are hated.

Fourthly, God evaluates his children according to their uprightness. It pleases the Lord not to make His children perfect in this life. Everything is only in part here, and daily they still offend in many things. However, they are called the upright according to their inherent uprightness. By way of this uprightness all their weaknesses are, so to speak, covered in Christ. David had committed great sins, for at one time he misbehaved himself in this respect and then again in a different respect. Nevertheless, due to his uprightness, it is written of him, "Because David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from any thing that He commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite" (1 Kings 15:14 -- for in that instance he had behaved himself hypocritically. Such is also true relative to the sins of Asa. "Nevertheless Asa's heart was perfect (upright) with the Lord all his days" (1 Kings 15:14). The conclusion of the rebuke addressed to Jehoshaphat was, "Nevertheless there are good things found in thee, in that thou ... hast prepared thine heart to seek God" (2 Chronicles 19:3). Hezekiah prayed, "The good Lord pardon every one that prepareth his heart to seek God, the Lord God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary" (2 Chronicles 30:18-19). In Christ, God will overlook your defects if you walk before the countenance of the Lord with a truly upright heart. Therefore, be upright.

Fifthly, uprightness will give much liberty in the performance of our duty. Let the hypocrite fear the light, let the darkness be his refuge, let him be fearful of doing anything where opposition is to be expected, and let him be terrified and tremble due to each plague God sends into the world, but the upright man will be fearless, will have the courage to stand up for God's cause, will manifest himself as a young lion, and will perform his duty. He will stand firm against all slander and danger, for he has freedom within and anticipates God's help without. "God forbid that I should justify you: till I die I will not remove mine integrity from me. My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go" (Job 27:5-6); "If I covered my transgressions as Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my bosom: Oh that one would hear me! behold, my desire is ... that mine adversary had written a book. Surely I would take it upon my shoulder, and bind it as a crown to me. I would declare unto him the number of my steps; as a prince would I go near unto him" (Job 31:33; Job 31:35-37). Uprightness will render a person to be that courageous. Even if he meets with violent opposition, he nevertheless does not fear, for the Lord helps the upright, according to this promise, "For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him" (2 Chronicles 16:9). An upright person needs no other weapon but his uprightness.

Sixthly, uprightness yields a peaceful life and a dying in comfort. A hypocrite continually lives in unrest and fears that he will be found out. Much calculation is required to cover one hypocritical act with the other. An upright person, however, has a peaceful conscience, and he is steadfast and sure of himself. "For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity ... we have had our conversation in the world" (2 Corinthians 1:12). And, if the hour of death arrives, and sins come to mind, it will be a comfort that our heart has nevertheless been upright before the Lord. "O Lord, I beseech Thee, how I have walked before Thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in Thy sight" (Isaiah 38:3). The Means to

Uprightness

Therefore, by way of continual exercise, be very zealous to acquire a propensity of uprightness and to have such an entirely upright disposition -- so that uprightness will, so to speak, spontaneously issue forth, manifesting itself in all your deeds.

(1) Before the Lord acknowledge the corruption of your heart and that which issues forth out of this heart, and show at the same time the hatred and aversion you have for it, and your desire for uprightness and truthfulness.

(2) Acknowledge your impotence, and that it is impossible for you to bring and maintain your heart in such an upright disposition. However, also acknowledge that the Lord has both the power and goodness to grant this to you. Therefore, come before the Lord with that desire and your destitute condition. Pray the Lord for this, doing so earnestly, humbly, and persistently, saying, "Let my heart be sound in Thy statutes; that I be not ashamed" (Psalms 119:80). As you thus pray, look unto the Lord Jesus, who has merited spirit and life for you and has appropriated these merits to you. Come before the Lord with this, while holding before Him the promise He has made, namely, that He would cause our work to be in truth (Isaiah 61:8).

(3) Pay careful attention to your heart, which leans toward insincerity, and resist this insincerity at once. No matter how much shame or injury may come upon you, remain steadfast in your uprightness.

(4) If you have done something insincere, reflect upon this for some time, so that it will deeply grieve you and make you more careful in the future.

(5) Remain continually in the presence of the Lord. The perception of the presence and omniscience of God is a powerful means unto uprightness. These two are therefore conjoined: "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect" (Genesis 17:1).

(6) As you thus proceed, focus continually upon the Word of truth. Endeavor to understand its spiritual meaning, and the truth will make you free. You will increase in a walking in the truth; and one thus enters heaven. "Blessed are the undefiled in the way" (Psalms 119:1).

073. Chapter 68: Prayer

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-EIGHT -----

Prayer The acknowledgment of all God's perfections, and the exercise of all virtues toward God coalesce in prayer -- that necessary, profitable, holy, and sanctifying duty of a Christian. Consequently, the exercise of religion is comprehensively expressed as praying and calling upon God: "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord" (Genesis 4:26).

Since prayer proceeds from a variety of motions of the soul, it is also referred to by various designations, such tefilla, which means prayer (Psalms 4:2); techinna, which means supplication (Psalms 6:10); siach, which means complaint (Psalms 64:1); tse'naqah, which means calling or crying (Psalms 9:13); deesis, which means prayer (James 5:16) or supplication (1 Timothy 2:1); hiketeria, which means supplication (Hebrews 5:7); enteuksis (1 Timothy 4:5), euche (James 5:16), and proseuche (Colossians 4:2), which all mean prayer; and proskunein, which means to worship (Matthew 4:10). In view of a variety of manners, times, matters, and respects relative to prayer, one may distinguish between various forms of prayer. The Various Forms of Prayer in Scripture

First there is worship. This occurs when, while viewing and acknowledging the perfections of God, we reverently bow ourselves before the Lord and render Him honor and glory, and if -- be it without words, with inward thoughts, or by way of external words -- we "speak of the glorious honour of Thy majesty, and of Thy wondrous works" (Psalms 145:5). This is also the work of angels toward Christ: "Let all the angels of God worship Him" (Hebrews 1:6).

Secondly, there is invocation. This occurs when we request something from God, be it the deliverance from some oppressing or imminent evil, or the receipt of some benefit for body and soul. "And call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee" (Psalms 50:15); "He shall call upon Me, and I will answer him...with long life will I satisfy him, and show him My salvation" (Psalms 91:15-16).

Thirdly, there is supplication. This occurs when, with much humility and by presenting many arguments, we persevere in prayer. "...Nevertheless Thou hearest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto Thee" (Psalms 31:22); "... he wept, and made supplication unto Him" (Hosea 12:4).

Fourthly, there is groaning. This occurs if we cannot find words to give expression to our desires or the lofty matters which we have in view and desire with great yearning. The apostle calls them, "groanings which cannot be uttered" (Romans 8:26), and the psalmist says, "Lord, all my desire is before Thee; and my groaning is not hid from Thee" (Psalms 38:9).

Fifthly, there are public or communal prayers. This occurs when the congregation calls upon God in either a public gathering place or in a private home, where someone audibly leads in prayer. "Prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him" (Acts 12:5). Prayers which are offered when some gather to pray together are also considered communal prayers. "That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matthew 18:19-20).

Sixthly, there are private prayers. This occurs when we bring our particular desires before God. There are:

(1) Ejaculatory prayers, which are sent heavenward to God during our work, while walking, or during a conversation with people. Thus, Nehemiah prayed to God while he was speaking to the king (Nehemiah 2:4), and Moses did so while he stood before the Red Sea with Israel (Exodus 14:13).

(2) Seasonal prayers, which in turn are either of an occasional nature when a particular incident prompts us to seek solitude in order to pray; or regular prayers, that is, at our designated devotional times in the morning, at noon, and in the evening. Both ejaculatory as well as seasonal prayers are either:

[a] Mental, when bringing our desires before God by way of exerting ourselves mentally, and by way of reflection and contemplation. This occurs without words as is to be observed in the quoted examples of Moses and Nehemiah.

[b] Or oral, which occurs when we express our desires with words -- even if we form and pronounce words without using the voice. Such was the case with Hannah. "Now Hannah, she spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard" (1 Samuel 1:13).

It can also be that we express our desires with our voice, doing so either more loudly or softly, depending on how far or how close we are to the people. "My voice shalt Thou hear in the morning, O Lord" (Psalms 5:3). It is no wonder that the papists elevate mental prayers above oral prayers, since their oral prayers are nothing but recitations of form prayers, pater nosters, and Ave-Marias.

Seventhly, there is intercessory prayer. This occurs when we desire something from God for others. Such can occur for the church in general: "Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles" (Psalms 25:22); "Do good in Thy good pleasure unto Zion: build Thou the walls of Jerusalem" (Psalms 51:18); "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem" (Psalms 122:6). This can also occur on behalf of given individuals. "Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him" (James 5:16); "Brethren, pray for us" (1 Thessalonians 5:25); "Pray one for another" (James 5:16); "Pray for them which despitefully use you" (Matthew 5:44); "Prayers ... be made ... for kings, and for all that are in authority" (1 Timothy 2:1-2).

Many abuse this practice in our days by repeatedly saying to each other upon parting, "I commend myself to your prayers; remember me in your prayers; I request your intercessory prayer; or pray for me." They do this as commonly as the expression of a greeting. Apart from the fact that it is impossible to remember all those who make such a request, it is necessary that we know specifically what we are to pray for on behalf of someone else. The one who makes the request ought to be in specific circumstances, which should be revealed to those whose intercessory prayer he requests. Only then may one request intercession from another, and the one to whom the request has been made is obligated to do so, so that God, being beseeched by many, would also be thanked by many. However, the trend of making such requests is frequently no more than a custom, and it can cause one to lose sight of the intercession of the Lord Jesus.

There can be no intercession for the dead; they already are where they will eternally be and will remain; purgatory is indeed hell itself. There also can be no intercession for those who have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost. "There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it" (1 John 5:16).

Eighthly, there is imprecatory prayer. Here we must be cautious and on guard that we are not carried away by our own passions, as occurred with the disciples of Christ, who wanted to pray that fire consume the Samaritans who would not receive them (Luke 9:54). One may never pray for someone's eternal perdition, nor for the bodily destruction of someone who is our personal enemy. We may also not do so relative to those who offend God's congregation. If, however, the Lord moves us to pray against those who oppress and persecute the congregation in an extraordinary manner, we may then pray that God would convert them, and if such is not to be the case, that God would punish them so that they would no longer be able to oppress the church. It would thus be apparent that the Lord takes vengeance upon the blood of His church and furthermore that God would be glorified therein. "Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek Thy name, O Lord. Let them be confounded and troubled for ever; yea, let them be put to shame, and perish: that men may know that Thou, whose name alone is Jehovah, art the Most High over all the earth" (Psalms 83:16-18).

Ninthly, there is thanksgiving. Such occurs when we joyfully acknowledge the goodness of God manifested in all temporal and spiritual blessings bestowed hitherto, doing so especially for specific blessings. Such acknowledgment will motivate the supplicant to pray zealously for that which he presently desires. This is what Jacob did in Genesis 32:1-2, as well as the church in Psalms 75:2-5. Therefore thanksgiving and prayer are frequently conjoined: "In every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God" (Php 4:6); "I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men" (1 Timothy 2:1). The Nature or Essence of Prayer In our treatment of the subject of prayer we shall first show what its nature is, and then we shall stir you up to the exercise of prayer. In order to unfold the true essence of prayer we shall present 1) its definition (which we shall expound and enlarge upon); 2) its characteristics; 3) its external incidentals; and 4) the exercise of prayer, consisting in preparation, practice, and reflection.

Prayer is the expression of holy desires to God in the name of Christ, which, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, proceed from a regenerated heart, along with the request for the fulfillment of these desires. Each word is of emphatic importance and needs to be further enlarged upon.

Prayer is the expression of desires. With this phrase we wish to give expression to what the soul's activity is in prayer. There is total involvement; that is, the intellect, will, passions, eyes, mouth, hands, knees, the entire soul, and the entire body are involved.

(1) The supplicant is focused upon himself. He knows, sees, and perceives his deficiency. He perishes from hunger and desires to be filled. He perceives his impotence--his inability to help himself. He also knows that no creature can give him this and he also does not desire to receive it from the creature. God alone can give this to him, but he sees and perceives with sorrow and anxiety of heart his unworthiness, hatefulness and abominableness. God can thus not be moved to help him by his disposition -- indeed, this would sooner provoke Him to wrath. He perceives that he is not worthy -- not even from afar -- to address God, for his prayer is so sinful and so deficient that by it he cannot move God to hear and help him. He is so intensely focused on his disposition that he sinks away in misery and despair, and does not have a hope in anything within him or that proceeds from him.

(2) The suppliant is focused upon God, holding the Lord before Him as being majestic, omniscient, glorious, immanent, holy -- as well as gracious in Christ, merciful, and omnipotent. Here he bows in humility and trembles due to the respect he has. Here he takes liberty to receive Christ and to make known his desires in and through Him, knowing that God is glorified in hearing and helping repentant sinners.

(3) The suppliant is focused upon the matters which he desires -- be it deliverance from a cross which oppresses or threatens him, or a blessing for either soul or body. He perceives how necessary and beneficial it would be for him either to be delivered from this, or to receive a blessing. He knows what he desires, vividly reflects upon it, is enamored with it, and pants and yearns for it. The suppliant intermingles these three matters. In one motion he focuses upon himself, God, and the matter at hand. Being in that disposition, he not only presents himself before God as such, but also gives expression to his desires before the Lord. The expression of desires is vividly presented in Scripture, conveying to us both the matter itself, as well as all who are or have been in such a disposition. Furthermore, Scripture stirs up inclinations toward such a disposition -- yes, frequently causes a soul to be thus disposed. That which we denominate as an "expression," Scripture refers to as:

(1) a pouring out: "... but I have poured out my soul before the Lord" (1 Samuel 1:15);

(2) [Note: We have placed (1) and (2) under the same heading, "pouring out," since the Dutch words "uitgieten" and "uitstorten" are both translated as "to pour out" in the KJV.] "A prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the Lord" (Psalms 102:1);

(3) a declaring: "I have declared my ways, and Thou heardest me" (Psalms 119:26);

(4) a lifting up: "Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul" (Psalms 25:1);

(5) a looking up: "In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee (that is, arrange everything in as orderly a fashion as an army is organized in rows and divisions) and will look up" (Psalms 5:3);

(6) a conversing: "When Thou saidst, Seek ye My face; my heart said unto Thee, Thy face, Lord, will I seek" (Psalms 27:8);

(7) a crying, a panting: "They cried unto Thee, and were delivered" (Psalms 22:5); "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God" (Psalms 42:1).

(8) a seeking with all our heart and our whole desire: "They had sworn with all their heart, and sought Him with their whole desire" (2 Chronicles 15:15).

All these expressions are indicative of the intense involvement of the soul in prayer. When the soul intends to pray, she can frequently not find words -- yes, all words are too inferior and inadequate to express the desire and the intense disposition of the soul. Therefore:

- (1) She does so by simply manifesting that disposition to the Lord.
- (2) Sometimes she does so by a sigh, which conveys more than she can express.
- (3) When the soul is more enlarged, she begins to formulate words, doing so either strictly mentally, or quietly with the mouth -- only moving the lips noiselessly, or with a soft whisper.
- (4) As the desires increase in intensity, the voice also becomes louder, and if one is so far removed from people that one cannot be heard, there will be a calling out.
- (5) And if the emotions become more abundant, there will be tears, especially if hope and love become stronger. What a wonder it is when a man who is not easily moved to tears and would be ashamed if he cried (this being inconsistent with his dignity), at times melts before the Lord in tears, which flow down his cheeks as rivers! The soul is never more in her element than when she has been soft and has been able to weep in a heartfelt manner. Job, that unemotional man, was able to cry: "I cry unto Thee" (Job 30:20). David, that valiant hero, who had the heart of a lion, wept before the Lord as a child: "All the night make I my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears" (Psalms 6:6); "Hold not Thy peace at my tears" (Psalms 39:12). The brave and respected Paul generally prayed with tears: "Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears" (Acts 20:19).

Prayer: The Expression of Holy Desires

We denominate prayer to be an expression of desires -- not an expression of matters. An unconverted person who has a judgmental knowledge of spiritual matters, and who furthermore is eloquent, has an expressive voice, and has control over his emotions, can have a perception of the necessity and beauty of spiritual matters (although in a more natural manner and as if relating to natural matters) and present them in prayer in a very emotional and mournful manner. Yes, he can stir up his emotions to such an extent that he can speak tearfully about these matters. This is particularly true when he knows that he is being listened to or could be listened to; or, if he leads in prayer in a gathering where he can render himself pleasant by such expressions and tears, so that it appears that he is very spiritual, is very near to God, and is ignited with holy zeal -- and yet it is no more than a natural work. I therefore refer to prayer as an expression of desires, and not of matters. Man is but an empty vessel who must obtain his fulfillment from elsewhere -- from a source external to himself. To that end the Lord has given man the ability to desire and to give expression to his desires. The strength of his desires is proportionate to the measure in which he is sensitive of his deficiency, the magnitude and desirability of the matters which in his judgment could satisfy him, and the probability that they are to be obtained. He endeavors to express these desires accordingly. However, this does not necessarily render the desires holy, and we therefore do not merely refer to prayer as an expression of desires.

Instead, it is an expression of holy desires. We can indeed desire temporal matters in a spiritual sense, and spiritual matters in a carnal sense. Desires are carnal if they relate to sin, or if we desire good things with a sinful motive, in order to gain honor, love, favor, advantage, and pleasure. We desire temporal and spiritual matters in a spiritual sense if it is lawful to desire these things and we desire them in order to be able to better serve God joyfully and zealously -- that is, if we desire those matters in the way we have prescribed earlier, and so that in them we may observe, acknowledge, and praise God's grace, goodness, help, and power, finding a delight in doing so.

We call prayer an expression of holy desires toward God. We then look beyond all creatures -- both good and evil -- knowing that they are not able to help. Yes, even if they were able to help, we would nevertheless not wish to pray to them. Apart from God we do not wish to be helped, because we love God and do not wish to give His honor to another.

(1) It is idolatry to serve those who by nature are no gods (Galatians 4:8).

(2) God wills that we call upon Him alone. "Call upon Me" (Psalms 50:15); "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God" (Matthew 4:10).

(3) Only such prayer has a promise associated with it. "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Acts 2:21).

(4) God alone has the required perfections of someone who is to be worshiped. He who prays aright desires to glorify God in prayer as the One who alone is worthy of worship; the only fountain of all good gifts; the omniscient One who knows the hearts and the mind of the Spirit; the omnipotent One for whom nothing is too wonderful; the One who is good, merciful, gracious, and the One who delights in mercy; the One who waits for someone to come to Him in order that He might be gracious to Him; and the One who is true and has promised to hear and to give. It is for this reason that the supplicant turns to the Lord, bows before Him in humility and reverence, displays his needs before Him, requests from Him the fulfillment of His desires, and thus waits upon the Lord. It is his delight and joy to worship God.

Prayer to Be Offered in the Name of Jesus Christ

Prayer must be offered in the name of Jesus Christ. "... and the Branch that Thou madest strong for Thyself" (Psalms 80:15); "... for the Lord's sake" (Daniel 9:17); "If ye shall ask any thing in My name, I will do it" (John 14:14); "... that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you" (John 15:16).

(1) "In the name of" occasionally means out of love for someone. "And whoso shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth Me" (Matthew 18:5). To pray thus in Christ's name is as much as to say, "Lord, Thou dost love Thy Son, Thou art pleased with His sacrifice, and Thy Son loves me and I love Him. I now pray for the sake of the love which Thou hast for Thy Son that Thou wouldest hear me and grant my desire."

(2) Occasionally "in the name of" means upon the command of: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thessalonians 3:6). Then it means as much as to say: "Thy Son, who is my Surety with Thy approval, has sent me to Thee and enjoined me that I would call upon Thee and petition Thee for all that I stand in need of. This gives me boldness to humbly make this request."

(3) Sometimes, yes, most frequently, it signifies: for the sake of Christ Himself; for the sake of His atoning suffering and death. "Through faith in His name hath made this man strong" (Acts 3:16); "... for there is none other name under heaven" (Acts 4:12); "Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him" (Hebrews 7:25). Since man, due to his sin, has made a separation between God and himself, he neither may nor is able to immediately come unto God. God would be a consuming fire to him and he would encounter what Nadab and Abihu experienced, who approached unto God with strange fire and were killed by God through fire. However, the Lord has given Jesus to be a Surety and Mediator who, by His suffering and death, has reconciled the sinner with God and has eliminated the separation. Upon His death, the veil was rent in the temple so that without any impediment one would be able to look into and enter the Holy of Holies. Believers thus have boldness to go unto God "by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh" (Hebrews 10:20). Christ is the way by which alone one may and can go to the Father (John 14:6). If we therefore pray in Christ's name, that is as much as praying for the sake of the merits of Christ. The supplicant receives Christ who is offered to him and thus becomes a partaker of Christ and all His merits. With these merits he goes to God and displays them, and in this manner he petitions God for all that he desires.

Those who pray are not always in one and the same condition. Some are not able to assure themselves that they are partakers of Christ. Since they have strong desires for spiritual and temporal blessings, they take their refuge to God. However, they do so not directly, but with an eye upon Christ and His satisfaction, and they pray that God would be gracious to them for the sake of Christ and His merits and thus bless them. This constitutes praying in Christ's name -- although faith is weak. Some are principally assured of their portion in Christ; however, there is an estrangement from God. For such, upon engaging in prayer, it is therefore their first task to receive Christ and to reflect expressly upon His merits while consciously repenting. They thus show to the Father the merits of Christ and pray that their prayer for the fulfillment of their desires be heard on the basis of those merits. Some live a closer life and habitually are focused upon the covenant of grace, as well as the satisfaction and merits of Christ. Such, when engaging in prayer, are not always in need of an express transaction with Christ and a specific reflection upon His merits for the purpose of showing them to the Father, to say that they are coming and praying in Christ's name and that they request the fulfillment of their desires for the sake of the merits of Christ. Rather, they approach and remain in the disposition of being partakers of the covenant, children, and partakers of Christ. They pray by way of the covenant and the atonement of Christ, even though they do not mention it as such. However, we must take care not to be without an express transaction with and a returning unto Christ too long and too frequently, lest we lose sight of Christ and approach unto God in a more direct sense, thus dealing with God in a less humble and appropriate manner. The Originator of True Prayer A true prayer proceeds from the Holy Spirit. Man is spiritually dead by nature, and neither has a good disposition of heart, nor good desires. He is blind and ignorant of what can truly satisfy him. Nevertheless, he perceives bodily deficiencies and is fearful of evil. He also takes refuge to God when he is deprived of creature-help; however, neither the disposition of his heart, nor his prayer is pleasing to God. In order for anyone to pray aright, the Holy Spirit must grant the disposition, the desires, and the expressions. "And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplications" (Zechariah 12:10); "God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father" (Galatians 4:6); "The Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered" (Romans 8:26). This means that He grants the disposition and desires, gives the words in the mouth, goes before them, and causes them to pray after Him. In proportion to whether the Holy Spirit moves in a moderate or stronger manner, prayer will also be either more feeble or more zealous. Sometimes the supplicant is fervent at the beginning of his prayer, but then there gradually comes more darkness and he becomes increasingly dull. Sometimes he is in darkness and dull at the outset, but while he is wrestling he becomes more lively. Sometimes he is completely closed up within and He can neither produce a prayer, sigh, nor tears, and in such a condition He must arise and depart. Sometimes he is so filled that he does not know where all these desires, words, and tears originate, so that he is more in want of time than desire.

Question If we cannot pray aright without the Holy Spirit, why are we then commanded to pray for the Spirit? Answer: Man has a natural intellect, he perceives his deficiency, and nature teaches him that he must pray. Under the administration of the means of grace he learns that the Holy Spirit is the author of prayer, and he learns from the Word of God that he must pray God for the Holy Spirit. By means of these natural convictions and motions the Holy Spirit works in the elect the inclination to pray and shows them that they neither have the right prayerful disposition, the right desires, nor do they express them correctly. The Holy Spirit will show them that He must work all this in them and that therefore they must pray for the Holy Spirit. They are thus secretly wrought upon to pray for the Spirit, and are therefore already praying for the Spirit by the Spirit. Those who presently perceive in themselves the beginnings of the operation of the Spirit will pray that this might be increased by the Spirit.

Man, upon the Holy Spirit having wrought and stimulated a prayerful disposition in the soul, begins to express his desires from a regenerated heart. The regenerate man is thus the formal cause of his deeds. If even a natural man has an inclination toward prayer, this is much more so for a regenerate man due to the regenerate disposition of his heart. Since not all the regenerate know that such is the case with them, but perceive that they have a sinful heart; and since all manner of sinful thoughts, words, and deeds proceed from this sinful disposition, they become concerned as to whether they are permitted to pray -- yes, at times they do not dare to pray, for it is as if they mock God. As they engage in prayer, it is always their intention not to sin, but they, nevertheless, always fall again into the same sin. The following passages come to their mind: "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 15:8); "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination" (Proverbs 28:9); "Now we know that God heareth not sinners" (John 9:31). For your instruction you ought to know:

(1) It is the duty of all the ungodly to repent and to pray. The abomination lies not in the fact that they pray, but in that, while praying for temporal matters, they do not repent, they willingly and consciously continue to sin; neither do they beseech God to be reconciled with Him, nor for a change of heart and deeds. They do so routinely, being accustomed from their youth to offer a prayer both morning and evening, which, if they were to neglect, would cause them to be restless. Or they do this hypocritically, being desirous, in spite of their worldly lifestyle, to be esteemed as good Christians.

(2) The prayer of those whose heart is upright before the Lord, who seek for reconciliation and the forgiveness of their sins, desire to be delivered from sin and to live in the love and fear of God according to His will, and pray for this while endeavoring to focus upon the Lord Jesus -- their prayer will not be an abomination, but be pleasing to God. The Lord seeks after such supplicants, and He deals tenderly with such bruised reeds and smoking flax. Therefore let this give you liberty. Your repeated falling into sin is contrary to your intent, grieves you, and does not proceed from an evil intent. Rather, it is the result of weakness, the flesh becoming stronger than the spirit.

Prayer Under Consciousness of Committed Sin

They who presently know that they have been translated from death to spiritual life, or may perceive the evidences within themselves from which they may conclude this (even if the assurance of this is not very strong), occasionally come into a condition which is more sinful than their common trend of life. They can also be taken captive by sin to such an extent that at the moment they cannot make a complete, joyful, and courageous resolution to presently arise from this sin and earnestly strive against it. Or it can be when the trend of their life is good, that they occasionally fall into a special sin. If under such conditions, they were to engage in prayer immediately -- that is, without first coming to themselves, making a resolution to repent so that their heart convinces them that they are upright in their intention -- it would be an irreverent undertaking and displeasing to God. Such persons would personally have no liberty in prayer, nor do so with holy attention, for their heart condemns them while they are thus engaged. Those who are in such a condition must first recover themselves, so that they may have an upright intention to battle against that sin, and betake themselves to prayer to beseech God for reconciliation and strength against this sin. They will then be at liberty because their heart does not condemn them (1 John 3:20-21).

It occasionally also happens that a regenerate person is entirely void of desires -- not in essence, but in the exercise. When such a one engages in prayer he knows not what to pray, for he has no desire for anything. He has either lost sight of the desirability of the matters due to spiritual darkness, or he is discouraged due to not having received his desire after so much prayer. This will close his heart. What shall he do? Pray? He cannot. Shall he neglect prayer? -- which such a person neglects all too often, and, due to such neglect, turns away from prayer entirely. That he cannot do, for his regenerated nature will not permit this and will continually incline him to pray. Such a person must not resist such feeble inclinations, which is so easily done; rather, he must be as a small child. Or, as one who revives from a fainting spell moves about very feebly and speaks very softly, he must follow his feeble inclinations, present them before the Lord, persevere in prayer, and acquaint himself with the Lord -- or else he will backslide even further. However, in doing so he will experience that "He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer" (Psalms 102:17). The Purpose of Prayer The purpose for which one presents his holy desires is the fulfillment of those desires, beseeching that they be granted. The supplicant makes a request. When someone makes a request to another, he will support that request with arguments; such is also the case here. The supplicant will not merely say: "Lord, save me, and create a new heart within me; say to my soul 'I am thy salvation'; teach and guide me," but the supplicant will enlarge his request by way of argumentation. This is to be observed in Christ, David, and other saints, for this renders the supplicant:

(1) More humble, for as he perseveres, he will behold God and himself all the more clearly. He will think: "How do I dare to speak so boldly -- I, who am so sinful, so abominable, and so unworthy!"

He sinks away, so to speak, and acknowledges that it is nothing but incomprehensible grace that he may speak with God and that God would hear him.

(2) More active and his prayer more fervent, for he perceives the necessity and desirability of the matters all the better. His desires are quickened, and his heart is enlarged and begins to flow forth as a river.

(3) More holy in his prayer, for his objective will be more genuine, he is more aware of this genuine objective. The more genuine his objective becomes in desiring a matter, the more liberty he will have in desiring it.

(4) More fit to persevere in prayer, since he then views the matter from all angles. The one desire will then engender another and those desires in turn will engender others. Such perseverance causes him to dwell longer in the presence of God; the soul comes into and remains in a more holy disposition, and has already received a blessing. The presentation of such arguments must not occur artificially, but as they spontaneously issue forth from the prayerful heart and as the Lord causes matters to come to our attention. We shall then strive for the glorification of God, whose glory, goodness, and power would manifest itself in the hearing of prayer and in granting the matter itself. At one time we shall use as an argument that, if the Lord were to grant us our desire, our abilities would be such that the congregation would be edified and it would be to the benefit of others. Then again we shall focus upon the promises of God, being exercised with them until we believe the immutable truth of God in a more lively manner and we can be more assured that this matter will also become our portion -- God having promised the hearing of prayer. At another time the godly will present themselves to the Lord as being His children, knowing that God, being pleased when His children hunger and thirst after Him, will consequently give them something and gladden them -- just as a father according to the flesh is compassionate toward his hungry and desirous children, and rejoices in giving them their desires and making them happy. Then again they will present with urgency the merits of the Lord Jesus. They will remind the Lord of His mercies previously manifested toward them -- as Jacob did in Genesis 32:9-12, and the church in Psalms 85:1-5. While thus engaged, faith will be quickened, love will become active, they will engage in more intimate transactions, and, with quiet resignation, will submit themselves to the will of God. The Characteristics of True Prayer The characteristics of prayer are as follows: It is engaged in humbly, in spirit and in truth, earnestly, fervently, incessantly, and by faith.

First there is humility. This is the sensible, humble disposition of the supplicant, resulting from a view of the majesty of God, and of his own sinfulness, unworthiness, and impotence either to supply for his deficiency or to have it fulfilled by God. Man must in all things be humble toward God. "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to ... walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6:8). This must particularly be the case when engaging in prayer, for:

(1) The creature then approaches his Creator, the lowly one to Him who is majestic and exalted, the sinner to the Holy One, the despised one to the glorious One, and one worthy of condemnation to the Judge of heaven and earth who has power over life and death. When Moses approached the burning bush, the voice of God resounded, "Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground" (Exodus 3:5). Here one may think in truth: "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God" (Micah 6:6). Abraham said, "Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and ashes" (Genesis 18:27). "And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner" (Luke 18:13).

(2) Humility in prayer is very pleasing to God. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise" (Psalms 51:17); "... for in Thee the fatherless findeth mercy" (Hosea 14:3).

(3) God hears and answers humble supplicants. "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones" (Isaiah 57:15).

(4) A godly supplicant finds a special delight -- yes, acknowledges it as a great grace and as an answer upon his prayer -- if, with such a humble and reverent disposition, he may have a view of the Lord's majesty and glory, even if he received nothing else upon his prayer. However, he does receive immediate assurance that God has heard him and will provide according to His will, for He "giveth grace to the humble" (1 Peter 5:5).

Secondly, it is done in spirit and in truth. To recite verbally what has been memorized (even if we pay attention to every word and even if it is our general objective to pray to God) but not to understand the matters, and if we do understand them not to desire them, is but a mocking with God. It is foolishness if we desire a matter, and to that end recite the Lord's prayer, a morning or an evening prayer, in order to attain it.

Praying in spirit and in truth:

(1) Consists of a praying with the understanding; that is, to be acquainted with the Lord to whom one is praying; with the Christ through whom one approaches unto God; with ourselves in our perplexity and unworthiness; with the matter which we desire; and with the objective in requesting the matter. Not only is it necessary to be habitually acquainted with this (thus being able to be conscious of this if we were to give heed to this), but there must be an actual knowledge of all this. Thus, while presently praying, we shall perceive and observe that which is being expressed, and by such perception will be moved and made active. "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also" (1 Corinthians 14:15).

(2) Is an exercise of the will, so that we desire the matters in truth. Our conscience must testify before God that we desire them, that this is our objective -- not only when considering the matter as such, but also together with its attending circumstances, willingly renouncing all that stands in opposition to the desired matter. An unconverted person when hearing the desirability of holiness presented as such would perhaps say, "Yes, I want this, and I have a desire for holiness." If, however, that sin which he views as an honest practice, cherishes, delights in, and deems profitable is observed in this light, and he perceives that he must fully renounce it, he does not desire holiness, but his sin instead. Alexander wanted to be Diogenes if he were not Alexander. The rich young ruler had a desire for salvation and the keeping of God's commandments; however, when he must part with his goods, he departs sorrowfully (Matthew 19:21-22).

(3) Is also attended by thoughtfulness and attentiveness. We must be on guard that passion does not run ahead of the understanding and the will; rather, the engagement of the understanding and the will must precede, stimulate and govern our zeal. If matters proceed in this way, the heart will remain in a proper disposition. "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God. Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few" (Ecclesiastes 5:1-2).

Spirit and truth are absolutely essential in prayer, for:

- [1] "God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24);
- [2] God requires the heart: "My son, give Me thine heart" (Proverbs 23:26);
- [3] God knows the heart as well as the mind of the Spirit: "... for Thou, even Thou only, knowest the hearts of all the children of men" (1 Kings 8:39);
- [4] God desires truth in the inward parts (Psalms 58:8);
- [5] "Thine eyes (are) upon the truth" (Jeremiah 5:3), "for the Father seeketh such to worship Him" (John 4:23);
- [6] God hates and punishes such who approach unto Him physically and not with the heart. "Forasmuch as this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour Me, but have removed their heart far from Me. ... Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29:13-14).

Thirdly, there must be earnestness and fervency. This neither consists in calling out loudly, nor in the lengthy expression of words in fluent sequence, nor in a joining together of intellectual arguments in a passionate and mournful manner. All this a natural man can do. Rather, fervency is an intense motion of the heart which is engendered by a strong desire, expressed in an understanding and thoughtful manner. Fervency is the engagement of all the energy of soul and body. It penetrates through all opposition and overcomes the wandering of thoughts, the lethargy of the flesh, and the arising of unbelieving thoughts (such as, "It is in vain; God does not hear you; you will not receive it," etc.), and the subtle deceit and insinuations of Satan, etc. The believer cannot so readily desist, for his desires are too strong; he perseveres. "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me" (Genesis 32:26). With the Canaanitish woman, he pursues the Lord with prayer and supplication (Matthew 15:22). However, fervency neither takes away reverence for God, nor the quiet and composed disposition of the soul. Quietness and fervency go hand in hand here. Those who, so to speak, cannot bring themselves to pray, but rather avoid it and look up against it, ought to be ashamed. When, without their fault, an impediment presents itself at their devotional time, they are not grieved, but are secretly satisfied that they are relieved from the duty of prayer. One prays more to satisfy the conscience (having prayed) than to attain the fulfillment of his desires. Such permit themselves to be easily hindered by an unbelieving thought that they will not be heard. They do not have fervent desires toward a matter, and therefore move from the one matter to the other by merely enumerating them -- matter, words, and desires being absent. This is an abominable matter. If you have no desires, then be gone. If you do not come with your own needs, you need not come simply because of God's will. He does not desire such a lukewarm, listless, and slothful service. The sacrifices and incense had to be ignited with fire, and our prayer must likewise be aflame with fervency. The reasons for this are as follows:

(1) Fervent supplicants are pleasing in God's sight: "My suppliants ... shall bring Mine offering" (Zephaniah 3:10).

(2) An earnest prayer avails much with God. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (James 5:16).

(3) A believer must be fervent in all that he does. "Be ... fervent in spirit" (Romans 12:11); "Be zealous therefore" (Revelation 3:19).

(4) The examples of the saints, whose footsteps we must follow, stimulate us to be fervent in prayer. Their entire life consisted of prayer. David even arose at midnight. He was ahead of the dawning of the morning. He called, and he cried; he did not cease. It becomes us to do likewise, so that the Lord may perceive that it is our objective to know Him and to acknowledge Him as the Giver -- as the One who gives freely -- and that it is grace alone which can help us.

Fourthly, there must be an incessant perseverance in prayer. "Pray without ceasing" (1 Thessalonians 5:17).

(1) Perseverance consists in making prayer a daily activity, disciplining ourselves not to neglect prayer and letting it become an unfamiliar practice. A Christian is a supplicant. Prayer is the very essence of religion (Genesis 4:26).

(2) Perseverance consists in always being in a prayerful disposition. Even if one is not always expressly engaged in prayer, the heart must nevertheless always be near to God, be focused on Him, and walk with Him. Such a disposition will, time and again, bring forth ejaculatory prayers -- be it that we are in solitude, traveling, engaged in our work, or in the presence of people. Nehemiah prayed to God while he was speaking to the king (Nehemiah 2:3-4).

(3) There are matters which God will not bestow all at once, but gradually, step by step -- such as growth in faith, hope, and love, spiritual life, strength against sin, and sanctification. We must therefore persist in prayer for these during our entire lifetime.

(4) There are specific circumstances in which we are in special need of the help of the Lord and the guidance of the Spirit. Such is true when we must either leave or enter our home, to undertake a special task, to come into the company of people, to pay someone a special visit, come into situations where snares have been prepared for us, must make a choice between things, must hire a servant, must buy or sell, or encounter unforeseen circumstances. In each situation we must take refuge to prayer.

(5) There are matters which are extraordinarily oppressive and threatening, or which we desire in an extraordinary manner -- their fruition being imminent. It can be true in both a temporal and spiritual sense that we are subject to uncommon temptation. There can be a sin which is extraordinarily strong; there can be a strong desire for more than a common revelation of God to the soul; we can be exceptionally desirous of being assured of being a partaker of Christ and salvation, or for a foretaste of heaven, etc. In such given circumstances the supplicant will persevere 1) by expressing the same prayer, not being able to desist until having received something; 2) by repetition of the prayer for the same matters at different times, either at the regular devotional hour, or occasionally outside of these times if there is opportunity to be alone and if the desire becomes fervent. In this manner we may persevere, looking unto the Lord (Psalms 34:5) until the matter is resolved; that is, until the Lord grants us the matter (or some measure of it) or makes the soul so content with His will that the desires are no longer that vehement. Rather, we shall be quiet and satisfied, being assured that the Lord will make it well.

(6) Sometimes there will be a strong desire for the well-being of others -- be it for the church in general, for one who has a specific or extraordinary need, or for the election of a minister, elders, or deacons. Or else one may have a strong desire for the well-being of a particular family or person, either in regard to body or soul, be it that they are converted or unconverted. Husband, wife, children, or parents can weigh heavily upon the heart. We may have a strong desire for their conversion and thus engage in prayer, not being able to desist. This prayer will beget many supplications, and we shall frequently repeat it at other times, until the Lord either grants the matter or grants us a quiet confidence that our prayer for them has been heard and that the Lord will do it even if we were never to see it. It may also be that the Lord begins to hide Himself and we no longer dare to press the issue that strongly, or the Lord may exclude these people from our prayers, not wanting to be approached by His children in vain. When it is our duty to do so, however, we must not neglect it due to laxity or discouragement, but persevere until the Lord sweetly refreshes us, showing that our earnest praying has been pleasing to Him. We shall thus give the matter over into the hand of God, our prayer will return into our bosom (Psalms 35:13), and our peace will return to us (Matthew 10:13).

Exhortation to Persevere in Prayer In order that we be stirred up to persevere, let us consider the following matters:

(1) Perseverance in prayer is everywhere recommended and commanded as being our particular duty. "... continuing instant in prayer" (Romans 12:12); "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance" (Ephesians 6:18); "Continue in prayer" (Colossians 4:2); "And He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint" (Luke 18:1).

(2) Perseverance brings the soul into a good disposition. First, it teaches us better to acknowledge God as the free Giver who is under no obligation to us; who may either give or not give; and if He gives, it is solely due to His grace and goodness. Secondly, it will cause the supplicant to be more humble, since he perceives himself as being unworthy of all grace and blessings. "The poor useth entreaties" (Proverbs 18:23). We shall esteem a matter much more if we have received it upon many prayers, and it will render us more joy if we may perceive in all this that God has granted it to us upon our prayers.

(3) Perseverance will cause us to obtain. Upon lengthy wrestling Jacob was blessed (Genesis 32:1-32). After a long pursuit the Canaanitish woman received what she desired (Matthew 15:1-39). Upon the frequent repetition of his prayer Elijah received rain (1 Kings 18:1-46). Upon the continual prayer of the congregation Peter was wondrously delivered out of prison (Acts 12:1-25). Upon persevering with one accord in prayer and supplication, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon the day of Pentecost (Acts 1:1-26; Acts 2:1-47). Since many pray but once for a matter and do not persevere, they also do not obtain it. Therefore see to it that you refrain from everything which would hinder you in persevering, such as: lethargy, laziness, not believing that the matters will be obtained, divergence among our desires (being partially spiritual and partially focused on earthly things), and the instability of our desires. Such and similar matters cause the supplicant to readily desist from praying and prevent him from repeating it frequently. He thus must go forth without having received his desires. Therefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees.

Praying in Faith The fifth characteristic is that prayer is offered in faith. Prayer requires faith in a special sense. "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive" (Matthew 21:22); "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them" (Mark 11:24); "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering" (James 1:6).

First, this requires that the supplicant be a believer -- a truly converted one (James 5:16). "And shall not God avenge His own elect, which cry day and night unto Him" (Luke 18:7). As God hears the young ravens when they call to Him, He also does indeed hear an unconverted person, and will bestow some blessings upon him. This is but of a temporal nature, however, proceeding from the common goodness of God and apart from His promises. However, His children are the heirs of the promise and they pray through the Spirit of prayer. Therefore "the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and His ears are open unto their cry" (Psalms 34:15); "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear Him: He also will hear their cry, and will save them" (Psalms 145:19).

Secondly, this requires that the supplicant appropriate all the promises of God's Word as having been made to him, and that he thus consider himself to be an heir of the promise (Hebrews 6:17). He must furthermore consider that not only are all promises yea and amen in Christ (2 Corinthians 1:20), but that also for him they are certain and true -- particularly those that pertain to the hearing of prayers.

Thirdly, it is requisite that the supplicant consider in a believing manner that:

(1) God has ordained prayer as a means from man's side to thereby give him all that he stands in need of.

(2) God is not only omniscient and acquainted with the hearts of all men, but also that God during prayer looks upon the supplicant, takes note of the expressions of his desires, and hears this (Psalms 34:1-22).

(3) God is omnipotent and is able to grant him his desire, irrespective of whether this is probable, the means are available, or if everything seems to be opposed to it. "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us" (Ephesians 3:20); "For with God nothing shall be impossible" (Luke 1:37).

(4) God is good and thus desirous to give the supplicant his desire. He is ready to forgive (Psalms 86:5), loves freely (Hosea 14:4), waits that He might be gracious (Isaiah 30:18), and rejoices over doing good to His people (Jeremiah 32:41). In prayer, faith must acknowledge God to be such.

(5) God is faithful in fulfilling all His promises made to supplicants. "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it" (Psalms 81:10).

Fourthly, the supplicant must with impression and with lifting up his heart believe that:

(1) Everyone who comes through Christ unto God, is pleasing to God in Christ (Daniel 9:23; Acts 10:30; Acts 10:33).

(2) The Lord is pleased with the yearning, tears, groaning, and the cries of His children to Him. "Let Me see thy countenance, let Me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely" (Song of Solomon 2:14).

(3) God views his countenance in Christ, hears his prayer, and answers it according to His will. "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear" (Isaiah 65:24). These matters mentioned the supplicant must deem to be sure and certain, for they are according to truth. The more he holds them before him with increased esteem, the more he prays in faith, the more pleasing his prayer will be, and the more certain it will be that he will obtain the matter for which he prayed.

However, many of God's children are deficient here. They do not actively pursue these matters mentioned and these dispositions, and they randomly give expression to their desires. Many are also weak in faith -- particularly to believe that God will hear them and grant their desire. "For," they think, "how can I believe, since I am too sinful, and furthermore, I have experienced too frequently that I did not receive anything upon my prayer." For their instruction it should be noted:

(1) That God does not hear for the sake of our righteousness, but for Christ's sake. Therefore for him who is in Christ -- the measure of the grace of light and life is immaterial as far as prayer being answered -- it is the carelessness of his prayer and his failure to exercise faith in prayer which prevents his prayer from being answered.

(2) You cannot truthfully say that God has never answered your prayer nor that He has never given you what you prayed for. It is a certainty that God has frequently been pleased with your tears and groans, and frequently has granted you blessings upon your prayer. However, you have neither taken notice of these blessings nor related them to your previous prayer.

(3) There are individual cases where God, these matters having been brought before Him, has answered prayer relative to them. However, God has neither promised time, manner, nor measure. We do not know what is best, and if God had given many matters in those circumstances as we had asked for them, we would see subsequently that it would have been better had we not received them. The supplicant must therefore indeed believe that his prayer was pleasing to God and that He has answered it. He must subject himself, however, and with contentment submit himself to the will of God, doing so neither with murmuring, fretfulness, unbelief, nor entertaining the thought: "God does not love me and does not hear me anyway." That would displease God and it would not benefit him personally.

(4) There are matters which we absolutely may not desire, and thus we may also not pray that we obtain them. The supplicant will then also not have liberty in prayer and it ought not to seem strange to him that he does not receive them. It is great foolishness to desire that God would give us that particular matter for which we do not even dare to pray. Therefore govern your desires according to the will of God and be not too passionate in your desires for temporal matters. Let God's wisdom, goodness, and will be your delight. You will then be able to pray in faith and submissively wait upon it being answered. "He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him" (Hebrews 11:6). The externals of prayer are: time, place, gestures, and the voice. The Time of Prayer

First, the time of prayer, considered in a general sense, is every day, every opportunity -- always. Specific times of prayer are when we engage in it corporately -- be it in public gatherings, in private gatherings, or in our individual family worship which ought to be conducted in every Christian family. This ought to occur both morning and evening, and if the opportunity permits it, also at noon. At this time the father -- or if he is absent or unable to do this, the mother -- must read a chapter, speak about it, catechize children and servants, sing a psalm together, and bow and offer a prayer -- all in accordance with the ability the Lord grants each one. Joshua desired to serve the Lord with his house (Joshua 24:15), and Cornelius feared God with all his house (Acts 10:2). One must make of his home a small church, for then the Lord will bless the home. Children and servants will learn to fear the Lord and thus will experience salvation. It will beget mutual love, there will be mutual respect, restraining everyone from sin, and one will exemplify godliness to each other and follow each other in this way. We must make use of all these opportunities, and take them into consideration, both when praying and when following the example of others.

Private Devotions In addition to this, however, everyone ought to have his private exercises of prayer, which are either prompted by extraordinary circumstances or are commonly conducted. There is no express command as to the time of private prayer; however, the saints, with their custom, have given us an example to be imitated: It is to be done in the morning, at noon, and at night. Observe this in the following passages: "Daniel ... kneeled upon his knees three times a day" (Daniel 6:10); "Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and He shall hear my voice" (Psalms 55:17). These examples are to be followed -- not as if prayer at such times is more pleasing to God and more effectual, but rather to bring us into and maintain continual communion with God. For, if we are neglectful in this, we shall perceive that communion with God will decrease. At first we shall not be aware of this, since there will be many ejaculatory prayers during the course of the day. We shall experience, however, that there will be a gradual decrease in ejaculatory prayer, and if we by renewal adhere to regular devotions, we shall perceive how far we have degenerated. Then we shall perceive that there was not such a steadfast basis for intimate communion with God, that there were no extraordinary encounters and illuminations relative to the mysteries of godliness. Yes, we shall perceive that the Spirit of prayer has departed from us and that of ourselves we are not capable of engaging in fellowship with God for some period of time. Therefore he who desires to be in an assured state, to have continual fellowship with God, to attain to a higher level of illumination and experience, and to fear God steadfastly, let him strictly observe his devotional time and let him not be neglectful in this -- for the devil greatly strives to bring this about.

It is true that those who strictly observe their devotions will experience more assaults, darknesses, weaknesses of faith, and unusual strife than someone who is not steadfast in his devotions, and who only prays when there are special circumstances and otherwise is satisfied with uttering some ejaculatory prayers on the run. This takes place due to having a deeper insight into self, due to striving for a higher measure of fellowship. Others do not observe this as closely and thus avoid such strife. Furthermore, by way of such extraordinary strife, such a person will grow in grace and become mature in Christ, whereas others continue without progress.

Someone may think, "I am much more spiritual when I utter ejaculatory prayers than when I specifically engage myself to pray. Then I become listless and darkened, and I cannot pray. I am therefore of the opinion that it is better not to observe a set time, and to pray only when the Spirit moves me." For your instruction you ought to note the following:

(1) The occurrence of listlessness and darkness is frequently due to laziness. One is not willing to wrestle, but at the very outset wishes to have that prayer which God generally does not give until the end. They desire to be carried at once rather than walk themselves. Scripture says, "Seek and ye shall find," but not "find and ye shall seek."

(2) Else, listlessness ensues due to thinking that at such times one immediately ought to have a greater measure of light, a more elevated disposition, and stronger exertion than apart from this time. If we do not immediately find this to be true, we cease from our work. Instead, we ought to use our devotional time to offer ourselves to the Lord and sacrifice ourselves to Him as a morning and evening sacrifice. Our being pleasing in God's sight is commensurate with our objective and activity in seeking to attain to this, and not whether or not He favors us with light and grace. We then wish to fly higher than befits the wings we have been granted, being of the opinion that to be in a more elevated disposition is in our own power and that we then ought to be able to make use of this accordingly. Or we may think that God, at the time set apart by us to separate ourselves in order to seek the Lord, immediately ought to enable us to engage in this duty with ease. If we then do not find it to be so, the hands become weak and we think, "God cannot be pleased with such a listless and fleshly performance. It will be better if I desist." It is thus that we shall "fall to the ground" due to wanting to fly too high at first, and will come in darkness because we initially had too strong a desire to see the light.

However, the cause of listlessness is generally in those who do not strictly maintain their devotion time in the activity and testimony which they may have sought. Because of this, as soon as they begin to observe that there is a godly person who has a greater measure of light and more intimate communion and fellowship than they do, having thought previously that all was quite well and that good progress in godliness had already been made, they now perceive that they have but little light, life, and strength. This they categorize as listlessness and the withdrawal of the Spirit, whereas it is but their feeble disposition which causes them to succumb when a greater task is to be undertaken, or when they wish to engage in something which exceeds their spiritual strength. We ought habitually to have a devotional time and we ought to be active in harmony with the greater or lesser measure of our strength and spirituality. The Place of Prayer The second circumstance is the place. It is equally true that the location does not attribute worthiness to prayer. The only requirement is that it be a place of solitude where we are not under human observation.

(1) The Lord Jesus commands this: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret" (Matthew 6:6).

(2) Such was the practice of the saints. Isaac went out into the field to pray (Genesis 24:63); Jacob remained alone at the other side of the brook Jabbok in order to pray (Genesis 32:24); Daniel went into his chamber (Daniel 6:11); and Peter went up upon the housetop (Acts 10:9).

(3) The disposition of our soul and the matter which we wish to present demand solitude; rarely would one want to make this public to men.

(4) The proximity of people is detrimental to our concentration and takes our zeal away. If we but think that someone is in the vicinity and that we are being listened to, we shall be hindered. The

Physical Gestures Used in Prayer

Thirdly, there are the physical gestures. These also do not attribute worthiness and fortitude to prayer. Saints have prayed in various bodily postures; that is, being prostrate, sitting, and standing. Generally they have done so kneeling, however, this being one of the most humble postures.

(1) David recommends this: "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker" (Psalms 95:6).

(2) Such has been the practice of the saints. Solomon the king made his prayer while kneeling (1 Kings 8:54). Daniel kneeled three times a day (Daniel 6:11). The Lord Jesus Himself kneeled and prayed (Luke 22:41); Stephen did likewise (Acts 7:60), and so did Paul together with the congregation (Acts 20:36). How then can we do otherwise but to come to God in such a humble physical posture so that we may glorify God both in our bodies as well as with our souls? The Voice in Prayer The fourth circumstance is the use of the voice. This is not an absolute requirement, for we can indeed pray in a spiritual sense, doing so mentally without letting our voice be heard. The Lord has created us in such a manner, however, that we are able to express our thoughts by way of our tongue. Furthermore, it is His will that we deal with Him in harmony with our nature and He commands us that we should call upon Him (Psalms 50:15), open our mouth (Psalms 81:10), and speak unto God (Luke 11:2). The earnestness and the motions of the soul are at times so ardent that one opens the mouth spontaneously. Then we shall also not be plagued as much by wandering thoughts, and the soul at times gets opening by way of speaking and the motions of the soul are thereby quickened. However, we must take notice here of the place. If we are far removed from people, we shall indeed be able to lift up our soul in harmony with the motions of our heart. If we are in the proximity of people, our voice must be controlled in such a manner that we can hear ourselves but yet are not heard by others. To pray so loudly that others also hear it is an offense to the unconverted and an impediment even to godly hearers. The requirement that we enter our closet when we pray does not only imply that we must not be visible, but we must also be beyond the auditory reach of people. To pray so loudly that we can be heard on the street is as much as praying while standing or lying in the street.

Exhortations to Prayer

We shall now proceed to the exhortations to prayer. In the first place, pray -- for prayer glorifies God: "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me" (Psalms 50:23). A believer is desirous to glorify God. Therefore, even if he were in need of nothing, he would nevertheless desire to worship God, being desirous to render unto God what is His due. He desires to acknowledge God as the One who is worthy of being worshiped, for in prayer we acknowledge all the attributes of God as they are revealed in Christ: His righteousness and holiness, because we cannot approach unto Him except through Christ; His goodness, because He has made available such a way of approach and is willing to hear those, and grant their desire, who go to God through Christ; His majesty, before which we bow ourselves with delight and reverence; His omniscience, in that He knows the heart and its intent; His omnipotence, in that He is able to give everything; and His faithfulness in that He will fulfill all His promises -- also those made to supplicants. It renders joy to the supplicant to behold these perfections. The acknowledgment of them renders him more joy than many other blessings received from God. Who is able to refrain himself from prayer? Who, being acquainted with this, does not become desirous to pray?

Secondly, the prayer of the upright supplicant is pleasing to God. However feeble his prayer may be, God finds delight in it; prayer is to Him as sweet incense (Psalms 141:2). He testifies that the voice of the supplicant is sweet to Him (Song of Solomon 2:14). And is it your desire to please the Lord and to do that which is pleasing to the Lord? Well, there is no better way to do so than by way of prayer.

Thirdly, God hears prayer; the Lord already sees the supplicant approach from afar, and He goes to meet him (Luke 15:20). And when he prays, He will hear him and will permit the supplicant to pour out his heart before Him. "His ears are open unto their cry" (Psalms 34:15).

Fourthly, prayer is a glorious work, for it permits us to enter the inner chambers of the King of kings -- of God, the Lord of heaven and earth. Yes, we enter heaven itself and speak in immediate proximity to the throne of grace. Prayer is a sweet duty. He who has been permitted to experience the softening of his heart and has been able to weep before the Lord; who, with opening, has been able to pour out his desire before the Lord; who at one time was privileged to supplicate; and who with strong crying and tears has been able to flee unto the Lord -- all of this, as frequently as he thinks of it, will yet render him joy for a long time. If this occurs at an unusual place, he will be refreshed as frequently as he returns to that place or thinks upon it.

Prayer is a sanctifying duty. After having been with God on the mountain, Moses' countenance had become radiant. When the Lord Jesus prayed, a holy radiance came upon Him (Matthew 17:2). This still occurs if we have been much in prayer. Even if it appears that the matter for which we have specifically prayed has not been received, we shall nevertheless come away from prayer with a holy and radiant soul. Reflect upon this and your soul will take flight, and you will be desirous to pray.

Fifthly, prayer is the means whereby and upon which God fulfills the desires of believers. If they do not pray, they will also not receive. If God does not stir them up to pray for a desired matter, this is generally a sign that God does not intend to give it. "... Ye have not, because ye ask not" (James 4:2). If, however, it is God's intention to give something to His children, He generally first grants them prayer for this. The promises are for those who pray. When God promises to give a new heart, to cause men to walk in His ways, and to grant all manner of temporal and spiritual blessings, the Lord states as an additional blessing, "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them" (Ezekiel 36:37). The promises relative to prayer being answered are numerous: "And call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee" (Psalms 50:15); "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it" (Psalms 81:10); "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened" (Matthew 7:7-8).

How much the saints have already received by means of prayer! By means of Moses' prayer Amalek was defeated (Exodus 17:11-12). By means of the prayer of Joshua the sun and moon were made to stand still (Joshua 10:12). By means of prayer the barren Hannah received a son, Samuel (1 Samuel 1:20). By means of prayer Asa defeated Zerah, the Ethiopian, and his thousand times thousand men (2 Chronicles 14:9-12), and Jehoshaphat defeated Moab and his confederates (2 Chronicles 20:1-37). Elijah unlocked heaven through prayer, so that it rained after three-and-one-half years of drought (1 Kings 18:42-45). Through prayer Elisha brought a dead person to life (2 Kings 4:35, etc). Through prayer Hezekiah received a fifteen-year extension of his life (Isaiah 38:5). What great things have believers received upon prayer! Moreover, God is still the same God. The promises upon prayer are still the same, and they were people of like passions as we were. Therefore, believers, if you desire or are in need of something, betake yourself to prayer.

Sixthly, consider furthermore that you will experience much more joy if God grants you something upon prayer than if you receive your wish without having prayed for it. For by means of prayer you have at the same time received a holy disposition. You have then been privileged to speak with the Lord in His immediate presence. Then you will notice that the Lord has received you as His child in Christ. Then it will be apparent that God has heard you and is benevolent toward you. You will have seen His perfections and the matter received upon prayer is in the form of a blessing. Therefore, accustom yourself to pray.

Godly reader, why do you complain about your spiritual deficiency and your bodily tribulations if you are so negligent in prayer, so lax to engage in prayer, so listless while praying, and so quickly finished? Pray if you are desirous for something. Such excuses as made by many who are lazy in the practice of prayer -- which cause grief to some tender godly persons -- and will not avail here. If you were diligent in prayer, you would avoid these excuses or very readily have an answer for them, so that you would not be hindered by them. The primary mental obstacles are the following:

Mental Obstacles to Prayer

Obstacle #1: God is well-acquainted with my needs, anxieties, and desires. Why then do I need to bring them before God in prayer?

Answer: It is not to make something known to God with which He is unacquainted; rather, you thereby show that you are also acquainted with them and are sensible of them, as well as that you acknowledge God to be your only helper.

Obstacle #2: God has already decreed what I shall or shall not have. I cannot change that decree by means of prayer.

Answer: The secret things are for the Lord, but the revealed things are for us. God has bound us to the means and He wills that we believe and rely upon His promises made to conscientious users of the means. God has also decreed already how long you will live. Do you therefore desist from eating and drinking?

Obstacle #3: Many people do not pray and yet receive everything in abundance.

Answer: These are but temporal matters, with which you are not satisfied. These earthly goods are not a blessing to them, and due to their sins they abuse all the blessings of God to their destruction. Prosperity will be the death of the ungodly. However, the little that a righteous person receives upon his prayer is better than the abundance of many ungodly. The righteous have received it as a blessing and they have thereby been drawn to God. Furthermore, you are primarily concerned with the spiritual, and this the Lord will most certainly grant you upon prayer. You would have more if you would pray more.

Obstacle #4: I have prayed very much for various matters, but God does not hear me, and I do not receive them.

Answer: Perhaps you -- as was true of Samuel -- are not acquainted with the answering voice of God. Perhaps you have not given careful attention to what you have received upon prayer; or else, due to unbelief, you have not related that which you have received to your prayer. Perhaps you are too covetous and too bent on having your will, and you do not acknowledge it as long as you have not received everything which your inordinate lusts demand, there being no submission to the manner and the benevolence of that which is dispensed to you. If you take note of all this, you will not be able to say that God has never heard your prayer and that you have never received anything upon prayer.

Obstacle #5: I lack all that I have heard said in this discourse on prayer. My heart closes up when I wish to begin.

Answer: You are focusing on a measure of spirituality in prayer which exceeds your measure of spirituality, and you want to pray at such a level of spirituality, or else it is nothing. If you are a child, pray as a child; if a man, pray as a man. God also hears the mourning of a dove and the chattering of a swallow; even sighing is not hidden from Him. God does not give because of prayer, but upon prayer. Such is not only true of a very spiritual and fluent prayer, but also for those feeble efforts in expressing desires. He does not despise the prayer of the destitute.

Obstacle #6: I sin time and again, and therefore I do not dare to come again unto God -- it would be as if I were mocking with God.

Answer: When you prayed in a most acceptable manner and when God heard and answered your prayer, God saw all your future sins as if they were presently committed. It is God's will that we shall forgive our neighbor seventy times seven -- this being required in one day. God, however, is infinitely more longsuffering and benevolent than man. Reconciliation has already been accomplished in Christ and you may accept this at all times to your continual justification. You do not have it in your power to keep yourself from sin; your old man is too evil and too strong for this. God permits sin to remain in you for the very reason that you would always be of a humble disposition and to make use of Christ daily. It would be mockery if you did not repeatedly have a heartfelt desire to sin no more, while yet praying for strength against and the forgiveness of sin. Since, however, this is the case with you, do not allow the fact that you sin repeatedly keep you from prayer. Rather, come all the more, since you are in need of forgiveness and strength, so that the grace of God may be glorified all the more.

Obstacle #7: I fear that I am not regenerated. What business do I then have to pray, since the prayer of the unconverted is not pleasing to God?

Answer: Pray because necessity compels you, and because you cannot go on without the matter you desire -- even if your prayer could not be recorded on the register of virtues. God indeed hears the young ravens when they call to Him. God heard the crying of Ishmael, when he, having been laid under a shrub, would have perished for thirst. You desire to be converted, to be a partaker of Christ, to be holy, and to possess all spiritual benefits. The more you would be a partaker of them, the more it would be to your liking. Such desires and motions are indeed the beginnings of regeneration and life. The Holy Spirit alone has wrought them in you and stirs you up to pray for them. Therefore follow the Spirit, and you will experience that your prayer is pleasing to God, and that He will repeatedly give you all that you need according to body and soul.

Since I consider to have satisfactorily dealt with all your concerns, take therefore the liberty to pray. However, see to it that you do not use these excuses to stimulate your laziness and to pacify yourself when you neglect to pray.

Guidance to Supplicants

It now remains to give some guidance to the suppliant who has been stirred up to pray as to how he is to conduct himself in the preparation for, exercise of, and reflection upon prayer. The preparation for prayer must be contingent upon the condition in which we are. If you are in a good frame, you must first of all withdraw yourself from whatever you are occupied with and conduct yourself as if you were alone in the world and had nothing else to do but to walk with God. Secondly, while lifting up your soul, you must focus upon God as One who is worthy of worship, as the fountain of all good gifts, as omniscient, as omnipotent, or in whatever manner you may be conscious of God when you lift up your heart and engage in prayer. Thirdly, you must endeavor to bring about a reverent and humble disposition of heart. Fourthly, you must lift up your heart with a sigh for the spirit of prayer, for assistance, and for a blessing upon this exercise of prayer.

If you are in a backslidden condition, if you have just entertained vain thoughts and uttered vain words, if you have just committed a sin, if there were estrangement from God due to worldly concerns, or if something else has deprived you of liberty, causing you to be confused and restless, you must resolve to bring your heart where it belongs and endeavor to have the disposition of your heart humble and meek. Such a disposition must prompt you to arise with sincere intent and be firmly resolved to be on guard against those sins in the future. Furthermore, you must be resolved that if you were again to be overcome by those sins that you will battle against them. This is to be done so that your heart will not condemn you, and that instead you will be able with a clear and quiet conscience to approach boldly unto God. Furthermore, if you add to this what we have said concerning the previous disposition, you will be fit personally in your approach to God, and do so in a manner pleasing to Him.

However, you must generally not be occupied too long with preparation before actually proceeding with that which belongs to prayer itself. You could thereby easily come into darkness, become confused, and be less fit for the exercise of prayer. In the exercise of prayer you must not limit yourself to a set order; rather you must adjust yourself to the disposition of your soul which varies greatly. If you are dull, you could begin by reading the Word of God and thus to permit your heart to be wrought upon by the truth -- or else by the reading or singing of a psalm -- in order to enliven your spirit thereby. If you are in a praising and worshipful disposition, you must not remove yourself from this, but rather adjust yourself to that disposition and immediately begin with prayer. It is to be done in this manner:

(1) Be on guard against routine in your initial address -- against always using the same terminology. Rather, address the Lord with such language which either agrees with the disposition of the soul, is consistent with the manner in which the Lord reveals Himself at that moment, is consistent with the manner in which you wish to focus upon the Lord -- or is subservient to beget humility, magnify the Lord, or strengthen your faith. Do not do this with too much premeditation, however, but proceed in this according to the inclination of your heart. Otherwise you will easily lose your prayerful disposition.

(2) We must not use pompous words in prayer nor merely link one Scripture passage to another; this will rarely move either the supplicant or the hearer. It is a different matter if we use a Scripture passage to urgently request the fulfillment of a promise, or to obligate ourselves to obedience.

(3) You must also not take great pains to express yourself fluently. It is sometimes necessary to pause for a moment -- be it that the matter or the disposition of the soul requires this -- and that you begin by renewal with new strength and vigor. You also need not concern yourself as to what you will say first or last; that would be more the work of the head than the heart. You also need not be concerned as to whether you repeat the same matters and words time and again, as long as it does not proceed from inattentiveness. However, you must carefully guard against the thoughtless use of the word Lord as an interjection.

(4) At times we can be dull and be in darkness when commencing prayer. However, then we must not immediately desist and depart; instead, we must persevere. It can happen that after great darkness very clear light ensues, and that a languishing soul can become very lively. If you cannot bring yourself to prayerful wrestling at all, it is frequently beneficial to read a psalm prayerfully. If the soul becomes lively, you must cease to read and enlarge upon your spiritual motions. If these motions cease, you must again proceed to read prayerfully.

(5) At times we begin with much light and liveliness and then it suddenly becomes dark. We ourselves can be the cause of this. It can be that we were too high already, thus forgetting to be humble and reverent. Then we must readily sink down in our insignificance and begin by deeply humbling ourselves, conducting ourselves as a little child and thus climb upward step by step. If some business matter, worldly concern, or lust suddenly surfaces, we must be brought by this to view our sinful hearts, and while thus conscious of our sinfulness, present ourselves, with much humility, to the Lord in our wretchedness, seeking forgiveness and acknowledging that it is only grace that such a sinful man may speak to the Lord. If there be a sudden stirring of unbelief, we must wrestle against it by claiming the promises as they are confirmed in the Mediator. If unbelief pertains to a specific matter, especially physical matters, we must be very diligent in seeking to submit ourselves with full acquiescence to the will of the Lord as far as its outcome is concerned. The soul thus having been delivered from self-will and stubbornness and having been placed at liberty, may at times again receive freedom and liveliness in prayer -- yes, sometimes more so than previously. If there is an interjection of the devil, we must reject this without paying attention and responding to it. Even though the soul may have been wounded thereby, we must nevertheless proceed to rise above ourselves and lift our hearts up to God. It will then hinder us less, and the Lord will occasionally take such a soul into His protection -- so to speak, into a refuge -- and at times will grant her more comfort. If not, He will demonstrate that our resisting and avoidance of the enemy is pleasing to Him. If, however, such darkness (when occurring in the middle of our prayer) is due to a withdrawal of the Spirit, and if this prevails in spite of our pressing on, it is advisable to condense and shorten our prayer, doing so in submission to God's sovereign will. Desistance must, however, in no wise issue forth from slothfulness, being secretly satisfied that we are now permitted to terminate our prayer.

(6) While praying -- in the beginning, in the middle, as well as at the end -- we must pray that we be heard, as we generally observe with David. Yes, not only must we pray, but we must also strive for a lively assurance that both we and our prayer are pleasing to God, and that He hears our prayer, answers it, and will most certainly give what we ask for. This assurance is neither founded upon our godliness, nor upon our ability to pray, but rather upon the promises of the Word of God and the merits of the Lord Jesus, and because those spiritual desires we have expressed in prayer have proceeded from the Holy Spirit Himself. Such assurance will beget liberty and earnestness, and we shall conclude by giving thanks that we were privileged and able to pray -- even if it were but a spiritual sigh -- as well as that the Lord has heard it and will most certainly grant those desires according to His will. This will be concluded with a believing "amen," that is, it shall be.

Reflection upon prayer consists particularly in the following two matters. It first of all consists in the preservation of this reverent and godly disposition, so that a luster radiates, indicating that we have been with the Lord -- just as Moses came from the mountain with a shining countenance. Be very much on guard against those sins which we have confessed in prayer and against which we have made a holy resolution. Secondly, pay careful attention to the manner in which God answers our prayer. That God answers earnest and believing prayers is evident, first of all, from God's promises: "He will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when He shall hear it, He will answer thee" (Isaiah 30:19); "Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer" (Isaiah 58:9); "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not" (Jeremiah 33:3).

Secondly, it is evident from the prayer of saints for an answer: "Hear, O Lord, when I cry with my voice: have mercy also upon me, and answer me" (Psalms 27:7).

Thirdly, it is evident from their declaration that God has answered them: "I sought the Lord, and He heard me" (Psalms 34:4); "I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and He heard me" (Jonah 2:2). Observe this in Eliezer (Genesis 24:15), in Elijah (James 5:17-18), David (1 Samuel 30:8), Daniel (Daniel 9:23), and others in their special temptations, which have been recorded for us in order that we would know that God answers the prayers of His children and we thus will be assured that He will also answer our prayers.

Fourthly, it is evident from the complaints uttered by the saints when God did not answer them. "I cry unto Thee, and Thou dost not hear me" (Job 30:20); "O my God, I cry in the daytime, but Thou hearest not" (Psalms 22:2).

Since God answers, you must also see it as your obligation to observe whether God answers you and how He answers you. It is not sufficient to commend the outcome to God and to believe that He will make it well; we must also take notice of the outcome, however, and relate this to our prayers as being an answer to them, for:

(1) This will sweetly move you to be astounded and grateful that the Lord has heard your voice, and with David you will exclaim, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me" (Psalms 116:12), which is a reference to verse 1: "He hath heard my voice." This brings forth the confession: "This is the Lord'S doing; it is marvelous in our eyes" (Psalms 118:23); "Who am I, O Lord GOD? and what is my house, that Thou hast brought me hitherto" (2 Samuel 7:18).

(2) The experience that the Lord answers our prayer engenders love toward God. "I love the Lord, because He hath heard my voice and my supplications" (Psalms 116:1).

(3) It begets a desire for prayer and zeal in prayer. "Because He hath inclined His ear unto me, therefore will I call upon Him as long as I live" (Psalms 116:2); "I will confess ... and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. For this shall every one that is godly pray unto Thee in a time when Thou mayest be found" (Psalms 32:5-6).

(4) This renders more joy to a believer than the receiving of the matter itself for which he had prayed. For he would rather perceive that the Lord loves him than to enjoy everything outside of God.

(5) It is a great stimulus to lead an observant and holy life. Nothing so draws out our love than that a loved one shows his love to us. If we may perceive that God loves us and that His goodness is engaged on our behalf, we shall be willing to give our all to God: "...He hath heard my voice and my supplications. I will walk before the Lord" (Psalms 116:1;Psalms 116:9); "What shall I say? He hath both spoken unto me, and Himself hath done it: I shall go softly" (Isaiah 38:15). The supplicant who attentively takes notice of the answers upon his prayers, will receive such glorious dispositions, along with the resultant fruit. And even if the Lord were to answer his prayers with nothing besides this, would it not be an explicit answer? He who prays and submissively leaves the outcome to the Lord, however, will indeed have his prayers answered by the Lord. Since, however, he does not give heed to those answers, and does not relate the gifts of grace as being answers to his prayers, he will rob himself of these desired fruits.

God's Answers to Prayer

Many are as Samuel when he did not yet know the voice of the Lord. Such will ask: "When does God answer? Whereby can we recognize this answer?" For their instruction it should be noted that God answers at the outset of prayer, during prayer, and after prayer.

First, God at times answers at the outset of prayer. "Before they call, I will answer" (Isaiah 65:24); "At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth" (Daniel 9:23). The Lord shows that He wishes to answer if the Spirit moves the person to pray in an extraordinary manner, continually stirring up the soul, and does not give the soul any rest until she prays with free access. Yes, she may do so in such an intimate and amicable manner that it takes some effort to remember that one is but a man and a sinner, and thus to maintain a disposition of the deepest humility. What else is this but the Lord saying to you: "I know you; you have found grace in My sight; I love you. Mine eye will be upon you; I shall guide you with My counsel and shall hereafter take you to Me into glory." The supplicant will also perceive it as such, will be astonished and rejoice, and cannot but say, "Abba, Father!"

Secondly, God answers during prayer:

(1) If after a period of darkness, troubles, and wrestlings, we become of a quiet and joyous disposition due to the soul, so to speak, hearing the voice of God: "Thou art Mine. I am thy salvation. Thy sins are forgiven thee, and your prayer is pleasing to Me." Such an answer brings the soul into a holy disposition to serve the Lord with her entire heart to the glory of her God. This we observe in many of David's psalms, in which he begins with lamentation, proceeds with joy, and ends with thanksgiving.

(2) If we strongly persevere in prayer for a particular matter -- be it deliverance from an affliction or a request for a desirable matter -- and the Lord reveals His friendly countenance to the supplicant, embracing him with His love. "Thou art greatly beloved" (Daniel 9:23); "My grace is sufficient for thee" (2 Corinthians 12:9). When the Lord answers in such a manner, the supplicant frequently goes beyond what the Lord has said, thinking that it was a most certain promise that a given evil would not come, and that he would receive the desired matter. If, however, this does not occur, this can be very grievous to the supplicant at other times -- as if the promise does not correspond to reality. The Lord had only shown, however, that the supplicant was pleasing to Him in prayer and that He would bring about this matter to his best advantage, not having made any promise as far as time and manner were concerned. If he had not taken the answer beyond its intended purpose, but interpreted it as he should have done, this would have resulted in a more sanctified disposition. He would have been content with the will of God, and the manifestation of the love of God would have rendered him more joy, as if he received the matter according to his wishes.

(3) When He grants him a strong faith and full assurance that his prayer will be answered. This occurs either by application of the promises which pertain to the answering of prayers, or at times by an immediate operation upon his heart, without an indication of the manner in which it is to be answered. Such an answer is sufficient to cause the supplicant to rejoice, contentedly leaving time and manner to the Lord.

However, he will easily mislead himself, if he, when praying for a particular matter, by either the probability or non-probability of it, persuades his own heart that God has declared that he will have the matter, or that he will not become a partaker of it. If he relies upon this, whatever he has imagined will fail, and if he sets it aside, he renders himself unfit to persevere.

It occurs rarely -- and that only to very few -- that God grants someone immediate revelations concerning future events, although I am assured that the Spirit of prophecy or revelation (relative to future events) has not departed entirely from the church. If, however, such is the case, a person will know very well that God has revealed it to him. He will know it as well as if a familiar friend had said such and such to him. Whatever God reveals to the one is not regulative for the other. I advise a person against having any strong desire that God would reveal the outcome of a given matter to him in advance, lest he tempt the Lord and were to delude himself due to his strong desire.

If God assures someone that his prayer has been heard, he ought to deem that as being an answer to his prayer. He ought to rejoice in this and thank the Lord for this. He should leave the matter -- as well as its execution -- in the Lord's hands, and from the outcome conclude as to the manner in which the Lord fulfills His promise to hear his prayer. This will engender much steadfastness and inner peace.

Thirdly, God answers prayer by giving the matter prayed for subsequent to prayer. It is here that the supplicant must be very attentive.

(1) There are matters of which we know that God will not grant them all at once upon the first request, but will grant them step by step -- such as growth in grace. If we have prayed for this in a heartfelt manner and if God grants some growth -- strength against a particular sin, a more steadfast godly disposition of the soul, a stronger faith as far as our spiritual state is concerned, the exercise of a particular virtue, more liveliness and joy in the expectation of eternal felicity, etc. -- then we must note this as an answer upon all our prayers, particularly upon that prayer which had been so expressly uttered relative to a given matter.

(2) There are matters which God grants at once -- such as deliverance from a present situation which is either pressing or threatening. This can also be true for a special matter which we desire to have, the outcome of which will either be evident within a short period of time, or there being no indication of time at all. If God grants the matter at once, he who takes note of the answer upon his prayers will readily observe that God has answered his prayer. God thus answered Eliezer (Genesis 24:13-21). God does also grant the matter at a later time. If, upon reflection, we then become conscious of having prayed heartily for this, we shall also note this as being an answer upon our prayers, and we shall rejoice in a double measure about this. The Lord thus answered the prayer of Zacharias (Luke 1:13). God also answers our prayers when He does not give us a particular matter, but rather gives something else in its place, even though in some respects it relates to the desired matter. This -- either in and of itself, due to some circumstances, or due to consequences -- is nevertheless more beneficial and desirable for us. It was thus that Abraham's desire was fulfilled when he, praying for Ishmael that the promises pertaining to the multiplication of his seed would be fulfilled through him, received Isaac.

(3) There are matters which pertain to others: either the church in general, a specific godly person, the conversion of our near relatives or someone else, or someone's physical well-being. If God grants such a request, and we realize that we have prayed for this, we have indeed received an answer upon that prayer and it must make us doubly grateful and joyous. If we do not perceive this to be the case, we must nevertheless believe that our prayer has been heard. For every true prayer is heard, and God will either give the matter later -- even if it be after our death -- or the Lord will answer the prayer of the supplicant in a different manner.

Give heed therefore that you do not attribute it to the general providence of God if you receive something. More particularly, refrain from attributing it to chance, or from focusing only on the secondary causes -- to which our corrupt nature is so inclined. Even Job himself came so far that he said, "If I had called, and He had answered me; yet would I not believe that He had hearkened unto my voice" (Job 9:16). Therefore acknowledge the hand of the Lord in all the good you receive -- from the least to the greatest, and that which is common as well as extraordinary. And if you receive something good, and cannot remember that you have heartily prayed for it, be all the more amazed that the Lord has thought upon you when you did not think upon Him, and that He has granted you more than you have ever requested from Him. Then say with Hagar, "Have I also here looked after Him that seeth me" (Genesis 16:13). If, however, you receive something, and, when reflecting on time gone by, you become aware that you have prayed for this -- even if it were in your youth -- then relate this gift to your prayer as being an answer to it. Do not allow yourself to be hindered by your sinfulness, your weakness, or your deficiency in prayer, but acknowledge that the least upright sigh proceeded from the Spirit and that the Lord has therefore heard it. This will cause you to be grateful and express your love toward God. "Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee" (Job 22:21).

074. Chapter 69: The Lord's Prayer: Explained and Applied

----- CHAPTER SIXTY-NINE ----- The Lord's Prayer: Explained and Applied In the previous chapter we have dealt with prayer in general, considering its nature, required internal qualifications, externals, necessity, and beneficial nature. We must now show the supplicant what the matters are for which he ought to pray and the order in which he must pray for them. This has been defined for us by the Lord Jesus in the prayer He has provided for us upon the request of the disciples. This is generally referred to as The Lord's Prayer, and is recorded in Matthew 6:9-13 and Luke 11:2-4. Matthew records it with a conclusion, whereas Luke omits it. This is not to suggest that the Lord Jesus did not add this, but is an indication that it was only His intent to give an orderly presentation of those matters which are to be prayed for. For the same reason, the evangelists, when relating identical matters, do so either in a more elaborate or abbreviated form. The one evangelist writes about this matter and the other about divergent matters, as they were not all present together at all occasions when Jesus either spoke or performed something. Furthermore, the Lord Jesus has said and performed many more things than could all have been recorded. "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written" (John 21:25). However, what has been recorded is sufficient "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His Name" (John 20:31). The papists quote this prayer from Luke without the conclusion, and we do so from Matthew with the conclusion. A Rule and Example for Our Prayer The Lord Jesus has given this prayer as a rule and example to which we must conform our prayers as far as matters and order; that is, in regard to the priority of each matter, such being the manner in which we are to desire them. It is, however, not mandatory that we repeat this prayer verbatim. The apostles, in their recorded prayers, have never repeated this prayer word for word. We may indeed pray this prayer, both in public meetings as well as privately; however, we are not obligated to do so. We must not be of the opinion that, upon having recited this, we have uttered a more holy prayer than if we had used our own words. This prayer is perfect in and of itself; however, he who prays has not prayed perfectly by merely having recited this prayer. If we do not have a correct understanding of each petition -- yes, each word -- if we do not have a holy and conscious desire for each matter, and nevertheless recite it, then it is a vain use of God's Name. It is a mocking with God, as if He were served with that rattling off of words, the meaning of which is not understood and by which one's desires are not expressed -- even if one were to have a general opinion that he were praying to God. God demands the heart. Prayer is the expression of holy desires before God, and thus praying must be done in spirit and in truth. "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also" (1 Corinthians 14:15). For a better understanding of this prayer we must distinguish between the various parts. This spiritual prayer is robbed of its meaning, and it is a blatant distortion of the Word of this majestic God to divide this prayer into seven fabricated periods or time-frames. It is then presupposed that some matters are already past and should no longer be prayed for, whereas others would as yet be future and do not transpire in our time. Only one matter would relate to the present; however, which one this would be cannot be determined.

Then there would indeed be nothing to be found for the spiritual needs of each individual. However, it can at once be observed that there are three divisions: 1) the address; 2) the petitions; and 3) the conclusion. The petitions can in turn also be divided as follows:

(1) There is the most eminent matter which is to be the objective of all that is to be desired (this being the first petition), and the means which are to be desired to that end (which are the five subsequent petitions); or (2) in three matters we petition relative to God and three which relate to ourselves and our neighbor. THE ADDRESS "Our Father, Which Art in Heaven!"

Prayer requires that we turn to the person from whom we wish to petition something. Since we are requesting matters in prayer which none can give but God, the supplicants thus turn themselves to God, the Father of lights, from whom descends every good and perfect gift. We acknowledge Him as the only One worthy of worship, before whom we bow ourselves with the deepest humility, being desirous to do so with our whole heart. Then we shall worship Him with all reverence, giving Him honor and glory, even if we did not need to request anything from Him. Since, however, we are always in need of something, we thus turn to God as the fountain of all that we are, of all that we have received, and of all that we desire to receive. We shall shrink back from requesting anything from anyone else -- indeed, we shall not do so. When requesting something from man, we are requesting it both from God and from man as a means in God's hand, he being under God's command. The supplicant holds God before him as being omniscient, who knows and perceives what our needs and desires are and who hears the prayerful supplicant. He notes Him as being the omnipotent One, who can give what we desire -- whether or not the means are at hand -- yes, who can do more than we pray for, purely by the exercise of His will. He notes God as being good -- not only to all men in doing them good by filling their hearts with food and gladness: "The Lord is good to all: and His tender mercies are over all His works" (Psalms 145:9), but toward His children in Christ, manifesting a fatherly and unfathomable goodness. He rejoices in doing well to them and He delights in mercy. He says to them, "Call upon Me in the day of trouble and I will answer thee; open thy mouth wide, and I shall fill it; let Me hear thy voice, for it is sweet." He notes God as being faithful -- as the One who fulfills all His promises to His children, the heirs of promise, particularly the following: "And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do" (John 14:13); "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them" (Mark 11:24). Such is the nature of God, and God deals with His children accordingly. Therefore the supplicant must also acknowledge Him to be thus if he is to please the Lord and have freedom in prayer. The act of prayer demonstrates that we acknowledge the Lord to be thus, for otherwise we would not flee to Him. However, a lively acknowledgment begets a lively prayer. Not only does the supplicant turn to God as such a One, but he also addresses the Lord by using a name which either fits the disposition of the soul toward God, the need which we presently have, or the desire for a prayerful disposition, marked by both reverence and faith. The saints have used various addresses, such as: "Lord," "Oh Lord God of my salvation," "Lord my strength," "My God," "Thou Lord the searcher of the heart," "Thou art the God who has made heaven and earth," and "Oh holy and faithful Lord." The Lord Jesus generally used the address Father, and My Father in His prayers, and teaches us also to address God with the name Father. This is not to suggest that we may not use a different address, for the saints in the Old and New Testaments have generally used others. However, the name Father is the most intimate, congenial, soul-moving, and lovely name -- which engenders the greatest reverence and confidence. Such is the privilege the Lord Jesus affords believers: They may address the majestic and living God with the name Father. The Threefold Fatherhood of God God is denominated as Father in different respects.

(1) He is Father by virtue of eternal generation, and thus in reference to God the Son. "Thou art My Son; this day have I begotten Thee" (Psalms 2:7).

(2) He is Father by virtue of creation and preservation, and thus in reference to the angels and all men. The heathen referred to God as such. Adam thus becomes the Son of God (Luke 3:38), and the angels are called the children of God (Job 38:7). It is from this perspective that we read, "Have we not all one Father? hath not one God created us" (Malachi 2:10); "A Father of the fatherless ... is God in His holy habitation" (Psalms 68:5). When it is used as such, however, the name Father cannot give any comfort, but it will instill terror due to man having fallen away from Him and God having become a wrathful avenger in consequence of sin.

(3) He is a Father by virtue of adoption. God has eternally purposed to adopt the elect in time as His children. "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself" (Ephesians 1:5). In consequence of this purpose He regenerates them and grants them spiritual life, thereby making them children of God. "Which (God's children) were born ... of God" (John 1:13); "Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth" (James 1:18). These He leads to His Son Jesus Christ, granting them faith whereby they receive Him to be their ransom and righteousness, and enter into a spiritual marriage-covenant with Jesus. They are thus united with Him, the Father of the Bridegroom, and he thereby also becomes their Father. "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God" (John 1:12); "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3:26). It is with this in mind that the Lord Jesus says, "I ascend unto My Father, and your Father" (John 20:17). The God and Father of Christ and believers is one and the same, but in different respects. Since believers are the children of God and have received the Spirit of adoption, they cry out, "Abba, Father" (Romans 8:15; Galatians 4:6). This name engenders in the believer love, liberty, comfort, and confidence. The Use of the Father Name: The Practice of Believers in Both Old and New Testaments The use of the Father name does not stand in contradistinction to the practice of Old Testament believers -- as if they could not address God with the Father name. For they also were born of God, possessed faith in Christ, and had the Spirit of Christ (Psalms 51:11) by whom they were led (Psalms 143:10); God was their Father (Malachi 1:6). "Is not He thy Father" (Deuteronomy 32:6)? They were the children of God: "I have nourished and brought up children" (Isaiah 1:2); "Ye are the children of the Lord your God" (Deuteronomy 14:1). They also addressed God with the name "Father": "Wilt thou not from this time cry unto Me, My Father, Thou art the guide of my youth" (Jeremiah 3:4); "Doubtless Thou art our Father. ... Thou, O Lord, art our Father" (Isaiah 63:16); "But now, O Lord, Thou art our Father" (Isaiah 64:8). It is thus a privilege which all believing members of the covenant of grace of all times have, and not a privilege of New Testament believers only. When the Lord Jesus taught his disciples to say "Father," the Old Testament dispensation, as well as the ceremonial service, were still in force. The word "Father" is sometimes used to designate the essence of the Godhead; that is, in reference to a triune God: "... the Father of lights" (James 1:17); "Have we not all one Father" (Malachi 2:10). Sometimes it is used in a personal sense, referring to the first Person in the divine essence, or rather, God as existing in the first Person. For we cannot extract a divine Person from the divine essence and view Him independently. However, we can distinguish between the essence and the Person. This is how the "Father" is to be understood in the following passages: "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Ephesians 3:14); "My Father is the husbandman" (John 15:1).

Question #1: How is the word "Father" in the address to be understood?

Answer: Not in reference to creation and preservation, nor in reference to eternal generation, but in reference to adoption, for the supplicant comes with a childlike disposition.

Question #2: Must the word "Father" be understood in its essential or personal sense?

Answer: The supplicant, being stirred up to pray and directed in prayer by the Holy Spirit (the Spirit of prayer, who intercedes with groanings that cannot be uttered) approaches the Father through the Son, and thus approaches God Himself as He exists in the first Person without exclusion of the Son and the Holy Spirit. We must refrain from attempting to comprehend the incomprehensible and from making too great a separation between the Persons and the divine essence. This causes some confusion in the minds of some beginners in grace, as if it would be a concern to the one Person if one of the three divine Persons were addressed more than another. We must proceed in simplicity here and be led by the Spirit to go to the Father through the Son as Mediator, and thus worship and address the one and eternal God. The Lord Jesus does not only teach us to address God with the name "Father," but He adds the relative and possessive pronoun "our": our Father. Since the word "Father" pertains to gracious adoption, regeneration, betrothal, and union with the Lord Jesus -- the Son of God -- by faith, then the word "our" must not be understood to refer to all men, but only to the regenerated, believing children of God. An unconverted person is not a child of God, and thus he also cannot address God with the name "Father." Even though he is God's creature, God thus being his Father by virtue of creation, the use of the word "Father" can render him neither comfort nor liberty to approach unto God as such, for sin has fully separated him from God and His favor, and has subjected him to the wrath of God, so that God is a consuming fire and a terror unto him. There is no approach unto God except through Christ. Since the unconverted person is without Christ, he can therefore not come unto God and address Him with the name "Father." The believing supplicant does not include only himself in the word "our," but he includes all true believers -- those whom he knows and those whom he does not know. He is a member of the church of God of which God is the Father. "And (I) will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Corinthians 6:18). He thus includes the entire church of God when he says, "Our Father," and thereby demonstrates his love to all the members of God's family, expressing his faith that God is his portion, that he is permitted to address Him as Father, is a member of the family of God, and has communion with all the saints.

Question #3: May we not, when praying in solitude, say "my Father" instead of "our Father"?

Answer: The Lord Jesus has not furnished us this prayer so as to use its words verbatim. A believer, when in secret, frequently prays for himself, and then he may also specifically say "my Father" as Elihu did: "My desire is that Job may be tried unto the end" (Job 34:36).

Question #4: How must a weak believer proceed who is not assured that God is His Father? May he skip the words "our Father"? Must he think of God as his Father by creation? May he say in a wishful sense, "Oh, that thou wouldst be my Father"?

Answer: The suppliant, while in his closet, is not limited to the words of this prayer, but may use and present his own words as best as he knows how. No prayer is pleasing to God, nor shall it be heard, except it be offered in faith. The essence of faith does not consist in assurance, however, but in the entrusting of our soul to Jesus, He being our ransom and righteousness. The suppliant knows that there is no other way to approach unto God except through Christ. He approves of this way, desires no other way, chooses this way, and in his approach has Christ in view -- be it in a habitual or an active sense. He longs for, prays to, yearns for, receives, and surrenders himself to Him. Being thus exercised, he perceives that he has an aversion for, is grieved by, and is greatly burdened by sin. Moreover, he longs and desires to obey the Lord in all simplicity, love, and filial fear, this being the objective he also pursues. If he were to give a general evaluation of one thus exercised, he would admit that such a person is a true believer and may freely call God "Father." However, due to perceiving his darkness, slothfulness, and continual sinning, he does not dare to call God his Father, even though he perceives the aforementioned matters within himself. Such a person must put his unbelief aside, hold this for truth, and esteem God to be his Father as being the One who has given him this disposition and these fruits. To call God "Father" in prayer does not proceed from assurance, but rather from their judgment and heartfelt desires. Yes, these concerns and wrestlings are a proof of life and faith. Since in such a person there is not only love toward the Lord Jesus, but also to all His members and to His church, he includes them all in his prayer, and therefore not only says "Father," "my Father," but also our Father. The Significance of the Phrase "Which Art in Heaven" The Lord Jesus causes us furthermore to say, "which art in heaven." It must be noted here that it says "heavens" [Note: This statement, and the paragraphs that follow, are based on the rendering of the Statenvertaling, which reads as follows: "Die Gij zijt in de hemelen," that is, "Which art in the heavens."] and not heaven as in the third petition. Hereby the following is conveyed:

First, "in the heavens" does not refer to a location, for God is infinite. He fills heaven and earth and infinitely exceeds them. "Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee" (1 Kings 8:27).

Secondly, "the heavens" also does not refer to the third heaven, which is the abode of holy angels and glorified saints, the paradise of God, the house of the Father, the throne of God, and the place where God's glory is seen. The third petition refers to this, but such is not true here. Mention is made here of "the heavens," and this includes all the heavens. The suppliant is thus not limited to a local perception of the third heaven, but rather it lifts the suppliant above the edifice of heaven and earth -- all of which vanishes from the heart and eye of the suppliant as something insignificant. It causes us to view God as the infinite One; as most majestic, glorious, omnipotent, and invisible; and as the One who dwells in unapproachable light, who covers Himself with light as with a garment. Both the nature and the disposition of the saints teach them to view God as such in prayer, with a lifting up of the heart and eye on high (without thinking of a locality) unto God as being invisible and all-seeing.

There is no contrast here between the supplicants of the Old and New Testaments -- between Jerusalem, the temple, the Holy of Holies, and the third heaven. It is not so that in the Old Testament they had to say, "Oh God, who dwellest in Jerusalem and between the cherubim," and that we in the New Testament may straightway go to God and say, "Our Father which art in heaven." For also in the Old Testament supplicants lifted up heart and eye to God in heaven:

"Mine eyes fail with looking upward: O Lord" (Isaiah 38:14); "Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens" (Lamentations 3:41); "Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes, O Thou that dwellest in the heavens" (Psalms 123:1). They prayed that God would look down upon them from heaven: "Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of Thy holiness and of Thy glory" (Isaiah 63:15), and God heard them from heaven: "He will hear him from His holy heaven" (Psalms 20:6). In this they are on equal footing with New Testament believers and it removes the thought that there is a distinction between the Old and New Testaments in this text. The fact that they prayerfully turned their countenances toward Jerusalem, saying, "O Shepherd of Israel. ... Thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth" (Psalms 80:1), indicates that in prayer they approached unto God through the Messiah. They prayed in His name -- He being depicted by the mercy seat, which was overshadowed by the wings of the cherubim. Likewise, we in the New Testament, when praying in His Name, do not approach unto God in any other way but through the Mediator. Since they thus in both cases approached unto God by way of the sacrifice of the High Priest Jesus Christ -- who then had to come and now has come -- they were both pleasing to God and were heard, God being pleased with the sacrifice of His Son. "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matthew 17:5). The Address Renders Liberty and Reverence With divine wisdom the Lord Jesus conjoins these two matters in the address: "Father, our Father, which art in heaven (Dutch: the heavens)." The word "Father" gives liberty to lay before and to unveil to God, as Father, in an intimate manner our needs and desires -- and to pray for their fulfillment. And, lest we lose our reverence and awe due to such intimacy, we must add to this the awe-inspiring expression, "which art in heaven." However, lest we be fearful to approach due to our awe for His lofty majesty, we add the word "Father" to it. Filial freedom and reverence must go hand in hand. Finally, we say "our" to express our love for God's children. The Lord Jesus thus teaches us that we are to use an appropriate address in our prayers. If we address God out of form and custom with a certain name which so happens to come across our lips -- without a conscious acknowledgment of God, ourselves, and the condition in which we are -- it shows that as supplicants we are void of spirituality, for it is sinful to begin prayer in such a manner. We must also not occupy ourselves for a time considering by which name we shall address God. This generally causes a prayerful disposition to vanish. If, however, the supplicant separates himself from everything and turns to God, such a prayerful disposition will engender a fitting address -- be it by considering God's goodness, omnipotence, mercy, truthfulness, holiness, glory, and majesty -- or else our need, fear, or anxiety will suggest a fitting address which will bring our soul either into a prayerful frame or further enhance this frame. However, if no particular name comes to mind, then be at liberty, upon the command of the Lord Jesus, to address God as "our Father which art in heaven." The Believer's Approach to the Father Generally, an attentive and prayerful frame will bring forth a sigh and one will begin with "oh!" If you are in the company of people, you must refrain yourself so that your sighing voice will not be heard by others; this will hinder them. Such sighs must also not be feigned, for that is hypocrisy. These sighs must also not be the result of the condition of the body; they are not related to prayer. They must also not be the result of pretense or custom. This belongs to the realm of routine, which ought to have no part in prayer at all. Instead, such a sigh must be the voice of the soul and proceed from the Holy Spirit, who "maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered" (Romans 8:26).

(1) Sometimes the soul is so overcome with either sorrow, physical sorrow, or soul's grief, that she cannot utter one word. She presents herself before the Lord, however, and pours out her heart before the omniscient One with a heartfelt sigh -- with the voice of a turtledove. This is pleasing to Him, and the Lord, knowing the mind of the Spirit, insists on hearing it: "O My dove ... let Me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice" (Song of Solomon 2:14).

(2) Sometimes the soul is empty. She is tense, desirous to pray, but no matters come to mind, and desires for a given matter are neither lively nor do they stir up the soul. What must she do? Leave her closet? That she cannot do, for she knows that she lacks everything. And if there is nothing in particular, a sigh comes forth out of her emptiness which cries for fulfillment -- a sigh which God understands well.

(3) Sometimes the soul is focused so intently upon a desired spiritual matter, having such profound insight in it, and her desires being so intense, that she cannot find words to express those inexpressible matters and desires. Therefore, she cannot do otherwise than make this known by way of a sigh which expresses far more than many words could do.

(4) Sometimes the soul is in a sinful condition. She would desire to approach, but she is ashamed, does not dare to come, and hides herself. She crawls, so to speak, to the throne of grace, having no courage to speak. She then lets herself be heard by quiet sighs, which at times are accompanied with quiet tears -- this being a delightful manifestation of a penitent soul.

Even though the supplicant may use various addresses in prayer, there is none so sweet, so soul-stirring, and so beneficial as saying "Father," "my Father," and "our Father." When the supplicant, by faith, engages himself in meditation upon the word "Father," and views it from God's perspective, his own perspective, and all that is comprehended in that relationship, this can then bring the soul into ecstasy and cause her to lose herself in adoration. The supplicant sees himself as a worm and, moreover, as one who is so sinful within and without, so despicable, hateful, and damnable that no one could even cast an eye of pity upon him. It is thus due to the wondrous longsuffering of God that he has not long since been cast into hell already. To think that he has been delivered from the eternal destruction in which the majority of men, who are no worse than he is, sink away! And beyond that, to think that he has been adopted as a child of God -- adopted to be an heir of God and a fellow-heir of Christ in eternal glory! That transcends all the comprehension of both angels and men. To think that he may address God by the name "Father," and "my Father"! When the supplicant focuses upon God, whom he may call Father, and considers God in His majesty, glory, holiness, and fullness of perfection; when he considers furthermore that God, in all that He is, is there for him so that he might be filled, satisfied, and be made joyful in the only blessed God; and when he finally considers that he is a partaker of all felicity -- this cannot be comprehended to all eternity. This is able to bring the supplicant into such ecstasy, that body and soul are not capable of enduring the wondrous goodness of God; the soul would be overwhelmed due to astonishment and joy, and the spirit would succumb. When the supplicant reflects upon the relationship in which he is to God, and God to him, he must exclaim, "This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes" (Psalms 118:23). For, if God is his Father, then God has loved him with an eternal and fatherly love. Then God's omnipotent, faithful, and fatherly eye is upon him to protect him against all evil, to provide for him in all the needs of body and soul, and to cause all things to work for good for him. Likewise, God's fatherly tenderness and mercy are engaged toward him to have pity upon him when he comes into circumstances of misery, need, and death. God thus makes him an heir of all the benefits of the covenant of grace. God will therefore hear him as his Father when he calls upon Him. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him" (Matthew 7:11). If the Lord does not immediately give what we desire, He will do it at a time which is best for us and He will give that which is to our benefit. It is fatherly love when He gives and it is fatherly love when He withholds. And you -- entrust everything fully to your Father without fear and concern. As a child, honor your Father: fear Him, love Him, and obey and serve Him with a willing soul.

Behold, all this -- and more than we are able to express -- is included in this address. Therefore, attentively make use of this in faith, and thus proceed to the matters you are to pray for as comprehended in the following six petitions. THE FIRST PETITION Hallowed Be Thy Name The goal stimulates the worker, defines what means he will use, and renders the use of grievous means easy. The irrational animals, even though they are not acquainted with the goal, are driven by a natural instinct toward the goal set for them by God, and know which means to use unto that end. Rational man, however, prior to undertaking something, has something in mind which he desires to have. This becomes the goal he wishes to attain. In proportion to how necessary, beneficial, and desirable the attainment of that goal is to him, so intense will his use of the means be. As true as this is in the natural realm, so true is it in the spiritual realm. In proportion to someone's acquaintance with and love for spiritual matters, so slothful or zealous he will be. In accordance with this he will either not be able to separate himself from the world, or it will be easy for him to forsake the world and to make a wholehearted resolution to only seek the Lord Jesus unto justification and sanctification, as well as that He might be his life and joy. Our ultimate goal is primary in our considerations and comes last in the execution of our plans. At first a person has a particular matter in view. This he pursues; he focuses upon it; he has nothing in mind beyond that. The means which he uses to obtain such a matter in and of themselves are not related to the various goals which he pursues. However, his use of the means is not the end of the matter; rather he uses that which he has attained to attain something else. In turn, he uses this again to attain something else. He thus proceeds until he can enjoy the matter he originally had in view; at that point his activity terminates. This is also applicable in the spiritual realm. This will enable you to determine how sincere or insincere you are in the pursuit of your objective, as well as how and for what reasons the means are used. The Objective of This Petition In this prayer the Lord Jesus teaches what the ultimate goal must be which we are to hold before us, what our primary desire must be, and the end we must desire and present in the other petitions.

Question: It is a certainty that our ultimate goal is the primary objective of our pursuit, and that the Lord Jesus in the first petition establishes the glorification of God's name as the goal as to why we are to desire the other petitions. Is the desire for, and the seeking after, our deliverance and salvation (that is, of conversion, faith, and holiness, without being motivated to that end purely and alone by the love for and having as objective the glorification of God's name) not sinful self-love, and therefore must be neglected until we have first received a love for the glorification of God? Ought not that love and that objective alone motivate us to seek for our deliverance and salvation?

Answer #1: If someone has eternal salvation as his objective -- without having any further objective -- and in order to attain this seeks the Lord Jesus unto justification and sanctification by a variety of means such as heartfelt prayer and supplications to God, the exercise of faith, an active opposing of sin, and the exercise of godliness, then his activity is governed by the ground rule mentioned above. Salvation is the primary objective of his pursuit, and he uses means to obtain this -- this being his ultimate goal.

Answer #2: This prayer is perfect as far as substance and order are concerned. In order for someone to pray this perfectly, he must be perfect himself. In this life no one is perfect, however, and therefore no one is able to pray perfectly. What then is to be done? Must he then, in order not to sin, refrain from praying because his prayer and actions are deficient and polluted with sin? Absolutely not, for otherwise all religion would cease. However, it is true that his prayer and works cannot be placed on the register of perfect virtues. He can thereby neither approach unto God, exist before Him, nor obligate God to hear his prayer. The uprightness of his objective, and his activity issuing forth from this objective in pursuing this ultimate goal, are pleasing to God, for he pursues this goal and is active with Christ in view; and his activity is spiritual and has spiritual vitality. God will hear this deficient prayer, not because of the virtues to be found in it, but according to His fatherly goodness and promise rooted in the satisfaction of Christ.

Thirdly, if someone is as yet not acquainted with this ultimate purpose, that is, the glorification of God's Name, and is not motivated out of love for this but only has his salvation and eternal security in view, then he has something in view which God commands. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Php 2:12); "What must I do to be saved" (Acts 16:30). Salvation was the objective and the apostle directed him to the means whereby this is to be obtained: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (vs. 31). A person who is likewise seeking to be saved, and to that end endeavors to repent and to believe in the Lord Jesus, is not active in an entirely correct sense, but neither is his activity wrong. It is God's will that he endeavor to be saved and that he enter upon the way of believing in Christ. When he does this, he pleases the Lord and He promises to grant salvation to such persons.

Answer #4: God does not lead His children in such a way that they will first have a love for the glorification of God's Name and that nothing but love and the pursuance of this goal engages them to seek their salvation unto repentance and faith. I repeat, God does not lead His children in this way. Never have the prophets or the apostles guided their pupils in such a direction. He who teaches such a way and wishes to lead others into that way, reveals that he himself is but in the state of nature and that the way of salvation is hidden for him. As a blind guide he misleads the souls which come under his care, for in that way they will never be saved. Never will anyone attain the highest level of holiness if he does not begin at the lowest level. We do not begin with the highest step and then descend to the lowest step; instead, we begin with the lowest and ascend to the highest.

Answer #5: A spiritual and wise father, who is going to teach his child to read and write, will not endeavor first to cause his child to be acquainted with and delight in the glorification of God's Name in order that he would thereby be motivated to learn how to read. He knows that such is beyond the reach of the intellect of a child. Likewise God leads His children in accordance with their comprehension. First He puts them on the lowest rung in order to lead them higher step by step. A beginner in grace, even though he is not motivated by a desire for the glorification of God's Name, is nevertheless not opposed to this. Rather, he approves of this in accordance with the measure in which this is presented to him and can be comprehended by him. Yes, time and again he ends in this when he thanks God for that which he has enjoyed. When we pray, "Hallowed be Thy Name," then we must not imagine that we are praying on behalf of the Lord, as if we could contribute anything to him, and as if by hallowing His Name we could increase His glory. To do so would be to dishonor God, for He is perfect and all-sufficient. "Neither is (He) worshiped with men's hands, as though He needed any thing" (Acts 17:25); "My goodness extendeth not to Thee" (Psalms 16:2); "Is it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to Him, that thou makest thy ways perfect" (Job 22:3). It is not God's felicity, but rather man's that he knows, loves, serves, and praises God. It is a grace that he may do so, and it will be the highest purpose and felicity of his life if he is permitted to do so and in actuality does this. The following is to be noted in the words of the first petition: 1) the object: Thy Name and 2) the desired activity: be hallowed. The Object of this Petition The object is "Thy Name." A name is a word whereby we distinguish one thing from something else when we speak of it. Every person has his own name. The word "name" sometimes signifies a person. "The number of names (■νομ■των) together were about an hundred and twenty" (Acts 1:15). Each person has his own name and thus there are as many names as there are persons. Therefore the name of God signifies God Himself. "And the Israelitish woman's son blasphemed the name of the Lord, and cursed" (Leviticus 24:11); "What is His name, and what is His Son's name, if thou canst tell" (Proverbs 30:4). This refers to God's essence, and His existence is incomprehensible and inexpressible for you. This is also evident from such passages in which the name of God is said to be active (Psalms 20:1), men are said to trust in God's name (Isaiah 50:10), worship His name (Zephaniah 3:9), and fear that name (Malachi 4:2). Sometimes the name of God is understood to refer to the names by which God calls Himself or allows Himself to be called -- such as Jehovah: "I am the Lord (Jehovah): that is My name" (Isaiah 42:8). The name of God is also understood to refer to God's reputation -- just as we say of a man that he has a good name, that is, testimony, esteem, reputation. This is also signified relative to God. "What wilt Thou do unto Thy great name" (Joshua 7:9). Here the name of God signifies God Himself, His essence, His perfections, and in some respects, also His reputation. The Mandated Activity The deed or activity we are required to perform relative to God's Name is that it be hallowed. Since various motions are comprehended in the word "to hallow," there is confusion among those who have but little knowledge as to what is to be understood by the hallowing of God's Name. In order to have a more discerning knowledge it needs to be noted that "to hallow" is to be understood differently when it refers to a person or a matter than when it has God as its object. When man or something else is its object, it signifies:

- (1) To be separated from all others and to stand alone.
- (2) To be devoted to God, to appropriate to God, and to surrender to His lordship and service.
- (3) To prepare and qualify for the service of God. It thus means to illuminate, regenerate, restore the image of God in man, to render holy and virtuous, and to render someone radiant and glorious due to holiness.
- (4) To be holily engaged in the service of God -- in a task commanded by God. Occasionally, this is attributed to God and sometimes to man.

If it is attributed to God, then it signifies:

(1) The separation of a people or a person in order to penalize them for their sins. "Prepare [Note: The Statenvertaling reads as follows: "Heilig ze tot den dag der dooding," that is, "Sanctify them for the day of slaughter."] them for the day of slaughter" (Jeremiah 12:3).

(2) The separation, preparation, and qualification of nations to execute His judgments over others: "And I will prepare [Note: Ibid.] destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons" (Jeremiah 22:7).

(3) To set apart a matter or day for His service: "I have hallowed this house" (1 Kings 9:3); "Wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it" (Exodus 20:11).

(4) To separate a nation or a person from others to be His property and for His service: "I hallowed unto Me all the firstborn in Israel" (Numbers 3:13); "I am the Lord which sanctify you" (Leviticus 20:8). It also signifies a rendering fit for His service; that is, to change, make holy, and render spiritual. "Sanctify them through Thy truth" (John 17:17); "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly" (1 Thessalonians 5:23). In this manner God has also set apart the Lord Jesus to be a Surety and a Mediator, qualifying Him by the union of the two natures and the extraordinary infusion of the Holy Spirit. "...Him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world ..." (John 10:36); "For it became Him ... to make the captain of their salvation perfect [Note: The Statenvertaling uses the word "heiligen," that is, "to sanctify" where the KJV uses "to make perfect."] through sufferings" (Hebrews 2:10). When "hallowing" is attributed to men, it signifies:

(1) To set apart -- upon God's command -- a day, matter, or person for the service of God. There is the hallowing of a day: "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy" (Exodus 20:8). There is the hallowing of a matter: "So they sanctified the house of the Lord in eight days" (2 Chronicles 29:17). There is a hallowing of persons: "Sanctify unto Me all the firstborn" (Exodus 13:2).

(2) To separate ourselves, to consecrate ourselves to God, or to prepare ourselves for the service of God. "Sanctify yourselves against tomorrow" (Joshua 7:13); "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Corinthians 7:1).

All these meanings of the word "to hallow" are not applicable here. However, we have pointed them out since you need to be acquainted with them in order to be free from any confusion in this respect, and to be all the more capable of understanding the meaning of the word "to hallow." This is a hallowing which has as its object neither man nor anything else. The reference here is to a hallowing which has God as its object. Sometimes this is attributed to God and sometimes to man.

God Hallows Himself

God hallows Himself: "And I will sanctify My great name" (Ezekiel 36:23). God hallows Himself both in the works of nature and of grace, revealing to man what manner of God He is.

He hallows Himself in the works of nature.

(1) He does this when He reveals Himself as being the only God. "I am the Lord that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone; ... beside Me there is no God" (Isaiah 44:24; Isaiah 44:6). Man can discern this from creation: "... being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead" (Romans 1:20).

(2) He does so when He reveals His goodness by means of temporal blessings. "Nevertheless He left not Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven" (Acts 14:17); "The earth is full of Thy riches" (Psalms 104:24).

(3) He does so when He demonstrates His justice in punishing sinners. Even the heathen perceive this, for one of them states, "I have long been in doubt as to whether God rules over everything or whether everything comes about by chance. However, the punishment of Rufinus at last terminated this train of thought and vindicated God. They (the ungodly) are exalted in order that they will be crushed all the more severely." This is frequently mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. Such is true in these two texts: "Behold, I am against thee, O Zidon; and I will be glorified in the midst of thee: and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall have executed judgments in her, and shall be sanctified in her" (Ezekiel 28:22); "And the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord, when I have gotten Me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen" (Exodus 14:18).

(4) This occurs when the Lord reveals His irresistible omnipotence in His works: "And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up, for to show in thee My power; and that My name may be declared throughout all the earth" (Exodus 9:16). Consider also Daniel 4:34-35, "I blessed the most High, and I praised and honoured Him that liveth for ever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and His kingdom is from generation to generation: and all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, What doest Thou?"

However, God hallows Himself in a special sense in the work of grace wherein He reveals Himself as:

(1) A righteous God, who cannot allow sin to go unpunished, and who cannot be reconciled to the sinner except the committed sins be fully punished. "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness" (Romans 3:25).

(2) A good God: "But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared. ... He saved us" (Titus 3:4-5).

(3) A wise God: "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God" (Ephesians 3:10).

(4) A faithful God: "For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen, unto the glory of God by us" (2 Corinthians 1:20).

(5) A truthful God: "But as God is true, our word toward you was not yea and nay" (2 Corinthians 1:18).

(6) An immutable God. "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it by an oath" (Hebrews 6:17). Therefore the Lord says, "But My kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of My peace be removed" (Isaiah 54:10). In these ways God reveals His perfections and hallows His Name. The Manner in Which Man Hallows Man is also said to hallow, either himself, other people, or a variety of matters. It then signifies:

(1) The separation of ordinary things for religious purposes: "Sanctify unto Me all the firstborn" (Exodus 13:2); "Separate Me Barnabas and Saul" (Acts 13:2).

(2) To devote to, to consecrate to God, to surrender to the service of the Lord, or to sacrifice: "And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John 17:19). The following passages refer to this: "But first gave their own selves to the Lord" (2 Corinthians 8:5); "And another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel" (Isaiah 44:5).

(3) To prepare for the service of the Lord: "Sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice" (1 Samuel 16:5).

(4) To be involved in a holy manner in the work of the Lord. "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy" (Exodus 20:8). To this also belongs a being godly and holy in the totality of our life and deeds. "Ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy" (Leviticus 11:44).

Man is also said to hallow God. Such hallowing, however, does not signify all that which we enumerated, for God is perfect, and nothing can either be taken away or added to Him.

However, the hallowing of God's Name consists, first of all, in knowing and attentively observing where and in what manner God hallows His Name -- in His works as well as in grace, as has been discussed above. He who will hallow God's Name, must take note wherein God reveals Himself, and which perfections of God manifest themselves in this. "Come, behold the works of the Lord" (Psalms 46:8); "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord" (Psalms 107:43).

Secondly, there must be a recognition and a joyful approbation that God is such a God. "Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy judgments" (Revelation 16:7).

Thirdly, God's Name as such must be glorified, exalted, and praised. "O praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise Him, all ye people. For His merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever" (Psalms 117:1-2).

(1) Such occurs with the heart: "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name" (Psalms 103:1); "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts" (1 Peter 3:15);

(2) with the mouth: "I will speak of the glorious honour of Thy majesty, and of Thy wondrous works" (Psalms 145:5); (3) with our life and our deeds: "Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John 15:8). Fourthly, we must show to others how glorious a God our God is. From the Holy Scriptures and His works, both His common and extraordinary providence, we must point out which perfections of God manifest themselves in a given situation, and thereby we must lead them to the knowledge, acknowledgment, love, and glorification of God. Everywhere in the Psalms David exhorts everyone to do so -- also in Psalms 148:1-14, where he addresses angels, hosts, kings, princes, judges, young men, maidens, and old men. He stirs them all up to praise God and to behold the glory of the Lord in all His works of creation, preservation, government, and redemption of His people. He concludes in verses 13-14 by saying, "Let them praise the name of the Lord: for His name alone is excellent; His glory is above the earth and heaven. He also exalteth the horn of His people, the praise of all His saints; even of the children of Israel, a people near unto Him. Praise ye the Lord." The psalmist also makes mention of animals, birds, fish, the sun, and trees. This does not mean that they are able to do this, but that they render man reasons to glorify God; and he ends the book of Psalms with: "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord"! The Implication of Praying, "Hallowed be Thy Name"

Thus far we have demonstrated how and whereby God's Name is hallowed. It now remains to demonstrate what it means to pray, "Hallowed be Thy Name."

First of all, it consists of an expression of strong love and a desire that God's Name be glorified and praised. "Let such as love Thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified" (Psalms 70:4).

Secondly, it includes an acknowledgment that we and all other men are not worthy that God would manifest Himself to us even in the very least, that we should rejoice in this revelation, and that we should put the praises of God in our mouths. When the holy angels glorified God and thrice exclaimed "Holy," they covered their countenances (Isaiah 6:1-13). Abraham said, "Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and ashes" (Genesis 18:27). Thereby we acknowledge that it would be God's incomprehensible grace and goodness if the Lord were to permit and enable us to glorify Him. For this grace we then pray.

Thirdly, it implies an admission of impotence to do this, for he who delights in the hallowing of God's Name finds himself perplexed from all sides. His understanding is too darkened, his will too inert, and his affections too lethargic. He is neither able to begin, nor to proceed, and if he does anything it is more the work of his head than his heart and he is therefore inclined to desist. He thus perceives that it must be given him out of grace, and therefore he says, "O Lord, open Thou my lips; and my mouth shall show forth Thy praise" (Psalms 51:15).

Fourthly, it is indicative of faith that God is able to do it, is also willing to give it -- and indeed does give it. "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise" (Isaiah 43:21); "That they might be called ... the planting of the Lord, that He might be glorified" (Isaiah 61:3). The Lord Jesus would not put these words in our mouth if it were not the Lord's intent to grant this to the suppliant.

Fifthly, it consists of a heartfelt entreaty:

(1) That God would reveal Himself as He is, and that He is the One who rules everything from the least to the greatest, He being the One who punishes and blesses, and who gives both victory and defeat in war. "O Shepherd of Israel ... shine forth. Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up Thy strength, and come and save us. Turn us again, O God, and cause Thy face to shine" (Psalms 80:1-3); "O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth ... show Thyself" (Psalms 94:1).

(2) That both the suppliant and others would see and acknowledge God as He reveals Himself in His Word and in His works by His Spirit -- as God is indeed pleased to do. "... the wicked ... will not behold the majesty of the Lord" (Isaiah 26:10); "The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance. ... So that a man shall say, Verily there is a reward for the righteous: verily He is a God that judgeth in the earth" (Psalms 58:10-11); "Then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it" (Ezekiel 37:14).

(3) That both the supplicants and others -- by reason of knowing the Lord as being such a majestic, holy, glorious, good, and omnipotent Lord -- would, in all that He does, love, fear, obey, and praise Him; and by reason of that disposition and desire they initiate everything, are active as such, end in this, and in very deed exclaim, "For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever" (Romans 11:36). All this is included in the prayer, "Hallowed be Thy Name."

Having a strong love that God will be glorified among men, in view of his unworthiness to be permitted to do so, and due to his inability to do so, the supplicant presents himself in faith to the Lord as a child, coming to God as his Father in Christ, and prays, "Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants, and Thy glory unto their children" (Psalms 90:16); "Let my mouth be filled with Thy praise and with Thy honour all the day" (Psalms 71:8). The Vain Use of this Petition

How far man is removed from conducting himself as such, however! The heathen neither know, desire, nor glorify God, and are without God. Christians are indeed obligated to glorify God, but in some respects they behave themselves worse than the heathen, for instead of glorifying God, they dishonor Him -- yes, they mock with God in an intolerable manner. However, you may say, "How do they mock with God?" They do so by daily taking these words in their mouths: "Hallowed be Thy Name," for they daily recite this prayer and are of the opinion that they would commit a great sin if they had not prayed this -- if the Lord's Prayer had not been the conclusion of their prayer. However, in the meantime they have no knowledge of what this means: "Hallowed be Thy Name." They do not desire this, nor are they motivated to pray this by reason of such a desire. It does not even occur to them, and they just rattle it off. Is not this mockery? Would you dare to address a king or a man of distinction in this manner? Do you think that he would give you your request upon such irreverent babbling? Acknowledge therefore what an abomination it is to be prattling in this manner in the presence of God, while yet being of the opinion that you had prayed to God. Such persons have no interest in the means whereby God's Name is hallowed: the coming of God's kingdom and the petitions which follow. Consequently, this means that they themselves also have no desire for the glorification of God's Name, and yet they insist on daily reciting this petition ignorantly, doing so without a desire for the matter -- and irreverently. Is this not to be guilty of mocking with the great God? It would be less sinful not to pray at all than to rattle something off mockingly in God's presence. The Grave Consequences of Not Hallowing God's Name

Therefore, give ear, you ignorant ones, who neither have knowledge of God nor of the contents of this petition, and who have no desires relative to this petition; hear, you who rattle off your prayers, who pray routinely, who mock with God, who tear God's laws to shreds and trample upon them, who abuse the holy name of God, who with your ungodly walk cause the name of God to be slandered; hear and take the following to heart:

First, God will not permit Himself to be mocked and despised. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked" (Galatians 6:7); "Surely He scorneth the scorners" (Proverbs 3:34). Oh, how dreadful it will be when you will thus be scorned!

Secondly, as long as you live in such a condition, God does not wish to be worshiped by you. "When ye come to appear before Me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread My courts? And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide Mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear" (Isaiah 1:12; Isaiah 1:15). What a wretched condition it is not to be permitted to pray -- yes, then even their religion is an abomination before God! "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 15:8). God even forbids them to speak of divine things: "But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare My statutes, or that thou shouldest take My covenant in thy mouth" (Psalms 50:16). Oh, God is so holy that we may not approach unto Him except in the way of holiness.

Thirdly, if we do not hallow God's Name; if we but say with our mouth, "Hallowed be Thy Name," while neither understanding what we are saying nor having a heartfelt desire that such would occur, then God will sanctify Himself by punishing you, in order that everyone would perceive how very much God ought to be feared and how reverent we ought to be in our approach unto Him. When Nadab and Abihu came before the Lord with strange fire, "there went out fire from the Lord, and devoured them" (Leviticus 10:3). In response to this Moses said, "This is it that the Lord spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh Me" (Leviticus 10:3). Even though God does not always do this immediately, the Lord will nevertheless do this at His time and in His manner, and they will be aware of the fulfillment of this threat: "Forasmuch as this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour Me, but have removed their heart far from me ... therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29:13-14). Therefore, also give heed as to how you pray; be acquainted with and desirous for that which you declare before God: "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God" (Ecclesiastes 5:2). This is intended for those who pray in an evil manner. The Godly Rebuked for Their Deficient Use of This Petition

Also the godly are very deficient in praying this petition, and therefore are in need of rebuke. Many dwell too much upon themselves and are too intent upon a feeling sense of the forgiveness of sins, the assurance of their state, and victory over their sins, holiness, and virtuousness. The latter is a good desire, but it is not sufficient. We ought much more to accustom ourselves to have knowledge of, love for, and focus upon the highest goal in all things: the glorification of God's Name. This we must heartily supplicate for in our prayer, rather than desist in discouragement by saying, "I cannot glorify God; I am too ignorant and I do not know how to begin; I am too sinful, and the power of my corruptions troubles my soul; my cross presses me down and I am surrounded by sorrows; I find it difficult to believe that God is my God. How then can I glorify His Name? And even if I undertake this, then I must immediately desist. I am without subject matter for my prayer, I find no sweetness in it, and it is but the work of my intellect."

You are indeed to be rebuked. To refrain from this causes you to remain spiritually immature. You desire to immediately have a view of the glory of God in a high measure, as well as having a feeling and vehement sense of love. Instead, you must begin in a humble condition of soul and reflect upon the suitableness of God being hallowed by all creatures, the blessedness of those who do so with desire and love, as well as your own desire to that end. You must thus train yourself continually to have this objective in view in order to become accustomed to it. In so doing, your propensity in this regard will improve.

Therefore, stir up your soul to hallow God's Name and to pray for this continually, for:

- (1) God is worthy of this (Revelation 4:11), and it behooves you (Isaiah 42:21).
- (2) God is pleased with it (Psalms 22:4), and this is all your delight (Psalms 71:8).

(3) It is the delightful activity of the birds, the heavens (Psalms 19:1), the angels (Isaiah 6:3), and the saints upon earth (Psalms 92:2; Psalms 69:31). Would you then be silent?

(4) this will cause your work to be more genuine (John 3:21), and is a great privilege for you (Psalms 99:3; Psalms 99:6). God glorifies all who glorify Him (1 Samuel 2:30), and it is the sweetest task (Psalms 147:1). Yes, it is felicity itself and it will be the eternal activity of glory (Revelation 5:9-12). Therefore, take pleasure in this, undertake it, take conscious notice of the manner in which God reveals His perfections, and praise the Lord. Begin with this objective and end in it. "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord" (Psalms 150:6). These matters have been enlarged upon and recommended in chapter 56x Add this chapter to it for it belongs to it. If I had not dealt with it extensively there, I would have been obligated to do so here. Since, however, we did so at that time, I have said less of it here.

1 This statement, and the paragraphs that follow, are based on the rendering of the Statenvertaling, which reads as follows: "Die Gij zijt in de hemelen," that is, "Which art in the heavens."

2 The Statenvertaling reads as follows: "Heilig ze tot den dag der dooding," that is, "Sanctify them for the day of slaughter."

3 Ibid.

4 The Statenvertaling uses the word "heiligen," that is, "to sanctify" where the KJV uses "to make perfect."

075. Chapter 70: The Second Petition: Thy Kingdom Come

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY ----- The Second Petition: Thy Kingdom Come

God has conjoined both the end and the means to obtain that end with an unbreakable bond. He who does not use the means should not expect to attain the end. This is common knowledge to everyone. Sometimes the means -- such as heavy labor and perilous circumstances -- are unattractive and we would not avail ourselves of them if it were not for the fact that we would thus attain the desired end. Sometimes the means in and of themselves are attractive. We would make use of them without any further objective in view -- as is true for delectable food and drink. In the spiritual realm all is sweet -- the end and the means which we use and avail ourselves of in order to attain the end (I am not referring to suffering here). They are sweet in view of the end to be attained, and they are inherently sweet as well. How amiable and desirable the ultimate of all objectives is -- the hallowing of God's Name -- we have demonstrated in the preceding petition. The five subsequent petitions are the means to that end -- each individual petition being very precious and giving cause for rejoicing to the truly spiritual person. The means which most preeminently promotes the glorification of God's Name is the coming of God's kingdom. Its nature, glory, advantages, and desirability we shall now explain. In the second petition reference is made to a kingdom, relative to which the prayer is uttered that it might come. The Word "Kingdom" Defined and Expounded

Let us consider the word "kingdom." A kingdom consists of a populace united under one leader. There have always been many kingdoms in the world, and it is still divided into many. Among them there have been four empires; that is, eras when the entire world was subjected to one ruling head. These are the empires of Babylon, of the Medes and Persians, of the Greeks, and of the Romans. There is yet a fifth empire of an entirely different nature: the kingdom of the Lord Jesus, of which we are now speaking. This is otherwise referred to as the congregation of God and of Christ, and we denominate it with a word not found in Scripture: the church. [Note: This statement is only applicable to the Statenvertaling.]

Let us furthermore consider the word "Thy." In this prayer God the Father is addressed, and thus the reference here is to the kingdom of the Father, for all things are out of Him and through Him. The Father gathers, rules, and preserves this kingdom by His Son Jesus Christ. This is therefore conjoined in the following passage: "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of His Christ" (Revelation 12:10). God is King in and of Himself. He is the original cause of all things; He inherently has the preeminence, is exalted, has all majesty and glory, and all power and dominion from all eternity. This was true before there were any creatures, and now that creatures do exist, they are all subject to God in consequence of His nature. "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is Thine; Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and Thou art exalted as head above all" (1 Chronicles 29:11). The Lord is great -- yes, He alone is King: "I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and My name is dreadful among the heathen" (Malachi 1:14). The kingdom of God is distinguished between 1) the kingdom of His power, 2) the kingdom of His glory, and 3) the kingdom of His grace. The kingdom of His power has all creatures as its subjects: good and evil angels, good and evil men, all living animals, and all inanimate objects in the heavens and upon earth. Everything is so fully in His hand that they cannot move without Him. Furthermore, they immediately stand ready at His bidding and execute His will. The Lord is therefore generally referred to in Scripture as the Lord of hosts. David speaks as follows: "They continue this day according to Thine ordinances: for all are Thy servants" (Psalms 119:91); "The Lord hath prepared His throne in the heavens; and His kingdom ruleth over all" (Psalms 103:19). Nebuchadnezzar acknowledged this by saying, "Whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and His kingdom is from generation to generation: and all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, What doest Thou" (Daniel 4:34-35). The kingdom of His glory has as its subjects the holy angels and the glorified elect in the third heaven -- that is, paradise or the house of the Father. "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matthew 25:34). "God, who hath called you unto His kingdom and glory" (1 Thessalonians 2:12), that is, to His glorious kingdom. The kingdom of His grace is also denominated as "the Church of God." First, the subjects of this kingdom are all true believers and converted persons. "... the Lamb shall overcome them ... and they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful" (Revelation 17:14).

Secondly, God separates them from the world, all nations, all communities, and all kingdoms, and causes them to dwell alone. "Lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations" (Numbers 23:9); "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you" (2 Corinthians 6:17).

Thirdly, there is a very intimate interrelationship among them -- a most intimate and spiritual bond -- so that together they form one whole. "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul" (Acts 4:32). This union exists:

(1) As a result of true doctrine: "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone" (Ephesians 2:20); "One Lord, one faith" (Ephesians 4:5). The apostle therefore exhorts: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house" (2 John 1:10).

(2) Due to being united by the same Spirit who dwells in all of them and by whom they all live: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Romans 8:14); "For through Him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Ephesians 2:18).

(3) By love: "Their hearts ... being knit together in love" (Colossians 2:2); "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35).

(4) By that selfsame faith, by which they are united to Christ and in Christ to each other. "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us" (John 17:21).

Fourthly, this kingdom has the Lord Jesus as its King. "Yet have I set My King upon My holy hill of Zion" (Psalms 2:6). Even though only true believers are the actual subjects of this King -- they being God, knowledge the only members who truly constitute the church, being united to the Lord Jesus with a spiritual bond, and in Him to each other -- the Lord Jesus is nevertheless King of the entire church as she manifests herself in the world, which includes many unconverted members. Just as an earthly king rules over strangers, residents, hidden enemies, and traitors, likewise Christ also rules over the unconverted in His kingdom. For they acknowledge Him to be their King, subject themselves to Him, have sworn allegiance to Him, and confess Him, even though they do it but in an external sense and with an unchanged heart. Kingdom of God, church Fifthly, God designates this kingdom as the object of His goodness and all manner of blessings. In that kingdom:

(1) God dwells with His gracious presence: "God is in the midst of her" (Psalms 46:5); "In Salem also is His tabernacle, and His dwelling place in Zion" (Psalms 76:2). Jesus is their King "who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks" (Revelation 2:1).

(2) There is safety: "I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment: lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day" (Isaiah 27:3); "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her" (Zechariah 2:5). Therefore all who know the Lord take refuge there: "The Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of His people shall trust in it" (Isaiah 14:32).

(3) There is light: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee ... but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and His glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising" (Isaiah 60:1-3).

(4) There is spirituality, life, and holiness. "But ye are ... an holy nation" (1 Peter 2:9). (5) There is peace and joy: "For the kingdom of God is ... righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost"

(Romans 14:17). (6) There is comfort and refreshment for an oppressed soul: "All My springs are in Thee" (Psalms 87:7). (7) The elect are converted and are gathered in: "And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her"

(Psalms 87:5); "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved" (Acts 2:47). Such glorious things are said of the city of God -- of the kingdom of Christ. The Origin and Nature of the Kingdom This kingdom has its origin in the first gospel declaration to Adam, and will continue without fail until the end of the world. From Adam to Abraham it was gathered from various nations, but the particular focus was upon the holy lineage. From Abraham to Christ it consisted in the seed of Abraham, although many other individuals joined themselves to it. "He sheweth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation" (Psalms 147:19-20). After the coming of Christ, all distinction among nations has been removed, and whoever believes in and fears the Lord is pleasing to Him, regardless of what nation he belongs to. "Thou ... hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation" (Revelation 5:9). This kingdom is the kingdom of heaven, being denominated as such in contrast to all earthly kingdoms. "My kingdom is not of this world" (John 18:36). It originates in heaven, is of a heavenly nature, functions in a heavenly manner, and culminates in heaven. It is therefore called the kingdom of heaven. Since this kingdom has always been the same, being identical in nature from Adam to Christ, it thus has been in all ages a heavenly kingdom. However, it is especially the New Testament church which is denominated as such, all the externals of the shadow ministry of the Old Testament having been removed. The church is presently not an external kingdom; that is, it is not governed by kings and princes and furnished with external weapons -- as was true in the Old Testament. Instead, she is now fully and entirely removed from all earthly externals, and is only heavenly in nature -- also in its external manifestation. Thus, the church of the New Testament is in a special sense the kingdom of heaven. John the Baptist denominates it as such: "The kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matthew 3:2). The Lord Jesus generally denominates it as such in the gospels and requires His apostles to do likewise. "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matthew 10:7).

It is a kingdom by virtue of its being ruled by a king, namely, Jesus Christ, who gathers, protects, and governs this kingdom. We refer to it as the kingdom of heaven since:

(1) It has its origin in heaven and is therefore frequently denominated the kingdom of God. By means of the gospel God reveals the Mediator and the way to salvation. God converts and adds to the church those regarding whom it pleases Him to do so. He sends forth ministers to that end, and the gospel call is therefore referred to as a heavenly calling. "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling" (Hebrews 3:1).

(2) Its subjects have heavenly natures. "Which were born ... of God" (John 1:13), are "partakers of the divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4), "... are led by the Spirit of God" (Romans 8:14), and "are spiritual" (Galatians 6:1).

(3) The benefits of this kingdom are heavenly: God Himself is their portion (Lamentations 3:24), and the Lord Jesus is their "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Corinthians 1:30). All the benefits of the covenant of grace are theirs. They are "the heirs of promise" (Hebrews 6:17).

(4) The activity of its subjects is of a heavenly nature: they pray, believe, love, and exercise virtue.

(5) They are without carnal weapons and are defenseless, even though the entire world is at enmity with them. Their battle is of a spiritual nature, however, and their weapons are spiritual. The apostle describes this armor from head to toe in Ephesians 6:13-18. "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds" (2 Corinthians 10:4).

(6) It culminates in heaven: "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls" (1 Peter 1:9); "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (1 Peter 5:4). These are all the reasons why this kingdom is denominated the kingdom of heaven. This Kingdom Redounds to the Glorification of God The existence of this kingdom redounds to the glorification of God in consequence of what God works in its subjects, what God does relative to them, and by what the church does relative to God.

(1) God's perfections shine forth in the ingathering of the church and the conversion of souls solely by the instrumentality of the Word; in the uniting of believers to Christ, justifying them by His ransom and righteousness; and by sanctifying, leading, and comforting them. In all this God reveals His wisdom, goodness, omnipotence, and faithfulness. He is thus "glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe" (2 Thessalonians 1:10).

(2) God is also glorified by what He does relative to His church. When He chastises the church for her sins, then God's holiness is manifested as not being able to endure sin even in His children and thus visits them with the rod. He is glorified when He preserves His church in the midst of wolves, so that she remains standing in all the assaults of the enemy -- assaults which, humanly speaking, could easily undo her. He is glorified when He causes the church to be manifest again in a glorious fashion after having been in very humble circumstances. God thus reveals in all this His omnipotence and faithfulness, showing that they are His people and that He will avenge Himself upon the oppressors of the church (2 Thessalonians 1:6-7).

(3) God is also glorified by the church when she, with her deeds, shows "forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9). "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise" (Isaiah 43:21). Thus, this kingdom is the preeminent means whereby God's Name is hallowed. The Lord Jesus therefore teaches us to pray, "Thy kingdom come."

It is relative to this kingdom that we pray that it may come.

Question When does this kingdom come? The kingdom of heaven, as far as its New Testament manifestation is concerned, had not yet come at the time when the Lord Jesus prescribed this prayer, for the Lord Jesus had neither paid the ransom nor had yet been glorified. The Holy Spirit had not as yet been poured out in that extraordinary manner and the gospel had not yet been conveyed to the heathen, even though that moment was near. They could thus pray that it would come; it did not exist as yet, but was near. However, how can we now pray that such would come about, since all this has transpired?

Answer: Even though this great change initially took place, its progression occurs daily, and will not cease to occur until the Lord Jesus returns for judgment. When we therefore presently pray, "Thy Kingdom come," then this pertains to individuals in particular and to the condition of the church in general. This Petition as It Relates to Individuals This petition pertains to individual persons. As a house is built by adding stone to stone, and as a kingdom exists and is enlarged by uniting more and more subjects, likewise this kingdom prospers by the translation of individuals from the kingdom of Satan to the kingdom of Christ. This takes place when God, by means of the Word of the kingdom, illuminates their understanding. He will thereby cause them to see, while being inwardly stirred, their sinful and damnable condition, the way of salvation, and the preciousness of the state of the redeemed. This kingdom comes when God removes their heart of stone and gives them a heart of flesh; when He gives them a submissive, attentive, and pliable heart; when He grants them faith whereby they accept Christ as their righteousness and ransom; when He regenerates them and grants them spiritual life, adding them as living stones to this spiritual building and incorporating them as faithful subjects into this heavenly kingdom.

And, the more they increase in light and holiness, the more God's kingdom is within them. This Petition as It Relates to the Church in Its Condition This kingdom comes relative to the condition of the church in general.

(1) This kingdom comes when the light emanated by the church is pure and holy; when she eliminates the foul odor of error and heresy; when she excels in holiness, and she "looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners" (Song of Solomon 6:10); when she glitters with "beauties of holiness" (Psalms 110:3), which "becometh thine house" (Psalms 93:5), and when she is thus "a praise in the earth" (Isaiah 62:7) and "a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God" (Isaiah 62:3). This kingdom comes when the church radiates such glory that others do not dare to join her and magnify her instead (Acts 5:13).

(2) This kingdom comes when the church is multiplied and when multitudes join her in those localities where the church exists. It furthermore comes when the gospel is brought to other locales, nations, and kingdoms, and when the gospel is readily received there according to the promise: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations" (Matthew 24:14).

(3) This kingdom comes when the Lord delivers the church from overwhelming oppression which had caused her to flee into the wilderness, and when He causes her to reappear more gloriously. Such was the case when the Lord, at the time of Constantine the Great, delivered the church from the persecution of the heathen emperors; and when He delivered her from the oppression of the antichrist at the time of the Reformation. It will come when God will destroy the throne of the beast, Rome, and annihilate the pope of Rome. For as the antichrist is reduced, the church will proportionally increase.

(4) This kingdom will come when the Jews will come to the Messiah, Jesus Christ; when they will acknowledge Him, believe in Him, repent toward the Lord, unite themselves with believers among the Gentiles, and together will form one church. This will be according to the promise found in Romans 11:25-26 : "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery ...that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob"; "What shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead" (Romans 11:15).

(5) This kingdom will come when that which is recorded in Revelation 20:2; Revelation 20:4 will come to pass: "And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them ... and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." The glory of the church during the millennium will consist in the annihilation of the antichrist and the Mohammedans -- the two chief enemies of the church; the binding of Satan and his incarceration in hell; the conversion of the Jews; the manifestation of great zeal among the heathen and all manner of nations; the presence of extraordinary light, holiness, and peace; the extraordinary indwelling of God among them; and a wondrous revelation of the Lord Jesus as King -- not physically, but in the Spirit. God will then also make the earth extraordinarily fruitful. Oh, what a glorious time that will be! Who does not long for this time? All these things constitute the coming of God's kingdom. The Lord Jesus mandates that we must pray for the coming of this kingdom. Such was the practice of the Old Testament saints: "Prayer also shall be made for Him continually" (Psalms 72:15). This pertains to the kingdom of which Messiah is King -- and thus the church -- which is the spiritual body of Christ, "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Ephesians 1:23). For the King's honor is in the multitude of people. No matter what David's perplexities were, the church was always bound upon his heart. He could not conclude his prayer for deliverance unless there was also a sigh for Zion: "Do good in Thy good pleasure unto Zion: build Thou the walls of Jerusalem" (Psalms 51:18); "Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles" (Psalms 25:22). He exhorts everyone to do likewise: "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee" (Psalms 122:6). Our Duty to Pray This Petition

It is thus also our duty to pray, "Thy kingdom come." This includes: Let Thy church radiate light and holiness; extend her to all nations; deliver her from her oppression and anguish; annihilate the antichrist and all the enemies of the church; convert the Jews; and let the promised, glorious state of the church come about.

Furthermore, bless all the means which are subservient to the growth of the church:

(1) Send forth faithful and capable servants, established in the truth, who are zealous and apt to teach: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest" (Matthew 9:38); that is, such as the Lord has promised: "I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness" (Isaiah 60:17).

(2) Let the Word and its preaching be blessed and fruitful: "Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you" (2 Thessalonians 3:1); "Withal praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ" (Colossians 4:3).

(3) Let the institutions for learning -- for the children as well as for the sons of the prophets -- be blessed. Let the nurture of children be blessed so that the families become little churches. "And, ye fathers ... bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" (Ephesians 6:4).

(4) Grant us a good government which, according to promise, will seek the welfare of the church: "And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers" (Isaiah 49:23). The Requisites for Praying This Petition Aright In order to pray rightly for the coming of this kingdom there must be:

(1) knowledge of what constitutes the future and glory of this kingdom; how this petition relates to the first petition; or, how God's Name is hallowed by the coming of this kingdom -- both of which have been demonstrated above;

(2) love for the well-being of the church;

(3) an acknowledgment of the impotence of individuals to repent, to add themselves as a living member to the church, to live as members who bring glory to the church, as well as the impotence of the church in general to gather herself, remain intact, maintain purity in doctrine and sanctification, enlarge herself, and persevere during persecutions;

(4) faith that only God can do this, is willing to do it, has done so prior to this moment and still does, and has promised to hear the prayers of His children in this respect -- and will also do this in the future according to His promise that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matthew 16:18). All this constitutes the contents of this prayer. The Vain and Sacrilegious Use of This Petition

How few are they who pray this petition in truth, and how many are they who rattle it off! They think that to neglect praying the Lord's Prayer every day is ungodly; however, they have no qualms as to whether this petition is prayed aright.

First, this is true for all those who neither know nor cherish this kingdom in its spiritual, glorious, and beneficial nature, and who neither honor nor fear its King. And yet they say, "Thy kingdom come."

Secondly, there are those who do not manifest themselves as true members, but as subjects of the kingdom of Satan, as ungodly, worldly-minded. They are nothing but blots upon the church and a disgrace to her. And yet they pray, "Thy kingdom come."

Thirdly, there are those who are of the opinion that the well-being of the church consists in the quantity of members and the presence of peace -- even if the church is in an ignorant and sinful condition. They -- ministers, elders, deacons, common members, or authorities -- will do nothing for the upbuilding of the church, and do not concern themselves with whether it goes well or ill with the church. They allow everything to proceed as if it did not pertain to them and nevertheless they pray, "Thy kingdom come."

Fourthly, there are those who hate, oppress, and persecute the faithful subjects of this kingdom -- those who have received light and are godly. If someone comes forward who opposes errors, ungodliness, and the oppression of the saints and desires to seek the good of Jerusalem, he will have to fear that in all things he will be opposed with a bitter hatred. Nevertheless they pray "Thy kingdom come."

First of all, this is mockery with God. By reciting this petition they are declaring that they are praying to God that He do such a thing, expressly requesting Him to do so. In the meantime, however, they do not know what they are saying, and they request what they do not desire; on the contrary, they work against it. Do you think that God will permit Himself to be mocked?

Secondly, to hate, contend with, oppose, and oppress the church is to contend with the Lord Jesus, the King of the church Himself. "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks" (Acts 9:4-5).

Thirdly, not only are you no partaker of all the heavenly benefits of the church -- and thus you will also not be glorified with her -- but all manner of dreadful judgments will come upon you: "But those Mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before Me" (Luke 19:27); "He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of His eye" (Zechariah 2:8). Take note of the judgment which is threatened upon the oppressors of the church: "And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed" (Revelation 11:5). When those who rattle off this petition -- thus those who mock with God, are blots upon the church, cause the church to be slandered by their walk, and are the oppressors of the church -- will come to judgment and observe the church standing in glory at the right hand of Christ; when they will observe that the Lord Jesus Himself, the King of the church, is the Judge and will look upon them in wrath; oh, how will they then be terrified and tremble! If they were then permitted to render Christ a service, how readily they would do so! They will not be deemed worthy of this, however, but will be cast into the fire.

Obligations in This Petition

However, for you who have some esteem for the Lord Jesus and His kingdom, there are several obligations incumbent upon you.

First, unite yourself to this kingdom and place yourself under the banner of King Jesus. Be as a champion among champions in contending for this kingdom and against its enemies. For outside of this kingdom there is nothing but enemy territory. Do you wish to sojourn in the territory of the enemy? There are but two kingdoms -- that of the Lord Jesus and that of the devil; there is no third. To be part of the kingdom of the devil, however, so that he has dominion over you as he does over all children of disobedience (Ephesians 2:2), is indeed the most despicable and abominable thing imaginable. For it is to be at enmity against the Lord Jesus and at war with His kingdom. It is the most extreme form of slavery, for it is to be under the dominion of sin, and it is a most dreadful thing, for it will end in eternal damnation. Therefore, depart from it with utmost urgency and enter into the kingdom of the omnipotent, faithful, good, and blessed King Jesus. There you will find safety, peace, reconciliation with God, light, holiness, and comfort, and it will culminate in the kingdom of eternal glory. Therefore, depart and make a transfer, and join in honoring of Christ and the hallowing of God's Name.

Secondly, cherish this kingdom, and continually stir up your love to that end. Declare with your entire heart: "Thou art my Lord: my goodness extendeth not to Thee"; that is, I cannot make any contribution toward Thee, but I can do so "to the saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight" (Psalms 16:3). Have a heart for the church as David did: "They shall prosper that love thee. For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee. Because of the house of the Lord our God I will seek thy good" (Psalms 122:6;Psalms 122:8-9). Let love prompt you to say with Israel, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy" (Psalms 137:5-6). If your heart is capable of love, it must love the church, for God loves her. "But because the Lord loved you" (Deuteronomy 7:8); "Thou shalt be called Hephzibah ... for the Lord delighteth in thee" (Isaiah 62:7). The Lord Jesus has a heartfelt love for her. "Christ also loved the church, and gave Himself for it" (Ephesians 5:25). The angels love her and all believers love her. She is most delightful from every perspective, for they are the elect, the children of God, the saints, and the excellent. The church is "a crown of glory" (Isaiah 62:7), "a praise in the earth" (Isaiah 62:7), and "the perfection of beauty" (Psalms 50:2). Therefore, love the church.

Thirdly, let both the well-being and the degenerate condition of the church be a matter of concern for you. Attentively inquire how the church in general is faring throughout the entire world. If you are informed that she is oppressed in certain places, that errors are surfacing and beginning to overwhelm her, that love is growing cold, that a worldly attitude is beginning to manifest itself, and that religious weeds are beginning to obscure the appearance of the church, then grieve over this and grieve "for the affliction of Joseph" (Amos 6:6). This is what Nehemiah did in chapter 1 and in chapter 2:3: "Why should not my countenance be sad, when the city (Jerusalem, the city of God), lieth waste?" From Lamentations it can be observed how deeply Jeremiah -- and with him all the lovers of Zion -- grieved over the oppression of the church. How do both he and the church lament there! "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of His fierce anger" (Lamentations 1:12).

Furthermore, if you hear that the Lord here and there causes His church to lift up her head again, and visits His people with blessings, rejoice in this and thank the Lord for it. The church did this formerly: "When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream. Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then said they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them" (Psalms 126:1-2); "O Lord, I will praise Thee: though Thou wast angry with me, Thine anger is turned away, and Thou comfortedst me" (Isaiah 12:1); "O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of His praise to be heard ... we went through fire and through water: but Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place" (Psalms 66:12).

Fourthly, pray and work for this kingdom. Even though it is not in man's power to extend, preserve, and sanctify this kingdom, this being God's doing, it is nevertheless His will that man, out of love, be motivated to promote its well-being, and to call upon God to that end: "Spare Thy people, O Lord, and give not Thine heritage to reproach" (Joel 2:17); "O send out Thy light and Thy truth" (Psalms 43:3); "Do good in Thy good pleasure unto Zion" (Psalms 51:18). The Duty of the Upright

He who prays in his heart, will and must actively promote the well-being of the church and strive to be a means in God's hand -- each in his place and according to his abilities.

(1) Ministers (the builders), in the demonstration of the Spirit and power, must preach the gospel from heart to heart, clearly and distinctly applying it individually to the ungodly, the godly, the weak, and the strong. They must convict, threaten, rebuke, comfort, and speak according to everyone's condition, doing so publicly as well as in the homes. "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine" (2 Timothy 4:2); "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee" (1 Timothy 4:16).

(2) Elders must not only pray, "Thy kingdom come," but out of love for this cause must actively engage themselves, give heed to how the congregation functions, rebuke those who are disorderly, instruct the ignorant, and visit the sick. Furthermore, all that is a minister's duty in the private realm, is also their duty. Likewise the deacons must labor in their sphere.

(3) All individual members must not only continually persevere in praying for the well-being of the church, but also be active in their individual positions. It must be their objective to render the church glorious, separating themselves from all who are outside of her in order that the distinction be all the more visible. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord" (2 Corinthians 6:17). Everyone must endeavor to be an example to others. That which was Timothy's duty is applicable to every member of the church: "Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity" (1 Timothy 4:12). Maintain mutual peace (except if the truth and godliness be at stake), and "seek peace, and pursue it" (Psalms 34:14). Manifest a loving heart toward those who are within and without -- to the one with the love of delight and toward the other with a compassionate love: "And (add) to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity" (2 Peter 1:7). Be your brother's keeper by instructing, exhorting, and comforting everyone -- each according to his own circumstances -- so that no one may backslide, but that all would unitedly go forward from strength to strength. "... warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men" (1 Thessalonians 5:14). How the church would radiate the beauties of holiness and render Christ honor if everyone were to behave himself in this fashion!

Even though the work inherently is sufficiently rewarding, doing something for God and His church being the most glorious and sweetest task, let the following reasons also stir you up:

(1) God is extraordinarily pleased with this. "Them that honour me I will honour" (1 Samuel 2:30).

(2) The Lord will preserve such in the day of evil: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble" (Psalms 41:1); "Set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof" (Ezekiel 9:4).

(3) Such will experience that they themselves will greatly increase in gifts and graces: "Every branch in Me ... beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit" (John 15:2); "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance" (Matthew 13:12).

(4) Such a congregation will be richly blessed, "for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore" (Psalms 133:3).

(5) The Lord will abundantly reward such faithful ones. "Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on Mine altar for nought" (Malachi 1:10); "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing" (Matthew 24:46). Oh, how sweet it will be to be able to say, "Behold, here am I and the children which the Lord has given me." To them the Lord shall say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matthew 25:21). Happy is that people that is in such a case!

076. Chapter 71: The Third Petition: Thy Will Be Done on Earth as it Is in Heaven

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-ONE ----- The Third Petition: Thy Will Be Done on Earth as it Is in Heaven The eternal and only blessed God, out of sovereign goodness, has created heaven and earth and all their hosts. He preserves them in their essence and motions by His omnipotent, omniscient (as far as each creature is concerned), efficacious, and all-encompassing influence. "Who ... upholding all things by the word of His power" (Hebrews 1:3); "By Him all things consist" (Colossians 1:17). Furthermore, He is also the lawgiver of His rational creatures -- men: "For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our lawgiver" (Isaiah 33:22).

Among all creatures upon earth, only man knows God as Creator, preserver, ruler, and lawgiver. When man was still in the state of rectitude, he joyously acknowledged the majesty, supremacy, and other perfections of the Lord. He beheld these perfections by reason of the immediate revelation of God to the soul, as well as by observing the creatures and God's operations in them. He was conscious of his dependency upon His Maker, submitted himself to Him as lawgiver, and with a joyful willingness did everything the Lord required from him. He knew of no other will but the Lord's will, for His law was imprinted in his nature -- not only as a rule, but it was natural to him, he being a law unto himself.

However, after the fall everything in man has been reversed and corrupted. Even though he may be conscious and knowledgeable of his obligations toward God, he nevertheless separates himself from God, rejects the law of his Lord, lives according to his own rule, allows himself to be guided by his lusts, and declares himself to be his own master. By his very conduct he declares: "Who is the Lord, that I should obey His voice ... I know not the Lord" (Exodus 5:2); "Who is Lord over us" (Psalms 12:4). When God converts a person, however, his own will is most burdensome and grievous to himself. He hates it, strives against it, and would extract it by its very root if he were able to. He loves the will of God, and to do this will would be all his desire and delight. Yes, since he loves God, it is his desire that not only he, but that all men would acknowledge, honor, and fear God in His majesty and sovereign rule, and be obedient to Him. Since he knows that both he and all other men are unworthy, impotent, and incapable of this, and that such obedience is a gracious gift of God, he therefore avails himself of prayer and prays in humility, "Thy will be done," doing so in accordance with what the Lord Jesus has prescribed in the third petition. This petition consists of two parts. First, there is the matter requested: "Thy will be done." Secondly, there is the manner in which this will is to be done: "On earth as it is in heaven." The Subject of this Petition: The Revealed Will of God

Relative to the matter requested, there Isaiah 1:1-31) the subject: Thy will; and 2) the activity requested: be done. The address "Our Father," etc. is applicable to all petitions. The supplicant here maintains his childlike disposition and makes use of a childlike boldness to make his desire known to God as being His Father in Christ, and requesting its fulfillment. He does this, taking the lowest place, in deepest humility, and with the deepest reverence for the eminence and awe-inspiring nature of the divine majesty. While being in such a frame, the suppliant will perceive at once that his request will not attribute anything to the Lord Himself. Rather, he perceives it to be a gracious gift to man that he is permitted to behold and delight in the majesty of his God and His worthiness to be obeyed; that he is privileged to submit to Him and with joyful willingness may do that which is pleasing to Him, thus executing His will and commandments with zeal and steadfastness. He therefore requests this in such a heartfelt manner. In regard to man, his will is a faculty of the soul which enables him to love or to hate, to be either pleased or displeased, to choose or reject -- all this in accordance with the manner in which the intellect views or judges a given matter as being desirable or undesirable. However, this is not true of the will of God. We puny human beings speak of it in human terms and are to understand it in a divine sense. We are acquainted with the matter as such, but for the "how" of this truth we must close our eyes; it is incomprehensible. We know that the will of God is the willing God Himself, and this is therefore not the matter to which our petition relates here. When we speak here of the will of God, we perceive this will as it relates to the creature. As such, it signifies that which pleases God -- God's good pleasure: "... according to the good pleasure of His will" (Ephesians 1:5). It can be that God Himself executes this: "But our God is in the heavens: He hath done whatsoever He hath pleased" (Psalms 115:3), or that He requires this to be done by man: "... doing the will of God from the heart" (Ephesians 6:6).

God wills the execution of those things which He has purposed in His eternal counsel and which He has not made known to man in advance. This is denominated the will of His decree, or His secret will. We read of this will in the following passages: "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all My pleasure" (Isaiah 46:10); "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God" (Deuteronomy 29:29). Even though this is not the actual subject of this petition, man is nevertheless involved with it.

Rather, the actual reference here is to those things which God has revealed to us, and not solely to those matters in which God finds pleasure, such as are recorded in the following passages: "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification" (1 Thessalonians 4:3); "In these things I delight, saith the Lord" (Jeremiah 9:24). It particularly relates to the activity of men, however, which they engage in, due to it being the will of God: "Lo, I come ... to do Thy will" (Hebrews 10:7); "... doing the will of God" (Ephesians 6:6). This will is denominated: the revealed will of God, or the will of His command. "Those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law" (Deuteronomy 29:29). This revealed will pertains to matters which God reveals in advance, but as yet have to come to pass. Such is true of the prophecies and the Revelation of John. Or else it refers to God's commands, the moral law, and thus to that which God requires from man. "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly" (Micah 6:8); "... but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 7:21). So much for the subject of this petition.

It is this will concerning which the suppliant prays that it "be done," that is, that it be performed. Here the suppliant does not primarily and foremost focus upon man and his happiness and felicity in respect to holiness -- as consisting in the harmony of his intellect, will, words, and deeds with the revealed will of God. Rather, the suppliant is moved by the glorification of God in His majesty. This is realized when man submits himself to God, and when he lives according to God's will. He is moved to pray for this by his desire that God be acknowledged by men as He is, and as He manifests Himself in the works of nature and grace. For man by nature does not perceive this, does not exalt God above all, nor does he glorify Him; he is furthermore not able to do this. He therefore prays that God would convert men, draw them out of darkness into His marvelous light, and translate them into the kingdom of His Son, so that they will be rendered capable of doing His will and be desirous to do it in very deed.

God creates His secret will, the will of His decree, irresistibly. This is thus not the matter we petition to be done. "For the Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? and His hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back" (Isaiah 14:27). This sovereignty of the Lord the supplicant acknowledges, and he exalts and honors Him as such. Nebuchadnezzar did so: "He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, What doest Thou" (Daniel 4:35). Even though we are not praying that this will be done, we nevertheless acknowledge this will, acquiesce in it, and fully submit to it, while confessing: "Be it with me according to the Lord's good pleasure; let Him do with me as pleases Him; I do not wish the Lord's sovereign rule over me to be restricted by whether or not this pleases me. I am but clay, and let Him make, break, or shape me according to His good pleasure. =For He performeth the thing that is appointed for me: ... and what His soul desireth, even that He doeth' (Job 23:14; Job 23:13). Let Him do this and let Him be sovereign in doing so!" The revealed will of God -- that is, the will of His command, the manner in which we are to conduct ourselves in all respects and under all circumstances -- is the subject of our prayer. This does not pertain to the will of His command as it relates to God Himself, but as it relates to man. Thus, the petition is that man would do that which God wishes to command, doing so for the very reason that God commands it and is pleased with man for doing so -- for we observe daily that man does not do what God commands. Yes, he prays this due to being acquainted with man's wickedness, his own impotence, as well as with the fact that no one will, or is able to, obey God's commandment (and thus acknowledge God's majesty and rule) except God illuminates the understanding, changes the heart, and causes us to walk according to His institutions and to keep and observe His judgments. The Lord promises to do this in Ezekiel 36:26-27, as well as in Jeremiah 31:33 : "I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts." Therefore the supplicant prays that God would manifest His omnipotence and goodness by granting the supplicant and others such a heart to know, love, fear, and obey Him in order that man would thereby show that God is the sole Lord, ruler, and lawgiver, who by His very nature obligates all creatures to obedience. David exemplifies this for us when he prays, "Teach me Thy statutes" (Psalms 119:36); "Make me to understand the way of Thy precepts" (Psalms 119:36); "Incline my heart unto Thy testimonies" (Psalms 119:36); "Make me to go in the path of Thy commandments" (Psalms 119:35).

We are to emulate him in this, and thereby demonstrate our desire for the glorification of God's Name by the doing of His will, acknowledging our impotence due to the foolishness and wickedness of our heart. Moreover, we must thereby acknowledge that God is good in being willing to give this, has the ability to give it, and is faithful to fulfil His promises to the supplicant. So much for the first portion -- that is, the matter requested. The Manner in Which God's Will is to Be Done The second part of the petition relates to the manner in which we are to be willing to do God's will: "On earth as it is in heaven." It is neither contrary to the text, nor to the matter itself to acknowledge here a contrast between heaven and earth, or rather, a oneness of heaven and earth. Thus the petition is: "Thy will not only be done in heaven as the angels and the souls of the just made perfect glorify Thee there by doing Thy will, but let also Thy will be done by men upon earth. May Thy Name thus be glorified in heaven as well as upon earth, and upon earth as well as in heaven. The devil and the reprobate upon earth are not deemed worthy by Thee of this, as they neither desire this nor will ever do so. However, Thou hast formed a people for Thyself in order that they would show forth Thy praise. Therefore, let Thy elect do so both in heaven -- which they do and about which Thy children upon earth rejoice -- and upon earth in Thy church, which is so imperfect and in order to do so is in need of a greater measure of grace and of the Spirit. Illuminate and sanctify them more and more in order that they may be equipped to do Thy will, and thus glorify Thy Name and that thus Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." From this perspective all the elect are viewed as one congregation who all join together in glorifying God by doing His good pleasure. Observe the unity of the residents of heaven and the congregation upon earth: "But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant" (Hebrews 12:22-24). They are one people who rejoice in each other's activity; that is, in their mutual glorification of God.

However, the comparison between heaven and earth can also be understood as referring to the manner in which the will of God is to be done -- namely, that men upon earth do the will of God as heartily, eagerly, earnestly, joyously, and continually as the angels and the spirits of the just made perfect in heaven. It is not suggested here that it is done as perfectly. A believer indeed strongly desires this, strives for this, and will not rest until his obedience will be perfect. However, he does not desire to limit the Holy One of Israel. It is a gracious gift to be privileged and be able to do the will of God, and one is therefore grateful for the smallest measure of this, even though he longs for more. He does not dare to put restrictions on the measure, however, knowing that God will not make His children perfect here. Rather, it is His will to lead His children to perfection and felicity by faith in the Mediator who is given unto daily justification and sanctification. Therefore, this is not prayed in the absolute sense of the word and with the designation that perfection be attained in the present time. Rather, one joins the citizens of heaven in their endeavor and is desirous to emulate them in their zeal, desire, and love -- praying therefore that he may have both grace and the Spirit to that end.

(1) The residents of heaven do the will of God with an unfathomable willingness. "Bless the Lord, ye His angels, that excel in strength, that do His commandments, hearkening unto the voice of His word" (Psalms 103:20). This is also the desire of true worshipers, and they endeavor to be thus engaged. "Thy people shall be willing in the day of Thy power" (Psalms 110:3).

(2) In heaven the most sacred reverence and deepest humility is manifested in the presence of the Lord. The angels cover their faces when they declare the holiness and glory of God (Isaiah 6:2). The twenty-four elders cast their crowns before the throne and fall down before Him who sat upon the throne (Revelation 4:10). Likewise every believer desires to do the will of God in a very meek and humble disposition. God wills that it be so: "What doth the Lord require of thee, but ... to walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6:8). Such was David's practice: "In Thy fear will I worship toward Thy holy temple" (Psalms 5:7).

(3) The residents of heaven do God's will diligently and zealously: "Who maketh His angels spirits; His ministers a flaming fire" (Psalms 104:4). The Lord also wills that His children upon earth do His will zealously: "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord" (Romans 12:11).

(4) In heaven there is nothing but joy. All that they do they do with an inexpressible joy. God wills that also upon earth His children likewise do His will with joy. "Serve the Lord with gladness" (Psalms 100:2). This is also their desire: "It is joy to the just to do judgment" (Proverbs 21:15).

(5) In heaven they never become weary, but they are always and steadfastly doing God's will: "Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night" (Revelation 7:15). Likewise, God wills that His people upon earth also be steadfast in the doing of His will. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" (1 Corinthians 15:58). The petition therefore is that we may do the will of God as willingly, humbly, diligently, zealously, joyously, and steadfastly as the residents of heaven do, even though we shall not attain their perfection until we shall join them in glory. From the nature of this petition, as declared above, everyone will be able to be convinced whether or not he prays this petition aright. The Vain Recitation of This Petition Many recite this petition daily; however, it is nothing more than a recital and thus not a prayer.

(1) This is true for all who are not acquainted with the Lord's majesty and worthiness to be obeyed, whereby all men -- and particularly each of you individually -- are obligated to submit to His will. They neither acknowledge nor love this will with inner approbation. They neither submit themselves to the Lord, offer their services to Him, nor willingly do His will, so that in all this they might glorify His Name, acknowledge Him as the only God, and exalt, magnify, and praise Him. You who are convinced that such is your disposition, what business do you have to pray and to say to God, "Thy will be done"? For you are neither sincere in this, nor desire this, nor are desirous to do so. It is therefore no more than a rattling off of this petition in the presence of the majestic, omniscient, and holy God. How do you dare! Do you not fear to be cast into hell with one blow?

(2) This is true for you who set God aside, let Him be for what He is, remove yourself far from Him, and live according to your own will, "fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind" (Ephesians 2:3); "... that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof" (Romans 6:12); "... serving divers lusts and pleasures" (Titus 3:3). You are a person who allows your own will to be the law and motive for your doings, declaring, "I will do this and I will not do that; period! Who has any say over me, and of whom do I need counsel? To whom do I need to give an account of my doings? It pleases me to conduct myself in this manner." No matter what God commands, you will not do it. If God forbids something, you refuse to desist, for your will must be done. Nevertheless you rattle off before God, "Thy will be done."

(3) Some are not even satisfied with doing their own will. Rather, they insist that all men and beasts -- and if they dared to say it, also God -- would stand ready to do their will. Any person who does not fulfil their wishes and does not behave according to their will, can expect to be penalized by them in as cruel a manner as possible. And if they were capable, they would cause everyone to do their will. They do whatever they are capable of, however, by showing aversion, hatred, wrath, vengefulness, and by verbal abuse and the infliction of injury. Even though they insist that others do their will, they nevertheless say to God, "Thy will be done." Attentively take note of these convicting remarks.

First, you who are such, and in such a frame pray, "Thy will be done" (which however is no prayer), ought indeed to be inwardly convinced that you are mocking with God. How do you dare to rattle something off before the most eminent and awe-inspiring Majesty, saying something to Him which you do not mean and will not do, whereas you intend, and actually do the very opposite! If you dare to proceed with mocking God, you will experience that "God is not mocked" (Galatians 6:7). Surely, God will mock with you when He will cast you away from Himself. "I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh" (Proverbs 1:26); "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination" (Proverbs 28:9).

Secondly, you nevertheless wish to be known as a Christian and would be offended if people called you a heathen or an atheist -- which those being referred to above truly are. Be assured that you are neither a partaker of Christ, nor of the benefits of the covenant of grace, for "they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts" (Galatians 5:24). Those who are Christ's have yet remaining lusts which surface daily. However, these lusts are subdued, controlled, and opposed in order that they may be rooted out. Such persons hate their own will and grieve when it manifests itself. On the contrary, it is your pleasure, delight, and your very activity to do your will. You are therefore without Christ, without God, and without hope. Will you then yet proceed in this way with delight?

Thirdly, you who live, as has been said, according to your own will, and then still say, "Thy will be done," are not only mocking with God and are without Christ and without hope, but eternal condemnation hangs above your head; eternal damnation will be your end. Hear what God says concerning you and to you: "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die" (Romans 8:13) -- not only temporal death which all men have in common, but also eternal death, that is, damnation. "Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things" (Php 3:19). And do you ask what eternal damnation is? Consider 2 Thessalonians 1:8-9, where we read, "In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." The apostle speaks likewise to you: "But unto them that ... do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish" (Romans 2:8-9). Consider also other texts in which eternal damnation is described. Question your own conscience and give heed if it will not cause you to perceive all this in some measure so that you may be alarmed by it. Therefore, do not go on in this way; either desist from praying, or pray this petition reverently in the presence of God, earnestly desiring and humbly requesting the same. The Godly Rebuked and Exhorted The godly do indeed have light, life, and truth within themselves. It is all still so feeble, however, and the residual corruption of nature still has so much strength. They have to strive against the lusts of the flesh which war against the soul. Even though their own will does not have dominion over them, it nevertheless frequently manifests itself, and readily meddles with all things. Frequently they are also not conscious of their own will, do not detect it quickly enough, and do not strive against it sufficiently. Too often they are too irreverent and careless when they pray, "Thy will be done," for the perfect intention to turn from and strive against their own will is not present in an express and lively sense. They must therefore humble themselves about their deficient prayers, seek forgiveness in the blood of Christ, pray for strength to oppose their own will, and henceforth be more earnest in denouncing their own will. With a sincere intent they must strive against their own will and come to God, saying, "Thy will be done."

Therefore renounce your own will; that is, treat it as a stranger whom you do not know. Do not consult it, esteem it as your enemy, hate it, reject it, thrust it away from you, and do not heed it -- however delightful and flattering it may be -- for everything would be defiled if your will would but find residence in your smallest finger. Therefore, renounce your own will.

For, first of all, what are you -- you, who are but a worm and an insignificant, vain, sinful, and hateful monstrosity, that you should have a will which is contrary to the will of God, who is your Lord, lawgiver, and Judge? Who are you that your own will would be to you as a lord, law, and rule -- yes, that you insist upon others also conforming to your will? Something more unbecoming, despicable, and contemptible is not imaginable. Abhor yourself, be ashamed, and hide yourself so that neither God, angels, nor men will see you. Do you dare to maintain your own will in opposition to the holy will of the sovereign God? Shame on you! Hasten to thrust out and mortify your will, for this is not becoming to one who is but an ant and a monstrosity; it is intolerable. I cannot find the words to give expression to the hatefulness and intolerable nature of all this. Hasten to thrust your own will from you as far as possible.

Secondly, what is it that your own will desires? Does it desire something which is beautiful, glorious, honest, and beneficial? No, but it desires that which is impure, the lust of the eyes, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life. It desires to be honored by a worm -- yes, by one who is bound for hell -- and thus you desire to be loved by those who are hateful. Your desires relate to a splendid piece of real estate, that which is vanity, things which perish, things which pollute the soul, and things which at best are of no benefit. They are things which are prohibited by God, and will lead soul and body to hell. Will these things be more glorious and delightful to you than God, His will, and the things in which God delights? Shall your will be in direct opposition to the will of God? If God says, "I hate these things, and you will neither desire, seek, nor focus upon them," will you then say, "I wish to covet, seek, and have them"? Will that which is inferior prevail over that which is superior; that which is defiled over that which is holy; and that which is harmful over that which is beneficial? Therefore, renounce your own will if you wish to pray, "Thy will be done."

Thirdly, believing supplicants, you have certainly not received the spirit of this world, but the Spirit which is from God. Doesn't this Spirit compel you to renounce the world and to desire and seek after that which is divine? You are indeed a partaker of the heavenly calling, and by this you have been drawn out of this present evil world. Would you wish to return to it again and reinstate the earthly will which you have renounced as being lord over you? That precious gospel by which you have been called teaches us that we should renounce ungodliness and the lusts of this world. How then, being subject to the light of the gospel, could you follow your own sinful, and worldly will? Since you have been born of God and have been made a partaker of the divine nature, then as a child you love God as your Father and have received an obedient heart to do the will of your Father and to delight in the law of God after the inward man. What business do you therefore have with your own sinful will, which is hostile to the will of God? Cause it therefore to be silent, trample it under foot when it asserts itself, strive against it, do not yield to it in the least, cast it out, and oppose it by praying, "Not my, but Thy will be done."

Fourthly, the doing of your own will engenders nothing but sorrow for you. It wounds, defiles, and deforms the soul; it causes sorrow as well as a loss of freedom and peace. God, who is all your light and desire, hides Himself and lets you mourn alone. While standing from afar, you are vulnerable to drifting away further and further by the smallest breeze of lust. Should you then allow yourself to be a safe harbor for your enemy? No, you must expel him and chase him away as you would a thief and a murderer from your home. On the contrary, the renouncing of your own will shall yield much blessing for you as it will give you free access to the Father through Christ. It will engender much peace, result in great personal freedom, and give you boldness to discharge your duty toward others. You will find yourself to be delivered from desires for earthly things and there is thus nothing to lose nor fear. Yes, the Lord will abundantly requite the loss of honor, love, possessions and pleasure with spiritual blessings and occasionally also with temporal blessings -- be it in abundance or as much as is needful or beneficial for you.

Compliance with God's Will During Seasons of Affliction When you pray with your heart, "Thy will be done," then you are acknowledging the Lord's majesty, claim, and authority over you. Then you will acknowledge with delight and joy that He alone is sovereign and is Lord, and you are thus fully submitting yourself to Him and His will. You thereby request that He deal with you in full accordance with His will and pleasure, thus acquiescing in the fact that you will have nothing to say in the matter. You are thereby leaving everything in His hands, since you know you are neither able nor willing to act contrary to Him, knowing that He will deal with you in a fatherly manner and, being reconciled with Him in Christ, all things will work together for good for you.

If the Lord then afflicts you -- as He will most certainly do with all His children, not one excepted -- you are to reflect upon your petition and thus with all quietness subject yourself to the will (this chastising will) of your Father. This is not to imply that you would not be conscious of your cross, for that would be unnatural and an implicit despising of the God who chastises -- which provokes Him to wrath. "Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved" (Jeremiah 5:3). It is also not contrary to submission to the will of God if we desire to be delivered from those oppressing or threatening circumstances. You may indeed pray for deliverance and you may indeed use lawful means to be delivered from it. However, all this must be practiced while embracing the will of God, being much more desirous that God's will be done toward us than that we be delivered from the cross. Rather, you would be opposing the Lord's will if you were fretful. "Neither be weary of his correction" (Proverbs 3:11). Such occurs when you thereby become discouraged, reject your spiritual state, and view all this as proceeding from the avenging justice and wrath of God; when you harbor hard thoughts toward God and entertain doubts about the providence of God: "Thou art become cruel to me: with Thy strong hand Thou opposest Thyself against me" (Job 30:21); "Lest I ... take the name of my God in vain" (Proverbs 30:9); or when you wish for death and, with Judas, entertain thoughts to hang yourself: "So that my soul chooseth strangling, and death rather than my life" (Job 7:15). It occurs if you become envious of the prosperity of the wicked: "For I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning" (Psalms 73:3; Psalms 73:14); and if you begin to doubt as to whether God truly rules all things -- whether this evil proceeds from the Lord, whether He sees those who are destitute, and whether He hears their cry or helps them indeed. To do so is to contend with the Almighty (Job 40:2), and is a hardening of ourselves: "Who hath hardened himself against Him, and hath prospered" (Job 9:4). When such or similar thoughts, dispositions, and inner motions manifest themselves, you oppose the Lord, not being submissive to the will of God. Then you bring a threefold cross upon yourself as well as a chastisement which you will not be able to avoid. You will increasingly be afflicted with grief, and not bearing the cross well will be more grievous than the chastisement itself. The cross will also be made heavier and be of longer duration, for God will prevail: "That Thou mightest be justified in Thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged" (Romans 3:4). You would cause the Lord to withdraw Himself from you: "Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest My soul depart from thee" (Jeremiah 6:8). Have you then gained the upper hand? Therefore, in all quietness submit yourself to the chastising hand of the Lord, and say, "I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against Him" (Micah 7:9). Learn from a king to bring your soul into submission unto the Lord. He said in Psalms 39:9, "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth; because Thou didst it." And should it not behoove you to conduct yourself likewise? First, is not the Lord the sovereign God? May not He do with His own as pleases Him? Do you have a right to demand from Him why His dealings are thus? Would you indeed desire that the Lord be obligated to you and be required to do your will? Certainly not; you rejoice that He is God, is sovereign, and is exalted above all. Why then, as you acknowledge His majesty, would you not willingly submit yourself to Him -- even if it were with tears in your eyes due to the grief you must endure?

Secondly, believers, is not He your reconciled Father in Christ? Does not He act in love -- even if it is due to paternal displeasure with your deeds? "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten" (Revelation 3:19). Should you then render opposition to love and be fretful over the manifestation of love? This is where the problem lies. You think: "If only I knew that God loves me, I would quietly and willingly endure the affliction." It is that which begets your fretfulness. Overcome this and humbly submit yourself to the chastising hand of the Lord and you will better perceive the grace which the Lord has bestowed in you. During temptation you are not able to ascertain your spiritual state by way of the marks of grace. Rather, you must deem this to be a fact, and exercise faith instead. This will bring you closer to God and cause you to look unto Jesus; all that leads to the Lord Jesus, and through Him to God, cannot be counterfeit. Therefore, consider that the cross is a consequence of God's displeasure over your sinful behavior, but you must at the same time esteem it as proceeding from a paternal heart in order to thereby sanctify you and draw you away from sin. With this in mind, submit yourself unto the Lord. "Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits" (Hebrews 12:9).

Thirdly, the chastisement, when you bear it well and embrace the will of God in it, will be greatly beneficial to you. This is God's very objective: "He (chastises) for our profit, that we might be partakers of His holiness. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby" (Hebrews 12:10-11).

Even if you do not perceive the beneficial nature of the chastisement, then do not be surprised by this, for the fruit will come afterwards. Therefore, "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass" (Psalms 37:5), and you will experience what David experienced and say, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn Thy statutes. I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right, and that Thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me. Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept Thy word" (Psalms 119:71; Psalms 119:75; Psalms 119:67). The Holy Obligation to Do God's Will Believing supplicants, it does not suffice to renounce your own will and to be submissive to the Lord's will in affliction. Rather, you who pray, "Thy will be done," must know that it is also your duty to do the will of God by living according to His precepts; for whatever a believer prays, he is also willing to do. Therefore, acknowledge the obligation which is upon you with your whole heart -- not only due to being God's creature, but also in view of His relationship to you as being your Father in Christ. Submit yourself as such to the Lord and say, "I am Thy servant -- yes, I am Thy servant." Offer yourself to the Lord by reason of that relationship and say, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth." Neither do anything carelessly, nor because it seems good to you, but ask the Lord for counsel: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Do not ask this with the desire that the Lord would answer you according to your wishes, but as with a sense of holy indifference that it be as it pleases the Lord, seeking for His will in your every deed. God has revealed His will in His Word and we therefore are neither in need of nor should expect, desire, or request immediate revelations each time. Rather, we must come to the Lord by way of His Word which is a lamp for our feet and a light upon our path. Then shall we not be ashamed when we have respect unto all the Lord's commandments. Do not only pray, but listen with readiness and desire for an answer. Be ready to hear what the Lord will speak to you, desiring that He would not only direct you by His Word as to what His will toward you is, but also that He would enliven your soul and kindle it with love toward His will, and cause you to subscribe to His will with willing obedience and maintain such a disposition in you. Therefore, let compliance with God's revealed will be your only duty, and say with David, "I have chosen the way of truth: Thy judgments have I laid before me. Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart. I have inclined mine heart to perform Thy statutes alway, even unto the end" (Psalms 119:30;Psalms 119:111-112). Do not only resolve to do so with resolute determination, but carry it out and engage yourself with delight. Reverently seek to be pleasing to the Lord in all your deeds. Do not hesitate and neither consult your own will nor consider your own interests, but subscribe to the doing of God's will with a ready mind. Hasten and do not delay to observe the Lord's commandment. Whatever you do in the Lord's service, do it with a zealous spirit and with fervent earnestness, such being your pleasure and delight. God is not pleased when we perceive our service to Him as troublesome and burdensome. Therefore, greatly delight yourself in the Lord's commandments, and let it be a joy to you if you may do something which will be pleasing to the Lord. Conquer all external and internal hindrances and opposition. Persevere courageously in all circumstances and be as the horse of the Lord's majesty in battle, while being "stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 15:58).

Final Exhortation

Therefore, children of God, since you pray, "Thy will be done," and are desirous to do the Lord's will in the place assigned to you, stir up your soul to that end so that you may execute it in a lively manner. For no matter where you turn, you are surrounded by those who cry out to you, "Oh, do the Lord's will."

First, when you focus upon God, you will perceive that He is worthy of this for He is the majestic and exalted One. He is your Maker, and you exist by His powerful influences. If He were to withdraw this but for a moment, you would no longer exist. Apart from His infusion of power you would not be able to see, hear, or move. He who is in such a position and is so dependent upon the exalted, glorious, holy, and omnipotent God -- would such a person not be engaged with his entire soul and all its faculties to do His will? Children of God, the Lord loves you. Motivated by love He has given you His Son to be a Surety and Savior. He has redeemed you, granted you spiritual life, adopted you to be His children, and ordained you for eternal glory. When considering that, should you then not receive wings to embrace, love, and do the will of God with a burning heart, solely because He is the Lord and your Father? The church of old boasted in this: "For the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king" (Isaiah 33:22).

Secondly, when you focus upon the will of God, you will perceive it to be delightful; all that He requires from us is delightful. "And ... that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Romans 12:2). All that God commands is pure and holy. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes" (Psalms 19:7-8). How can someone who knows the Lord refrain from embracing the will of his Lord and from observing His commandments with joy? "It is joy to the just to do judgment" (Proverbs 21:15).

Thirdly, to do the will of God is to glorify God. It is the delight, pleasure, and joy of a child of God that God be known, feared, and glorified, and that none but He be Lord, the Most High, the Holy One, and the lawgiver. This we do by ourselves and with others when we do His will. "Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John 15:8).

Fourthly, our Lord is so good that He will reciprocate to the doer of His will all that he does in His service out of love, with filial fear, and willingly. If we do the Lord's pleasure -- oh wonder -- then He will in turn do our pleasure. "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear Him" (Psalms 145:19). He will reward them richly: "In keeping of them there is great reward" (Psalms 19:11). All restlessness of the soul is the consequence of doing our own will; but in the doing of God's will there is nothing but peace: "Great peace have they which love Thy law: and nothing shall offend them" (Psalms 119:165). Spiritual life is but feeble in believers and it grieves them that they do not make more progress. Therefore, begin to do the Lord's will sincerely, according to your feeble strength -- as a child -- and the Lord will give you increase. "Every branch in Me that beareth ... fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit" (John 15:2). The hiding of God's countenance is most bitter for a child of God; however, His revelation of Himself to him constitutes all his joy. The Lord grants this privilege to all that do His will: "Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness, those that remember Thee in Thy ways" (Isaiah 64:5). Therefore, enter upon this way which leads to salvation. "Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee; in whose heart are the ways of them. They go from strength to strength, every one of them in Zion appeareth before God" (Psalms 84:5; Psalms 84:7).

077. Chapter 72: The Fourth Petition: Give Us This Day Our Daily Bread

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-TWO ----- The Fourth Petition: Give Us This Day Our Daily Bread

There is a Christian proverb as expressed by a pagan: "Orandum est, ut sit mens sana in corpore sano," which means: "One ought to pray that there be a healthy soul in a healthy body." This is in agreement with John's wish expressed to Gaius: "Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth" (3 John 1:2). How delightful is this testimony addressed to Gaius! In general we must now reverse this and say, "I wish that your soul may prosper as your body prospers." For we observe in this that we also are to care for the body, for if we are to hallow God's Name, edify the congregation, and do the will of God, we are in need of a soul and a body which are both in health. If the one is not healthy, the other will be hindered and the entire man cannot function properly. The Relationship Between Soul and Body The soul influences the body. A healthy soul benefits the body, whereas a troubled soul has an ill effect upon the body. "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine: but a broken spirit drieth the bones" (Proverbs 17:22). The body also influences the soul and is irritated by ill health. "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof" (Romans 6:12). This is also evident in the following passage: "But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members" (Romans 7:23). The apocryphal book Wisdom has a splendid proverb in chapter 9:15: "For the corruptible body weighs down the soul, and the earthly tabernacle weigheth down the mind that nurseth upon many things." Therefore, we must take care that both soul and body are brought and kept in good health in order to be fit for the service of the Lord. "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Corinthians 6:20). If the health of both is to be maintained, they are in need of nourishment. The soul, being an immortal spirit, has no need of anything for the maintenance of its existence except the preserving influence of God. However, for its spiritual wellbeing it is in need of spiritual food in this life -- which is the Word of God applied by faith. The Word of God is the incorruptible seed of her regeneration (1 Peter 1:23). The Word of God is her nourishment, resulting in the growth of her spiritual life. "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby" (1 Peter 2:2). The body is also in need of food. It has its origin in the earth and its nourishment proceeds from the earth, whereby both its essence and motions are maintained. Unconverted men, who have nothing in view but earthly things, are very desirous for that which is earthly, wishing to gratify and entertain themselves therewith. In this respect, they almost resemble the irrational animals, for it is as if they live in order to eat, whereas they ought to eat in order to live. "From men which are Thy hand, O Lord, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly Thou fillest with Thy hid treasure" (Psalms 17:14). A believer does not wish to have earthly things as his portion -- they are beneath him. He does not desire earthly things for their own sake, but as a means unto something else: to maintain the body in a fit condition in order to serve the Lord. He knows that it is only the Lord who causes bread to come forth out of the earth -- that "He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry" (Psalms 147:9); also giving man his food and raiment: "The eyes of all wait upon Thee; and Thou givest them their meat in due season" (Psalms 145:15). He knows that the Lord must also render the food efficacious to be nourishing, and therefore a believer looks unto the Lord and prays, "Feed me with food convenient for me" (Proverbs 30:8). It is this which the Lord Jesus teaches us to pray in the fourth petition. The Position of This Petition

Many have investigated why the Lord Jesus places the petition concerning the maintenance of the body in the fourth place and wills that there be prayer for the welfare of the soul in the fifth and sixth petition. It cannot be easily ascertained who has most closely approximated the reason for this. All agree that this prayer is perfect -- not only in regard to the matters it contains, but also as far as the order is concerned. In applying this to this petition some say that the Lord Jesus adjusts Himself to human weakness, which causes man to be very concerned about food and raiment for the body. He would therefore teach us first to pray for the body, so that we, being freed from anxiety concerning the body, would have that much more freedom to pray for the welfare of the soul. Others insist that the Lord Jesus wishes to guide us step by step from the physical to the spiritual. Others divide the petitions into two divisions, maintaining that the first four petitions are requests for that which is good, whereas the last two petitions are invocations for the averting of evil. They then divide these benefits into heavenly (which precede in the first three petitions) and temporal benefits which, being least important, follow in the fourth petition, upon which the invocations follow. Again, others divide the petitions as follows: In the first three petitions God is the immediate object of the requests; the most eminent petition has the primary position. In the last three petitions, however, man is the immediate object, and that which is least important is listed first; one has to exist before he can be well. However, who shall be able to advance an infallible argument regarding the order which will be satisfactory so as not to be subject to counter-argumentation?

We shall now proceed to consider the petition itself. In this petition we must consider individually 1) the matter which is requested: our daily bread; 2) for whom we pray: us; and 3) the manner in which we request the receipt of bread: not by way of purchase, but as a gift; and not once and for all, but every day. "Give us this day." The Matter Requested The matter requested is bread, which is further defined as our and daily bread. The word "bread" here does not refer to the Lord Jesus Christ, who calls Himself the Bread of Life (John 6:35) because He is the spiritual life of God's children and the maintainer of that life. The reference here is not to the bread of the Lord's Supper as it relates to the body of Christ -- as is the case in 1 Corinthians 10:16. Rather, it refers to the common nourishment for the human body. "... that He may bring forth food out of the earth ... and bread which strengtheneth man's heart" (Psalms 104:14-15). In a general sense it refers to all manner of food and all necessities which are subservient to man's support. Jacob prepared a great meal and invited his brethren "to eat bread: and they did eat bread" (Genesis 31:54). Thus, the Hebrew word lechem signifies bread, that is, all manner of food. "Who giveth food to all flesh" (Psalms 136:25); "I ate no pleasant bread" (Daniel 10:3). Since the maintenance of the body is here requested, the word "bread" is also understood to refer to drink as well as clothing -- all of which the body needs. Jacob expressed this: "If God ... will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on" (Genesis 28:20), and the apostle says, "And having food and raiment let us be therewith content" (1 Timothy 6:8).

All manner of livelihood -- particularly food -- is expressed here by the word "bread," this being the preeminent and most nourishing food. "... bread which strengtheneth man's heart" (Psalms 104:15). It is the most essential food, for without bread one cannot live well; however, it is possible to live without meat or fish, these being referred to as supplementary foods (John 21:5). [Note: The Statenvertaling uses the word "toespijze" here, that is, "supplementary foods." The KJV simply uses the word "meat."] It is the most pleasant of all foods: bread always tastes pleasant when we are hungry; we never tire of it. It is the most common of all foods, for people of all ranks -- high and low -- make use of it. It is the food most used in moderation, for we desire no more of it than we need for the satisfaction of our hunger. The Bread Referred to as Our Bread This bread is designated as our bread. Something is referred to as being ours when we either have need of it for our existence, or if we are the owners of it. By nature we do not own anything before God, since by reason of sin we have lost a right to all that Adam had. The earth is cursed due to sin: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life" (Genesis 3:17). And the sinner is cursed in all that he lays his hands on: "Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store. Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep" (Deuteronomy 28:17-18).

Everything in the heavens -- the sun and moon -- and here below serves the sinner unwillingly and reluctantly, and groans contrary to him (Romans 8:20-22). Nevertheless, it is the Lord's goodness that He grants food and raiment to sinners in whom He has no pleasure -- sometimes more abundantly than to the godly who are not intended to have more of this so that they may know that God is good. However, the bread -- all that the godly enjoy, and all that they pray for -- belongs to them; they have a right to it.

First, they have a right to it through Christ. The Lord Jesus has purchased it with His blood and, they being His favorites, has given it to them. "For all things are yours; ... things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's" (1 Corinthians 3:21-23).

Secondly, they have a right to it from man's perspective, since that which they possess has rightfully become theirs either by way of inheritance, business transactions, or their labor. This is in contrast to unrighteousness, laziness, and wasteful spending which causes one to be reduced to poverty and he must then live from the generosity of others. The apostle confirms this: "... that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread" (2 Thessalonians 3:12). If, however, someone has applied himself and has been thrifty, and yet is unable to make any progress, requiring the support of others, this is not unrighteous. Rather, it is his bread which the Lord has given him -- even though "it is more blessed (more blissful, honest, and delightful) to give than to receive" (Acts 20:35). The ungodly, as far as man is concerned -- even though they have no right to anything in reference to God -- nevertheless, have a right to all that they possess lawfully. When we pray for bread, we are also praying against poverty. "Give me neither poverty nor riches" (Proverbs 30:8). This Bread Referred to as Daily Bread

We pray here for bread -- for our bread, and for daily bread. Since the word "daily," as recorded here in the original text, is nowhere else to be found in the New Testament, there are several sentiments regarding the origin of this word. Yet there is no implicit absurdity in this matter. The exception here is that the papists, by deriving the word from eipi and ousia, translate it as supernatural essence. They understand this to refer to the bread of the mass, and since in their opinion the bread vanishes and changes into Christ, they thus understand it to refer to Christ, who is repeatedly referred to as "bread" in John 6:1-71. Aside from the fact that transubstantiation is nothing but a fabrication, the word does not imply this -- even if it were derived from epi ousia, for the word ousia never signifies essence in the New Testament. Rather, in Luke 15:12-13 (there being no other references) it signifies possessions -- temporal possessions. "Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me ... and there wasted his substance." And even if this had been imported from pagan philosophers and understood to refer to the extra-essential, it would not signify supernatural, spiritual bread -- that is not implied by the word at all. Rather, extra-essential would mean that we are in need of bread outside of our essential existence in order to support and maintain our essential existence. Such is the interpretation of this word by many Reformed.

Others maintain that it is a derivative of the word epeimi, that is, "to follow," "to come in the place of." As a second aorist active participle we have epioon, epiousa, from which is derived epiousios, that is, "following," "that which follows." As such it is understood in Acts 7:26 : ■πιο■σ■ ■μ■ρ■, the following day. In this sense (albeit with a different word) it is used in James 2:15 : "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food." And in Luke 11:3 the phrase day by day is added to this petition. On the basis of this, the above word can correctly be translated as daily, or bread which follows day by day-- for it is the will of God that man would exist by the use of daily nourishment, rather than receiving everything all at once. This concludes the first portion: the matter requested. For Whom this Request Is Made The second portion pertains to the persons for whom we request bodily sustenance: "Give us." The pronoun "us" refers to:

First, the supplicants themselves, for people are most closely involved with themselves. Love must begin with ourselves, for we are to love our neighbor as ourselves. Love must therefore begin in ourselves, but must not end in ourselves; rather it is to extend to our neighbor.

Secondly, we pray for all God's children who, together with us, address God as our Father, and we thus pray for the entire church of God, as if we say: "Thy children -- Thy church is defenseless. They are neither able nor willing to govern their own affairs nor to make ends meet with either legitimate or illegitimate means. Such is the practice of the world which has as its objective to harm Thy children and church as much as possible. Therefore, care Thou for them and provide food and raiment for them, so that they may be able to live, and that the world may see that Thou art their God and Father who protects and cares for them."

Thirdly, their love, and thus also their compassion, goes yet beyond that. The godly pray for all men who have been created in identical fashion as we were, and share the same existence with us. Since they need food and raiment as we do, they pray that the Lord who has granted them life may also preserve their life through nourishment. For believers are of the same nature as their heavenly Father, who "maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matthew 5:45); "The Lord is good to all: and His tender mercies are over all His works" (Psalms 145:9). Herein they rejoice and praise God for it, and they are thus moved to request that which is good for themselves. The Manner of Their Request The third portion relates to the manner in which the godly pray. They neither demand it as if they had a claim to it, nor do they desire to bargain for it. Rather, they request it as a gift: "Out of unmerited goodness, give." They do not even request this for their entire lifetime, but repeatedly ask it for today. When we pray, "Give," then we acknowledge thereby: (1) that we cannot exist in and of ourselves; (2) that we are neither capable of producing nourishment, nor of rendering to food the efficacy to be nourishing; (3) that we have not merited it, but by our sins have made ourselves unworthy of the same; (4) that it is the Lord who renders the earth fruitful, bringing "forth food out of the earth" (Psalms 104:14). It is the Lord who gives to each his portion; He renders food efficacious for nourishment. Neither our care, our labor, nor the food itself will be to our benefit apart from the Lord's blessing. Such is the case when "the Lord...doth take away...the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water," which is what He threatens to do in Isaiah 3:1; that is, when "ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes" (Haggai 1:6). On the contrary, however, when the Lord bestows His blessing then everything prospers: "Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness; and Thy paths drop fatness. The pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn" (Psalms 65:11;Psalms 65:13). Then our food will satisfy us and our raiment will warm us: "...to eat sufficiently, and for durable clothing" (Isaiah 23:18). Thus, as children we are to pray to the Lord as our Father, asking Him that He would give us food to eat and clothing to wear; that He would grant us health to partake of our food; and that He would render our food efficacious unto nourishment, since in all things we are dependent upon the Lord and are to expect all things from Him.

We are to pray that God would give us our bread today. "Today" implies repeated prayer -- as much as we need it. We are in need of bread each day, and each day is today. Thus, we do not pray to receive it once and for all, but rather, that we would receive it each day by renewal. This is not to suggest that we should consume it all each day, for God in one day generally gives a portion for many days. Rather, we acknowledge each day that what we have is from the Lord; that it has been preserved by the Lord and that He has permitted us to keep it; and that also upon this day we are permitted to eat to the satisfaction of our hunger and to the maintenance of our strength. For, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matthew 4:4). If we have nothing in supply, we are to petition God that He would give us on this day as He is pleased and able to give us -- even if we cannot perceive where it will come from. "The eyes of all wait on Thee; and Thou givest them their meat in due season" (Psalms 145:15). Oh, how sweet it is to live out of the hand of God and to have confidence free from any apprehension! The Lessons this Petition Teaches This petition provides us with many essential and beneficial lessons. When we pray for bread we are reminded that we are not to be a gourmand [Note: à Brakel describes a gourmand as someone who is "lekker." His use of this word is archaic as far as modern Dutch is concerned. The use of the word "gourmand" here is appropriate when considering Webster's definition: "One who is excessively fond of eating and drinking."], for then we do not pray in a pleasing manner. The apostle speaks of this in James 4:3 : "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." To be a gourmand does not relate to the ability to taste the distinction between foods, preferring the one over the other; or if, upon being ill, we reflect about what we have an appetite for; or if occasionally we enjoy delicious foods, eat the fat things, drink that which is sweet, and send portions to the poor (Nehemiah 8:11). One is a gourmand:

(1) if, being healthy, he reflects upon that which is delectable, and how it will be prepared in the most delectable manner;

(2) if he has a continual longing for something delectable, for dining engagements, and thinks of exotic spreads in his imagination;

(3) when he is occupied with gourmet foods to such a degree that it appears to be the very essence of enjoyment, and if this is frequently the subject of conversation;

(4) if he pursues such delicacies at any cost, even if he would have to borrow from others and never pay them back;

(5) if he is in a bad humor when he is deprived of something delectable, and if he complains, grumbles, frets, and is angry if food is not properly prepared, and commonly quarrels with the cook;

(6) if he enjoys a delectable meal either at his own or someone else's table, and then overindulges to such an extent that he is not fit for anything else but sleep.

First, you who are a gourmand -- how can you pray for bread if you have had enough bread and your soul abhors it as being lowly and distasteful food, and you only make use of it to render other foods all the more delicious? Bread is the basic food, and all other foods are dainties. You reverse this, however, by making bread a dainty; you do not pray this petition sincerely, but you mock with God by your inattentive and irreverent prattling. And even if in some measure you are conscious of what you are praying for, you are ultimately not interested in bread, but rather in delicacies.

Secondly, you can thus readily convince yourself that you serve your belly more than you serve God. Be ashamed, you who commit idolatry with your abominable idol. The apostle speaks of such: "Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame" (Php 3:19).

Thirdly, due to your fondness for gourmet foods you are depriving your children, so that they would be poor when they become adults. They could have been well-to-do if you had been frugal, and you yourself may come to great poverty, so that you will have to be supported by the deacons. Solomon forewarns you about this: "Be not among winebibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh: for the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty" (Proverbs 23:20-21). He who always wishes to drink that which is sweet and eat that which is delectable will accumulate neither possessions for himself nor treasures for his children. "He that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich" (Proverbs 21:17).

Fourthly, if we are accustomed to a gourmet spread upon our tables, and we begin to lack funds, we shall pursue sinful avenues to continue this. We shall either buy on credit, take out a loan, lie and deceive, at last flirt with bankruptcy, and allow widows and orphans, whom one has robbed, to eat the bread of tears.

Fifthly, gourmands are generally merciless toward the poor. They have abundance upon their tables, but there is nothing left for a poor Lazarus. They must thus look forward to a merciless judgment.

Sixthly, if you remain so rich that you can live as a gourmand until your death -- what then? Will you go to heaven? No, but you will experience what the elegant rich man -- who was also a gourmand -- experienced. After his death he found himself in hell and he was not permitted to have one drop of water for his relief (Luke 16:22 ff). Hear how the Lord threatens you: "Woe to them that are at ease. ... That ... stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive ... therefore will I deliver up the city with all that is therein" (Amos 6:1;Amos 6:4;Amos 6:7-8). Impress the word of the apostle upon your heart: "Weep and howl. ... Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter" (James 5:1;James 5:5).

Diligence Taught in This Petition

We do not only pray for bread, but for our bread. This teaches that we are to be diligent, since we desire to receive it in the way in which it pleases God to give it. It is, however, God's will to give by means of our labor, and we must therefore labor in the station and the calling to which God has appointed us. If one has an adequate supply, he must nevertheless neither be idle nor fatten himself as a swine. Rather, he must be occupied in some measure for the sake of being occupied, to benefit himself and to give other people an opportunity to work, as well as be able to give to the poor all the more abundantly.

First, what else -- as the proverb goes -- is an idle person, but a pillow for the devil? He is the object of the devil's operations who is most successful in leading idle persons to the commission of various sins. An idle and lazy person is a breeding ground for all manner of vain and sinful thoughts, and of the deeds which proceed from them -- yes, he is capable of such deeds as one would otherwise never have imagined.

Secondly, if we pray this and are not desirous to work, we are tempting God. Then we insist that God do miracles for our sake and depart from His normal way of providence. This is a sin which provokes God and is expressly forbidden by Him. "Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God" (Deuteronomy 6:16). We can read in the accounts of the journeys of the children of Israel in the wilderness how Israel fared when they tempted God. This is also recorded in the following passages: "They waited not for His counsel: but lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, and tempted God in the desert. And He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul" (Psalms 106:13-15); "And while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague" (Numbers 11:33). Such are the results of tempting God. This is what those who pray for bread but are not willing to work and do not wish to avail themselves of God's common means must expect.

Thirdly, a sluggard: (1) is an abomination to God; God wanted no part of a useless ass (Exodus 13:13);

(2) is a burden to others and despised by everyone; no one has compassion for him (Proverbs 10:26);

(3) furthermore, wastes away, for he does not know how he will spend his time, is a burden to himself, and is reduced to extreme poverty. "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep: so shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man" (Proverbs 6:9-11); "Drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags" (Proverbs 23:21).

Therefore, he who prays for our bread must be diligent in an honest calling and must use the means to which God obligates him when He promises bread to him. His labor is not the cause, but only the means whereby he lawfully receives what God grants him.

(1) He will then eat his bread in the presence of God and man. "... that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread" (2 Thessalonians 3:12).

(2) When he prays in faith and labors obediently, it will all be blessed -- be it that one has much or little, or that it is lean or fat. "A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked" (Psalms 37:16). He eats it with freedom as being his own; a piece of bread is delicious to him since he receives it from his heavenly Father, it having been purchased by Christ's blood. The curse has been removed, a blessing rests upon it, and the little that he has satisfies and strengthens him. The Lord grants him the blessing for which Moses prayed: "Establish Thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it" (Psalms 90:17). He receives the promise made to the godly: "For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands" (Psalms 128:2). Therefore, Ora et Labora, that is, pray and work. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" (Ecclesiastes 9:10).

Concerning Anxiety for the Future When we pray that God would give us our daily bread from day to day, we are exhorted not to be careful -- that is, we are not to be concerned how we shall fare all the days of our life; whether we shall sufficiently be supplied for our entire life; whether we shall be reduced to poverty and shall suffer want with our children of that which our children and grandchildren will live from. For if our desires and concerns relate to the quantity of bread and to our entire life -- yes, to our descendants, then we can indeed not pray for bread for this day. Therefore, if we are to pray this prayer with a true heart, we must be satisfied with the present and not be concerned about the day of tomorrow. Rather, we should be as children who, when they are hungry, request food from their parents and are not concerned about the future. God's children have all the more reason to live out of the hand of their heavenly Father and to trust Him that He will care for them.

First, apprehension torments man and we thereby bring much grief upon ourselves. Such anxiety saps the vitality of the soul and the body. We shall tremble about the future, be doubtful about the providence of God, or view God as being wrathful, merciless, and unyielding. We then reject our spiritual state, are vulnerable to many foolish and harmful lusts, and lie open for the assaults of the devil.

Secondly, what have you ever gained with all your anxiety? You will indeed have to answer: nothing. Why then do you engage in that which is of no benefit to you and causes you harm instead? "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature" (Matthew 6:27); "It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows" (Psalms 127:2).

Thirdly, to do so is to live in sin continually, for to be anxious is a clear sign that we wish to put our trust in our possessions. If we had as much as we desired, we would not be concerned about the future. Why not? Because you then would have in your pocket what you need to live. Then you do not trust in God but in your possessions. However, whatever you put your trust in is your god, and thus being anxious is nothing but idolatry. Believers, would you then turn away from your God, esteeming and trusting your money more than God? Therefore, be fearful of that abomination which brings many into hell. "But ... idolaters ... shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone" (Revelation 21:8).

Furthermore, fretful anxiety constitutes a continual dishonoring of God. You thereby demonstrate that God is not all-sufficient for you and that something besides God is your portion, delight, and the rock of your heart. This was entirely different with Asaph (Psalms 73:25-26). You give an evil impression of God to others, implying that He neglects and does not care for His children. Would it not be to the dishonor of a rich father if his children were to turn to other persons and were to beg for a piece of bread? Would you thus dishonor God, your heavenly Father? Far be it from you! Therefore, neither be anxious, nor let the unsettledness of your countenance convey that you mistrust God.

Fourthly, anxiety prevents many from being converted. Such occasionally are under conviction and make a resolution: "I shall now arise and also seek God." However, the cares of life again draw them into the world. The cares of life are the thorns which choke the seed. "He also that received seed among the thorns is he that heareth the word; and the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful" (Matthew 13:22). As anxiety keeps many from conversion, it likewise impedes growth in the converted. How much progress many would make; how mature they would become had anxiety not prevented them! Therefore, you who are godly, elevate yourself above this world; it is too insignificant, polluted, and harmful than that you should concern yourself with and yearn for it.

Fifthly, time here is short, and there is nothing which is able to satisfy you anyway. Why are you then so anxious about that which is insignificant? Truly, you are still too much involved with the world and not enough with heaven.

Sixthly, is not God your portion? Is He not your Father? Did He not grant you His own Son? "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things" (Romans 8:32).

Therefore, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on" (Matthew 6:25); "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you" (1 Peter 5:7); "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass" (Psalms 37:5); "Be content with such things as ye have" (Hebrews 13:5). You will thus be able to pray with a childlike heart, "Give us this day our daily bread."

Satisfaction with the Portion the Lord Allots us When we pray, "Give us ...," then we do not only pray for ourselves, but also for others. We may therefore not be envious when another person receives something -- yes, more than we do. For:

(1) We have asked for this on his behalf if we have prayed aright. And if we become envious when he receives something or much upon our prayer, then this is indicative that we either regret that we have prayed, or that we did not mean it and thus have mocked with God.

(2) Who are you to be envious of someone else's fortune? Do you not know that you are neither worthy of a piece of bread in your mouth nor a thread upon your skin; that it is only due to the longsuffering of God that you are not already in hell; that it is a great mercy of God that you are permitted to be among people and that you might be a servant or a slave of the least of them? And should you then be envious? Or do you think that you are so important that you are worthy of it? Be silent!

(3) Is it not the Lord who gives unto others? God is sovereign, is He not, and may He not do with His own as pleases Him? Or must He ask you how much He should give to such and such a person? Is your eye evil because the Lord is good? Be therefore ashamed before God and man that an envious thought arises within you. This Petition Exhorts to Generosity

You who pray, "Give us ...," it behooves you and you are obligated by this petition toward generosity. For when many make a request together and it is given to one, it must be divided among all on whose behalf it was requested. When many poor outcasts are begging at a given door, and if one receives a gift and keeps it for himself, he deprives the others of what also had been given for them. However, you do not pray, "Give me ...," but "Give us ..."; thus, others must share in this. This does not mean that as soon as you receive something, you must immediately begin to hand it out, for you have received it as a steward to disperse it upon command. If therefore there are those in need who request something from you, or if it comes to your knowledge that there is someone in need elsewhere, then this must stir up your compassion and your hand must be ready to give. You must, however, do it in such a manner that you may continue to be able to give and that the welfare of your family and children is preserved. Extraordinary seasons and occasions also demand something extraordinary. Therefore, see to it that in truth and with liberty you may pray, "Give us ..."

First, take as an example the generosity of the man Job, and of a woman named Dorcas. Job's generosity is described as follows: "I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor" (Job 29:15-16); "If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof; if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering," etc. (Job 31:16-17; Job 31:19). Of Dorcas it is written, "Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. ... All the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made" (Acts 9:36; Acts 9:39). Happy is he or she who follows such examples!

Secondly, the following passages convey how highly generosity is recommended: "If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates. ... Thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, " (Deuteronomy 15:7-8). To obey in this is pleasing to God. "But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (Hebrews 13:16). Indeed, impress upon your heart the great word of the apostle: "God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Corinthians 9:7); "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" (2 Corinthians 9:6). Add to these the following: "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will He pay him again" (Proverbs 19:17). If you then desire to pray in truth and to be heard, be joyously generous. If you do not do so, then you are an unrighteous possessor of that which you have, and you must see to it that a curse will not rest upon it.

God Acknowledged as the Giver

Since you pray to God for daily bread, it is thus essential for you to believe that all good gifts and the blessing upon that which you have, come from God, and that you acknowledge God as being the origin of all good things. Such He truly is: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights" (James 1:17). All that exists is God's; whatever anyone possesses he has received from God. "I gave her corn, and wine, and oil, and multiplied her silver and gold, ... my corn ... my wine ... my wool and my flax" (Hosea 2:8-9). Man is but a naked entity and all that he has does not proceed from himself. All that he has proceeds from another source -- he has received it from God alone. "What hast thou that thou didst not receive" (1 Corinthians 4:7). The Lord causes food to come forth from the earth; the Lord grants to each his peculiar portion; the Lord renders the food efficacious unto nourishment; the Lord maintains man and beast; He even provides the cattle with their food and the young ravens when they cry to Him. Since all is the Lord's and He communicates to everyone that which is His, one must invoke the Lord for all that we stand in need of and acknowledge Him as the origin and giver. We must not do so, however, with the disposition of a creature, but as a reconciled child in Christ and with a childlike heart. If we receive something, we must receive it as out of the hand of God as being our Father. We must be satisfied with that which the Father gives -- be it much or little, it will be enough. Therefore we ought not to waste it, but with a joyful heart make use of it. We must then always lift up our heart on high to the Giver, doing so with a grateful heart and with a mouth filled with the praises of the Lord. "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem; praise thy God, O Zion. For He hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; He hath blessed thy children within thee. He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the finest of the wheat" (Psalms 147:12-14). God requires and expects this, and is pleased with it. "When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which He hath given thee. Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God" (Deuteronomy 8:10-11).

1 The Statenvertaling uses the word "toespijze" here, that is, "supplementary foods." The KJV simply uses the word "meat."

2 à Brakel describes a gourmand as someone who is "lekker." His use of this word is archaic as far as modern Dutch is concerned. The use of the word "gourmand" here is appropriate when considering Webster's definition: "One who is excessively fond of eating and drinking."

078. Chapter 73: The Fifth Petition: Forgive us our Debts as we Forgive our Debtors

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-THREE ----- The Fifth Petition: Forgive us our Debts as we Forgive our Debtors

Man is in need of bread in order that he may live. Therefore the Lord has taught us to pray for bread. Bread is not the most essential matter, however, for man has a rational, immortal soul which innately knows God and cannot be satisfied except with God Himself. A natural man is indeed satisfied with earthly things -- if he is able to acquire them. This is recorded in Psalms 17:14, where we read: "Men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly Thou fillest with Thy hid treasure." And God will not permit them to depart from this life without having done them good: "Nevertheless He left not Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness" (Acts 14:17). That is the extent of God's dealings with them. However, God has laid away something greater for His own. Furthermore, He has also given them a heart which is not satisfied with earthly things, but they desire the Lord and choose Him as their portion. With their whole heart they make the words of Asaph their own: "Whom have I in heaven but Thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee. My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever. But it is good for me to draw near to God" (Psalms 73:25-26; Psalms 73:28). With their entire heart they offer themselves to the service of God; however, at the same time they understand that God does not wish to be served by the ungodly who are His enemies. God says to them: "What hast thou to do to declare My statutes, or that thou shouldest take My covenant in thy mouth" (Psalms 50:16). The godly perceive that sin, which makes a separation between God and man, must be removed in order for God to reveal Himself to them, and for them to approach unto God with boldness and with a peaceful heart. Therefore they are very desirous to be reconciled with God, praying time and again for the forgiveness of sins. This the Lord Jesus teaches us to pray in the fifth petition: "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." This petition consists first of all in a request: "Forgive ...". Secondly, the disposition of the supplicant is added: "As we forgive our debtors." In this petition we are to note the object: "Debts -- our debts," and the requested action toward these debts: "Forgive us." The Object of this Petition: Our Debts

Let us consider the word "debts" (in Luke 11:4 we read "sins"). Sin incurs debt, and in order to know what debt is, we must take note of three matters:

First, man is entirely and in every respect bound to God as Creator. Thus, his being, life, spiritual faculties, and physical strength are from God. This must not be understood as a singular act once performed, man thereafter being his own master as well as self-existent. Rather, he exists and moves by the continual influence and preserving power of God. It is for this reason that man is obligated to exist for God with his entire being -- not only as a matter of gratitude, but on account of an obligation which is more binding than we can imagine. He is also obligated to God by virtue of the covenant of works, established with the human race in Adam, whereby salvation was promised upon condition of obedience -- a covenant to which man has fully committed himself. Thus, there is an obligation upon man to be submissively obedient. He is also bound to God as being his lawgiver, who has power to command, and to whom man is inherently obligated to render obedience (Luke 17:10). Man approves of this obligation, and irrespective of whether he breaks those bonds, there is nevertheless no one who would dare to say, or who will say, that he is not under obligation to God.

Secondly, this binding relationship, however much it may have been approved of, has been broken by man and he still breaks it daily by withdrawing himself from obedience to God and by continually resisting this obligation. The Holy Scriptures refer to this as:

(1) sinning: "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight" (Psalms 51:4);

(2) transgressing against the Lord: "I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against Me" (Isaiah 1:2);

(3) the transgression of the law: "Yea, all Israel have transgressed Thy law" (Daniel 9:11);

(4) the transgression of the covenant: "But they like men have transgressed the covenant" (Hosea 6:7);

(5) the rending asunder of God's laws: "These have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds" (Jeremiah 5:5);

(6) the forsaking of God, His law, and His covenant: "They have forsaken the Lord" (Isaiah 1:4); "... because they have forsaken my law" (Jeremiah 9:13); "They have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God" (Jeremiah 22:9);

(7) being disobedient: "But unto them that ... do not obey the truth" (Romans 2:8). Sin is all the more serious in light of the majesty of God and man's dependence upon Him -- as well as its voluntary and deliberate nature, and its continuance and frequency. Furthermore, the greater the measure of light and the livelier the conscience, the greater the sin will be.

Thirdly, due to man's breach of obligation, he incurs debt; that is, he is worthy of punishment. "Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy" (Hebrews 10:29); "... receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet" (Romans 1:27). Sin begets debt and places us under bondage of eternal condemnation: "... for the judgment was by one to condemnation" (Romans 5:16). Through sin man has come under the curse which is expressed as follows: "Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them" (Deuteronomy 27:26). He is therefore at enmity with God, worthy to be cast away and to endure eternally the unbearable wrath of God. "Neither shall evil dwell with Thee" (Psalms 5:4); "... indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil" (Romans 2:8-9); "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord" (2 Thessalonians 1:9).

Such is the nature of the debt, and this debt is acknowledged by all men. It is acknowledged by the heathen: "Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death" (Romans 1:32). This is acknowledged by all who live under the ministry of the Word: "And all the people shall say, Amen" (Deuteronomy 27:20). Believers acquiesce in this: "... that Thou mightest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest" (Psalms 51:4); "I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against Him" (Micah 7:9). Sincere prayer for the forgiveness of sins necessitates that a person know his guilt, be grievously sensible of it, acknowledge himself to be worthy of this punishment, and justify God in executing judgment upon him. The Focus of This Petition: The Forgiveness of Guilt

We pray for the forgiveness of our debts (or guilt). [Note: The literal translation of the Dutch rendering of this petition is: "Forgive us our guilt."] No one has imposed this debt upon us. God did not do so for He created man holy and perfect. The devil did not do so -- he may suggest sin, but he can neither compel nor cause us to sin. The world has not done so. It may threaten and entice, but it is beyond its reach to incline one's will. Rather, it is man himself who is the cause of his deeds. "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin" (James 1:14-15); "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee" (Jeremiah 2:19); "Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee; this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter" (Jeremiah 4:18); "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins" (Lamentations 3:39). This suppliant does not only acknowledge that he has sinned, but also that he is a debtor -- having an exceedingly great debt. He furthermore acknowledges that he is thereby marred, abominable, hateful, intolerable, and condemnable. Being thus grievously affected by his sins, he humbles himself before the Lord and supplicates His Judge to be gracious unto him -- yes, he approaches to his Father with shame, for he can neither leave his Father alone nor can he endure the alienation and displeasure of his heavenly Father. He would rather be chastised and by renewal be reconciled with his Father than to continue unreconciled without chastisement. He therefore approaches with sorrow and perplexity, and prays, "Forgive me my sins and take away my debt from me." The Requested Action: Forgiveness The petition relative to these debts is: "Forgive; forgive us ..." Forgiveness comes about either by way of annulment or satisfaction. A father forgives his child either by not punishing him, or, if he punishes him, the forgiveness is still needful in order that the child may be at peace. Such is the practice among men. However, God cannot forgive debt except that punishment has been meted out for it. This is to be taken to heart, for many people, not knowing this, imagine forgiveness when there is no forgiveness. Since they do not seek forgiveness in the right manner, they continue to be deprived of it and will become subject to everlasting judgment. They imagine that God functions as man does. They deem a man to be good and merciful if he forgives someone who has wronged him, and who, confessing his guilt, humbles himself deeply and prays for forgiveness. If someone would then not be willing to forgive, such conduct would be esteemed evil in everyone's eyes and he would be despised as a cruel person. They therefore reason as follows: "God is more merciful than man and God is good. He will therefore surely forgive those who ask Him to be gracious." Furthermore, if from henceforth such a person does his best to lead a godly life, he is at peace. It does not matter whether he has spent his life in ungodliness; as long as he prays upon his deathbed, "Oh God, be merciful to me, a poor sinner!" He is forgiving to others who have done him wrong; he regrets his sinful life, and in this frame he dies. Such a person is most certainly deemed to be saved. Poor man! Awake, for this is the way whereby thousands of people go to hell. Do not proceed in this manner; rather, be acquainted with the way whereby God forgives sin. Enter upon this way before it is too late, so that you may yet be saved.

I thus maintain that God neither can nor will permit sin to go unpunished. God punishes sin both temporally and eternally. In order to fully convince you of this, you must note that God is not only Lord and lawgiver, but He is also the Judge of all men. Abraham states, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right" (Genesis 18:25). David acknowledged God as such: "God judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day" (Psalms 7:11).

Every man will come before God in judgment. "For God shall bring every work into judgment" (Ecclesiastes 12:14); "But know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment" (Ecclesiastes 11:9). Not only does every man, upon death, appear before God as Judge, to be either ushered to hell or taken into glory -- for "it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment" (Hebrews 9:27) -- but all men will appear simultaneously before God in the great judgment, where everything will transpire according to righteousness. "Because He hath appointed a day, in the which He will judge the world in righteousness" (Acts 17:31). Enoch -- the seventh from Adam -- knew, acknowledged, and preached this: "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of His saints, to execute judgment upon all ... that are ungodly" (Jude 1:14-15). I the writer, and you who read or hear this read, shall come before that judgment. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad" (2 Corinthians 5:10).

Let us consider this judgment from every perspective. All men will appear there and will be divided into two groups. The one group will be condemned for no other reason but sin. God is the Judge and a righteous Judge. Does not justice consist in the rendering to everyone his just desert, and is not a righteous judge someone who either punishes or acquits in harmony with the condition in which one is found? It is common knowledge that a judge must do right: A guilty person must be declared guilty and an innocent person must be acquitted. Mercy may not move him to acquit the guilty one. As good-natured and compassionate a person a judge may be, he must not allow a murderer to go free. He must condemn him to death since justice requires this. However, is God not more righteous than man? Thus, His righteousness requires that He condemn the sinner. Here goodness is not the issue, but justice. This is confirmed by the expressions God makes concerning Himself: "... and that will by no means clear the guilty" (Exodus 34:7). Tell me: "Why does God condemn those who will be at His left hand? Is He not infinitely merciful? Why then is He not gracious to them?" There must therefore be another reason for bringing about the condemnation of the sinner. What is this? There can be no other reason than the righteousness and veracity of God. Would not the Judge of the whole earth do right? Is God's judgment not according to truth? "But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth" (Romans 2:2). Since sinners are not delivered from hell by the mercy of God, and God is a righteous Judge whose judgment is according to truth and who can by no means clear the guilty, God cannot allow sin to go unpunished, and thus the sinner cannot expect forgiveness by way of annulment.

What counsel is there then for the sinner? Must they all perish? There is no solution with man himself, for he cannot exhaustively bear the punishment due to sin. He cannot transcend his punishment for he cannot give God his ransom; he must eternally remain subject to it. "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul" (Matthew 16:26). Sin is a reality which man cannot deny. All his suffering in this world cannot render satisfaction. All his good works -- aside from the fact that they are not pure before God and are but as filthy rags -- cannot erase sins which have previously been committed. He retains a sinful heart, and all manner of sinful thoughts, words, and deeds continue to proceed therefrom. The soul, upon departing from the body, remains sinful; and as long as sin continues, so long will the punishment continue -- that is, eternally.

Man's Need of a Surety In order for man to be delivered from guilt and punishment and be exonerated in the righteous judgment of God, he must have a Surety who, on his behalf, satisfies the justice of God, bears the punishment which the sinner deserves, and perfectly fulfills the law. This payment and obedience must be reckoned to the account of the sinner by divine imputation, God permitting the intervention of a Surety. Man, in turn, must acquiesce in being delivered by a Surety and must receive His ransom and righteousness as his own in order to come unto God thereby. This way is hidden from all the heathen and God also conceals it from all the unconverted who live under the gospel -- although some can explain this in an external sense and can speak of this as such. However, God reveals this way to His own and leads them in that way. The Lord Jesus, being very God and man, has been given of God Himself to be a Surety. "By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament" (Hebrews 7:22). He has made payment for the elect on their behalf: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God" (1 Peter 3:18). Thereby believers are reconciled with God. "When we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son" (Romans 5:10). Hereby peace with God has been merited. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Romans 5:1). He who has Jesus as a Surety is complete in Him. "And ye are complete in Him" (Colossians 2:10); "... that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Corinthians 5:21). This is the way in which forgiveness of sin is to be obtained; apart from this way there is no forgiveness.

Question: How can there be forgiveness if payment has been made?

Answer: If we were to have endured all punishment in person, and if we in person had perfectly fulfilled the law of God, there would be a more valid reason for this question. However, since all this occurs by way of a Surety; there is a need for the imputation of the ransom and righteousness of the Surety. It is needful for man to receive this believingly and when the sinner thus comes to God he will receive forgiveness. In this there is a simultaneous manifestation of the justice of God as Judge and of His goodness as a reconciled Father, for the same nature which has sinned must make restitution. The Surety has become surety with the approbation of the Judge, and the Father is satisfied with the Surety. Since He is satisfied with the execution of the suretyship, both its application and forgiveness are therefore righteous. Man has contributed nothing to this; he is guilty in and of himself and thus forgiveness is entirely gracious as far as he is concerned. Thus, payment and forgiveness harmonize very well, whereas forgiveness and application remain distinct acts. When praying for forgiveness here, we do not do so in a different sense from what believers did in the Old Testament. They also obtained forgiveness as well as we. We find the word aphes here. Its usage here is not unique to the New Testament and does not stand in contradistinction to paresis-- as if this were unique to the Old Testament only and that Old Testament believers only knew of an overlooking of sin while we have actual forgiveness. For forgiveness is denominated aphesis in the Old Testament as well as in the New Testament. "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission" (Hebrews 9:22). At that particular moment the Old Testament was still in full force; nevertheless the Lord Jesus caused His disciples to pray: aches. This Petition: The Believer's Prayer for Paternal Forgiveness In praying for forgiveness here, the supplicant does not view himself as unconverted and unreconciled, and as desirous to be delivered from the state of wrath (believers being children of wrath by nature as all others); rather, he views himself as being a child of God, for he prays, "Our Father, forgive us." God deals with His children in human fashion. As a father shows his displeasure over the misbehavior of his children, God likewise shows His displeasure to His children when they have sinned. He withdraws Himself from intimate fellowship with them, hides His countenance, lets them feel His fatherly wrath, and punishes them with a remorseful, restless, and anxious conscience. Inner peace has departed, and a lack of freedom overcomes them within and without. Such a condition causes the believer to be very perplexed, and he goes to his Father, confesses his misdeeds, takes refuge to the blood of the Lord Jesus, and prays, "Forgive." To such the Lord will manifest Himself and He will forgive them time and again.

Forgiveness Implied The following is implied in forgiveness: First, there is the absence of punishment: "O Lord, rebuke me not in Thine anger, neither chasten me in Thy hot displeasure" (Psalms 6:1), and there is no imputation of sin; that is, he is not dealt with as a sinner: "Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity" (Psalms 32:2).

Secondly, upon forgiveness God neither hides His countenance -- which alone is the life of the soul of a child of God -- nor withdraws His presence, nor conceals Himself as with a cloud so that no prayer can penetrate, nor does He hold Himself as a stranger. "And enter not into judgment with Thy servant: for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified" (Psalms 143:2); "Hear me speedily, O Lord...hide not Thy face from me" (Psalms 143:7).

Thirdly, there is the assurance of forgiveness; that is, a frame of heart is granted in which there is freedom from the burden of debt and a sense of the forgiveness of sin. "Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah" (Psalms 32:5); "Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back" (Isaiah 38:17). David prayed for this: "Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation" (Psalms 35:3). This was stated to Isaiah: "Thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged" (Isaiah 6:7).

Fourthly, peace is bestowed upon the soul. Sin wounds the soul -- makes her restless, fearful, and anxious. When God forgives sin, however, there comes sweet quietude and inexpressible peace. Such was David's desire: "Blot out my transgressions...purge me...wash me...make me to hear joy and gladness" (Psalms 51:1;Psalms 51:7-8). God promises this: "Comfort ye, comfort ye My people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned" (Isaiah 40:1-2). Such has been the experience of the church: "O Lord, I will praise Thee: though Thou wast angry with me, Thine anger is turned away, and Thou comfortedst me" (Isaiah 12:1).

Fifthly, it results in free access to God as being a reconciled Father: "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience" (Hebrews 10:19;Hebrews 10:22).

Sixthly, forgiveness implies restoration of fellowship with God -- which was discontinued due to sin -- in which God embraces the soul intimately. "Thou hast in love to my soul [Note: The Statenvertaling differs from the KJV here. The phrase, "Thou hast in love to my soul," reads as follows: "Gij hebt mijne ziel liefelijk omhelsd," that is, "Thou hast in love embraced my soul.]" delivered it ... Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back" (Isaiah 38:17). The soul in turn meets God with filial joy and delight. "And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity" (Isaiah 33:24). She joyfully gives thanks to the Lord: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities" (Psalms 103:2-3).

All this constitutes forgiveness. It is this which the suppliant requests in this petition, and it is this which God grants to believing supplicants. He indeed forgives whenever and as often as His children confess their sins, receive the Lord Jesus as their ransom and righteousness, and pray for forgiveness. However, the Lord does not always grant them all the matters mentioned. He also does not always grant it in the measure that they desire; at times God permits them to run after Him for a long period of time. They are frequently slack in their seeking, listless in prayer, unbelieving, discouraged, not fully emptied of sinful lusts, and thus not fit to enjoy these sweet experiences. Therefore there comes darkness at times when they anticipate light, and fearfulness instead of healing. However, the Lord will ultimately "regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer" (Psalms 102:17). Therefore, persevere in prayer and do not only pray for yourself, but also for the church and all believers, for they are all burdened by sin and many go bent down because of it. There is no peace in their soul due to their sin; they are grieved and they long for forgiveness, so that with more freedom of heart they may praise Him, fear Him filially, and sweetly progress in the ways of the Lord. This is the first portion of this petition: "Forgive us our debts." The Disposition of the Suppliant The second portion conveys the disposition of the suppliant: "As we forgive our debtors." There are a great variety of opinions about this addition. One thing is certain, these words are not a meritorious cause of God's forgiveness, for then it would have to read, "... because we forgive." Instead, the word « (hoos) (= as) is used. If that were true then it would not be a petition, but a demand for that which is ours. Furthermore, forgiveness is granted on the basis of grace. "Being justified freely by His grace" (Romans 3:24). It is equally evident that this does not imply that our forgiveness is on an equal par with God's forgiveness. God forgives as Judge and as Father; we forgive our equals. God forgives perfectly, and we deficiently. It is also not a condition in the literal sense of the word, for then it would come about by way of contract with God. Rather, it is a humble supplication for grace; it is a conditio sine qua non, or an indispensable or essential condition; that is, a required disposition for being a suitable object to request and receive forgiveness. For if someone is enraged against his neighbor and lashes out in anger in order to avenge himself, then it can be understood by all that such a person is not in a condition to pray, "Forgive ..." At that moment he will be able to obtain neither forgiveness and its resultant comfort, nor all that is implied in forgiveness (as stated above). This also applies when there is hatred and vengeance in the heart, for a greater or lesser measure of sin does not change the nature of the sin. If anyone is to pray, then his heart must not condemn him. "For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God" (1 John 3:20-21). When a person perceives that he harbors a grudge, hatred, and aversion toward his neighbor who has done him wrong, he (if he has spiritual life) will not dare to pray for forgiveness. He must condemn himself; he neither dares nor can expect any forgiveness. This is also true when he becomes aware that he is guilty of wrongdoing toward someone else with whom he is not yet reconciled (Matthew 5:23-24). When he is reconciled with his neighbor, however, and forgives whomever has offended him, he can approach boldly in prayer, and in faith request and expect forgiveness. The Lord Jesus conveys this when He restates this petition: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matthew 6:14-15). He will then neither grant you the comforting sense of the forgiveness of sins nor will He say to you, "Be of good courage, thy sins are forgiven thee; I am thy salvation." He will neither grant you free access to Himself nor permit you to have communion in peace with Him. This is signified by the phrase "... as we forgive ..."

Debtors are not those persons who are indebted to us as far as money or possessions are concerned. It is not implied here that we are not permitted to demand payment according to the rule of justice -- even though such is not to be done with sharpness and cruelty toward an impotent debtor. Rather, debtors are those who have done wrong toward us in word or deed.

Human Forgiveness vs. Divine Forgiveness To forgive is not to forgive as God forgives, that is, with authority and majesty. It also does not relate to the measure in which one has done wrong toward God and is punishable for at God's bar. This is solely God's doing. Such human forgiveness would have no value before God. No one should comfort himself in the hour of death with the fact that he will now be saved since he has forgiven others and has been forgiven by his adversary -- and is thus reconciled with his neighbor. Rather, this forgiveness is only applicable to those wrongdoings which have been committed against each other. This does not mean that by the wrongdoing of our neighbor we have become his judge or have the authority to punish him; most certainly not. Rather, forgiveness occurs between equals who, even though they have been wronged, may not punish. Yes, no one is permitted to be wrathful toward the offender, allow the inclination toward vengeance to arise in the heart, nor have a grudge against, hate, or have an aversion toward him. It is thus not a virtue if you put aside anger, wrath, and hatred toward your neighbor. To be thus disposed is not a voluntary matter as if it were a matter of choice whether or not we would be thus minded. Instead, it is but a desisting from sin. Therefore, we are not to be of the opinion that we have done something significant toward our neighbor if we are no longer angry at him and neither punish nor intend to punish him. Forgiveness is a declaration to the offender proceeding from the heart of a offended party that he entertains neither hatred, aversion, nor wrath in his heart toward him, and that he will not inflict evil upon him due to his offense, but rather is inclined to live in peace and love with him. Such an expression of the disposition of the heart does not always occur; rather it only occurs when the offender confesses his guilt and seeks forgiveness and reconciliation. This is evident in Luke 17:3-4 : "If he repent, forgive him. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him." To say, "I forgive you" when such is not warranted is a triumphant boasting of your kindness and will harden the offender in his sin.

All of this is implied when we pray, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." The Lord Jesus has suffered once and for all for the sins of all who are His. This He did once when He sacrificed Himself, "For by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified" (Hebrews 10:14), and thus obtained eternal redemption for them. Even though forgiveness by virtue of the death of Christ is indeed a reality, man himself is nevertheless nothing but sin within and without, dead in sins, and is thus by nature a child of wrath as all other men. He is condemnable and in a condition in which a holy God cannot find delight. Instead, God hates the state of sin and divine justice should execute judgment upon it. In such a condition he is not an object of forgiveness. However, the Lord grants His elect spiritual light and life -- each at his own time. He then begins to perceive in what state he is by nature, is fearful, and is perplexed about his sinful and condemnable state. He perceives that his salvation consists in being in a reconciled state with God, in having peace with God, in approaching boldly unto God as being reconciled with Him, and in walking humbly with God as his Father in filial obedience and love. He is very desirous to be delivered from the one and to obtain the other. He looks unto the Surety, receives Him, and supplicates for forgiveness. The Lord, in response to this, grants him this, applies the atonement to him, and causes him to taste the fruits of atonement and forgiveness. For the one this is more clear and for the other more obscure. Since the believer daily offends in many things, his faith in the forgiveness of sins is weakened -- it generally being very feeble anyway -- and fear and anxiety resurface. The desire for that state which gives peace again returns, and thus he resumes the exercise of faith and his praying for forgiveness. Observe this in the example of the holy man David, the man after God's own heart: "Who can understand his errors? cleanse Thou me from secret faults" (Psalms 19:12); "Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions ... for Thy name's sake, O Lord, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great" (Psalms 25:7; Psalms 25:11); "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy lovingkindness: according unto the multitude of Thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin" (Psalms 51:1-2). A Serious Warning Addressed to the Unconverted The unconverted cannot pray this petition. When they rattle it off -- as they do daily -- they are mocking with God, for they are not sincere in their heart and will, except they repent, experience to their terror that God will not allow Himself to be mocked, and that they are also not able to deceive Him.

Therefore, 1) you who are still insensitive about your sinful state -- about your sinful thoughts, words, and deeds -- who do not fear the wrath of God and carelessly go on your way; 2) you who have no intention to depart from all, I repeat, all sin (What do I say? You are not acquainted with sin except for three or four grievous ones, and how would you thus depart from them); 3) you who do not know what it means to be reconciled with God, to have peace with God, to freely make use of access to God, to have fellowship with God in a filial disposition, and who are neither restless about your defect nor desirous for this delightful experience; and 4) you who live in envy, hatred, and are continually permeated with a desire for vengeance, this desire manifesting itself whenever there is an opportunity; oh, that you would be conscious of this your disposition!

First, be assured that as often as you recite this petition (for it cannot be called prayer) you are provoking God, indeed defying God to punish you. When God's longsuffering toward you will have come to an end, you will know what it means to have recited this petition without the heart and under the pretense of prayer.

Secondly, you are living and continue to live in an unreconciled state, laden with guilt and subject to the unbearable wrath of God. When this will once be poured out upon you, where will you then flee? Then it will be fearful for you to fall into the hands of the living God.

Thirdly, you will not avoid the punishment, for if God has punished His own Son for the sins of His elect, what must you expect? Therefore, repent and seek to be delivered from your guilt and punishment through the blood of Jesus Christ, and with an upright heart pray for forgiveness.

Counsel for Those Who Desire to Be Reconciled and Be at Peace with God

You who desire to live continually in a state of reconciliation and peace and experience that your faith in the forgiveness of sins is faint and feeble -- who have but little assurance, who rarely or never have a sense of forgiveness, and whose conscience is repeatedly troubled by committed sins, which inhibit you in your approach unto God, make you discouraged, and therefore obstruct you in your seeking to be in a reconciled state -- come, earnestly endeavor to have a grievous sense of your sins, to become a partaker of forgiveness, and to live in a state of peace. The Lord Jesus has afforded us the means by teaching us to pray, "Forgive us our debts." We may indeed be at liberty to pray for that which the Lord puts in our mouth.

First, our need must compel us to do so -- for how dreadful it is to be subject to the wrath of God, to be accursed, to be under the power of the devil, to be under the dominion of sin, and to be subject to the punishment of eternal condemnation! How unbearable it is when God gives man but a glimpse of this! Such is the state in which all the unconverted are. Oh, that they would take it to heart and believe it; that the terror of the Lord would persuade them to seek earnestly for the forgiveness of sins and reconciliation with God by the blood of the Lord Jesus! Therefore in a heartfelt manner pray, "Forgive!" Even though the converted are reconciled with God, if they presently do not know this, it is for them personally as if they had no forgiveness; then it seems to them as if they are still subject to the judgments mentioned. This must therefore stir them (since they are much easier to be persuaded) to seek forgiveness. What a mournful and anxious life it is to live always in fear of death and condemnation, always to live with an anxious conscience, time and again to be troubled when thinking upon God, and always to be a prisoner to the power of corruption, for the one is contingent upon the other! Then each perplexing circumstance is perceived as a sign of God's wrath, whatever we undertake is considered to be accursed, and no delight can be found in either our food and drink, family and home, the starry sky, the delightful countenance of the earth, or friends. All this is a consequence of sin. Therefore, seek the forgiveness of sins and it shall all be removed.

Secondly, neither allow the magnitude of your sins, nor the fact that you sin repeatedly discourage you from praying for the forgiveness of sins. Do not say with Cain: "My sin is greater than that it should be forgiven. My prayer is but mockery with God, for upon having earnestly prayed for the forgiveness of sins, I immediately sin again; I no longer dare to pray for forgiveness." Where then do you wish to turn? Do you wish to remain in this wretched condition? Do you know of a different way? You must have forgiveness, and therefore you must pray for it. It does not help you to say, "I do not dare." Therefore, turn to the Lord against whom you have sinned. Confess your sins before Him, humble yourself before Him, and pray for forgiveness, for our God is not harsh and unyielding. Rather, He is "merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth" (Exodus 34:6). The Lord delights in doing well, forgiving sin, and answering prayer. Let the following text afford you boldness: "For Thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon Thee" (Psalms 86:5). Add to this Jeremiah 32:41 : "Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good." Yes, the Lord yearns to see if someone comes to Him who is desirous for grace: "And therefore will the Lord wait, that He may be gracious unto you" (Isaiah 30:18). Are your sins many? There is also much forgiveness with the Lord: "He will abundantly pardon" (Isaiah 55:7). Do you sin each day again? Then consider Lamentations 3:22-23 : "His compassions fail not. They are new every morning: great is Thy faithfulness." Who would then not have freedom to go to such a good God and to supplicate Him to be gracious? Since the Lord Jesus has satisfied the justice of God, is a merciful and compassionate High Priest to apply His merits to all who come to Him to become partakers of His atonement, and to pray for them, there is all the more reason to do so. Therefore, you who are perplexed, at your wits' end, sorrowful, and overwhelmed -- receive this Surety, and through Him and with His merits go to the Father, praying, "Forgive our debts."

Thirdly, it is a most delightful condition to have the forgiveness of sins. Believers, however feeble you may be and however far you may have strayed away, you have not yet forgotten what it was like to be freed from all debt and all punishment -- what it was like to have free access to God and to say with a filial heart, "My Father" -- what it was like to have a quiet soul, to taste peace with God which passes all understanding, to rejoice in the forgiveness of sins and reconciliation with God, to be a partaker of Christ's ransom and righteousness and to be clothed with it. Do you not remember how your heart was enlarged and that it seemed as if all that is in heaven and upon earth was reconciled with you when the Lord said to you, "Thy sins are forgiven thee; I am thy God and thou art Mine"? You are indeed acquainted with this condition, be it sensibly or by faith. Your soul is troubled when you are not in such a condition, and it is the intense desire of your heart to be in such a state and to be led further and further in the enjoyment of such a frame. Would this not move you to seek forgiveness with God if you are without it, and to flee to the Lord Jesus if you have lost it, and thus be restored in a disposition where you are at peace? And you who are in such a state, preserve it most carefully, for it is so readily disturbed by either a serious falling into sin or a reckless yielding to sin. Furthermore, this will be the case when you fail to make continual use of the Lord Jesus, when you fail to arise and wash yourself by renewal in Christ's blood after you fall, and by renewal to walk humbly before the countenance of God, thus acquainting yourself with the Lord. Then, I say that you will readily lose this sweet frame. Therefore, pray daily, "Forgive!"

Fourthly, if there is but the least principle of faith and life in you, you will be desirous for sanctification. It will be your intention to be on guard against a given sin, to do such and such, and you will make an effort to do so. Yet, there is no progress, for you fall again and your expectation is shattered. You will deny your spiritual state, for such a life cannot coexist with grace. In one word, you will become discouraged and will despair, and you would desist in this endeavor if the Lord would not time and again intervene. Then a renewed effort will be made; however, the outcome will be the same. You will thus live in anxiety, and if any progress is made in this manner, it is at best but natural work and the conscience remains restless.

If, however, you desire to be more holy, you must begin with the forgiveness of sins. If, by faith, you may receive the Surety Jesus Christ, and as such come to God and receive the forgiveness of all your sins, then the separation between God and the soul is removed and you will exercise communion with God. The soul will love God and will find such delight in fellowship with God that she would not readily like to lose this. Since she knows that this fellowship is disrupted by sin, she will be all the more on her guard against it. Since the forgiveness of sins stirs up love in her, this love will cause her to fear and obey God in a filial manner, and do whatever is pleasing to the Lord. Thus, the forgiveness of sins engenders sanctification. This is indicated by the following passages: "... purifying their hearts by faith" (Acts 15:9); "... faith which worketh by love" (Galatians 5:6); "But there is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared" (Psalms 130:4). By way of the forgiveness of sins the wounded soul is healed and this causes the believer to proceed with courage. "And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity" (Isaiah 33:24). All these texts give expression to the necessity, sweetness, and efficacy of the forgiveness of sins. Therefore seek it with all your heart, for it can be obtained. Having obtained this, you will be enabled to sanctify the name of the Lord and, with David, to give thanks: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases," etc. (Psalms 103:2-3).

079. Chapter 74: The Sixth Petition: And Lead us not into Temptation, but Deliver us from Evil

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-FOUR ----- The Sixth Petition: And Lead us not into Temptation, but Deliver us from Evil A Christian desires to perform all that he prays for; that is, if it pertains to matters where his activity is appropriate. To pray without a desire to be active is mocking with God. To be active without prayer does not yield good results, since we are not capable of doing anything spiritual in and of ourselves. In the first three petitions the Lord Jesus teaches us to pray for three great matters: that God's Name be hallowed, His kingdom come, and His will be done. As supplicants ourselves, we are involved in the execution of these matters. Therefore we cannot pray for them unless we are willing to effect them in our station in life. In order to be a means in effecting these matters, however, we must be in a condition in which we are fit according to soul and body to effect them. Since we ourselves are neither fit for this nor are able to acquire these qualifications in and of ourselves -- God alone being able and willing to grant them -- the Lord Jesus teaches us in the last three petitions, having presented in the first three petitions the matters which are to be effected, to pray for the qualifications which are needed for the execution of these matters. To that end it is requisite that our bodies function and be in good condition -- food and raiment being needful for that purpose. This we request in the fourth petition: "Give us this day our daily bread." Furthermore, in order that the first three matters be effected it is also requisite that we be in a reconciled state with God and be at peace with Him, for God does not deem His enemies worthy of effecting such great matters. Moreover, man can neither approach unto God in an unreconciled state, have fellowship with Him, nor do anything for the Lord. His consciousness of sin would cause him to be fearful of God and prompt him to flee from Him. Therefore, the Lord Jesus taught in the fifth petition to pray to be in a state of reconciliation and peace with God: "Forgive us our debts." Since spiritual life is feeble, faith is weak, and the soul has but little strength; since it has pleased the Lord, to a greater or lesser degree, to give his enemies free reign against him; and since those enemies are shrewd, evil, tireless, and powerful, a believer is in fear that the enemies would hinder him in the execution of those matters which he so greatly delights in, and render his heart incapable of doing anything spiritual -- yes, lead him into sin. Therefore the supplicant flees to the Lord for help in order that he might be preserved in a state of holiness and thus be fit to effect these three great matters. The Lord Jesus teaches us to pray for this in the sixth petition: "Lead us not into temptation," etc. The Twofold Nature of This Petition In these words we do not find two petitions, but only one. There is but one subject with which we are exercised here and about which we utter a twofold petition. First of all, there is a petition for the preservation from evil, and secondly, a petition to be delivered from evil. The petition to be kept from evil is expressed in these words: "And lead us not into temptation." First of all we have the subject, temptation, and secondly the invocation, lead us not into it. The last three petitions are all connected with the conjunction "and," for a Christian is in need of all three dispositions in order both to pray the first three petitions as well as to effect them. If one of these dispositions is lacking, he will not be fit to do so. All three must always coalesce.

The Subject of This Petition: Temptation The subject is temptation. The Greek word peirazein signifies trial. "And this He said to prove him" (John 6:6); "Thou hast tried them which say they are apostles" (Revelation 2:2). It also signifies "to examine": "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith" (2 Corinthians 13:5). Most often it signifies "to tempt": "For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted" (Hebrews 2:18). From this word the word peirasmos (= temptation) is derived, which is used here. Temptation can originate with 1) God, 2) Man 1:3) the world, and 4) the devil.

God Tempts

God is said to tempt or prove man. God tempted Abraham when He commanded him to sacrifice his son (Genesis 22:1); He proved Israel with the manna (Exodus 16:4); and He tried David (2 Samuel 24:1) and Hezekiah (2 Chronicles 32:31). It is not as if God would thus become acquainted with certain matters or outcomes, for all things are naked and opened before Him and He knows man's thoughts from afar. Rather, He does so to make matters known to either the person himself or to others -- thus conveying what good or evil is to be found in man. It was thus that Job's patience, Abraham's obedience, David's weakness, and Hezekiah's pride became manifest, to their humiliation, the comfort of others, and to prompt others to caution. God proves His own by either temporal prosperity or adversity in order to ascertain whether He is all-sufficient to them and their only confidence; whether they believe the providence of God in each individual matter; whether they love His will; or whether they have the courage to put their trust in His promises. The Lord also tries His own with spiritual temptations by the withdrawal of His Spirit, light, comfort, and opportunities, in order to cause them to live by faith alone -- in reliance upon His Word -- and continually receive Him as their strength.

Man the Tempter Man tempts God, other men, and himself.

(1) Man tempts God if we limit Him as far as time, manner, and measure are concerned, dictating to Him how and in what manner matters are to transpire: "Yea, they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel" (Psalms 78:41). We limit Him when we are not satisfied with His common way of providence, but instead require a miracle from God, something extraordinary, above and beyond the course of nature. "Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can God furnish a table in the wilderness" (Psalms 78:19); "The children of Israel also wept again, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat" (Numbers 11:4). Thus, the Jews tempted Christ: "Master, we would see a sign from Thee. But He answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign" (Matthew 12:38-39). This also occurs when we set up certain conditions before we shall believe -- if we insist on a certain measure of contrition, illumination, sanctification, or assurance. Thomas did this: "Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe" (John 20:25). This is a dreadful sin. "Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God" (Deuteronomy 6:16); "Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents" (1 Corinthians 10:9). This does not apply to a meditating upon the wonders which God has done of old in order to strengthen us in great distress by reflecting upon God's omnipotence and faithful care for His own, and thus in a more lively sense to submit to that which pleases the Lord.

(2) Man proves other men by convincing them of their sinful state and thus to lead them to conversion and to Christ. In this respect the elders prove the members: "Do not ye judge them that are within" (1 Corinthians 5:12). Or, we can tempt other men to commit evil by leading them into situations in order to cause them to fall, and bring them to sin and shame. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink ... and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness!" (Habakkuk 2:15). We furthermore do so when we draw our neighbor out in order to get him to speak so that we may thus catch him in his words. "And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted Him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life" (Luke 10:25); "Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle Him in His talk. Tell us therefore, What thinkest Thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not" (Matthew 22:15; Matthew 22:17). Such will praise a person, show him great friendship, or urge him to be valiant -- all of this, however, to cause him to stumble.

(3) Man proves himself positively when he considers whether or not he possesses grace in truth. The apostle commands this: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves" (2 Corinthians 13:5). Such, in order not to deceive themselves, pray that the Lord would uncover them: "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting" (Psalms 139:23-24). Man can also tempt himself toward evil when he carelessly brings himself into circumstances which could have been avoided, and of which we know that they have generally caused us to sin; when we yield to minor sins; when we entertain idle thoughts; when we postpone the performance of a specific duty; and when we debate about a sin as to whether or not we are permitted to do this, or whether such and such is indeed a great sin. James speaks of this tempting of self: "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed" (James 1:14). The World as Tempter The world tempts converted and unconverted alike to commit sin. It does so by holding before them all manner of entertainment; by promising advantage and profit, as well as friendship, love, esteem, and honor. If that does not succeed, it will threaten with evil, harm, shame, persecution, etc. Even though one worldly person will tempt another worldly person to sin, the church in general, and each believer individually, are its primary focus. The latter are to view themselves as sheep among the wolves. They are therefore not to trust anyone, but must always be on their guard when they are among worldly people. The Lord Jesus foretold them that they have nothing but evil to expect from the world and worldly people. "In the world ye shall have tribulation" (John 16:33). The Lord Jesus also teaches them that they are to be on their guard: "But beware of men" (Matthew 10:17). We read furthermore: "Beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness" (2 Peter 3:17). To that end the Lord Jesus gave this golden counsel: "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves" (Matthew 10:16). The Devil as Tempter The devil also tempts man. The unconverted are in his power; he rules over them and they are captive under him at his will. He exerts all his power to cause believers to fall by way of temptations, however, and he consequently also bears the name of tempter (Matthew 4:3), the enemy (Matthew 13:39), the adversary (1 Peter 5:8), and the devil (James 4:7). His temptations are most subtle, and they are therefore referred to as "the wiles of the devil" (Ephesians 6:11). He searches out where and when the believer is weak, and he adjusts himself accordingly to present his temptations, then in this and then in that manner. To advance all his temptations at once would not be possible and would not be effective with many. He knows the constitution of the body as well as its vulnerability; he knows the sin most likely to be committed, and he knows in what circumstances we must at all times be to do so. Along with this he interjects thoughts and mental images in our imagination whereby he endeavors to make us think about such thoughts, stimulating our lusts by such reflections. As much as he is permitted, he will create situations in which he knows that we have frequently fallen. Then when the soul is troubled about falling into sin, he tries to seduce her from one sin to the next. He knows how to camouflage sin in such a subtle manner, or presents it as being so desirable that our lusts are stirred up. At the very outset he stirs man up and urges him to make haste -- to make haste so that man will not have time to direct one thought toward God. Once the sin has been committed, he tries to bring this person to despair, by suggesting: "Such a life cannot coexist with grace; you are not born again; you do not have true faith; for you there is no grace; your sin is too great; you have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost." Subsequent to this he will terrify them in a variety of ways. For a more comprehensive treatment of the temptations of the devil we refer you to a later section in this chapter entitled: "The assaults of the devil." This we must know, however: the devil can neither compel nor cause man to sin. All he can do is to suggest, entice, and create situations. Thus, man himself is the cause of those sins which he commits, and may therefore not blame the devil. Furthermore, the devil is not always the instigator; rather, man himself is generally the initiator.

The Request Relative to Temptation

Thus far we have seen what temptation is. Now we are to consider what activity is being requested relative to this subject, namely, temptation: "Lead us not into temptation." We hereby supplicate that God our Father would not do so. God leads His children, to and in the way of salvation -- without which they would never obtain salvation. "And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known" (Isaiah 42:16); "I am the Lord thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go" (Isaiah 48:17). The Lord Jesus is called their captain (Hebrews 2:10; Hebrews 12:2). Believers pray that they may be led by the Lord: "Lead me in Thy truth" (Psalms 25:5); "Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God: Thy Spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness" (Psalms 143:10). For on the one side they know their weakness, and the deviousness, wickedness, and violence of the enemies; and on the other side they know the Lord's power and goodness. They pray that the Lord would illuminate them, continually show them the way, exhort and stir them up to enter upon that way, support and govern them by His power, and not forsake them until they have reached their goal. They pray that they may be led in such a way. However, the invocation relates to not being led into temptation. The Lord our God is holy and whatever He does is holy: "His work is honourable and glorious" (Psalms 111:3). All that He executes is righteous: "Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy judgments" (Revelation 16:7). All that is unrighteous is far removed from God. There is no unrighteousness in Him. Let no one accuse God when he is tempted to evil and falls as a result of this. "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil" (James 1:13). God Himself does neither tempt anyone with evil nor to commit evil. When God tempts someone, this always occurs in an incomprehensible and holy manner -- with holy purposes or thereby to manifest His righteousness and goodness, and thus to the glory of His Name, before angels and men, they being witnesses of those deeds.

Trials Sent by God are of a holy Nature God tries both the ungodly and godly in a holy manner. He tries the ungodly:

(1) When He withdraws His gifts which have been abused, such as common illumination, conviction, and His restraining influence. "But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul" (1 Samuel 16:14).

(2) When He, as righteous Judge, gives man -- who is nothing but sin, desires to do nothing but sin, and cannot do anything but sin -- over to himself, the consequence of being unwilling to hear Him. "So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels" (Psalms 81:12).

(3) When He gives a man over to the devil so that he governs this man according to his will: "... who are taken captive by him at his will" (2 Timothy 2:26).

(4) When man -- while being subject to these judgments and due to continual sinning and a continual going against his conscience -- is hardened so that he becomes insensitive to sin and a fear for punishment. This judgment God executed upon Pharaoh: "And I will harden Pharaoh's heart" (Exodus 7:3). A man who is in such a condition and in whom God permits all manner of inclinations to arise, will fall into every sin until the righteous wrath of God destroys him.

God tries His children with a holy objective and in a holy manner. This occurs:

(1) When the Lord gives free reign to the tempters -- be it the devil, the world, or the flesh -- to assault His children in various ways. It was thus that God gave the devil free reign with Job (even though there were limitations) (Job 12:1-25), as well as with David (2 Samuel 24:1).

(2) When God withholds His gracious influence and sustaining power -- of which the church complained: "O Lord, why hast Thou made us to err from Thy ways, and hardened our heart from Thy fear" (Isaiah 63:17). When a child of God is thus deprived of God's help, and is thus assaulted by his enemies -- and if both grace and spiritual life are but feeble -- he is in danger indeed!

(3) When God permits certain situations to arise in which he should have remained standing, and he is then not on his guard. If his emotions and lusts are stirred up, and he then departs from the fear of God, obedience, and the love of God, he will be tossed about as a top, and be led about by his flesh, being swept along from the one sin to the next (even to sins toward which he had no natural inclination beforehand). What a tragic situation this is! What would be the end if God were not to deal with him again and restore him? A child of God must be fearful of such a condition and pray against it.

What is Implied When the Godly Pray: "Lead Us Not into Temptation" When we pray, "Lead us not into temptation," we are not praying for the averting of all temptations or trials resulting from a spiritual or physical cross, or from all circumstances in which we would be able to fall. This is God's way with all His children whereby He humbles them, exercises them in the battle against the enemies, and sanctifies them. Rather, the petition is as follows: "Neither let the temptation get a hold of nor have power over us; do not withdraw Thy Holy Spirit from us; do not give us over to ourselves when opportunities for sin manifest themselves. When the enemies assault us and seek to toss us to and fro and sift us as wheat, let us then not be overpowered by the temptation. Do not let us be ensnared so that unrighteousness would gain the upper hand; neither give us over to evil inclinations nor to the lusts of our corrupt heart. For where would this not bring us? If, however, it pleases Thee to let situations arise and that snares are laid for us everywhere, and if devils and worldly people in a subtle or evil way scheme to catch us, keep us from falling and lead us by Thy Spirit. Give us strength to remain standing, so that by our fall our own soul be not mortally wounded, the godly be neither grieved nor offended, and Thy Name and true godliness be not blasphemed." Such was David's prayer: "O keep my soul, and deliver me: let me not be ashamed; for I put my trust in Thee. Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; for I wait on Thee" (Psalms 25:20-21); "O forsake me not utterly" (Psalms 119:8); "Let not them that wait on Thee, O Lord GOD of hosts, be ashamed for my sake: let not those that seek Thee be confounded for my sake, O God of Israel" (Psalms 69:6).

Thus, the petition not to be led into temptation is indicative of:

(1) a knowledge and an acknowledgment of the sinfulness of our heart and our weakness to resist temptations;

(2) a hatred and an aversion for sin and a fear for falling into sin;

(3) a love for communion with God, which is affected and obscured by a falling into sin; as well as a love for the honor of God's Name, the reputation of godliness, and the joy of the godly;

(4) faith in God's care for His own, and in God's omnipotence to give them strength to subdue the enemies in their assaults; as well as faith in the goodness of God as rendering Him willing to do this, and His veracity that He will do it, having promised to hear and answer prayer.

The Second Part of the Petition: But Deliver us from Evil

The first portion of this petition having been dealt with, the preservation from evil, we shall now consider the second part, the deliverance from evil. The first part relates to the future, whereas the second part relates to the present. These two portions of the petitions are conjoined by the adversative "but." From this it is evident that the latter differs from the first, but nevertheless is related to the first. The manner in which there is a distinction and relationship is contingent upon the interpretation of the word "evil" -- that is, how this is to be understood. "Evil" (poneros) signifies the devil: "... then cometh the wicked one ... the tares are the children of the wicked one" (Matthew 13:19; Matthew 13:38). The world is referred to as evil: "... this present evil world" (Galatians 1:4), which is said to lie in wickedness, that is, to be entirely evil: "... and the whole world lieth in wickedness" (1 John 5:19). The heart of man is said to be evil: "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief" (Hebrews 3:12). This evil heart is filled with wickedness: "An evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things" (Matthew 12:35). In the heart of the natural man there is nothing but wickedness: "Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually" (Genesis 6:5). Also, sin is referred to as that which is evil: "Abhor that which is evil" (Romans 12:9). Since these four -- the devil, the world, the heart of man, and sin -- are called evil, the question is who or what is to be understood by "evil" here. The Word "Evil" Defined

The supplicant is a child of God who addresses God as Father and greatly desires the glorification of God's Name, the well-being and extension of God's kingdom, and the doing of God's will. To that end he requests temporal support for himself and all the godly, so that, due to poverty, they would not be a reason for slander to the ungodly and they themselves would not be overcome by cares. He prays to continually be in a state of peace and reconciliation in order that they may run their course with joy and liberty before God and man. Furthermore he prays that they would not encounter any snares or stumbling blocks whereby they could be ensnared or over which they would fall. To that end he prays that they may be delivered from all that would hinder them in the way of godliness. It is all this which is here denominated as evil. By the word "evil" must primarily and preeminently be understood, not the devil, for then both portions of this petition would almost be identical, but our sinful nature, the sins which easily beset us, the law of sin which is in our members, and sin with all its manifestations. Thus, both the contradistinction with and the relationship to the first portion of this petition is clear. As long as sin has much power in man, the least temptation causes him to fall; however, when the image of God has been more restored, Christ has been formed in the soul, and the heart has increased in desire, life, and holiness, man will remain standing in temptation that much better. Furthermore, what would it profit man if he would not encounter any temptations at all and would in the meantime continue in his sinful disposition? The supplicant abhors the monster of sin, cannot tolerate it, but requests to be delivered from it. Also, the Greek word rusai yields further emphasis. The Greek have several words whereby they express deliverance, and the word which they use here means "to extract," or "to deliver by way of extraction." Sin must be extracted: "And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee" (Matthew 18:9); "... in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh" (Colossians 2:11). (Extracting is implied here even though the vocabulary differs.) We thus pray: "Deliver us from the sinful disposition of heart and its sinful manifestations." This is not contradicted by the fact that there is an article here: tou ponerou -- as if this were to refer to a person and thus to the devil. For this article is also used with the word "sin": "The whole world lieth (ἐν τῇ πονηρίᾳ) in wickedness" (1 John 5:19). We consider the most correct view to be that tou ponerou is neuter rather than masculine, and that in this instance the word "evil" includes both sin and all that is evil. The meaning of this petition is therefore: Keep us in the future so that we shall not succumb to the power of temptation and be caused to fall thereby. Furthermore, deliver us from this present sinful disposition of soul and the sins which issue forth therefrom. An Unconverted Person Is not Able to Pray this Petition As an unconverted person cannot pray any petition since he has no desire for any of these, he likewise also cannot pray this petition. This is all the more true since he can be most clearly convinced that not only is he without desire for the matters comprehended in this petition, but that it is all his desire and delight to live in sin. He does not want sin to be extracted from him. Instead, he draws unrighteousness to himself with the cords of vanity, and sin as with heavy wagon ropes. He has no fear that he will fall into temptation; he even seeks it out and eagerly involves himself in it, for sinning is his delight -- as long as it does not result in harm or injury. When such a person therefore says to God. "Lead us not," etc. ..., then he lies in the presence of an omniscient God and mocks Him. For if he would truly express what is in his heart, he would say: "Grant me opportunities to engage in many delightful and expedient sins, for they are my delight." Such a person ought no longer to pray this petition to God, lest he tempt Him. Instead, he ought either to continue without prayer to his destruction, or else repent and then offer the petition, "Lead us not into temptation!" The Godly are Not Always in a Frame to Pray This Petition A godly person also is not always in a frame to pray this petition. In order to have liberty, he must always regain his composure and modify his behavior when he intends to pray. Thus he must specifically turn within before he prays this petition, and examine himself as to whether his heart cleaves to a given sin -- whether there is a sin which presently holds him captive, he is not forsaking, and he is not valiantly resisting so that he may desist from and strive against it. If someone is in such a condition, he will have no liberty to approach to God, for his heart condemns him. It is thus essential that we are fully opposed to sin in general as well as to such and such a specific sin which torments us most -- even though we have no strength against it and we are able to deduce from our disposition as well as from experience, that we can fall into this again unless we receive further strength from above. For then are we able to ask for help and pray, "Lead us not into temptation." This Petition Must be Prayed in All Earnestness This petition therefore ought to be most earnestly prayed by us, for:

(1) If we are no partakers of this disposition and these matters, we are not even capable of praying the other petitions -- much less do them. However, upon having received what we petition for here, we shall be fit for everything. As the first petition is the objective of all things, so is this petition the disposition from which and whereby we must strive to attain that objective -- as well as render the use of the means profitable.

(2) Furthermore, how dreadful is sin! It is a breach of the binding obligation which the Lord has imposed upon man -- an obligation which man himself readily acknowledges. To sin is to be disobedient to the majestic Lord and to despise His awe-inspiring character, doing so in His presence and while He observes it. We commit sins from which we would be kept by the presence of a man -- yes, even a child. Indeed, it is an act of utter contempt toward God when we are neither concerned about His wrath nor His judgments. Is anything more dreadful imaginable?

(3) Sin deforms the soul, and makes her despicable, hateful, and abominable -- more than we can even think or express.

(4) And what sorrows it engenders! God withdraws Himself and leaves the person over to himself. His precious soul is tossed about day and night due to loss of freedom, instability, fear, anxiety, and restlessness.

(5) The one sin begets the other, and those in turn beget others -- and where would sinning end?

(6) Sinning does not merely consist in the committing of transitory evil thoughts, words, and deeds, but it injures spiritual life itself. It becomes more feeble and weaker, and a person becomes less fit to live godly and to turn from sin. You know all this, believers. Ought you therefore not to be fearful and anxious about sin, and knowing your impotence, ought it not to cause you to cry out to the Lord, "Deliver me from evil! Deliver me; wash me; sanctify me, oh sanctify me, for I must be holy as Thou art"? The Bitterness of Succumbing to the Power of Temptation To succumb to the power of temptation is the most bitter thing that can befall a godly person. When a godly person, who already has but little strength, succumbs to a sinful frame, yields to sin more than he commonly does, and is thoughtless, careless, and shoddy in his conduct, he is in a frame which renders him vulnerable to temptations. When the tempter is then permitted by God to assault such a person and employ his wickedness, subtleties, devices, and practices; when the opportunities are there for this person to be wrathful, proud, unrighteous, impure, and to deny his confession either due to fear, lust, or whatever else; and if God departs from him, deserts him, and leaves him over to himself, his lusts will become lively and vehement and toss him about as dust in a whirlwind. This cannot be resisted, for both intellect and judgment have no say in this; his burning lusts are in control. Even if spiritual life manifests itself in some measure and counsels and groans against this -- even then things nevertheless proceed as if he were without his senses. The running horses cannot be held back. What all can a man not be led into? It can lead him into things for which he had no desire his entire life -- yes, which he abhorred. When man falls due to temptation, it is frequently not limited to one fall. And even if he wishes to refrain and regain previous tenderness, there is no strength. God hides Himself, temptations are renewed, lusts stir by renewal, and he is overcome once more -- until the Lord visits him by renewal and draws him out of this. However, the previous tenderness of heart, the enjoyment of peace, communion with God, and a shining forth with holiness are still far removed. Sorrow, tears, anxiety, prayer, wrestling, a following hard after the Lord, and a renewed stumbling are the order of the day. Who would not be fearful of such a condition? Therefore, pray continually, "Lead us not into temptation!" The Motivation for This Petition The praying of this petition issues forth from a hatred and aversion for sin, from the experience of our inability to remain standing, and out of love for a pure and unspotted life. If this motivates us to pray thus, it must also render us active to remain in that condition. Temptations, when they come, will have no effect upon such when they come. Such have a perfect heart which longs for nothing else but continual union and fellowship with God. The world, and all that appears to be attractive and delightful in the world, must be banished from the heart, and the Lord alone must be all-sufficient to us -- and must be the object of our joy, delight, love, and fear. Even if we cannot carry this out according to our wishes, we must always seek to preserve the choice, the intention, and the exercises. If we do not proceed in this from the heart, in all our doing no progress will be made; we shall be vulnerable to temptations and the most insignificant occasion will cause us to fall. If, however, the heart is perfect toward the Lord, and we conduct ourselves in the presence of God, then we will be strengthened against temptations. "He that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not" (1 John 5:18).

Prayer and Work Must Also be Combined

Prayer and work must be combined; a Christian desires to perform what he prays for, and endeavors to do as much as he is able. When he prays, "Lead us not into temptation," then he must refrain from leading himself into temptation. We lead ourselves into temptation,

(1) when we do not flee those circumstances in which we have frequently fallen, but rather seek them out, or, upon their occurrence consciously yield to them, there being neither need nor obligation to avail ourselves of them. Such circumstances can vary greatly and may either pertain to someone's disposition, calling or other situations. To some the company of given individuals is harmful, to others dining engagements, to others the use of ordinary means, and for others at times solitude. We must flee from these things that can be avoided, or else we lead ourselves into temptation. If we cannot avoid those situations in which we have frequently fallen, being under obligation by divine commandment, we must be very much on our guard to keep our hearts diligently by bridling our tongue, yielding in specific cases, standing firm for God's cause, and arming ourselves with sincerity and caution. When we conduct ourselves in this way, the temptation will have less effect upon us.

(2) when we use lawful and ordinary things too frequently and thoughtlessly.

(3) when we cherish vain thoughts and find our delight in them -- even if they pertain to natural matters.

(4) when upon having sinned, we do not immediately arise, but either through carelessness, discouragement, unbelief and rejection of our spiritual state -- or else due to finding delight in sin -- remain where we are, so that sin gains in strength.

(5) when we reflect upon thoughts which suddenly enter our mind -- be it concerning a sin in which we find delight, unbecoming thoughts of God and divine things, or dreadful interjections. We shall thereby lose a good spiritual frame, and in an evil spiritual frame we are susceptible to temptation.

Against all these a Christian must be watchful and strive, being active in faith: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matthew 26:41); "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: whom resist stedfast in the faith" (1 Peter 5:8-9).

Guarding Against Temptation Do you wish to be protected against temptation? First, give heed to your heart and the thoughts proceeding from it: "Keep thy heart with all diligence" (Proverbs 4:23). Secondly, place a watch before your eyes: "I made a covenant with mine eyes" (Job 31:1), and pray: "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity" (Psalms 119:37).

Thirdly, close your ears to vain talk and backbiting: "Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners" (1 Corinthians 15:33); "Also take no heed unto all words that are spoken" (Ecclesiastes 7:21). Fourthly, give heed to your tongue; govern it carefully and circumspectly. "I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle" (Psalms 39:1). Also pray: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips" (Psalms 141:3). If you do not give heed to your heart and your external senses, you will continually succumb to temptation. If, however, you are thus on your guard and if you walk carefully, then, while praying and striving, you will walk surely, conquer the enemies, and inherit the crown of life.

The Conclusion of the Lord's Prayer The third division of this prayer is its conclusion. "For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen." The papists and some others omit this and contest it. However, the sacred text itself, the practice of the first church and of generations following, as well as similar expressions in other texts of the divine Scriptures ought to convince them and confirm us in our usage of them.

(1) We can view this conclusion as the basis upon which the suppliant has received liberty and upon which he leans; for God, his Father, has command over all creatures, is omnipotent to give the suppliant what he desires, and is glorious and majestic in His Being -- it being the suppliant's objective to magnify Him.

(2) We can view this conclusion as a motive toward prayer. It is common with prayers recorded in Scripture that motives are used whereby the suppliant quickens and spiritualizes his desires. He is thus supplicating God to grant him the matters which he desires -- since He is ruler over all and can do everything by His power -- and that the receipt of the desired matters would be to the glorification of His Name, He being worthy of this. Or: "We have prayed this for the church, the kingdom of grace; this is Thine and therein Thou dost desire to be glorified. Therefore hear our prayer!"

(3) It can also be viewed as an enlargement of and an urgent plea related to the last petition that God would not lead us into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for He has all authority and power over both the tempters and the ones being tempted. He is thus able to sustain the latter by His omnipotence, to restrain the tempters, and to grant the tempted one a steadfast and holy heart. However, this is not to be limited to the last petition only, but is applicable to this prayer in its entirety.

Thine is the kingdom. This is indicative of God's majesty, exousia, authority, and dominion over everything, all of which is immediately subject to Him. This is most gloriously expressed by king David: "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is Thine; Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and Thou art exalted as Head above all. Both riches and honour come of Thee, and Thou reignest over all; and in Thine hand is power and might" (1 Chronicles 29:11-12). God has sovereign dominion over both the kingdom of power and of grace, and of glory.

"... and the power (dunamis)." God does not only have a just claim upon everything and authority over everything, but in the Lord there is also strength and power to rule over all that is His, protect His own, grant them their desires, punish the enemies, and execute whatever He wills. "I am the Almighty God" (Genesis 17:1). The godly acknowledge this: "But our God is in the heavens: He hath done whatsoever He hath pleased" (Psalms 115:3); "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think" (Ephesians 3:20).

"... and the glory." God is glory and majesty in Himself -- even if there were neither heaven, nor earth, nor any creature. God's glory is revealed in all His works, both in nature as well as in grace. The angels and the souls of the just made perfect praise and glorify Him as they witness His glory. However, in His goodness God has also willed that He be glorified upon earth. The unconverted neither are acquainted with the glory of God, nor do they have any desire to witness, praise, or magnify it. However, God has formed His people in order that they would show forth His praise; He has drawn them out of the power of darkness in order that they would show forth His praises. In all their activity they have God's glory in view; it is their chief delight. "Every day will I bless Thee; and I will praise Thy name for ever and ever. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised; and His greatness is unsearchable. One generation shall praise Thy works to another, and shall declare Thy mighty acts. I will speak of the glorious honour of Thy majesty, and of Thy wondrous works" (Psalms 145:2-5). The supplicant says: "Thine is the kingdom; Thou art worthy that everything would glorify Thee." Since true supplicants have this in view, they pray, expecting that God will hear their prayer.

"... forever!" The kingdom, the power, and the glory are the Lord's from eternity to eternity; by Him there is neither change nor shadow of turning. He is always the same: always glorious, omnipotent, and majestic. The believers upon earth -- from Adam until Christ's coming to judgment, from generation to generation -- declare: "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever" (Revelation 5:13).
The Meaning of the Word "Amen"

"...Amen." This is a Hebrew word which means truth. Sometimes it is used singularly, and sometimes it is repeated: Amen and Amen. At times it is used singularly and at times with an addition: Amen, Hallelujah; Amen, Oh Lord; Amen, the Lord do thus.

(1) Sometimes it is an approbation and a subscribing to what has been said. "And all the people shall answer and say, Amen" (Deuteronomy 27:15); "And all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands" (Nehemiah 8:6). This approbation indicates that we comprehend the matter, as well as that we wish and desire it. "Else ... how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest" (1 Corinthians 14:16).

(2) Sometimes it is expressive of a strong desire for a matter, and a desire that it be thus and come about as such: "That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto your fathers. ... Then answered I, and said, So be it, O Lord" (Jeremiah 11:5).

(3) Sometimes it signifies veracity, certainty, and steadfastness -- upon which one can rely and trust in. "For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen" (2 Corinthians 1:20). The believing suppliant who has prayed everything with both his understanding and his heart, acknowledges the veracity and certainty of God's promises, that He will hear prayer -- and particularly this prayer: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them" (Mark 11:24); "And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that, if we ask any thing according to His will, He heareth us: and if we know that He hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him" (1 John 5:14-15). The suppliant has prayed with his heart, knows that the matters he has prayed for are according to God's will, believes the goodness, omnipotence, and veracity of God, expects the fulfillment of his desire (subjecting himself to its time, manner, and measure), and longingly adds to this: "Amen, so be it; it shall most certainly be true." "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen" (Revelation 22:20).

080. Chapter 75: Fasting

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-FIVE -----

Fasting To fast [Hebrew: ta'anith], is a derivative of the words to oppress, humiliate, torment, as well as to be distressed. Others translate this Hebrew word as "to fast": "And at the evening sacrifice I arose up from my heaviness" (Ezra 9:5); "Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul?" (Isaiah 58:5). Also the word tsoom means "to fast" (Isaiah 58:5). In Greek we have the word nesteia, which means not to eat. It is the latter which we wish to express by the verb "to fast."

Fasting is a special religious exercise in which a believer deprives himself for a day from all that invigorates the body, humbling himself in body and soul before God as a means to obtain what he desires.

Fasting is a religious exercise--an exercise in which one seeks after God. Fasting due to poverty, avarice, illness, for health reasons, or a being prevented from eating food due to business activities is not applicable here. Rather we speak here of fasting as a religious exercise; it is God-focused and its intent is to seek God thereby. Since all practice of religion is neither to be self-willed nor practiced according to human institutions, but only according to God's command and precept, this is also applicable for fasting. It does not consist of idleness, but is an activity which is a day-long engagement consisting of secret dealings with God.

It is a special exercise. It is not a daily activity such as prayer, reading, thanksgiving, and singing. Rather, it is practiced at special seasons of need, such as being threatened or oppressed by the danger of a plague, having to engage in a very weighty task, perplexity, or having to make a choice concerning a weighty matter. It can even relate to everyday matters such as seeking communion with God, the need for strength to oppose specific sins, and growth in grace.

Fasting: To be Deprived of All That Invigorates the Body

Fasting primarily consists in a depriving one's self of all that invigorates the body, being desirous to bring the body for that given day into a condition of withdrawal, distress, pliability, and weakness.

It consists, first of all, in a depriving ourselves of all food (being expressed by the word fasting), for he who partakes of any food has broken the fast. Observe this in Esther 4:16 : "... fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink." We do not fast by merely depriving ourselves of meat. In the Old Testament there was a distinction between foods and between clean and unclean; however, this is not related to fasting. Paul states, "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine" (Romans 14:21). It is also not related to days of fasting; rather, this pertains to giving offense to a weaker brother. The latter occurred during that period when there were some who still made a distinction between foods as dictated by the law of the Old Testament. It is in reference to this that the apostle states: "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend" (1 Corinthians 8:13). That is, "I would rather deprive myself of this than that I should offend anyone." Some had freedom to eat animals which had been sacrificed to idols. The apostle declared that there was such freedom, since the idol was in reality nonexistent. Others, however, did not believe they had such freedom and were offended when they observed that others did so. Therefore, not only did the apostle refuse to eat the meat of sacrificed animals, but he wanted to eat no meat at all, if someone would be offended by it. Except for such occasions, however, he would eat meat. Thus, these texts cannot be used in support of papal fasting, at which time they deprive themselves of meat. Else, they should also deprive themselves of wine and ought not ever eat meat.

Secondly, on a day of fasting we are to deprive ourselves of all external ornamentation. In Old Testament times the people covered their bodies with a type of material which was of the most inferior kind. They would then draw this as tightly around the body as if they were putting goods into a bag in preparation for transport, for they normally wore wide garments (Isaiah 3:24). Furthermore, they made this sack, which they wrapped around themselves, dirty by sprinkling dirt and ashes upon it, so that they would display themselves before God and men in the most wretched and humblest circumstances, thereby declaring that they were unworthy of everything. "A day for a man ... to spread sackcloth and ashes under him?" (Isaiah 58:5); "My clothing was sackcloth" (Psalms 35:13); "Gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes" (Jeremiah 6:26); "No man did put on him his ornaments" (Exodus 33:4).

Thirdly, on a day of fasting we must deprive ourselves of all entertainment such as recreational games; taking a walk for the purpose of seeing gardens, ornamental works of art, or plantations; or going out by boat or horse and carriage merely for pleasure. "Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure" (Isaiah 58:3). One must even refrain from marital union (1 Corinthians 7:5).

Fourthly, we must also refrain from performing the labors of our calling. "And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any work in that same day, the same soul will I destroy from among his people. It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest" Leviticus 23:30; Leviticus 23:32.

Fifthly, there must also be a refraining from sleep. On such a day we must arise early and retire no earlier than normal. On such a day we may also not slumber, for that would be entirely contrary to the objective of the day. Such slumber results in a loss of time, and it is as if we would bring a dead body before the Lord -- as if it were the body that was fasting. It is in conflict with a humbling of ourselves. Sleep invigorates a person, and the purpose of this day is the humbling of the soul as facilitated by the faintness and weakness of the body -- and thus to humble one's self deeply.

Sixthly, above all things we must carefully guard against the commission of sins. It would be the abomination of all abominations if upon a day that we wish to humble ourselves over our sins and desire to pray for forgiveness -- as well as to be spared from those plagues which we have made ourselves worthy of by way of sin -- that at the same time we were to tempt the Lord by the commission of sin. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness" (Isaiah 58:6).

Fasting: A Humbling of Ourselves The second aspect of fasting is a humbling of ourselves according to body and soul. Soul and body are so intimately united that the ill disposition of the one begets the ill disposition of the other. When the body, due to the withdrawal of all refreshment, is rendered feeble, pliable, and is subdued, the soul will also be in such a disposition; and thus the natural disposition takes on a spiritual dimension. Fasting, in and of itself, is not a religious practice. It is only so when it is a seeking after God by way of fasting. He who has merely deprived himself of all refreshment has not partially observed a day of fasting, for fasting and a humbling of ourselves are not two separate duties. Fasting must be characterized by a humbling of ourselves, and the humbling of ourselves must be done by way of fasting. Fasting serves but one purpose: to facilitate the humbling of the soul; it has no significance beyond that. Since fasting facilitates this, however, the act as such is nevertheless required. It is an essential aspect of a day of fasting -- however, only in union with, and thus inseparable from, the humbling of ourselves. They do not function in a dual sense, but in unison.

When, on a given day of fasting, we humble ourselves by way of fasting, then, at the very outset of the day, there will be a greater appetite for food than normal -- already prior to the normal mealtime. This is not always due to the corruption of our nature -- a nature which always hankers for that which is forbidden. Rather, it issues forth from the relationship between fasting and the humbling of ourselves. Sorrow over the deficiency of the soul engenders sorrow about that which the body is lacking, and a deficiency in the body engenders sorrow over the deficiency of the soul. They are thus both subservient to the humbling of ourselves (Deuteronomy 10:12). "... and ye shall afflict your souls" (Leviticus 23:27). A humbling of one's self consists in:

(1) The confession of sin, accompanied with grief and shame: "Now in the twenty and fourth day of this month the children of Israel were assembled with fasting ... and confessed their sins" (Nehemiah 9:1-2); "O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to Thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens" (Ezra 9:6).

(2) Declaring ourselves to be worthy of judgment and a subscribing to justice if the Lord were to execute those merited judgments upon us. "Howbeit Thou art just in all that is brought upon us; for Thou hast done right, but we have done wickedly" (Nehemiah 9:33).

(3) A supplicating for grace, frequently accompanied with weeping. Concerning the day of a solemn assembly we read in Joel 2:17 : "Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare Thy people, O Lord." This is also to be observed on the day of fasting recorded in Nehemiah 9:1-38. Consider also the following passages: "I humbled my soul with fasting; and my prayer returned into mine own bosom" (Psalms 35:13); "And when they had fasted and prayed ..." (Acts 13:3); "Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting" (Matthew 17:21);

(4) A renewal of the covenant with the wholehearted intent to forsake former sins and to live a godly life: "And because of all this we make a sure covenant" (Nehemiah 9:38); "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness" (Isaiah 58:6);

(5) The giving of alms: "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" (Isaiah 58:6-7). The Duration of Fasting The duration of fasting is limited to a twenty-four hour period -- from evening to evening.

(1) Moses Deuteronomy 9:9, Elijah 1 Kings 19:8, and the Lord Jesus Christ Matthew 4:2 fasted for forty consecutive days, during which time the Lord preserved their lives in a miraculous manner. We are not commanded to imitate this; to do so is only superstition. Furthermore, no one can be without food for such a long period of time. We do not follow the Lord Jesus if we deprive ourselves of meat for such a period of time while yet eating something during the day. He did not eat at all during that period, nor did He designate His fasting to be an example to be followed by us. Many things He either did by virtue of His divinity or in regard to His mediatorial office, we are neither able nor permitted to imitate.

(2) We also read about seven days of fasting 1 Chronicles 10:12 and of three days (Esther 4:16). This is to be understood as a period during which something was eaten each evening. Or else, due to there being a warmer climate in those countries, they were able to be without food for a longer time, without doing harm to their health. However, the normal time period for fasting is one day -- from evening to evening Leviticus 23:1-44; (Isaiah 58:5).

Question: Are all men obligated to fast for an entire day? Would one then, upon becoming somewhat faint and thus unfit for prayer and other duties of that day, be able to eat something, such as a piece of bread or something similar?

Answer: In respect to certain persons the rule applies, "I desired mercy, and not sacrifice" (Hosea 6:6). This applies to women who have given birth, the sick, nursing mothers, those who are exceptionally weak (even though not sick), nursing babies, as well as children who must be dealt with according to their age. Some are not to be deprived of anything, others are to be given as little as possible, and again others need to learn how to fast. However, the healthy must deprive themselves of everything for the entire time. To become somewhat faint is the objective of fasting, and one must not shrink back from that objective. The pretense of being unfit for prayer issues forth from the opinion that fasting is no more than an exercise to become more fit for prayer and similar exercises. Such believe that this faintness is not a part of fasting, thinking that it is only spiritual in nature. One will also experience that, rather than becoming unfit, this faintness will render one more fit to pray with increased humility, as well as cause one to call upon God with the disposition of one who is entirely destitute. Even if the manifestation of all this is not as vehement as is otherwise the case, toward the evening, prayer will become more earnest, and then at times a special blessing will follow. The Distinction Between Public and Private Fasting As far as the persons who fast are concerned, a distinction can be made between public and private fasting. First, public fasting occurs when:

(1) It is proclaimed by the government due to a general national need -- be it war, pestilence, famine, an insect plague, extraordinary drought, persistent rain, or similar occurrences. In such events, governments have the right to proclaim fast and prayer days. This does not mean that such a day of fasting is a commandment of men; no, the observance of days of fasting is commanded by God. Instead, governments do but designate the time as determined by God by way of extraordinary circumstances.

(2) A synod, classis, or elders of a particular congregation designate a day of fasting for the church under their supervision, doing so due to an extraordinary need in the church -- be it persecution of that church or churches in other lands, the manifestation of false doctrine, the need for reform due to decline, the calling of ministers or the election of consistories, or other specific circumstances.

This is also not a human institution, but the observance of a divine command.

Secondly, private fasting occurs when: (1) some individual bosom friends agree to set apart a day -- be it due to their own needs or the needs of others, or an exceptional desire to seek the Lord earnestly for a desired matter -- either for body or soul; (2) a father institutes a day of fasting for his family;

(3) an individual sets apart a day for himself. Everyone has personal freedom in doing this, be it that he sets apart a day for special occasions; that he schedules days of fasting which, in his judgment, are most suitable for him -- this having been the custom of eminently godly persons -- lest that by having to select a day anew each time the matter be neglected; or that he selects such a day each time anew. In so doing we will acquaint ourselves with the Lord; we will become more modest and holy, and the Lord generally grants more spiritual grace to such. In setting such a day apart, every one is free as to the extent to which he wishes to do so. It can be that he will desist from his labors if he is self-employed and if it is not to the disadvantage of his family; he can do this without anyone else noticing this. Or it can be that he sets this day apart while nevertheless intending to do his work -- this being required by his circumstances -- and to eat a limited amount of food, so as to conceal from others the fact that he is fasting that day. The latter must very much be his objective according to the instruction of Christ in Matthew 6:16-18 : "Moreover when ye fast (this applies to private rather than public fasting), be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance. ... But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head (dress yourself in an honorable manner, as you are accustomed to do), and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." If, however, you cannot conceal this from your family, then you must not allow this to detract you. But, if this would cause you to be ridiculed, you must fully conceal this and eat a little.

Exhortation to Fasting

It is sad -- a sign of great decay in the church -- that so little work is made of fasting, both in public as well as secretly. Therefore all who wish to lead a life of tender godliness and desire to see the good of Zion ought to stir themselves up to exercise this duty, for:

(1) Has not God has commanded this? (Leviticus 23:27; Joel 2:12);

(2) Have not the church and the saints of all ages practiced this and left us an example to be followed? Observe this in (Judges 20:26); 2 Chronicles 20:3 and Nehemiah 9:1. References to solitary fasting are to be found in Nehemiah 1:4 and Psalms 35:13. This was not only a duty and practice in the Old Testament, but also in the New Testament (cf. Matthew 6:16-18; Matthew 9:15; Mark 9:29; Luke 2:37; Acts 13:3; Acts 14:23; 1 Corinthians 7:5). Therefore, as obedient children of God and followers of the saints, fast frequently. This was the practice of the original Christian church and of believers at the outset of the Reformation -- and even long thereafter. Do not allow this practice to die out.

If a public fast has been proclaimed, conduct yourself well in doing so. There are but few who fast well. If, therefore, there is perplexity in the land where the church resides, God's eye will be upon you in a special manner. It will be pleasing to Him when He observes your standing in the breach to turn away His anger from the land. Perhaps He would deliver the land upon your prayer; and even if the land were to be destroyed, the eye of the Lord and His mercy will be upon you and your loved ones. You will then have peace in your conscience wherever you go, knowing that you have endeavored to uphold the pillars of both church and country.

If some of the godly have agreed to set apart a day, endeavor to join them, and stir up some other godly person to do likewise. The Lord will most certainly be among you; He will come to you and bless you. It will engender a sweet bond of mutual love, a holy mutual fellowship, and quicken both love and the performance of good works. When you make work of having solitary days of fasting, you will experience that the promise is true and will be fulfilled for you: "Thy Father ... shall reward thee" (Matthew 6:18). The Lord will manifest that this is pleasing to Him. He will increase your light, and strengthen your heart in faith; you will be nearer to God in your walk, and lead a life which is more sober and thoughtful; and your conscience will be more tender. You will have more strength against sin, and receive more comfort from the Lord. He who has exercised himself in this has never regretted that he has done so, and we wish to recommend it as an exceptional means unto spiritual growth. When you thus have determined to observe either a public or secret day of prayer, you must prepare yourself for this ahead of time by removing all obstacles, by being moderate in your intake of food and drink in the evening, and by getting a moderate amount of sleep at night. Confess your aversion for such a day of prayer as a sin before the Lord, and ask that you may be fit to conduct yourself well on this day of prayer. If you intend to observe this with others, pray that the others may be fit for this as well.

If the day of prayer is spent as described above, let your conduct also be appropriate subsequent to this. Rejoice in the evening that you have food to eat, since you are not worthy of one bite of bread. Thank the Lord that He gives it to you in His favor -- as having been purchased with the blood of Christ. Be moderate in your use of food as well as in sleeping. Preserve the impression of all that has transpired that day; that is, of all your initiatives toward God and of God's manifestations toward you. Give close attention as to how God responds to your day of prayer, for God will respond to it. In this way you will accustom yourself to this duty, and discover so much sweetness in it, that you will long to have such a day of prayer by renewal.

081. Chapter 76: Watchfulness

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-SIX -----

Watchfulness As fasting is conjoined to prayer, so is watchfulness conjoined to prayer: "Watch and pray" (Matthew 26:41); "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance" (Ephesians 6:18); "Be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer" (1 Peter 4:7). We must therefore also take this duty to heart -- a duty the Lord Jesus has so solemnly commanded us to perform. "And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch" (Mark 13:37); "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come" (Matthew 24:42).

There is a spiritual watchfulness and a physical watchfulness. Both are the duty of a Christian and we shall therefore speak of both.

Spiritual Watchfulness Defined

Spiritual watchfulness consists in watching over our soul in a careful and circumspect manner in order that no evil may befall her. Spiritual life is a precious and desirable treasure to the believer, far excelling the entire world and all that is in it. It has many enemies which lie in wait for it -- not to be a partaker of it, but to destroy it; they hate it. A Christian is therefore diligent in preserving this life. "Keep thy heart with all diligence" (Proverbs 4:23). The believer knows the value of that life, is acquainted with his enemies and their activities, loves this life, is desirous to preserve and increase it, takes care that it is not injured, and is thus circumspect and always on guard if there is danger approaching from elsewhere. If he becomes aware of something, he is alert and stands ready with his weapons in hand to turn away the enemy, attacking all those who come too close.

Spiritual watchfulness is exercised with several objectives in view. First of all, it pertains to the spiritual influences of the Holy Spirit, such as light, comfort, and strength -- whereby the spiritual life of the soul is strengthened. A Christian prays for this, and during prayer, as well as immediately thereafter, waits to see whether the Lord will grant him something so that he may immediately receive it and seal it within his heart. "My voice shalt Thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto Thee, and will look up" (Psalms 5:3); "Blessed is the man that heareth Me, watching daily at My gates, waiting at the posts of My doors" (Proverbs 8:34); "Therefore I will look unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my salvation" (Micah 7:7).

Secondly, watchfulness pertains to all that issues forth from the soul, such as thoughts, words, and deeds, lest the soul be injured by any sin. Instead, there will be a striving that our entire conduct may be according to God's will, whereby spiritual life increases in strength. "But watch thou in all things" (2 Timothy 4:5). A Christian strives for this: "I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle" (Psalms 39:1); "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto Thy testimonies. I have chosen the way of truth: Thy judgments have I laid before me" (Psalms 119:59; Psalms 119:30). Since the Christian is conscious of his impotence, he cries to God for help. "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips" (Psalms 141:3); "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord" (Psalms 19:14). The believer guards his heart jealously, and since he knows that there are snares everywhere, he proceeds very cautiously. He is watchful in his every deed and ponders the path of his feet (Proverbs 4:26). Time and again he seeks counsel and asks, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do" (Acts 9:6). He looks whether the way before him is safe and each time sets down his feet with caution lest he step into a snare. He walks, so to speak, on his toes. This can be ascertained from the word akribos: "See then that ye walk circumspectly" (Ephesians 5:15). Then, when he finds all to be smooth, he proceeds courageously. "The Lord of hosts ... hath made them as His goodly horse in the battle. And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle" (Zechariah 10:3; Zechariah 10:5).

Thirdly, the person who is spiritually watchful also keeps an eye out for all that enters the soul, so that no enemy will steal in to harm his spiritual life. He knows his enemies -- the devil, the world, and his flesh -- and he knows their wickedness and their tireless activity. He is on his guard for that very reason, and he thus "closes the doors and the windows." "I made a covenant with mine eyes" (Job 31:1); "He ... stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil" (Isaiah 33:15). In accordance with the exhortation of the apostle he is on guard against the devil. "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter 5:8-9). The Christian is on guard against the world when it approaches him with either flattery, threats, or persecutions, conquering all this by faith (1 John 5:4). He is on guard against his flesh, indwelling corruption, and the sin which so easily besets him. The apostle exhorts him to do so: "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (1 Peter 2:11).

Believers Exhorted to Be Watchful

Therefore, Christians, stir up your desire to be watchful and make work of it with the courage of a man. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong" (1 Corinthians 16:13).

(1) We are by nature very drowsy. Our spiritual life is feeble, weak, has but little vigor, and indwelling corruption will very readily befuddle our understanding. We shall therefore very readily slumber as the bride did: "I sleep, but my heart waketh" (Song of Solomon 5:2). Such was also the experience of the wise virgins: "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept" (Matthew 25:5).

(2) The enemies are wakeful and are tireless in the execution of their assaults. They never miss an opportunity to rob us of an advantage; and if we are not watchful, they will have the advantage.

(3) How scandalous it is if we are assaulted by the enemy due to our lethargy! If we are wounded while wielding the sword, those wounds will soon heal. If, however, we allow ourselves to be conquered due to lethargy, we must come into the presence of the Lord with shame, for we are then without excuse.

(4) The wounds inflicted by the enemy are very grievous; his arrows are poisonous and burrow in deeply. If the balm of Gilead, administered by the Great Physician, did not heal those wounds, they would be the cause of death. They would rob you of your precious treasure -- spiritual life -- and of all your valuable, spiritual ornaments. "Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame" (Revelation 16:15).

(5) When we are watchful, however, we need not fear the enemy. How much more honor and praise will then be enjoyed in the presence of the Lord Jesus, who will crown the conqueror with glory! "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life" (Revelation 2:7); "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death" (Revelation 2:11); "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne" (Revelation 3:21). Therefore, watch!

Guidance unto Watchfulness

If you therefore are desirous of being spiritually watchful, then use those means you also use to remain physically alert.

(1) He who excessively partakes of food and drink cannot be alert. Therefore, he who wishes to be alert will be moderate and sober. Such is also true here: "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. Watch ye therefore, and pray always" (Luke 21:34; Luke 21:36).

(2) He who wishes to be watchful seeks the company of those who are watchful with him. We must do likewise in the spiritual realm: "Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow" (Ecclesiastes 4:9-10).

(3) He who wishes to be watchful will request someone to awaken him if need be. Such is also true here. Since no one but the Lord is able to awaken us and to keep us watchful, we shall thus request of Him in prayer to do so. The Lord will answer this request and arouse us: "He wakeneth morning by morning, He wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned" (Isaiah 50:4).

(4) He who wishes to be watchful will set his alarm clock, which will arouse him at the appropriate time. This "alarm clock" is the fear of God. "The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life" (Proverbs 14:27).

(5) He who wishes to be watchful will not easily and lazily lie down; rather, he will keep himself occupied. Such is also true here, for if we keep ourselves occupied with the reading of God's Word, prayer, singing, and engagement in the Lord's work with delight, then, even if we have but little strength, we shall be spiritually watchful. "Watch therefore: blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when He cometh shall find so doing" (Matthew 24:42; Matthew 24:46).

Physical Watchfulness

Physical watchfulness consists in depriving one's self of sleep at a time which is designated for sleep. As God has ordained that man's life be preserved by means of food and drink, so also by way of sleep -- which is the refreshing dew of nature and, so to speak, moistens the brain, thereby refreshing it. If we spend too much time sleeping, we shall feed our vices, weaken our body, and it will be the cause of numerous ills and sicknesses. If we sleep too little, the body will become weak and we shall be unfit for work. Thus both -- too much or too little sleep -- will cause the mind to be dull and lethargic. The metabolism of the body is not the same in all men; the one needs more sleep than the other. Thus, one who performs heavy labor needs more sleep than one who leads a quiet and sedentary life. Every godly person ought to know himself in this respect, so that he will not harm his body either way and thus would commit sin. Wakefulness can sometimes be the result of illness, mental torment, anxiety, or an intense desire to commit such sins as gambling or dancing, or the mental reflection upon things which one would indeed desire, and about which one builds castles in the sky. Sometimes we need to be wakeful, either because we are compelled to this by our calling, or because we are determined to complete a set amount of work -- doing this in our calling either manually or by way of study. We are not discussing such watchfulness here, but rather a watchfulness of a religious nature.

Physical Watchfulness for Religious Reasons To be watchful for religious reasons is a special religious exercise in which we deprive ourselves of sleep for the entire night or a portion of it. Such time is then used entirely for the purpose of engaging ourselves in prayer, reading, and meditation -- in order to crucify the flesh with its lusts and to grow spiritually.

All that we have said in our exposition of fasting is also applicable to our explanation concerning watchfulness. The one is a deprivation of food and the other of sleep. It is a religious exercise, for the objective is to seek God in this manner. The time is not spent in being quiet and inactive, but it consists of spiritual activity. It is a special exercise and thus we must not engage in it too often, nor make it a daily activity, for this would be injurious to the body, which soon would become unfit for anything.

It consists, first of all, in a depriving one's self of sleep. The time involved -- that is, when, how long, whether it is the entire night or some time during the night -- is entirely a matter of personal choice. It can be at the beginning of the night, in the morning, or in between these, one arising out of sleep and lying down again some time later. We shall then deprive ourselves of sleep; and if we become sleepy, we must fight against it -- doing so either with physical means such as getting up and walking around or by putting something tart or bitter in one's mouth; as well as by the use of spiritual means: prayer, crying for the Spirit, and mourning over our listlessness. This is not to suggest that the deprivation of sleep itself is religious in nature, but it merely belongs to the mode of this religious exercise. Watchfulness must be accompanied by spiritual exercises.

Secondly, it consists in a seeking after God by means of prayer, reading, meditation, or reflection. We are then not only watchful because we have the time for it, but rather that we might seek the countenance of God with a tender heart -- a tenderness engendered by watchfulness and spiritual wrestling. It is a watchful praying and a prayerful watchfulness; they mutually stimulate each other. This is not an obligation which devolves upon all men, for there can be physical unfitness, or it can be that due to either hard work during the day or their present circumstances, they are in need of strength. They who are either single, have a godly family, or have a godly partner can do this more readily. Others, however, would cause trouble by this, and would stir up more that is not edifying in their homes than that which would edify them during this time. Such can occasionally engage in this while remaining in bed. They are then wakeful in all quietness without anyone noticing that they quietly send up their secret prayers Godward. As much as possible our watchfulness is to be such that no one is aware of it. By way of prayerful watchfulness and watchful prayer, the body (which yields much opportunity for sin and stimulates us toward sin) is subdued and rendered more useful.

Watchfulness Commanded and Exemplified

(1) The Lord Jesus enjoins His disciples to be watchful in this manner: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matthew 26:41).

(2) The Lord Jesus has left us an example in this: "And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed" (Mark 1:35); "And it came to pass in those days, that He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God" (Luke 6:12).

(3) Such has been the practice of the saints. Jacob remained alone the entire night in order to pray (Genesis 32:24; Hosea 12:5). David testified of himself: "At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto Thee because of Thy righteous judgments" (Psalms 119:62); "In the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life" (Psalms 42:8); "I prevented the dawning of the morning, and cried. ... Mine eyes prevent the night watches, that I might meditate in Thy word" (Psalms 119:147-148). Asaph did likewise: "My sore ran in the night, and ceased not" (Psalms 77:2). The bride sought upon her bed at night, and arose during the night to seek out her precious Jesus (Song of Solomon 3:1-2; Song of Solomon 5:5). The Christians of the church of the first century endeavored to do likewise. Gradually, however, this changed into a superstition, just as popery still has its superstitious vigils, to which they attribute great holiness, and deem them to be very meritorious. It was also much more common during the initial time of the Reformation. If you wish to read a more comprehensive description of this, you ought to read De Trappen des Geestelijken Levens (The Steps of Spiritual Life) by my deceased father, Theodore à Brakel. From all this we observe what earnestness and zeal these holy men had; if we only had more zeal, we would emulate them more. However, alas! this earnestness and zeal is lacking in these days which are void of zeal, and therefore, why am I even speaking here of specific days of fasting and night-watches? However, the Lord can yet let this be a means so that it will not be entirely forgotten. May someone yet be stirred up by this -- or at least be convinced of his lack of zeal, being even too hasty in his morning and evening exercises. May he be convinced how far removed he is from a frame which would stir him to arise in the night or that would move him to set apart a portion of the beginning or end of the night to be watchful for the purpose of engaging in prayer.

082. Chapter 77: Solitude

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-SEVEN -----

Solitude

Solitude is a separation from all men for a period of time in order to be enabled to express one's self more earnestly and freely as one engages himself in seeking after God. We designate this as a separation from all fellowship with men, in order to distinguish it from that type of solitude of a few of the godly, who at times seek this out in order to communicate with more freedom. Sometimes they choose places of solitude other than those they normally frequent, in order to occupy themselves either with fasting and prayer or with thanksgiving.

Prayerful Solitude This is a seasonal separation and thus not lifelong as the Papists do in their monasteries, which are nothing more than places of filth, dens of murder, and impure Sodoms. Then there are also the hermits among them who permit themselves to be enclosed within four walls, or who make either the forest or the wilderness their residence. We abhor this manner of life -- even if it were void of all superstition and pollution. For, first of all, it is contrary to God's command who has created man as a social creature, saying, "It is not good that the man should be alone" (Genesis 2:18). Secondly, it is God's will that we let our light shine before men in order that they may see our good works and may glorify our Father which is in heaven (Matthew 5:16); and that we would use our gifts to the advantage, conversion, and edification of other men. We have received our talents to that end, along with the command: "Occupy till I come" (Luke 19:13). Thirdly, continual solitude prevents us from becoming acquainted with our corrupt heart, being humbled by this, and striving for its sanctification, there being no opportunity whereby this corruption would manifest itself. If the heart were good, and if sin would only be the result of circumstances external to the heart, one would be permitted to seek solitude. However, the residual corruption of the heart will be no less sinful in nature when there is no occasion to manifest this sinfulness. We cannot improve the inherent sinfulness of the heart. We learn this gradually as we stumble along. Since we cannot stir up others by our example and our words while in solitude, likewise we can neither be stirred up by the example and words of others, nor will we be able to exercise the communion of saints which we confess. Continual solitude will sooner render us a beast or a devil rather than an angel. "Two are better than one; for if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up" (Ecclesiastes 4:9-10). Solitude must be but for a season -- be it a few hours or a few days.

Seasonal separation occurs in order that we might engage ourselves more earnestly and freely in those exercises whereby we seek after God. To seek solitude in order to be lazy or idle is the work of beasts; to do so in order to commit sin -- either alone or with someone else -- is an abomination. If, however, our objective is holy, we must also be occupied with holy things, that is, with prayer, reading, meditation, singing, and humble communion with God. "Through desire a man, having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom" (Proverbs 18:1). It is immaterial where we seek such solitude. We can either take a walk, sit down in a deserted field, be somewhere on the farm, or go into the garden. The Heart Must Strive for Solitude

We must always strive for a disposition of heart that is inclined toward solitude while surrounded by the turmoil of the world and as we interact with people. This means that we are to be loose and divorced from all that is of this world, such as the honor, love, riches, lusts, and pleasures of men. Furthermore, it means to be free from all creatures so that they will neither have dominion over us, conquer our hearts, confuse, nor trouble us. Rather, we are to make use of everything, to the extent that this may be subservient on our journey to eternity, as if we were lord and master, doing so similar to a stranger who is but travelling through. If a cross or tribulation comes our way, we are not to look for creature comfort or help, but in solitude look unto God: "I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house top" (Psalms 102:7); "Deliver my soul from the sword; my darling from the power of the dog" (Psalms 22:20); "Rescue my soul from their destructions, my darling [Note: The Statenvertaling uses the word "eenzame," that is, "lonely one."] from the lions" (Psalms 35:17). To this continual solitude also belongs a life with God. To be loose from the creature and to be united to God must go hand in hand. It is thus that Enoch (Genesis 5:22), Noah (Genesis 6:9), and David walked with God: "I have set the Lord always before me" (Psalms 16:8). Such was also true for Asaph: "But it is good for me to draw near to God" (Psalms 73:28). We are to be in such a solitary disposition when interacting with men; however, we are also to separate ourselves from men at our normal devotional time.

Special Times of Solitude

However, in addition to this habitual disposition of solitude and separation at the normal devotional time, it is an exceptional means for the increase in godliness if we occasionally designate a special time in which we fully separate ourselves from the company of men. This can be for some hours or some days. Everyone must proceed here, however, in a manner consistent with his physical or spiritual condition. The occupation of some will not permit this. If such persons were to take as much time for this as they would perhaps desire -- and which others are able to do -- they would do harm (perhaps ruin) to themselves and their families, and let their children run loose without supervision. Godliness would be slandered thereby. The Lord is not bound to the means, and if someone with a tender conscience cannot make use of this extraordinary means, the Lord frequently grants him increased manifestations of Himself -- more than he would have received in the other way. The spiritual condition of some is such that they should not engage in long seasons of solitude. Either they are still babes in grace who are not able to spend their time well; or they are subject to extraordinary trials and assaults which are frequently increased by seasons of solitude. Thus, their solitude would be spoiled. Those who are thus assaulted, we counsel as children not to neglect entirely the extraordinary exercise of prayerful solitude. Rather, they should use a shorter period of time (without straining themselves to do something great and extraordinary or to be stirred within in an extraordinary manner), quietly turn to God, and with an expectant frame seek to be alone for some time. If the Lord meets them there, they must yield to the resultant motions; if these motions readily subside, then, by renewal, they are to be expectant. The Lord will occasionally revisit them. If they notice that their thoughts wander toward sinful and vain things, or if the trials become too intense and overcome them, it is best to return homeward; the exercise will not be without fruit. The Lord, who will not be sought in vain, will as yet cause them to rejoice over the fact that they were desirous to seek the Lord, and there will be some measure of increase in their godly disposition. Those who do have more time and opportunity, however, also ought to take more time for this. And even if at times all does not go well and they must return homeward wounded and defeated, they must resume this as soon as possible. The Lord takes note of our intention, and this is time and again pleasing to Him.

Exhortation to be in Solitude

Therefore, children of God, seek the face of your Father in secret. Take some time occasionally and seek out lonely places in order that there you might wrestle, pray, weep, call for, and wait upon the comforts of the Lord, for:

First, such was the practice of the Lord Jesus, and He has left us an example so that we would walk in His footsteps. At one time He would go to a solitary place (Mark 1:35); at another time He would ascend a mountain all by Himself (Matthew 14:23); and at other times He would use the Garden of Gethsemane as His normal place of prayer (Luke 22:39). This has also been the practice of the following saints: Abraham (Genesis 15:1-21), Isaac (Genesis 24:63), and Jacob (Genesis 32:1-32). Many of the godly have prospered exceptionally in doing so. Therefore, you ought to emulate them and do likewise. If you are singularly desirous, motivated by love, to follow Jesus in this, be assured that He will meet you in love and sweeten your efforts.

Secondly, it is time and again needful for us to recover from the ill disposition we acquire in the midst of the turmoil of the world. Worldly turmoil is very capable of disturbing intimate fellowship with God and of causing us to be estranged from Him. Here the eye sees something, and there the ear hears something, by which our lusts are stirred up, causing us to be drawn away to give attention to these matters. And thus our lusts are ignited, and those ignited lusts frequently engender sinful deeds which harm and defile the soul. The creature has an inherent ability to enchant us -- and thus imperceptibly steal our hearts. We frequently do not notice this until we have lost our heart. Everywhere there are snares and opportunities to either lust after honor, be envious, say vain words, lust after riches, boast, or have impure inner motions. Is it therefore not most needful to make a special effort to lift up our heads out of all our failures, seeking restoration of this sweet freedom and to be loose from all creatures? Solitude is a special means to that end, for in this way we may frequently meet God, and will return to our calling with a strengthened heart.

Thirdly, while engaged in our daily routine, we are frequently closed up within. The heart is hard, the eyes refuse to produce tears, and we become listless and dull. If, however, we then seek a place of solitude other than our ordinary, the heart will frequently be enlarged. It becomes tender, and we can vent our complaints in a more intimate manner. Spiritual desires relative to a variety of matters multiply, and we shall begin to supplicate and weep. We can then persevere and pray that it may touch the heart. Even if there are times when we have had not much else than the privilege and ability to pray, we shall nevertheless go homeward with a quiet joy and we shall frequently think of those extraordinary places; they will be to us a Jacob's Bethel.

Fourthly, the Lord is so good that He will meet His children in a special manner when they are in secret -- even though it can be at times that all is turned upside down within while they are in secret, that they are overcome with heavy darkness, that the Lord hides His countenance for some time, and they become unbelieving, dull, and entirely empty within. The Lord will yet secretly sustain and cause them to wrestle on. Upon that wrestling the Lord will meet them occasionally in a special manner. He will then manifest Himself with such clarity that this light will be too glorious and strong for them; or He will manifest Himself with such intimacy and love that they will be, so to speak, filled to overflowing. Then again He will grant such assurance of His grace and of their eternal salvation that it will suffice them. He will lead them into the inner chamber and reveal to them His eternal purpose and love for them; the covenant of redemption established between the Father and Christ on their behalf; His wondrous incarnation; the bitterness of the suffering and death of Jesus; the necessity and efficacy of His perfect atonement on their behalf; Christ's resurrection for their justification; His glorious ascension; and His sitting at the right hand of the Father as their Advocate. This, and all that is implied therein, as well as the perfections of God which are revealed, they see in an entirely different light, and it has a different effect upon their heart than has ever been the case previously. He thus leads them into the banqueting house and His banner over them is love, and it is thus that they are satiated with love. When Jacob laid himself down in a lonely place, the Lord revealed Himself to him, so that he said, "Surely the Lord is in this place ... this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven" (Genesis 28:16-17). When he wrestled in solitude on the other side of the river Jabbok, the Lord blessed him and gave him the name "Israel." This had such an effect upon his heart that he said, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved" (Genesis 32:30). When Moses was alone in the wilderness, the Lord appeared to him in the burning bush and granted him that grace to be sent forth to deliver the people of God from Egypt. When Peter was praying upon the rooftop, he fell into a trance and the Lord revealed the calling of the Gentiles unto him. Therefore, if you desire singular revelations and singular comforts, seek solitary places. You will then experience that God is good to those who seek Him, and you will perceive that you will then return homeward with a radiant soul.

Final Guidelines for Solitude

If, however, you have determined both time and place for this practice and you proceed in this, then see to the following:

- (1) Neither demand nor expect too much from your efforts, nor have any expectations from yourself. Rather, come there humbly, empty, unfit, and longing that the Holy Spirit might teach you how to pray.
- (2) Be not occupied with other thoughts which pertain to your calling or something else. Rather, during that time conduct yourself as if you were alone with God in the world, casting away and resisting all that comes to mind.
- (3) Be especially on guard against your bosom sin, for this would very much defile your solitude and prevent you from receiving a blessing.
- (4) Continually occupy yourself with prayer, thanksgiving, waiting, reading, and singing -- even if you do so without feeling and cannot get your heart involved in it. The Lord will be pleased with your efforts and will grant you a blessing.

Take heed that you keep your secret place holy, Or else it will not be safe there. When do you keep your secret place holy? When you have intimate fellowship with God. [Note: This is the translation of the Dutch poem:

Ziet toe, houdt u eenzaam heilig.

Anders is het daar niet veilig.

Wanneer houdt men heilig 't eenzaam?

Als men is met God gemeenzaam.]

083. Chapter 78: Spiritual Meditation

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-EIGHT ----- Spiritual Meditation In addition to solitude, we wish to consider the practice of holy meditation or spiritual reflection. This is a spiritual exercise in which a godly person -- having a heart which is separated from the earth and lifted up toward heaven -- reflects upon and engages his thoughts toward God and divine things with which he was already previously acquainted. He does so in order to be led further into divine mysteries, to be kindled with love, to be comforted, and to be stirred up to lively exercises.

Spiritual Meditation: A Religious Exercise

Spiritual meditation is a religious exercise. It neither consists in idleness, nor is it a passive disposition in which we are but recipients, permitting ourselves to be illuminated about the divine perfections and divine mysteries -- just as a mirror is irradiated by the sun. Instead, it is an activity in which the soul is occupied in reflecting upon and reasoning about these matters, approving of them, delighting in them, is astonished about them and quickened by them.

Occasionally the Lord will manifest Himself to a person without the individual having prepared himself for this. The soul, perceiving this manifestation, will then allow herself to be led into this quietly, will follow gently, and will be active with it. At other times we may resolve to occupy ourselves with meditation, and will either go for a walk or seek another place of solitude to engage ourselves as such. Some are still small in grace, and since they do not know much as yet, there is also not much for them to meditate upon. Others would be able to meditate more, but they close the door at the very outset, being desirous to have at the beginning that which comes last. At the very outset they wish to have clear light, sensibility, enjoyment, and sweetness; even though these are matters in which meditation culminates, and are the very purpose for which one engages in meditation. Those who have wisdom in this area, however, will bring to mind the perfections of God, His operations in the realm of nature and of grace, as well as His dealings with them. They do this as if they were reading it in a book and permit themselves to be influenced thereby. They reason about these matters in a holy conversation with God. At one moment they give thanks, then they pray, and then again they rejoice. Then they will ask, anticipating an answer, and then again they will strengthen their faith thereby. It is thus that they occupy themselves and intensely involve themselves in doing so. If one thing escapes their attention, they will begin to reflect upon something else. If they have occupied themselves with matters too high for them, darkness coming upon them as a result, they will descend from this level and begin to reflect upon their previous experiences and the way in which God has led them.

It is a requisite for meditation that the heart be separated from all things and be lifted up on high. It does not merely suffice to have selected a place of solitude for the regular practice of meditation, but the soul itself must be disposed toward being in solitude; that is, she must be separated from all that is upon earth and be lifted up toward invisible things -- as if she were alone with God in this world. During that time we must lay aside all cares, desires, and earthly engagements and turn heavenward toward God. This does not mean that we shall immediately be in such an elevated frame, but we shall be striving for this. There will be ejaculatory sighs with varying intensity for the manifestation of light and grace. While thus striving to attain to a fit frame for this, we shall begin to think and meditate. The soul being empty, seeks to be filled with substance whereby, while meditating, she may be nourished. She offers herself, opens herself, yearns, anticipates, and is active.

The Person Who Meditates The one who meditates must be a godly person. As the heart is, so will be the thoughts. An unconverted person -- a natural person -- will also have reflections, but these are consistent with his nature. "He shutteth his eyes to devise froward things" (Proverbs 16:30); "An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations" (Proverbs 6:18). He reflects upon his previous ungodly deeds in which he finds renewed delight. Reflecting upon how his neighbor has wronged him, he becomes by renewal wrathful and bitter. He neither knows God nor His gracious operations. He also has no desire for them, and therefore he neither can nor is willing to reflect upon them. His best mental activity consists in being occupied in the acquiring of knowledge of the Word; however, his objective in doing so is not sound, for it is his objective to be esteemed as a wise man, to be knowledgeable like others, and to be able to converse well. We dealt with such natural meditation in chapter 43.

Instead, spiritual meditation is the activity of a godly person who has spiritual light and life -- the one less and the other more. He knows God and has a desire after God; this is the reason why his heart is repeatedly drawn to God. It was so sweet and delightful to him to have seen and tasted something of God that he could not forget it. Time and again it comes to mind and he desires to experience this again in a greater measure. Such meditation gives this experience a new sense of sweetness and stirs up his desires.

The Object of Meditation The object of such meditation is divine matters of which he has prior acquaintance. There is, furthermore, an inquisitive thinking about and meditation upon those matters with which one is not yet acquainted but, nevertheless, desires to be acquainted with. However, the meditation in question here is a practical reflection upon matters with which we are acquainted and concerning which we wish to be inwardly moved again by way of meditation. He who is desirous to engage in spiritual meditation will sometimes pursue what comes to mind, and thus follow the Spirit indiscriminately from one subject to the next. If he wishes to be selective and to focus upon one subject, it will be without effect and there will be no progress. We therefore must merely follow and yield to those inner motions which flow forth out of such meditation -- prayer, thanksgiving, love -- and to follow up what we have resolved to do. At times the heart is empty and does not yield any food for thought; this could result in wandering thoughts. Then we are to select subject matter for meditation, and it is advisable initially to select an easy subject matter, such as the way in which the Lord has led us since childhood; that is, the parents from whom we were born, what transpired in our families, how we were raised, how we conducted ourselves, where we attended school or labored and what has transpired there, the sins committed in our youth, how things progressed after that, and how we conducted ourselves during our teenage years. One could also meditate upon the prosperity and adversity we have encountered, the ways in which the Lord has led us unto the means of salvation, what initially moved us to repent, and how -- by way of falling and rising -- this came to pass. If we thus proceed from season to season, from experience to experience, from location to location, and from encounter to encounter, it will time and again stir special motions within us. While thus meditating, however, our heart must remain focused upon the Lord, and we must reflect upon each matter by relating it to the hand of God. In our scheduled devotional times we can also consider the work of redemption, beginning with eternal election, proceeding to the fall, from there to the promise of the Surety and Mediator and forward to the coming of Christ in the flesh -- His life and deeds, and His suffering and death. In doing so we must focus upon each aspect to see whether it stirs up a motion within us. Hastiness in meditation will rob us of its fruitfulness. We can also consider the work of creation: its preservation and government, how all things are executed with precision by way of divine providence, and how each matter relates to one or more of God's attributes as they reveal themselves in His works.

Spiritual Meditation: A Work of God's Spirit

Spiritual meditation is a work of God's Spirit. The believer in and of himself is not capable of this. In addition to being known from personal experience, Scripture also teaches this: "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God" (2 Corinthians 3:5). God initially grants life to the soul, and He quickens that life time and again whereby she desires and seeks for food. He causes matters to come to our mind and governs our thoughts to meditate upon them in a spiritual manner. When a man once possesses spiritual life, this life cannot be idle; it will be active by way of meditation. Since this life originates in heaven, it will also gravitate toward heaven. If it were not repressed by natural corruption, this life would always, without impediment, be exercised in holy meditation. Since spiritual life is repressed, however, it wrestles with this corruption and will break forth unto holy meditation. "My heart is inditing a good matter" (Psalms 45:1). To that end it is time and again needful that there be the influence of the Holy Spirit whereby He lifts up and maintains life. Such is the manner in which the regenerate man meditates; however, he is moved to that end by the Spirit of God. The Objective of Meditation: Growth in Grace The all-encompassing goal and objective of meditation is the building up and growth of spiritual life. More particularly, it will be our objective:

- (1) to acquaint ourselves with God and to have communion with Him, since that constitutes the felicity of the soul;
- (2) to rejoice and delight ourselves in God -- in the beholding of whose countenance there is fullness of joy;
- (3) to be kindled with love toward God, to believe in and sense God's love, and by renewal to be sweetly moved in love toward God;
- (4) to be comforted when we are downcast, for by meditation upon former days and the works and perfections of God, the soul will generally find comfort and refreshment;
- (5) to be quickened in sanctification, for by way of such spiritual meditation and reflection, as well as a communing with God in solitude, the soul will acquire a good habitual disposition. She has experienced how good it is to be near unto God and she knows that sin will rob her of this. She has understood something of God's holiness and that He is worthy to be obeyed and she has increased in her love toward God. Thus, meditation renders her more zealous to walk in the way of the Lord's commandments.

These are indeed the matters we shall be striving for, and the Lord will at times also manifest Himself upon such meditation -- however, not always. It frequently happens that meditation is very lifeless, and that one neither finds delight nor sweetness in it so that he needs to desist. Such can occasionally be God's wise and sovereign dispensation. At times this can be the result of meditation not being a habitual practice, as well as a lack of experience in this heavenly art. At other times it can be caused by our listlessness toward this work, and the fact that the soul is illdisposed toward this work. We must therefore not neglect this work, however, but resume it at another time. And if our occupation with this cannot be lengthy, we need to make it shorter -- and we shall indeed experience that it is not in vain.

Believers Exhorted

Therefore, you who are lovers of God and of holiness, learn this secret art which is practiced but little, for: First, God commands it; and since you are both obligated and willing to be obedient unto God in other matters, such must also be the case toward this duty. Consider the following injunctions: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success" (Joshua 1:8); "And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness" (Deuteronomy 8:2).

Secondly, meditate upon the examples of the saints and let them be examples for you. There is the blessed virgin Mary: "But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart" (Luke 2:19). There is David: "When I remember Thee upon my bed, and meditate on Thee in the night watches" (Psalms 63:6); "O Lord, consider my meditation" (Psalms 5:1); "Let ... the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight" (Psalms 19:14). And consider Asaph: "I have considered the days of old, the years of ancient times. I call to remembrance my song in the night: I commune with mine own heart: and my spirit made diligent search" (Psalms 77:5-6).

Thirdly, it is the very nature of God's children to be desirous for this. Your heart is inclined toward this and you deem those happy who are thus engaged. Why then do you oppose the new man? Beloved, yield to your new nature. Consider in this respect Psalms 1:2 : "But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in His law doth he meditate day and night."

Fourthly, the very essence of sweetness is to be found herein, and it is profitable work. "My meditation of Him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord" (Psalms 104:34); "How precious also are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them! If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with Thee" (Psalms 139:17-18). How much profit there is to be found in this! It consists in having fellowship with God, to enjoy His intimate affection, to receive a foretaste of heaven, to be changed into His image, to be adorned with the luster of His glory, and to enjoy all that your soul finds delight in. What more could you wish upon earth? Therefore, engage yourself in this exercise and become accustomed to it. Even if it is a difficult and arduous task at first, it will subsequently become more delightful, and the Lord will not permit you to seek Him in vain.

I do not wish to prescribe rules to you. Begin with it and you will experience yourself which way is best for you. Only make sure that you separate yourself fully, doing so with the intention and the desire to think of nothing else during that time. Let your heart go out in prayer for the reception of the Spirit, for quickening grace, as well as for guidance. If you perceive that you cannot make a beginning with this, then read a portion in the Word of God or sing a psalm.

084. Chapter 79: Singing

----- CHAPTER SEVENTY-NINE -----

Singing

Singing is a religious exercise by which, with the appropriate modulation of the voice, we worship, thank, and praise God.

It is a religious exercise, for we make use of the skill and sweetness of our voice to move others to have dealings with God. God has given man a voice to make his thoughts known to others. He has given man the ability to modulate his voice to either a high or a low pitch, or to speak slowly or rapidly, thereby enabling him to render his voice sweet and pleasant. It is also God's will that we shall use our voice in prayer, thanksgiving, and our speaking to Him: "Let Me hear thy voice" (Song of Solomon 2:14). Since the modulation of our voices at a suitable rhythm is capable of unlocking our hearts and stirring our emotions, God thus also wills that we shall lift up our hearts to Him in singing: "... singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord" (Colossians 3:16). However, our voice and the melody in and of themselves are not pleasing to God; rather, it is the motion of the heart relative to the spiritual matters which we express before the Lord in singing which pleases Him. Both the voice and the melody are means to bring us into a spiritual frame and to lift up our hearts heavenward -- as well as the hearts of those who hear us. The Proper Use of the Voice To singing belongs the appropriate modulation of the voice. One can sing in an unskilled manner when, for instance, we have an inclination to sing while being alone in order to give expression to those matters about which we are reading (and are recorded in non-poetic form), or those which issue forth from a godly heart. This is done while modulating the voice between a high and a low pitch and by singing either slowly or rapidly -- not in an artistic manner but according to the motions of the heart. A very godly farmer, whom I knew very well, used to say, "When I am alone in my field, I can sing all psalms, even though I do not know their tunes." Many of the godly will be able to confirm this from their own experience. The Lord has given some people the ability to create artistic pieces of music which express the affections of the heart in a marvelous manner and wondrously stir up the emotions. As the builders of Noah's ark received no advantage from the structure they built, it entirely being intended for Noah and his family, such is frequently also the case here. Many musicians greatly exert themselves; however, it is to the advantage of the godly. The entire world and all that is contained in it are theirs. This is also true for all forms of art; they may freely make use of them. The manner in which someone is moved by music will be consistent with the nature of his heart. A natural man will but be moved in a natural sense, whereas the melody will move the spiritual heart in a spiritual sense. The Various Types of Songs

Some musical compositions are of a stately and dignified nature, by which the heart is inclined toward solemnity and reverence. Such is true for the tunes of the psalms of David which are sung in the church. Some are of a melancholy nature by which we are moved to be sorrowful -- yes, even to weeping. Others are of a jubilant nature whereby the heart is lifted up to jubilate; such is the singing of the psalms in the Scottish churches. Again, others are of a very rhythmic nature, whereby the heart is stirred up to skip and leap for joy -- as Hannah said in her heart: "My heart rejoiceth in the Lord" (1 Samuel 2:1). Other compositions are very stern in nature, whereby the heart is ignited to anger and, so to speak, demands vengeance. If, however, the heart is spiritual, this spiritual heart, by way of various tunes, will become aware of spiritual motions consistent with these tunes, and by such inner motions will be drawn to God -- be it prayerfully, jubilantly, joyously, or while giving thanks and praising Him. Thus, the spiritual man does not merely relate to the melody; rather, the melody is complementary to the spiritual matters, and spiritual matters complement the melody -- in both cases the heart is involved. Thus, it can be that the heart, being in such a frame, will either yield both subject matter and melody, or the subject matter and melody will move the heart in such a manner. The more pleasant the voices or instruments are which sing or play these melodies, the more the heart is moved. When Jehoshaphat and two kings showed Elisha the peril in which their armies were, due to lack of water, he said, "But now bring me a minstrel. And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him" (2 Kings 3:15). By way of the playing of this instrument his spirit was quickened, and having been brought into a fitting frame, he received the revelation that they would receive water.

Singing Practiced from the Beginning of Time

Creatures have engaged in singing from the very beginning of creation. The angels, having been created upon the first day and being a witness to creation the following five days, glorified God concerning this in singing: "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38:7). Not all that transpired prior to the time of Moses has been recorded, but it is credible that the godly, from the time of Adam, have delighted themselves in singing. Job, who is considered to have lived during Abraham's time, makes mention of singing in his book: "Where is God my Maker, who giveth songs in the night" (Job 35:10). After the children of Israel had left Egypt and had gone through the sea on dry ground, they praised the Lord in song: "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the Lord" (Exodus 15:1). The ninetieth psalm has the following title: A prayer of Moses. Moses, his death being imminent, gave the children of Israel a song which had been dictated to him by the Lord (Deuteronomy 31:16-30). After Sisera had been defeated, Deborah sang a song (Judges 5:1).

David was the sweet psalmist (2 Samuel 23:1). To sing unto the Lord with instruments, and to lift up voice and heart to God, was his daily work. In His goodness the Lord has given us David's psalms in His Word. We have the substance of them, but both the Hebrew art of poetry and the melodies are mostly concealed from us. I maintain that all the music which is now to be found in the world is not comparable to David's music. I believe that the melody was then composed in harmony with the motions of the heart, giving expression to this in a most appropriate manner. Since the melody proceeded from a spiritual frame of heart, it was wondrously capable of stirring these emotions in others as well. The melody of a psalm could thus not be used for any other song, since that melody was only applicable to that inner motion and that given word. The combination of musical tones, inner motions, and words was such that it would cause all who heard it to be in ecstasy. Our music does not have such an effect. We sing the melody irrespective of whether it is consistent with both the inner motions of the heart and the words. Since the art of poetry and song primarily consisted in this at that time, it is simply not practical to seek to discover David's poetic artform -- much less the melodies he composed. Nevertheless, there are some elements here and there which are also to be found in Greek, Latin, and Dutch poetry.

Scripture Enjoins Us to Sing

David did not merely sing by himself, but continually exhorts everyone to sing. For that purpose he also submitted his psalms to be sung in the temple by the appointed chief singers. The textual references to this are so numerous that there is no need to point them out. After David's time we also find psalms among the prophets, along with many exhortations to sing. We find such exhortations also among those prophecies which declare that in the days of the New Testament men would praise the Lord with singing. "Sing unto the Lord; for He hath done excellent things" (Isaiah 12:5); "In that day sing ye unto her, A vineyard of red wine" (Isaiah 27:2); "O sing unto the Lord a new song: sing unto the Lord, all the earth" (Psalms 96:1). Not only are we exhorted in the Old Testament to sing, but this is true for the New Testament as well. "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" (Ephesians 5:19); "... teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" (Colossians 3:16); "Is any merry? let him sing psalms" (James 5:13); "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also" (1 Corinthians 14:15); "And they sung a new song" (Revelation 5:9).

Other Spiritual Songs in Addition to the Psalms A number of godly men have composed spiritual songs for this purpose with a variety of melodies. It appears that Luther has been the first one to do so during the Reformation. His songs are still sung today with edification by the Lutherans in their churches, as well as privately by us. In our days the unforgettable Justus Van Lodesteyn has composed a songbook which is second to none as far as spirituality is concerned. Cl. Marot has put the first fifty of David's psalms to rhyme in the French language, and Theodore Beza the other one hundred. Subsequent to this, Claud. Gaudemeliu, a famous musician in Paris (who perished as a martyr in the massacre of Paris), composed the melodies, which could not have been improved upon in the judgment of musicians. Petrus Dathenus has translated them in poetic form from the French, preserving the identical tunes. It would be desirable if an artistic and godly poet were to take upon himself the task to improve them by putting them to poetry in an identical fashion, and in better harmony with the original text, so that they could be accepted for public use in the churches [Note: This occurred in the year AD 1773.] . The decision of the Dutch Synods has been very correct indeed, namely, that none other but the Psalms of David are to be used in the churches. The General Lack of Singing Lamented

It amazes me that the godly in the Netherlands have so little desire to sing, and also engage in this very infrequently. It is true that singing little is consistent with the lackadaisicalness of our nation (compared to other nations). Nevertheless, worldly people sing quite a bit, but they sing vain songs which stir up the heart toward vanity and immorality. The godly are, however, generally silent in these parts. The one says, "I am too busy"; the other, "I have no voice"; the third, "I do not know any of the melodies"; the fourth, "I do not dare for fear the neighbors would hear me and deem me to be a hypocrite." All of this is, however, not truly the problem, but it is a lack of desire. If the heart were more spiritual and joyous, we would more readily praise the Lord with joyful song and thereby stir up ourselves and others. I am here not only speaking of singing in church. (Even there many do not sing; and for some the very best they can do is read the psalm silently.) Exhortation to Sing

It is thus needful that I stir up everyone to sing -- not only psalms, but also spiritual songs. Therefore, believers, dispense with this listlessness. "Serve the Lord with gladness: come before His presence with singing" (Psalms 100:2).

First, you must know that singing is not a neutral matter in which you may or may not engage. Rather, it is God's command. As we have shown you before, God requires this from you and desires to be served by you in this manner. Consider these and similar quotes and impress them upon your heart as being mandatory. Begin to engage in this duty with an obedient heart; break open your mouth and your closed heart will open as well.

Secondly, God has created this ability in the very nature of man. This is to be observed in children of three or four years old. Take note of how they walk around the house while singing at the same time. Observe how even in nature the birds in their own way already praise their Creator early in the morning by way of singing. If you go outside in the morning, or if you have birds in your home, you will hear it. Will the birds and small children rebuke you, and would you, who have the greatest reason in the world to sing joyously, be dumb and silent?

Thirdly, it is the work of angels, for they glorify the Lord in song (cf. Job 38:7; Luke 2:13-14; Revelation 5:11-12), and it is the work of the church upon earth and in heaven: "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation" (Revelation 5:9); "And they sung as it were a new song before the throne ... and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth" (Revelation 14:3); "And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty" (Revelation 15:3). If you have no desire to sing, then what will you do in church and in heaven? Furthermore, if you are desirous to magnify the Lord with an eternal hallelujah, you should presently begin upon earth.

Fourthly, God is particularly pleased when His children praise Him in song. There where the Lord is sweetly praised in song, there He will come with His blessings. "But Thou art holy, O Thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel" (Psalms 22:3). It is noteworthy to consider what transpired at the dedication of the temple. "It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one ... that then the house was filled with a cloud ... so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God" (2 Chronicles 5:13-14). When Jehoshaphat, together with his army, lifted up their voices in joyous exclamation and song (2 Chronicles 20:22), the Lord defeated their enemies. When Paul and Silas sang praises unto God in the middle of the night, the doors of the prison were opened and the bands of all the prisoners were loosened (Acts 16:25-26). Therefore, if you are desirous to please the Lord, and delight in having the Lord visit your soul and desire to experience His help, then accustom yourself to singing.

Fifthly, singing will move a heart which frequently remains unmoved during prayer. It can be that while singing the tears will drip upon the book. Have you not frequently experienced this? Have not you been stirred up by hearing the singing of others? Others will therefore also be stirred up by your singing. The Papists in France knew this, and therefore they strictly forbade the singing of psalms and meted out cruel punishment for this -- even prior to massacring the church. Therefore, no longer be silent, but lift up your voices -- in spite of the devil and all the enemies of God -- to the honor and glory of your God, as this has done you too much good already (and still does) than that you would refrain from thanking the Lord with songs of praise. You must furthermore do so in order that you might stir up others to serve the Lord with gladness. It will then become manifest to all natural men that godliness is a joyous rather than a grievous life, and they will become desirous for this as well. And if you sing, sing with understanding, with a fervent desire, conscious of the presence of the Lord (and thus reverently), with a modest demeanor, and with both inner and external attentiveness, so that it may all be becoming before the Lord and to the edification of others who surround us.

085. Chapter 80: Vows

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY -----

Vows A vow is a commitment toward God. It is a voluntary commitment either to perform a good deed or to refrain from something (one having the capacity to do so), either as an expression of gratitude or to promote our spiritual wellbeing. A vow is a commitment. He who previously may have been without obligation in a given matter, is placed under obligation by means of a vow. Man is under obligation to God in all that he possesses and does. This devolves from the fact that He is God and man a creature. Every human being is acquainted with this obligation, but by his actions he violates this obligation. He who enters into the covenant of grace obligates himself (who actually already was under obligation) with approbation, delight, and willingness to be the Lord's eternally and to be governed by the Spirit of God according to His will. He gives his hand to the Lord and frequently reiterates this commitment with all his heart. Observe this in the following passages: "One shall say, I am the Lord's" (Isaiah 44:5); "O Lord, truly I am Thy servant; I am Thy servant" (Psalms 116:16). This is one and the same thing as reference being made to a swearing unto the Lord that we shall serve Him. "And they entered into a covenant to seek the Lord God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul; and they swore unto the Lord with a loud voice" (2 Chronicles 15:12; 2 Chronicles 15:14); "I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep Thy righteous judgments" (Psalms 119:106). In such swearing they did not have in view a perfect observance of the law, for they knew in advance that they were neither capable of, nor would they in reality do this; thus they could not swear to do so. Rather, their focus was upon the service of God in general; namely, that they would neither forsake the Lord nor depart from the way of obedience, and thus not turn to idolatry. Their focus was, therefore, upon an unfeigned and heartfelt intent to serve the Lord in all things with a willing soul. As such, and from this perspective, we may and must obligate ourselves to God by way of a vow. If such a person sins subsequent to this, it will be contrary to his intention, and it is thus not a breaking of his vow. For he, knowing that it was beyond his power not to sin, did not vow that he would not sin at all. A True Vow: A Commitment Toward God

It is a commitment toward God. This is not only a commitment toward God, but the promise itself is made toward God; that is, whatever one promises to either do or refrain from doing, he will do Godward. Such promises are neither to be made to angels nor deceased saints, for that would be as much an act of idolatry as worshiping them, as the making of a vow is a religious exercise. When we promise to give something to the poor, such a promise is not made to the poor but rather to God; namely, that we shall bestow our gift upon the poor. "If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word" (Numbers 30:2).

(1) A vow must pertain to a good matter. Some matters are good in and of themselves; God has commanded them and we are thus under obligation to do them. The believer approves of this obligation, applies this to himself, and frequently repeats it with all his heart. Some matters are, however, inherently neutral. As far as usage is concerned man is free to either avail himself of them or not -- such as the consumption of wine, tea, or fruit; that is, in cases other than illness or given circumstances which necessitate their use. When a person uses such inherently neutral matters, they are then no longer neutral in nature. Then we must use them in faith, according to precept, and to the honor of God. In the Old Testament, vows related primarily to free will offerings. They could not promise, however, to sacrifice either swine or men, for that was an abomination to the Lord. Having made a vow in regard to a free will offering and upon proceeding with the sacrifice, they had to sacrifice according to the law. Such is also true for us, for when we make a vow, it must pertain to lawful matters.

(2) A vow must relate to a specific matter we are acquainted with as to both its nature and circumstances, and of which we are assured that we may and are able to fulfill. Jephthah sinned in this respect when he made a general vow to the Lord. His general vow was inherently incorrect for it pertained to people who would come out of the door of his house and meet him, since he could not expect that sheep or calves would come to meet him. If he did indeed sacrifice his daughter, who came out to meet him, as a burnt-offering, he did commit an abomination -- he who otherwise defeated the children of Ammon by faith (Hebrews 11:32). Had his faith been but a miraculous faith and he, in reality, was an unconverted man, he could have easily committed such an abominable deed. Since, however, he was in truth a godly man, and his zeal having enticed him to make such a reckless and abominable vow -- if he indeed executed the vow he had made, he would have committed a double evil and sinned dreadfully against the Lord. It then serves as a beacon for us not to make evil, reckless, and unrestricted vows; furthermore, even if we have made them, we are not to perform them. It is not a sin to renege on an evil and reckless vow; rather, it is a virtue if we do not perform it due to the fear of, and in obedience to, God. The sin is in the vow itself. We need to humble ourselves about that, but not about the breaking of that vow; for that we must give thanks. Thus, if someone greatly desires to have a son and prays for a son, promising to give this son back to the Lord by causing him to become a minister, he sins if he made this vow without mentioning any conditions -- such as, evident fitness for this office and willingness to yield himself to this with his entire heart, as well as whether he himself would be able to meet the expenses without shortchanging his family and other children. Furthermore, if such qualifications would not be present and he would nevertheless cause him to be a minister, he would then sin in a double sense. The Making of Vows Objection: One might object and say, "He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not" (Psalms 15:4).

Answer (1) This is applicable when the vow does not pertain to an evil matter, or if its execution does not lead us into sin. Even if, however, the performance of the vow were difficult and injurious for us; even if we would wish that we had not made that vow; and even if we would be able to perform it without sinning and without harm to ourselves, our loved ones, or others, then we must nevertheless perform it.

(2) However, according to the original text this passage reads as follows: "He that sweareth to do evil." Thus, the meaning is as follows: The godly person will maintain his tender uprightness to such an extent that, even if he had sworn to do evil, he would nevertheless not do it, and thus not depart from his uprightness; he would then not perform such an evil oath.

(3) It must be a matter which is within the realm of what we are capable of doing. It would be a reckless vow if someone were to promise God that for the rest of his life he would not commit one more sin; or that, to all eternity, he would not again commit that sin which so easily besets him. Furthermore, he would grievously sin if he were to attach an obligation to punishment to this vow in the event that he were to commit it again. For he would then have made a vow which would be beyond the realm of his ability, not having given heed to his evil heart. He must humble himself about such a vow, and the Lord is so good that He will not cause that judgment to come upon such an upright person which he had invoked upon himself out of great hatred for sin, failing to take his own corruption into account. It would also be a sinful vow -- and it would be sinful if he were to perform it -- if someone were to promise a sum of money to the poor which he either would not be able to produce or, if he were able, would be to the detriment of himself and his children, bringing them outside of the circumstances in which God had placed them. This also pertains to all other things which are beyond the realm of our ability or those that could be beyond our control prior to the time that the vow is to be performed. Thus, we may not make vows of perpetual duration relative to neutral matters, for we do not know what can transpire in the meantime. Consider, for instance, people who presently have the gift of continence. They may not promise to remain unmarried during their entire lifetime, for their disposition could change and other circumstances could surface, making it advisable for them to marry. We must thus be very careful in making vows.

(4) When we do make vows, we must not act as if we were making a business deal with God, such as: "If Thou wilt give me this, then I will give Thee this." Rather, it must be made as an expression of gratitude toward God. "Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most High" (Psalms 50:14). When we are in need, we are to pray for deliverance. Included with the grounds which we present in our petition should be that we desire to serve the Lord with joy, and to thank and glorify Him upon having delivered us -- and that we would also manifest our gratitude by desisting from, giving, or doing a given thing. The other reason for making vows must be the promotion of our spiritual well-being. There can at times be something of an external nature which one either may or may not do, and we experience that either doing or not doing this causes continually a falling into sin. Thus, the believer prays against this sin, and as he prays, promises God that within a specified period of time, he will either refrain from or perform a given deed (it being within his capacity and control to do so), so that in the intervening period there may be and remain an improvement in his circumstances. Everyone must know for himself what the conditions for such a commitment are. For example, one can promise that during a specified period:

-- One will not drink wine, even though one presently does, and will subsequently continue to, drink wine. It would then not be possible to detect that one had made a vow, nor would it render one suspect of hypocrisy.

-- One will deprive himself of food and eat only once a day. This is then not intended to be a day of fasting, but rather to restrain his nature from being stirred up to lust.

-- One will not use a given external adornment, without which he would nevertheless be adorned in an honest and moderate manner -- doing all this to keep his pride in check. In all such matters, great attention must be given to the circumstances. We must not put snares in our own way by either doing or not doing something which, by way of attending circumstances, would be too noticeable.

(5) If, when considering all the circumstances, we have made a good vow, we must also be very conscientious in performing it. "Vow, and pay unto the Lord your God" (Psalms 76:11); "When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it: for the Lord thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee" (Deuteronomy 23:21); "Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay" (Ecclesiastes 5:5).

David was most conscientious in this as is evident in Psalms 66:13-14 : "I will pay Thee my vows, which my lips have uttered, and my mouth hath spoken, when I was in trouble."

086. Chapter 81: Concerning Experience

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-ONE ----- Concerning Experience

Experience is a matter only few are acquainted with and is utilized by even less. However, it is of much benefit. The proverb says: "Experience is the best teacher." When we intend to hire someone, we ask, "Does he have experience?" A doctor, captain, or craftsman who has experience will be most in demand. Such is also true in the spiritual realm. Experience engenders the prosperity of the Christian, and thus we also wish to say something concerning this.

Experience is a godly exercise, consisting in a gathering of numerous noteworthy incidents for the purpose of using them to our benefit and that of others.

It is a godly exercise. "A brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this," says the psalmist in Psalms 92:6. However, it is one of the activities of the godly who do gather such a treasure. The righteous shall see it, and rejoice, the wise will observe these things, and "they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord" (Psalms 107:42-43). They exercise themselves in this in a godly manner: with a godly heart, with godly intent, and with a godly objective. This exercise consists in a gathering of numerous noteworthy incidents. God not only gives commands and promises to His children. These must be heeded with much attention and an obedient heart, for: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (1 Samuel 15:22); "Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all Thy commandments" (Psalms 119:6). However, God also manifests Himself by numerous works. He frequently delivers His people and specific individuals in a remarkable manner. He comforts them when they grieve most bitterly, and executes extraordinary judgments upon the oppressors of His people. He preserved Noah in the ark, delivered His people Israel with a mighty hand out of Egypt, and fed them forty years in the wilderness with bread rained down from heaven. He delivered David out of the hand of Saul, Daniel from the lions' den, his companions out of the fiery oven, and Peter out of prison. He destroyed Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea, and slew 185,000 men in one night by the hand of an angel in the army which had besieged Jerusalem. Yes, the entire Bible is filled with numerous accounts of deliverances of His people as well as of judgments upon their oppressors. God's children will bring together all such and similar deeds of God. They seek them out, meditate upon them, and analyze them carefully. They imprint them in their memories and, so to speak, establish a mental file. The Objective of Remembering God's Dealings The objective is not to be inquisitive only in order to be knowledgeable and able to talk about them. Rather, their objective is to derive personal benefit from such reflection in order to be comforted and strengthened. The church does so to help and comfort others by recounting God's dealings with the godly when in need; and also to warn others thereby, relating to them God's common dealings with such sinners, and thus to arouse them and bring them to repentance.

First, the Lord wills that His people gather together a treasure of experiences and make use of them at all occasions: "And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness" (Deuteronomy 8:2); "Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will show thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee” (Deuteronomy 32:7); “Remember His marvellous works that He hath done; His wonders, and the judgments of His mouth” (Psalms 105:5).

Secondly, we know this to have been the practice of the saints who have given examples to be followed by us. David was thus engaged: “I remember the days of old; I meditate on all Thy works; I muse on the work of Thy hands” (Psalms 143:5). Asaph did likewise: “I will meditate also of all Thy work, and talk of Thy doings” (Psalms 77:12). “Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart” (Luke 2:19).

Thirdly, we can infer this from the purpose for which God has performed these deeds, has caused them to be recorded, and has decreed that they should be told to others, namely, that the following generation would know them and thus be dissuaded from sinning, be exhorted to godliness, and be strengthened by trusting in God’s help. “I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old: which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us. We will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and His strength, and His wonderful works that He hath done. For He established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which He commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children: that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children: that they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep His commandments” (Psalms 78:2-7).

If to that end God has done so many great deeds for His people, and has caused these deeds to be recorded for this purpose as well, it is our duty to give heed to them, attentively take note of them, and commit them to our memories, so that we may have them readily at hand when they are applicable to our circumstances. The Sources from Which Experiences May Be Gleaned: Scripture, Church History, and Personal Experience This treasure of various incidents, judgments, deliverances, and divine comforts are gleaned first of all from the Word of God; a great variety of divine deeds has been recorded there. We human beings are but of yesterday, and our experience pertains to but a very small time frame. The goodness of the Lord has provided us, however, with a history of His deeds which originates at the beginning of this world and will continue until its very end. We ought to make a study of all God’s dealings with His people by attentively examining them one by one. We would thus immediately have an example at hand for every event that occurs, and this would be subservient for instruction or encouragement. Many of the Scottish divines exercised themselves in this in an exceptional manner, and have shown a marvelous ability to bring forth a history from the Bible and to apply it.

Secondly, this treasure can also be derived from church history, books about martyrs, and the biographies of the godly by Melchior Adamus in Latin, by Corput in Dutch, and by Koelman, who has added several biographies as an appendix in The Christian’s Great Interest. We may observe the good hand of God in the fact that so many incidents have been recorded and have come into our hands. In all our encounters we time and again conduct ourselves as fools; but such recorded incidents immediately yield light, counsel, comfort, and courage. Add to this the experiences of the godly with whom you have fellowship. In the Lord’s providence you may have the privilege of enjoying such company, enabling you to hear how the Lord has dealt with them and what manner of deliverances they have experienced -- so that you would take note of it and derive benefit yourself from it.

Thirdly, the history of your own life -- if you would but attentively take notice -- would yield you a treasure of experiences. I shall show you the way as to how you may glean many experiences from your own life. Answer for yourself the following questions:

(1) From whom have you descended? Who were your father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, uncles, aunts, and cousins? What is your status in the world -- high or low? In what city, village, or on what street or lane were you born? Were they rich or poor, honorable or despised, ungodly or godly? At what occasion did your ancestors or you come to this country, city, or village?

(2) How were you raised -- in simplicity or luxuriously? What did your parents do to earn a living? Was there peace or discord in your home? What was their religious persuasion? Was God's Word read in your home? Were you instructed in the knowledge of the truth? How did you conduct yourself in your parental home?

(3) What specific events transpired in your parental home? What difficulties, perplexities, fears, and concerns have there been, and what was the ultimate outcome?

(4) Where did you attend school, where were you employed, and what did you encounter there? With whom have you resided? With whom have you kept company? What trade have you plied? What did you encounter there and how did you conduct yourself? What trials and accidents did you have, and what was the ultimate outcome?

(5) How did you live during your childhood, during your teenage years, and in your marriage? To what sins have you cleaved? In what manner did the Lord deliver you from your perplexities, and by what means?

(6) If you are converted, have you been a changed person from your youth? If not, what thoughts did you entertain about your present and future state? By what means were you brought under an efficacious ministry? By what occasion did you come into the company of godly people? How did you come to the knowledge of the truth, and how did you come under conviction? What transactions did you at first have with Christ? What anxious strife and assaults did you endure and in what manner were you delivered from them? What comforts, strengthenings of your faith, and assurances have you enjoyed? What vicissitudes have you experienced? Do you still remember some encounters? Do you still know those places where you were in great distress, were enabled to pray in an extraordinary manner, and where all was made exceptionally well? What bodily discomforts have you encountered? In what manner were you strengthened in them, how did the Lord grant deliverance, and by what means did He do so?

Failure to Reflect upon God's Dealings Rebuked

If you had taken careful note of and remembered all these things, or if as yet you would betake yourself to bring all these to remembrance and record them, how great a collection of experiences you would now have! How useful they would now be to you, and how great would be the benefit you would derive from them!

How have you fared, however? Did you already gather a treasure of experiences? How many of the godly will be ashamed when they perceive that such was their duty, having had a large field from which they could have gleaned a large supply! Yes; you ought to be ashamed, for:

First, God sharply rebukes you for this. "They soon forgot His works" (Psalms 106:13). This was a sin of the disciples, and this sin has been described: "For they considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart was hardened" (Mark 6:52).

Secondly, it being a sin, it likewise issues forth from sin, namely:

(1) The sin of inattentiveness. One permits God to work, chastise, and bless, and yet no one gives heed to it. This is the sin of the unconverted: "They regard not the work of the Lord" (Isaiah 5:12); "A brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this" (Psalms 92:6).

(2) The sin of unbelief; when evil befalls man, he considers the secondary causes. Even though he does not deny God's hand in it, he does not believingly note it to be such. If God blesses and grants a person his desire, he then acts as if it came about by chance and as if the matter would have come about even if he had not prayed -- and thus he disregards God. "If I had called, and He had answered me (by granting me the matter for which I prayed); yet would I not believe that He had hearkened unto my voice (namely, that God did so upon my prayer)" (Job 9:16).

(3) The sin of forgetfulness; we then carefully take note of the matter as it occurs, but make no use of it, and do not deeply impress it upon our heart. It therefore does not come to mind when it would suit our situation: "Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength" (Isaiah 17:10).

Thirdly, this gives birth to many of your unseasonable spiritual conditions, as well as the fact that you remain in them for such a long time. You are ignorant concerning God's dealings with His children and with yourself, and you thus remain in the dark. This in turn engenders the instability regarding your spiritual state, your excessive inner turbulence, your discouragements, and many other evil frames and sins. How grievous it then is to you that you have stored away so few experiences! How grievous it will be to have kept yourself in such a low and childlike condition for such a long time, considering that you could have been a steadfast, stable, and strong Christian! Oh, how grievous it is to you that you have given so little heed to God's dealings; that you have let Him work, so to speak, in vain, and that you have not manifested any gratitude to Him for this! Humble yourself before the Lord and seek forgiveness.

Believers Exhorted

Therefore, seek to gather a treasure of experiences for yourself from those spacious fields to which we have directed you.

First, this teaches us to discern and acknowledge the dealings of God and to thank and glorify the Lord for this. It is to that end that the Lord has manifested Himself to you by way of His works, and it is your salvation, delight, and felicity to be thus engaged. Observe this in Psalms 18:1-50, for when David reflected upon the mercies of the Lord previously manifested toward him, he concludes, "Therefore will I give thanks unto Thee, O Lord, among the heathen, and sing praises unto Thy name. Great deliverance giveth He to His king; and showeth mercy to His anointed, to David, and to his seed for evermore" (Psalms 18:49-50). He expresses himself likewise in Psalms 103:2 : "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits."

Secondly, it humbles you when, on the one hand, you consider your ancestry, insignificance, and sinfulness, and on the other hand the wondrous leadings, protections, and deliverances according to body and soul: "I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth, which Thou hast showed unto Thy servant; for with my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am become two bands" (Genesis 32:10); "Who am I, O Lord GOD? and what is my house, that Thou hast brought me hitherto" (2 Samuel 7:18). This humble disposition is most pleasing to the Lord and He multiplies His blessings to such. "God ... giveth grace to the humble" (1 Peter 5:5).

Thirdly, it kindles a strong desire in believers for that sweet frame in which they previously were. This will be accompanied with tenderness of heart, considering that they are presently so far removed from this desirable frame and have to do without it. "Oh that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me; when His candle shined upon my head, and when by His light I walked through darkness" (Job 29:2-3); "Lord, where are Thy former lovingkindnesses" (Psalms 89:49); "When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holyday" (Psalms 42:4). Observe this also in regard to the church: "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion" (Psalms 137:1). Oh, how many a tear flows out of our eyes when we consider our previous circumstances and compare our present circumstances to them!

Fourthly, it sustains us in times of distress and it can serve as a means to recovery. We shall then reason as follows: "The Lord does not change, and He will finish the work which He has begun in a person. The fact is that the Lord has previously been gracious to me. How zealously did I seek the Lord at that time and how abundantly was the Spirit of prayer poured out upon me! I still remember how I was enabled to pour out my heart before the Lord with many tears and with much perseverance. I have not yet forgotten how I was able to receive Jesus as my Surety and how I entrusted my soul to Him; how I received assurance concerning my salvation; how I loved Jesus; how I delighted and rejoiced in the enjoyment of my love relationship with the Lord, and how painstakingly I refrained from sin." Thus the soul, while estranged from the Lord, will encourage herself. She will say, "The Lord remains the same, His love does not change, and He will again come to me." It is thus that the soul supports and encourages herself with her previous experiences. Observe this with David: "Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate. I remember the days of old; I meditate on all Thy works; I muse on the work of Thy hands. I stretch forth my hands unto Thee: my soul thirsteth after Thee, as a thirsty land" (Psalms 143:4-6); and also with Asaph: "I have considered the days of old, the years of ancient times. I call to remembrance my song in the night: I commune with mine own heart: and my spirit made diligent search" (Psalms 77:5-6).

Fifthly, it causes us to trust in the Lord and, while exercising this trust, to be encouraged in the performance of our duty. Paul found strength in his previous experience: "Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that He will yet deliver us" (2 Corinthians 1:10). It made David courageous: "The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, He will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine" (1 Samuel 17:37).

Reflection upon Past Experience Engenders Spiritual Virtues

Sixthly, experience engenders the exercise of all manner of spiritual virtues, such as faith, hope, love, prayer, patience, and holiness.

(1) It engenders a godly life: "What shall I say? He hath both spoken unto me, and Himself hath done it: I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul" (Isaiah 38:15). He remembered his previous trial, and this now prompted him to refrain himself from sin and to walk carefully, lest he come into such straits again (Psalms 116:8-9).

(2) It engenders faith. The disciples, who twice had witnessed how the Lord Jesus had fed thousands of people with a few loaves, had not taken note of the miracle of the loaves, and therefore their faith faltered, for their faith was not in exercise when at another occasion they had forgotten to take bread along (Mark 8:14; Mark 8:16). If, however, we may have gathered a treasure of experiences, this habit will render us strong in the faith.

(3) It engenders hope: "And experience (worketh) hope" (Romans 5:4).

(4) It engenders love: "I love the Lord, because He hath heard my voice" (Psalms 116:1).

(5) It engenders the fear of God. If by way of experience we have accumulated examples of the judgments God has sent upon such sins, we shall learn to refrain ourselves from such sins by way of the fear of God. To that end the apostle holds forth the sins and plagues of Israel in the desert, saying, "Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things" (1 Corinthians 10:6).

(6) It engenders zeal in prayer. By remembering previous answers to prayer, we shall approach the Lord with more freedom and plead with an increased faith that our prayer will be answered. We would not be able to do so unless we had taken note of previous answers and remembered them (cf. Psalms 85:6-7). There, the psalmist holds before the Lord various blessings which have previously been bestowed upon him, and upon them he pleads: "Wilt Thou not revive us again: that Thy people may rejoice in Thee" (Psalms 85:6).

(7) Yes, experience not only renders us fit to comfort ourselves, but also others. "Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God" (2 Corinthians 1:4). Therefore take careful note of all that transpires, remember everything, write it down, reflect upon it often, tell it to others, and make daily use of what you have previously experienced -- to the benefit of yourself and others.

087. Chapter 82: Love for One's Neighbor

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-TWO ----- Love for One's Neighbor

God is love, has love for humankind, and manifests this love in the natural realm to all men, as well as to His elect in the covenant of grace. God requires love in His law -- His law being comprehended in the one word love. The objects of love are God and one's neighbor. For that purpose the law has been recorded upon two tables of stone. On the first is recorded how and in which way we are to manifest our love toward God, and on the second is recorded the manner how and in which way we are to manifest our love toward our neighbor. It is the latter we now wish to discuss.

Love is the congenial frame of heart of God's children, wrought of God, whereby their heart is engaged with desires to have harmonious fellowship with their neighbor, and to seek their welfare as well as their own.

Love is a congenial frame of the heart. Among all virtues, love is the most eminent, pure, and delightful; it is a disposition of the heart. The acts of thinking, speaking, and any other activities are not love itself -- even though these actions may issue forth from love -- for such actions can also take place apart from love. Rather, the very disposition of the heart is loving and it has a propensity toward love. It is thoroughly permeated with love, and it finds delight in being thus disposed. There can be motions in the heart of aversion, anger, and pity, which, even if they were not sinful, engender some measure of grief. However, love is radiant, sweet, and joyous in nature, and the stronger this propensity and the more powerful its manifestation, the greater its sweetness will be. The subject or the seat of love is to be found in the heart of the children of God. After the fall, man in his natural state is "hateful, and hating" (Titus 3:3). He has the ability to love, for this is a human characteristic; however, he distorts it by focusing upon the wrong object and by using it in a faulty manner. Man intensely loves himself, and he only loves that from which he can derive pleasure for himself. He hates and has an aversion for whatever is not subservient to this or is against him. An unconverted person is not a true lover of his neighbor; however, regeneration changes the heart of God's children and thereby they begin to love their neighbor in the right manner. Regeneration reforms man according to the image of God, and Christ is formed in them. Since God is love, someone who is a partaker of the divine nature consequently also has love -- that is, according to the measure in which he is a partaker of the divine nature. The congregation of Colosse had love for all the saints (Colossians 1:4), and the congregation of the Thessalonians was "taught of God to love one another" (1 Thessalonians 4:9). The heart is the essential seat of all virtues, and this is therefore also true for love. "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart" (1 Timothy 1:5). Since the image of God resides in the heart, love likewise resides in the heart. It does not remain hidden there, however, for if the heart is aflame within, that flame will leap forth to the outside. The object of this love is one's neighbor; that is, all who are of one blood and have come forth from one and the same Adam. We are to consider man as either presently having the image of God, or as man, or as a sinner in an unconverted state.

Furthermore, we can distinguish between various relationships: parents, children, sisters and brothers, relatives, or strangers. They are all the objects of love. The exception here is when we note sinners as sinners; however, as human beings they continue to be the object of love in a general sense -- not only to do good to them, but to love them, and thus to let our benevolence issue forth from that. Since there is such variety regarding types of neighbors, and the relationships to them, love will be expressed differently to the one than to the other. The Essence of Love The very essence of love is that it is relational in nature. Man is a social being who desires to have fellowship and communion with his fellow man. In this respect we can view love as:

(1) The singular desire of having fellowship with a human being. A person would be more dead than alive if he were alone in the world or on an island -- all hope being cut off of ever seeing or hearing a human being.

(2) Affection. There can be matters in another person's life which may or must rightfully prevent us from having familiar fellowship with him. Being hindered in doing so is grievous, however, and one would desire that this hindrance be removed -- be it that he would be converted, or that a given sin (being an impediment to spiritual communion and continually putting us in danger of being polluted) would not manifest itself so strongly in him. We shall, however, love him in spite of this, and the desire for fellowship remains. We shall make a wholehearted effort to do good to him in body and soul, and must rejoice when he prospers and grieve when it goes ill with him. It is thus that Paul loved Israel -- presently unbelieving and striving against the truth -- according to the flesh: "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved" (Romans 10:1). Thus, we must even love our enemies -- those who are hostile and manifest enmity toward us (Matthew 5:44).

(3) Good will; that is, if we are fully one with our neighbor in the mutual enjoyment of delight, pleasure, and happiness. God is the primary and preeminent object of love. Love toward all those in whom there is some resemblance of God flows forth out of this love for God. The greater this resemblance, the greater this love will be. In addition to this there is God's command to love, which He gives us in order that we find our delight in this. Even though the angels resemble God to a higher degree than men of this earth do, they nevertheless do not qualify as our neighbors -- and are thus not to be loved as such. Therefore, the love of good will flows both from the love to God and from a love for compliance with the commands of God. The one who loves will thus unite himself with this object with pleasure and delight: "Every one that loveth Him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of Him" (1 John 5:1). This love not only manifests itself in esteem for the regenerate, but it also strives to be united with them. The nature of love is such that it establishes a union. Therefore the apostle calls love, "the bond of perfectness" (Colossians 3:14), and in Colossians 2:2 he says, "That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love." It is thus written concerning the first church, "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul" (Acts 4:32). Christ prays for this: "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us" (John 17:21). This love of good will only exists between believers, since they believe of each other that God loves them, and that they love God. This love is called brotherly love: "Let brotherly love continue" (Hebrews 13:1). This is not to suggest that the godly only manifest love to the godly, but the reasons for exercising the love of good will are only to be found in them. When the basis for such love is not to be found in others, the godly can also not love them in this manner. Nevertheless, they love the unregenerate with the love of affection, seeking their welfare, doing to them all that love requires toward such an object, manifesting nevertheless in all their dealings the incompatibility and difference between them and the godly. The apostle does not want us to limit ourselves to love for the godly only, but our love must also extend to others. "... to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity" [Note: The Statenvertaling reads: "... liefde jegens allen," that is, "charity toward all."] (2 Peter 1:7). Wherever there is a loving heart, it will manifest itself toward every object in which something loveable is to be found, or toward those concerning whom God has obligated them in some measure. The Origin of Love

God is the original cause of this love. This divine spark is not kindled spontaneously in us, but is kindled by God in the heart. He is therefore called the God of love (2 Corinthians 13:11). The Holy Spirit authors love: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love" (Galatians 5:22). The Thessalonians were "taught of God to love one another" (1 Thessalonians 4:9). The Holy Spirit, regenerating the godly according to the image of God and making them to be partakers of the divine nature, creates in them a new nature which enables them to love. As soon as they, as regenerate, lift up their enlightened eyes, they -- in the light of God's countenance -- behold that He is altogether lovely. Their new loving nature will immediately exercise love toward the adorable God; they love Him, because He first loved them (1 John 4:19). The godly are not only cognizant of the Spirit within them, but also in others. They discern who they are who in some measure resemble God and love Him -- and thus also who is or is not loved by God. Therefore their loving heart is attracted to such persons and expresses love toward them. The godly delight in such persons and desire to be intimately united with them. Their heart delights and rejoices in mutual fellowship. Furthermore, their new loving nature is attracted to all men whom they encounter, as they have been created in like manner as they were. It grieves the godly that such men are upon the way of destruction and in love they seek to guide them on the right way. They are sensitive to their bodily misery and will help them. They rejoice when all goes well with them, and they are friendly and kind toward everyone. The Effects or Manifestation of Love The effects or manifestations of love are manifold and vary according to the nature of the object and our relationship to it. Together they constitute the duties which the second table of the law imposes upon us. "Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (Romans 13:8-10).

Concerning the manifestation of love we must note the following:

(1) The motive and the fountain from which it issues forth. This is the heart, as we have delineated before, and this love is therefore upright, heartfelt, and fervent. "See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently" (1 Peter 1:22).

(2) The means whereby this love is executed: in words, with the countenance, and in deeds. Love divorced from the heart is hypocrisy, and the heart without love is void of fruit. The countenance must be friendly: "Finally ... be courteous" [Note: The Statenvertaling reads: "Zijt ... vriendelijk," that is, "Be friendly."] (1 Peter 3:8). Our words are not to be abrasive, but kind, wise, and pleasant: "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt" (Colossians 4:6). Our deeds must be faithful and resolute: "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth" (1 John 3:18).

(3) The measure or extent to which we are to love is the measure or extent to which man loves himself. As heartily, truthfully, readily, and faithfully as a man must rightfully love himself, so he must also love his neighbor. "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (James 2:8).

(4) The specific deeds whereby this love is executed either pertain to the soul or the body. As far as the soul is concerned, we are to pray for each other (Romans 10:1), instruct each other in the way of salvation (Acts 18:26), rebuke and exhort each other (Hebrews 3:13), warn against, not suffer sin in each other (Leviticus 19:17), and comfort each other (1 Thessalonians 5:14). As far as the body is concerned, we are to feed the hungry, give drink to those who are athirst, clothe the naked, visit the sick, give lodging to the stranger, help someone in whatever perplexity he may be, and support him by counsel and in deed (Matthew 25:35-36). That is the labor of love referred to in (1 Thessalonians 1:3). This Love Inherent in Adam's Nature The human nature of Adam was created with love for the neighbor; and after the fall God has by renewal commanded His people to love their neighbor. He did so in the law declared from Mount Sinai, its second table being: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Matthew 22:39). This has also been enjoined by the prophets and the apostles (Leviticus 19:18; Leviticus 19:34; Deuteronomy 10:19). Impress this upon your heart -- not only as being your obligation, but also to motivate you to engage in your duty: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another" (John 13:34). It is the Lord Jesus Himself, having exemplified love for us, who commands us to do so. Therefore we must very much take this to heart. "I give (it) unto you"; "This is My commandment, that ye love one another" (John 15:17); "These things I command you" (John 15:17); "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love" (Romans 12:10); "Honour all men" (1 Peter 2:17); "Love as brethren" (1 Peter 3:8); "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another" (1 John 4:11).

Proofs of its Absence Not only can everyone be convinced from the foregoing as to what his duty is, but he can discern as in a mirror how far he falls short in love, or how closely he resembles this standard. We have shown before that all love toward our neighbor has its origin in love to God in Christ Jesus, and therefore only those who are born of God, who by faith are united to God in Christ and love God as their reconciled Father, will rightly love their neighbor. Furthermore, such will have as their primary and foremost object of love those who are born of God, are partakers of the divine nature, are loved of God, and who love God. We have shown that by reason of this disposition they extend their love to all who are of the same human origin -- even though they do not have the image of God and consequently cannot be loved with the love of good will and with union of heart. They will nevertheless love them with the love of affection, being desirous to do good to them and to protect them against harm, while maintaining a distance due to the difference of their natures.

Examine yourself in light of this, and observe whether you will pass the test. It is certain that the following do not have love:

(1) They who do not love God. Such is the condition of all the unconverted, whose nature has been exposed in chapter 14. If we do not love God, it is impossible to love those who bear resemblance to God, as they have something of God within them. "By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep His commandments" (1 John 5:2). The reverse argument is that he who does not love God also does not love His children.

(2) They who love the godly for the wrong reasons and with a wrong perspective. It does indeed occur that the unconverted love the godly, but this is not prompted by the fact that the godly are loved by God, love God and Jesus, and bear the image of God. Rather, the unconverted love them either because they were raised together, have compatible natural temperaments, are to some extent desirable and pleasant due to natural virtues, yield them advantage and temporal benefits, are faithful and upright in their services and dealings, by loving them receive love, honor, and esteem. All of this is agreeable with the state of nature. If, however, the godly let their light shine and thereby rebuke and put the unconverted to shame, and if by virtue of the image of God, the godly are more excellent than they are, the contrast between their natures will readily manifest itself. This in turn will engender inner resistance, secret aversion, the avoidance of their company, and hatred and opposition. Such ought thereby to be convinced that they in reality do not love the godly.

(3) They who make no distinction between those who are godly, civil, or ungodly, having no love for either the one or the other (yes, many do not even have love), live by themselves and for themselves; seek their own honor, advantage, and delight; do not care about others; have a heart that is strange toward everyone, and thus are without natural love. They only have love for themselves and for those who, in subservience to their self-love, are of advantage to themselves.

(4) They who love the world -- that is, the lust of the eyes, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life -- and all who are of one mind with them. In their eyes the godly are a despised lot. Instead, they honor those who serve the world, are their drinking companions, and entertain themselves with vanity, foolishness, vain conversation, gambling, carousing, fornication, dancing, boasting, etc. Such are the people to whom they join themselves and whose company they enjoy. Since such love the world, it is a certainty that they do not love the godly, but rather hate them. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John 2:15).

(5) They who do not only hate the godly in their heart, but inflict upon them all that issues forth from hatred. They despise them, speak about them with contempt, sneer at them, avoid their company, slander them, seek to trap them, oppress and persecute them, and they delight themselves if the godly are in adversity or meet with an accident -- finding delight in this as if they had conquered an enemy.

All such, if they give but attention to these matters and examine themselves in this light -- that is, those having natural virtue, as well as worldly ones and hypocrites -- will be convinced hereby that they have no love for the godly, and thus have no true love for others.

Consequences of Being Void of True Love

Many will not be concerned about this and will say, "It is true. I neither love them, desire to love them, nor wish to be loved by them. What is that to you? Who is affected by it?" My answer is that it indeed affects you.

(1) You are not born of God: "He that loveth not knoweth not God" (1 John 4:8). If you say, "I do indeed love God," then John says that you are lying: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen" (1 John 4:20). And, if you do not love God, you are accursed.

(2) You are not a Christian, have no part in His suffering, and are without Christ. Thus there are no promises for you -- you are without God and without hope (Ephesians 2:12). If you reply, "I am truly a Christian, for I am baptized, I attend the Lord's Supper, and I live as a Christian," then I reply in turn, "You are lying and you are deceiving yourself, for if you were a Christian, you would love those whom Christ loves and those who love Christ." For this is an unmistakable characteristic of the Christian: "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35). If you are without love, you are not a disciple.

(3) All your deeds, however wonderful they may appear to be, are of no value, for they are void of love. If you loved God, you would also love His children. Then you would have the Spirit, possess spiritual life, have a heavenly nature, and everything about you would be of an entirely different nature. Since you are void of love, however, everything is dead and your works are but dead works which cannot please God. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. ... I am nothing ... it profiteth me nothing" (1 Corinthians 13:1-3). Observe that everything is contingent upon love, and that you who are without love are destitute of everything. All that you do is sin, aggravates your judgment, and is a powerful confirmation that you will eternally go lost if you were to die in that condition. Therefore be convinced of your wretched condition -- both present and future -- and let that be a means to engender concern, and to cause you to flee to the Lord Jesus for forgiveness. The Deficient Love of the Godly and Its Causes To observe that natural men are without love is not quite as grievous as having to make the most disturbing observation that even the godly are so deficient in love in light of what the apostle says concerning love in 1 Corinthians 13:1-13.

Furthermore, if one considers the conduct of many of the truly regenerate, how much they fall short of this standard! It is true: They love the godly because God loves them and because they love God in Christ. Their heart is knit to them in that respect -- with the exclusion of all other men. They esteem them, their heart goes out toward them, they rejoice when they perceive the godly in their essential nature; but when it comes to their deeds, it is manifest how weak their love is. They keep to themselves and it is as if all others were strangers to them, or they exercise fellowship with only one or with but a few, and ignore others. If one of the godly has a fault, they will immediately render his godliness suspect. If he is perceived as a challenge to us and he does not act according to our wishes, then displeasure, wrath, strife, and backbiting surface, and one gives him the cold shoulder -- acting as if their spiritual life did not proceed from one and the same Spirit. And in regard to the unconverted, where is the heartfelt affection for them? Where is the joy about their prosperity, the grief over their mishaps, and the exercise concerning their spiritual and physical welfare?

It ought indeed to be investigated why it is that there is so little love among the godly, so that everyone would be motivated to remove the causes of his lovelessness which he perceives within himself, and thus enhance his progress in the exercise of love. Lovelessness is caused by:

(1) A lack of communion with God. God is love, and having communion with God will cause us to grow warm in love. We shall then manifest more of the nature of God, and having more love within, this love will manifest itself that much more strongly externally. If your heart accuses you of lovelessness, then immediately turn to the cause, and consider that it is the result of having wandered so far away from God -- for love must proceed from that fountain.

(2) Having but little assurance concerning our state, and a failure to take note of and acknowledge the state of grace. We are then weak in faith, yield to deadness and listlessness, and do not live tenderly. Instead, sin gains the upper hand, and we do not dare to place ourselves among God's children. Therefore, even though we esteem others as gracious souls, we neither have courage to be in their company, mutually rejoice with them, nor find delight in their fellowship.

(3) Having succumbed very much to a slumber brought on by the world and its lusts. Since their love manifests itself strongly in that direction, there is consequently a lesser degree of love for the godly and others. And the little love that is there will readily be subdued if one or the other person is hindered in attaining his earthly desires.

(4) The knowledge that most professors of the truth are unconverted, and a being disillusioned by some whom they thought to have been converted, who showed subsequently that such was not the case. They act as if it were a sin to love someone as a godly person who but appeared to be so and in reality was not -- as if we should love none other than those who are godly. The truth is that it is a much greater virtue to love such with a brotherly love as long as there is the least probability that such is warranted, and to have a strong love of affection when that probability has disappeared.

(5) The godly going too much in hiding and not letting their light shine forth. Thus, people either do not know them, or they observe but little of the grace of which they have a greater measure within. There is but little manifestation of mutual love, and thus the love and grace of the one believer does not ignite the other.

(6) The godly sinning publicly, but not manifesting their sorrow which they have in secret. If they would only show their sorrow, love would increase in strength rather than be impeded.

(7) An excessive manifestation of self-love, there being a desire to be loved in return, or an insistence that others love us first; instead, we must take the initiative and love without being loved in return.

Benefits Emanating from the Exercise of Love

It ought to grieve you in the innermost recesses of your soul that you have so little love -- of which you manifest even less. It displeases God, deprives you and the congregation of a blessing, causes the godly and godliness to be slandered, obstructs the conversion of many, and offends those beginners in grace whose heart is filled with love. Furthermore, it is the cause of the decline of the church.

Therefore, strive that your love would increase and become more fervent, and allow my exhortation to revive you in this respect.

First, all your relationships strongly obligate you to exercise brotherly love; and believers, when reflecting upon that relationship, are stirred up to love fervently. To that end consider:

(1) God is your Father and the Father of all believers; He loves you and He loves them. Should this then not stir us up to love one another (1 John 4:11)?

(2) The Lord Jesus, who is not ashamed to call you and them brothers, loves both you and them. Therefore, "walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us" (Ephesians 5:2). Together you are the temples of one and the same Spirit who dwells in all of you, by whom all of you live, and who works love (Galatians 5:22). Therefore we pray "for the love of the Spirit" (Romans 15:30), that you do not obstruct His motions toward love; rather, yield to them and you will abound in love.

(3) Are you not partakers of the same sacraments? "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body ... and have been all made to drink into one Spirit" (1 Corinthians 12:13); "For we being many are one bread, and one body" (1 Corinthians 10:17); "These are ... feasts of charity" (Jude 1:12). Therefore, should not this intimate relationship stir you up to love? Since then we are brothers, are together God's children, out of love have been delivered by the Lord Jesus, are indwelt by the Holy Spirit, and are united by the sacraments, let us therefore love one another fervently with brotherly love.

Secondly, God takes a special delight in the mutual love of His children for each other. This is a delight for natural parents; thus, our heavenly Father is also pleased with the mutual love of His children. Jesus rejoices in it and the angels delight in it. The Father and Christ make their abode with such and bless them: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! ... for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore" (Psalms 133:1; Psalms 133:3).

Thirdly, the exercise of brotherly love is most beneficial.

(1) It adds much luster to the church; all who are without will recognize her by this. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35). It begets much esteem and respect for the congregation. When the multitude of those who believed were of one heart and one soul, then "durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them" (Acts 5:13).

(2) As one candle lights the other, likewise the love of one will ignite love in the other, and everyone will thus be enlivened. As it is a delight to see a large church filled with shining lights, it is far more delightful to observe a congregation which is filled with those who love. Yes, it would be a means whereby many would be drawn to the church, the unconverted would be converted, beginners in the faith would readily grow, and backsliders would be restored.

(3) The one who loves experiences a special joy. It is a greater delight to love than to be loved. Joy is his strength; he avoids many snares, is delivered from much strife which otherwise would easily weaken his faith, and proceeds with courage.

(4) Love to the brethren assures the one who loves that he is in a state of grace, for his love for a given person proceeds from something of God being in him; since God loves him, he loves God even more -- and he who loves God is known of God (1 Corinthians 8:3).

Once more, since this love is expressed toward those who are of like persuasion, love seeks union due to this commonality. Since such a person's love issues forth to one who is like himself, and he seeks union with those who love God and are loved by God, he himself is in that state, for otherwise he would not seek fellowship on such a foundation. He is thus at the same time assured that he loves God -- something about which he is frequently concerned. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren" (1 John 3:14).

Fourthly, mutual love serves the purpose of mutual refreshment. Animals of the same species frequently walk together and citizens of the same nation stay together when they are in a strange country. Worldly people refresh themselves by mutual love; should the godly then not do likewise? In the world they will find neither help nor comfort, for it hates them. They also do not seek it there, for they hate it. What now? Will they each live alone in the world? No, it is due to the goodness of God that they are able to have a more heartfelt love, and a more intimate and steadfast friendship with each other, than that which is to be found in the world. This mutual love refreshes them so much that they can readily do without all other love. This love yields to them mutual help, support, comfort, encouragement, compassion, and whatever else they could expect from people.

Guidelines for the Proper Exercise of Love

It almost seems to me that I have done needless work in stirring you up by way of various arguments to love -- as if light needed a recommendation, or that fire is rendered more pleasant by way of rational argument. The mere mention of love is enough to stir you up. Begin to undertake this task and it will become all the more sweet to you.

(1) Let the initiative to love come from you and do not wait for another person to make the first move. Even if you are the very least among the godly, the love of children is sweet and even kindles the love of adults.

(2) Do not seek to receive love in return; however, if you receive it, do not let it end in yourself. Rather, thank the Lord for the refreshment and the quickening you enjoy as a result of this. If you do not receive love in return, let it neither trouble nor hinder you, for you are not worthy of being loved. Let it be sufficient to you that you are permitted and able to love.

(3) Let there be high esteem for the grace which is or appears to be in another person. Be not suspicious, but be quick to accept it as being genuine. Grace can be very feeble in someone, and it will not harm you to love someone as a godly person who is unconverted. Is it not your desire and obligation to love others?

(4) The offenses and falls of others must not impede you in your love, for even great grace can coexist with great corruption -- how much more this is true when grace is feeble. You do not know how much strife another has concerning these faults, how much he grieves over them in secret, and with how many tears and prayers he seeks forgiveness.

(5) Show much love in your countenance, words, and entire conduct -- even if the heart is somewhat lukewarm. It is not hypocritical when we externally manifest and conduct ourselves as we ought to be while striving to involve our heart in this as well, even though we cannot do as we desire. While thus engaged, our heart will become more and more involved. However, to wish to create an appearance, while being differently disposed in the heart, is hypocrisy. Showing love will cause the heart to increase in love.

(6) Permit that light and grace which is in you, be it ever so feeble, to shine forth. Manifest it, and conduct yourself as such, doing so not for your sake by seeking honor, but because God commands you to do so, and in order that others might have the opportunity to exercise the virtue of love.

(7) Be much in prayer to the Lord, for love proceeds from Him. Of yourself and in your own strength, you will neither attain to nor increase this love. If you are thus engaged, the Lord will grant you more grace and cause you to grow, until He will take you into the perfect love of eternal glory.

088. Chapter 83: Humility

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-THREE -----

Humility

Love for our neighbor is the fountain of all those virtues we are to exercise toward him, but it is humility that adorns these virtues. However excellent the performance of a virtue may be, if there is pride in the person who performs this duty, such performance will reek and be entirely without luster. Therefore, a believer who in the way of holiness wishes to live to the glory of God and render the church honorable must strive to be humble.

Humility is the humble disposition of the heart of the believer--both in a personal sense and toward his neighbor. It consists in having a correct judgment concerning himself whereby he neither elevates himself above his condition, nor wishes to be elevated by others as such. The Adornment of a Believer

True humility is only to be found in a Christian, that is, in a believer. All humility of the unconverted is nothing but an appearance without substance, and upon close examination it will prove to be either nothing but pride or else despondency -- the reason being that an unconverted person has neither life, spiritual disposition of heart, nor is he united to Christ from whom, as the Head, all virtues issue forth to His children. However, a regenerate person has the principle of life in Christ and thus also a virtuous heart -- the fountain of virtues. "Let the brother of low degree [Note: The Statenvertaling reads: "... de broeder die nederig is," that is, "... the brother who is humble."] rejoice" (James 1:9). It is the Lord who teaches humility and Christ is the example: "Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart" (Matthew 11:29). Therefore, those who have fellowship with the Lord Jesus, know Him and behold Him, and in faith are united with Him, will learn this from Him and their humility is of the same nature as His. The heart is the seat of their humility. The seat of humility is not to be found in our face, talk, or dress, but in the heart. It is also not solely and essentially to be found in the intellect, even though the intellect is functional in the exercise of humility in knowing the nature and beauty of this virtue and presenting it to the will as such. Instead, the essential function of humility is in the will which embraces, loves, and delights itself in this virtue. We are to be like Jesus, that is, "lowly in heart" (Matthew 11:29).

Humility is a disposition of the heart. The beauty of this virtue is not something which is paraded and put on display to be approved of as such. It also does not consist in having the intention to be humble -- a condition which may exist temporarily, but soon dissipates. Rather, humility is a propensity or a predisposition. The regenerate heart has a nature which is thoroughly humble -- this humility being of an enduring nature. Whenever such a person engages himself, he does so in harmony with this heart and nature. All that he does has the fragrance of and is permeated with humility. The measure in which this disposition is pervasive and steadfast is commensurate with the measure of a person's exercise to be in such a disposition. This propensity, initially having been infused by God, is fortified through much exercise. The Object and Essence of Humility The object of humility is man himself and his neighbor.

(1) It is man himself, for due to self-knowledge he knows that there is neither excellence nor anything desirable to be found in him. In his own eyes he is a great nothing, and he views himself as such. He thus sinks away in his own nothingness as a stone cast into the water, not resting until it reaches the bottom; that is its proper position and there it will come to rest. It is likewise true that the lowest place will be the place of the humble man; there he finds rest and is in his element as a fish in water. He is able to accept the fact that others receive honor and love, enjoy themselves, and are prosperous, as long as he may be humble in himself, and in that way of humility can engage in his duty by the grace and power God affords him. He is able to end in humility when he has done something, and with that humility he can suffer and endure that which the Lord causes to come his way, either without or by the instrumentality of men -- it is all well with him.

(2) The humble person also exercises his humility toward his neighbor. He acknowledges it to be the will of God that he love his neighbor, and this motivates him to do so. He perceives in his neighbor that which is eminent and desirable; he highly esteems this, honors him as such, wholeheartedly submits himself to him in that respect, and with this disposition he does for his neighbor what God commands him to do. In comparing himself to his neighbor, he appears in his own eyes as copper compared to gold, and as lead compared to silver. Being in such a frame, he honors, loves, and renders him service. "Be not highminded" (Romans 11:20); "For I say ... to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think" (Romans 12:3); "My brethren, be not many masters" (James 3:1); "In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves" (Php 2:3). The essence of humility consists in lowliness of heart. Pride lifts up the heart and puffs it up with vain air, and a proud person in his own conceit wishes to be honored above others. This motivates him in all that he does and is the objective of his actions. If he achieves his objective, he is delighted; but if not, he becomes peevish and wrathful. Humility, on the contrary, brings the heart low and renders it humble. Thus, the humble person will not have himself in view in his actions, and upon having performed his duty he returns to himself, humbly and quietly remaining in that place, regardless of what the outcome of his performance has been. The other extreme in relation to humility is despondency. This comes about when we lose all courage, give up, and thus collapse as a wet rag. This is not humility; rather it is pride, for despondency comes about when we can neither achieve our objective nor perceive any way whereby to achieve it. Humility is positioned between these two vices (pride and despondency). Relative to the one, humility is a lowly and unassuming disposition, causing one to remain in the background. Humility needs but little room for herself. In that setting she is at home and does not move beyond its boundaries. Relative to despondency, humility is armed with courage and spiritual valor. The humble person engages himself as such in dependence upon the grace and power of God, doing so in his appointed station and with the gifts he has received. To be seen of men and to seek after honor and love are foreign to the humble soul. He will leave that for those who desire it. He will be satisfied with having done his duty, and if this renders him honor and love (without this being his goal), this will not lift him up. If it brings him shame and injury, he does not become despondent and discouraged. He will remain in his place, and there he will be humble and quiet, courageously proceeding with his duty. David gives expression to this disposition: "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me. Surely I have behaved and quieted myself, as a child that is weaned of his mother:

my soul is even as a weaned child" (Psalms 131:1-2). A humble person has a childlike disposition.

Humility Proceeds from God

God is the moving cause of humility. By nature man is a creature who aspires after glory, is proud and conceited, and has high thoughts of himself. He is motivated by self, is focused on self, and is desirous that everyone's end would be to esteem, honor, fear, serve, and obey him. The heart the Lord gives to His people is different, however, for He causes Christ to be formed in them, so that, also in humility, they resemble Christ. The Lord grants them enlightened eyes of understanding by which they know themselves, are able to judge themselves rightly, know what their gifts are, and of what they are worthy. Furthermore, they have a love for righteousness and thus they neither desire nor seek that to which they are not entitled.

Thus humility issues forth from a right judgment of one's self. The humble acknowledge that they are made of dust and reside in tabernacles of clay. They know that they have sinned and come short of the glory of God; are blind, miserable, naked, and wretched, and that they are thus abominable, hateful, and intolerable before God, angels, and men. They know they are not worthy that the heavens cover them, the sun shines upon them, or that they walk upon the earth, enjoying the fellowship of men, having a piece of bread to eat, and having clothing for their body. Rather, they are worthy of having been cast into hell long ago. Such is their judgment of themselves, and they acquiesce in this -- even though it condemns them. They thus perceive how wrong it would be for them to elevate themselves, pretending that they are worthy of something. When they compare themselves with others, they perceive themselves as being foolish, void of understanding, having a disgraceful and difficult character, and their actions as being worthy of scorn. It is thus that others would know them if they knew them as well internally as they know them externally. How should they then have any high thoughts of themselves? They deem that others would be in error if they thought anything of them or wished to render them some honor. They acknowledge that the good found in them -- which they are cognizant of and highly esteem -- has been given to them by another, namely God. Since this continues to be of God, they would be guilty of the greatest foolishness if they were to covet honor, love, or esteem for something which has been loaned to them. (A beggar would invite scorn if he were to boast of an expensive garment which someone had loaned him for one day.) Yes, even if the humble person were perfect in all things, he would know that all esteem, honor, love, fear, and obedience would be due unto God. He would know that God has forbidden him to covet, strive for, and permit these matters to be attributed to him. He therefore judges it to be an act of thievery and unrighteousness to seek for this and to boast of it. This causes him to be small in his own eyes, and he is, remains, and engages himself in harmony with this disposition. The Effects of Humility The effects of humility are twofold: The humble person neither elevates himself above what his condition is, nor does he want to be elevated above such by someone else.

First, a humble person does not elevate himself above what his condition is. God has made a distinction between people -- both in the spiritual as well as the natural realm. If the Lord has truly made someone to be a Christian; if He has granted him His Spirit and His grace; and if He has bestowed on him life, light, a principle of holiness, as well as gifts to be used to the benefit of others, then such a person does not deny this, but acknowledges it. For, to deny this would be an act of pride rather than of humility, acting as if we did not receive it, whereas in truth we did.

Furthermore, it would be an intolerable act of ingratitude. Thus such a person does indeed acknowledge the grace he possesses, but he does not boasts of it nor does he wish to be honored by men for it.

Also in the natural realm God has placed people in different stations, for there are government officials, citizens, parents, children, servants, the rich, middle class citizens, and the poor. The humble person will maintain and continue in the station where God has placed him, until God calls him away from it. If he is in a lowly station, he is satisfied, it being the will of God. He possesses more than he is worthy of, and does not walk away from it, but will remain with it until the Lord removes it from him; that is, if it were to please Him to do so. If such is not the case, it is also well with him. If he holds a high position which is accompanied by wealth, he will also maintain it, and seek to be faithful therein. He does not exalt himself above others because he holds this position. Rather, he is humble, knowing that he is not worthy of it. Instead, he has come to see it as his duty to perform that function, thereby rendering honorable that office or position he holds. The denigration of one's self is not an act of humility. It is much easier to cast everything away and to subject ourselves to poverty, shame, contempt, solitude, and silence, than to preserve our position with a humble heart, and to conduct ourselves in a manner which is consistent with our position. Thus, someone can simultaneously have a high position, be rich, esteemed, and honored, and yet have a humble disposition of heart. He does not covet honor, respect, and obedience because he has this position, nor does he boast of it. He nevertheless agrees to be treated as such, solely because it is God's command.

Secondly, neither will he desire to be elevated by others above the condition in which he is. This would give neither pleasure nor joy, but rather sorrow and grief, knowing that he is not entitled to it. He wishes to be humbled and remain unnoticed as he passes through this world. He only desires to give rather than to receive. He lets the Hamans have the knee-bends and the Herods the praises. He is happy when he can be on his own, and if someone wishes to esteem him too highly, he will convey his aversion for this, saying with John the Baptist, "I am not (he)" (John 1:21). With Peter and Paul, he will abhor any excessive honor (cf. Acts 3:12; Acts 10:26; Acts 14:14). Instead, the humble person highly esteems the good he perceives in another person. He esteems that person more excellent than he is, humbles himself in his presence, is willing to be of service to him, and is not envious if this person is honored above him, but rather rejoices in this. The Proud Rebuked The depiction of humility in its nature and circumstances will give you light in the matter, so that you can examine yourself and be convinced as to whether you possess this virtue of humility or not. There are but few humble persons -- yes, humility is presently despised and made out to be dullness, melancholy, evil-temperedness, and slavishness. Nevertheless, this is the disposition with which God is pleased -- the contrary of which He hates. Take note of this:

(1) You who are proud of heart and have a haughty spirit, who have great thoughts of yourself due to your ancestry, wealth, the offices you hold, wisdom, beauty, strength, artistic talent, gifts, and all that of which a fool will boast; you who elevate yourself above your neighbor, viewing him with contempt and having the notion that he must honor and revere, bow, and yield to you; you who love to be greeted in a humble and reverent manner, to be praised and elevated above others; you who are envious when another person is elevated and honored above you, and readily cherish hatred and vengefulness against those who either do not honor you sufficiently or who despise you.

(2) You who deal haughtily with your inferiors and puff yourself up in their presence as a cropper pigeon; who raise your eyebrows, hold your head in the air, imitate a proud gait, put your hand on your side, and thus present yourself as a big bag of air, wishing that one would cry out, "Bow the knee"; or at least that everyone would yield to you, and while standing aside, would greet you in a most respectable manner.

(3) You who involve yourself in everything and speak about yourself and your accomplishments so that others may know what manner of man or woman you are.

(4) You who seek to increase your glory by boasting, decorating your house as a palace (each according to his ability) and then gloat by yourself, thinking, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built ... for the honour of my majesty" (Daniel 4:30), having the objective that others would esteem you as great, rich, and prominent. Furthermore, such will presently make themselves up as a decorated doll, and will go in public as a Bernice with great splendor (Acts 25:23; in Greek: phantasia). The entire purpose is to gain honor and glory. They avoid the company of those who are of lesser status, for this would humiliate them, but they will join themselves to those of higher social status, even if one were to make a fool of himself there.

(5) You who speak of certain persons -- if they are prominent people -- as being your cousins, even though the relationship goes all the way back to Noah, but refrain yourself from saying, "My cousin the shoemaker, my cousin the maid," for this would not promote your own status. And thus we could go on: Whatever one does and says all proceeds from pride and is for the purpose of self-elevation.

What a fool you are, however! First of all, since you are in reality so despicable, what will it profit you if people esteem you? Since there is in reality nothing honorable in you, what will it profit you if insignificant men honor you?

Secondly, your pride will readily be detected and you will be a stench to all who observe and notice this. People will have an aversion for you, ridicule you, consider you to be a fool, will avoid your company, and if you are in the presence of upright people who will give you some attention and get you to talk, your proud foolishness will manifest itself and you will make a mockery of yourself.

Thirdly, the godly (who are the honorable of the world) abhor you and do not wish to be in your company: "Him that hath an high look and a proud heart shall not I suffer" (Psalms 101:5).

Fourthly, above all take note of how God esteems you and what He will do to you.

(1) God hates you. What will it therefore benefit you if you please yourself? Consider with dread what God says concerning you: "The Lord GOD hath sworn by Himself, saith the Lord the God of hosts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces" (Amos 6:8); "These six things doth the Lord hate" (Proverbs 6:16-17), and a proud look is mentioned first; "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 16:5).

(2) Not only is God's heart opposed to the proud, but also His mouth; He reproves and curses them: "Thou hast rebuked the proud that are cursed" (Psalms 119:21).

(3) God's hand is against them: "God resisteth the proud" (1 Peter 5:5); "Behold, I am against thee, O thou most proud, saith the Lord GOD of hosts: for thy day is come, the time that I shall visit thee" (Jeremiah 50:31). And if you wish to know what the outcome and your end will be, read Malachi 4:1 : "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." It was pride which caused Sodom to be consumed with fire from heaven (Ezekiel 16:49); Dathan, Abiram, and Korah to sink into the earth (Numbers 16:12-33); and Herod to be slain by an angel and be consumed alive by worms (Acts 12:21; Acts 12:23). Behold, such will be the end of the proud. The Godly Exhorted

You who are godly, upon examining yourself, you will perceive from the foregoing not only your deficient humility, but also how much pride yet remains in you. Humble yourself about this, be ashamed, and strive to increase in humility.

If pride is such a dreadful sin, and if such dreadful plagues are its consequences, then you who are godly ought to see to it that this sin does not cleave to you; rather, endeavor with your entire heart to be humble within and without, for:

First, you have nothing of yourself whereof you can be proud; instead, whatever can render you despicable is to be found in you. Your body is nothing but dust, stench, and pollution; your soul is bereft of the image of God, is a pool of all manner of impure monstrosities, and if another person would know all your thoughts and could observe and be aware of all the sins you have committed in secret, would you then dare to look him in the eye if he were to look at you? You are indeed foolish, have a difficult and disgraceful character, and others excel in areas which are not to be found in you. You know this very well, for the Lord has given you light. If you thus examine yourself, how can you yet have a lofty thought about yourself or have any desire to be esteemed as a prominent person? You are convinced that you desire something unbecoming and wrongful, and that you would require something from others which is but deceit. Can you be deceived with lies? The graces, gifts, beauty, strength, riches, and whatever else you may have, God has but granted you on loan. Would you then put these on display as if they were your own? Therefore, consider yourself, and judge aright; you will then be small and insignificant in your eyes and not seek great things.

Secondly, take note of God's command; God forbids you to be proud and commands you to be humble. Consider texts previously quoted, and add the following passages to them: "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate" (Romans 12:16); "Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness" (Ephesians 4:1-2); "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but ... to walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6:8). Does the command of God, and that which your Father enjoins you to do, carry no weight with you? Should these not thoroughly permeate your soul? You have said so many times, "Speak Lord, for Thy servant heareth; Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Well, God answers you that you are to be humble. Therefore, take this to heart and be humble.

Thirdly, your name as well as your relationship to the Lord Jesus obligates you to humility. You are named "Christian" after the name of Christ. Your relationship to Him is that you are His bride upon whom He has set His love. The Lord Jesus was humble -- the perfect example of humility. Love ought to motivate us to be conformed to Him -- more so because He establishes Himself as an example and commands us to follow Him in this: "Learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart" (Matthew 11:29). By nature we are intolerably proud -- we who are most despicable. A Christian cannot be a Christian if he does not become humble. In order that we might become humble we need to learn how; this requires effort in order that we may all the better make progress in this. He gives us an example -- yes, He himself becomes our example. Therefore conduct yourself as such and be as He is; be humble.

Fourthly, humility is a most eminent ornament. Virgins love jewelry, and a bride will adorn herself to please her husband. However, you are spiritual virgins -- the bride of the Lord Jesus. I may thus address you as such: "Put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem" (Isaiah 52:1). However, what is your ornament? -- humility. Humility is the most beautiful ornament, and renders you pleasant before God and men. "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of ... humbleness" (Colossians 3:12); "Be clothed with humility" (1 Peter 5:5); "I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit" (Isaiah 57:15); "Though the Lord be high, yet hath He respect unto the lowly" (Psalms 138:6). A humble person is pleasing to all manner of people. One proud person cannot tolerate the other one; however, since a humble person submits himself, a worldly person will enjoy having fellowship with a humble person. And as a godly person loves Jesus, he will also love those who resemble Jesus; since humility excels in the Lord Jesus, he thus especially delights in the humble.

Fifthly, humility is most advantageous.

(1) God thinks upon such with delight and desires to help them: "Who remembered us in our low estate" (Psalms 136:23).

(2) God causes them to rejoice: "I ... revive the spirit of the humble" (Isaiah 57:15).

(3) God's spiritual benefits are for such: "God ... giveth grace to the humble" (1 Peter 5:5).

(4) God keeps them: "He shall save the humble person" (Job 22:29).

(5) It yields all manner of temporal benefits to such: "By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honour, and life" (Proverbs 22:4); "Before honour is humility" (Proverbs 15:33); "Honour shall uphold the humble in spirit" (Proverbs 29:23).

(6) God comforts the humble: "Nevertheless God, that comforteth those that are cast down ..." (2 Corinthians 7:6).

(7) God exalts the humble: "He ... exalted them of low degree" (Luke 1:52).

(8) The humble person enjoys a sweet peace and has inner delight: "Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted" (James 1:9).

(9) A humble man is a wise man: "With the lowly is wisdom" (Proverbs 11:2).

(10) A humble person is valiant, for he neither seeks honor nor fears shame. Furthermore, everything suits him; he is willing to say and do it, and all that he does is pleasing to him. Therefore endeavor with much earnestness to be humble of heart.

Means to Learn Humility

Therefore, if you desire to be humble, it is needful for you to learn this. It does not issue forth spontaneously, and love for this virtue will also not engender it unless an effort be made in this respect and one makes use of the means which are fit for this. There are three books from which we may learn humility.

First of all there is the book of sin. Examine yourself continually in the light of your falling into sin. If you take note of your falling into sin, your goal being the humbling of yourself, you will learn experientially that you are polluted, impure, wicked, atheistic, and abominable in your heart, which time and again brings forth like deeds. You thus have no reason for complaints when God brings affliction upon you, nor when men despise you, for you know yourself to be ten times more despicable than they deem you to be. You are thus neither worthy of being the recipient of the least mercy of God nor of the least favor of men. It is thus that David learned to be humble -- as is to be observed in Psalms 51:1-19. It will also render you humble.

Secondly, there is the book of crosses. However bitter and distasteful the cross may be, it nevertheless teaches humility if we take but proper notice of it. From it we shall learn how disagreeable, unbelieving, and impatient we are, all of which are fruits of pride. We are instructed thereby about the righteousness and sovereignty of God toward His creatures in punishing sin. It removes the pride of heart, makes it subdued and pliable -- especially if it is a cross of long duration, and if we can neither avoid it nor find delight in other things. David therefore called "being chastised" being oppressed: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn Thy statutes. I know, O Lord ... that Thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me" (Psalms 119:71; Psalms 119:75). Therefore, submit yourself to the rod and to Him who has appointed it, and you will become humble.

Thirdly, there is the book of God's benefits and blessings. On the one hand they will humble us when we consider our ingratitude in failing to end with them in the Lord with a lively heart. They also teach us our inability to use them well, for we need strong legs to bear up under days of prosperity. The receipt of benefits renders some unhappy and they are happy when they may lose them. On the other hand, however, a believer will be deeply convinced of his unworthiness upon receiving special benefits. In humility of heart he will say with Jacob, "I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth" (Genesis 32:10). When the Lord rejoiced the heart of David, he said, "And I will yet be more vile than thus" (2 Samuel 6:22).

1 The Statenvertaling reads: "... de broeder die nederig is," that is, "... the brother who is humble."

089. Chapter 84: Meekness

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-FOUR -----

Meekness

Humility begets meekness, and it is the latter we now wish to discuss. We shall consider it in a comprehensive sense; that is, as far as it includes longsuffering and tolerance. In Hebrew it is the word 'anawah, which is a derivative from a word, which among other things, means: to be humbled, to humble one's self, to be submissive, and to be oppressed. Other derivatives include poor, oppressed, and wretched. Thus, in the vernacular, meekness is expressive of a poor, humble disposition as far as the human use of this expression is concerned. In Greek we have the word praotes, which is a derivative of a word meaning "to transfer." This refers to a person who readily establishes contact with others and with whom others easily make contact in turn. It can also refer to presence of mind. This is indicative of a person who always has his presence of mind and does not lose self-control as a result of anger. Our Dutch word, being a composite form of the words "tender" and "heart," expresses this disposition very well. Thus, it refers to a heart that is tender in its dealings.

Meekness is the believer's even-tempered disposition of heart which issues forth from union with God in Christ, consisting in self-denial and love for his neighbor. This results in having fellowship with his neighbor in an agreeable, congenial, and loving manner; in relinquishing his rights; in enduring the violation of his rights without becoming angry, being forgiving, and in rewarding it with good. This virtue also resides in the heart. The understanding, having been enlightened, perceives the vanity and transitory nature of all that is to be found in the world -- and that it is not worthy of our being disturbed about upon it being removed from us, nor of going to great lengths to attain it. The enlightened understanding is acquainted with the evil of human nature, its readiness to yield to wrath, and the readiness of the natural man to do injury to his neighbor either by words or deeds. The enlightened understanding perceives that irritableness and anger are foolish sentiments which neither yield restoration nor prevent harm. Instead, they aggravate the matter and will inflict more damage. It thus deems it best to endure all things and remain silent. Meekness is therefore wisdom. "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom" (James 3:13). The will loves this virtue, embraces it, and by way of exercise is increasingly able to control and govern the affections, in order that they do not become too violent and too disorderly. To be tender in countenance and words can frequently be nothing more than hypocrisy. The very term "meekness" implies that the heart must be tender. If the soul is in such a frame, then whatever issues forth from this fountain will cause the entire disposition of a person -- as well as his countenance and words -- to be unpretentious and tender. "... even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit" (1 Peter 3:4). The Subject and Object of Meekness

Let us consider the subject of this virtue. Meekness is a virtue which is to be found in believers only. A natural man may have something which resembles meekness. It may be that someone has a lethargic and lazy disposition, is bereft of wisdom, and is not aware what is either to his advantage or disadvantage. It may be that he is so poor and miserable that he is without hope and courage; being in despair, he simply endures everything. It may be that he has a tender disposition and thus gives little reason for disturbances. It may be that he is a wise and intelligent man in the natural sense of the word, and thus perceives the foolishness of anger and the suitableness of meekness, as well as the dishonor resulting from the one and the honor from the other. It may also be that he holds a prominent and distinguished position and does not concern himself with the one who is beneath him, since such a person cannot harm him. All this has the appearance of meekness, but is not meekness; at best it is but a natural meekness, which neither proceeds from the right fountain nor contains the true essence. Only a believer who is presently united with Christ, however, and is spiritually alive due to the influence of His Spirit, is capable of being truly meek. "Ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness" (Galatians 6:1). They are contrasted with the ungodly: "The Lord lifteth up the meek: he casteth the wicked down to the ground" (Psalms 147:6). The object of this virtue is man's neighbor, that is, every person. Meekness is also practiced toward God; it relates to His commandments being embraced with a compliant and willing soul. James speaks of this: "Receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls" (James 1:21). It also pertains to chastisements to which one quietly submits his soul without fretfulness. Aaron thus remained silent when his children were burned (Leviticus 10:3). When Eli received a grievous message, he said, "It is the Lord: let Him do what seemeth Him good" (1 Samuel 3:18). However, our reference here is to meekness which is manifested toward people -- regardless of whether they are good or evil, godly or ungodly, deal tenderly or harshly, or deal righteously or unrighteously with us. Velvet remains soft irrespective of whether it is handled roughly or gently, whether it is stroked by a soft hand or a hand which is rough and callous. This is also true for a meek person, since his disposition is not of an external nature, and is not dependent upon the manner in which he is treated. Rather, the soul has this disposition when she is not in the presence of any person as well as in the absence of the occurrence of any event. Thus, such a person will remain the same regardless of how the events he encounters may vary. "... Showing all meekness unto all men" (Titus 3:2). The Essence of Meekness The essence of this virtue consists in having an even-tempered disposition of heart. Since all that satisfies man must come from an external source, he has a desire for, and is inclined toward, that which he believes will satisfy him. Since he does not have God in view at all (or only partially), he focuses either fully or partially upon that which is of the world. More particularly, he desires that toward which he is most inclined, or what most suits his abilities. Since people have desires toward the same thing, and thus are a hindrance to each other, the heart of those who are hindered in achieving their objective will be stirred up and tossed to and fro by an inner turmoil -- as if they were at sea during a storm. A meek person has chosen God to be his portion, however, and perceives all that is in the world to be vanity, and knows that no one will either speak or do anything except God wills it. Thus, as he trusts in God, his heart will be even-tempered and fixed. His heart is neither in turmoil nor restless, but is of an even-tempered, steadfast, and peaceful disposition. If someone assaults him in either word or deed, he will be as an even shore upon which the tempestuous waves crash and then trickle away playfully. This disposition is expressed in the following passages: "His heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord" (Psalms 112:7); "Truly my soul waiteth upon God" (Psalms 62:1); "He layeth up sound wisdom [Note: The Statenvertaling reads as follows: "Hij legt weg voor de oprechten een bestendig wezen," that is, "He furnishes the righteous with a steadfast disposition.”] for the righteous” (Proverbs 2:7). This even-temperedness is accompanied by:

(1) Flexibility; a meek person is cooperative and will adjust himself to another person; that is, insofar as it is not contrary to God’s will. “Yea, all of you be subject one to another” (1 Peter 5:5).

(2) Agreeableness; the meek person stubbornly insists neither upon his own will nor upon his own judgment in temporal and neutral matters -- as long as it is not contrary to God’s law. He will listen to the views of and comply with the will of others; he will readily permit himself to be persuaded to that end. “But the wisdom that is from above is ... peaceable” (James 3:17).

(3) Loveliness; the meek person is charming in his speech and actions. He is good-natured, a pleasure to deal with, and friendly, so that it is a delight to interact with him. “Whatsoever things are lovely ... think on these things” (Php 4:8); “... be ... gentle, showing all meekness unto all men” (Titus 3:2); “Let your moderation be known unto all men” (Php 4:5); “Be courteous” (1 Pet 3:8). The Moving Cause of Meekness

God is the moving cause of meekness. Man is naturally inclined to lose his temper, be angry, rancorous, and as prickly as a thorn bush which one cannot touch without being injured by it. However, when God regenerates a man according to the image of the meek Jesus, He grants him a meek heart. The apostle therefore also lists meekness among the fruits of the Spirit. “But the fruit of the Spirit is ... meekness” (Galatians 5:23). A virtue never functions independently. The one virtue will always beget the other, and the one will be supportive of the other. This is also true for meekness.

(1) It issues forth from a heart that is united with God in Christ. When man has God as his portion, he has everything and has no need for anything beyond. He does not look to others in such a manner, as if he could expect something from them. He is not afraid of anyone taking something away from him, for such a person perceives all men as being but tools in the hands of his God, whom He will utilize to his advantage. If someone says anything evil about or to him, he understands that God has ordered it to be so. If anyone inflicts evil upon him, he understands that God has directed it to be so, and he acquiesces in the wise and good government of his God. He understands that if he were to become wrathful and envious, he would be opposing God Himself, and he therefore endures everything with a quiet and calm conscience.

(2) The denial of self proceeds from this disposition. The meek person no longer considers his own desires; he neither seeks nor is desirous for their fulfillment. He has discarded the desire for vain honor, the love of men, prominence, and the riches of this world. He does not want these. Why would he then quarrel about such things or become angry if someone were to challenge him in this respect? This disposition in turn engenders meekness.

(3) The meek person also loves his neighbor. One can endure much from someone he loves. A man with love will not do evil to his neighbor; the man who loves people will be grieved that his neighbor, in wronging him, is sinning. He observes his neighbor with compassion upon seeing him in such turmoil, thus bringing the wrath of God upon him. Should he then yet add grief to his neighbor’s grief? Behold, he is therefore meek. The Effects of Meekness The effects of meekness are:

(1) A being congenial, so that it is a pleasant and effortless task to interact with the meek person. A meek person is loved by everyone, and as long as his disposition is such, he will not be hated by anyone -- even though he may be ridiculed by some as having a vile and contemptible spirit. He will not have as much opposition as others, and there will even be among worldly people those who defend him. People will find his company enjoyable, and after having departed from him, the fellowship they had with him will make some impression upon the heart, convincing them that he is a godly person, whereas they themselves are not. They will thus become desirous to be like him.

(2) A relinquishing of one's rights. A meek person is a wise person; his wisdom is of a meek nature, and he is neither witless nor insensitive. He can indeed judge what is right, and he is capable of standing up for his rights. He will do so if this is God's will and he is under obligation to do so. However, he does so with quiet earnestness, freedom, and in a noble manner -- always in such a manner that his meekness shines forth. If, however, there are matters in which he may yield, then he would rather do so than to gain that which is his ultimate right by fighting for it.

(3) Enduring injustice. A meek person neither wishes to get even nor to avenge himself -- even if he were able to do so. Instead, the meek person will endure this and overlook it as if it had not been perpetrated upon him. "With all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love" (Ephesians 4:2).

(4) The forgiving of injustice. Forgiveness does not merely consist in a refraining from taking vengeance, meanwhile harboring animosity and hatred in the heart. Instead, it consists in not holding the offender accountable and in loving him no less than before. It means that the offender must be treated as if he had not committed the deed. This is what Christ teaches: "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any" (Mark 11:25). The apostle requires this: "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any" (Colossians 3:13).

(5) The rewarding of evil with good. To render evil for evil is carnal, to reward good with evil is devilish, but to reward evil with good is Christian. The latter is true for the meek person: "Not rendering evil for evil" (1 Peter 3:9); "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you" (Matthew 5:44); "Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head" (Romans 12:20).

The Need for Self-Examination
Meekness has been held before you in its nature, so that it might be to you as a mirror in which you can observe yourself -- a mirror whereby you can ascertain how much or little you resemble a meek person. Apply this freely to your heart. To be void of the virtue of meekness -- and thus to have a disposition which is to the contrary -- is a most abominable sin and a more wretched condition to be in than you imagine. Be first convinced of this. Take then to heart what manner of person you are before God and what will befall you due to this.

(1) Do you have such an even-tempered and stable disposition of heart when people maltreat you in word and deed? Does your inner peace issue forth from union with God in Christ, from denial of self, from love for your neighbor? Are you easy to get along with, flexible, agreeable, sweet, and loveable as you interact with your neighbor? Can you relinquish your right without being disturbed about it and do you yield in a good-natured manner? Do you endure it when you have been wronged -- even then when you would be able to avenge yourself? Do you heartily forgive your neighbor, as if he had not wronged you at all and without affecting your love to him? Do you reward evil with good, doing so sincerely and affectionately? Before you answer me, reflect upon your dealings with your superiors, equals, strangers, friends, subordinates, wife, children, and servants. Having done so, what is your answer upon these questions? Have your dealings been characterized by meekness? Oh, how many must be convinced here that as yet they have nothing -- yes nothing -- of this meekness! It is thus a certainty that everything said in God's Word about the meek is not applicable to you.

(2) Or do you have a cross, fretful, and irritable nature? Do you have as many spines as a porcupine does, or are you as prickly as a thorn bush, so that one cannot be in your presence without being pricked? That this is so is proven by the fact you are always in trouble -- now with the one and then with the other -- and that you are always complaining that you are being wronged, and that your servants do not fulfil their obligations toward you. Be assured, however, that you are to be blamed; you have a nature which is disagreeable and irritable. Are you readily provoked to anger, does your blood boil, and do all sorts of emotions stir in you, even though you do not say a word? Or do you show your anger by way of an angry countenance? Or does your anger manifest itself by speaking ill-advisedly, by quarreling, or by using abusive language? And would this not result in physical abuse if others would not prevent you from doing so? Perhaps you do not lash out in word or deed, but rather swallow it for the time being. Does this, however, beget a hatred and aversion in your heart which manifests itself subsequently -- when there is an opportunity -- in vengeance, so that you may requite another for the evil previously committed; or do you delight yourself if something evil befalls him? How does your conscience respond to all these questions? Behold, you are thus void of meekness and have a spiteful disposition.

God's Inevitable Judgment upon Those who Are void of Meekness

Come, consider what God says about you, and what will befall you. First, you are in the same sinful condition in which the first world was, this being the reason why it perished in the flood. You must anticipate a similar end. "The earth was filled with violence. And God said ... I will destroy them with the earth" (Genesis 6:11; Genesis 6:13).

Secondly, you have Cain's disposition and you will not escape Cain's punishment: "And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell. And now art thou cursed from the earth" (Genesis 4:5; Genesis 4:11).

Thirdly, you resemble Lamech, whose wrath was so great that he said, "I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt. If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech seventy and sevenfold" (Genesis 4:23-24). If anyone considers Lamech to be a courageous man, this is an indication that he finds delight in his abominable disposition, and that he himself is abominable before God. This has been recorded to Lamech's eternal shame, and such a person will be a marked man as he was.

Fourthly, as often as wrath, anger, hatred, and vengeance arise, so often are you a murderer before God. As often as you cast a wrathful glance at your neighbor, as many a biting word as you express toward him, so often are you committing murder: "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (1 John 3:15). God curses the perpetrators of anger: "Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel" (Genesis 49:7). And, what will be the end of all murderers? "But ... murderers ... shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Revelation 21:8). Therefore, as insignificant as it may seem to you that you are without meekness; as heroic as you consider yourself in your wrath and in avenging yourself, so abominable you are in the eyes of God, and so dreadful will your end be if you do not repent. Do not imagine that your pretenses will excuse you before God.

Evasive Argument #1: A person is human, and one simply cannot overlook all the wrong that is done to him; flesh and blood cannot endure all this.

Answer: Flesh and blood will also not inherit the kingdom of God. It will even be more difficult for you to avoid the fire of hell.

Evasive Argument #2: If I simply take everything, people would act that much more boldly toward me. Therefore, I must fight back and teach them to respect my rights and to leave me alone.

Answer: You will thereby neither protect your rights nor enjoy your peace; rather, you will lose both and must anticipate the judgment of God to your terror -- instead of enjoying peace you will experience terror within and without.

Evasive Argument #3: In doing so they assault my reputation, and this I must protect.

Answer: In doing so you will not defend your reputation, but bring shame upon yourself. The best way to defend your reputation is to let your conversation be steadfast and godly. And, if you are accused, then you are to demonstrate your innocence quietly and to answer softly if the opportunity is there. If not, be silent, for that is better than to lash out in anger; that is the work of fools (Ecclesiastes 7:9).

Believers Exhorted to Be Meek

Believers, even if worldly men are rancorous, wrathful, and vengeful, this conduct is not becoming to you. You are to have an aversion for, and to hate and flee these things; instead, endeavor to be meek.

First, God denominates you a meek person on the basis of this virtue: "Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth" (Zephaniah 2:3). The earth is filled with violence, and the very best among natural men is but a thorn. God's children are, however, of a different and more excellent spirit, manifesting this in their meekness. If you are denominated as a meek person, how much you then ought to endeavor to strive for consistency between your name and your actions!

Secondly, you are a Christian because you resemble Christ and live according to His laws. Jesus was meek and established Himself as an example for you, so that you would learn from Him and imitate Him. "Learn of Me; for I am meek" (Matthew 11:29); "Now I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ" (2 Corinthians 10:1). Christ commands you to be thus: "Seek meekness" (Zephaniah 2:3); "... that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called; with all lowliness and meekness" (Ephesians 4:1-2). Behold, there you have the example and commandment of Jesus, whom you love, and whom you desire to imitate and obey. Therefore, this ought to motivate you strongly to strive for meekness.

Thirdly, it behooves you to be meek in all that you undertake as a Christian.

(1) When you are to hear the Word of God, it must be done with meekness: "Receive with meekness the engrafted word" (James 1:21).

(2) When you are to pray, it must occur while "lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting" (1 Timothy 2:8).

(3) When you are to make profession of and give an account of your faith and hope, such is to occur "with meekness and fear" (1 Peter 3:15).

(4) When you are called to instruct others, then meekness is also mandatory: "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves" (2 Timothy 2:25).

(5) Meekness is needed when rebuking: "Restore such an one in the spirit of meekness" (Galatians 6:1). You are obligated to perform these duties, and without meekness they cannot be performed. It will, however, be pleasing to both God and man if you perform them in meekness. Such conduct will bring forth excellent fruit and you will have a peaceful conscience.

Fourthly, meekness is a glorious ornament of the church. The church is the glory of Christ, and when she is glorious, God and Christ are glorified. The latter is the desire of a true member of the church. It is his desire that he may contribute something to that, and since meekness is most eminent in glory in the eyes of those who are within and without, the Christian must strive in an extraordinary manner to be adorned with this ornament. Meekness itself is an ornate garment which covers nakedness and adorns with beauty the one who wears it. "Put on therefore ... bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering" (Colossians 3:12). Furthermore, the meek are also adorned with salvation. "He will beautify the meek with salvation" (Psalms 149:4). This ornament makes them pleasing in God's sight: "But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Peter 3:4). It is pleasing to man: "The discretion of a man deferreth his anger; and it is his glory to pass over a transgression" (Proverbs 19:11). Thus, the meek person adorns the church, shining forth there as a bright star.

Fifthly, great promises are made to the meek, which will most certainly be fulfilled for them, such as:

(1) answers upon their prayers: "Lord, thou hast heard the desire of the humble" (Psalms 10:17);

(2) being led by the Spirit: "The meek will He guide in judgment: and the meek will He teach his way" (Psalms 25:9);

(3) being filled with grace: "He giveth grace unto the lowly" (Proverbs 3:34);

(4) the experience of joy: "The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord" (Isaiah 29:19).

(5) deliverance from all who trouble them. Even though the meek may be without protection against the unrighteous dealings of such, they nevertheless have one who takes note of them and rescues them: "When God arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth" (Psalms 76:9); "The Lord lifteth up the meek" (Psalms 147:6);

(6) provision for all that they stand in need of for soul and body: "The meek shall eat and be satisfied" (Psalms 22:26); "But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace" (Psalms 37:11); "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matthew 5:5). The world, and all that is in it, is theirs; they are its possessors (1 Corinthians 3:21-22). Whatever they possess -- be it much or little -- they have in the favor of God, and they make use of it with a peaceful conscience. They will not have much opposition in the world, for rarely will anyone oppress one who is truly meek; and if he does, he will cease as soon as he perceives his meekness. Yes others, even natural men, will protect the meek, and thus the meek sojourn safely through this world. They do not have the troubles which other people have. Therefore, they who covet these promises ought to endeavor to be meek.

Sixthly, the meek are wise, are of a noble spirit, and have strength to conquer all resistance. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city" (Proverbs 16:32). The meek person can overcome where a rich person with his money, a prominent person with his prominence, and an angry person with his boisterous violence, must fail. He will conquer his enemies solely by his meekness and by rewarding them good for evil. "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink: for thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head" (Proverbs 25:21-22). This will be as unbearable to such a person as being burned by fiery coals. He will perceive that his wrath and hostility are not given any more attention than the anger of an ant, which will not concern anyone in the least. He will perceive that the meek person excels him since he rules over his heart -- and thus the enemy will have to subject himself as a vanquished one. This is unbearable to him, and it ought to lead him to repentance -- which occasionally occurs. He should learn from this not to oppose the meek person, since he will no longer receive any attention. He will no more be able to offend him than a large fly can trouble an ox while sitting upon his horns, but will himself be conquered.

Advice for Improvement

Meditate upon these arguments and allow them to have effect upon your heart in order that from henceforth you would endeavor to attain a meek disposition of heart. Be assured that you are neither born with it, will not receive it by wishing for it, nor will readily acquire it. Effort is required for it. Therefore, engage yourself in this duty.

(1) To that end you must continually take notice of those occasions when you lose your meek disposition; that is, when impatience and anger arise in you, and manifest themselves unto others. Reflect upon this for some time until it grieves you and you see your foolishness, sinfulness, and offensive behavior, and make renewed resolutions to correct this.

(2) Flee the company of impatient and angry people, for this is as infectious as the plague. "Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go: lest thou learn his ways, and get a snare to thy soul" (Proverbs 22:24-25). When you observe such and their behavior, take note of their foolishness so that you may develop an aversion for it, and, by way of a vivid example, may learn that "anger resteth in the bosom of fools" (Ecclesiastes 7:9).

(3) Seek the company of the meek and carefully observe their conduct. Observe in them how desirable meekness is. "Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud" (Proverbs 16:19).

(4) Always hold before you the example of the meek Jesus. To that end read the gospels frequently, continually taking note of the manner in which the Lord Jesus manifested His meekness. Impress this upon your heart in such a manner, so that, so to speak, the very nature of it is transferred unto you. And if something occurs which is unsettling, allow your thoughts to turn to the gospels to ascertain whether or not the Lord Jesus has been in such a situation and how He conducted Himself under those circumstances, or how He would have conducted Himself in such a situation -- and then follow His example.

(5) When you (either within or outside of your home) come into the company of people, arm yourself with meekness, conducting yourself as if you are entering into battle. Make the express resolution that you will be meek and ask the Lord for strength for the moment. If the occasion arises, see to it that the enemy gain not the advantage, and when you are again alone, reflect upon how you have fared. If all went well, thank the Lord and keep this peaceful disposition of heart in remembrance, in order that you may thus be stirred up to conduct yourself again in this manner. If you fell into sin, grieve over this; however, do not become discouraged, for one cannot learn to practice this glorious virtue that quickly. Instead, take new courage so that you may fare that much better in the future.

090. Chapter 85: Peaceableness

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-FIVE -----

Peaceableness

Love for our neighbor, humility, and meekness will beget peaceableness. Wherever the first three are to be found, the last will also be found. It is this virtue which we now wish to consider. In Hebrew this is expressed by the word menuchah, which means rest or quietness. A peacemaker is quiet and at peace within and without -- personally, as well as in the presence of others. There is also the word shalom, which is a derivative of shalam. This means: to be prosperous, to have peace, to complete. A peacemaker has peace, is prosperous, and completes his task with ease. In Greek we have the words eirenikos and eirenopoios). This word is derived from a root which means "to bind together," for peace unites the hearts, and binds people together. The apostle therefore speaks of "the bond of peace" (Ephesians 4:3).

Peaceableness is a believer's quiet and contented disposition of soul, inclining him toward, and causing him to strive for, the maintaining of a relationship with his neighbor characterized by sweet unity--doing so in the way of truth and godliness. The subject of peaceableness is the soul of the believer, this being the exclusive residence of this virtue. Even though the unconverted may refrain from strife and discord, they do not have this peaceable disposition of heart. "And the way of peace have they not known" (Romans 3:17). Rather, it is the ornament of possessors of grace, Christians who have been reconciled by the blood of Christ, who is their peace (cf. Colossians 1:20; Ephesians 2:14). They, having received the Lord Jesus by faith unto the forgiveness of sins, are justified, and thus have peace with God (Romans 5:1), which peace passes all understanding, and keeps their hearts and minds through Christ Jesus (Php 4:7). While thus enjoying peace with God in their conscience, it is as if all that is in the world is at peace with them, they are in league with the stones of the field, and the beasts of the field are at peace with them (Job 5:23). They are thus disposed when they interact with people. Their heart goes out after them and their peaceable heart desires nothing but harmony, even when they are alone. Such a disposition is to be found, however, in none but believers, faith being the means whereby such a peaceable disposition is engendered (Romans 5:1). Since peace is a fruit of the Spirit (Galatians 5:22), no one possesses this unless they are partakers of the Holy Spirit. The object of this virtue is our neighbor -- all men. A peacemaker is continually at war with the devil, the world, and his corrupt flesh -- with them he neither desires nor seeks to be at peace. The more he hates and opposes them, the better he likes it. However, toward men as men -- as his neighbors -- he has a peaceable heart and with them he endeavors to live in peace. First and foremost, the peacemaker lives in peace with the godly. He has a spiritual and very intimate relationship with them whereby their hearts are united in Christ, having the same Spirit and the same regenerate nature. "Have peace one with another" (Mark 9:50). One must, however, not limit himself to the godly. Rather, peaceableness extends to all men, as from his side the peacemaker does not give any reason for discord, and even if he has a just cause, he will overlook it, and will not allow it to disturb the peace. This is the essence of the apostle's exhortation: "If it be possible [that is, if people can be persuaded to be at peace and if the peace can be preserved], as much as lieth in you [that is, that there be no fault from your side, but strive for this with all your might], live peaceably with all men" (Romans 12:18). The essence of this virtue consists in an inclination, proceeding from inner quietness and contentment, to live in harmony with his neighbor. A peacemaker, living in the enjoyment of peace with God, has a heart free from strife, which, relative to his neighbor, is content and at peace. He does not harbor thoughts of having been wronged by his neighbor, of envy, or of any discontentment. Rather, he is at peace within -- calm, quiet, and satisfied. When he thinks about his neighbor, his heart desires to dwell in harmony with him, and he interacts with him in a most pleasant manner. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace" (Proverbs 3:17). Thus the essence of peace consists in hearts being knit together. It is therefore referred to as a bond: "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Ephesians 4:3). He is of one heart with others: "That ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind" (1 Corinthians 1:10). This occurred in the original church: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul" (Acts 4:32). A Fruit of Regeneration

Such a peaceable disposition does not issue forth from man's nature, for the one man is as a wolf to the other. God changes that cruel and savage heart, however, and grants His children to be at peace with Him in Christ; this in turn engenders a peaceable heart toward one's neighbor. "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; they shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain" (Isaiah 11:6; Isaiah 11:9). The Lord would transform the barbarous heathen into such persons and thus the apostle enumerates peace as one of the fruits of the Holy Spirit. "But the fruit of the Spirit is ... peace" (Galatians 5:22). The apostle therefore wishes the peace of God upon the congregation. "Now the Lord of peace Himself give you peace always by all means" (2 Thessalonians 3:16). Thus He is frequently called the God of peace, for He gives peace, and delights in those who are peacemakers (cf. Romans 15:33; 2 Corinthians 13:11). The effect or fruit of peaceableness is a striving to interact with our neighbor in sweet harmony. It will not avail us to imagine that we have a peaceable heart, and to be enamored with such a disposition. To strive for a peaceable relationship with our neighbor without a peaceable heart is but the fruit of nature or hypocrisy. To imagine that we have a peaceable heart and yet not to strive for a peaceable relationship is but a deceiving of self. A peaceable heart cannot fail to manifest peaceableness, and our seeking for harmony by way of an amiable relationship will be commensurate with the strength of that virtue within. It is thus that we shall be able to tolerate those who are not peaceable, and compel them to be peaceable by way of a steadfast manifestation of our love for peace. We must thus convince everyone that we seek peace, and that from our side this peace cannot be disturbed, even though someone else from his side may do so. "Live in peace" (2 Corinthians 13:11).

(1) The word live implies activity. To remain in seclusion without having any fellowship with people; without saying either good or evil about anyone; to be able to accept that everyone prospers; and neither to quarrel, fight, nor be angry -- all that does not constitute living in peace. To live in peace implies having fellowship with people in a pleasant and harmonious manner.

(2) The word live implies continual steadfastness. To occasionally conduct ourselves peacefully is not the same as living peacefully.

Rather, this mandates a continual activity and a perseverance in this respect.

(3) The word live implies “a finding delight in.” A peacemaker is in his element when he is at peace; he is then as a fish in water. When he may be in a peaceable relationship with people, he is joyful -- just as a healthy person delights himself and is of a joyful spirit. “Follow peace with all men” (Hebrews 12:14); “Seek peace, and pursue it” (Psalms 34:14). It is easy to maintain peace when someone else encounters us in a pleasant and peaceable manner, and deals with us according to our wishes. This is not how matters are, however; people are motivated by self-love and they will wrong us in both word and deed. At one time we may encounter someone who is cross, and then again another who is angry, stirring up our corrupt nature to respond to our neighbor in like manner. The peacemaker overlooks this, however, responds in a good-natured manner, and gives in -- even if this is to his own detriment and causes him to lose the esteem of the world. As one who rounds up and hunts wildlife, so he will seek peace and pursue it; and once he attains it, he considers himself to be victorious. The Practice of Peaceableness

However pleasant and desirable peace may be, we must nevertheless be on our guard that we do not pursue and maintain it at the expense of truth and godliness. In our definition we therefore added the following limitation: “in the way of truth and godliness.” There are people who are fearful of experiencing the displeasure and opposition of someone else, and therefore, however much they may be set in their ways and will protect that, so to speak, with a knife in their hands, they nevertheless easily yield that which is not theirs but was entrusted by God to their safekeeping, namely, truth and godliness -- even if this would mean the loss of everything, yes, even their life. Such people will then hide themselves behind the phrase “peace, peace.” This is clear proof that they neither belong to the peacemakers in Israel, nor do they truly have a peaceable heart. They do not seek peace, but their own expedience, and therefore they say, “Peace, peace,” even if this would mean peace with the devil and the world and that they would eternally have to miss peace with God. If new errors manifest themselves, such people insist that they must be silent and give in, for else there would be unrest; peace is best. If there is a sinner who needs to be converted from the error of his ways by way of exhortation and rebuke, one must refrain from this; he might become angry and cause us trouble. If the world insists that rather than manifesting godliness we conceal it, conforming ourselves to the world, such people will be prepared again to do so, for they do not wish unrest and therefore they say by renewal, “Peace, peace.” God says, however, that peace and truth, peace and godliness, must go hand in hand. If injury is done to one of those, we must neither set aside our peaceable heart, nor refrain from pursuing peace from our side. Instead, we are to oppose error and protect the truth. We shall thus oppose ungodliness and adhere to godliness. If others cannot endure this; if this displeases them and they cause trouble and create difficulties -- then this is for their account. A peacemaker will nevertheless adhere to truth and godliness, for God wills that these be conjoined. “Therefore love the truth and peace” (Zechariah 8:19). Athanasius would rather lose his position than to depart from one letter of the truth. Luther was accustomed to say: “I would rather have the heavens fall down, than that one crumb of truth would perish.” “Follow peace with all men, and holiness” (Hebrews 12:14); “Righteousness and peace have kissed each other” (Psalms 85:10). The ungodly Jehu answered the question of Joram very well: “Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many” (2 Kings 9:22). “But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy" (James 3:17). This is the virtue which is so earnestly commanded and insisted upon everywhere in God's Word: "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they will be called the children of God" (Matthew 5:9); "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace" (Romans 14:19); "Be at peace among yourselves" (1 Thessalonians 5:13). Are We Peacemakers?

Behold, here is a clear mirror in which you may behold not only your obligation toward peaceableness, but in which you may examine your own disposition and doings. Is peace with God, on the basis of the satisfaction of the Lord Jesus, your portion, having received this by faith unto justification, and does your peaceableness flow from that fountain? Do you know the distinction between the godly and those who are without grace? Is your soul one with the godly in Christ, and does your exercise of peace proceed from this unity? Do you maintain a peaceable disposition from your side and still strive to be at peace when natural man comes against you with much evil? Is your heart at rest, content, and pleased as far as your neighbor is concerned when you think of him in seclusion -- or if you see or speak with him? Or, are there alien, antagonistic, angry, envious, and discontented motions within you? Do you endeavor to manifest your peaceable heart in deeds -- even when others are angry at you and commit evil toward you? Do you love the truth and godliness so much that you do not wish to depart from it one iota, even if the entire world were to assault you, and do you nevertheless maintain a peaceable disposition of heart toward such, seeking by your deeds to manifest peace from your side? How does your soul respond to this in the presence of God? Do you belong to the peacemakers? Do you truthfully possess this in principle, and do you observe your deficiency with sorrow? Or are you convinced that you are truly destitute of this disposition and its resultant deeds? How happy you would be if you were to be convinced of this and were to remain under such conviction until you would be desirous to earnestly seek the Lord Jesus, attain peace with God, and be peaceably inclined toward your neighbor! To that end, reflect for a moment upon the conviction of this sin, and consider at once how God views you, and the judgments which will come upon you. I am addressing you who, when you are in seclusion, are as cruel wolves and tigers; who are as a turbulent sea which cannot be at rest; whose heart is filled with hateful, angry, envious, and quarrelsome thoughts and motions. I am addressing you who are increasingly provoked whenever you see him whom you consider to have offended you, and who explode as gunpowder as soon as someone speaks inappropriately to you or harms you. I am addressing you who not only personally live in discord within and without, but also cause discord between others, and repeatedly and increasingly fan the fire of dissension; and you who have peace in your mouth but discord in your heart. Jeremiah speaks of such: "One speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart he layeth his wait" (Jeremiah 9:8). Hear now what God says concerning you.

Threatenings Against the Unpeaceful

First, you are without grace, for you deny everything which denominates you a Christian. God, whom you claim to be your Father, is a God of peace, and you are void of it. Christ, whom you call your Savior, is the Prince of Peace, and you live in continual discord. The Holy Spirit, of whom you claim to be a partaker, works peace, and you live in dissension. The gospel by which you claim to have been regenerated is a gospel of peace, and yet you live in hatred, anger, envy, and discord. You call yourself a child of God; however, such are peaceable and you are not peaceable. You partake of the Lord's Supper by which the hearts of the godly are knit together, whereas your heart is divided against everyone. You will thus perceive that you have no part in all these matters of which you are boasting.

Secondly, you bear the image of the devil and his children. Your heart and countenance are the express image of Satan, the murderer of men. You are what the ungodly are described to be. The first world was full of violence (Genesis 6:12), and so are you. Ishmael was a wild man; his hand was against every man and every man's hand was against him (Genesis 6:12); such is your condition. Hypocritical and ungodly Israel served God in an external sense; however, they lived in strife and debate, and in fighting and smiting (Isaiah 58:4); such is true of you.

Thirdly, God abhors you and will exercise vengeance upon you: "These six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto Him: ... A false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren" (Proverbs 6:16; Proverbs 6:19); "Their tongue is as an arrow shot out. ... Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the Lord: shall not My soul be avenged on such a nation as this" (Jeremiah 9:8-9).

Since discord, dissension, and quarreling are evidences of an evil and murderous heart which is filled with anger, envy, vengeance; since such will not inherit the kingdom of heaven, but rather will have their portion in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone, you cannot expect anything else. You who live in discord with men, be afraid of yourself and of the wrath of God. God also lives in discord with you and He will prevail over you -- which He will cause you to experience. A Deficient Peaceableness And you, who truly -- and in principle -- have a peaceable heart (with so little evidence of it) the foregoing is also meant to be a mirror for you. How little do you resemble this disposition and the life of peacemakers! How many discordant thoughts do you have, and how sharp and biting are your words! How readily do you quarrel and entertain animosity within your heart! How this ought to grieve you! Mourn over this and earnestly seek to banish all discord, striving to have a peaceable heart and to live peaceably, for:

First, the absence of peace in both your heart and deeds will hinder you in all your religious exercises and will contaminate them.

(1) Your heart will lose its disposition to approach unto God, to pray, and to have fellowship with Him. "... that your prayers be not hindered" (1 Peter 3:7). Therefore, Paul says, "I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting" (1 Timothy 2:8).

(2) It causes those who are without and within to be greatly offended. Everyone will be disturbed when they hear a godly person quarrel and argue, for everyone is fully convinced that such is contrary to the nature of the godly and is not becoming for children of God. What does the Lord Jesus say about those who give offense? "It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea" (Matthew 18:6). You who are godly, ought not this to deter you from discord?

(3) You thus become incapable of being of benefit to others, while using all your energy to cause discord in the church. "For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work" (James 3:16).

Secondly, all that is in and related to the church counsels you to be peaceable.

(1) You have been born in the church and have been received as her member. However, the church is called Shulamite, that is, the peaceable one (Song of Solomon 6:13). Is it then becoming to you to live in discord and disharmony? Does it not behoove you to live in peace?

(2) God, who, while you were yet enemies, has reconciled you to Himself, is the God of peace (Romans 16:20). He desires peace and finds delight in those who are peaceable. Since this God is your Father and you address Him as "Abba, Father!," then how do you dare to come to Him with a heart void of peace and a quarrelsome tongue? How can you have communion with Him while being in such a disposition?

(3) The Lord Jesus -- your Bridegroom who embodies all your comfort, delight, and love -- is the Prince of Peace (Isaiah 9:6), and has reconciled you to God with the blood of His cross (Colossians 1:20). He commands you: "Have peace one with another" (Mark 9:50); therefore, "Be at peace" (1 Thessalonians 5:13).

(4) The Holy Spirit, who resides in you, has regenerated you, teaches you, and guides you, engenders a peaceable heart within you (Galatians 5:22). He warns you against discord, and continually stirs you up to be at peace. Should you not follow Him? Should you grieve Him who calls you to be at peace (1 Corinthians 7:15)?

(5) The gospel, which is the seed of regeneration and your spiritual nourishment, is the gospel of peace (Ephesians 6:15). How it therefore behooves you (in harmony with this gospel) to live in peace!

(6) The members of the church with whom you interact as family members -- whom you love, and in whose presence you rejoice -- are peaceable; their heart has a peaceable disposition, and their objective and activity are the pursuit of peace. Would not you offend and grieve them by your discordant behavior? Should you corrupt and stir them up to be quarrelsome as well?

(7) The Lord Jesus denominates you as His dove and sheep (cf. Song of Solomon 2:14; John 10:27). They are among the most peaceful of animals; would a sheep assume the nature of a wolf? Should you then be present among the sheep as if you were a bear?

(8) The sacraments are not only seals of your peace with God but also engender mutual union -- not only as brothers and sisters, but even as members of one body who live by one and the same Spirit. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body ... and have been all made to drink into one Spirit" (1 Corinthians 12:13); "For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread" (1 Corinthians 10:17). How then do you dare to entertain a discordant thought; how do you dare to open your mouth to quarrel, and show an unfriendly face to someone?

Peaceableness Adorns the Christian Thirdly, consider furthermore the glory of this virtue. It is an extraordinary ornament for a Christian.

(1) It is the manifestation of a meek and quiet spirit, being an incorruptible ornament "which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Peter 3:4). (2) It displays a denial of self whereby we overlook the failures of our neighbor and ignore the wrong done to us. "It is his glory to pass over a transgression" (Proverbs 19:11).

(3) Herein heavenly wisdom is manifested; quarreling is the work of fools. "A fool's lips enter into contention" (Proverbs 18:6). However, to be peaceable is the work of the wise: "But the wisdom that is from above is ... peaceable" (James 3:17); "For wisdom is better than rubies" (Proverbs 8:11); "How much better is it to get wisdom than gold!" (Proverbs 16:16); "Wisdom is better than strength" (Ecclesiastes 9:16). Wisdom causes the countenance of man to be radiant: "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine" (Ecclesiastes 8:1). However, all these delightful matters are comprehended in peaceableness.

(4) When the church manifests herself as adorned with the ornament of peaceableness, she is a lovely and delightful object to all who observe her. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" (Psalms 133:1). Therefore, shine forth in the church with the eminent ornament of peaceableness.

Fourthly, peaceableness has most eminent rewards.

(1) A peacemaker is joyful: "To the counsellors of peace is joy" (Proverbs 12:20).

(2) Peacemakers are fit to engage in all spiritual exercises toward God and man. Their heart does not condemn them and they therefore have confidence toward God (1 John 3:21). All their words and actions are pleasant, for they proceed from a heart which is at liberty. They are seasoned with salt, that is, with wisdom; salt and peace are therefore conjoined (Mark 9:50).

(3) The Lord dwells with peacemakers in His love and favor. "Live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you" (2 Corinthians 13:11). To enjoy the presence of God in the manifestation of His love toward us, is everything. If God is for us, who will then be against us? If He grants tranquility, who will then cause turmoil?

(4) God's blessings are upon the peacemakers: "There the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore" (Psalms 133:3). Therefore, let him live in peace who desires to receive all manner of blessings from the Lord.

(5) In summary, God declares them to be His children and the heirs of salvation: "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God" (Matthew 5:9). More we cannot desire; therefore, be diligent to live in peace.

Means to Cultivate Peaceableness

If you are desirous to live in peace: (1) Crucify your desire for money, honor, and love; it is impossible to have and maintain a peaceable heart without self-denial. Or else you yourself will be the cause of others quarrelling with you, since you are seeking after what they pursue. It can easily be that you will encounter them while in such a disposition, and your inner peace will thereby be disturbed. Whatever stirs in the heart will soon spill forth from our mouths. Greediness is a breaker of the peace. "He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house" (Proverbs 15:27). Ambition begets strife: "He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife" (Proverbs 28:25). Wherever there is envy toward the honor, gain, and love that others enjoy, the heart cannot but be restless, and this will readily burst forth one way or the other. Envy and strife are therefore conjoined, for together they are a fountain of confusion and every evil work (James 3:16).

(2) Keep to yourself and let others govern their own matters. Do not appoint yourself as a detective and judge concerning the deeds of others; close your ears for backbiters. Do not listen for what is being said about you. "A whisperer separateth chief friends" (Proverbs 16:28); "Where there is no talebearer, the strife ceaseth" (Proverbs 26:20).

Solomon therefore wisely counseled: "Also take no heed unto all words that are spoken; lest thou hear thy servant curse thee" (Ecclesiastes 7:21). And regarding you, remain silent in order that you speak no evil about your neighbor, for that will continually bring you in trouble and frequently stir up discord. "He that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction" (Proverbs 13:3). If you hear others quarreling, see to it that you do not involve yourself in this quarrel. Do not appoint yourself as judge, and then immediately execute your sentence by rendering assistance to the one party. It is an entirely different matter when you counsel others to be at peace. "He that passeth by, and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears" (Proverbs 26:17). Such a one (who minds the matters of others) is thus in peril of being bitten. "But let none of you suffer ... as a busybody in other men's matters" (1 Peter 4:15).

(3) Be always the least -- both in your own eyes as well as in your conduct toward others. Endure being wronged, and forgive such deeds (Colossians 3:13). In all things yield to the will of others, insofar as this is not contrary to the will of God, following Abraham's example: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee ... if thou wilt take the left hand, then I shall go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I shall go to the left" (Genesis 13:8-9). In this respect one will become rich by giving. By yielding in some measure one will gain peace and a peaceful heart, which is more precious than gold, rubies, and power. "Seek peace, and pursue it" (Psalms 34:14).

(4) If someone else encounters you in an unpleasant manner, or if you detect the first stirring of displeasure, arm yourself at once and resist strife at the very outset; be completely silent. For, if you are not on your guard, the quarrel will increase hand over hand and you will not be able to hold it back. "The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water" (Proverbs 17:14).

091. Chapter 86: Diligence

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-SIX -----

Diligence

God has granted man a soul and a body, as well as the ability to be occupied and to glorify Him with both. Adam, even while in the state of perfection, had physical labor assigned to him. "And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it" (Genesis 2:15).

After the fall it is also God's will that man be occupied, and He appoints to every man his labor. "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called" (1 Corinthians 7:20). God wills that man not only perform his calling, but that he do so diligently. This virtue we shall now discuss. In Hebrew this is expressed by the word charoots, which means: "sharp," "pointed," "diligent." In Greek it is expressed by the word akribeia. This is expressive of dealing with a matter with utmost care and prudence for the purpose of assuring that the project might be executed and turn out well. Thus, diligence implies considerably more than working only. In turn the word akribos is derived from this, which means "diligent." "He spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord" (Acts 18:25); "See then that ye walk circumspectly (that is diligently, precisely)" (Ephesians 5:15). The Greek also use the word epimeleia, which is a derivative of melei. This conveys the dealing with a matter in a manner which exceeds the ordinary -- with the utmost care. "... seek diligently till she find it" (Luke 15:8). The commonly used word is spoude from which our words speed and to speed are derived. It is thus expressive of readiness and being industrious. "He that ruleth, let him do it with diligence" (Romans 12:8).

Diligence is the exertion of the spiritual and physical powers of a believer whereby he willingly, joyously, and earnestly executes that task which God assigns him, doing so because it is the will of God. This virtue only functions in a believer. The unconverted are also diligent in their own way, but their diligence differs as much from the diligence of believers as life differs from death. The diligence of a natural man proceeds from a perverted heart filled with vices. His heart has neither desire nor love for that task as being the will of God. Instead, his objective is to earn a living, please people, or to attain some other objective. That diligence which is a Christian virtue, however, proceeds from a regenerate and believing heart. Faith unites the soul with Christ, and proceeds through Christ unto God as a reconciled Father. This in turn begets love toward God which motivates one to please the Lord, and thus believers view their task as having been commanded them by God. This engenders a willingness to accept this task, joyfulness in performing it, and industriousness to bring it to a good end -- all this because it is the will of God and in order that God might be pleased with that work. The object of diligence is the task which God assigns us. God, in His wisdom and goodness, has ordained that the one man shall live from the other. For that purpose He has instituted various ranks among men and has given each his own task. To one He assigns a task in the church, to another in civil government, and to the other to labor in the home. To each man he assigns a calling: The one becomes a fisherman, the other a farmer, the other a businessman, and the other a craftsman. Among them there is variety as well: The one is in need of services, whereas the other renders his services. A believer takes note of his station and condition, simultaneously recognizing it to be a divine appointment; and with David, he surrenders himself to the service of the Lord. "O Lord, truly I am Thy servant; I am Thy servant" (Psalms 116:16). He is thus satisfied with the Lord's appointment for him, irrespective of whether it is prestigious or insignificant, easy or difficult -- it does not matter to him. Since the Lord is sovereign, and at the same time wise, good, and a rewarder of all His faithful servants, the believer accepts his task as one to which he has been called by God (1 Corinthians 7:20).

Exertion of One's Spiritual and Physical Faculties The essence of diligence consists in the exertion of the faculties of both soul and body. The soul of a diligent person is fully engaged to execute the task at hand well.

First, he engages his intellect to consider in what manner, and by what means, he may execute that task in the best possible manner. His mind is focused upon the task while being engaged in it. David conducted himself thus in all that he did: "... a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters" (1 Samuel 16:18); "He ... guided them by the skilfulness of his hands" (Psalms 78:72). Solomon says concerning a wise servant: "A wise servant shall have rule" (Proverbs 17:2); "A man shall be commended according to his wisdom" (Proverbs 12:8).

Secondly, the will is also engaged toward this duty in the following manner:

(1) In willingness. This is the reason why the construction of the walls of Jerusalem prospered, "for the people had a mind to work" (Nehemiah 4:6).

(2) Joyfully. We shall not work as a slave -- and thus contrary to our will, with a fretful heart, and for fear of being beaten. Rather, we shall do so joyfully, since we may serve such a great Lord and compassionate Father. Regardless of whether it is a spiritual or physical task, the diligent do their task joyfully, being an assignment from their Lord and Father. "Serve the Lord with gladness" (Psalms 100:2).

Thirdly, the emotions and affections are also engaged. The diligent person will be industrious, zealous, and find delight in his work. Just as a spirited horse, being ready to run, will kick against the door of the stable in order that he might get out, the diligent person is likewise so industrious that he is already involved in his task before the other person is half ready. "I made haste, and delayed not to keep Thy commandments" (Psalms 119:60). They are as "a flaming fire" (Psalms 104:4). "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings" (Proverbs 22:29).

Fourthly, the diligent person also engages the powers and faculties of the body for any physical labor to be engaged in. He neither fears perspiration nor fatigue; doing the will of the Lord is worth this to him. He considers it an honor to come before the Lord with a perspiring countenance, showing himself before Him exhausted and fatigued, saying: "This is due to the delightful and joyous engagement in Thy work." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" (Ecclesiastes 9:10). The Objective of the Diligent Person The laborer's objective motivates him, and this in turn determines the means he uses to attain his objective. It is thus that the diligent person is motivated by his objective: to do the will of God. There are times when he could do without work as such; however, it is his life to do the will of God. Whatever the diligent do, they do it because it is the will of God. They therefore dare neither to engage in any task which is sinful nor to make use of any sinful means for a task which in and of itself is neutral. When they are self-employed, doing their task quietly, they hold God before them as commanding them to do so. If it is their calling to work for and serve someone else, they perceive in this the will of God. This is the principle, substance, and purpose of all that they do: They serve God. The diligent person also labors to make a living, provide for his family, and give something to the needy. Ultimately this is all a doing of the will of God, however, since it pleases the Lord to provide him with all this by means of labor. The apostle Paul teaches us that when we serve men we must do so as serving God: "Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as ... the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men" (Ephesians 6:57). A Lack of Diligence Rebuked By demonstrating what diligence is as a Christian virtue, the following persons ought to be convicted: First, all worms of the earth, who burrow in the earth as moles, who are indeed engaged in labor but, nevertheless, are without this virtue. Since God has imposed labor upon man, such persons pretend that their labor is religiously motivated. They must know, however, that work as such is not a religious activity. In order for it to have a religious dimension, it must be engaged in with that disposition, in that manner, and with that objective as we have just delineated. Our labor becomes a religious activity when we perform it with a heart united with Christ -- and through Him with God -- and thereby view God as a reconciled God and Father, and thus have a childlike disposition. The believer deems the labor of his calling to be a task imposed upon him by God. He fully embraces God's will and does his work with childlike obedience, having as his objective thereby to serve and please God. You miss all this, and you must thus perceive that your labor does not have a religious perspective; rather it is but a service which you render to and for yourselves. God has pronounced this curse upon all the unconverted: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" Genesis 3:17; Genesis 3:19. It is this curse which God threatens in Deuteronomy 28:20: "The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto for to do." You are thus not able to reassure yourself that your labor is of a religious nature.

Secondly, many practice the opposite vice, namely laziness. This is such a shameful sin that the most lazy man does not wish to be labelled with it. Such a man ought to know that a lazy person is a disgrace to the church, no matter what his station in life may be. Regardless of whether he is a government official, minister, elder, deacon, married or unmarried person, tradesman, businessman, laborer, man or woman -- if such a person is a member of the church of Christ, he or she is a disgrace to Christ and His congregation. Who is lazy?

(1) He who is without work, for a diligent person will always find work. A lazy person complains that there is no work, for he cannot tolerate work. He has conducted himself in such a manner that no one wishes to have him in his employ, nor give him any work. He avoids opportunities to work, and if a position opens up, he excuses his idleness by saying: "I can't work there." However, a diligent person seeks and finds work; if the one thing does not work out, he tries something else.

(2) A lazy person is one who loves to sleep long, and who delights in turning from one side to the other in his bed, thus enabling him to slumber that much longer and that much more sweetly. Solomon describes the sluggard as such: "Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep" (Proverbs 19:15); "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep" (Proverbs 6:9-10); "As the door turneth upon his hinges, so doth the slothful upon his bed" (Proverbs 26:14).

(3) A lazy person is careless. He is disorderly, brings everything into disarray, and leaves it as such. I am not suggesting that all who put their accomplishments on display are diligent; nevertheless, carelessness is a sign of laziness. Occasionally it occurs that a diligent person is so occupied that some things have to wait in preference to others; however, this is contrary to his wishes. But, to wear torn clothing, to have a house full of dust and spider webs, and to let everything be dirty, are indicative of being a lazy person. "Drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags" (Proverbs 23:21); "I went by the field of the slothful ... and, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down" (Proverbs 24:30-31).

(4) A lazy person is afraid of work. He fiddles around, walks to and fro, surveys his task before he begins, and if neither necessity would compel him nor shame would pressure him, he would refrain from working. At one time there is this obstacle and then again another. Then it is either too hot or too cold, the tools are not adequate, or the supplies are deficient. He believes that there will still be time to do the task, and he will do it at a later time. When he lies upon his bed, or walks about idly, he will form a conception of his work and contemplate how it ought to be done. Then he will contemplate how desirable the advantages are which proceed from diligence. He resolves to engage himself as such and to courageously undertake the task. It is as if he already did the work; however, when the time is there, he cannot get himself to do it. "A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom" (Proverbs 19:24); "The slothful man saith, There is a lion without, I shall be slain in the streets" (Proverbs 22:13). When the sluggard actually does work, it is impossible to observe him without abhorrence. It is as if his legs drag behind him, as if his legs sank into the earth up to his knees, and as if all that he touched was tar and thus cleaved to his hands. He will carefully examine what he is working on, change its position in various ways, will fit it, measure it again, and will stroke it once more; and thus time passes on. In the meantime, he will even insist upon double wages.

(5) A lazy person is a man full of ideas and imagination. As far as he is concerned, matters are not handled well; it should be handled thus and thus. He dreams of great things; in his imagination he dreams himself to be one thing, and then again another thing, always knowing best when judgment must be given in a given situation. "The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason" (Proverbs 26:16). He believes that he has learned the wrong trade. If only he were in such and such a situation and had such and such a job, all would be well. He does not care for his profession, however, and occupies himself with trifles. He will construct one thing, disassemble something else, and do everything else -- except the labor of his calling.

Arguments to Deter Laziness

We have thus fully depicted the lazy person for you, so that everyone might be convinced how much or how little he resembles such a person. And truthfully, some of the godly are also not entirely free from this. Even if they are diligent, very much is lacking as far as the pure nature of diligence (as previously described) is concerned. In order to further deter everyone from laziness, we shall hold before you some of its evil consequences.

First, God hates the sluggard, which he demonstrates by the fact that He did not want the firstborn of an ass. It either had to be redeemed, or else its neck had to be broken (Exodus 13:13). What a dreadful state it is to be hated and abhorred by God, and to be worthy of having our neck broken or our skull crushed!

Secondly, a sluggard is hated and despised by all honorable men. Men will have compassion for a poor person, but who will have compassion for a sluggard? "As vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes, so is the sluggard to them that send him" (Proverbs 10:26). Such a person is a nuisance and troublesome to have around.

Thirdly, a sluggard is a burden to himself. He must work and he does not want to work. When he begins to work, it is a double burden for him. It is as if he has to pass through a hedge of thorns with his naked body, thorns pricking him from all sides. "The way of the slothful man is as an hedge of thorns" (Proverbs 15:19).

Fourthly, the sluggard brings himself and his loved ones to extreme poverty, thus being worse than an infidel (1 Timothy 5:8). His grief and destitute condition cause him to waste away. "The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing" (Proverbs 13:4); "The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh" (Ecclesiastes 4:5).

Fifthly, laziness is the fountain of all manner of sin, vain thoughts, fornication 2 Samuel 11:2, backbiting Romans 1:30, unrighteousness, and despair. And thus one sin begets the other, upon which at last eternal death follows as its wages (Romans 6:23). Therefore, be fearful of laziness. He who is lazy in temporal matters will be lazy in spiritual matters, and he who is diligent in spiritual matters will be diligent in temporal matters.

Believers Exhorted to be Diligent To the same degree that a believer hates and flees laziness, so earnest must he be in endeavoring to be diligent, doing so in the spiritual manner as has been proposed. A godly person cannot but be enamored when viewing this virtue in its beauty, and will earnestly endeavor to perform his physical labors in a spiritual manner. To be further stirred up in this matter, consider the following:

First, there is God's command. You have chosen the Lord to be your God and have surrendered yourself to His service. A servant will ask his master: "What would you have me do?" You ought to conduct yourself as such. Therefore, hear God's command: "And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you; that ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing" (1 Thessalonians 4:11-12). It appears that this was greatly lacking in this congregation, for he exhorts them to that end also in his second letter: "For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread" (2 Thessalonians 3:11-12). These words are also addressed to you.

Secondly, diligence is an ornament to the Christian, and it removes the slanderous accusation which worldly citizens make concerning the godly; that they frequent all church services, catechism lessons, lectures, and meetings (going from the one to the other), while neglecting their calling, not giving attention to their families, and being lazy. Citizens of the world think much of diligence and have little use for godliness. You, however, ought to join them, so that everyone may be convinced that godliness renders people both diligent and upright. You will thus be an ornament to the church of God, put those to shame who slander godliness, and stir up others.

Thirdly, God holds before us His own example: to labor six days and to rest on the seventh (Exodus 20:9-11). The Lord Jesus says, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work" (John 5:17). It thus behooves us to be industrious. How else would you dare to expect a blessing from the Lord? Even the animals teach you to be diligent.

Fourthly, God promises His blessing upon diligence. This blessing is not inherent in industry itself, for "it is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows" (Psalms 127:2). Rather, it is all dependent upon God's blessing. Moses therefore prayed, "Establish Thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it" (Psalms 90:17). God causes His commandment to prosper with those who comply with it. Why is it that an ungodly man who cultivates and sows his field harvests much fruit and that a godly person, if he were not to cultivate his land and sow the seed in an appropriate manner, would come home with empty hands at harvest time? Is the earth capable in and of itself to bring forth grain? Is it not God who causes it to come forth from the earth? Why then do the ungodly receive so much and the godly so little? Does God prefer the ungodly over the godly? No; rather, God blesses what He commands, and thus the ungodly are blessed because they use the means ordained by God. If someone fails to do so, he will also miss the fruit. If, however, a godly person is industrious, he will not only have fruit, but his fruit will also be blessed. This is according to promise: "He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand: but the hand of the diligent maketh rich" (Proverbs 10:4); "The hand of the diligent shall bear rule" (Proverbs 12:24); "The soul of the diligent shall be made fat. Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished: but he that gathereth by labour shall increase" (Proverbs 13:4; Proverbs 13:11). Even if a godly person does not gather as much as he would desire in a natural sense, the Lord's blessing will nevertheless rest upon the little that he has. "A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked" (Psalms 37:16). This promise will be confirmed to you: "For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee" (Psalms 128:2).

092. Chapter 87: Compassion

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-SEVEN -----

Compassion

God, in His wisdom and goodness, is pleased to preserve and govern all things upon this earth by the use of means. This is true for the inanimate as well as the animate creation. One person's life is contingent upon that of another. Thousands of people are involved in the well-being of one person; however, the nature of this involvement is such that each person seeks his own welfare. When help is rendered to a needy person, however, the only objective is (and indeed ought to be) the welfare of the person who is being helped; that is, when we feed the hungry, give drink to the thirsty, clothe the naked, and render assistance to the poor, sick, and weak. This practice is referred to as compassion, benevolence, liberality, and kindness. This is a virtue praised by all, practiced by few, and practiced rightly by even fewer. In Hebrew we have the word rechem (= mercy), which is expressive of love of the most tender sort -- a love that is most readily stirred up. The tender motion of a mother toward the fruit of her womb is designated by the very same word rechem. The apostle therefore expresses compassion as the bowels of mercy Colossians 3:12, as they are the fountain from which compassion proceeds. The Hebrew word for compassion, nedivah, means as much as being noble and willing to give freely, as the giving of the compassionate person is not compulsory. His giving is motivated by his own inclination and noble disposition. Benevolence is expressed as chesed, which means mercifulness and kindness, since it proceeds from a good and kind heart. The meaning of liberality in Hebrew is identical in our language. It means to share; that is, to divide what we have. It means that we keep one portion for ourselves and give another portion to another, and thus in that sense make that person equal to ourselves. The Greek word eleos or mercy is indicative of being distraught. It is the result of the compassionate person taking the needs of the other person to heart to such an extent as if he himself were in that condition.

Compassion is the inner motion of sympathy in the heart of a believer, generated by a consideration of the misery of the other person, thus motivating the believer to assist another in very deed. This virtue is exclusively to be found in the believer. Outwardly an unconverted person can perform whatever a godly person performs. The distinction is as great, however, as the difference between the artificial motion of a watch and the motion of a living being. The natural man is dead in sins and trespasses and is thus unto all good work reprobate. His compassion proceeds from a natural heart, which in reality is a having compassion with himself, imagining within himself what it would be like if he were that miserable. He therefore, so to speak, gives to himself, except that he has a heart which strives to be rewarded with honor and love. The godly person, however, has spiritual life by reason of his faith in Christ. Since he has become a partaker of the nature of Christ as a result of that union, his actions are motivated by love to God and His will. From this proceeds love for his neighbor, being inclined also to seek his spiritual welfare in order that God may be thanked and glorified by the recipient of such help. It is with such a disposition that the believer helps the needy person. The apostle therefore limits compassion to the elect who are holy and beloved: "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies" (Colossians 3:12). The object of compassion is a given need. Love manifests itself toward the neighbor by reason of his being our neighbor, irrespective of what condition he may be in. However, the compassionate person is moved in love toward his neighbor as being a needy person. There may be a spiritual need -- such as when a person is unconverted and we observe him traversing the broad way to destruction. Or it can pertain to a converted person who is in a state of spiritual desertion, has strife, or any other grief of soul he may have. The compassionate person is engaged to be of help to such people -- seeking to bring the one to repentance, and to strengthen and comfort the other. There can also be bodily needs which can have a variety of causes, such as illness, mishaps, loss of loved ones, poverty, hunger, or the deprivation of shelter. The compassionate person is engaged to be of help to such a person in accordance with the diversity of his perplexity. Also in this case the needy person can either be unconverted or converted. The compassionate person is engaged toward both. However, there is the following distinction: He is much more involved with the godly, doing so with entirely different affections. However, he will also not refuse his help to others. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith" (Galatians 6:10). Our compassion must also extend itself toward those who hate us. "Do good to them that hate you" (Matthew 5:44); "Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him" (Romans 12:20). Among all natural relationships with people, our relatives are nearest to us, and they must have preference over all other people. "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" (1 Timothy 5:8). The Essence of Compassion The essence of compassion consists in being inwardly moved to sympathy, which, if it is right, will always be accompanied by an inclination and willingness to help. It does not consist in either fully or partially parting with our belongings. "And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor ... and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing" (1 Corinthians 13:3). Rather, there must be:

(1) Sympathy. Where there is love, there will also be sympathy when the person being loved is in need. The compassionate person will thus take note of the condition of those who come to mind. If he perceives perplexing circumstances or sorrow, he will reflect and focus upon them until he is fully cognizant of the person's need, moved and touched by it, grieves over it and, so to speak, suffers with him: "Weep with them that weep" (Romans 12:15). Job testifies of himself: "Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? was not my soul grieved for the poor?" (Job 30:25). The apostle Peter exhorts us to be thus: "Finally ... having compassion one of another" (1 Peter 3:8).

(2) Inner motions of compassion, whereby the veracity and intensity of this sympathy is expressed, so that it touches and moves the heart. Yes, a compassionate person can be more sensitive to the suffering of another person than that person is himself. God's mercy is expressed in this manner: "Through the tender mercy of our God" (Luke 1:78). Such is also stated concerning the Lord Jesus: "And Jesus, moved with compassion" (Mark 1:41); "I have compassion on the multitude" (Matthew 15:32).

(3) An inclination, willingness, and zeal to assist the needy person in accordance with his need: "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath" (2 Corinthians 8:12). We observe this wherever mention is made of both the compassion of God and Christ; that is, it immediately results in the rendering of help. Such is also the case among men, for as there can be no compassion without sympathy, likewise sympathy without the inclination and willingness to render assistance is not compassion. These go hand in hand and cannot be separated. Thus compassion consists of the inner motions of sympathy, accompanied by the inclination and willingness to help. "Put on therefore ... bowels of mercies" (Colossians 3:12).

God, the Fountain of Compassion The origin of compassion is not found in man himself, for man is by nature filled with all manner of wickedness, maliciousness, envy, murder, malignity, without natural affection, and unmerciful Romans 1:29; Romans 1:31. However, as the regeneration and spiritual life of God's children have their origin in God, this is likewise true for the virtue of compassion. This propensity, having been infused by God, is stirred up upon consideration of the need of someone else. If there were no objects toward whom this could be exercised, this virtue would be present in the believer as a propensity, but it would not be able to be exercised. The Lord has ordained, however, that both rich and poor will meet each other, and that there will be an abundance of objects for the exercise of compassion. Nevertheless, the priest and the Levite ignored the misery of the man who had fallen into the hands of murderers, and passed him by. However, when the Samaritan "saw him, he had compassion on him" (Luke 10:33). When a godly person meets a needy person, he will focus his attention upon him, and by reason of such observance his compassionate nature will be stirred up. Whenever mention is made of the compassion of the Lord Jesus, it is always written, "Jesus seeing him, her, the multitude ...," which proves that compassion is kindled by the observance of those who are in need. A compassionate person will take note of the needy persons he encounters, and if he does not encounter any, he will seek them out. The Effects or Fruits of Compassion The effects or fruits of compassion are a being charitable and a rendering of assistance. "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth" (1 John 3:18). It consists in:

(1) Providing shelter for the poor who are homeless -- especially those of the household of faith: "Is it not to ... bring the poor that are cast out to thy house?" (Isaiah 58:7).

(2) Feeding the hungry and giving drink to the thirsty: "Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry? ... and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul" Isaiah 58:7; Isaiah 58:10.

(3) Clothing the naked: "... when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" (Isaiah 58:7).

(4) Visiting the sick who are poor, offering them monetary assistance, or refreshing them with some delightful food. The Lord Jesus visited the sick in Bethesda John 5:5-6, and the mother of Peter's wife who was in bed with a high fever (Luke 4:38-39). Consider furthermore the comprehensive listing of the works of compassion in (Matthew 25:35). Thus generosity manifests itself in being generous. This is the virtue which God's Word so frequently commands us to practice. Therefore, impress this upon your heart. "Thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth" (Deuteronomy 15:7-8). Compassion is not only to be exercised when someone has come into extreme poverty, but also when someone is still able to stay afloat; that is, if there is some probability that he can earn his living. If he is in need of some goods or merchandise, it is an act of compassion if we provide a generous loan (if we have the means to do so) to such a person -- be it that he returns this when he is able to; that he can never pay it back; that he can pay interest; or that neither payment for the interest nor the principal is to be expected. The Lord Jesus commands us to do this: "Lend, hoping for nothing again" (Luke 6:35). Add to this the following passage: "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Micah 6:8). All godliness is comprehended in this: To humbly walk with God, and not only to be righteous and compassionate toward our neighbor, but also to have love for, find delight in, seek, and be desirous to give expression to these virtues. Add to this the following passages: "And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted" (Ephesians 4:32); "But to do good and to communicate forget not" (Hebrews 13:16). Apply this to yourself as having been said to you. Is it not therefore true that benevolence is your duty? The Need for Self-Examination

Now turn within and observe yourself in the mirror we have held before you in delineating the nature of compassion. Do you belong to the compassionate? Is there compassion in your heart flowing forth out of union with the Lord Jesus, having become a partaker of His loving nature by faith? Are there motions of sympathy, mercy, and compassion to be found within you toward outcasts, the poor in general -- and particularly toward those who hate and evil entreat you? Are you mostly compassionate toward the godly and the members of the household of faith? Do you take their misery to heart? Do you seek them out, and do you focus upon their need so that you might be moved by it and become willing and zealous to help them? Do you provide shelter for the poor who are homeless, feed the hungry, clothe the naked? Do you visit and encourage those among the sick who are poor? Do you help and support those who have come to their wit's end, and do you lend to them without hoping for something in return? What are your answers upon these questions? If you must answer negatively, be convinced that you are not among the merciful and the compassionate. There are various types among those who are void of compassion.

Persons Void of Compassion Identified

First, there are people without natural love -- and thus also without compassion. They are cruel and have nearly rid themselves of all humaneness. They gather and scrape together for themselves as much as they can, and they cling to that which they possess with all their might. No one may benefit from this, and they say with Nabal: "Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my flesh ... and give it unto men, whom I know not whence they be?" (1 Samuel 25:11). They are neither concerned about the poor, nor are they inwardly moved by their condition. If they see someone in need, they will pass him by as the priest and Levite did.

Secondly, there are people who fear that they might be moved to give something, and thus they avoid such opportunities. They turn their heads, close their doors, or walk away when they see someone in need. They already "smell" from a distance if someone visits them to plead the cause of a poor person. They will change the subject of the conversation, and their heart becomes averse to such pleas for help.

Thirdly, there are people who are indeed moved with compassion, but who do not like to give. Therefore they pacify themselves and harden their hearts; they do violence to themselves so that they do not have to give, and dismiss the poor with a friendly word. James speaks of such: "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" (James 2:15-16). They will look for some reasons whereby they may pacify themselves and excuse themselves before others who request something from them.

They reason as follows:

(1) I need this for myself and my loved ones. (2) There is so much to be contributed for various taxes and other causes.

(3) There are so many poor people; I cannot help them all. Thus, they do not help anyone.

(4) I do not know whether my gift will be used properly, for there are so many dishonest people. They will drink away or waste in gluttony what I have worked for and have saved. I have been deceived so many times that I no longer can have any compassion for the poor.

(5) I make my contribution to the deacons who have been appointed to care for the poor.

(6) I have remembered the poor in my will. Upon my death they will receive such and such an amount from me. Such are just like hogs who are useless during their life but are beneficial after their death.

(7) When I am in better circumstances and have a bit more leeway, I shall give. Then the poor will benefit, for I have indeed a good inclination toward being compassionate. By these and similar arguments they will pacify themselves, and this culminates in not giving at all.

Fourthly, there are others who indeed do give but whose compassion is not of the right sort.

(1) Some give out of a sense of shame and dare not refrain from giving. They do so by compulsion, however, and it is as if, so to speak, it were forcefully pressed from their heart. While giving with their hand, there is an evil inclination in their heart.

(2) Some give in order to be honored and praised by men. They would like to blow the trumpet when they are about to give something to the poor so that everyone will know it. And, in order that it may be known that they are generous, they will bring up the matter in conversation and frequently pretend to have given ten times more than is really the case.

(3) Some spend money indiscriminately and disperse it randomly, without being moved by any inner motions of love and compassion. The poor do indeed receive something, but such giving is not a giving of alms.

Misers Rebuked

Come, you misers who are void of compassion, hear what God has to say about you and toward you. May it be a means to your conversion.

First, you are thieves and murderers. You are thieves, for God has given you all that you have. He has not only given this to you personally, but He has done so with the express command that this be shared with the poor according to your ability. If you therefore keep this for yourself, you are robbing the poor to whom this ordinance pertains and toward whom you are financially obliged. You are also murderers, not only due to the cruelty which is implicit in your lack of compassion, but also because you are responsible for the poor perishing for hunger and lack of shelter. If their lives are preserved, this is not because of your doings, but rather due to the efforts of others who help them. Be it known, however, that thieves and murderers will not inherit the kingdom of heaven -- and this therefore also applies to you.

Secondly, you are numbered among the most ungodly and abominable sinners. You know that Sodom and all its inhabitants -- parents and children -- were consumed by God with fire which fell from heaven, and that God has made these cities to be an example to those who live ungodly lives (2 Peter 2:6). What did their ungodliness consist of, however? It was lack of compassion for the poor -- the sin in which you are living. "Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy" (Ezekiel 16:49). This you also do not do, and therefore you are like her; since your sin is of the same sort, your punishment will also be like hers.

Thirdly, do not imagine that you have faith and love for God in your heart, for if that were so, you would also be compassionate and generous -- particularly to the poor among the godly. Where compassion is absent, faith is absent. "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone ... show me thy faith without thy works" (James 2:17-18). Where compassion is absent, the love of God is absent. "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" (1 John 3:17).

Fourthly, all your religion is vain -- even your fasting and praying. God is neither pleased with it nor will He hear your prayers. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction" (James 1:27). The Jews were very religious, sought God daily, greatly desired the knowledge of His ways, fasted often, and yet complained that God did not hear them (Isaiah 58:5-3). God revealed, however, that He was not pleased with them, as they were neither compassionate nor benevolent toward the poor. "Is it such a fast that I have chosen? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" Isaiah 58:5; Isaiah 58:7. Do you complain that God neither helps you nor hears your prayer? It is no wonder, for you do not hear the cry of the poor. "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard" (Proverbs 21:13).

Fifthly, the judgments and curses of God -- both temporal and eternal -- will come upon the merciless. The Lord curses them and their goods, and it may be that even in this life they will be reduced to a piece of bread, experience that their children will have to beg, and be glad that there are shelters, orphanages, and boarding houses for the poor. And even if all this does not come upon them in this life, it will come upon them eternally. How frightful it will be to hear this dreadful sentence in the last day when the Lord Jesus will say unto them, "Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels: for I was an hungred, and ye gave Me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me not in: naked, and ye clothed Me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited Me not" Matthew 25:41-43! Take note of this; do not delude yourself by fostering expectations about yourself that all is well. Jesus, who is truth Himself, is saying this. Or do you think that in the day of judgment Jesus will say, "You have done all this," while yet you have not done it? "For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy" (James 2:13).

Believers Exhorted to be Compassionate And you, believers -- in whom the principle of compassion is indeed to be found -- can observe from that which has been said how much is yet lacking as far as the manifestation of your compassionate nature is concerned; what an abominable sin it is to be without mercy and not to exercise compassion; and what you are consequently deserving of. May it cause you to be ashamed before God, to be deeply humbled, and to abhor yourself; and may it be accompanied with a joyous and grateful acknowledgement that the Lord Jesus has also removed these sins by His blood. May the mercy of God move you henceforth to exercise more compassion.

Therefore, you who are godly, “Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy” (Hosea 10:12); “Keep mercy and judgment, and wait on thy God continually” (Hosea 12:6). In order to stir you up more to this end, give heed to the following matters with an obedient heart.

First, precepts teach, but examples attract. Therefore, observe those compassionate persons who have gone before you, and have left you an example. The most perfect example is the Lord Jesus, whom you ought to follow joyfully and willingly, since He is altogether lovely to you. Read only the history of His life, the gospels, and you will perceive that all His footsteps were nothing but mercy. Time and again you will read: “Jesus being moved with compassion ...” He was not merely moved, however, but His compassion culminated in deeds. He healed the sick, fed the hungry, gave the oppressed their dead again, and traversed the entire country doing good. In doing so He has left us an example, so that we would follow in His footsteps. Therefore, out of love for Him, conduct yourself as He did. Your name “Christian” also obligates you to this.

Furthermore, add to this the example of Job. Who can read about his compassion without being moved to follow his example? “I was eyes to the blind, and feet as I to the lame. I was a father to the poor” (Job 29:15-16); “If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof; (for from my youth he was brought up with me, as with a father, and I have guided her from my mother’s womb;) if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep” (Job 31:16-20). That was exemplary.

Add to the example of this man the example of a compassionate woman: Tabitha or Dorcas. Observe the following of her: “Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did ... and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them” (Acts 9:36; Acts 9:39). She was a mother to the poor! She did not occasionally do a good deed, but rather she was full of, and overflowing with, good works and alms (gifts which are the manifestation of compassion). The Greek word elémósune is a composite word and a derivative of eleéo, which means to have compassion. Thus, she did not only give, but rather she gave, being moved with compassion. First the heart was moved, and the heart thus moved, in turn moved her hand. She did not only buy material from which she made clothing, but her benevolent love was so great that it was her delight to do the sewing herself and to dress the widows with the work of her own hands.

Secondly, compassion is most pleasing to God and man. God loves such persons and is pleased with their doings: “God loveth a cheerful giver” (2 Corinthians 9:7); “But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased” (Hebrews 13:16). If you desire to be loved by God and to experience His love, and if you furthermore desire to please God, let your heart and hand be compassionate. People have esteem and love for those who are generous and will bless them in their heart. Furthermore, the giver experiences more joy than the one who receives the gift.

Thirdly, the poor and their needs are very powerful motives to stir up a compassionate heart. When you observe a godly person who is poor, consider that God loves him, that the Lord Jesus has died out of love for him, that he lives in the enjoyment of the communion and love of God, and that he will eternally live in glory with you. Consider furthermore that it pleases the Lord to keep him poor in this life, and causes him to meet you so that you may have the opportunity to exercise love and compassion (even though God does not need your gift, can quickly make the poor person rich, or support him without your help). In addition, consider how distressed he is in his house, how he observes his children with sorrow, how his heart breaks when he witnesses the hunger and nakedness of his children, and how he cries to God for help. If you consider all this, it will not be possible for your heart to remain unmoved if there is but the least principle of life there. Rather, all that is within you will be moved to compassion and your hand will open itself to be generous.

Fourthly, compassion glorifies God, for when a godly poor person, having been helped by you, goes to his hut, and there rejoices before the face of the Lord, thanks God, praises His mercy, is stirred up to put his trust in God, and prays to God that He might pour out a blessing upon you according to soul and body -- how can one consider all that and not have a vehement desire to be compassionate? Furthermore, (even though you do not do this to be seen of men, and may not refrain from doing so simply because it may come to the people's knowledge) your light will break through, for nowhere is love more apparent than in the manifestation of benevolence. The godly will see it, glorify and thank God for it, and will be stirred up to emulate you. It will be a means whereby others will be drawn to the truth and to repentance. If, therefore, it is your desire that God be glorified, thanked, praised; that the godly rejoice in the Lord and be stirred up toward compassion which in turn will cause other poor persons to rejoice in God; that God be thanked by many; and that the unconverted be led to the Lord Jesus -- if you desire this, then exercise compassion: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 5:16).

Fifthly, God makes eminent promises to those who are compassionate.

(1) God reckons it as having been done toward Him, since it was done out of love toward Him; He will richly reward the gift made to Him. Although believers have enough with the virtue itself, and are motivated more thereby than the reward, they must nevertheless permit themselves to be stirred up by this, as it pleases God to stir them up by means of promises. "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will He pay him again" (Proverbs 19:17); "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Matthew 25:40).

(2) The reward will be incomparably greater than your insignificant gift: "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water ... verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward" (Matthew 10:42); "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom" (Luke 6:38); "He which soweth bountifully (that is, consistently and joyfully) shall reap also bountifully" (2 Corinthians 9:6).

(3) You need not fear that your genuine generosity will cause you and your children to become poor. If you believe that you will nevertheless be taking something from them, consider that God will bless you again in response to your generosity. If this does not occur in the manner in which you thought it would come to pass, it will transpire in a different manner: "He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack" (Proverbs 28:27); "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread. He is ever merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed" (Psalms 37:25-26).

(4) The Lord will help the compassionate person when he experiences days of distress and becomes sick. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he will be blessed upon the earth: and Thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: Thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness" (Psalms 41:1-3).

(5) Since true compassion is a fruit of faith and love, eternal glory is promised to compassionate persons. "That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life" (1 Timothy 6:18-19); "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke 14:13-14).

Oh, how glorious and delightful it will be in the day of judgment to hear this lovely voice: "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was an hungered, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in" (Matthew 25:34-35). When such compassionate persons, having done good to those poor among the godly who have died before them, will subsequently die and arrive in heaven, then the poor who have been the recipients of their benevolence will welcome them in heaven. "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness (that is, the riches which some people receive unrighteously and use unrighteously); that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations" (Luke 16:9).

Guidelines for Manifesting Compassion

Having been moved to be compassionate, it is therefore needful that you conduct yourself wisely in exercising compassion. To that end the following needs to be noted:

First, the persons who are to be compassionate are the rich, people of moderate means, people of limited means, as well as the poor -- no one is excluded. Everyone must inwardly be moved toward compassion, which is to be accompanied by a ready inclination to render assistance. The gift varies, however; the one gives much, the other less, and another little. Each is to give according to his means and consistent with the authority he has over certain possessions. Someone who is subordinate to no one gives in a certain way, and someone who is married, having children, in a different manner. Children may give of that which their parents give them to buy something nice or delectable. They either save it fully or partially, giving that which they have saved with a generous heart to the poor. This is pleasing to both God and man. Married persons must each give alms individually without informing each other about this. One may not let the left hand know what the right hand is doing. It may, however, not be to the detriment of the family.

Instead, one should eat a little bit less, make one less garment, or wear a certain garment a bit longer so that the routine of the family is maintained. If, however, a greater measure needs to be given, this needs to be discussed mutually. If no agreement can be reached, the gift must either not be made at all, or it must be reduced until the resistant party agrees. If the one party is as Nabal, the other party must give in the manner stated. In these matters the husband has more authority than the wife. He who cannot share any goods must render assistance to whomever is in need, and he who cannot even do this must pray with a compassionate heart that the Lord may help the poor.

Secondly, the persons to whom we must be generous are first of all the godly -- and then the unconverted among the citizenry, as well as widows, orphans, and the homeless. We must particularly be generous to those who are in exile, or those who must flee for the sake of true religion. The common vagrants are generally rogues who would be better off in a house of correction than on the street. If they are healthy, hunger may perhaps teach them how to work; or if they are invalids, we are obligated to give them a piece of bread.

Thirdly, the gift must proceed from that which is ours and be given in a righteous manner. To give liberally while being deeply in debt is theft. It is an abomination before God to give a portion to the poor from that which we have obtained through unrighteous means or by way of gambling, doing so to quiet the conscience somewhat or to atone for one's wrongdoing. This is no more pleasing to God than "the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog" Deuteronomy 23:18, God forbidding that such funds would come into the treasury.

Fourthly, the manner in which alms are to be given is:

(1) With a simple heart: "... he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity" (Romans 12:8). Thus, this is to be done with a truly compassionate heart, a gentle hand, and without seeking one's own honor, so that the engagement of the heart and hand, as well as the objective, be in harmony with and characterized by sincerity.

(2) Joyfully: "... he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness" (Romans 12:8); "... not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Corinthians 9:7). This means that we shall rejoice in having such a good opportunity, and therefore shall engage ourselves toward the poor with a happy and friendly countenance. The giving of our alms will then be doubly delightful.

(3) Wisely; that is, in respect to ourselves, in a manner in which we neither give everything away at once, nor shortchange our family. Rather, we are to give in such a manner that we shall be able to continue to give. However, in extraordinary times something extraordinary needs to be done. Wisdom must also be exercised as far as the persons are concerned to whom we give. Some of the poor do not manage their affairs well and are not diligent enough. Such need to be taught to be prudent by way of an exhortation or a rebuke. It is better to hire them and teach them to work; they will thus earn what we otherwise would have given them. It is to no purpose to give others money, for they either cannot save well, or they have so many debts that they are immediately without money again, and thus will remain equally poor. In such cases it is sometimes the most prudent course of action to allow them go to the baker once a week to get some bread, and to the grocer for a weekly quantity of grits, flour, peas, and butter. Here we must make a distinction between poor and poor. Some are too proud to admit poverty and nevertheless suffer want. However, for such we can become surety by giving them money so that they can pay their incurred debts. For others we may have them obtain the goods while paying for them ourselves. We are to proceed in like manner as far as clothing is concerned. The most prudent approach is to personally buy strong linen and wool, have the clothing made, and then forward it. This will be much more efficient.

(4) We are to be steadfast in our generosity. We must not do so in a rush which immediately dissipates, while it all ends in remorse over having given so much. Our giving must always be commensurate with the present need, doing so in accordance with our circumstances, and without it being detrimental to our own situation. We must not be weary in well-doing, for compassion culminates in receiving the crown. "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy" (Matthew 5:7).

093. Chapter 88: Prudence

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-EIGHT -----

Prudence

What a rudder is to a ship, prudence is to the exercise of those virtues we have thus far discussed. Therefore, as a conclusion, we wish to append a consideration of prudence. In Hebrew we have the word chazuth, which means a vision, and is derived from chazah, which means to see. From this is derived the word choze, which means a seer or a prophet. This word is used, because the prudent person is someone who sees everything in advance, notices everything in advance, and governs his actions accordingly. In Greek we have phronoia, phronesis, which is derived from phreen, meaning understanding, wisdom. From this is derived phroneo, which means to understand, to think, to consider, to conclude, and to care for. Thus the word prudence is expressive of the consideration of a matter. This consideration relates to the end as well as the means, which in turn yields the determination to carry out this matter by way of those means, while seeing to it that all is properly executed in doing so. Also the word akribeia is used, which is indicative of a diligence characterized by neatness and excellence. "See then that ye walk circumspectly (akribos)" (Ephesians 5:15). In our language this is indicative of seeing ahead. We shall deal with this virtue comprehensively, that is, including both wisdom and discretion.

Prudence is the exertion of the believer's intellect, which governs him in accomplishing his intended objective by the premeditated use of suitable means.

Prudence is only to be found in the believing children of God. The unconverted have a civil prudence by which they take care of earthly and worldly affairs. This is beneficial for the welfare of a given commonwealth, and profitable in its context -- that is, as far as its effects are concerned. It has, however, no effect upon the present and future well-being of the soul. Rather, it is generally detrimental to the soul. It is the prudence of those who are careful to gain a nickel and in the meantime neglect a ton of gold and suffer harm. Therefore the Scriptures call them fools. "But God said unto him, Thou fool" (Luke 12:20); "Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools" (Romans 1:22); "For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God" (1 Corinthians 3:19). The unconverted are indeed cunning and subtle in carrying out their evil designs: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light" (Luke 16:8); "... by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive" (Ephesians 4:14). Yet in all of this not a trace of true prudence is to be found. However, believers have received "wisdom that is from above" James 3:17, and "the wisdom of the just" (Luke 1:17). They are therefore called "wise virgins" Matthew 25:2, and "wise servants" Matthew 24:45, for they are acquainted with the nature of true felicity and hold this before them as their objective. They are acquainted with the true way and appropriate means; and they enter upon that way and make use of those means.

The Object and Nature of Prudence The object of this virtue is the objective pursued and the means used in pursuing that objective. The objective which the prudent person has in view is manifold: to enjoy and glorify God; to have peace and joy in God; and love toward God; to exercise holiness; to refrain from sin; to practice a given virtue; to be instrumental in the conversion of one's neighbor; and to restore one who has gone astray and is backslidden, doing so by way of rebuke, exhortation, and words of comfort. In one word, he has in view all that God commands in His law. The prudent person also makes active use of the means. He considers the time, when it is best either to avoid or execute certain things. Furthermore, he considers the place, the company and the people among whom he finds himself, the situations as they occur, the manner in which something can best be carried out, and the matters themselves -- considering what is either advantageous or disadvantageous. He delights in his ultimate objective and is therefore averse to delay. He contemplates what is to be done now, what is to be done later, and what will be the best approach. Having determined both the end and the means, he resolves to execute them in that certain manner, and focuses upon that resolution -- as a carpenter looks to his blueprint -- so that he may conduct himself accordingly. The nature of prudence consists in the government of the intellect, will, affections, vision, speech, mobility, and activities, so that the designated means may be used properly and the objective determined may thus be achieved. Prudence governs the intellect and causes it to be focused upon those matters which either ought or ought not to be done -- upon that which is either good or evil, pleasing or displeasing to God, advantageous or injurious, as well as whether or not the objective being pursued is lawful and untainted. It focuses upon the means, as to whether they are either suitable or unsuitable, and whether either beneficial or detrimental. It also focuses upon the manner of conduct, that is, whether it would be best to be either harsh or gentle, hasty or cautious, silent or vocal. A prudent person is neither blind, evil, nor foolish, but rather astute and wise. He endeavors to examine every matter and each means thoroughly and from every perspective, ascertaining whether all is according to the rule of God's Word. This is the only rule according to which he functions; neither pleasant nor grievous circumstances can cause him to deviate therefrom. When the intellect perceives how desirable and beneficial a given matter is, and the appropriateness of the way and the means, prudence will also direct the will to love and embrace a given matter, even if it were not agreeable with our natural interest and delight. Prudence also governs the affections so that they will not run ahead, and thus neither be too subdued nor too vehement, as they are very often ruinous to a good work. When all within is in order, prudence preserves the soul in this condition, and she in turn begins to carry out her intention by the means ordained to that end. The prudent person will anticipate opposition and will arm himself against this accordingly. He will deal with the dangers at hand and control his countenance, eyes, ears, tongue, hands and feet, so that they all render him fit to carry out his intent. He will see to it that he is neither too stern nor too gentle; neither too overbearing nor too timid; neither too modest nor too exuberant -- but that all things may be in accordance with the objects at hand, the time, and the place, doing so steadfastly until the matter has been carried out. Such self-control adorns the person thus engaged, renders the activity itself desirable, and causes the goal to be achieved -- in spite of the magnitude of the opposition and the craftiness of the opponents. Prudence does not cause the task at hand to be neglected, but it directs in the accomplishment of it.

The Moving Cause of Prudence The moving cause of prudence is God alone. By nature man is foolish Titus 3:3 and heady [Note: Statenvertaling: roekeloos, that is, reckless.] (2 Timothy 3:4). However, the Lord grants His children prudent wisdom: "He giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding" (Daniel 2:21). David was desirous for this virtue. Perceiving his foolishness, however, and knowing that the Lord alone grants this wisdom, he prayed: "Give me understanding, that I may learn Thy commandments"

(Psalms 119:73). A godly person improves this infused virtue:

(1) By means of God's Word, doing so not only by searching it, but also by doing it. "I understand more than the ancients, because I keep Thy precepts" (Psalms 119:100); "Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all Thy commandments" (Psalms 119:6).

(2) By thoughtfully considering a matter before undertaking it. "With the well advised is wisdom" Proverbs 13:10, and by proceeding thoughtfully as he engages in the task. "For my mouth shall speak truth" (Proverbs 8:7).

(3) By way of experience; that is, by giving heed to and remembering that in which one failed and wherein one succeeded. If such a task is to be undertaken again, then (by reason of previous experience) he will avoid the one thing and do the other.

(4) By consulting others in important matters. Good counsel will thus be given to us, or it may occur that a good solution will dawn upon us. "Without counsel purposes are disappointed: but in the multitude of counsellors they are established" (Proverbs 15:22). It is in this manner that the prudent person carries out his task.

Prudence Highly Exalted in Scripture

Prudence is a great virtue which is greatly praised and highly recommended in the Word of God, and is given as an extraordinary gift to God's children. It is praised as being an exceptional ornament: "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock" (Matthew 7:24); "Who then is a faithful and wise servant ... blessed is that servant. ... Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods" (Matthew 24:45-47); "But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps ... and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage" (Matthew 25:4-10). It is most earnestly recommended: "Be ye therefore wise as serpents" (Matthew 10:16); "See then that ye walk circumspectly" (Ephesians 5:15); "That the aged men be sober, grave, temperate ... that they may teach the young women to be sober" (Titus 2:2-4). It is given as an extraordinary gift to God's children: "And He shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just" (Luke 1:17); "Wherein He hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence" (Ephesians 1:8). A Call to Self-Examination
The foregoing is a suitable mirror to convince the unconverted and converted of their want or great deficiency in this matter.

You who are unconverted will be able to see clearly from that which has been said

(1) That you do not even have an eye upon the spiritual benefits mentioned above. Do you desire to have communion with God, to have joy and peace in God, to have a tender heart, to preserve spiritual peace within the heart, and live as such? Do you have a desire for genuine holiness and to exercise all manner of virtues in a spiritual manner? Do you fear sin? Is it your desire to shine forth as a light in the darkness and to be an ornament in the church? You are convinced, are you not, that this is not your most desirable objective, and that you are not pursuing this as your goal? Therefore, you have no use for spiritual prudence, nor have any need for it; you neither possess it nor seek after it.

(2) That you are fools when viewing yourself in light of this virtue. Many of you have not even progressed as far as the foolish virgins who joined themselves to the wise virgins, were desirous to enter with the bridegroom, and at least had lamps. Others are just like them: They go to church and have a hope concerning salvation; however, they have no oil -- they neither have life nor faith. They are not concerned about this, but neglect their time, are drowsy and careless, and awake when it is too late. You must therefore perceive that you must number yourself among the foolish virgins, and that you are as the foolish builder who built his house upon the sand (Matthew 7:26).

(3) That instead of being prudent, you are foolish and crude, ignorant of the happiness to be attained and of the danger you are in -- to perish forever -- and that you rush toward this so foolishly. Solomon speaks of such persons: "A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished" (Proverbs 22:3).

(4) That perhaps you have nothing but carnal wisdom. You are crafty and trust in your wisdom as Solomon's fool did. "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool" (Proverbs 28:26); "Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him" (Proverbs 26:12). You use all your prudence to indulge in your wicked and sinful lusts and belong to that people of whom Jeremiah speaks: "They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge" (Jeremiah 4:22). You ought thus to be convinced that you despise that which is precious, and choose and pursue that which is evil; you reject eternal felicity, and the perfect and delightful way which leads to this -- entering instead upon a way which is full of thorns and ending in the pool of damnation. You ought thus to perceive that you are not prudent, but are a great fool. "A fool hath no delight in understanding" (Proverbs 18:2); "Wisdom is too high for a fool" (Proverbs 24:7).

Oh, that you would awaken upon hearing my voice and see how imprudent you are in so great a matter! For if you continue to proceed thus, you will be caught in the snare of your foolishness, and your end will be as the end of the fool who built his house upon the sand (Matthew 7:26). You will experience what the foolish virgins experienced who found the door to be shut when they wanted to enter (Matthew 25:12). Then you will see how foolish you have been and how prudently the godly have conducted themselves. You will then agree with the fools who speak as follows in the apocryphal book of Wisdom: This was he, whom we had sometimes in derision, and a proverb of reproach: we fools accounted his life madness, and his end to be without honor: how is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints! Therefore have we erred from the way of truth, and the light of righteousness hath not shined unto us, and the sun of righteousness rose not upon us (Wis 5:3-6). The Deficient Prudence of the Godly The exposition of prudence is also meant to be a mirror for the godly who are indeed wise virgins, having chosen the best portion. If, however, they examine themselves in light of what we have presented concerning prudence, how they then ought to be convinced that they are very imprudent!

(1) They are so lukewarm toward that which they have chosen as their portion, these matters being so remote and obscure, and their love for them being so faint.

(2) Their fear for vices is also lukewarm.

(3) They give no heed to the enemies who lie in wait to take advantage of them.

(4) They bring themselves so recklessly into all manner of situations and thus fall into sin -- of which they have many a grievous experience.

How imprudent they are in lending their eyes and ears for that which wounds their soul! How imprudent they are in their speaking, whereby their heart is troubled and others are offended! They still have so much carnal prudence. For fear of injury and shame, they so readily refrain from doing their duty and that which is good. And this they would like to be considered as prudence. They rush into everything ill-advisedly as long as it is but a good matter they are pursuing, paying little attention to their state, calling, location, the persons involved, and their manner of conduct -- acting as if being rash were a virtue. In reality, however, this zeal proceeds from a secret desire for gaining one's own way and honor.

Acknowledge your imprudence, and bring about improvement.

(1) Imprudence injures your soul. How much trouble and what great grief has this already caused you! All the delight and encouragement which you could have derived from having engaged yourself prudently has vanished, and grief has come in its place.

(2) You spoil the good of your undertaking, and it neither edifies nor has the effect which otherwise it would have had.

(3) Moreover, the wicked immediately attack you because of your imprudence and thus slander your work, yourself, and even the way of godliness itself. Therefore, regret your imprudence, and confess it as much as you confess other sins. Reflect upon it for some time so that your perception of the foolishness and harm of your imprudence may deeply penetrate your heart. You will thus learn to be prudent. The Godly Exhorted Therefore, you who are godly, lift up your soul and make every effort to let all your conduct be governed by prudence.

First, it is a delightful ornament -- an ornament which only God's children have. It is "the wisdom of the just" (Luke 1:17). It is a characteristic exclusive to the saints: "The knowledge of the holy is understanding" (Proverbs 9:10). It is the image of the Lord Jesus upon whom rests "the spirit of wisdom and ... of knowledge" (Isaiah 11:2). Do you not care for prudence? Is it not beautiful in your eyes? Do you not esteem a godly person who conducts himself prudently in all things above all the honorable of the earth? Is it not your inmost desire to be conformed to Jesus? "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding" (Proverbs 4:7).

Secondly, prudence is an absolute necessity, for you are surrounded by your enemies, the devil is crafty, the world is deceptive, and the flesh tempts in a most subtle manner. You must either give up and let these enemies rule over you, or, if you wish to preserve your life, peace, and godliness, you must be on guard, prudently avoiding the snares which have been laid for you, and prudently carrying out that which the Lord has commanded you to do. "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil" (Ephesians 5:15-16).

Thirdly, prudence will cause you to grow and to progress from grace to grace. "The excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it. Wisdom strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city" Ecclesiastes 7:12; Ecclesiastes 7:19. Prudence will cause you to distrust your wisdom and strength, depend on the Lord continually, and proceed in taking hold of His strength and be engaged accordingly. This will give you sweet peace and joy, and it will time and again give you new strength.

Fourthly, it will cause your endeavors to be prosperous, and your speaking, conduct, and silence will be enhanced. The unconverted will not have an effect on you and they will be inwardly convicted. The godly will learn to be prudent by your example; and your counsel, instruction, rebukes, exhortations, and comforting words will be much more effective. Therefore, "Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt (that is, with wisdom), that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man" (Colossians 4:6).

I am certain that a godly person who reads this will be enamored with prudence, but at the same time will grieve, not knowing how to achieve this, being immediately convicted of his very imprudent actions which have spoiled his endeavors hitherto. Such ought to know, however, that God does not grant His sanctifying grace all at one time, for He wills that we shall increase by way of strife. Therefore, be not discouraged, for you will learn while thus engaged. Instead, give heed to my advice and follow it.

First, pray for this, believing that God will hear your prayer, that your desire is pleasing to Him, that He is mighty to give this to you, and that according to His promise He will answer your prayer at that time and in that measure as it pleases Him to do in His wisdom. While thus persevering, you will time and again receive a greater measure. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith" (James 1:5-6).

Secondly, apply yourself with much zeal and diligence. Focus upon this virtue, love it, continually hold it before you, be active in learning how to be prudent, and be exercised as such in your speaking and conduct. If you have failed, do not be discouraged, but courageously strive to improve matters time and again. While thus engaged, you will receive more and more of this virtue. "So that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures. ... When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul; discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee: to deliver thee from the way of the evil man" Proverbs 2:2-4; Proverbs 2:10-12.

Thirdly, do the following:

- (1) Never go beyond the boundaries of your calling, or else you will fall.
- (2) Deny yourself and forsake all honor, love, and profit. Failure to deny self will lead you into the snare of imprudence before you know it.
- (3) Have much fellowship with prudent people and observe how this virtue functions in them.
- (4) In matters which you intend to undertake or to which you are called, always seek counsel with the Lord Jesus, whose name is Counselor, as well as from the Word of God, searching whether there is either a rule or an example which can shed light over it. If you have a bosom friend, consult him and it will be a blessing to you.
- (5) Always keep your objective in view, and be prepared for it that your enemies are lying in wait. Let David's prayer be found in your heart: "Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God: Thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness" (Psalms 143:10); "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips" (Psalms 141:3). Amen.

----- 1 Statenvertaling: roekeloos, that is, reckless.

094. Chapter 89: Spiritual Growth

----- CHAPTER EIGHTY-NINE ----- Spiritual Growth

God has assigned to each creature his station and measure of perfection, having created in each creature the inclination to be in that station and to strive for perfection. Heavy objects have a downward inclination, whereas fire is inclined to go upward, and the sparks of fire rise upward to float away. A fish seeks out the water, a bird chooses the air, and other animals seek out dry ground. As soon as a seed germinates, the plant will not rest until it has attained its proper height and size. As soon as a living creature is born, it will seek for food in order that he might grow. This is also true for spiritual life. As soon as a believer has been regenerated, he will be dissatisfied with the feeble measure of grace he possesses, and will at once be desirous to grow -- yes, would desire to be perfect at once. This is so typical for a believer, that whoever does not have this smarting desire is no true believer. Our attempt to understand the essence of a given matter will be in vain if we do not first of all know what this essence is. Therefore, we shall 1) show that growth is common to all believers, 2) show what the nature of spiritual growth Isaiah 3:1-26) call man to examine himself to ascertain whether he is growing or not, 4) subsequently exhort everyone to strive for growth, 5) warn for obstacles which impede one's growth, and 6) identify those means which are subservient unto growth.

Natural to All Believers That it is natural for a believer to grow -- a truth which is to be impressed upon your heart -- is evident for the following reasons:

First, God promises that He will cause His regenerated children to grow. "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God" (Psalms 92:13); "I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon" (Hosea 14:5-6); "Ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall" (Malachi 4:2). God's promises are in truth, and He who has declared them will also perform them. Let the godly person remind the Lord of this.

Secondly, it is the very nature of spiritual life to grow. Wherever the principle of this life is to be found, it can be no different for it must grow. "But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day" (Proverbs 4:18); "The righteous also shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger" (Job 17:9). This refers to the children of God, who are compared to palm and cedar trees (Psalms 92:12). As natural as it is for children and trees to grow, so natural is growth for the regenerated children of God.

Thirdly, the growth of His children is the goal and objective God has in view by administering the means of grace to them. "And He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints ... that we henceforth be no more children ... but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the Head" (Ephesians 4:11-15). This is also to be observed in 1 Peter 2:2 : "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." God will reach His goal and His Word will not return to Him void; thus God's children will grow in grace.

Fourthly, it is a duty to which God's children are continually exhorted, and their activity is to consist in a striving for growth. That it is their duty is to be observed in the following passages: "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18); "He that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still" (Revelation 22:11). The nature of this activity is expressed as follows: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after" (Php 3:12). If it were not necessary for believers to grow, the exhortations to that end would be in vain.

Fifthly, this is also conveyed by the difference in believers in regard to their condition and the measure of grace. In the church there are children, young men, and fathers. "I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father" (1 John 2:13). It is in grace as it is in nature: first a child, then a young man, and after that a father. All this proves it to be a certainty that it is neither the mere duty nor that it would be merely a good thing for the godly to grow, but it is their nature. Thus, those who do not manifest any growth are not believers. Hereby the unconverted ought immediately to be convinced that as yet it is not well with them. Furthermore, this can, first of all, be of comfort to God's children regarding the grace they possess, and they can already in the beginning be stirred up to strive for spiritual growth. A Gracious Work of God Spiritual growth is a gracious work of God in the regenerate whereby they increase in both habitual and actual grace.

Spiritual growth is a work of God. The spiritual life of the regenerate proceeds from God, who has caused them to be regenerated according to His will. The preservation of that spiritual life in them is also from God, who, by His power, preserves them by faith unto salvation. If that were not so, they would lose it a thousand times in one day. Likewise the increase and growth of spiritual life also proceed from God. Believers, by reason of the spiritual life within them, cannot of themselves bring about anything unless this were at all times joined by the preceding, cooperating, and pursuant power of the Holy Spirit. "Without Me ye can do nothing" (John 15:5); "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do" (Php 2:13). The persons referred to here are already regenerate, and yet these words are said of them. Since it is God who grants, preserves, and activates life, it is likewise He alone who causes life to increase. "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish" (Psalms 92:13); "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength" (Isaiah 40:29). The disciples therefore prayed, "Increase our faith" (Luke 17:5). The Lord causes spiritual life to grow by granting an increased measure of His Spirit. The water which Ezekiel witnessed coming out of the sanctuary, continually increased. First it came to the ankles, then to the knees, then to the loins, and after that it could not be passed over (Ezekiel 47:1-5). Elisha desired a double portion of the spirit of Elijah and received it (2 Kings 2:9). On the day of Pentecost the apostles were filled with the Holy Ghost (Acts 2:4). As God, in the realm of nature, causes trees and herbs to grow by way of rain and sunshine, He likewise does so in spiritual life. He does so by means of:

(1) the Word, that is, the sincere milk (1 Peter 2:2); (2) prayer (Ezekiel 36:26-27; Ezekiel 36:37); (3) providing us with examples of those who have a greater measure of the Spirit, whereby we may perceive that there is more to be had than we personally possess, and whereby we are thus stirred up to emulate them (Php 3:17);

(4) trials and tribulations (2 Corinthians 4:17); (5) prosperity, physical (Acts 3:8) as well as spiritual (Nehemiah 8:11).

Peculiar to the Regenerate Only

Those who grow are the regenerate. That which does not exist can neither be increased nor decreased. Growth presupposes the presence of life. Some die shortly after having been regenerated -- such as the thief on the cross and others who are converted upon their deathbed. The life such persons have received has the propensity toward growth, but lacks time, and it is at once made perfect.

Some grow rapidly and are "as plants grown up in their youth" (Psalms 144:12). They grow by the day, so that everyone observes it and is amazed. However, the Lord will occasionally take such away after a short season, and for them it is true what is written in the apocryphal book of Wisdom: But though the righteous be prevented with death, yet shall he be in rest. For honourable age is not that which standeth in length of time, nor that is measured by number of years. But wisdom is the gray hair unto men, and an unspotted life is old age. He pleased God, and was beloved of Him: so that living among sinners he was translated. Yea, speedily was he taken away, lest that wickedness should alter his understanding, or deceit beguile his soul. For the bewitching of naughtiness doth obscure things that are honest; and the wandering of concupiscence doth undermine the simple mind. He, being made perfect in a short time, fulfilled a long time: for his soul pleased the Lord: therefore hastened He to take him away from among the wicked (Wis 4:7-14).

Some remain small; they do grow somewhat, but do not make much progress. Also in nature all men are not equally tall; there are giants, men of medium height, and dwarfs. This is also the case here. Some remain feeble, having but little life and strength. This can be due to a lack of nourishment, living under a barren ministry, or being without guidance. It can also be that they naturally have a slow mind and a lazy disposition; that they have strong corruptions which draw them away; that they are without much strife; that they are too busy from early morning till late evening, due to heavy labor, or to having a family with many children, and thus must struggle or are povertystricken. Furthermore, it can be that they either do not have the opportunity to converse with the godly; that they do not avail themselves of such opportunities; or that they are lazy as far as reading in God's Word and prayer are concerned. Such persons are generally subject to many ups and downs. At one time they lift up their heads out of all their troubles, by renewal becoming serious, and they seek God with their whole heart. It does not take long, however, and they are quickly cast down in despondency -- or their lusts gain the upper hand. Thus they remain feeble and are, so to speak, continually on the verge of death. Some of them occasionally make good progress, but then grieve the Spirit of God and backslide rapidly. For some this lasts for a season, after which they are restored, but others are as those who suffer from consumption -- they languish until they die. Oh, what a sad condition this is!

Some progress steadily -- which is not to imply that they have no opposition. It occurs only rarely that someone increases in strength by a wise conduct relative to the truth; and, without much strife and many comforts. Rather, they generally increase in the way of strife, since vigilance is present; and by the exercise of faith, fasting, prayer, reading, spiritual fellowship, the sharing of their gifts and graces with others, they overcome everything and proceed in the strength of the Lord Jehovah. They are those who from children become young men and then men and fathers in Christ. Since, however, such differ greatly as far as strife, intermittent seasons of backsliding, and the vicissitudes of life are concerned, they neither all attain the same measure of strength nor grow until their death. It can happen that a godly person who has become a man in Christ becomes weak spiritually in his old age when everything physical begins to weaken -- yes, that prior to his death he falls into a particular sin, as is to be observed in David, Asa, Solomon, and Hezekiah. Therefore, one needs to pray most earnestly, "Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth. Now also when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not" Psalms 71:9; Psalms 71:18. Someone has expressed this in this sweet verse:

Qui me servasti puerum, juvenemque virumque:

Nunc fer opem misero, Christe benigne! seni. That is, Thou hast fed and preserved me;

First as a child, then as a young man, and now in old age;

However, help me now, oh Lord, In my gray old age.

Oh, cause me to proceed prudently, And to stand firm for the truth as a rock.

Let my last time be my best time;

Let my life be one of peace and my end a joyous one.

Datheen adds the following poem:

Lord, when I shall be old and cold, And weak and full of sorrow, Then do not cast me away!

Exalted Lord, also when I am wretched above measure, Then do not forsake me! [Note: Metrical version of Psalms 71:1-24.]

However, some proceed steadfastly until their death. "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing" (Psalms 92:14). Thus, the Lord grants to each of His children their own measure of growth, the one more and the other less. The smallest one is as much His child as the greatest among them, and He loves the little ones as much as the mature ones. He will bring the one as well as the other into heaven. The Growth of a Gracious Disposition Spiritual growth occurs in reference to habitual grace as well as actual grace. We shall first consider spiritual growth in reference to habitual grace.

(1) The increase in gifts to edify others (even if the use of these gifts is of increased benefit to others) is not evidence of growth if such activity does not proceed from habitual grace being in the soul. As such, an unconverted person can then excel a gracious person.

(2) It is also no indication of growth if someone increasingly refrains from sin, and becomes more eminent in the exercise of all manner of virtues, while in the meantime there is no improvement in the virtuous disposition of the heart. In external things the natural man can excel the truly godly person. Thus, one who has but a small measure of habitual grace can in this respect far excel him who has a greater measure of habitual grace. This is simply due to much activity proceeding from his nature and but little from continual union with Christ and making use of Him daily unto justification. One who does not continually strive to live in a reconciled relationship with God, and thus makes no daily use of Christ as His Surety, has but a small measure of purity in his sanctification.

(3) Spiritual growth also does not consist in receiving many comforts from the Lord, there being a greater measure of holiness at the time when this comfort is experienced. At such a time one is being carried and drawn forward. This is similar to a man carrying a child, and like a man taking a child by the hand who is willing to walk, thus causing the child to walk more rapidly than he would be able to do in his own strength. The Lord refreshes His children at times in this manner, but when He puts them back on their own feet, they have but little more strength than was previously the case.

However, spiritual growth first of all consists in the increase of spiritual light. This is not an external knowledge of the literal sense of the Word of God, for the converted and unconverted have this in common -- yes, the latter can even excel the former in this. Rather, there is an increase in spiritual light. Such a person understands the spirituality of the truths, that is, in their essential and spiritual nature. This light has an inherent warmth and ignites the soul in love, renders one fruitful, and brings spiritual truths into the soul, so that whatever is true in the Word also becomes true within. This light enables them to see God more clearly in His attributes and works -- not only external to themselves but also within themselves. When there is less light in a room, only large objects and any obvious filth can be discerned. When the sun shines its rays brightly into a room, however, we shall see in those rays a multitude of dust particles which previously were not visible. Such is also true here. The more we see of God, the more we shall perceive the pollution of our heart. Spiritual growth consists in the increase of such light. "But grow ... in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18); "I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning" (1 John 2:13); "Now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself" (Job 42:5-6).

Secondly, spiritual growth consists in more persistent and steadfast fellowship with God. Union with God constitutes the life, joy, and salvation of the soul. The unconverted are entirely without this, a regenerate person has but a small beginning of this, and he who may be a father in Christ has a larger measure. This is the essential issue, and everything is contingent upon it. One who receives a larger measure of grace receives this, both in larger measure and in greater steadfastness. The disposition of the heart is Godward, and the thoughts will be focused upon God. He will pray, yearn for, desire after, and speak with the Lord. His heart will be fixed upon the Lord, and he will rest, rejoice in, and glorify Him. In such a frame he lies down, sleeps, and awakes, while still being with Him. His thoughts will then not gravitate toward earthly and vain things, but to his God. He will immediately be aware of any estrangement or darkness setting in. It will without delay cause grief, and he will not be able to rest until intimate and humble communion with the Lord has been restored. This is the epitome of his felicity. "Nevertheless I am continually with thee" (Psalms 73:23); "But it is good for me to draw near to God" (Psalms 73:28). The more the latter is true for a person, the more he grows.

Thirdly, spiritual growth consists in making use of Christ with more understanding and a greater measure of faith. Growth which does not center in Christ is no spiritual growth. He who is of the opinion that he only needed Christ at the outset of his spiritual life and that he is now beyond that and thus leaves Christ alone, only focusing upon holiness -- or if he solely makes use of Christ as an example for holiness -- has gone astray and regresses more than he progresses. He who lives, lives in Christ "who is our life" Colossians 3:4, and he who grows, grows in Christ. "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him: rooted and built up in Him, and stablished in the faith" (Colossians 2:6-7); "But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love" (Ephesians 4:15-16). Christ is the vine, believers have been grafted into this vine, and continually draw sap from this vine. They live and grow by means of the sap from this vine, and they never progress so far that they have no need of the vine, Christ (Romans 6:5). "I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit" (John 15:5). We grow in Christ when we continually unite ourselves with Christ by faith as our Surety unto justification; that is, if we continually make use of Him as the way and as the High Priest to go unto God by Him. This means that we shall neither dare nor are able to approach unto God except through Him, being acquainted with God's majesty, holiness, and our own sinfulness. We shall furthermore understand that it is unbecoming Godward and us-ward to have fellowship with God apart from Him. Furthermore, we grow when we do not consider God's attributes in and of themselves, but rather as they manifest themselves in Christ, and as such reflect upon us. This is the work of angels, and the more a person increases in grace, the more he will exercise himself in this. All this constitutes growth, and he who does not grow in this respect is not growing -- however much this may appear to be so and he may imagine himself to be increasing in other things. Such growth is worth little.

Fourthly, spiritual growth consists in a purer sort of engagement. The more we increase, the more we shall take note of the manner in which we engage ourselves. We shall then find no delight in our conduct if it is not governed by a holy objective; that is, not having ourselves in view, but doing all to the honor of God 1 Corinthians 10:31, in the presence of God Genesis 17:1, in obedient submission to God and His will Ephesians 6:6, in love 1 Corinthians 13:1, in the fear of God Job 31:23, and in believing union with Christ and through Christ with God (Hebrews 1:6). We shall thus do everything out of God, for God, and unto God. This is what is meant by our deeds being "wrought in God" (John 3:21). Thus, spiritual growth does not only consist in doing much, but in doing it well.

Fifthly, spiritual growth also consists in an increased manifestation of grace. Habitual graces cannot be restrained from manifesting themselves, but will break forth as actions. When a believer is actively engaged in mortifying sin and intent upon the practice of a virtue, this will beget a frame of heart which opposes all sin and is inclined toward all virtues. The heart will become increasingly virtuous, and thus a good heart will bring forth good deeds, and the exercise of good deeds will improve the frame of the heart. When a godly person grows, he not only grows in one virtue, but in all. He does not first totally mortify the one sin before proceeding with the next. He also does not first learn one virtue, and having learned that, move on to another; rather, it transpires simultaneously. He does indeed focus more on the one sin and on the one virtue more than the other. He is also frequently more victorious with the one sin and virtue than with the other. At the same time he gains in spiritual-mindedness and thus prevails over all sins and unto all virtues.

Nevertheless, the one sin will retain more vigor than the other, and the one virtue will be exercised less than the other.

Growth in the Actual Manifestation of Grace

First, there is growth when one becomes concerned about more sins and desires more virtues. At the very outset of spiritual life we generally are mostly aware of sin -- and particularly of a given sin or sins -- which are our most besetting sins into which we fall most frequently. We shall then consider it to be a great accomplishment if we have not committed this sin or these sins on a specific day. When we grow spiritually, however, we become aware of more sins and will strive more against them -- not only against external but also against internal sins. This will also pertain to both our neglect and deficiency in the performance of virtues. In the evening one will ask, "Have I abstained from my besetting sins?" One will ask, "Have I also committed other sins? What good have I performed in this day and in what manner have I performed it?" When we grow we shall also exercise more virtues than was previously the case -- both in regard to the first and the second table of the law.

Then we shall bear much fruit (John 15:5). "At our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits" (Song of Solomon 7:13); "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity" (2 Peter 1:5-7).

Secondly, there is growth when we persevere upon encountering powerful opposition. Such is true when we are able to let the fiery darts of the wicked be deflected by the shield of faith, and when we do not permit inward strife to hinder and detract us from the performance of our duties toward God and our neighbor, thus conquering the wicked one (1 John 2:13). We grow when we are able to avoid those situations which generally cause us to fall, or, if we must be in them, we conduct ourselves better than was previously the case. We grow when worldly charm no longer entices us, but when it has lost its charm so that it is no longer esteemed, no more advantage is seen in it, and it has lost its appeal. This means that neither by flattery, nor by threats, nor by actual or verbal persecution shall we allow ourselves to be detracted from our godliness. We grow when, by reason of the fear of and love for God, we can more easily resist sinful lusts which stir within, and upon falling arise all the more readily -- yes, as a result of falling become stronger and more careful. We grow, when in spite of all opposition, we persevere, rather than that we be drawn away.

Thirdly, there is spiritual growth when we proceed with the practice of virtue with more wisdom, determination, faith, and zeal. The initial zeal of the believer is mixed with many natural passions. At that time we shall act illadvisedly, and, in one way or the other go beyond our boundaries. We then know neither when nor how to act. We shall be either in good or low spirits and be either active or passive. A minor event will readily cast us down, and faith, hope, and love will easily succumb. However, after frequent stumblings, falling and rising again, we then begin to walk more steadfastly, rely more upon the Lord Jesus by faith -- even when the Lord hides Himself, and the feelings, which the Christian is so intent upon having, depart. We then, nevertheless, persevere in the way which we have chosen and in our seeking. Falling into sin is much more grievous than before, but we nevertheless do not disown our state so readily. We rely more upon the Word and shall unreservedly put our trust in it. We know in whom we have believed and become better acquainted with how God deals with His children, knowing that the Lord will again cause the darkness to disappear. We become more steadfast in our conduct, more careful with our words, and more thoughtful in our conduct. A wisdom which is both humble and meek will increasingly shine forth. We shall not be disturbed when we neither receive love nor esteem from others, being well satisfied to live with God alone. We shall then have a love which goes out to the godly and to all men -- in a manner appropriate to each individual -- and it shall be manifested. With composed zeal we do what we know to be our duty. We speak when we must speak and are silent when we must be silent, and in the performance of our duty we shall neither allow ourselves to be hindered by our own inability, nor by the pride, wisdom, goodness, or wickedness of men. We become more and more weaned from the creature. The love of Christ constrains, and the hope of glory motivates to be active. If we fall, we rise again, and if we have not conducted ourselves well in other respects, we then strive for improvement. We take hold of the strength of the Lord and charge through all opposition, and shall thus proceed from strength to strength. The Need for Self-Examination

You who either read or hear this read, examine yourself in light of this. What do you now say of yourself? Are you growing or are you not growing? Bring yourself into the presence of God who knows your heart and who will judge you. Do not flatter yourself with vain imaginations, and do not bypass your heart. On the other side, do not deny your growth if there has been some, for it is not your work, but the result of the grace of God. If you may perceive some growth, it will greatly comfort and strengthen you; if not, it ought to motivate you to seek true conversion or zeal to make progress in this matter. To that end, do not hesitate to read that which has been said once more and to examine yourself in that mirror. Has your spiritual light increased? Do you have a more continual and steadfast fellowship with God? Do you make use of the Lord Jesus with more understanding and a greater measure of faith? Are you more upright in your dealings? Has the scope of your engagement increased regarding sins and virtues? Do you persevere more upon encountering strong opposition? Do you proceed with more wisdom, determination, faith, and zeal? What do you say for yourself? Do not focus upon a brief time span, but compare yourself as to who you were prior to your conversion and the present, and since your conversion and the present. Do not deny grace because you are ambitious to achieve a certain level of grace, nor in the way of ingratitude, by not considering what you have received -- as if it were your own work and you should already have made more progress. You will thus grieve and chide yourself more, rather than being joyful. Therefore, judge yourself in a realistic manner.

(1) Some may perhaps have become convinced of not only having failed to make any progress, but rather that they never even have had any grace, and that until now they have only been a run-along. All their activity has only been a product of their mind and natural zeal.

(2) Some will perceive that they are progressing in sin, and are adding the one sin to the other; that they are progressing from one evil to the other; that their sinning has reached a higher level; and that with highly elevated shields they battle against the Lord and say, so to speak: "We do not desire to hear Thee." Contrary to all light and conviction, they break through, and, in an ungodly manner, engage in wickedness and render sin exceedingly sinful. They become more and more insensitive in their commission of sin, having seared their conscience with a hot iron, so that they commit all manner of sin all the more intently.

(3) Some will remember their first spiritual emotion, the first time they became aware of their duty, their first conviction and prayer, and their desisting from sin for a season. In spite of all that, however, they willingly departed from that way again, and as a dog they have turned to their own vomit; and as a washed sow to their wallowing in the mire (2 Peter 2:22). It may be that they have been hardened, or that they think, "Woe unto me! What have I done! What have I departed from! If only I had those first motions again!"

(4) Some may possibly have good thoughts about themselves, be of the opinion that they wish to continue in this way, that they will thus be saved, and that nothing more is necessary. They do not wish to be that particular in their walk; they leave that to the hair-splitters. Oh, who will deliver such?

Oh, that someone would be sensibly convinced and receive a deep impression of his wretched condition, for all your righteousnesses will be deemed to have no value, as they did not proceed from your inner inclination. Indeed, all the illumination and conviction from which you have departed and which you have resisted will aggravate your judgment and condemnation if you do not repent, and in the day of judgment it will be more tolerable for the heathen than for you. They will stand up against you and justify your condemnation. Oh, consider all this, become sensible, and repent; for to be under conviction is the primary means unto conversion. Then there is still hope, for Christ still calls you. Why then would you die?

Concerned Souls Addressed From the foregoing many of those who are truly gracious will perceive that they have indeed backslidden, and that they are as the congregation of Ephesus, to whom the Lord Jesus says, "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love" (Revelation 2:5). I wish that the following words would be applied to their heart: "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works" (Revelation 2:5). We shall speak of this in the following chapter. There are, however, gracious souls who in truth have not backslidden, and who, nevertheless, are of the opinion that they are backsliding, thus doubting their entire spiritual state. For they think: "Growth is peculiar to God's children, but I am a backslider, and thus I am not a child of God." However, it ought to be known:

(1) That many are not capable of perceiving their own growth. They do not remember their previous condition, and thus are not able to judge about their present condition. At that time they were as yet without understanding about the spiritual nature of their propensities and actions, and therefore they only focused on their preceding vehement emotions, with which, if they had them under the current circumstances, they would presently not be pleased.

(2) That growth cannot be measured by what we were yesterday, the day before yesterday, or a month ago. Rather, we are to compare ourselves with what we were at the outset of our spiritual life and what we are now; we would then be able to discern our growth.

(3) That a godly person has his spiritual winters. Just as a tree appears to be barren and dead in the winter, one will nevertheless be able to perceive that it has grown when comparing it to the time that it was first planted. A child of God grows in the same fashion -- even though he has his winters.

(4) That a tree occasionally grows more in one branch and then again in another branch. A child of God grows likewise -- sometimes more in the one area and then again in the other. Even if he does not grow as much in that wherein he previously flourished, he therefore cannot say: "I am not growing." He now grows either more in the root, in breadth, or in another branch.

(5) That when we say that growth is peculiar to God's children, it is to be understood as a normal habitual tendency. Such is true for men or for trees when planted in suitable soil, from which they can extract suitable nourishment, and when receiving an adequate amount of rain and sunshine. A believer can at times be deprived of suitable nourishment, or of rain and sunshine. He can even become ill or meet with an accident. Would an ill child, or he who has met with an accident, say, "I am not human, for I do not grow?"

(6) That we sometimes have fellowship with other Christians who grow much more than we do. They have had a later start, and now they have already passed us by. From this one could draw the erroneous conclusion: Since others grow more and more quickly than I do, I am consequently not growing.

(7) That we now have eyes which are more spiritual and have a stronger desire for greater things. Since these stronger and more elevated desires are not fulfilled, we can therefore not conclude that we are not growing. On the contrary, we are to conclude from this that we are indeed growing as our light and desires are increasing.

(8) That the godly generally believe that they are regressing. Well, let that be as it may, for that is nevertheless a sign that they have grown. For if one had neither life nor growth, one would also not be able to regress. Let us then assume that you are not as serious-minded as at the beginning, that you cannot pray as fervently and with as many tears, and that you now occasionally fall into sin from which you could desist at that time. However, at that time you were more motivated by a fear for perishing and all this was accompanied by natural emotions. The opportunity for given sins was then not there, and you were not tried and tempted by the enemies as you are now. I therefore conclude that you have not regressed; or if you have truly backslidden, there has nevertheless been life and growth. And if these have been there, they are still there, for He who has begun that good work in you will also finish it. If, however, you compare yourself with composure to what we have said, you will not dare to say that you have backslidden, but you will be convinced that you have grown; that you have more light, faith, intimate and familiar communion with God; and that there is more love, steadfastness, more comprehensiveness, and more fervor in all your conduct than was previously the case. Therefore, acknowledge the grace which you have and rejoice over it; and may this in turn stir you up.

Reasons Why Believers Do Not Grow as Much as They Ought

Even though many among the converted come to the conclusion that they do not grow, it is nevertheless true that they do not grow as much as they ought to. How many blessed means they have! There is the precious Word of God, the sincere milk; there are spiritual and faithful ministers who have excellent gifts and are inclined to lead everyone by the hand; and there are eminent examples which ought to stimulate all to emulation. How little they benefit from this, however, and how little growth there is by many! One must frequently be amazed -- and many are amazed about themselves -- that they do not grow more. Thus they rightfully rebuke themselves, for it is indeed their own fault. They think: "What is the cause of all this?" My answer is: "You are the cause."

First, there is at times the secret and carnal thought that one shall nevertheless be saved, for if one has grace -- whether to a smaller or greater degree -- salvation will ensue upon this. This is God's promise to the regenerate, and thus growth is not that essential. My response is that this proceeds from the flesh, for the principle of grace is of a different nature. Yes, even if growth were not essential, the spiritual nature is nevertheless inclined toward growth. It is the life and delight of this nature, and it knows that this is pleasing to God. Therefore, away with this sinning at the expense of grace.

Secondly, many are hindered by their unbelief and think, "I am not a child of God anyhow; I have no grace. Why should I strive for growth?" Such are always occupied with finding evidences of their regeneration. At times their conclusion is this: "I am not converted; believers are entirely different from what I am." And thus they go on despondently and desist from spiritual activity. Occasionally they do come to the conclusion, "Indeed, I have grace," and thus are invigorated in their walk. It does not last long, however, and they again begin to doubt, and by renewal begin to examine themselves. Such are like a mason who, having laid the foundation, proceeds to build, but then begins to doubt whether he has indeed laid the foundation and consequently turns everything upside down and begins anew -- a little while later repeating the same procedure.

Thirdly, many are too despondent to make progress, for they perceive so many vices in themselves. They are conscious of the many virtues they ought to have and this causes them to be at their wit's end. Furthermore, they deem all their efforts to have been fruitless until now and believe that all will be in vain in the future. Sin is too prevalent and the manifestations of virtues are too weak. They know not what to do and thus their hands become feeble. Instead, they ought to consider that he who overcomes one sin and perseveres in one virtue accomplishes this by reason of a virtuous disposition, and that this is at the same time applicable to all sins and all virtues.

Fourthly, world conformity enters the picture here. Believers still have a desire for the things of the world under the cover and pretense that they are lawful, necessary, and fitting -- even though the real motive is love for the world. The world and the Spirit are enemies, and the one is always intent on expelling the other; they are a mutual impediment to each other, and therefore we must either fully yield to the world, or must yield fully and entirely to grace. As long as we halt between two opinions, and as long as we attempt to join together Christ and Belial, so long shall we make no progress. A bird which has been fastened to the earth will fall back to the earth when it wants to fly upward. Thus, he who wishes to fly heavenward must divorce himself from the world.

Fifthly, many are hindered in their walk solely by laziness. Just as it is true in the natural realm that the soul of the sluggard is desirous, but has nothing, since his hands refuse to labor, so it is in the spiritual realm. We indeed desire to be in an elevated spiritual frame and to grow as a palm tree, but we are not willing to exert any effort -- and thus we also do not receive it. Effort is required here -- consisting in prayer, fasting, watchfulness, meditation, and the engagement in spiritual warfare. The kingdom of heaven suffers violence and the violent take it by force. Therefore, you who are desirous of attaining the end must also be desirous to use the means. When the bride remained upon her comfortable bed and made many excuses for not arising and giving entrance to the bridegroom, he departed and left her empty. Therefore, leave your bed while others are sleeping. Seek, and you shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you, pray and you shall receive; and thus you will experience that this work is not as difficult as you are currently considering it to be. In the beginning it may be somewhat unpleasant, but it will soon become sweet when you will perceive how sweet the rewards are upon but a little effort.

Christians Exhorted to Strive for Spiritual Growth

Therefore, Christians, to the task! Strive to grow in both habitual and actual grace, for: First, your spiritual state is as yet imperfect and you have but a small beginning of life. If in all that we begin to undertake we strive for completion, should you then remain stationary at the starting point? The greater and more glorious perfection is, the more desirous we should be to attain it, the more earnest our endeavors should be, and no trouble should be spared to achieve this.

Secondly, not to grow is to remain in your sin and pollution. Would you who have been washed in the blood of Christ, have become partakers of the Spirit of sanctification, are the children of God, have become the bride of the holy Jesus -- will you continue in your sorrow and remain in your pollution? Oh, let it not be thus! Be no longer disobedient to God your Father. Disentangle yourself from the bondage of pollution, expel sin, and flee from it. The more you grow, the more you will distance yourself from sin; and the more you distance yourself from sin, the more you will grow.

Thirdly, the more one grows, the more the image of God will become manifest, and the more likeness to God there will be -- for that is the perfection held before us. You already do grieve, however, that you are so far from God, and with all your desire you long to be near to God. It is your only and all-satisfying comfort to live in blessed communion with God. Of all this there is a small beginning in you and there is the certainty that this suggested perfection is to be attained. Would you not then pursue that which you love so much; would you not then make this your objective and endeavor to come closer to achieving this? Yes, it has already been prepared for you and God stands ready to give it to you. He holds it, so to speak, in His hand and calls you but to come in order that He may place the crown of perfection upon you. Therefore, forget what is behind you and "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Php 3:14).

Fourthly, the more one grows, the more pleasing he will be to God. A father is delighted when his children grow, and one rejoices when he observes the growth of trees he has planted. Since, however, God takes pleasure in the growth of His children, having regenerated them by His will and according to the Word of His truth, and since He delights Himself in the garden and the trees which He Himself has planted there, should we then not endeavor to be pleasing unto the Lord and to become "His pleasant plant" Isaiah 5:7?

Fifthly, God is glorified by our growth, for therein it becomes apparent that He is neither a barren nor a howling wilderness to His children, but that He is good, benevolent, faithful, holy, and omnipotent. This is evident from the fact that He fulfills His promises to them, preserves them in the midst of all enemies, causes them even to grow in the midst of all manner of storms, pours out His Spirit upon them, and reveals the invisible things to them. And those who grow are rendered fit to honor and glorify Him. Therefore, you who desire to live to the honor and glory of your God, to be trees of righteousness that He might be glorified Isaiah 61:3, and are desirous to declare the Lord's glory -- having been formed by Him for that purpose -- strive for growth, for herein is God "glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John 15:8).

Sixthly, the Lord will grant many comforts to those who grow, so that they will find much delight and joy in their growth. The Lord promises that He will manifest Himself to them and make His abode with them. He will grant them an increasing measure of grace, fill them with His Spirit, and cause them to increase even more. "Every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit" (John 15:2); "They ... shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint" (Isaiah 40:31). Therefore, you who find delight in these promises -- which is your desire, children of God -- do not remain stationary, do not be satisfied with the condition in which you are, do not teeter on the brink of spiritual failure, but be resolved to charge ahead and to make progress. I repeat: The reward is commensurate with the labor performed.

Additional Means He who is therefore desirous to make progress:

(1) Let him be intent to do so with valiant courage. Let him take hold of the strength of Christ as his own and thus proceed in the strength of the Lord. Let him be fully resolved wholly to exert himself, to yield to nothing, and to spare no labor or effort to be assured of the perfection to be attained hereafter, and to grow in this present state. "Be of good courage, and He shall strengthen your heart" (Psalms 31:24).

(2) Proceed with a joyful willingness, rejoicing in the resolution itself, the end to be attained, and that you will charge through your enemies. Willingly engage yourself in this work and in the fact that you will proceed that much more prosperously. "Serve Him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind" (1 Chronicles 28:9).

(3) Should not be too distraught about sustained wounds, nor be despondent about his falls, for these will occur frequently. If these render you inactive, causing you to give up in discouragement, you will not make much progress. Rather, you are to arise time and again. Make a new beginning every morning and do so especially every sabbath. Persevere in your resolve and focus on the reward. If much opposition comes, stand firm as a rock, resist it with force, and charge through it. They who are for you are more than they who are against you, and you have the promise that the Lord will raise up those who are bowed down and will grant them new strength.

(4) Continually feed upon the Word of God for by this one grows. Be continually in prayer in order that you might continually be strengthened and supported by the Spirit of the Lord -- for you are weak and will not prevail in your own strength. Continually exercise faith so that you may continually be united with Christ and apply the promises to yourself. You will thus purify the heart by faith, overcome the world, and resist the devil. While thus engaged, you will soon experience that you are progressing and increasing in strength.

(5) Should continually be engaged in battle against all sins and be in the practice of all virtues. However, be especially vigilant against your besetting sin -- that chief sin -- by which you are most frequently tempted and into which you most frequently fall, which will trigger all other sins and turn everything upside down within. Make a covenant to oppose those sins, conduct days of fasting to that end, flee all opportunities for sin and when they present themselves, cast them away from you as rapidly as you remove fire from your clothing. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 15:58).

095. Chapter 90: Backsliding in the Spiritual Life of the Godly

----- CHAPTER NINETY ----- Backsliding in the Spiritual Life of the Godly

Even though the nature of the regenerate is such that it is always disposed toward growth, and though some of the regenerate grow more than others, they nevertheless do not proceed in the might of the Lord from strength to strength without resistance. They do not always have the valor of a majestic horse in battle, nor are they always “as mighty men, who tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle” (Zechariah 10:5). They do not always grow as a palm tree and as a cedar upon Lebanon. They cannot always boast with Hannah: “My heart rejoiceth in the Lord, mine horn is exalted in the Lord” (1 Samuel 2:1). Their latter works are not always more than their first works -- such as was true for the congregation of Thyatira. However, as trees experience their winters in which they are void of foliage and fruits, appearing to be barren and dead, the godly likewise have their spiritual winters. The Lord Jesus said to the church, “The winter is past,” which implies that it had experienced a winter. As people are subject to numerous illnesses, the godly likewise are subject to numerous spiritual illnesses. What a most blessed time it would be if there would not be one inhabitant of spiritual Jerusalem who would say, “I am sick!” Such is, however, not always the case.

These illnesses we now wish to discuss. We shall first consider backsliding in general and then focus on some specific spiritual illnesses to which believers become subject. When speaking of backsliding we are thereby not to understand the daily stumblings, spiritual strife, and a lack of spirituality, which pass after a short period of time. He who is able to pray and engage in spiritual warfare will not have to complain much about backsliding. The complaints of such a believer are generally due to an increase in light and life, as a result of which he perceives more sin than he did previously; and becomes better acquainted with the nature of spirituality, which ought to be present in all his activity. Furthermore, he has an increased desire for a more elevated and spiritual frame. Since he perceives himself yet to be so far removed from all this, he is of the opinion that he is backsliding, whereas in reality he is gaining ground.

Instead, we understand backsliding to be the very opposite of growth: the decrease of both habitual and actual graces. It is possible that the life in the soul becomes less viable and loses its vigor and this must necessarily result in a decline in the quality of the actions -- be it regarding the spirituality or regarding the manifestation of these actions. In some, the habitual manifestation of grace will continue as before. Since, however, intimate fellowship with God -- the strength of their light and life -- becomes less, the spirituality of its manifestation is also reduced. Sometimes this can occur suddenly -- when one suddenly, from being in a good frame, reverts into darkness, a sinful condition, and a state of spiritual desertion. Sometimes believers backslide gradually and imperceptibly, similar to Samson’s case who, without his knowledge, was deprived of his strength. When he intended to use it, he perceived that the Lord had departed from him. Such is also the experience of some of the godly. They proceed as they normally do in maintaining their relationship with God, and in offering ejaculatory prayers, not perceiving that they are losing ground. They neglect their devotional exercises or they perform them quickly. There are no express transactions with God through Christ, and if they then earnestly seek to begin as of old, only then will they experience what they have lost. They are then astonished that they are not able to draw near. Some do recover from this and renew their youth as the eagle's, but others fall victim to a spiritual consumption and languish until their death.

Seasons of Backsliding: Common to Most Believers When believers perceive that they are backslidden, they are at once ready to disown their spiritual state and to think that it has never been right with them. They cannot believe that others encounter this, believing that it is always given to others to grow. It is therefore necessary to show to them that the godly indeed have their seasons of backsliding. This is, first of all, to be observed in declarations that they are backslidden. "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love" (Revelation 2:4); "My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord" (Lamentations 3:18); "For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing: my strength faileth because of mine iniquity" (Psalms 31:10); "My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me" (Psalms 38:10). The wise virgins also fell asleep Matthew 25:5, and also the bride, even though her heart was yet wakeful (Song of Solomon 5:2).

Secondly, this is to be observed in the warnings relative to this. "Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God" (Hebrews 12:15); "Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; and make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed" (Hebrews 12:12-13).

Thirdly, this is to be observed from the complaints of the saints about their lack of what they previously possessed. "Oh that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me; when His candle shined upon my head, and when by His light I walked through darkness; as I was in the days of my youth, when the secret of God was upon my tabernacle; when the Almighty was yet with me" (Job 29:2-5); "Lord, where are Thy former lovingkindnesses?" (Psalms 89:49). From all this it is evident that saints indeed do backslide, and it thus ought not to be a strange thing to you -- as if you were encountering something which other children of God do not experience. You are therefore not to disown your state, for this would cause you to backslide even further. At the appropriate occasion we have shown that true believers cannot apostatize. The Causes of Backsliding

It will be subservient to one's restoration and to his proper conduct while in a backslidden state, to be acquainted with the causes which engender backsliding. We shall therefore present the most significant of them.

First, the Lord at times withdraws Himself in order to try believers and to teach them to understand things which they previously were neither acquainted with nor had committed; that is, not in that manner, nor to that extent. He wants them to be humbled about their sinfulness, being desirous that they would make more use of Christ and value Him more. He wishes to acquaint them, in a vivid and experiential manner, with His longsuffering, the freeness of His grace, His care for them, and His faithfulness. To that end He occasionally withdraws Himself, even though there are no specific reasons given from their side. At least this is not the reason for His withdrawal. Observe this, for example, in 2 Chronicles 32:31 : "God left him (Hezekiah), to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart." When God withdraws Himself, backsliding follows.

Secondly, backsliding sometimes results from the commission of a particularly heinous sin -- a sin committed intentionally and against the conscience. This is particularly the case when this sin gives great offense. This is to be observed in David's life after he committed sin with Bathsheba and against Uriah. The magnitude of his backsliding to which he became subject is evident from his confession, complaints, and supplication for restoration in Psalms 51:1-19. Upon the commission of such sin, God withdraws Himself and the soul loses its vigor due to this wound.

Thirdly, it is sometimes caused by a cleaving to sins which are of a lesser degree. This happens when in the course of everyday life we do not live as tenderly according to our conscience as usual, but rather give in to lesser sins. It can be that we yield to sinful phantasies, or think about other worldly or vain matters. This saps the vitality of spiritual life, causes the heart to be estranged from God, and results in a reduction of vigor.

Fourthly, it is sometimes caused by failure to make use of Christ continually unto justification and sanctification. At the outset of spiritual life Jesus was precious, we sought Him continually for forgiveness, continually came to God through Him, were stirred up to pursue justification and sanctification, and thus were growing for a season. Some depart from this way, however, doing so either out of ignorance or due to vain wisdom, whereby they are of the opinion that Christ is only to be made use of for entering into a gracious state. Having presently attained to this, they know not how to make further use of Him, for they believe that since they already possess grace, they cannot remove themselves from the state of grace and, so to speak, start afresh. They are not acquainted with the manner in which a soul ought to be occupied in meditating -- while making personal application to themselves -- upon the way in which God leads a man unto salvation through Christ. They do not know what wondrous discoveries they may make while doing so and how the perfections of God may be beheld in the face of Christ. They neither know what it means to delight themselves in the love of Christ; nor how they, upon having sinned, must repeatedly receive Him unto justification, applying His blood to their heart for the purging of the conscience in order to serve the living God, nor do they know how they are to make use of Him continually unto sanctification. Acting as if all this were but the work of a beginning Christian, they entrust their soul to Christ with a greater or lesser measure of assurance, and subsequently proceed with sanctification, prayer for strength against sin, and the practice of virtue. If in doing so they may gain something, make progress in sanctification, and have immediate fellowship with God -- worshiping, loving, and fearing Him -- they are of the opinion that they are growing. In reality, however, they remain immature and even regress from the measure of spirituality they previously had. Their sanctification lacks both purity and much of the true essence of sanctification. It becomes more a natural work and approximates the virtuousness of unconverted people. This becomes evident when either death or some other great danger approaches; at which time sanctification can be of no comfort and one needs Christ alone for support. Then one will perceive that they who appeared to be men are but weak children and inexperienced in the unadulterated way of salvation. They who grow spiritually grow in Christ. "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him: rooted and built up in Him, and stablished in the faith" (Colossians 2:6-7); "But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ" (Ephesians 4:15).

Fifthly, backsliding is sometimes caused by despondency and a disowning of our faith. Such believers do indeed have a great desire for progress and they also strive for it. Rather than progressing, however, they believe themselves to be rapidly regressing. This nearly causes them to give up, since they do not know how to overcome this. Yes, they even begin to question their faith, and if they succeed in casting their faith aside, it is as if they have accomplished something. Such will truly regress due to their foolish and wrong actions, and due to the stopping of the fountain from which their growth must proceed. They ought to know that growth cannot be detected every day; that as long as they are here below everything will only be in part; that to struggle and to strive is growth; that salvation is received out of free grace, by the merits of Christ, and in the way of sanctification; and that one must always continue to exercise faith in order to be saved.

Sixthly, sometimes backsliding is caused by laziness, manifesting itself either in the neglect or hasty performance of one's morning, noon, and evening devotions; that is, if one has time for this. When the bride remained on her bed, the bridegroom departed; if we do not pray, we shall not receive. Imperceptibly the soul becomes less familiar with God and loses her vigor, even though this will not be noticed at first. Furthermore, the Lord, perceiving that there is so little desire to seek Him, withdraws Himself, and this cannot but result in backsliding.

Believers Exhorted to Seek Restoration

He who finds himself guilty of one of these acts of backsliding ought to acknowledge that he himself is the cause of his backsliding. Let him justify God, and if he desires to grow, let him improve this situation. Even though we would have just cause to rebuke him sharply and to threaten him, we prefer to have compassion with him in his sinful frame, and lament over him. Such persons are generally mortally wounded, and therefore we wish to take them by the hand and lift them up. And you (to whom this applies), do not resist, but allow yourself to be persuaded and exert yourself to arise. The Lord, who has called you and granted you life, not only requires from you that you strive for growth, but that you, having regressed, repent and do your first works. Is this divine injunction from your heavenly Father of none effect upon you? Does it neither affect nor impress your heart? It is one thing to know your duty and to say, "I know this to be my duty and I have known this for a long time," and it is another thing to hear the voice of the Lord attentively and to take His injunction to heart. Beloved, hear the calling voice of the Lord and do not harden yourself against it. Sometimes the Lord arouses you by way of a complaint: "Thus saith the Lord; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return? Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding?" (Jeremiah 8:4-5). Sometimes the Lord does so by way of a threat: "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly" (Revelation 2:5). Sometimes the Lord does this by way of friendly allurements with many sweet promises: "Rise up, My love, My fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth. ... O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let Me see thy countenance, let Me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely" Song of Solomon 2:10-12; Song of Solomon 2:14. Furthermore, it is the Lord who time and again knocks on your heart and addresses you inwardly: "Arise." Oh, that you would hear, and that the voice of the Lord would so resound within you, that you would arise at once and recover yourself unto the renewal of your conversion!

Secondly, this state of backsliding, since it is both sinful and grievous, is indeed a burden to you. How grievous it is when God hides Himself; when light disappears and it becomes dark; when the heart becomes faint and dull; when one is vulnerable to his enemies, barren, and fruitless; when a chill (due to the absence of zeal) closes up the heart; and when one languishes insensibly! How grievous it is when one falls from the one sin into the other, and the soul is filled with fear and terror upon considering the end of life! What a wretched condition indeed! Such is the nature of the regression, however, and you know and perceive it to be so. Why then would you yield to such a condition any longer? Therefore arise and return!

Thirdly, the longer you remain in this condition, the further you will stray. You are perhaps only beginning to backslide and think that it cannot get any worse. Beware of this condition, however, for the longer you wait with seeking recovery, the more you will deem the initial condition to have been a happy one. You will say, "Then I thought that it could not get any worse, but oh, if only I had now what I had then. If I were yet as I was then, I would still be hopeful for restoration!" And thus you will backslide more and more. Or are you brazen toward the Lord? Do you not wish to repent, but remain where you are, unless God Himself comes, picks you up, and carries you as you sometimes have to do with naughty children? Consider that God will not put up with your sulking. "He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength: who hath hardened himself against Him, and hath prospered?" (Job 9:4). God may come and make life so bitter for you, that for the remainder of your life you will lament that you have been so rancorous toward the Lord. Therefore, take care that you regress no further.

Fourthly, consider the price the Lord Jesus had to pay in order to merit grace for you! He, the Lord of glory, became Surety for you and assumed your human nature in order that He could perform that great work. Out of pure and incomprehensible love He took your sins upon His account, endured all that bitter suffering in body and soul, rendered payment for you, satisfied God's justice, and merited peace and salvation for you. Consider what labor He has bestowed upon you to make all this known to you and to make you a partaker of conversion, spiritual life, faith, and the hope of glory!

Thus, even if you doubt whether you are a partaker of Him, you nevertheless know of your change, prior seeking, praying, and cleaving to Him; you perceive your present grief and sorrow over your lack of light, life, love, over your estrangement from God, and your inner desire to be nearer unto God; for your previous earnestness, and for a purity of holiness to the end that you might be pleasing to the Lord. If you had sufficient light and historical faith, you would acknowledge that these are evidences of true saving faith. Furthermore, would you not give everything you had -- and still have -- in exchange for the entire world? You will thus perceive how appropriate it is to acknowledge what you have received. Therefore, should reflection upon all this not cause an inner melting of the heart about your backsliding? Will this not arouse the following resolve in you: "I shall return; I shall arise and return to my father; I was better off then than I am now; I wish to make a new beginning"? Oh, that the love of Jesus would conquer you, so that you would return to Him and seek Him in love! Therefore, arise and begin with new zeal.

Fifthly, your repentance will not only be advantageous to you, but heaven and earth will also rejoice over you. God will be pleased with it, the Lord Jesus will rejoice in it, and the angels will exult in it. "Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth" (Luke 15:20). The angels accompany believers and take note of their conduct. Thus, when you arise from your regression -- with which they are displeased -- the angels who accompany you will rejoice and announce it to other angels, and together they will glorify God about your repentance. There is likewise joy about you upon earth. The ministers will see it, rejoice over it, and thank God for it. "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth" (3 John 1:4). Believers who know you and observe your restoration will rejoice in this. After the lost penny and the lost sheep had been found, the neighbors were called together in order to rejoice together (Luke 15:4-9). Even if your own advantage could not motivate you to seek restoration, then you ought indeed to be moved to cause others to rejoice in God and to glorify Him. It will, however, also be to your personal advantage. It will be difficult for you to start afresh and to move beyond mourning and all opposition, and the difficulty of this work could keep you from pursuing it. Be it known, however, that the Lord will render this task much lighter than you can imagine. Frequently the Lord readily rewards sincere intentions and endeavors to repent. "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you" (James 4:8). The father of the prodigal son "saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him" (Luke 15:20). Therefore, begin, and the Lord will help you and meet you in His eternal love.

Sixthly, let me address you once more in light of your own judgment about yourself, as you were not able to believe that you were in a state of grace. Let us assume this to be so. But what then? Are you to remain as you are? To do this would be tantamount to running willingly and knowingly to eternal perdition, for you know that no one will get to heaven without regeneration, faith in Christ, and sanctification. You may say, "It is hopeless; it is done with me; I have neglected the time of grace; I have resisted the work of the Holy Spirit; I have become an apostate, and it is impossible that such will be brought to repentance again (Hebrews 6:4-6)." My response is that I have explained the meaning of this text above.

However, are you not contradicting your own judgment about yourself? Are you fully assured that there will be no grace for you and that you will never be converted? You do not truly dare to say this with composure, and you will perhaps be convinced that such thoughts are engendered more by despondency, fretfulness, and laziness, than from being assured that such is the case. You know that the gospel still offers Christ to you in all His fullness, promising salvation if you receive Him with a true faith. You are convinced that you are illuminated at least outwardly, are acquainted with grace, spiritual life, and the benefits thereof. Furthermore, you are desirous to be converted, to be set free from all your sins, and to serve the Lord in the way of genuine holiness -- if only the Lord would grant you His Holy Spirit to that end. You are thus to observe that it is yet not too late. Even if presently you had not received anything, you do not know whether it will please the Lord to grant this to you in the future. Truly, if you would but set aside your fretfulness and crossness, and say with composure, "I am going to hell and eternal damnation," you would seek to be delivered with all your heart and strive to attain salvation -- even if you could not ascertain if you would receive this upon your seeking. You would then avail yourself of all means, saying, "Who can tell? There might yet be mercy" (Jonah 3:9; Joel 2:14). Therefore, remaining inactive will not gain you anything, and a despondent and fretful casting away of all hope will not deliver you from hell. Instead, arise, engage yourself, and you will experience that those who seek the Lord will find Him.

Means for Recovery from Backsliding

If someone has been moved by that which has been said and is resolved to arise, he ought to know that active engagement must go hand in hand with this resolution. However, in order that such a person be not hindered in this endeavor, but be directed in the right way, he must be on guard against some things, and perform other things.

First, one is to be on guard against:

(1) That by which he became backslidden. Such a person ought to reflect upon his past for the purpose of discovering what it was. Having discovered this, he is to confess this before the Lord in the way of self-condemnation, enter into a covenant against it, and always be on guard against coming into the power of this sin again -- having felt the bitterness of this sin.

(2) Being despondent that things can never become right again, for despondency makes the hands feeble. It is true that if you were to undertake your restoration in your own strength, nothing would come of it. However, it proceeds from the Lord. "The Lord upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down" (Psalms 145:14); "He giveth power to the faint" (Isaiah 40:29). He reaches out to you, thus enabling you by His grace to lift up your head out of your sorrow, and to be resolved to arise again. He who has thus reached out to you will subsequently also sustain you.

(3) Laxness and those motions that resist the Spirit. Beloved, do not give heed to your lazy flesh. Let the sweetness and purity of being in a restored state be worth something to you -- it is indeed worth the price.

(4) Relationships with worldly people (that is, beyond that which is necessary), world conformity, and partial love. Instead, choose the Lord only as your portion, seek to have fellowship with the Lord in solitude, and thus demonstrate that nothing but the Lord is able to satisfy us.

Secondly, if you wish to recover from backsliding:

(1) Start from the beginning. This does not mean that you are to reject everything the Lord has previously wrought in you, and that you are to consider yourself as being without grace in an unconverted state. This a gracious person cannot do, for that would be a denial of something he has received. It would be an inordinate act of ingratitude. If, however, he cannot determine what his spiritual state is, he must quietly let this matter rest as something which he currently cannot discern. Instead, he must proceed as a small child. If he insists on proceeding with that measure of light and in the manner in which he had previously proceeded while being in a good frame, he would immediately succumb; it would be an impossible matter for him. If, however, he proceeds with that small measure of light and strength which as yet remains, and if he faithfully avails himself of these, he will gradually increase and not only return to the condition from which he has departed, but will become more steadfast and stronger than ever before.

(2) As he begins, he must be firmly resolved and willing to seek until the end of his life, and to arise as often as he falls down. He should be resolved to do so even if he were never to attain that comfort and that frame which he had prior to his departure.

Instead, he ought to rejoice that he may seek, pray, and strive, and that with his feeble strength he is able to do so, seldom being able to proceed without becoming faint by renewal. And if all this appears strange to him and he insists on becoming despondent over this, he will never make progress.

(3) He must wrestle to be restored in the way of faith. At times God will permit His children to see a glimpse of His countenance and to taste a little of the spiritual manna. The sweetness of this makes them so desirous that they would always wish to live in this enjoyment. Occasionally the Lord will do this at the outset of their restoration. The father of the prodigal son kissed his returning son immediately; however, the Lord does not always do so. He may let them taste the bitterness of their previous departures for some time and occasionally will enable them to find Him again after a long period of seeking. Thus, the returning sinner must not insist on the immediate enjoyment of sweetness, lest he be discouraged when it does not immediately transpire in this manner. If he receives this, it is to be deemed extraordinary. Instead, he must live by faith, and with uplifted heart hold before him the promises which God has promised to fulfill upon seeking. He must embrace and believe them as being certain and infallible truths which will also prove to be true in his case. "He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him" (Hebrews 11:6).

Therefore, upon finding a promise in the Word of God, let him rely upon it without reservation. Let him deem these promises to be a certainty, even if a thousand spurious reasons could be produced to the contrary. Let him reason thus: "God is truthful and will confirm this to seekers -- and thus also to me." Let him therefore expectantly wrestle, pray, and hope upon the Lord until He is pleased to visit him. And even if it were so that he would not enjoy this in this life, he would most certainly receive it all in heaven upon his death. Would not this seeking then have been adequately rewarded? To believe this will be to his support, will lift him up time and again, and will cause the seeking itself to be sweet. In all humility he will plead with the Lord and remind Him of His nature, mercy, goodness, and grace, the satisfaction of the Surety Jesus Christ, and His promises. He will declare that he believes these promises, will rely upon and put his entire trust in them, trusting the Lord to vindicate His Word in the presence of angels and men. Let such a person therefore rely upon the Word, engage in his duty, and keep himself occupied in seeking.

096. Chapter 91: Spiritual Desertion

----- CHAPTER NINETY-ONE ----- Spiritual Desertion The thoughts and ways of the Lord are not the same as ours. Since many do not understand this, nor submit themselves well to the wise and sovereign dealings of God, they conduct themselves foolishly and manifest an increasingly negative disposition. Some who may have received a measure of light and life, would now wish to prescribe to the Lord the way in which He ought to lead His children. If, however, the Lord's dealings are not according to their conception, they either resist or are unable to justify the Lord in His way by subjecting themselves to them with quiet resignation. If they do so, it is only in view of their sinfulness, deeming themselves worthy of being dealt with in this manner -- acting as if they were still in the covenant of works, subject to God's wrath, and as yet not having been translated into the state of grace. If we were wise, we would not disown our spiritual state when God deals with us in a distasteful manner. We would then submit ourselves to God -- not only in view of having sinned, and thus having to endure all this, but also because all the Lord's dealings are only wise, good, faithful, and loving. We would then believe this and willingly submit ourselves to the Lord's government -- however painful this would be, and however little we would be able to comprehend the Lord's reasons and purposes.

Among all the ways in which the Lord leads His people, spiritual desertion is among the most unique. Believers generally do not behave themselves well when thus led, and it will therefore be fruitful if we delineate the nature of this condition, comfort those who are deserted, and give them direction.

What Spiritual Desertion is Not

First, in discussing spiritual desertion we do not understand this to refer to the desertion of the unconverted. God does grant much temporal prosperity, riches, honor, and prominence to the unconverted. He may grant them external illumination, historical faith, conviction, stirrings unto repentance, and a fleeing from the base pollutions of the world. When such persons abuse all these common blessings and do not repent in consequence of this, God deserts them altogether and gives them over to themselves. Then they become even more abominable than before, upon which even more dreadful judgments may follow. This may already occur in this world, so that divine justice is both observed and glorified in them. However, this will especially occur after they die -- in hell. This is to be observed in 1 Samuel 16:14 : "But the spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him," as well as in (Romans 1:21-26). However, we are here discussing the desertion of the regenerate.

Secondly, we do not understand this to be an entire or a final desertion. That is impossible, due to God's immutable decree and election, Christ's atonement, the sealing and indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and all the sure promises of God. During a period of desertion, the Lord sustains the regenerate by secret and imperceptible influences. "The Lord upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down" (Psalms 145:14).

Thirdly, we do not understand this to be a lesser infusion of spiritual grace in the one as compared to the other. In His church, God has children of various maturity. There are children, young men, and fathers. The children have a much smaller measure of grace than the fathers, but they are therefore not in a state of desertion. A father can be in a state of desertion while having and preserving more grace than the children.

Fourthly, we also do not understand it to refer to the cessation of extraordinary illuminations and comforts, after which those of an ordinary nature continue. When Paul returned again from the third heaven, it could not be said of him that he was deserted. God also grants certain of His children something extraordinary which is above and beyond the way in which they are commonly led. When this ceases, He causes them to return to their normal state. Such are not to think that they are deserted to a greater or lesser degree since they now have to miss the extraordinary.

Fifthly, we also do not understand this to refer to daily offenses, even though they occur due to the absence of the Spirit's influence, who indeed would have been able to keep us from such offenses. This is nevertheless not a withdrawal of His normal influences. Even if the falling into special sins (against which we would have been able to remain standing by way of the normal support of the Spirit) indeed occurs due to the withdrawal of His influence -- "God left him" 2 Chronicles 32:31 -- this is nevertheless not the desertion which is under discussion here.

Sixthly, we also do not understand this to refer to a reduction of habitual grace. God does not only move His own by way of external influences, but rather, He brings spiritual life into the soul, and this life is more vigorous in the one than in the other. This life, by reason of its spiritual principle, not only has an inherent inclination to be active, but in reality also is active by virtue of the normal operation of the Spirit. Thus, this infused propensity is enhanced by way of exercise, but can also be diminished by a variety of causes. In spiritual desertion God neither removes these propensities entirely nor partially. Instead, He withholds the normal operation of the Spirit, and as a necessary consequence of this, habitual graces sometimes diminish. This is, however, not true for all desertion, for in some cases habitual graces will increase -- such as is true for tree roots, both during storms as well as during winters.

Spiritual Desertion Defined

Spiritual desertion is a lengthy withholding and withdrawal of those normal operations and influences of the Holy Spirit in the regenerate by which He illuminates them, assures them of His favor, comforts them, fortifies them against sin and temptation, and renders them help in and deliverance from temporal trials. This causes them to be in darkness, weak in faith, disconsolate, to fall into sin, succumb to temptations, and to remain grieved and fretful in the bearing of a temporal cross.

Thus, desertion pertains to both justification (and all that relates to it) and sanctification. The desertion of one person may pertain more to justification, and to sanctification with another. For the one person it is of longer duration and for the other of shorter duration. Some experience this at the outset of their conversion. It can go so far that it seems as if all will come to nought, and it seems more unlikely than ever before that their conversion is true. However, the Lord will intermittently manifest Himself to them and cause them to be steadfast again. Some come into this grievous condition after they have made some progress, the Lord having manifested Himself intimately. This will occur either suddenly or gradually. Some have to taste this at the end of their life, and sometimes the Lord will grant them His comforts again prior to their death, causing them to depart triumphantly. Sometimes they die in a condition of great desertion, darkness, and powerful temptations. In one moment they go from one extreme to the other, and that which they never thought they would attain to, they receive unexpectedly.

Believers, who, from the Word of God and their experience, have not sufficiently become acquainted with their impotence, rely upon their own strength. Even though they believe and confess otherwise, this negative frame proceeds from themselves. In doing so, they are not suggesting that they have not given the Lord reason to desert them -- which is certainly the truth -- but that they do not believe the Lord's hand to be in it. Instead, they believe that their soul is turned from God due to their neglect and inordinate desires. Thus, they secretly imagine that all will come to rights again by their own activity if they would but engage themselves, believing that they would most certainly perish if they were to neglect to do so. Others, however, who tangibly perceive this to be the work of God (namely, that He withdraws His normal support), immediately disown their spiritual state and believe it to be an evidence of God's wrath, and a declaration that their eternal judgment is pending -- and are thus filled with fear and terror. They therefore will neglect almost all use of the means, being of the opinion that there is no hope, and they are thus consumed by despondency. There are but few who remain silent and possess their soul in patience, look to heaven for help, continue to seek even though they are in thick darkness, persevere, occasionally weep heartily, and desire to hope in the Lord -- even if He were to slay them. Such are generally delivered earlier, and reap the most benefit from spiritual desertion.

Desertion is the Lord's Withdrawal of the Normal Influences of His Spirit

It is of the greatest importance to know that it is the Lord who, in the state of desertion, withdraws His normal operation, infusion of grace, illumination, and comfort. In the Word of God this is represented with a variety of expressions, each of which are expressive of a specific manner of desertion:

(1) to return: "I will go and return to My place" (Hosea 5:15); "I opened to my Beloved; but my Beloved had withdrawn Himself, and was gone: my soul failed when He spake (that is, succumbed due to shame and sorrow)" (Song of Solomon 5:6);

(2) to forsake: "For a small moment have I forsaken thee" (Isaiah 54:7); "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" (Psalms 22:1);

(3) to hide: "For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: I hid Me" (Isaiah 57:17); "How long wilt Thou hide Thy face from me?" (Psalms 13:1);

(4) to forget: "How long wilt Thou forget me, O Lord? for ever?" (Psalms 13:1);

(5) to restrain: "Where is Thy zeal and Thy strength, the sounding of Thy bowels and of Thy mercies toward me? are they restrained?" (Isaiah 63:15);

(6) to keep silence; to hold one's peace: "Keep not Thou silence, O God: hold not Thy peace, and be not still, O God" (Psalms 83:1);

(7) to stand afar: "Why standest Thou afar off, O Lord?" (Psalms 10:1);

(8) to shut up: "Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath He in anger shut up His tender mercies? Selah" (Psalms 77:9);

(9) to cast off: "Lord, why castest Thou off my soul? why hidest Thou Thy face from me?" (Psalms 88:14);

(10) to be wrathful: "Thy fierce wrath goeth over me; Thy terrors have cut me off" (Psalms 88:16). From all this it is evident that believers do not always bring themselves into a state of being estranged from God due to their misbehavior -- even though this may be the case at other times. Rather, it can be that God also hides Himself from His side and departs for a season, withholding His illuminating, comforting, and sanctifying operations. This is a most grievous and distressing condition. I pity all those who are in it; I commiserate with them. Even though God preserves His own from eternal condemnation, He does yet permit them to taste somewhat of it. Damnation consists in the missing of God's countenance, the sense of His wrath, and all manner of pain in soul and body. An unconverted person does not know what it is to miss God, for he has never experienced the sweetness of having had communion with God. He always finds something in this life whereby he can entertain and refresh himself. To be utterly destitute, however, to have a howling heart after it has been filled, to be without any expectation that this emptiness shall be filled, and then to miss God is a hell in the soul -- even when man is yet outside of hell. God's children, however, who are acquainted with and who have tasted that it is good to be near unto the Lord, when they are deserted by God, and not only must miss fellowship with God, but also must experience that God is withdrawing Himself, and who, instead of enjoying His favor, must experience God's wrath and rejection, succumb when they experience this. "I am consumed by the blow of Thine hand" (Psalms 39:10). Then their "heart panteth" (Psalms 38:10). Then their condition is as expressed by Asaph: "I remembered God, and was troubled: I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed" (Psalms 77:3).

It is nearly impossible to express all these disturbing thoughts and sorrowful motions within. We shall nevertheless present some, so that they who are thus may know that they are not alone in this (which they generally believe to be the case). Furthermore, we do so in order that they may know that there is reason for their sorrow, and that they -- their condition having been held before them -- would become tender and begin to weep, for this will refresh their soul. This will yet engender hope that at one time they will return to God.

Particular Aspects of Being in a Deserted State

It is no wonder that you are so troubled, for: First, your Father hides Himself. How perplexed a child is whose father and mother have departed, leaving the child in a lonely and dark place! How this child will cry! And if someone were to ask, "Why are you crying," the child would answer, "My father and mother are gone." Has your heavenly Father also departed -- your Father with whom you so intimately shared your need, before whom you could bring your desire with supplication, who used to answer and comfort you in such a familiar manner, and to whom you customarily cried out, "My Father, Thou art the guide of my youth?" Poor child, has your beloved Father departed? One will say, "If only I knew that God was my Father, then I would melt away."

Secondly, your Jesus -- your Beloved -- your Bridegroom has departed. If one were to ask you, "Why are you so sorrowful," would you then not answer, "My Beloved who used to kiss me with the kisses of His mouth; under whose shadow I used to sit; whose fruit was sweet to my mouth; who led me into the banqueting house; who waved His banner of love over me; who was all my delight; upon whom I used to lean as my Beloved; and of whom I used to boast, His mouth is most sweet: yea, He is altogether lovely Song of Solomon 5:16 -- He who is my Beloved and my friend has departed, and therefore I am so sorrowful.”

Thirdly, the Holy Spirit refrains His influences, and thus what light, comfort, and joy can you then have? There can be nothing other than sorrow, unrest, and anxiety. “For these things I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the Comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me” (Lamentations 1:16).

Fourthly, a deserted soul is in the dark, is surrounded by darkness, walks in darkness, and does not know where she is going. Wherever she turns, she suffers a setback and stumbles over the smallest thing, for the Lord who is her light has departed from her. The Lord Jesus, the Sun of Righteousness, is gone down. The Dayspring from on high does not shine upon her, and the renowned Morning Star does not arise in her heart. This causes her to be sorrowful, anxious, and full of fear.

Fifthly, she is weak and impotent, for the Lord who is the strength of her life has departed. She is ill, for the Lord Jesus her Physician has departed from her. There is no balm in Gilead for her healing, and therefore she is ready to die.

Sixthly, she is desperate and knows not what to undertake. Now she seeks it here and then there, but she knows not where to find it. The Lord Jesus, whose name is Counselor and who used to counsel her so sweetly in her perplexities, directing her to the way and to the means (always having fared so well in doing so), leaves her to herself and refuses to give her counsel. Therefore no matter what way she enters upon, she finds herself at a loss and is entangled in all manner of snares.

Seventhly, she would desire to turn to God and indeed begins to do so, but she is not able. The way is fenced up, enclosed with hewn stone, and encompassed by thorns, which she cannot penetrate, for the Lord Jesus who is the way, without whom no one can come to the Father, has departed. The Holy Spirit does not help in her infirmities and does not groan within her with groanings that cannot be uttered. Even when she prays, the Lord encompasses Himself with a cloud so that no prayer can penetrate, and when she calls, He does not answer her at all. And thus she must depart again without comfort.

Eighthly, when she takes refuge to the Word of God in order to derive some comfort from it, it is a closed Book for her. She finds nothing there for herself. Her eyes may indeed fall upon a passage of Scripture, but it disturbs her, and that which should lift her up has the opposite effect, casting her down. The Word of God is nothing more to her than a fire and a two-edged sword. It neither makes an impression nor does it have an effect upon her, for the Spirit neither joins Himself to it, nor works by means of it, and therefore it is not efficacious.

Ninthly, the enemies attack her from all sides, and everyone of them gets the advantage over her. Every arrow hits, Satan is successful in every attack, all the scorn of the world wounds her, and every manifestation of a sinful desire draws her away. She is thus as a bird caught in the snare, for her King has forsaken her and does not go into battle with her. The Lord, who is her shield, has departed and lets her stand without protection.

Tenthly, if only it were true that the soul in all this were as yet always sensible, tender, and able to cry. But no, despondency makes her numb, closes her heart, and she is, so to speak, frozen solid in a harsh winter. The Holy Spirit and the Lord Jesus, who formerly caused the heart to burn within, neither set her aflame any longer nor baptize her with fire. The fountain of life has been stopped and water no longer issues forth.

Eleventhly, all this would cause more stirring within if we could but believe ourself to be a child of God. Here is, however, the primary source of anxiety: We then believe that we are not elected, never had grace, have nothing more than external illumination, and have indeed been cast away by God in His wrath. We furthermore believe that God will never be gracious to us, but that He will condemn us forever. This sense of hopelessness therefore makes us so dead and insensitive, that not a thing can move us any more. All we feel is the fatal wound in our heart. Or else we shall be so tossed about by despair that we, feeling hell so to speak, begin to entertain all manner of desperate thoughts and words. This will aggravate our sorrow to such an extent that we shall be fretful and we shall not be able to silently resign ourselves.

Thus the poor soul languishes, is as a woman forsaken, grieves in spirit, is oppressed, tossed with tempest, and not comforted. And thus her life is consumed by sorrow and her years with sighing. If the Lord did not secretly sustain her, what would then come of it all? The Lord keeps her in His power, however, and by reason of His unchangeable grace and goodness to her, will restore her again, reveal Himself to her again, and will by renewal speak to her heart and comfort her. "For I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth: for the spirit should fail before Me, and the souls which I have made. I have seen his ways, and will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners. I create the fruit of the lips; Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord; and I will heal him" Isaiah 57:16; Isaiah 57:18-19. When God's children encounter a trial of some sort, they are not satisfied to know that it is from the Lord -- with which they ought to be satisfied, knowing it to be the good, holy, and benevolent will of God with which their will ought to agree with delight, even if it were with tears in their eyes. However, they also wish to know the reason, not so much because they desire to know how they can improve their condition from their side, but to sit in judgment about the dealings of God and judge whether God's dealings are righteous. For they reason as follows: "If I am a child of God, reconciled through Christ, loved of God, and an heir of eternal life, and if God does not deal thus with His other children, who prosper in body and soul, why then does God deal with me thus?" They would then conclude, "I am not a child of God," doing so more in fretfulness than in earnest. Therefore, it is commonly their question: "Show me wherefore Thou contendest with me" (Job 10:2). Even though you need not know any reasons -- for God does not give an account of His deeds -- I shall nevertheless give you some.

How God Is Glorified in Desertion First, God wills thus to be glorified. There are others beside you who will observe how God deals with you.

(1) It is to you and them that God wants to show His sovereignty and freeness in manifesting His mercy to whomever and whenever He wills. The fact that He receives you and passes others by; that you know God in Christ; that you strive to receive Jesus unto justification and sanctification; and that you have the principle of spiritual life within you, whereas others are deprived of this -- all of this is not your work, but is due to the sovereign grace of God. "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion" (Romans 9:15). This is the lesson the angels and believers who are acquainted with your condition learn. You will learn this lesson while in your straits, God is glorified by others by it, and He will also be glorified by you concerning this. If we were always to live in the enjoyment of spiritual embrace, we would secretly imagine that we were entitled to this -- as if it were in our power to keep ourself near to God. Upon missing it, however, we learn to know the sovereignty of God, and we learn to acknowledge and love it. Then the thought ceases, "Why am I not as another person is?" Then we learn, "He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, What doest Thou?" (Daniel 4:35). To learn this is worth some anxiety.

(2) The Lord thus reveals the greatness of His mercy. Not only does one become acquainted with himself as to how sinful and unworthy he is of the least grace and what a wonder it is that God would look upon him in grace; but he also knows and acknowledges that all is empty and that nothing but God can satisfy him. Oh, the mercy of God becomes so precious to him! If he may be the object of mercy, he is able and willing to miss everything, for if he must miss God, he must die for sorrow. To learn this, that is, to esteem God above his own supreme happiness, is indeed worth the occasional experience of desertion.

(3) The Lord thus demonstrates His holiness and righteousness, and His aversion for sin. Furthermore, the Lord hereby shows that, even though the believer is pleasing to Him in Christ, his corruption nevertheless displeases Him. His eyes are too pure than that they would behold evil. Believers must perceive that God is righteous in dealing with them thus -- yes, that God would be righteous if He would forsake them and eternally cast them away from before His countenance, "that Thou mightest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest" (Psalms 51:4). To perceive and embrace this is indeed worthy of the experience of some measure of sorrow.

(4) The Lord thus reveals His immutability, faithfulness, longsuffering and truthfulness. All this is confirmed by the fact that God bears with the believer in his wrong and foolish actions while being subject to His chastisement; and that God secretly supports and upholds him during this desertion so that his spiritual life is not extinguished, neither does he succumb to despair nor break forth with abominable words and deeds. God neither casts him away, nor deserts him excessively, but is still with him when he must go through the water and the fire; He restores him, and by renewal causes him to taste the mercies he previously enjoyed.

We may previously have believed in, and have acknowledged all these perfections. However, by way of spiritual desertion we shall become acquainted with them experientially. Such knowledge, such acknowledgement, and such worship far exceeds what we had before this. It is true that during a time of desertion we do not perceive all this very well, but we shall experience this subsequently. "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth Thee" (Job 42:5). Thus, spiritual desertion is subservient to the glory of God.

God's Children Benefit from Desertion

Secondly, spiritual desertion will serve the best interest of God's children. This is not only because they thus become better acquainted with the perfections of God and glorify them more, but:

(1) They thus also become better acquainted with themselves. They perceive their sinful nature and deeds; how abominable they are before God, angels, and men; what they are worthy of; and what they should expect if God were to deal with them according to their conduct. This causes the soul to sink away in humility and in her nothingness. The soul experiences her impotence, neither being able to lift herself up by faith, nor being able to comfort herself thereby. Thus, if she is to be restored, her restoration must come from the Lord alone, without there being the least worthiness in her.

(2) Hereby they learn to esteem grace all the more highly. The crumbs which they previously did not regard, the least longing for the Lord Jesus, the least sigh, the feeblest prayer, the smallest measure of light, and the smallest measure of hope now appear exceedingly precious to them, presently refresh them, and they thank the Lord for them. They thus become all the more careful to preserve grace. They actively will seek to preserve what they have in order that they may continue to enjoy the love of God and His communion. When Hezekiah, after his sorrow, by renewal enjoyed comfort, he said, "What shall I say? He hath both spoken unto me, and Himself hath done it: I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul" (Isaiah 38:15). When the bride found her bridegroom again after having been deserted by him, she said, "I held him, and would not let him go" (Song of Solomon 3:4).

(3) They are thus weaned from the world and all creatures. They no longer cleave to it, nor do they desire it. They have no need for it, and expect nothing from man. They only make use of the means as a matter of obedience -- not as if thereby to obtain their desires, as if they were contingent upon these means. Time and again they turn to the Lord as their portion and their resting place, saying, "Whom have I in heaven but Thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee. My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever" (Psalms 73:28-28); "But it is good for me to draw near to God" (Psalms 73:28).

(4) Hereby the Lord makes known to the world and His children what graces He has planted in them, thus manifesting His omnipotence, goodness, faithfulness, and immutability. How would we have ever been acquainted with Job's patience, unless he had been in those trying circumstances? How would we have known about Abraham's faith and obedience, unless he had been subjected to those severe trials? Such is also the case when believers must experience desertion. Everyone who receives knowledge of this and interacts with them, will perceive from their actions that they despise the world and all that is in it, that they deem all their comfort to consist in having communion with God, and that the only reason for their mourning is that they must miss communion with God. This is further confirmed when, upon having been restored, it is perceived how they emerge from this trial; how they are as tried gold coming out of the fire; how fearful they are of sin; how majestic and glorious God is in their eyes; how precious Jesus is to them; how godly, humble, longsuffering, compassionate, and obliging they are; how encouraged they are in the Lord; and how they trust in Him. And thus everyone will be astonished about their change. This will be to the conviction of worldly people. It will teach God's children to understand the Lord's ways, make them strong to hope upon the Lord in trials, motivate them to thank and glorify the Lord, and also stir them up to fear and serve the Lord increasingly.

Tell me now -- you who have asked for reasons why the Lord brings desertion upon His children -- do not these reasons express the wisdom and goodness of God, and is it not beneficial?

Objection: God can grant all this without bringing desertion upon them.

Answer: They could not have been acquainted with all this in an experiential way, and it would be as much as to ask: "Why doesn't God make His children perfect from the moment of their birth? Why doesn't God take His children to heaven in their childhood?" There is no other way for me to answer you than by saying, "It is the wisdom and the goodness of God." By way of His dealings, angels and men thus attain to a greater measure of felicity, greater admiration, and are rendered more fit to answer to their purpose of glorifying God in His perfections as they are revealed in Christ.

Desertion: Due to Specific Sins

Thirdly, God will at times desert His children due to specific sins. God will not desert his children because of their daily weaknesses and offenses; however, He will do so due to certain specific sins.

(1) He will do so for great sins which, in spite of many inner warnings, are deliberately committed against the conscience, and which cause great offense. Such is true for adultery, this being the reason why David had to experience desertion Psalms 51:1-19. Desertion will also occur when we -- in order to gratify our lust for dominance, honor, money, and whatever else there may be -- conspire with the world and the men of the world, and thus forsake God's cause and His children, conducting ourselves as if we were one with the world, or engage in evil practices by way of lying and hypocrisy. It will be observed that God deserts such in regard to their internal comforts and their sanctification. Externally He will bring upon them shame, contempt, and distress; loss of husband, wife, children, health, and goods; and He will cause them to die in fear.

(2) He will do so if we become proud in civil life, and if in the spiritual realm we pride ourselves in our gifts, knowledge, and grace; if we wish to be esteemed as a great person in the church and seek the praise of others. We do so if inwardly, and with our behavior, we despise those among the godly who either have a lower station in the world, or are not as advanced in grace; and if we envy those who either have a higher position in the world or a greater measure of grace and gifts than we ourselves have. In this way -- in thought, word, and deed -- we stir up those emotions that beget envy. Pride is a dreadful thing which God cannot tolerate. "God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble" (1 Peter 5:5).

(3) He will do so if we esteem the grace of God and communion with Him of little value -- not judgmentally, for that cannot be, but rather with our will, and in our practice and conduct. Such is true when we begin to love the world, halt between two opinions, and are divided in our heart and love: God something and the world something. If we thus neglect to seek God with our whole heart, with earnestness and zeal, and as the only One whom we desire; if we lightly omit our scheduled devotions or conduct them hastily in order to pacify our conscience and to assure ourselves of our salvation; if we do not open to a Jesus who is knocking, but let Him stand before the door, thereby demonstrating that communion with Him is but of little value, being without desire to make any effort; and if we grieve but little over our backsliding -- then it is as if God says: "If I am worth that little to you, go your way; enjoy and entertain yourself in the world." God will then withdraw Himself and allow this person to fend for himself.

(4) He will do so if we become conceited and depart from the simplicity which is in Christ Jesus, being desirous to have something new. We shall then engage ourselves in study in order to gain in wisdom and to acquire knowledge. Spiritual matters are too common, as they concern matters about which we are already knowledgeable and have frequently heard about. All that is new we readily embrace, regardless of whether it is truth or not. We then imagine that only now the light has dawned upon us, we have become wise, have become steadfast in the faith, and have overcome our previous dragging of our feet. We then mock with those who live tenderly and have strife. We turn our backs upon such and join ourselves to those who likewise enjoy this new-found light, irrespective of whether they fear the Lord or not. We are then at liberty and have freedom to do all that which previously smote our conscience. We are then able to boast as the world does, and do as the world does, while imagining that we are increasing wondrously. In the meantime, however, God sends a leanness into the soul. Since we do not embrace internal spiritual truths with more heartfelt love, God does at times also leave us to go our own way, not allowing us to proceed beyond the letter, and thus decrease our understanding of the spiritual dimension. Happy are they who remember from whence they have fallen, repent, and do their first works. It is rare, however, that such regain their initial level of spirituality.

Restoration for Those in Spiritual Desertion

Having presented to you spiritual desertion in its nature, consequences, and causes, we now wish to be of assistance to such and help them out of this grievous condition -- even though it is a difficult task. "The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit who can bear?" (Proverbs 18:14). It is, however, the duty of the strong to assist the weak and to lift up those who are bowed down. God also frequently blesses the means above expectation. Words, the strongest encouragements, the most serious exhortations, and the most effective arguments are not sufficient to that end. Deserted persons are too destitute of strength to be lifted up by this. The God who has deserted them must by renewal visit and take them by the hand. God occasionally does this in an immediate manner, infusing new grace solely by the Holy Spirit, and quickening residual grace -- and they are thus restored, so to speak, in a moment. Sometimes God does this by way of external circumstances and events, which in and of themselves are not capable of being a means to that end. However, God generally uses His read or spoken Word for this purpose, which is applied to them. In order that we might be a means to your restoration, we shall propose some comforts and then give you some guidance.

Prior to this, however, I would like to ask those who are in a state of desertion the following questions: "Do you desire to be delivered from this condition? Are you desirous that the Lord would clear up your darkness and shine upon you with His light; that the Lord would assure you of having been adopted as His child and of being an heir of eternal life; that the Lord would say unto your soul, I am thy salvation, call you by name, and declare to you that you have found grace in His eyes; that the Lord would lovingly embrace your soul and cast all your sins behind His back; and that the Lord Jesus would kiss you with the kisses of His mouth and manifest His love to you? Are you desirous to again weep sweet tears, pray, believe, have loving fellowship with Him and to walk in tender piety before His countenance?" What is your answer? If you answer in the affirmative, then I ask you, "Is this true and do you really mean it?" Do you again answer "Yes," with the sigh, "I wish it were so, but I cannot expect this"? However, there is hope in this respect; that is, only if you are willing to be delivered. If you are indeed willing, then with composure listen to the following: The deserted person does not believe that he is a child of God and a recipient of grace. He thinks that if he were able to believe that, he would be enabled to persevere courageously in this darkness, even if it pleased the Lord not to permit him to feel His grace and comforts. Although he would very much desire this, he would nevertheless cleave to the Lord. It is thus our first task to convince the deserted person that he has grace.

First, reflect upon the days of old. Do you still remember when you were entirely in the state of nature, and neither knew God nor sought Him? Proceed and reflect upon the way which led to your change, and subsequently upon the change you have experienced. Reflect upon the prayers you offered, the tears you wept, that wrestling with and fleeing unto Jesus, that receiving of Him unto reconciliation and godliness. Furthermore, consider the insight you received concerning God and the way of salvation, and how much this differed from the knowledge of natural men. You perceived that with all their knowledge, they were as yet blind. Proceed by considering what your general objective was; how there was the fear of God, a tenderness of conscience, sensitivity toward sin, a repeated seeking of forgiveness; what a love for God, His service, and His children you then had. Furthermore, you then had an awareness in your soul of quietness, peace, hope, occasional assurance, and a sweet inclination toward God. You know these things to be true; now, set aside the sinfulness which cleaves to all God's children, consider these matters in their essential nature, and draw a conclusion from all this. Is there then no evidence that you did possess true grace? You will certainly not be able to say that it was hypocrisy, knowing that in all this you were dealing with God, and that your heart frequently bore witness that your conduct was in truth. You will also not be able to say that all this was but the result of external illumination and a mere work of nature. At that time you perceived the difference between yourself and those who had but external light. The fact that you are presently desirous to experience these motions again proves that you still deem all that to have been in truth, even though you impulsively speak and think otherwise. Would you not consider someone to be a gracious person if you were to hear, without his knowledge, how he wrestled with God in prayer, and if you knew his heart to be as such? This proves again that you consider your previous condition to be gracious. Therefore, proceed with your work in truth and conclude that the work in you has been in truth. Turn with this to the Holy Scriptures and believe that the gifts of God and His calling are without repentance, that He will also finish the good work He has begun in you, and that He will not forsake the work of His hands.

Secondly, consider your present state, and you will yet detect grace in it, as despairing as you may be of your condition. Also here you are to deal truthfully, even as if you were judging someone else.

(1) You have light, know the way of salvation in Christ, are acquainted with having spiritual communion with God, and know what it is to have true dealings with God. Not only do you know what faith is, but you also know how a believing soul functions. You are acquainted with the nature of inner, spiritual life; as well as that which differs from it. Your knowledge of all this is not due to the drawing of some obscure conclusion; that is, by concluding the one thing from the other. Rather, you are acquainted with the essential nature of these things, and your knowledge is such that it engenders esteem and love, together with a desire to possess them -- even if they are of no comfort to you at the present.

(2) Why are you sorrowful? It is indeed not because you lack something in this world, but rather due to God being distant, Jesus having departed, and your having been forsaken. You are not merely and primarily motivated by a fear of being damned. If you were assured of the fact that you would not be damned and had everything in the world which you would desire, would you then be satisfied and would your sorrow then cease? Indeed not! This question will stimulate your inclination, and with all your heart you will declare, "I am sorrowful because I miss God, and I cannot be happy as long as I cannot draw near to Him. If that were to take place, I would be happy." However, to perceive the deficiency of life is life, and sorrow over that which is lacking is a sure evidence of love. Such mourners are pronounced blessed, and to them pertains the promise of comfort, "Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted" (Matthew 5:4).

(3) Add to this those heartfelt desires which go out after God. If you think upon having sweet communion with God, union with Christ, a walking in love, obedience, and the service of God; and you think to yourself, "If once again I were thus" -- doesn't that enliven your soul? Does that set your affections in motion, and would they not mount upward with wings if despondency did not hinder them in this? And as hopeless as your condition is, can you keep from lifting your eyes on high? Are you able to refrain entirely from praying? What do you then desire? This indeed shows that you desire to have something -- something from God. Your heart will confess that it is God Himself, and you are thus to be convinced that your desires are after God Himself. Desire proceeds from love, however, and the promise is: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled" (Matthew 5:6).

Thirdly, acknowledge the intermittent comforts which the Lord grants you in the midst of your desertion.

(1) Upon entering church a fitting word is spoken which touches you. You are sensibly moved, wholeheartedly receive Jesus, the wall of separation between God and you is removed, you receive an opened door and free access to God, and you have freedom to address Him as "Abba, Father!" It may be that you join the fellowship of the godly, and behold, the Lord reveals to you there that He is present, for your soul becomes lively. It is as if the darkness disappears, and as if you are fully restored.

(2) Has the Lord not occasionally visited you in your sleep so that you were awake while sleeping? You were able to pray, were comforted, became lively, and upon awaking your sleep had been sweet. Yes, do you long for such nights, because your soul is not in a better frame than when asleep? This will occur occasionally; however, also the opposite can be true, as Job testifies in (Job 7:14).

(3) It may also occasionally occur while you are in solitude -- be it in your room or in the field -- that your heart is sweetly moved by God's Spirit -- yes, the tears will flow, and there will be a calling upon and a cleaving unto the Lord. The Lord may at times visit you with comforts, assurances, and joy. You who have experienced this, however, is this not a sure evidence that the Lord neither has nor will forsake you? Strengthen yourself with this and persevere by faith when life and light are lacking, and it readily becomes dark again.

Fourthly, be it known that it is God's common way to cause His children to occasionally experience desertions -- particularly those whom He desires to give an additional measure of grace for the purpose of growth and comfort. Nothing strange is befalling you, for God does not deal with you any differently from His other children. Perhaps you do not have the opportunity to have fellowship with such, and when you meet someone who is in such a condition, you are amazed that there are more who have come into such circumstances as you. It is as if this gives you some courage, and I tell you from experience that God generally deals with His children in this manner. Every person has his cross, whether they are pious or not. However, this particular cross is reserved for the godly only. Others have no knowledge of this; they ridicule it and consider it a case of melancholy and foolishness. We may thus even conclude from bearing this cross that the Lord has bestowed grace upon us, even though this will be difficult for us to do. Therefore, be not troubled by this, but bow yourself, and humble yourself under the mighty hand of the Lord so that He may exalt you in due time.

Fifthly, the Lord will most certainly grant deliverance and restore you. He has done so to others, even though those who have not behaved themselves all that well during their trial will not be fully restored in this life. However, they will receive this in heaven. Therefore, take courage and focus upon the promises of God. "In a little wrath I hid My face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours. ... And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children" (Isaiah 54:8; Isaiah 54:11; Isaiah 54:13); "For the Lord will not cast off for ever: but though He cause grief, yet will He have compassion according to the multitude of His mercies" (Lamentations 3:31-32).

Therefore, neither let the consolations of God be small to you, nor ignore His promises -- they are true. Others have experienced this to be so and their faith has been strengthened that much more; the Lord will also return your sense of comfort to you. Thus you may strengthen your heart with God's promise: Though He tarry, wait for Him; because He will surely come, He will not tarry (Habakkuk 2:3).

Guidance in Desertion

It now remains to give some guidance to those who are experiencing desertion, as well as to those who are called to deal with such persons. A deserted person has to be on guard against certain things and has to practice certain things. The person who is deserted must refrain himself from:

(1) Disqualifying his preceding state; that is, his conduct Godward, and God's work in him. In so doing he would declare the work of the Holy Spirit to be a lie, which is a dreadful sin. He is not capable of judging this now as well as when he had spiritual enjoyment and light. If he cannot presently ascertain this, he must ultimately let matters be and say, "I presently cannot judge about this." In his present condition he cannot conclude that all that has transpired in the past was not right. True children of God do indeed experience desertion, as has been shown above.

(2) Being insensitive toward and hardening himself against the Lord; that is, as if he did not wish to take this chastisement to heart -- adjusting himself to the fact that if God is not comforting him, he can do without this comfort. This would greatly displease the Lord. "Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; Thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction:

they have made their faces harder than a rock" (Jeremiah 5:3).

(3) Murmuring and being fretful. "If any man draw back, My soul shall have no pleasure in him" (Hebrews 10:38); "My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of His correction" (Proverbs 3:11). When you are thus, the Lord will not be moved to help you, and the cross will be doubly heavy for you.

(4) Despair and despondency, thinking: "The Lord has made me the object of His wrath; it is done with me, and my hope has vanished." This in turn begets fretful, inappropriate, and evil thoughts. Do not say, "My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord" (Lamentations 3:18). Be on guard for the inner turmoil of Job. "My soul chooseth strangling, and death rather than my life. I loathe it" (Job 7:15-16). Rather, follow his example when he said, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him" (Job 13:15). Quiet patience is pleasing to God.

(5) Neglecting the means: the reading of God's Word, singing, the hearing of God's Word, and prayer. This would be identical to a person being faint for hunger not wanting to eat due to being faint.

(6) Seeking any other comfort outside of God, entertaining yourself by eating, drinking, recreation, entertaining company, etc., and thus seeking rest in that -- even though bodily refreshment can at times be a means to the enlivening of the spirit. Furthermore, be on guard against yielding to other sentiments and errors which cause one to proceed no further than judgmental knowledge, while fully neglecting a tender walk with God, and thus avoiding all spiritual struggle. The deserted person must also practice certain things. I shall not prescribe many means here, for they are as difficult to perform as the matter itself. Consider only the following:

First, strive very much for quiet and patient subjection to the Lord's dealings. To be humble, to mourn as a dove which has lost its partner, and to chatter as a swallow, coming before the Lord in such a frame while longing for Him, is the appropriate disposition in these trials, and it is a fit disposition for the Lord to work in you. "He sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him. He putteth his mouth in the dust; if so be there may be hope" (Lamentations 3:28-29).

Secondly, if we become aware that the Lord has withdrawn Himself due to a specific sin -- some of which we have identified earlier -- then it is of critical importance that we wholeheartedly repent from that sin, deeply humble ourselves, abhor ourselves, confess it with sorrow, justify God for withdrawing Himself because of that sin, and be resolved to refrain from such sin in the future. We must then look unto the blood of Jesus in order to obtain reconciliation thereby, and pray for forgiveness. For how can the chastisement be removed as long as we do not humble ourselves over the causes and turn from them? When David was heavily oppressed so that the hand of the Lord was upon him day and night, and his moisture was changed into the drought of summer, he said, "I acknowledged my sin unto Thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin" (Psalms 32:5).

Thirdly, continue to practice your devotions habitually as you did in former days. Do not neglect this and do it to the best of your ability. Read the Word, even if you neither have the least desire to do so, nor are moved in the least by it. Bend your knees as you are accustomed to do, and pray as best as you know how -- even if you were to read a psalm prayerfully. If your soul is overwhelmed, do not walk away from this; and if inner strife intensifies, then endure it (as you would sit out a hailstorm). If you say, "This is but mechanical activity which cannot be pleasing to the Lord," then I reply, "Go on in performing your task mechanically." The Lord knows your motivating principle to be spiritual. He knows that you are neither satisfied with but a mechanical performance, nor a serving of Him as such, but that you are using it as the ordained means to receive help. Continue in your temporal calling and do not resign from it. Maintain fellowship with the godly, and exhort others as you have done aforesaid. If you thus perform this duty, then it will be a means to you for not becoming estranged any further -- yes, you will gradually be corrected by it.

Fourthly, become accustomed to living by faith. I am not speaking here of the exercise of faith in which there is utmost clarity, but of that faith by which we cleave to the Lord. Perhaps you cannot assure yourself that you are in the state of grace, but you nevertheless believe that the Lord Jesus offers Himself to a lost sinner, and that therefore whosoever will, may and must receive Him. Rely upon this expectantly, in a waiting frame, exercising faith, and surrendering yourself -- even though you may neither find light nor comfort. Do not say, "It is too late, and for me there is no hope." Rather, reply by saying, "It is a lie; I am yet alive, I still have the Word of God, and I am indeed willing if I could but find Him." Do not yield to unbelieving thoughts, but rely upon the Word of God and you will at last experience that the Lord will again visit you in this way.

Those who must deal with those who are in a state of desertion, must pay attention as to how they deal with them, for the Lord will take note of this. He loves His children who are in a state of desertion, and if anyone adds grief to their grief, and if anyone deserts them as well, it will displease Him. Therefore, first of all refrain from:

(1) Judging them as if they were greater sinners than others, or as if they were living in an abominable sin -- be it that you either condemn them in your heart, with your countenance and conduct, or in word. This was the sin of the friends of Job, who were rebuked by the Lord concerning this.

(2) Ridiculing and mocking with them as if they were going insane and were giving in to illusions and melancholy. This would greatly arouse God's wrath against you.

(3) Giving them evil advice, suggesting that they depart from the way of tender godliness, saying, "That is what you get if you wish to be such a wise person, be so considerate, and stand above others. Come, live as others do; give yourself some diversion, and entertain yourself together with us. Live as other people and all these illusions will disappear." Worldly people will thus deal with them. God observes this, however, and it displeases Him; they will receive their judgment upon this.

(4) Being without hope as far as their restoration is concerned, saying, "It is useless; there is no sense in trying. Whatever one does for them is all fruitless." There is indeed hope for their restoration, but the power to restore such is neither to be found in you nor in your words. Instead, the Lord uses others to restore such by means of their dealings with them.

Secondly,

(1) Join yourself to them instead, even if it were but to show your love by your presence, thereby encouraging such deserted souls.

(2) Let your sentiment concerning their sorrowful condition be tempered and let your conduct be consistent with this. On the one hand you must not be insensitive, and on the other hand, be not fainthearted, lest such a deserted soul be grieved or become even more fainthearted.

(3) Show your compassion as well as your inclination to help them bear this.

(4) Use your ability -- as little as it may be -- to comfort and encourage them.

(5) Pray for such souls, and occasionally pray with them -- as capable or incapable as you may be -- and do so daily in your closet. This will be pleasing to the Lord. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble" (Psalms 41:1).

097. Chapter 92: Concerning the Temptation Toward Atheism, or the Denial of God's Existence

----- CHAPTER NINETY-TWO ----- Concerning the Temptation Toward Atheism, or the Denial of God's Existence The just shall live by faith. Faith is that which renders spiritual life active. It is the most beneficial for a godly person. Unbelief, however, causes him most harm. Unbelief causes the internal corruptions of the heart to manifest themselves, gives the world a great advantage over him, makes him vulnerable for the attacks of the devil, hinders him in approaching unto God in prayer, robs him of all peace and inner rest, prevents all sanctification, is displeasing to God, and restrains the Lord from working within him. In one word, unbelief is the cancer of the soul and is a most wretched disposition. Since believers are at times in this condition, we shall therefore consider this disease in its harmful nature, so that everyone may be on guard against it and no one may yield to it. Furthermore, we shall endeavor to restore those who have become subject to this condition. We shall neither speak of the unbelief of the unconverted, nor of saving faith, nor of the feebleness and weakness always inherent in the faith of even the very best, nor of the short relapses during a given exercise of faith. Rather, we shall speak of the overwhelming and prevailing power of historical unbelief which causes spiritual life to decay and brings it, so to speak, to the brink of death. The focus of this unbelief is either God, the Word of God, the spiritual state of the believer, the promises, or God's dealings with the believer. The Temptation Toward Atheism Is Common The temptation toward atheism is a more common tribulation for believers than one may think -- especially for those who have a keen intellect. For many this is a concealed matter, so that they do not clearly perceive it to be the case. Nevertheless, it is the cause of not gleaning much comfort and peace from faith. Others do indeed perceive it, but conceal it, being of the opinion that no one else is acquainted with such an abomination, and that everyone would despise them for such evil thoughts. Sometimes there are the sudden interjections: "Is there indeed a God? Is there indeed a heaven or a hell? Is my soul indeed immortal? Is all this nothing more than an illusion and imagination?" Some immediately reject such interjections, without them causing much harm. Others begin to reflect upon them, whereby this bent toward atheism increases, shoots forth deeper roots, becomes a torment, and becomes detrimental to religious exercise. Others are more oppressed by this and it becomes a prevailing disposition. False arguments against the existence of God present themselves; one cannot conclude that God exists; prayer either begins to wane or lose its potency. Such thoughts immediately become an obstacle and the faith residing in the heart cannot be exercised, nor is there any benefit derived from the hearing or reading of the Word. This is followed by great anxiety of heart, grievous sorrow, fear, and trembling. This can be caused by the residual love of God in the heart which cannot tolerate this; or at other times it can be in response to the evil and abominableness of this sin or due to the prospect of eternal damnation. Such a person will wrestle against this, but will not be able to overcome it; it has the upper hand. Indeed, the soul of some becomes so worn out and despondent in this battle, that it appears that they no longer resist such thoughts. Previously there was still a desire to believe and some resistance; however, such a person has now succumbed, and his spiritual life is, so to speak, listless. This is not because he delights in this condition, but rather due to having become despondent and powerless. This can occasionally last for a long time -- yes, even for successive years. At times there can be periods of intermission, however. The soul may then occasionally receive some strength to turn those thoughts away, prevail in prayer, and receive some sweet comforts. It thus appears as if she has overcome. Such intermissions especially occur when we are engaged in instructing, exhorting, and comforting others. Yet, this temptation has not passed, and such a person can readily succumb to it again. Sometimes such a person may gradually make some progress, but he will as yet be so weak that he does not dare to believe that such is the case. A sudden impulse and a falling into sin can cause the temptation to regain strength. The Various Causes for this Wretched Condition There are various causes for this wretched condition.

(1) Sometimes it pleases the Lord to try a person for a season by hiding Himself and leaving him over to himself.

(2) Sometimes it is the consequence of an infrequent reading of God's Word.

(3) Sometimes it is caused by a neglect of our scheduled devotions, a hasty observance of them, and a failure to acquaint ourselves with God.

(4) Sometimes it is caused by a yielding to sin -- be it in our daily walk, or when we sin expressly against our conscience, and thus done more boldly.

(5) Sometimes it is caused by our prayers not being answered. We may either be subject to a cross of exceptional magnitude, or we may have a very strong desire for a given matter. We may pray earnestly and in a persevering manner, take hold of the promises, and yet not obtain the matter. This will engender despondency or a secret fretfulness. This can then be accompanied by the following thoughts: "If there were a God, He would help me. I can see that it makes no difference whether I pray or not."

(6) Sometimes it can be caused by yielding to an intellectual desire to penetrate too deeply into the matter of God's essence, His timeless eternity, His dimensionless infinity, as well as other of His perfections. Our intellect is too puny and the infinite God too exalted. If we occupy ourselves with reflecting upon God beyond what is permissible, we shall be as those who directly look into the sun and thereby immediately become blinded, so that they are unable to see what they were previously able to see with clarity. If, however, we insist on comprehending the "how" of God's existence with our puny intellect -- that is, His eternity, omnipotence, infinity, etc. -- and we cannot do this (not being able to do this), this will beget bewilderment and doubt as to whether God does indeed exist and truly has such a nature. This then affords our heart the opportunity to proceed further and further in nurturing atheistic thoughts.

(7) Sometimes this can be caused by an excessive desire for extraordinary revelations of God and a more feeling impression of His perfections, desiring this not only for our spiritual delight, but also being secretly desirous to know with more certainty that He is. We are then not satisfied with the common way in which the Lord leads His children.

(8) Sometimes the devil instigates this by way of sudden interjections, subtle delusions, or external circumstances. He may also do so by way of secret whisperings, when he asks: "Is it really true; should such and such be the case?" Unbelief which is nestled in the heart will then take hold and such a person will begin to reflect upon these thoughts.

(9) Sometimes we can come into such a condition by reading atheistic books, hearing atheistic lectures or argumentation, listening to the complaints of those who are in such a state, or by carelessly giving expression to our inner thoughts.

Exhortations and Helpful Counsel Not only is such a condition grievous indeed, but it is also injurious to spiritual life. Everyone must therefore be very much on guard against such situations and resist such thoughts immediately upon their arising. Here fleeing is the best way toward victory. If one reflects upon such thoughts, wishing to rebut them with reason and to respond to the counterarguments which present themselves, one will easily be captured and conquered. Therefore, resist everything, no matter how attractive and powerful the thought may be which is being interjected. And if you are already in such a condition, do your utmost to be delivered from it and attentively reflect upon the following matters.

First, in all men -- even in the most ignorant heathen -- there is an acknowledgement of Deity. Are you wiser than the entire world? Confirm this truth therefore in your own mind, even if it is all dark within and you have no strength.

Secondly, most of the godly encounter this strife, especially those who are naturally endowed with a keen intellect. Should it therefore be a surprise to you that this also befalls you? Therefore, do not lose courage, for the Lord has delivered all others from this strife, and subsequently has caused them to increase in spiritual strength. The Lord will also deliver you, and you will become stronger as well.

Thirdly, consider who they are whose desire it is that there be no God and who labor to deny His existence. This is the practice of ungodly men, who do so in order that they might practice their ungodliness all the more confidently. However, you do not wish to be associated with such; you despise them. Thus, you manifest very clearly that you believe that there is a God, for if you did not believe that, you would not be disturbed upon hearing that they deny God and speak evil of Him. You would then be pleased with them, they being of one sentiment with you.

Fourthly, consider your own heart for a moment. Is not your heart troubled when you are thus tried and when such unbelieving thoughts arise in you? Is it not your wholehearted desire to be delivered from this and to serve God in faith? This clearly proves that you believe that God exists, for otherwise you would be satisfied, and you would deem yourself happy to have been delivered from such prejudices.

Fifthly, can it be harmful to confirm that God exists? You know that the denial of God's existence can be detrimental and that a man can perish in consequence thereof. You know that believing this cannot harm you, but would engender and stimulate peace within, thus enabling you to serve the Lord in the beauty of holiness.

(1) Therefore, by renewal engage yourself in the task of seeking after and serving God. Presuppose the existence of God -- even if you are not fully convinced within -- and say, "I shall blindly make the Word of God my foundation for doing so, obligate myself to believe all that this Word says, and do what this Word prescribes."

(2) You are thus to start from the beginning. Neither reach out for lofty matters, nor exert your intellect and mental faculties; rather, stay with the Word. Read it, and in reliance upon that Word, flee to the Lord Jesus as Surety and receive Him. Do not strain yourself to get a view of Him, however, for that would be counterproductive. Rather, do so humbly and, so to speak, with closed eyes. Rely upon Him because the Word enjoins you to do so, promising that those who put their trust in Him will not be ashamed. Likewise humbly pray and hear the Word, refrain from that which is forbidden, and perform that which is commanded. I assure you that if you thus begin to engage yourself, the Lord will gradually restore you -- even though unbelieving thoughts may initially assault you vehemently, and even though you may for some time engage yourself without finding delight and sweetness in doing so.

(3) Keep your condition concealed from others, be it that they are unconverted, beginners in grace, or weak Christians -- and especially from those of whom you notice that they are also under assault. Rather than being of mutual help to each other, you would cast each other down. Instead, go to an experienced minister or another godly person who is strong in faith and reveal your condition to him. Do not contradict him, however, but listen attentively to what he has to say to you and consider quietly whether it pleases the Lord to apply these words to your heart. If not, then upon your return, use the means by renewal which the Lord has instituted in His Word, doing so quietly and without much ado. Neither by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord you will be restored.

098. Chapter 93: Concerning the Temptation Whether God's Word is True

----- CHAPTER NINETY-THREE ----- Concerning the Temptation Whether God's Word is True Man's Various Opinions of the Holy Scriptures A small ship will sail safely over reefs upon which a large ship will crash. Such is also true for people as far as giving credence to the Word of God. Some do not look beyond the surface of the Word of God, nor do they seriously reflect upon the fact whether it is God's Word. They hear and read it as something that is beneficial in nature -- and beyond that they do not know what to say about it. Such is generally true for natural men who concern themselves but little with God and religion. Others receive it as being of divine origin, doing so simply because the church and everyone else declares it to be so. They neither desire nor are able to contradict it. Such generally do not derive any benefit from the Word and leave it be for what it is.

There are people -- wretches I ought to call them -- who succumb to the doubt of Descartes and fall into his whirlpool. They are of a quick understanding in their own eyes and insist on seeing, touching, and experiencing things. Wherever some knowledge is to be acquired, they are there. They put their reason upon the judgment seat and summon the Bible before them for the purpose of cross-examination, thus demanding at the same time that God give them an explanation of what He has said. Such are punished for their blatant boldness by being given over to a strong delusion -- and frequently to eternal damnation.

Some are secretly wrought upon by the Holy Ghost (unbeknown to themselves) to believe the truth of the gospel in general and that the Scripture is of divine origin. The Word is effective upon their heart for comfort and godliness and they do not seek to know whether they are assured of its divine origin. God spares their little strength and does not subject them to these temptations. I counsel them that they proceed in their simplicity and submit to the leading of the Holy Spirit. They will thus enter heaven while others are battling each other.

Many of the Godly are Subject to This Temptation

Many of the godly, however, contrary to their wishes, become subject to doubts as to whether the Bible is the Word of God. Frequently the devil is the instigator, perhaps by way of sudden interjection: "Is this really true?" Or he may conceal himself in a subtle manner and craftily create the opportunity to arouse such thoughts, bringing forth counterfeit arguments and stirring a person up to respond to these. Thus, the safest course is to despise such suggestions and flee from them. However, such doubts also proceed from our own unbelieving heart. Sometimes one may quickly set such suggestions aside without giving heed to them; and thus they do no harm. Sometimes such suggestions have more effect, however, and we begin to entertain doubtful arguments (which I do not wish to mention here lest they gain a foothold) as they present themselves, and we reflect upon them. If this causes us to be in a dilemma and stimulates us to respond to it, we have become captives. This begets all manner of undesirable frames such as darkness of understanding, unbelief, listlessness, restlessness, fear, and impotence. Such persons will then neither be able nor have the vigor to come to Jesus to view and receive Him as Surety. They will not be able to go to God through Him in order to be justified and they will not be able to derive comfort from any promise in the Word. The Word then neither functions as a hammer, fire, sword, or balm; nor does it nourish them. Such are kept from praying; and if they pray, it is spiritless, and the exercise of faith is nearly absent in it. All religious exercises are impeded, and they would pursue an independent religion of a natural sort, if both the spiritual light and the life yet residing in the soul did not prevent this. Since, however, this spiritual life and light cannot gain the upper hand over inherent unbelief (it being strengthened by natural reason), the soul will thus be grievously tossed back and forth. There can be neither rest nor peace in the soul, but only unsettledness and sorrow. This is not only the result of being unable to believe, pray, or engage themselves, but also because of an inability to ascertain Christ to be Surety and the complete way of salvation (for this is the necessary consequence of doubting divine truths). They are then also tempted to reject Him as such. Their conscience will rebuke them for this as being a dreadful and abominable sin, and it will cause them to be fearful of being damned. This condition will thus inflict considerable harm upon the soul.

How such would rejoice if they could be conclusively and powerfully convinced that the Bible is God's voice, His declaration, and His Word! Since, however, this cannot be ascertained by either external senses or reason, but must be determined by faith alone, this must be the work of the Spirit of faith: "It is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth" (1 John 5:6). The Spirit reveals to the conscience of believers that the Word of God has been inspired by the Spirit of God and is the infallible truth. Nevertheless, as faith in Christ is wrought by means of the Word, God likewise also uses means to convince of the truth of the Word itself. They are but means, however, and they cannot be efficacious unless the Spirit works by those means. May the Lord therefore work in the heart of such a faltering soul as I am engaged in seeking to convince and strengthen her. In the meantime, may such a person refrain from opposing us in this. Let him rather be silent and submissively allow himself to be instructed that the Bible is God's Word.

Why the Scriptures are the Inspired Word of God

Anyone who is in his right mind and knows himself to be a human being will believe in things which are beyond that which he sees with his eyes and hears with his ears. We do this daily and without misgivings when someone informs us about something. It has been drilled into our minds, and will not be erased until we die, that the Duke of Alva caused thousands of people in the Netherlands to be murdered, decapitated, hanged, and burned for the sake of religion. Furthermore, no one doubts that Rome already existed two or three thousand years prior to this date, formerly was the residence of the emperor, and presently is the seat of the pope (even though one may not have seen it). It is also an unquestionable fact that Jerusalem has been a great city and that a prominent temple has been there -- a temple first built by Solomon, and rebuilt by Zerubbabel after its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar. You believe that the Jewish nation resided in Canaan and that their religious practice consisted of the performance of all the ceremonies which are recorded in the Bible. You furthermore believe that this nation descended from Jacob, Isaac, and Abraham; Abraham in turn descended from Noah (in whose time the flood came upon the entire earth), descending via a series of ancestors. He, via a series of ancestors, descended from Adam -- the first man whom God created, from the dust of the earth. You believe that Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt, and by way of the desert, led them to Canaan, and that this Moses wrote the first five books of the Bible. You furthermore believe the other books were written by other men, and that the Jewish nation, for nearly two thousand years, accepted all the books of the Old Testament as divine and as the only rule for their faith and doctrine. It is known to nearly all -- Jews, Christians, and Muslims unquestionably affirm this to be so -- that the Lord Jesus was born in Bethlehem 1882 years ago [Note: Considering that this work was published in AD 1700, this figure is obviously incorrect.] , was a Prophet mighty in words and deeds, was crucified on the Passover outside Jerusalem, and that the sun was darkened on that given afternoon. These matters are so well-known to everyone, that a person would first have to dehumanize himself and doubt whether he himself truly exists, whether places and people do exist outside of the reach of his vision, and whether any word is true that has ever been written by a man, before he could doubt the things just mentioned. That which troubles you, however, goes beyond all this; it relates to the way of reconciliation and salvation through Christ. In order that you may be delivered from this, stir up your heart to exercise faith as in the truths mentioned, and it will be subservient to prepare your heart to be instructed by the following argument.

Secondly, come a step closer and cast your eyes upon those Scriptures which we know to have been written two to three thousand years ago. Observe the prophecies found therein and compare them with their fulfillment; observe how evident it is that they are of divine origin. Consider these few but well-known prophecies as an example.

It was promised and foretold to Abraham that his seed would wondrously multiply, possess Canaan as their inheritance, and enter into it four hundred years later. Did it not thus come to pass? It was prophesied to the Jews many years in advance that they would be expelled from Canaan and be led away to Babylon; that subsequent to this they would be restored to their country by a king named Cyrus; and that the temple, which would be destroyed to the ground, would be rebuilt by them. And thus it came to pass. It was prophesied that after this restoration, Jerusalem and the temple would be destroyed and that the entire Jewish nation would be dispersed among all the nations, living without sacrifice, without king, free from idolatry, and in contempt. Is this not true at the present time? It was prophesied nearly two thousand years in advance by Moses, and later by other prophets, that there would be a Messiah, that is, Christ, who would be Prophet, Priest, and King. It was prophesied that He would be the seed -- not of a man -- but of a woman, would be born from a virgin, from the seed of Abraham, Judah, and David, in Bethlehem, and this would occur 490 years after the restoration from Babylon.

Furthermore, it was prophesied that He would be poor and despised, bear the sins of the children of God, be rejected of the chief priests, be delivered to the Gentiles, be scourged and crucified, have the lot cast for His clothes, arise from the dead, ascend into heaven, and that the Gentiles upon the entire face of the earth would believe in Him. Were not all these things prophesied in the Holy Scriptures many hundreds of years in advance? Have not they all been literally fulfilled in the Lord Jesus Christ? Has not all this been clearly recorded by the apostles and evangelists, -- mentioning times, places, and persons involved -- doing so at a time when friends and enemies were as yet living who had witnessed this with their own eyes? Must not even the Jews themselves acknowledge this today? Do not even pagan writings bear witness to this? Does not all of Christianity believe this? Add to this all the typological persons, objects, and services within and external to the temple, and observe how precisely they all match the anti-type, the Lord Jesus; and how that He having come, all these have been nullified. When we consider all these things comprehensively, we must force our eyes shut in order not to see the divinity of the Scriptures.

Thirdly, attentively consider the contents of the Scriptures and compare them for a moment with all human writings. How obscure, crude, mundane, vain, and foolish they are! Is there any divine light which shines forth from them? Whatever is to be found in writings concerning God and religion has been derived from this Book. Whatever has not been derived from it is infantile and ludicrous. However, divine luster emanates from the Scriptures. How gloriously they speak of God and the immortality of the soul; of man's corruption, perversion, and impotence; and of the soul's communion with God, eternal glory, the righteousness of God, and condemnation! Consider the spiritual manner in which spiritual matters are presented -- how obscure and hidden they are for man, and would have continued to remain hidden if they had not been revealed in the Holy Scriptures. Furthermore, these truths, having thus been revealed, cannot be understood in a spiritual sense except the person himself be spiritual. Consider how they are all subservient to draw man away from all that is earthly and transitory and to direct him to God in order to serve and glorify Him in pure holiness, peace, and joy. What human being could fabricate such spiritual matters and present them in such a spiritual fashion? All this should convince a person that the Holy Scriptures are truly and solely of divine origin.

Fourthly, proceed by considering what effects these truths have upon the heart of man. When the apostles turned to the Gentiles, they began nothing less than a war with mankind, doing so without sword and weaponry. What other outcome could be expected but that they would be treated by everyone as fools -- yes, would be killed at the very outset? Wherever they came they found uncivilized people who had no knowledge of God, and who as roaring lions would sooner have torn them to pieces than that they would have listened to them. But behold! What irresistible power the gospel had upon their hearts! From wolves, lions, and bears they became lambs. These truths took hold of men by the thousands and led them to manifest the patience of Christ. They began to love Him, trusted in Him, surrendered body and life willingly to Him, and shunned neither fire nor sword. Instead, they persevered in professing divine truths, and thus Asia, Africa, and Europe were filled with the gospel. The more the truth was persecuted, the more it proliferated to the amazement and vexation of the persecutors. And, when the Antichrist solicited the help of all kings and powers in order to extinguish the burgeoning light of the reformation, neither their fire, sword, gallows, nor instruments of torture could avail anything -- except to torment them with vexation. For the blood of the martyrs was the seed of the church and brought forth fruit a hundredfold -- to the regret of the ungodly and to the joy of the godly. Who does not perceive in all this the divinity of the gospel?

Fifthly, consider furthermore the efficacy which the gospel has upon your heart and the heart of others. This is most wondrous in its nature. Not only are they changed in their initial conversion as if a dead person became alive, but their souls are subsequently filled with wondrous light, love, sweetness, joy, peace, and liberty, so that they can do without everything, consider all but as dung, and are able to endure all things. How joyously the martyrs went to the fire and the gallows! How they sang in the midst of the flames! What bliss they considered it to be able to die a cruel death for the name Jesus! Consider the innumerable multitude of believers of all times and places. They all have the same foundational confession, the same Spirit, and the same life. If one by chance happens to meet someone and hears him speak the language of Canaan, then their hearts will immediately be united in love -- more than brothers. Consider also that whatever is expressed to be the truth in the Word of God is also in truth in your heart.

One can perceive and sense that it is one and the same Spirit which speaks in both. You have frequently been amazed that you discovered the same spiritual frames in the Scriptures which you had previously already discovered in your heart without knowing that they had already been recorded in the Scriptures. You then remarked, "This is also recorded in the Word of God!" When you take note of all this, how can you but be convinced and exclaim, "Thy Word is the truth! Those interjections and suggestions which torment me are without foundation."

Encouragement for Believers

Perhaps you will say: "Upon all these things I must be silent; I cannot prove the opposite to be true, and that which has been said already stimulates me considerably to believe. In the meantime, however, I remain restless due to unbelief asserting itself. I do indeed wish to believe, but I cannot. Oh, what counsel can you give me? How shall I ever come to the point of having a strong and vigorous faith without doubts?" It should be known, however, that:

(1) God leads most of His children by way of this temptation -- especially those who have a keen intellect -- in order to exercise and strengthen their faith, which subsequently is indeed the case.

(2) God thereby acquaints His own with their unbelieving heart and their impotence to believe, so that on the one hand they may be humbled, and on the other hand power and sovereign grace may be exalted when He grants faith. And thus the lesson derived from this cross is more beneficial to them than comfort and rest.

(3) All believers have always made the Word the foundation of their light, comfort, and walk and have thereby overcome under all circumstances and endured all things. Are you now wiser than all of them? Do you wish to join yourself to the ungodly and mockers, even though you will rarely find one who dares to touch the Scriptures?

(4) You must make a choice between making reason or faith the foundation for your walk, rest, and comfort. If you choose reason, you will be setting the Bible aside. If it is faith, you must set reason aside in order to establish the truth of the Word of God, for faith rests only upon the words of someone else. Reason is but a means.

Evasive Argument: I am oppressed; I cannot believe. Answer: Since rejection of the Bible can be harmful to you, and the confirmation of the Bible as being the Word of God cannot harm you, it is therefore indeed the safest course to trust in the Word of God. You have no desire to live an ungodly life, and you would instead choose a virtuous life. However, all that reason can teach you, you can also learn from the Word of God -- yes, even more; that is, in a more heavenly and spiritual manner. And if you are tossed about concerning the veracity of other religions, then the same argument holds true: Whatever virtues you could learn from those religions, you can also learn from the Reformed faith in a much more heavenly and spiritual manner.

Therefore, take hold of yourself and say: "I shall thus conclude the Bible to be the infallible Word of God. I thus accept it as the foundation of my faith and life. I shall strictly observe it, continually read it, and familiarize myself with it. I shall capture all thoughts which arise against it and reject them. I read in this Word that man is lost in himself and cannot save himself; that Jesus Christ is the Surety who, by His suffering and death, reconciles the sinner who receives Him, with God; and that the believer must love, serve, and fear God, and walk according to His will and precepts. This I confirm to be so and shall submit myself to. I shall prayerfully and in all simplicity wait until the Lord will further illuminate and comfort me, even though I am as yet not convinced of the divinity of His Word.” In this way the Lord has restored many, and He will also restore you. The Spirit will then bear witness to you that He is the Spirit of truth.

099. Chapter 94: Unbelief Concerning One's Spiritual State

----- CHAPTER NINETY-FOUR----- Unbelief Concerning One's Spiritual State

It is not difficult to convince a truly gracious person that he is displeased with his sinful heart, thoughts and deeds; that he grieves in his heart about this; that he longs for God, for reconciliation with Him, to be at peace with Him, and to walk before His countenance in humility and godly fear; that he knows Jesus as Surety and Savior, desires Him, makes Him his choice, turns to Him, receives Him, surrenders to Him, and through Him goes to God in order thus to become a partaker of the benefits of the covenant of grace. A gracious person cannot deny that he finds within his heart an aversion for sin, sin being contrary to the will of God; that he has an inward desire to live holily before the Lord in a manner pleasing to Him; that this is time and again his goal, intent, and objective; and that he has occasionally enjoyed a sweetness and resting in God. Yes, an explicit presentation of these matters will function as a clear mirror in which he can perceive that these matters are to be found in him.

However, to convince and assure the truly gracious in this way that they are in the state of grace, and to cause them to rejoice in this, cannot be accomplished easily, for the special operation of the Holy Spirit is a requisite for this. "Now we have received ... the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God" (1 Corinthians 2:12). The Spirit first bestows grace upon them; however, they then also need to have it shown to them that they have received this grace. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God" (Romans 8:16). There are many gracious souls who, with Samuel, do not know the voice of the Lord. Even if they are possessors of true grace, they nevertheless do not perceive it within themselves. If they may perceive something, they then find so many arguments to the contrary that they do not dare to come to the conclusion that they truly have grace.

Some are not very much troubled about this. This can either be due to ignorance, or because they are subject to a poor ministry and lack guidance. They therefore do not know that one can be assured of his spiritual state. They occupy themselves with prayer, longing for Jesus and refraining from sin, hoping that they may acquire salvation. Others are despondent and do not know how they may attain assurance; they travel upon their way, oppressed by the power of their corruption. Others are drowsy and lethargic, and are not very much concerned about their state. Again, others are very much concerned about their spiritual state and live in much fear and anxiety.

Regardless of how much or little one may be concerned about his spiritual state, to be without assurance concerning his state prevents him from rejoicing in God, manifesting gratitude, and glorifying God; and it impedes spiritual growth. We shall present the nature and causes of this spiritual disease and endeavor to facilitate its cure.

We wish to premise this by saying that we are not addressing unconverted people who either know that they are indeed without grace, do not think about this, or who very easily pacify themselves and continually assure themselves of their salvation. We also are not addressing those whose conscience is under conviction but who nevertheless live in sin and do not truly go to Christ. In the meantime, such get attention by their ability to complain, and by way of subtle devices, seek to arouse the pity of good ministers who do not have a great measure of the spirit of discernment. Such ministers, due to their tender disposition toward the weak, will greatly trouble themselves to answer their objections and show them that they do indeed have grace. Instead, it would be better if they would deal roughly with them, so that they might become spiritually healthy and repent. Or, if they have been exposed as complaining for the sake of complaining, such ought to return to the world where they belong, so that they would no longer hinder the godly and cause upright ministers additional grief as they preach to and edify others. Let them say whatever they wish when they insist that such a minister neither understands the life of the soul, nor is capable of dealing with souls. When such individuals are exposed, other weak persons will be less hindered in availing themselves of the guidance of such upright ministers. We are thus not addressing such individuals; instead we are addressing those who have grace and indeed desire to be helped. These are not all in identical circumstances; the one is troubled by this and the other by something else. We shall therefore present several cases and comment upon them.

The First Cause of Doubt: Doubt About One's Election The first cause of unbelief concerning one's spiritual state is a doubting of one's election. Faith is peculiar to the elect. It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy (Romans 9:16). There is a calling according to the purpose of God, and if I am then not elected, I also cannot be saved. Whatever motions of faith and repentance I may pretend to have are not right and it is thus a lost cause. The longer I think about election, the more I believe that I am not one of the elect, but a reprobate instead. I perceive this to be so in my heart, which declares most plainly to me that this is so whenever I desire to pray and flee to Jesus. This grieves me in both body and soul.

Answer: First, God rarely communicates with His dear children in an immediate sense, and would He then deem reprobates worthy of granting them such immediate revelations? Be assured that this is not God's voice, but rather your own foolish, unbelieving heart, the devil's devices being intermixed with this. You have not stood in the counsel of God and thus you ought to leave the secret things for the Lord. Be not so brazen as to pretend that you should know that which God has not revealed in His Word. Has God revealed to you the reprobation of someone else? Indeed not! What grounds do you then have to believe that God would reveal your reprobation to you? Therefore, do not live by illusions and your own ideas, but rather conduct yourself wisely.

Secondly, there have been many others who have been subject to the same temptation as you are, and have perhaps been mired in this more deeply than you. Their deliverance taught them that they truly were of the elect and that they had embraced lies by assuring themselves that they were reprobates. Thus they had only been a hindrance to themselves in the way of godliness.

Thirdly, we must not examine our faith, hope, and love in the light of election; rather we must ascend from them to election. You are thus conducting yourself in an entirely wrong and foolish manner. You would tell others not to conduct themselves in this manner, and thereby you can perceive your own foolishness in rejecting your election. God does not grant faith, repentance, life, and love to those whom He has not elected, but to the elect alone.

If the Lord has thus granted these matters to you in principle, you have reason thereby to make your election sure.

Fourthly, God has given us His infallible and sure Word, and we are to govern our faith and life accordingly. Focus upon that, and consider the exhortations, the offers of Christ, and the promises made to those who are pleased with Him; rely upon them. Are you not able to ascend to your election thereby? You will most certainly not discover your reprobation there -- yes, even if it were true that you were presently still unconverted. Even if you were the most abominable person alive, you may still not conclude that you are a reprobate and cannot be converted. Therefore, set these foolish and unfounded imaginations aside. Let them no longer trouble you and deal circumspectly according to the Word of God. The Second Cause of Doubt: Fear of Not Being Converted The second cause of doubt is that I fear that I am not converted, that thus the entire foundation of my religion is wanting, and therefore all that I perform from here on is not good. I doubt because:

(1) I do not know the time of my conversion.

(2) I did not consciously experience such an evident change from being blind to seeing, from death to life, and from being worldly-minded to being heavenly-minded.

(3) I have not been as sore broken upon viewing my sins, nor have I the sense of God's wrath and fear for damnation as I observe in Acts 2:1-47; Acts 16:1-40, and as I have heard recounted by various Christians.

(4) My beginning was prompted by self-love, and fear for damnation motivated me to seek. I was neither motivated by a love for God's honor, a love for Christ, nor the desirability of holiness and salvation. Therefore I am of the opinion that the entire foundation of my religion is wanting, that all that I have and do is only superficial in nature, and that it does not proceed from a heart which is converted and spiritually alive.

Answer: First, consider whether you wholeheartedly seek God through Jesus Christ unto justification and sanctification, and for peace, joy, and felicity. The issue here is not whether you know when and how it began. You may not deduce by way of your conversion whether your current religious activity is of the right sort or not. On the contrary, we deduce our conversion by our current religious activity.

Secondly, few know the time of their conversion. Some were already regenerated prior to that moment which they considered to be the moment of their initial conversion. In others their initial religious exercises were but preparatory exercises, and they were not converted until long after that.

Thirdly, conversion rarely occurs in such a clear manner. Rather, it transpires as gradually as the rising of the sun, so that we are able to perceive only at some later date that we have changed. Yes, some are converted in their childhood so that they cannot recall having been in an unconverted state. Their progression is not a qualitative change, but rather a progression in spiritual light and life. They who have been converted in their adult years, after having lived an ungodly life, are better able to observe an evident difference when comparing the period prior to being under conviction and the period following their conviction.

Fourthly, it is not necessary that conversion be preceded by being greatly troubled, and by fear and trembling. Some are quietly changed by the knowledge of the truth, and without much strife and comfort. Others, due to the preciousness of the gospel, are changed in a joyful manner as Zacchaeus was. Others experience this in a way of falling and rising again, and we may therefore not conclude from one type of conversion that another conversion is not right.

Fifthly, even if you were motivated by self-love, you may from this not doubt your conversion. In this respect, self-love is a virtue and is the initial motivation of many -- if not all -- converted persons. The same argument applies if terror persuaded you. It is immaterial whether Naaman's leprosy, the blindness of Bartimaeus, the curiosity of Zacchaeus, or the fear of the jailer have been the initial motives whereby you have been led to Christ. Therefore, do not occupy yourself with such thoughts. If you perceive true grace, acknowledge it and let your heart be encouraged thereby. The Third Cause of Doubt: Being Able to Believe Without Strife and Effort The third cause of doubt is the following: I am able to believe as frequently as I desire, doing so without strife and without effort. I hold before me the offer of grace along with the promises. I acquiesce in them and very readily surrender myself to the Lord Jesus. However, there is but little warmth and strength in it. I do not have a sensible sorrow for my sins, nor do I have a lively desire for peace, joy, holiness, and other benefits of the covenant. Instead, I am satisfied with the act of acquiescence itself. All this functions as weakly as a lame hand which we must place somewhere in order to grab something. The fingers are indeed in motion to take hold of something, but there is no strength to pull it to myself. On the one hand I am not troubled, and on the other hand I derive neither comfort nor joy from this feeble act of receiving. Sometimes it is an impossible task for me to believe. I can neither find Jesus nor receive Him by faith. I must be imagining things; I am but beating in the air and am not able to have a transaction with Jesus Himself. At critical moments, such as when I am in danger of death or am encountering another grievous trial, my faith succumbs and I experience great fear and anxiety. I do indeed cry out in prayer, but there is neither trust nor peace in doing so. I cannot come to Jesus; I cannot receive Him by faith; I cannot rely upon Him; and I cannot put my entire trust in Him. Sometimes it would be easier for me to keep the law perfectly than to believe in Christ. When reflecting upon how faith functions, I believe my faith to be but imaginary and the exercise of my intellect.

Answer: All this is evidence that you truly believe, and thus it ought not to deject you; rather, it should lift you up, for there is

(1) light, as well as a knowledge of misery, the spiritual benefits of the covenant of grace, and of the necessity of Jesus as Surety.

(2) true displeasure about being in a sinful state outside of Christ. There is delight in and a desire for reconciliation with God and all that flows out of it: peace, joy, and godliness.

(3) a true fleeing to Jesus, an acquiescing in His invitation and offer, and a surrendering to Him to be led unto salvation in a way pleasing to Him.

(4) a consciousness of the weakness of faith and a concern as to whether you truly believe -- all this being intermixed with a desire for a faith that is true, upright, and vigorous.

(5) a separation from the world, a taking pains not to sin, and an endeavoring to be aligned with Christ, His cause, and His people. Is not all this true for you? If you can say, in the presence of the Lord "Such is truly the case, but the difficulties mentioned make me think that all these matters within me cannot be the manifestation of true faith," then know that faith and its manifestation are two distinct matters. Faith can truly be present in someone -- and indeed, faith is present where these activities of faith manifest themselves. Nevertheless, it can be that the desired results are absent at a given time and under given circumstances. The enlightened will represents the true state of the heart, even though the affections and passions are more inactive and do not stir in a sensible manner. Even though the stirrings of our emotions make us more conscious of our desires -- and thus render more comfort to beginners and little ones in grace -- the activity of the enlightened will is generally of a purer nature. Therefore, be not despondent if your emotions do not stir themselves as passionately -- as long as you are conscious of the extrinsic activities of the enlightened will. That it is rather easy for you to acquiesce in the offer of grace and to surrender yourself to Jesus, and that you are able to do it as frequently as you desire, is a manifestation of your gracious disposition. The veracity of this is confirmed by the fact that this transpires as a conscious exercise of the will, and that it is accompanied by some inner stirring to live pleasing unto the Lord in Christ. The fact that it is done in weakness, and is without efficacy to yield comfort and joy, is frequently due to a lack of zeal; for this you are to be reprimanded. Furthermore, it is a proof that in your daily walk you are not that intent upon having intimate fellowship with God. If you are worthy of rebuke in this, it is therefore not an evidence that you do not believe in truth. Be comforted by the one fact and be stirred up by the other.

What you designate as a faltering of your faith when in danger of death and other extraordinary circumstances is not the succumbing of your faith. Rather, the fruits of faith are being hindered from manifesting themselves, such as tranquility, peace, and the assurance of attaining the desired outcome. The fact that faith is active even then is evidenced by your looking unto Jesus, surrendering to Him, and crying out for grace and help through Jesus. However, the fear of death or another extraordinary mishap prevents you from giving heed to the promises. Furthermore, unbelief also manifests itself and will let its power be felt as well. This will cause you to be full of fear and anxiety concerning either the outcome of the matter, or the salvation of your soul. The fact that believing (which at times was such an easy task for you) is sometimes so difficult and impossible is because of a difference as to what you have in view. When believing is an easy work, you will be without strife and your focus will be on the extrinsic acts of faith; or else you do not have intimate fellowship with God and are dealing with all this in a superficial manner. Believing will be difficult and impossible, however, when you penetrate deeper into things and begin to engage your reason more, for the Word of God alone must be the foundation of your faith. Or else, you are then occupied with the fruits of faith -- that is, to have them in such a measure as you imagine they ought to be -- and to have an assurance that is free from anything that could engender doubt, as well as to have a confidence characterized by peace alone, without the least manifestation of fear. No wonder that this is an impossible task for you, for this is the Lord's work, who gives to everyone as much as pleases Him. From all this you can observe that your faith is indeed feeble and deficient, but that it is nevertheless true within. This is the very purpose for having shown you all this, so that thereby you may be lifted out of your weakened condition and thus proceed in the way of uprightness with joy.

The Fourth Cause of Doubt: The Opinion that Assurance Always Accompanies Faith

The fourth cause of doubt is the opinion that assurance is considered to be of the essence of faith, or at least that faith is always accompanied by assurance. We then reason as follows: If my faith were true saving faith, I would be assured of my saving interest in Jesus and of salvation itself. There are times, however, when I cannot even find the infallible marks of grace -- faith and repentance -- from which I would dare to conclude that I have true grace. And if I do occasionally observe such marks in me, I nevertheless cannot come to this conclusion. I fear that I do not rightly understand the spiritual meaning of these marks as they are presented in the Word of God, and that which I discern in myself is not spiritual in the sense that Scripture delineates this to be. The Lord has never sealed it to my heart nor said to my soul, "I am thy salvation." I am always sorrowful and oppressed and do not know what it means to have joy and gladness in God. I therefore fear that in the end I will have deceived myself.

Answer: Be assured that without the express assurance of our saving interest in Christ we can indeed be saved. Thousands who have never had this express assurance are already in heaven, and there will be thousands of such who will yet come there as well. To be assured is a sweet and desirable matter, and it cannot be but that a believer will long for this. If, however, it pleases the Lord to withhold this, a person is to be submissive and occupy himself with the exercise of the extrinsic acts of faith.

Secondly, assurance is not of the essence of faith. To insist on the contrary is a serious misunderstanding which is both outside of and contrary to the Word of God. The Word of God calls faith a coming to Jesus, a receiving of Him, a longing for Him, an entrusting of ourselves to Him, and a leaning and a relying upon Him. However, it never denotes faith as a being assured of having a saving interest in Him, and of attaining eternal felicity -- even though felicity is promised in consequence of faith and flows out of it.

Thirdly, the assurance of having a saving interest in Jesus can be entirely absent from faith. Consider, for instance, the cases we have discussed in a previous paragraph, such as when someone is fearful of death, is in danger of drowning, or has fallen into the hands of murderers, etc. If such a person with all his heart flees to Jesus, calls upon Him, urgently takes hold of Him, surrenders to Him, and casts himself into His hands, then there is faith. However, both the moment and the troubles at hand prevent all reflection upon self and one's deeds, and thus all assurance is gone. If one were to die under such circumstances, he would enter heaven without assurance -- yes, with great fear and anxiety.

Fourthly, there is a distinction between the assurance which generally follows upon the steadfast exercise of faith, and the consciousness of being assured. If, with steadfastness, you exercise faith in Jesus with supplications, with application of the promises, with a good conscience, etc., and you then reflect upon the disposition of your soul, you shall perceive that at such a time a lively hope, tranquility, peace, contentment, or trust was present. However, during the time of strife which followed this exercise of faith you did not expressly give heed to this, nor did you take note of these matters by thinking, "Behold, this and this is indeed what I experienced." Even though you may not have paid attention to this at that time, the manifestations of assurance were nevertheless there.

Fifthly, there is also a misconception about assurance. One designates assurance, and understands thereby the sensible enjoyment of heavenly benefits, or at least such a measure of assurance in which there neither is nor can be the least impediment. Such ought to know, however, that both the believer and his faith are imperfect, and will remain imperfect in this life. Thus, the unbelieving heart is always capable of bringing forth some doubts which would cast a cloud upon the assurance of the best among them. They therefore reject such doubts without giving any heed to these doubts. Assurance flows out of a syllogism. The major premise is then derived from the Word of God which describes the nature of saving faith, regeneration, faith and its activity -- declaring the promises to be for such. The assured person has light in this matter and is acquainted with the truth. Irrational arguments such as: "Maybe I misunderstand the Word of God and it possibly intends these things in a more spiritual sense than I do," are rejected out of hand, knowing that the Word expresses itself succinctly and clearly, and that we are not to understand it in a natural, but in a spiritual sense. The minor premise is derived from our own heart and its inner motions as viewed by an omniscient God. We shall then declare that such and such is our condition, our consciences bearing witness to it. We indeed perceive and acknowledge the imperfections of the disposition of our heart and of its actions; nevertheless, we likewise perceive the genuineness of the graces which the Holy Spirit has planted there. From this we then draw the conclusion: "I am therefore in the state of grace, am born again, and have faith." This is assurance. Sometimes these first two arguments can be clearly discerned, but the conclusion is nevertheless shrouded in darkness and yields but little strength and comfort. Sometimes the conclusion is also clear and yields comfort due to being assured of being a partaker of grace. Sometimes the Holy Spirit works more powerfully than is normally the case and gives an impression of these three arguments which is as clear as the one made by a seal in soft wax or lacquer. This is the sealing of the Spirit. Sometimes, in addition to this, the Holy Spirit will grant extraordinary illumination, and will not only grant assurance of being partakers of these matters, but also the sensible enjoyment of the sweetness and felicity of them. Believers would be delighted to have the latter and would be desirous that this were always so. We shall not oppose them in this desire; however, we do oppose them in their insistence that only the latter -- or at least the degree before this -- is assurance, thus deeming themselves to be without assurance if they miss this. Here is the snare which deprives them from being encouraged and joyful. Such ought to know, however, that God does not work these last two matters in everyone, nor does He do so at all times. The fact that a believer can derive neither comfort nor encouragement from the syllogism is not due to a lack of assurance, for the ability to develop this syllogism is assurance itself. Rather, it is due to a lack of historical faith whereby we fail to have a lively and clear perception of the Word as being the infallible truth -- even though we do not perceive this to be the difficulty. It can be due to an extraordinary darkness which has come upon the soul, rendering one unable to see the glorious matters and our blessedness. It can also be due to a deadness which has overtaken the soul in consequence of being too intent upon the immediate sealing of the Holy Spirit and the sensible enjoyment of grace itself, deeming this alone to be assurance and thereby despising the day of small things. You may indeed long for such immediate sealing and such revelations of God to your soul, as well as for the spiritual joy and gladness issuing forth from this. Know, however, that God in His sovereign good pleasure neither grants this to all, nor does so at all times. Be satisfied with the normal way in which God leads His children. Can you say, upon careful reflection, that you have never been assured? Have you never enjoyed tranquility and peace in your conscience upon the wrestling of faith? Have you never felt that God forgave you your sins? Have you never experienced that God was your God? I believe that you will not dare to deny this; or else you have been negligent in observing these matters. If you say: "I have had this in some measure, but I believe this to have been imaginary; else I would have retained this," then I counsel you to stir up yourself by reflecting upon the days of old and keep yourself assured that God neither has changed, nor is able to change, in His grace toward you -- even though it is His normal way not to always allow His children to feel this. The Fifth Cause of Doubt: Being Overwhelmed by the Magnitude of Being a Recipient of Divine Grace The fifth doubt is engendered by the consideration of the magnitude of the matter. Some find true evidences of grace within themselves by which they could be assured that they are children of God. On the one hand, however, they receive a deep insight into the totality of their sinnership, and on the other hand they receive a deep insight into the magnitude of this matter. They consider what it means to be eternally loved by God; for Christ to have died for them out of love; and to have the Holy Spirit dwell in them as in a temple. They reflect upon what it means to be a child of God; to have God -- the majestic, holy, and glorious Creator and Lord of heaven and earth -- as their God; and to be heirs of eternal and incomprehensible felicity. When they then consider that God leaves nearly all men in their misery, condemns them due to their sin, makes but few the objects of His grace, and that they are among those few, they will deem this to be too great and unbelievable. They consider it to be too presumptuous for them to number themselves as one of them. This prevents them from coming to a conclusion about themselves and remaining assured of being in the state of grace -- a conclusion which they otherwise would make on the basis of the grace which they perceive within themselves.

Answer: It is a pity that you draw such a wrong conclusion from the perfections of God. How can we refrain ourselves from rebuking such? Since, however, it issues forth from feeble humility, we shall instruct you, hoping that you who are capable of being assured may, with joy and love, serve God as your God and, with a joyous hope upon eternal felicity, finish your course with joy and to the glory of God.

Therefore, you are first of all to know and be assured that even though it is too great for you to receive, it is not too great for the infinite One to give to you. You deem it to be presumptuous to assure yourself of being in a state of grace, even though you could come to this conclusion from clear evidences. Instead, it is an act of pride not to assure yourself; as if you would not want to receive more than you are worthy of, and would not want to place yourself under any obligation upon the receipt of benefits. In reasoning thus, you are grieving the very Benefactor who wishes to delight Himself in granting benefits to you. Therefore, receive it with joy and thanksgiving, and acknowledge the great goodness of God in bestowing incomprehensible benefits upon you, a wretched one.

Secondly, you must know that no one receives anything because they are worthy, or due to some good disposition, frame, and qualification which would move God to bless them. Others are as unworthy as you are. Nevertheless, they are willing to receive infinite benefits from God and to place themselves under eternal obligation. They are amazed about this, acknowledge the Lord's goodness, and thank and glorify Him for it. They are glad that with Jacob they may say, "I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth, which Thou hast showed unto Thy servant" Genesis 32:10, and with David, "Who am I, O Lord God? and what is my house, that Thou hast brought me hitherto?" (2 Samuel 7:18). You ought to do likewise.

Thirdly, prior to calling you, God knew indeed who you were and what you would do; and yet He sent the gospel and His messengers to you. He called you, drew you, led you to the Mediator, granted you faith, converted you, granted you spiritual light and life, and has frequently comforted you and shown you that He loves you. If therefore, at the outset of your spiritual life, you did not deem it too great a matter to be saved, and you dared to flee to Him with many tears for His grace, would you then now (He having granted His grace to you) refuse this grace because it is too great a matter for you? Or are you of the opinion that God would change after all the benefits bestowed upon you, since He already knew you so well prior to this, as well as how you would behave yourself toward Him? Therefore, honor the Lord, and joyfully acknowledge the grace bestowed upon you.

Fourthly, God's objective in bestowing grace and granting such great and infinite felicity -- doing so to but few and in contrast to many others, and to the greatest and most unworthy of sinners -- His objective, I repeat, is the glorification of Himself, so that in the revelation of His free grace, His infinite and incomprehensible love, and the riches of His mercy all the angels and all the elect would be amazed and rejoice, and that in beholding and magnifying this, their felicity would thus be increased. Observe this in the following passages: "To the praise of the glory of His grace, wherein He hath made us accepted in the Beloved" (Ephesians 1:6); "Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Him to life everlasting" (1 Timothy 1:16). In order for the Lord to achieve this objective, there indeed had to be a great distinction between the sinner and the gifts of His grace. If you therefore perceive this great disparity within yourself, you must not be hindered by this in the acknowledgement of God's grace. Rather, this ought to motivate you to acknowledge this and to be assured by the evidences of true grace, so that you would thus glorify God, and angels and men would glorify God concerning His grace in you. The Sixth Cause of Doubt: Not Being Able to Pray; and Prayer Not Being Answered The sixth doubt is engendered by being unable to pray and by not being heard. The argument is as follows: Believers have the Spirit of Christ, who is the Spirit of prayer, causing them to cry out, Abba, Father. He prays for them with groanings that cannot be uttered. However, I cannot pray. When I engage myself to pray, my heart closes up and I can hardly bring forth a word -- yes, my thoughts even begin to wander. And when I say something, it is but the work of my lips. My heart is not moved, my prayer does not penetrate, and it is as if I am speaking in the air. I cannot bring myself into the presence of God to address Him in an intimate manner. Much less am I able to do so with the appropriate humility, reverence, and faith that I shall be heard. And even if I am moved by a given matter, pray earnestly and repeatedly, I am nevertheless not heard and do not receive what I desire. However, God hears His elect and answers their prayers. This makes me despondent and causes me to think that I am not in the state of grace.

Answer: First, at one time or another, all God's children are in this condition. Ask every believer who for some time has been a Christian and they will affirm it. Therefore, neither consider it to be strange nor conclude from this that you are without grace. If others encounter this, why would you not experience this? Job, David, and other saints have complained about this.

Secondly, it is indeed a grievous condition and a cause of backsliding in spiritual life. However, the grief over a negative frame, the desire to be permitted and to be able to pray, and the desire to be heard, show that there is yet life in the soul.

Thirdly, in retrospect you will have to acknowledge that it has not always been this way. Previously you were able to pray with strong crying and tears, and to persevere in doing so. Furthermore,

God has occasionally demonstrated that He was pleased with your supplications and tears, and at times has also granted what you prayed for. However, the fact that you are presently not able to pray in this manner is perhaps due to:

- (1) a desire to enjoy a high level of spirituality and intimacy at the very outset of prayer;
- (2) beginning in your own strength -- not coming as a destitute sinner, praying for the ability to pray and for the Spirit of prayer so that you may be enabled to pray;
- (3) being desirous to do or receive something extraordinary at your scheduled devotional time, even though in the meantime you can be very much engaged in ejaculatory prayer in the performance of your calling;
- (4) spiritual darkness having come upon your soul, so that you cannot perceive the preciousness of the matters toward which your desires would otherwise be kindled;
- (5) your affections being divided and there being too much cleaving to the things of this world;
- (6) being lazy and unwilling to exert yourself to seek the Lord and to exercise yourself in prayer. Therefore, seek for the causes, and as much as is in you, remove them. Be diligent in acquainting yourself with the Lord with a perfect heart, so that you will not be further estranged from Him and become more entangled in the creature.

Fourthly, do you dare to say that the Lord has never heard you? Your heart would rebuke you. The fact that you do not receive that which you have prayed for is due to:

- (1) being listless in prayer;
- (2) praying for matters which the Lord has not promised to give;
- (3) asking for matters which the Lord has promised to give under the condition that it be of benefit to your godliness and salvation -- not what is best in your judgment, but what is according to God's wise government relative to your life;
- (4) it being the Lord's intent to humble you and to show you that you are but a worm. Thus, you have nothing to say if God would not be pleased to give it to you -- and you must deem it a manifestation of inexpressible goodness to be permitted to pray.
- (5) the Lord being desirous to perceive what your desires are, to see your tears, and to hear your voice;
- (6) the Lord intending to prepare you so that you become the more fit to receive the desired matters, and make better use of them;
- (7) the matters you desire being such that God does not grant them to you all at once, but gradually;
- (8) the possibility of the Lord having answered your prayers and having granted you your desire, and you not having perceived it.

Indeed, the fact that you can neither pray (about which the soul is grieved) nor receive your desire upon your prayer ought not to cause you to be unbelieving, despondent, or fretful; for it is not a sign of being without grace. Rather, it is evidence of God's wise and good dealings with you, thereby seeking your advantage. If you are insignificant in yourself, then remain as insignificant as a worm. Pray frequently according to the measure which the Lord is pleased to give you, and exert yourself even if you were to do this work but in a natural manner. It will, however, take on a spiritual dimension while you are thus engaged. Persevere in this way and the Lord will again visit you, teach you how to pray, answer your prayers, grant you the desire of your soul, or cause your desire to be satisfied by being content with His will. The Seventh Cause of Doubt: My Religion Proceeds from an Enlightened Mind The seventh cause of doubt is the following: I fear that all my religion only proceeds from an enlightened mind. I have been born and raised in the church; I know the doctrines and therefore only subscribe to them out of custom. Nothing deeply affects my heart, moves me, nor proceeds to bring forth a sensible sorrow, a lively sincerity, and comfort. My heart is not in anything, and nothing proceeds from my heart.

Answer: Such doubt is purely the result of ignorance concerning the functioning of the mind, the will or the heart, the affections, and man in general. Therefore, some instruction in this respect will suffice.

(1) We understand, comprehend, and know a matter by way of the mind, and judge as to whether it is true and whether it is good. This determination is not made in a vacuum, but rather as it relates to us; that is, whether we should pursue or avoid the matter, do or refrain from doing it.

(2) The heart or the will relates to the pleasure or displeasure toward, aversion or love for, and the desire or lack of desire for a given matter.

(3) The affections are the passions, the vehement emotions which manifest themselves in either fleeing from or pursuing a matter.

(4) When man engages himself, then it is the mind which is first activated, and man performs whatever he performs with his mind. The mind, in turn, renders the will active, and the will activates the affections.

Secondly, apply this now to yourself and observe the manner in which you function. The mind in and of itself only observes and judges something to be good or evil. It knows of no displeasure, sorrow, or longing; leaves the matter as it is; and is satisfied with having knowledge of the matter. If such is the case with you, you have reason to think that things are not right with you. If, however, the mind is joined by the will; that is, if you grieve over that which you miss and have a longing to enjoy or do a matter, then your heart is engaged. The heart is the will enlightened, and as such is displeased with sin, and finds pleasure in Christ and the way of salvation. It is thus that one takes the initiative to flee, seek, and be active. If you conduct yourself thus, you need not be concerned that you have nothing more than an enlightened mind.

Thirdly, your concern stems from the fact that your affections and sensible passions are mistaken for the heart. If these are absent, then you are of the opinion that the heart is not involved. However, this is a serious misunderstanding. One's passions are frequently the result of his physical constitution. One person is much more vehement in his affections than another. Our passions are generally malevolent guides. He who engages himself very passionately is not necessarily engaged in a more sincere manner than he who is active by way of his enlightened will. A vehemence of passion generally manifests itself at the outset of conversion due to having much fear. Subsequently, however, the passions are in general not so vehement, there being a secret belief of having a saving interest in Christ. It can also be that the soul, so to speak, functions autonomously and with great exertion of mind reflects upon the mysteries of faith, embraces them with the will, and in such a frame finds its delight. However, sometimes the absence of affections is indicative of a lack of earnestness which is engendered by a familiarity with the matters at hand, by darkness, by despondency, or by laziness. From that perspective, this absence of affections is an undesirable matter, and one must strive to lift himself out of this. The absence of affections may, however, not be the cause of disowning your spiritual state, for your passions are not your heart; the heart is the enlightened will. If there is the inclination of the heart and you are conscious of the fact that it is Christ you seek after unto justification and sanctification; if in that frame you are fleeing unto Him, receiving Him, surrendering yourself to Him, and, motivated by the fear of God, you pray, flee, oppose evil, and pursue that which is good out of love to be pleasing unto the Lord -- then you may unreservedly be assured that you have grace, and should rejoice in this. The Eighth Cause of Doubt: A Being Fearful of Hypocrisy The eighth doubt pertains to suspecting ourselves of hypocrisy. We then reason as follows: "It cannot be that I have grace, for in nearly all my actions my conscience accuses me that I am being hypocritical. It appears as if I am serving God, but in reality I have myself in view. Whenever I sing, pray, lead in prayer in the presence of others, or do anything else while being observed by men, my heart immediately begins to reflect upon the people; that is, to gain their esteem, love, and praise. That is the wind which blows in the sails of my soul, activates me, and causes me to be zealous. Having performed something, I seek to know what people think of it. I like to hear that I am praised, and it makes me happy. This seeking after the favor of men is such a habitual tendency in me. Yes, even when I am alone and do something godly, my heart is reflecting upon how the people will react. Am I thus not an outright hypocrite? Furthermore, a double-hearted man is unstable in all his ways, whereas a steadfast disposition is reserved for the righteous. However, I am very unstable. At one moment I am zealous, and then lukewarm; at one moment I make progress, and then I stand still -- yes, I even regress; at one moment I have courage, and then I am despondent; at one moment I am elated, and then I am depressed; at one moment I have a tender conscience, my words and deeds being governed by the fear of God, and then again my sinful passions are on the run with me. Such is truly my condition, and therefore I cannot but think that I am a hypocrite, and a hypocrite is the object of God's wrath and will have a most dreadful hell as his portion."

Answer: First, all the foregoing matters are sins which are evil and worthy of rebuke. Without reservation you ought to humble yourself about this before God.

Secondly, it can be that you are too hard on yourself due to your hatred for hypocrisy, and due to your fear of being without grace. However, let us assume that all is as you have said it to be, and we shall consider you to be such. We would like you to answer the following questions.

(1) Are these ulterior motives your joy and delight, or are they a burden to you and a matter of grief and displeasure?

(2) Are these your true objective? Do they motivate you in your actions, and upon having achieved your goal, do you delight yourself in their having been your objective? Or do these ulterior motives slip in through the back door -- contrary to your wishes and intentions -- and do you pray to be delivered from them? Do they rob you of all the peace and joy you had upon having done a good work?

(3) Do you function better when you are alone and your transactions are between God and your soul; or are you better off spiritually when you are in the presence of people? In answering these questions sincerely in the presence of the Lord -- that is, without flattering yourself, or being detrimental to the condition of your heart -- you will be able to perceive what the motivating principle of your heart is: uprightness or hypocrisy. If it is your intent to seek yourself and you reflect upon how you may accomplish this, and if it is your joy and delight to do all this preferably in the presence of men rather than alone, you ought to admit to being a hypocrite (which you are), and repent. If, however, the seeking of self is a burden to you, grieves you, and you pray against it; if such ulterior motives slip in through the back door; if they trouble your soul and spoil what you have done; if you are much more intimate, spiritual, and upright when you are alone than when you are among people -- then you, upright ones (which you are), take courage from this, and do not disown your spiritual state.

However, you should know, first of all, that believers are only sanctified in part and that the seed of various sins still remains in them. No sin can ever be mortified so completely that it can never surface again. This remaining corruption will manifest itself outwardly, this being contingent upon the condition of the body, opportunities, and other circumstances. Therefore, the one godly person will fall more into a given sin than the other. For you the seeking of self is the chief sin. However, it is evident from that which has been said that it does not have dominion over you, but is resisted. You can thus observe that this sin is your enemy -- and if hypocrisy is your enemy, uprightness has become your natural disposition by the grace of God.

Secondly, it should be known that the fear of seeking self frequently causes us to think about the seeking of self. This will suggest to us that it is so, and the devil creates the illusion in our minds that we are seeking self. Some, not being aware of this, unjustly accuse themselves of this, whereas in truth it was nothing more than an illusion, an accusation, an enticement, or a fear that this is so. You must thus conclude that you are not a hypocrite, even though you are occasionally besieged by ulterior motives and occasionally fall victim to this contrary to your will.

Thirdly, instability is not a sign of hypocrisy when, upon faltering in this area, our heart principally is and remains knit to the Lord; when our failures are, so to speak, but momentary enchantments about which we are sorrowful; and when we are completely out of sorts upon deviating here and there from being steadfast of heart before God and in His way. Instead, this instability is indicative of the warfare between the spirit and the flesh -- a battle in which at one time the Spirit, and then again the flesh, has the upper hand. This proves that we are steadfast in principle, since the spirit, time and again, prevails and is grieved over the aberrations of the flesh. Therefore do not succumb so readily, but rather stand fast in the faith, conduct yourself manfully, and you will increase in strength. The Ninth Cause of Doubt: The Power of Corruption and Sin The ninth cause of doubt is the great corruption within and the power of sin. A person plagued by this doubt thinks: "Justification and sanctification always go hand in hand. When holiness is absent, regeneration, faith, and justification will also be absent. An unsanctified person is not in the state of grace. Not only do I find holiness to be absent within myself, but instead I perceive nothing but sin. I have such an evil, abominable, and defiled heart, which makes me believe that there is no one who has such an evil heart as I. From this heart issues forth all manner of vain and filthy thoughts about sin. I sin continually, and the sins within me are of such an abominable nature that I don't even dare to mention them. I do not occasionally fall into these sins, but rather they have the upper hand and have dominion over me. When the inclination but arises, I immediately stand ready and commit these sins -- yes, I even stir up this inclination myself and reinforce it. What is even worse, it all occurs against a speaking conscience, indeed, against the realization of the presence of God, and against the express warnings of the Spirit in my heart. Thus, I can only conclude that I have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost, which will not be forgiven to all eternity. Therefore, all the hope which I entertained at one time is gone and I now number myself among the damned."

Answer: First, be ashamed before God, the holy angels, and before men. Shame on you, oh sinful man! Truly, if all this is to be found in you, and there is nothing else besides this, you have every reason to believe that you are yet unconverted and without grace. Therefore, depart and repent with haste, for I have no comfort for you.

Secondly, it does occur that someone who truly has spiritual life is for a season overwhelmed and overcome by the power of sin -- as has just been depicted. However, even during such a season, spiritual life yet manifests itself. Yet, it is not detected when one is overwhelmed by corruption; and thus one falters in regard to faith and his spiritual state. We shall therefore demonstrate to such persons wherein spiritual life yet manifests itself, and thereby encourage those who are despondent, lift them out of this sinful condition, and restore them to a godly walk. The power of corruption as being a spiritual disease, and the regression of spiritual life, will be discussed in the following chapter. We shall therefore be brief on this subject and only show, to the encouragement of those who are despondent about their spiritual condition, what measure of grace still manifests itself in this battle, even though it suffers defeat at that moment.

Thirdly, give therefore your careful attention, do not argue; acknowledge that which is truthfully to be found in you.

(1) Do you have an inward aversion for the inner dimension of spiritual life, as well as for those who are truly godly; and are you with your whole heart attached to sin and to ungodly and unconverted decent persons, this being your only joy and delight? Or is the opposite to be found in you? Is there heartfelt aversion for sin as sin, as being contrary to the will of God, as well as for sinners and worldly people? Do you find delight and a love for a wholehearted uniting with the will of God and with the godly?

(2) Is there a deliberate intention to commit sin -- also when the passion for sin is not raging within -- without there being any opposition of the heart? Or are you inclined not to commit sin when the vehemence of passion is absent, and do so with a view upon God and Christ?

(3) When you are in such a sinful condition, are you then joyful and cheerful, or are you grieved, restless, and of an anxious spirit?

(4) Are you insensitive when sin is committed, or does it wound your soul and cause you grief?

(5) Are you content to remain in this condition, or is it your wholehearted desire to be delivered from this, and to serve the Lord with freedom and joy?

(6) Are you always in such a sinful condition, or are there times that you are able to deeply humble yourself with tears before the Lord, supplicate for grace, and flee to the Lord Jesus to obtain forgiveness by His blood -- by which you are united to God in Christ, though not yet in an assured sense? Do you at such a time make spirited resolutions to be on guard against those and all other sins, heartily crying out unto the Lord for strength, being presently convinced of your own impotence? Are there seasons which are characterized by a cleaving unto Christ, the fear of God, and having strength against sin? Calmly answer these questions. If you are convinced that the good which is presented in these questions is to be found in you, it is evident that there is still life in your soul and that sin does not have the dominion. Rather, spiritual life -- however feeble it may be -- desires the contrary, groans, supplicates and engages in holy warfare. As long as we are still struggling, sin has not yet gained a complete victory. The following proverb applies here: He who is down is still fighting. This also proves that you have not committed the sin against the Holy Ghost, for:

(1) man as such is not the object of this sin, but it is professed truth, and those people who confess and experience this confessed truth. There is in this sin an unyielding hatred for the entire cause of Christ.

(2) this sin is not opposed by an internal principle of spiritual life.

(3) such persons will never have remorse, nor ever desire forgiveness. It is true that sin is greatly aggravated if it is committed against an illuminated and lively conscience, and against the sensible warnings of the Holy Spirit; one ought to humble and abhor himself greatly concerning this. However, that is not the sin against the Holy Ghost, but the corruption of the residual old Adam who is to be distinguished from the new man. The old Adam is designated as the enemy, and the new man must be considered as the person one is. Paul did this: "Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me" (Romans 7:20).

If there is yet spiritual life in you, keep courage, lift up your head from out of your infirmities, and begin your battle by renewal in the power of God who, having begun a good work in you, will also finish it in the day of Christ. He does not forsake the work of His own hands, but "giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength" (Isaiah 40:29). Just as the Lord beholds the good which He has worked in you, you must do likewise. Acknowledge it to be of the Lord, and encourage yourself thereby. The Tenth Cause of Doubt: Unbelief Concerning Fundamental Doctrines The tenth doubt has its origin in unbelief concerning fundamental doctrines. Someone may say, "Wretch that I am, there is neither hope nor counsel for me, for I do not even believe that there is a God or that the Scriptures are divine truth. I doubt the existence of heaven and hell, the immortality of the soul, and whatever else is deemed to be invisible. Yes, I have blasphemous thoughts about God. All of this certainly cannot coexist with regeneration."

Answer: Please refer to chapters 14 (Vol. #1, p. 381), 92 (p. ###193), and 93 (p. ###199) of this work. This is indeed a very grievous condition; however, it is not a sign of being unconverted. This befalls most of the godly, especially those who have a keen mind. You are therefore not to be without hope about your condition. You can very readily perceive that these doubts are but interjections, for:

First, you have not always been in this condition, and there are still intermissions in this condition, during which the love for communion with God manifests itself. He is your desire and in Him is all your delight. When He hides Himself, you are sorrowful; when you receive hope, you rejoice, and when He reveals Himself, you are delighted. To fear the Lord, do His will, and walk before His countenance in humility is the life of your soul; Christ is precious to you. Was it not thus in the past, and is it not thus intermittently? Therefore, reflect upon your previous experience.

Secondly, even when thus assaulted, evidences of spiritual life nevertheless manifest themselves. Why are you not at peace? How can you have a problem if the invisible is nonexistent and if there is no such thing as immortality? Therefore, eat, drink, yield to your lusts, for if there is no immortality, there is no sin and you do not have to anticipate judgment. When you hear such arguments, does not your love then surface? Wouldn't you then begin to weep? Does this not demonstrate that you believe all this to be true and that these are but assaults of your corrupt heart and the devil? Consider especially how your heart is troubled about blasphemous thoughts. Why is this? Is it out of fear for punishment? You will perceive that this is not the primary cause, but rather that your being disturbed proceeds from the love of God, and this love cannot tolerate that we would think or speak anything that is unbecoming of God. Therefore, endure the storm patiently, for the Lord will rebuke Satan; these blasphemous thoughts are not your sins, but Satan's. You merely hear them and this troubles you. The Lord will, by renewal, reveal Himself to your soul and declare that He exists, and is as He declares Himself to be in His Word. The Spirit will surely witness to you that the Spirit which speaks in the Word is the Spirit of truth. The Eleventh Cause of Doubt: Spiritual Darkness and Deadness The eleventh doubt arises from spiritual darkness and deadness. Such a person will say: "Oh, my condition is even more wretched than all the previous ones, for I deem those happy who have feeling and who endure strife. I, on the contrary, am dead. I indeed believe everything, but it is entirely without feeling. I am not sensible of either the favor or wrath of God, nor am I sensible of heaven, hell, godliness, or sin. Everything seems to me as if it had been but a dream. It is so far out of my reach that I can no longer see it; I am in Egyptian darkness. My devotional exercises have ceased; neither the Word of God nor the sermons affect me; rebukes do not trouble me; comforts render me no joy; nor do exhortations stir me. In one word, I am more dead and insensible than the most ungodly person, and thus I have neither spiritual life nor grace. My case is more hopeless than that of the most ungodly sinner."

Answer: Your complaint is reasonable and your condition to be pitied; however, it is not beyond hope. We shall deal with this condition in depth in chapters 98 and 99. Here it presents itself to us as a reason for doubt as to whether we are in a state of grace. My response is as follows:

First, a great number of eminent saints have been in the same condition as you currently are, and you will not be the last one. Let this support you in your hope that you will be delivered from this.

Secondly, your state is not as dead as you imagine it to be. You deem the sensitivity of your affections to be the same as spiritual life itself; this is a serious misunderstanding. The enlightened will in its functioning toward God, and the way of God unto salvation through Jesus Christ, is the primary motion of spiritual life whereby the soul seeks union with God. If you now impartially judge yourselves, you will yet find this to be present.

Thirdly, a spiritually dead person is attracted to spiritually dead persons. Birds of a feather flock together and hate whatever is not like them. The ungodly seek the company of the ungodly; cultured people seek out cultured people; those who are externally religious seek fellowship with those who are like-minded, and collectively their hearts are opposed to those who are godly within. If you were dead indeed, you would love and hate as they do. However, the contrary is true for you, for the reprobate are despised in your eyes and you honor those that fear the Lord, and your heart is knit to them in love. Is this therefore not an evidence that you have been translated from death to life?

Fourthly, if you were as dead as you imagine yourself to be, from whence then does this displeasure with your condition, your sorrowful brooding, and your languishing proceed? A dead person does not have any feelings. However, the fact that you are sensible of your insensitivity shows that there is life, though it be feeble.

Fifthly, when spiritual life is held before you in its preciousness, consisting in sweet union with Jesus, a leaning in love upon Him, peace of conscience in light of the forgiveness of sins, and a humble and tender walk before the Lord -- aren't you then acquainted with it? Does not your previous experience come to mind? If it could be given to you with one word, wouldn't you then wholeheartedly and eagerly choose for this, there being love for such a disposition? These are indeed clear evidences that in all your deadness there is yet life, and that therefore you ought not to disown your state due to your deadness. The Twelfth Cause of Doubt: Daily Crosses The twelfth doubt is engendered by a bodily cross. Whoever is not tried in this respect does not know all that can transpire when everything is against him. It can be that we must see parents or children in all manner of misery or be rendered all manner of grief and sorrow by them; that we are ridiculed and despised by everyone; that we come into poverty so that we do not know how to maintain an honorable existence, pay our debts -- yes, where we shall obtain bread in order to keep ourselves and our families alive. It can also be that we are afflicted with lengthy periods of pain and discomfort, and are thus overwhelmed by crosses from all sides. If the Lord then hides Himself and we thus find neither comfort nor help, this would even cause a strong Christian to shake and tremble. Furthermore, if all this is conjoined by the subtle assaults of Satan, and in addition to this, our unbelieving, unmortified, and fretful heart manifests itself, our faith will readily falter as far as assurance is concerned. We are then ready to think that all these things come upon us in God's wrath, and that we are not children of God, for we shall then think that if we were children of God, God would not desert us but would help us. Yes, we are then ready to doubt God's providence, and many other thoughts and assaults will proceed from this.

Answer: First, this also is no reason to disown our state. Were not Job, Joseph, David, Jeremiah and all they of whom the Scriptures speak, true believers and in the state of grace? Does not the Lord Jesus give us an example of a gracious person in poor Lazarus? Nevertheless, his cross was both heavy and lengthy. How frequently Job and David sinned in such circumstances! Would you condemn all whom you have known and whose histories you have heard recounted, who have been in much more wretched circumstances according to the body than you; who have had to deal with and manifested impatience and unbelief concerning the cross -- would you condemn all of them as not having grace? Indeed not -- and thus you have no reason to disown your spiritual state.

Secondly, add to this the numerous declarations of God that it is His way to lead His people to heaven by way of manifold crosses: "Many are the afflictions of the righteous" (Psalms 34:19); "We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God" (Acts 14:22); "For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth. But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons" (Hebrews 12:8). From this you may perceive that chastisements and crosses are not a token of His wrath toward His own, but a token of His love. You may perhaps retort, "Toward His own -- but I do not believe that I am one of His own." To this I respond that it is then an established fact that by the magnitude and the duration of the cross you cannot determine that you are without grace. Nevertheless you do so -- and improperly so.

Thirdly, the grace which is to be found in your heart will yet manifest itself in the midst of your cross-bearing, and this you are to note to your encouragement.

(1) What grieves you more: the cross, or the fact that you do not bear the cross well; that the cross is heavy and of such long duration, or that you are so impatient and fretful, fail to patiently humble yourself under the mighty hand of God, have doubts concerning the providence of God, and think, "Does God indeed take notice of man, consider his misery, and hear his prayers"?

(2) What do you desire more: reconciliation with God and the forgiveness of sins, or deliverance from the cross? What is more prominent in your seeking: to be content and to be submissive to the will of God, or merely to be relieved of the cross?

(3) What do you choose: that the cross be removed or that you be sanctified thereby -- yes, that the cross be not removed until it has accomplished its purpose, namely, the sanctification of your heart?

(4) If it were your choice either to be fully delivered from the cross, or to give it into the hands of the Lord, would you then choose the former or would you say, "No, I do not choose to be delivered from it, but I shall give it over entirely into the hands of the Lord"?

(5) Does it lead you further away from God? Do you cease to pray, supplicate and seek; or do you increasingly flee to the Lord, frequently bowing yourself silently under His chastisement, and humbly beseeching Him that -- in His favor -- you might receive some relief and deliverance in your perplexity, which you lay before the Lord as a child who unburdens himself? When you calmly examine these matters, cannot you then discern grace? If such is the case, hold fast to your spiritual state. The cross will then appear lighter to you, it will sanctify you more, and you will discover the good hand of the Lord to your comfort and deliverance. With David you will say, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn Thy statutes. I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right, and that Thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me" Psalms 119:71; Psalms 119:75. The Thirteenth Cause of Doubt: A Lack of Spiritual Growth The thirteenth doubt issues forth from a lack of spiritual growth. Such will argue as follows: "I have been a Christian for so many years already and it is so long ago since I first came under conviction and entered into the covenant of grace. However, I cannot perceive that I have grown in any way. I am the same old person I have been for many years -- yes, I cannot perceive anything else but that I have backslidden and that I backslide daily hand over foot. In the beginning I was lively and zealous. I could persevere in overcoming my lethargic flesh, was occupied day and night in prayer, could not get enough of reading the Word of God. The sermons were sweet to me; the company of the godly was a delight to me; I had a sensible love for the godly (who were especially precious and glorious in my eyes); I walked with a tender heart before the Lord, and I was on guard against unrighteousness. However, it is now so entirely different. Everything is so cold, lethargic, listless, sinful, and vain. What else can I conclude from this but that I have never had true grace? For the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day (Proverbs 4:18). The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God (Psalms 92:12-13). However, I do not perceive this to be true within myself; the contrary is true. I may therefore not number myself among those who are partakers of grace. Yes, I am thereby tempted at times to believe that the regenerate can apostatize.”

Answer: First, the thoughts concerning the apostasy of the saints is but a fleeting temptation. You know better than that, and if you desire more instruction in this regard so that you may be steadfast, turn to chapter 100. [p. ###303]

Secondly, the promises concerning spiritual growth are always fulfilled -- be it to a greater or lesser degree -- according to the measure which the Lord has appointed for everyone. If a tree is planted in fertile soil, receives an appropriate amount of sunshine and rain, and is in the appropriate climate, it will grow. Such is also true of grace in a believer. If, however, a tree is continually carved or cut, or if people or animals continually shake it back and forth, or if insects are gnawing at the root, its growth will be prevented. Such is also true for a gracious person.

Thirdly, growth cannot be measured by the vehemence of passions. These have been more vehement in former times when the change initially occurred; when from dead we became alive, and when from darkness we came into the light. They were of a less spiritual nature, however, and you would not be as delighted with them as you now imagine; that is, if you were again in your initial condition. Rather, growth is to be discerned by being increasingly united to Christ, and by the activity which flows out of this union (cf. chapter 90, p. ###159).

Fourthly, it can be true that you are backsliding, for a believer can backslide -- not only as far as the outward manifestation of grace is concerned, but also as far as his habitual graces are concerned (cf. chapter 91, p. ###171). However, even in the state of backsliding he remains a believer, and grace is not withdrawn from him. Thus, there is indeed reason for sorrow when you backslide, but there is no reason to believe that you have been without grace prior to this.

Fifthly, upon evaluating yourself in an impartial manner, you will yet perceive that:

(1) you have spiritual light enabling you to know God and Christ; that you are acquainted with spiritual life and the benefits of the covenant of grace in their essential and spiritual nature; and that you discern that all knowledge of the natural man is nothing but darkness when compared to your own.

(2) there is grief and sorrow over your deficiency. Wherever there is feeling, there is yet life.

(3) there is a longing, yearning, and supplicating for the Spirit, comfort, and strength in order to live in a spiritual manner. Wherever there is hunger and thirst after righteousness -- after food -- there is yet life in the soul.

(4) upon perceiving the eminence of gracious souls, esteeming them, and siding with them and the cause of Christ in opposition to the world, there is yet the manifestation of the nature of a regenerate person. Is not such the case with you? Therefore, acknowledge that which is yet to be found in you. Esteem it as having been given you by God out of pure grace, and that it will also be preserved in you on the basis of so many precious promises, as well as God's immutability and omnipotence. Therefore, do not capitulate by your backsliding, but hold fast the grace which you have and lift up again the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees.

We have thus presented to you the primary causes which trouble believers, causing them to doubt their spiritual state; and we have given our responses to them. There are certainly others, but they are of less importance. They can readily be resolved by what has been said in response to the doubts that have been dealt with.

100. Chapter 95: The Assaults of Satan

----- CHAPTER NINETY-FIVE ----- The Assaults of Satan The devil is a murderer from the beginning. God has put enmity between believers and the devil, who goes about among them as a roaring lion, using every imaginable device and act of violence to harm them -- and if it were possible, to kill them. This we now wish to discuss.

Satan Assaults Believers It can be confirmed irrefutably from God's Word that the devil assaults believers.

(1) This is to be observed in God's declaration: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed" (Genesis 3:15).

(2) This is also evident from the names which are given him in light of this, such as, the enemy Matthew 13:39, the tempter Matthew 4:3, the wicked one Matthew 13:19, and the adversary (1 Peter 5:8).

(3) It is conveyed by the description of his work among believers: "Your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter 5:8). His works are called "the wiles of the devil" Ephesians 6:16, buffeting 2 Corinthians 12:7, shooting of fiery darts Ephesians 6:16, and beguiling (2 Corinthians 11:3).

(4) Then there are the exhortations to arm ourselves against him and to resist him. "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil" (Ephesians 6:11); "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about" (1 Peter 5:8); "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you" (James 4:7).

You should know, and be prepared for the fact, that the moment you are inclined to repent and begin to turn to Jesus, even if it is but from afar, the devil will exert himself with a vengeance to use all his wiles and wickedness to prevent this. If he cannot prevent this, he will endeavor to torment and trouble you, and thus keep you from living a holy and joyful life. Therefore, from your side you are also to exert yourself fully. Gird yourself with strength and resist him courageously.

It is needful for you to be acquainted with his devices and operations, so that you will be the less offended and be engaged in battle with all the more valor. We shall therefore present several of his common methods to you. He generally presents himself in a threefold manner: as an angel of light, as a devil, or by concealing himself -- thus creating the illusion that we ourselves are involved. It is his latter guise which is most injurious.

Satan as an Angel of Light That he occasionally approaches us as an angel of light is taught by the apostle: "Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light" (2 Corinthians 11:14). This is not truly the case, but it appears to be so in respect to his operations, for he often approaches the godly under the lovely pretense of godliness.

(1) Sometimes he brings to your attention matters which are good in and of themselves, such as a sweet passage of Scripture, or some sweet experiences and motions of the past; and he will endeavor to cause you to reflect upon them. He does so with evil intentions, however, and at an inappropriate time. He does this, for instance, when we are engaged in a specific matter, or if he knows that whatever will be preached will be most beneficial to us. He does this to short-circuit the earnestness with which we are engaged at that moment and to cause us to desist, as the preached Word will then pass us by unnoticed. Having thus been diverted, we shall miss certain things and will come away empty.

(2) He can make use of the fact that someone, whom he cannot mislead in any other way, is very intent on being virtuous. Yes, he may even stir someone up to this (even though a love for holiness proceeds from the heart of the godly person himself). His objective, however, is to render this person unwilling to be subject to God's dispensation, and cause him to strive continually for greater and loftier things, thereby making him sorrowful, discouraged, and unbelieving, or inducing him to pride.

(3) He may even encourage someone to be virtuous -- yes, to the most careful observation of his thoughts, words, and deeds. However, he does so in order to draw him away, so that he might be involved in things which are external to his calling or station in life. Under a sweet pretense, he will even allure him to things which are contrary to the commandment of God (which is nothing but fanaticism), the person thinking that all that comes to mind is from God. There are then no limits to what he can entice a man. He may also cause one's conscience to be very sensitive, so that a person perceives himself as offending in everything he does, causing him to go his way in much spiritual anxiety. Or he may cause him to see how far he falls short and thus cause him to disown his spiritual state, holding before him that such a life cannot coexist with grace.

(4) He may also stir someone up to be virtuous for the purpose of making him satisfied with the activity itself, keeping him from Christ and the seeking and exercise of justifying faith. Thus, he will subtly rob him of his comfort and that genuine sanctification which flows out of justification -- and if someone is not born again, will keep him out of heaven. These matters everyone must keep in mind in order not to be deceived by Satan. He Presents Himself as He Is: A Devil Sometimes the devil comes as a devil in order to inflict terror.

(1) This may occur by way of apparitions, sensations, noises, or in other different ways. This occurs rarely, however, and is generally imaginary, as some are not able to distinguish this from reality.

(2) This may occur when he stirs someone up to surrender himself to him, or something similar. How far he can go in this they only know who have experienced it.

(3) This may occur when he threatens to kill or inflict suffering upon someone, whereby the assaulted person lives in much fear.

It is thus that he torments as a devil. If, however, in addition to this, he is not able to carry out some of his secret designs, he does but little harm, even though he prevents much that is good.

Most of the time the devil conceals himself and seeks to convince man that he has no hand in what transpired, but rather that it is the person himself and that such things proceed from his own heart. Thereby he seeks either to prevent that which is good and to corrupt it, to bring about the commission of sin, or to bring the soul into a state of bewilderment. In order to prevent that which is good he has many subtle devices, leveling his assault either on faith, prayer, the hearing of the Word, or sanctification.

His Primary Target: Faith and its Exercise

First, he knows that faith is the fountainhead of spiritual life, and he therefore seeks to obscure faith in all its activity.

(1) He suddenly interjects irrational suggestions, such as, "Is all this in truth? Is not all this imagination?" He will then continually stir you up to mentally reflect upon these suggestions and to search them out. If we then begin to listen, he gets hold of us and begins to present arguments upon which he demands an answer. And if he gets you that far that you begin to respond by reasoning, he will proceed with his argumentation and will, time and again, present new proofs. When the ability to reason fails, he then proceeds to bring you from fleeting atheistic thoughts to embrace atheism itself. You will then be grievously caught in the net and be incapable of having either comfort or peace, and will not be able to be encouraged in whatever you are doing. Therefore, be on your guard against giving heed to these initial fleeting interjections. Let them pass by, and proceed as before, relying upon the Word of God.

(2) Sometimes he unexpectedly interjects: "Are you really a child of God? Is it really in truth? Have you not deceived yourself? Come, examine yourself, for that which is good can endure a test." At times he does this when we may live sweetly by faith, in the exercise of its extrinsic acts, and when we may have fellowship with God. Or he will occasionally do so when we are least capable of making a judgment about ourselves. If we do listen to him, our faith will receive a setback at the very outset and we shall be prevented from proceeding in this good frame. When it comes to the examination whether our foundation is right, he does his utmost to obscure that which is good and hold before us our corruptions with utmost clarity. He will then suggest: "The godly are such and such, but you are far removed from living such a life! Thus, you have deceived yourself; you have nothing more than an enlightened understanding, and you have nothing but head knowledge. You are a temporal believer and a hypocrite." It is thus that you begin to totter. Therefore, do not listen to those interjections, but proceed with the extrinsic acts of faith, which cannot deceive. For even if you had deceived yourself, it is nevertheless at this point that you must make a beginning. It is safest to practice self-examination when wrestling in prayer; that is, when you are speaking to and transacting with the Lord.

(3) Sometimes he makes your bodily cross to appear much heavier than it is. It then seems as if there is no deliverance, but that it will become heavier and heavier. He will also suggest that this has not come upon you in God's favor, but as a manifestation of His wrath; that it is all because of your sins and is but the beginning of eternal damnation. He knows how to impress this upon you sentence after sentence, doing so in an authoritative and overpowering manner. If you listen to him, his interjections will begin to have their effect, faith will begin to falter, you will easily become despondent, and your cross will press you down. Therefore, reject all such interjections. Take your cross upon you and follow Jesus; adhere to the promise that you will be sustained and that the outcome will be well. His Second Target: Prayer

Secondly, since the devil knows what strength, comfort, and benefit may be derived from prayer, he uses all the power and subtlety at his disposal either to keep you from praying or to trouble you while praying.

(1) He will suggest as many other activities as he possibly can, diverting your thoughts elsewhere, and inducing you to postpone prayer to a given time (having something else to do first). He thus seeks to make a person run around from one thing to the next; and if you follow him in this, you will lose your desire and lively frame to engage in prayer. If you encounter this, be on guard and know that your mortal enemy, the devil, is in pursuit. You must be all the more earnest in your striving to overcome all these obstacles and say to yourself: "It is presently my duty to fight against this, and I desire to be victorious over him in this."

(2) Sometimes he suggests that prayer is such a difficult work -- a work that is not possible to do, for which you are entirely unfit, are presently in too sinful a condition for, and that you should thus wait for a season when you will be more fit for it. If this causes you to look up against prayer, he has gained the advantage over you. Therefore, proceed and do not permit yourself to be hindered. Begin, as incapable as you are, and after your prayer consider whether it was difficult and whether you were incapable of it. You will then judge differently.

(3) Sometimes he gives a deep impression that prayer is both ineffective and fruitless. He will then interject the following: "You neither pray in faith nor do you clearly perceive who God is; instead, you are praying to an unknown God. You do not have a right perception of yourself, do not perceive your sinfulness and unworthiness, nor are you as humble and brokenhearted as a suppliant ought to be. You do not earnestly desire the matters for which you are praying, nor do you have those holy objectives which are requisite for prayer. Therefore, desist, for it is not pleasing to God. You will not receive this matter, for God does not hear such prayers. Have you not sufficiently experienced that all your prayers are in vain? What did you ever receive as an answer upon your prayers?" If to some degree you give heed to such interjections, he will succeed both in impairing the exercise of faith as you engage in prayer, and in decreasing your measure of earnestness and perseverance. Therefore, be acquainted with his devices and strive all the more earnestly to overcome. Adhere to the promises of God and always remember that the Lord does not hear because of the worthiness of prayer, but upon prayer as being a means ordained by Him. He will grant your desire at His time, in His manner, and according to His measure -- and you have indeed experienced this to be so.

(4) Sometimes the devil, as if throwing in a handful of dust, is also busy casting other thoughts into our minds while we are praying. He will also try to bring our soul into a hurried and rushed frame; that is, making it seem as if something needed to be done that could not wait. He will stir up a desire for the activity in which we are currently engaged, cause our hearts to be troubled, or suddenly bring matters to mind of which we have not thought in a long time. Be also acquainted with this device and reject it as not worthy of your attention. His Third Target: The Means of Grace

Thirdly, the devil knows that the Lord commonly blesses the assembly of believers, the ministry of the Word, and the partaking of the Lord's Supper. Therefore, he goes along to church and will seek to implement his practices upon you there also. He may suggest reasons to you why you ought not to attend, suggest all sorts of thoughts to you, stupefy your mind with sleepiness (if he is permitted to do so), or do a thousand other things to rob you of the Word or to render it ineffective.

Remind yourself of this, be acquainted with his devices, be on your guard, and out of hatred and enmity for him, do not in any way cooperate with him. Remind yourself that at such a moment you must do battle and strive for a victory. His Fourth Target: The Life of Sanctification

Fourthly, since the devil knows that sanctification is so precious to you and in a special sense honors God and edifies your neighbor, he will lay snares everywhere to keep you from its exercise. He may suggest that you are first to be holy within, or that such and such is not your duty. He particularly knows how vividly to hold before you (and to exaggerate) those ulterior motives which he knows are yet to be found in the heart of an imperfect man, and which will readily surface in the best of deeds -- yes, even if you were free from them prior to this moment, he will suggest, "See, that is your purpose." When you sing, pray in a gathering or in the presence of others, drop a tear during a sermon, give a gift, or rebuke and exhort others, he will immediately suggest: "You did that to be seen of men." He will thus either prevent you from proceeding, or will rob you of the comfort you would otherwise have derived. Therefore, be acquainted with his wickedness, pay no attention to his interjections, proceed, and exercise this virtue deficiently and yet to the best of your ability -- and the Lord will render you stronger in this area. His Major Objective: To Bring About the Commission of Sin The devil is neither satisfied with preventing you from doing good nor spoiling what you are doing, but also endeavors to bring you to the commission of all manner of sin. At one time he will stir up David to be proud and thus to count the people; then he will cause a beautiful Bathsheba to be present in order to entice to fornication. At another time he will give opportunity to be envious, backbite, lie, indulge excessively, or to commit some other sin. It makes no difference to him, as long as he can cause you to fall. He will pursue you at great length and will use a thousand means and devices.

(1) He frequently begins in a remote fashion, concealing his objective and goal. He will create the wonderful illusion for you that you need to relax and will thus seek to make you idle, thereby making you a suitable object for him. He will create the illusion that something is lawful entertainment, and will thus seek to make you elated. He will then suggest various things like a salesman who asks, "Would you like this?" He will go from the one thing to the other to see if there is something in which you might become interested.

(2) He begins with small things which initially do not appear to be sinful, thus concealing their sinfulness. As the soul yields to small sins, she will lose her tenderness and the tender fear of God. He will thus proceed from small or moderate sins to a reflecting upon vain things, thereby endeavoring to present these things as being delightful -- and thus the soul will assume a sinful disposition. Therefore, be careful and do not yield to anything, regardless of how small a sin may appear to be.

(3) Then again he will seek to stir you up to the commission of great sins -- particularly those sins to which you are naturally most inclined. It is true, he does not know the heart, but he has taken notice of the sin which you commit most frequently, and the sin to which he previously has most easily enticed you. He also listens to the confession of your sins and takes note of all the attending circumstances. From this he concludes what your secret and bosom sins are. These he pursues, and sometimes can present sin so suddenly and as being so delightful to the flesh, that it ignites instantly, as gunpowder. That sin we thought to have under control will then suddenly become lively again. He will then, so to speak, cause the soul to reel, which may result in a persevering in this sin. Therefore, be on your guard.

(4) When you then perceive too late what you have done, and desire to return to the Lord to have your inner peace, former tenderness, and purity of heart restored, he will then turn the tables and will strive to lead you into the commission of other internal sins: impatience, fretfulness, unbelief, and despair. Therefore, remain steadfast.

Possible Objection: These are my sins; they proceed out of my own heart. Answer: Some blame the devil too much in order that they may excuse themselves, and others do not blame him enough. I maintain that your own heart is evil enough to bring forth all these things. Consider this to be a most certain truth: Wherever your own will and affections are involved as far as reflecting upon or executing a given matter -- this is your own sin, for which you are accountable.

However, it is also true (a fact of which you should clearly and continually remind yourself) that: First, the devil seeks to meddle in everything, is continually on the alert to get the better of you, and will, under whatever pretense it may be, either rile you up or push you onward in the commission of certain sins. Secondly, you may indeed believe the devil to be the instigator:

(1) When the above-mentioned matters occur suddenly to you with unusual clarity, appearing to be most advantageous, sweet, and delightful. (I repeat, they appear to be so, for the devil cannot affect the will, and is not able to render them sweet.) (2) When motives are suddenly joined to this which are even contrary to your judgment and will.

(3) When in addition these matters are forcefully and authoritatively impressed upon you, in order thus to overwhelm the will by such dominating directives.

(4) If the heart is brought into turmoil, and there is an extraordinary lack of composure, and a driving passion. If you are thus guilty of a sin of commission or omission, then recognize the hand of Satan in this; he is both tempter and instigator. And if some of these sins make some inroads, be it known that he himself will also join in. Thus, you are to understand the devil to be the instigator and you the follower. Be on the alert, and hate the devil so much that you would neither give him a hearing nor obey him.

Satan's Interjection of Sinful Thoughts

There are also other strifes of which he alone is the author, having as his sole objective to torment God's children. God's children are not partakers in these sins, except when they permit themselves to be incapacitated to serve God in faith, hope, and love. Only their negative frame is their sin. They should be stronger and thus not permit themselves to be troubled in a sinful manner by his turmoil. However, the interjections themselves are not your sin, but the devil's. Nevertheless (take note of this) he will continually seek to convince you that it is your own sin. If you indeed begin to believe this, his interjections will have their effect upon you and bring you in a grievous condition. If, however, you recognize the devil's words as being his language, you will then be able to resist them that much more readily and be less troubled.

These assaults occur in so many different ways and relative to so many different matters, that it is impossible to recite them all. I also do not desire to present them all and would rather be entirely silent on the matter. In order that his wickedness may be exposed, however, and God's children be armed against the insinuation, "You are the culprit and it proceeds from your own heart," I shall present some matters in a general sense.

(1) Some interjections appear to be entirely infantile and ludicrous; however, they are of a far-reaching nature and generally have painful consequences. For example, he can suggest, "Say this, or say that." He may go a bit further and add, "If you don't say this, and if you don't deal with this, you are damned; if you do it, all is well." This goes a step further, if, in a compelling manner, he demands that you acquiesce in this or that, and thereupon seeks to unsettle you, insinuating that you were the one who acquiesced. Thus, that which appears to be so infantile culminated in much agitation.

(2) Sometimes he quickly interjects a passage of Scripture which is difficult to understand, and he will force that upon us either to charge God foolishly or to disown our spiritual state, stirring us up to respond to this. Once a person begins to defend the truth, God, and his spiritual state, the devil will get an increasing hold of him, for he is a devious deceiver. Therefore, one must not respond -- no matter how it may go -- but allow it to pass by.

(3) Sometimes he will direct a person's attention to eternal election; that the one person is called and converted instead of another person, thus resulting in the damnation of so many people. He will do this in order to accuse God. Once one begins to reflect upon this and desires to defend God, he is caught in the snare. Therefore, resist this and do not respond, for you will thereby become all the more agitated. The Lord's will is holy.

(4) Sometimes he makes use of a bodily or spiritual cross to accuse God concerning His dealings by interjecting all manner of things which weigh the soul down incomparably more than the cross. However, be on guard against such interjections and ignore them. Adhere to the fact that God is sovereign. He does whatever pleases Him, and will not give an account to man of His doings.

(5) Sometimes he knows how to lead someone, whom he has been sifting for some time, round about in such a manner, that the person, when desiring to come before the Lord or when beginning to pray, appears to be focused on an object other than God. Due to obscure thoughts and the devil's mysterious operation upon the imagination, it will then appear as if he were praying to that object rather than to God. This is a great impediment to prayer.

(6) Sometimes he acts as a prophet and interjects: "Such and such will befall you; you will turn out thus, and you will yet come to the commission of such deeds." He does not only interject this, but he will forcefully impose upon the person that it will certainly come to pass in such a manner. He will repeat this over and over again so that there comes no end to his prophesying. Sometimes he will previously begin to show such things in a dream and would wish this dream to be perceived as being of divine origin in order that he may make it more emphatic. Subsequent to this he will again make use of this dream and will impress the imagery of these matters in such a manner that it causes much agitation. And thus he afflicts the body and the soul by generating fear for future matters which he has foretold.

(7) Sometimes he comes with fiery darts and evil thoughts about God, doing so with such vehemence and persistence, that the soul has no rest day or night. The poor soul is then mortally wounded, and can neither endure nor resist those thoughts. They return with increasing force, and it appears as if those images are his own thoughts -- which aggravates his misery. In these and similar assaults the devil operates under cover. His entire effort and device is to suggest that it is not he who interjects such thoughts, but that they proceed from the heart of the assaulted person himself. He will suggest that such sins cannot coexist with grace, and that therefore the person will be eternally damned. And when would there come an end to these assaults if the Lord at His time did not intervene and rebuke Satan?

How Interjections of Satan May Be Distinguished from a Person's Own Thoughts

Question: Do not these thoughts originate with the person himself? It seems to me that all this proceeds from my own heart. If I only knew that they were the sins of the devil and his interjections, I would already be half delivered. Can we know that this is so -- and if yes, whereby can we know this?

Answer: First, all sinful frames of unbelief, despondency, fretfulness, and despair are a person's own sins, even though they at times are caused by the assaults of Satan. The initiative did not come from the person, but from the devil. You have given him too much room to operate, and you have become excessively troubled by it. You should not have paid so much attention to it.

Secondly, let us assume that all the things described came forth out of your own heart. Then what? Is it unforgivable? No; Christ stands ready to receive all those who are heavy laden with sin -- also the chief of sinners and blasphemers (1 Timothy 1:13).

Evasive Argument: I have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost, and that is unforgivable.

Answer: This is not the sin against the Holy Ghost, for there is no remorse over that sin. Instead, it grieves you, you are oppressed by it, and you pray. Thirdly, you should know that these and similar experiences are the lot, by far, of the majority of God's children. Should it therefore surprise you that it also befalls you?

Evasive Argument: My disposition is entirely different, however. I have not found it in the things mentioned, and I have never heard nor read of a similar disposition.

Answer: Perhaps you know but little of what others have experienced, and thus you cannot say, "Others do not experience this." If you therefore calmly examine the cases described above, I believe that you will find your case there. I did not want to deal with them more distinctly and comprehensively than that. He who experiences these things will be able to detect his own case from these implicit presentations.

Fourthly, that the interjections mentioned are not yours, but rather the sins of the devil, can be ascertained when:

(1) They occur suddenly, unexpectedly, and as lightning -- even when one is involved in the performance of a good and holy work. For all that proceeds from our own heart gradually takes shape by way of reasoning, and generally is triggered by a given occasion.

(2) They are forcefully imposed upon us against our will, and in a manner whereby we cannot avoid it. The soul rejects it and wishes neither to think upon it nor to approve of it in the least. Nevertheless these thoughts return time and again. It is thus evident that we are merely suffering as someone who is being beaten, and that these arrows are being fired from without. Therefore, use your mind and judge accordingly.

(3) They are accompanied with terror so that the soul immediately loses its composure, becomes very agitated, and becomes incapable of reasoning rationally. The very opposite is the case when sins proceed from a person's own heart.

(4) The interjections are unnatural and are thus repulsive to our nature. If this is your experience, you may and must be assured that they are not your sins, but rather the devil's. Therefore, you ought not to be that troubled by them, but resist the devil with contempt.

Question: There are some with whom the thought may yet occur: "There are times when I can truly feel that they are not of an external source, but are my own thoughts."

Answer: A person is frequently ignorant of the manner in which his soul functions, and he is therefore unable to distinguish what proceeds from the representation or interjection of Satan, or from himself. Since, however, we are of the opinion that we do understand this, we are of the opinion that they proceed from the soul herself. When another person utters dreadful things, you will also understand what he is saying. It troubles you, and yet you know that they are not your sins, but rather those of the one who is speaking. Such is also true here.

Secondly, you must also know that when the devil has been driven away from you, you will yet maintain a fearful disposition for some time as a result of what had previously been interjected. These things have also not been erased from your memory as yet; however, it is nothing more than a memory. However, this fearful disposition and the memory of it is not the sin. Indeed, this fearful disposition even proves your love for God, for you wish neither to hear nor think any foolish things about Him. The Lord Enjoins His People to Battle Against the Devil

It does not suffice to know that those fiery darts have been shot by the devil, for we shall thereby not be delivered from them. Rather, it is the Lord's will that we shall battle against the devil, and in the way of strife He will give the victory. You may ask: "What shall I do?"

(1) The best you can do in this respect is to ignore, resist, and make no response; let it all pass by. Consider this to be similar to someone standing by your window and continually yelling these things at you, which would be very troublesome and grievous to you. However, you would not be as upset as if you yourself were speaking these things.

(2) View this as an affliction -- just as if you had bodily pain. Remain quiet, possess your soul in patience, and always consider the hand of God to be in it. The Lord has decreed it to be so, wants to keep you humble, and has determined how far it will go (Job 1:12).

(3) Hold fast to your faith. Even though it is not in lively exercise, let it nevertheless be at the bottom of your heart. Therefore, ascertain by way of your previous experience that you are a child of God; however, for the moment refrain from examining yourself.

(4) Know that the Lord Jesus has conquered the devil and has crushed his head (Genesis 3:15). His dominion has been eradicated Hebrews 11:1-40. Therefore, be of good courage, considering that he is a conquered enemy.

(5) Consider the intercessory prayer of the Lord Jesus: "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not" (Luke 22:32).

(6) Believe that the outcome will be good. This is according to the promises, and has been confirmed by the examples of others and your own experience during other seasons of strife. The more severe your trials are, the greater will be the measure of comfort, peace, joy, and strength the Lord will grant you. You yourself will realize that during such strife you are kept from many other sins and manifestations of pride.

(7) Be much in prayer. If you feel that you have but little strength to persevere earnestly and to enlarge upon your request, then look time and again to the Lord. Let the Lord see and hear your turning to Him, as well as your sighs and your ejaculatory prayers. Therefore, wait also upon Him from whom your help must come, and do not neglect your devotional exercises.

(8) Persevere during this season of darkness and agitation. Follow the Word of God, and direct your goings accordingly -- both in living a godly life as well as in the performance of your calling. Always keep yourself occupied therein, for things will never be more difficult for you than when you are idle.

(9) If you can avail yourself of an experienced minister or another strong Christian, reveal your strife to them and do not try to grapple with it alone. The opportunity to pour out your heart to them, their support, as well as their intercession will be a suitable means to be encouraged -- and from the moment you may receive some courage, you will increase in strength.

Believers Exhorted to Render Strong Resistance to Satan

Therefore, be determined to give strong resistance. To be encouraged in doing so, stir yourself up to reflect upon these matters.

First, it is the will of God that His children would jointly form an army under their Prince and King Jesus, in order to battle against the devil and his angels. Such a battle is expressed in the following passages: "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels" (Revelation 12:7); "Behold a white horse; and He that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. And the armies ... followed Him upon white horses" Revelation 19:11; Revelation 19:14. The Lord Jesus has destroyed the devil by His death; that is, He has removed from him all power he had over His people. By making satisfaction for their sins by His death, He has delivered them out of the hands of the tyrant to whom they had become subject through sin, so that he has no dominion over them whatsoever -- nor ever will have. In His wisdom and goodness, however, God has granted him some limited power to assault the army of Christ as an enemy, so that His children may be exercised in battle and may achieve victory over him while thus engaged -- to their glory and his shame. Since it is thus a fact that you have joined an army at war, it behooves you to fight valiantly, for all who are in this army oppose this enemy -- doing so under the supervision of our General and the holy angels. Therefore, be willing and valiant.

Secondly, when we consider the nature of this enemy, we observe that he has a deadly and dreadful hatred for our beloved Lord Jesus, and for all who cleave to Him -- and particularly for you. This hatred causes him to rage vehemently, and he, "as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter 5:8). He is subtle, cruel, and tireless in seeking to rob you of your advantage, to harm you, and to hinder you in your conversation. This must arouse your hatred against him in return. Observe this in David so that you may emulate him: "Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate Thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against Thee? I hate them with perfect hatred: I count them mine enemies” (Psalms 139:21-22).

Such hatred will not allow him to have the pleasure to prevail over you in a given matter, and to triumph over you. This hatred will even motivate you not to permit him to remain near you. It will motivate you to chase him away so that he will flee from you. This hatred will cause you to rejoice when you trample him under foot and thwart his actions. God has given you the ability to hate. It is a natural propensity, and therefore use it most vehemently against him.

Thirdly, it is a very shameful thing if you permit him to gain the victory over you by carelessness, unbelief, or by yielding to your lusts -- lusts which he stimulated and stirred up in you. For be assured that in a subtle manner he has his hand in everything. How shameful it will be when you, upon returning to the Lord, are rebuked by Him for having been so fainthearted by either having yielded to him immediately or by having rendered him but little resistance! On the other hand, it is a glorious matter if you have valiantly fought against his assaults, even if you were wounded in doing so.

Such valor will give you much freedom to approach unto the Lord. How sweet it is when the Lord shows that He takes pleasure in your having been engaged in warfare (even if you did so with but little strength), since you have battled with all your strength and in the uprightness of your heart! How sweet it is when the Lord, in response to this, grants you some of the hidden manna, which He has promised to those who overcome! How sweet it is when He says, “Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!” (Matthew 25:21).

Fourthly, the devil is a conquered enemy, and therefore the victory is certain. The Lord Jesus, as the Seed of the woman, has bruised his head Genesis 3:15, and has destroyed him by His death (Hebrews 2:14). He has spoiled principalities and powers, made a show of them openly, and has triumphed over them by way of the cross (Colossians 2:15). He would indeed be a fainthearted warrior who would not dare to attack a mortally wounded enemy who is already down and yet struggles a bit. God has permitted the devil to still struggle in order to grieve him by having a poor son of man despise, trample upon, and inflict deadly wounds upon him. He will never again regain power over a child of God. He may inflict some wounds, but every believer will ultimately conquer him in the power of Christ and then they shall jubilate: “Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Corinthians 15:54-57). “They overcame him (the accuser of the brethren who has been cast down, the devil) by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death” (Revelation 12:11).

Therefore, be valiant against him. Be aware of your weakness, however, and do not trust in your own strength, for this could suddenly cause you to fall. Stay close to the chief captain, Jesus. Take refuge by Him, take hold of His strength, and fight by His strength. Pray without ceasing: “Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.” Be careful and take unto you the whole armor of God, gird your loins about with truth, and put on the breastplate of righteousness; let your feet be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; and take the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. “Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance" (Ephesians 6:13-18).

Therefore, "be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Revelation 2:10).

101. Chapter 96: The Power of Indwelling Corruption

----- CHAPTER NINETY-SIX ----- The Power of Indwelling Corruption

Indwelling corruption is the most powerful of all causes of backsliding. In regeneration God grants His people spiritual life by uniting them to Christ. This life is predisposed toward growth -- and indeed it does grow. You would be able to observe this if you would compare your current condition with your condition when you were first changed. As it is true in the natural realm that the one person becomes taller and stronger than another, so it likewise occurs in the spiritual realm. In the natural realm a person will grow until he reaches full maturity, and then his growth ceases. However, in the spiritual realm perfection is reserved for eternity. Here one longs and strives for it, but in this life he does not attain it. In the natural realm one person will mature in a healthy manner, increase in strength, and retain his strength as it increases. Another person will, however, be hindered in his growth by many trials; and by way of illness or other occurrences he may lose his strength. A man may even become as weak as a child. Such is also the case in the spiritual realm. The one is as a plant which matures in its youth. He is as a shining light which arises until it shines forth at full noon. He goes from strength to strength, and flourishes like the palm tree and a cedar in Lebanon. Another person, however, encounters many things that impede him, and he loses his strength. Indwelling corruption, which at times gains much strength, is among the causes of a decrease in strength. It is this we now wish to discuss.

It Torments and Grieves Believers That indwelling corruption greatly torments and grieves believers is evident from:

(1) The complaints of the saints: "O Lord, why hast Thou made us to err from Thy ways, and hardened our heart from Thy fear?" (Isaiah 63:17); "But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am!" (Romans 7:23-24).

(2) Such texts in which believers confess the power of indwelling corruption: "Iniquities prevail against me" (Psalms 65:3).

(3) Such texts in which saints pray to be kept from this. "Keep back Thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me" (Psalms 19:13).

(4) Related warnings. "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption" (Ephesians 4:30); "But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin" (Hebrews 3:13).

It Does Not Have Dominion over Believers

Since regeneration is imperfect, the old man always remains present in the regenerate person. The old man retains its nature, ignorance, will, affections, and delight in sin -- all this under the pretense of being honest, prudent, and delightful. In reality, however, the old man abhors that which is good, considering it to be aggravating, disadvantageous, distasteful, and impossible. It is thus that the warfare between the flesh and the spirit is engendered. "For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would" (Galatians 5:17). In this battle, at times the one wins and at another time the other wins. To the extent that the one wins the other loses. The spirit will never expel the flesh entirely. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after" (Php 3:12). In turn, the flesh will never expel the spirit entirely, nor have dominion and be triumphant over it. "His seed remaineth in him ... because he is born of God" (1 John 3:9); "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Romans 6:14). To have dominion is to have fully prevailed over a given party, so that the conquered one surrenders and subjects himself to the conqueror, thereby rendering obedience. This will never be the case here. The flesh does receive such a measure of strength that it can activate both the natural faculties of the soul as well as the members of the body. This enables it to execute its desire in a manner which cannot be prevented by the spirit. However, the regenerated man can never be brought to the point -- not for one moment -- that he would subject himself to the will of the flesh for the purpose of rendering obedience to it, either willingly or unwillingly. The regenerated man will always oppose, even if it were but by sighing against it -- thus showing his aversion and crying out as if violence were done upon him. A man can take a child by the arm against his or her will and cause the child to walk rapidly alongside of him. The child will indeed move his or her feet; however, not for the purpose of walking, but rather to avoid falling. Every step is an act of resistance. Such is also true when the spirit is overwhelmed by the power of indwelling corruption.

Causes Whereby Indwelling Corruption Exerts Great Strength at Times At times indwelling corruption functions in its customary manner; that is, by enticing and drawing to that which is evil, and hindering and defiling that which is good -- all the while enduring continual resistance from the principle of spiritual life. Occasionally it will receive greater strength, however, and will gain a greater advantage over the spirit. This can be caused by:

(1) God withdrawing His normal influence in a small measure in order to try a person, to humble him, to make Jesus more precious to him, and to cause him to rely more on the strength of the Lord. When this occurs, spiritual life cannot withstand the great power of indwelling corruption.

(2) The occurrence of certain circumstances -- be it a fear for one's life, or the loss of honor and belongings -- which previously did not exist, causing the lusts to be stirred up, and to become capable of seducing man into the commission of certain sins. This can happen by way of a sudden and unexpected incident, or by the duration of a certain situation -- and thus results in spiritual life being subdued.

(3) A change in the condition of the body whereby a person becomes more capable of a given sin. The body will then be more stimulated and stirred up to be entertained by such a sin. The condition of the body will trigger many sins, thereby igniting the lusts of the soul, and the soul in turn will indulge in her lusts by way of the body.

(4) The devil being given a greater measure of freedom whereby he assaults a person with new devices against which such a person is neither armed, nor yet has had any experience. A person will be readily overcome by this, and spiritual life will be in such bondage that it can hardly move one way or the other.

The Effects of Indwelling Corruption The effects of the extraordinary power of indwelling corruption are both sinful, grievous, and dangerous, for indwelling corruption affects all the faculties of the soul and the body.

First, it activates the intellect. This faculty is the first and essential beginning of man's activity. The lusts of the old man are, however, frequently stirring at an early stage already; they will affect the intellect and even stupefy it. We shall thus neither see the sinfulness of sin and its harmful consequences, nor consider the omniscience, omnipresence, goodness, and righteousness of God. We shall then quietly forget the Lord; or if the Lord manifests Himself to some degree (or if the new nature by faith views itself as in the presence of God), this view will make no impression nor yield any power to resist sin.

Secondly, even the will can be assaulted. The new man abhors that which is evil because of its hostility toward the will of God, and finds delight in that which is good as being pleasing to God. However, the old man has a will contrary thereto. This so overpowers the faculty of the will that the new man does not have the power to activate either its aversion for sin or its desire for virtue. Even when, in spite of the vehement manifestation of lust, the new man manifests itself in some measure and strives to break through, it will succumb when a sinful desire violently draws the person away to the commission of sin. The act itself is then committed, so that it appears that the will in its entirety had no other desire but to commit evil. Even when we are not in the violent throes of our lust, we often cannot make a complete and heartfelt resolution from that moment on to depart fully from this sin, never to commit it again, but to be on guard against it and to battle it with all our might. Occasionally we shall make such a resolution, but it is feeble, superficial, does not encompass the very recesses of the heart -- and thus wavers. Yes, we shall even accuse ourselves of not dealing with God in an upright manner. Nevertheless, there is some uprightness, but its efficacy is such that it is not capable of banishing the lust and sensibly taking control of the entire will. As far as remaining steadfast, there is an added feeling of hopelessness, knowing that all previous resolutions have proven to be unfruitful.

Thirdly, this indwelling corruption vehemently stirs up the affections, and once the affections have been set in motion, they can tolerate neither consultation nor delay, but as madmen they will run to execute that sin. They set the entire mechanism of man's inborn tendencies in motion and will drive a man on with insane intensity. The affections thus set everything in motion for the satisfaction of our lusts, and if the new man in any way opposes itself to this, he will be assaulted with all their might. Observe this in the following passages: "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death" (James 1:14-15); "Abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (1 Peter 2:11).

Fourthly, the inner man having been overcome by indwelling corruption, this corruption now permeates the motions of soul and body. It sets our thoughts in motion to reflect upon the sin at hand and to find delight in such thoughts, knowing that such a thing either never will come to pass, could come to pass, or that we would not want to commit the deed. Yet, one will stir up his lusts toward the commission of that deed. Indwelling corruption will also move us to the commission of the deed itself. It will activate the members of the body, and for that purpose will utilize the eyes, ears, mouth, hands and feet, and all members which are involved, in the commission of a sin. It is not satisfied with having committed the sin at hand only once, but it wants to commit this sin by renewal.

Believers Will Commit the Same Sins Again

There is no sin from which a regenerated person is safeguarded in an absolute sense. No one can say: "I shall never fall into that sin." A person will never be delivered from the indwelling corruption of his nature. It will always prevent and defile that which is good, always stir up lusts, and daily cause a man to offend in many things, doing so either out of carelessness, or due to the sudden occurrence of an event. At times there is a very besetting sin, however, which is triggered by the disposition of the body or because the body is repeatedly stimulated due to there being continual opportunity for this sin. The power of this is such that we repeatedly fall into it. This can particularly be true of a sin which occurs in secret, and thus without the knowledge of any other person. It can also happen that one falls into a heinous sin which is punishable by civil law, being accompanied with great offense. However, such a great fall generally causes us to have a greater aversion for that sin than other sins, so that we shall no longer be tempted by this sin our entire lifetime. It can nevertheless happen -- and occasionally it does happen -- that such a person by renewal falls into such heinous sins, particularly such sins which are triggered by the disposition of the body. This does not only relate to the renewed commission of this sin in its prevailing intensity before a heartfelt repentance from this sin has occurred (so that it is more to be considered a continuation rather than a succumbing); but one may also fall again into this sin after having mourned over it in a heartfelt manner, having received Christ unto reconciliation, and having made a resolution against that sin. Sometimes this occurs shortly thereafter. It may appear at times as if that sin has been overcome -- yes, even mortified -- so that we no longer fear it. And yet, it can nevertheless happen that we fall into it by renewal.

(1) The examples of Abraham, Isaac, Lot, and Peter teach us that there is a falling into the same sin.

(2) The seed of all corruption is still within a person -- and thus also of that sin.

(3) There is no promise in God's Word that someone will not fall again into that sin into which he has once fallen.

(4) Believers are capable of falling into other sins; why then can they not fall into the same sin again?

(5) When God withdraws His Spirit, spiritual life will be too weak to resist that same sin when it resurfaces. This is particularly true when there is every opportunity for it, the body is stimulated, and the devil assaults. The Response of the Converted Person to His Indwelling Corruption Objection: This is the true condition and life of an unconverted person, and such persons must therefore not be considered as being converted.

Answer: If someone were thus inclined to all manner of sin at all times, and would be without strife in this regard (there being no conflict between light, the conscience and the lusts, but rather between will and will, affection and affection); and if all this would transpire without a sorrowful languishing under it -- without seeking, supplicating, weeping for forgiveness, receiving Jesus unto sanctification as well as justification; without repeated restoration and a walking in the fear of God -- then I will admit that such a person is not converted. He ought not to comfort himself with his weakness and the fact that saints fall into sin. Wherever true grace is to be found in the heart, however, and when such persons come into the above-mentioned condition, the following matters will manifest themselves -- sometimes more, sometimes less.

First, their indwelling corruption is not so powerful relative to all sins. The reason the regenerate forego many sins is neither because their nature is disinclined toward them, nor due to the absence of temptation, nor because they find no delight in besetting sins -- as is true in the life of the unconverted. Rather, they resist other sins, opportunities, and stimuli due to being united with God; they fear God, and have love for the will of God. They are thus not vulnerable to every type of sin. However, this particular besetting sin has too much power. Spiritual life battles against this sin, (as has been shown above) but it cannot prevail. It is overpowered and taken captive, but it will never be dominated and brought into subjection.

Secondly, indwelling corruption does not always exert its power toward a given besetting sin. Spiritual life battling against it frequently has the upper hand, arises from falls, resists temptations, avoids opportunities, prayerfully takes hold of the Lord's strength, and remains close to the Lord. One thus proceeds sweetly, carefully, and in the fear of the Lord, and thereby is kept from that sin for a longer or shorter time, even though it will manifest itself again and will seek to resurface.

Thirdly, when indwelling corruption has the upper hand, the believer is neither joyous nor happy -- as an unconverted person would be when he may indulge in his lust without harm or shame. Instead, there is much sorrow and heartache. He languishes and spends his life in sorrow, since (due to this sin) he must miss communion with God, peace, and the sensible assurance of being reconciled. Furthermore, his spiritual life weakens, and he cannot glorify God in his station in life. The more vehemently his lust appears to have free reign in this trial, the more the grief of his soul is multiplied. Furthermore, when the temptation is most vehement, and if he is prevented from committing his sin, he will not be irritated as the unconverted are, but will rejoice and thank the Lord for it. Hereby we thus discover the distinction between the commission of sin by the unconverted and the power of indwelling corruption as it strives with grace in the converted. Add to this what we have said in chapter 14 concerning prevailing and incidental sins. From this, one can be clearly convinced whether sin has dominion over him. If sin still has dominion over you, let this convince you that you are yet in an unconverted state, and that if you remain thus and die in that condition, you will be damned eternally. Let it therefore stir you up to flee from the wrath to come by a speedy repentance and exercise of faith in Christ -- doing so while He is yet offered to you and before it is too late.

If you may perceive that sin has no dominion over you, but that there is spiritual life in you which strives against indwelling corruption -- even though it frequently suffers defeat -- acknowledge the grace of God, be grateful for it, rejoice over it, and let it be a means to strive against indwelling corruption with renewed courage.

For, on the one hand, you taste how bitter it is to be a captive to sin; how you are continually living in bondage, restless, grieved, and full of fear; how God, in whose communion there is joy and life, hides Himself from you. You taste how vulnerable you are to all manner of temptations by the flesh, the devil, and the world; how the habitual disposition of spiritual life weakens; and how impossible it is for you to root out this indwelling corruption, which so often flourishes and increases in strength when spiritual life is weak. You taste how incapable you are to attain to the purpose of your calling: the glorification of God; and how fearful you are of death and the prospect of expiring in darkness and misery. On the other hand, you do know that your inner spiritual life craves help to be delivered from this prison and to be set at liberty; and how it cries out for such help. You are acquainted with the immutability of the love of God toward you, which you can conclude from the conviction that the Holy Spirit of grace is within you. You know the fullness of the Lord Jesus, who is ready to communicate to you grace for grace out of His fullness. You know how becoming it is for you, being the temple of the Holy Ghost, to cleanse that temple and to expel indwelling corruption. Oh, how delightful it is to repent! It renders joy to God, the Lord Jesus, angels, ministers, other believers, and to you yourself. Sin will then lose its potency, all tasks will seem easier to you, and you will increase in strength.

102. Chapter 97: Spiritual Darkness

----- CHAPTER NINETY-SEVEN ----- Spiritual Darkness In regeneration man is drawn out of darkness into marvellous light. He receives enlightened eyes of the understanding and perceives invisible realities. Those matters, which are hidden for the natural man and viewed from a natural perspective, are viewed in an entirely different manner by the person who has been illuminated. He who was darkness itself becomes enlightened in the Lord, and the Holy Spirit shines in his heart to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. This light gladdens the heart, warms the soul, causes it to burn with love, and changes and sanctifies the entire man. Therefore, they who begin to see this light become so enamored with it that they desire to be led further and further into this light. Indeed, in doing so they do not take note of the distinction between the light of beholding (which may and must be desired here below, but is reserved for heaven), and the light of faith, which is bestowed upon those who walk upon earth, enabling them to make their way through darkness with joy. By not considering this distinction, they are not satisfied to walk in the light of faith, but wish to live here in the light of beholding. They thus bring trouble upon their soul and begin to think that they are yet entirely in the dark and unconverted. Yes, this can cause great darkness to come upon them, so that even the light of faith becomes so dim that they cannot perceive any light. This spiritual darkness is not identical to what the unconverted have, who are yet entirely blind. This also does not compare to what beginners in grace experience, in whom there is a glimmer of light. We also do not understand by this the waves of darkness which occasionally come upon a believer and readily dissipate.

Spiritual Darkness: The Spiritual Disease of a Christian This darkness is, however, a spiritual disease of a person who has made some progress in the Christian life. In the absence of the normal illuminating influences of the Holy Spirit, and due to the residual darkness of his old nature, the light which is in him becomes so dim and is so obscured that he now beholds the spiritual matters, which he previously perceived with clarity, as a distant glimmer and only depicts what has transpired in the past by way of memory. This causes him to be without joy, warmth, and direction; and to live in fear and anxiety, causing him to wander about aimlessly, as in a desert. Not only does experience teach that the believer does come into such darkness (so that many do not need any other proof except their own case), but the Word of God shows us abundantly that this is so. Those who are in such a condition need to take note of that, since they generally come to the conclusion that they are without grace, being of the opinion that the godly do not come into such a condition. That which befell Abraham, the father of the faithful, also befalls his children. "And, lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him" (Genesis 15:12). Job testifies of this concerning himself: "Behold, I go forward, but He is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive Him: on the left hand, where He doth work, but I cannot behold Him: He hideth Himself on the right hand, that I cannot see Him" (Job 23:8-9). The church complains of this: "He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light" (Lamentations 3:2). The Lord threatens this: "Give glory to the Lord your God, before He cause darkness" (Jeremiah 13:16). The prophet gives counsel to those who are in such a state: "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of His servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God" (Isaiah 50:10). There are seasons of darkness as a result of persecution and the absence of comfort, as well as due to blindness. However, these generally coexist in God's children, for external darkness does bring forth internal darkness. The Causes of Spiritual Darkness

Natural vision can be obstructed by various causes: the disappearance of the sun, the thickening of clouds, the interference of opaque objects, disease of the eyes, or staring at the sun. Spiritual darkness likewise has various causes:

(1) the disappearance of the Sun of Righteousness, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the withholding of the illuminating influence of the Holy Spirit;

(2) the devil obscuring this light by clouding the issues, generating the smoke of error and heresy, generating false light, obscuring the truth, and seducing a person by way of deceivers;

(3) a person not giving heed to the light of faith, considering this to be too insignificant; a weakening of love for the truth, a striving for something higher; an insisting on being illuminated by the light of beholding, and by being desirous of receiving light other than that light by which the Lord commonly leads his people;

(4) the turning away of our eyes from the light by yielding to our lusts, by closing our eyes, and by strewing sand in our eyes -- whereby the truth in her efficacy and preciousness is not perceived;

(5) exerting our spiritual vision too much to comprehend the perfections and incomprehensible ways of God. This, rather than yielding us more light, will bring us into more darkness. For when we depart from the light of God's Word and cannot attain to an immediate beholding, our corrupt intellect and irrational reason [Note: Dutch: "redelooze rede."] will come to the foreground, deceiving the soul with false contemplations whereby true light is increasingly obscured. The Consequences of Spiritual Darkness This spiritual darkness brings believers into a sorrowful and sinful state, for: First, there will be despondency. The light of the eyes is good and rejoices the heart. Dark days, on the contrary, are days of sorrow; the night encloses everything and oppresses the heart. Such is also true for believers who have seen the light, who were accustomed to walk in the light of God's countenance, and did rejoice in the light, but now must miss that light, and are surrounded by thick darkness. All of this will distress the heart, and a dismal sorrow overcomes them, so that everything, so to speak, grieves them. They think about former days when the Lord caused His light to shine upon them, and they traversed through darkness by His light. This has now disappeared, however, and there is grievous darkness.

Secondly, during darkness the wild beasts come forth out of their holes. Likewise all manner of sinful motions manifest themselves in this darkness, such as unbelief, despondency, fretfulness, and murmuring. Even fleeting atheistic thoughts arise in the heart, as well as all manner of sinful reasoning to bring the soul into additional darkness.

Thirdly, darkness is a fearful thing. There is a terror by night, and an arrow which flies by day (Psalms 91:5). Such is also the case here. We shall hardly be able to discern what grace is, and are not able to perceive it in ourselves. We shall be fearful of the wrath of God and damnation. The devil shoots forth his terrifying arrows; our thoughts and dreams will terrify us, and we shall neither find rest nor a place of refuge anywhere.

Fourthly, he who, in the dark, walks across a moor in which there are many trails, will easily go astray. Such is also the case here. "He that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth" (John 12:35). When he is alone, his thoughts will wander, and when he is among people, he will stumble in his words. If he must undertake something or if a decision needs to be made, he will err in his choice, and the outcome of his endeavor will be wrong. Everywhere he is ensnared, and he is in bondage in whatever he undertakes.

Fifthly, he who walks in darkness will readily stumble over something that lies upon his pathway, not being able to see it -- and irregularities cause him to stumble readily. Such is also true here. God's ways are no longer in his heart and he walks upon rough ways. Here he sees something and there he hears something, and it offends him immediately. Here there are temptations to err in doctrine, there to sin, and there opposition reveals itself. Everywhere there are snares, but he does not see them. This causes him to be easily ensnared, and the more he moves about, the more he becomes ensnared. He cannot deliver himself, for he knows not where he will place his foot.

Sixthly, darkness is an unfruitful season. In the darkness of winter, trees stand there barren and as if they were dead. Near the south and north poles hardly any vegetation or grass grows, and whatever is sown or planted in a place which cannot be reached by the sun, cannot grow and will be in a sad condition. Such is also the case here. When a thick darkness envelops the soul, she does not bring forth any fruits worthy of repentance. She is barren and weak, does not give the Lord who has planted her any delight, is not an ornament to the church, and this planting of the Lord is neither a matter of joy to other godly persons nor attractive to the unconverted. During that season she will thus not answer to the purpose for which she has been appointed.

Seventhly, during darkness it is cold. During the winters and beneath the pole-caps everything becomes immobile due to the frost. Such is also true here. When someone comes into a state of darkness, he will readily slip into a state in which he is cold, stiff, and insensitive. We shall shortly discuss this state of insensitivity more comprehensively.

Means to Avoid Spiritual Darkness

Since the state of darkness is of such a harmful nature, everyone must see to it that he does not come into such a condition, and therefore:

- (1) Be on guard against those things whereby you come into such a condition -- as has been shown earlier.
- (2) Highly esteem the light you have, however little it may appear to be in your own eyes.
- (3) Rejoice in the fact that you are acquainted with God, Christ, and the way of salvation. Furthermore, rejoice that you understand the Word of God in its spiritual sense, since you see so many who are without this light. "Ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light" (John 5:35).
- (4) Give heed to the light which shines forth in the Word of God, direct your goings accordingly, and walk in it. "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you" (John 12:35).

If you have been overcome by darkness, do not give up courage, for many of the godly come into this condition. It is not a sign of being without grace. You still know the Lord and His way, though from afar. This darkness is a burden to you and all your desire is for the light -- not merely to be able to see, but in order to be gladdened, warmed, directed, and sanctified by it. The Lord will by renewal lighten your darkness and will again lift up the light of His countenance over you. You will experience that this season of darkness has been a school for you in which you have learned much. Especially do not yield to this darkness, but endeavor to be delivered from it. I do not need to hold before you the repugnant nature of darkness and the delightfulness of light to stir you up thereby, for you have experienced both conditions. I merely wish to give you some direction.

Directions for Those Who Struggle with Darkness

First, be assured that you will not immediately return to the light which you have previously enjoyed. The fleeting rays of light which fall upon you in the midst of your darkness are divine comforts to strengthen you for the darkness which is yet to come. A habitual disposition is only to be attained by way of much exercise. Therefore, be not discouraged if you do not regain this condition at the very outset.

Secondly, be satisfied with the little light that you may yet have, which enables you to understand the Word in its spiritual sense -- even if it neither yields delight nor warmth. It is sufficient to give you direction.

Thirdly, refrain from exerting yourself to have views of lofty matters, but cling humbly to the Word of God. Whenever you read it and whenever a passage of Scripture occurs to you, then think: "This is the truth." If it is a promise, esteem it as such, and do not lift your heart above that Word. At the same time reflect upon God Himself, but do not go beyond what His Word describes Him to be. If there is an exhortation to believe or to practice another virtue, then think: "This is my rule of conduct, and according to this I wish to walk in all simplicity." Thus, by keeping a low profile you will come to the light in the most prudent manner.

Fourthly, deal faithfully with the small measure of light that you have. Do not begin to reason with your natural intellect. Acknowledge it by faith and follow it. In humility and uprightness walk in that light. Do not focus upon your stumblings, esteem yourself to be but a small child. The ordering of your way according to that small measure of light will most certainly be a means to receive a greater measure of light. "If any man will do His will, he will know of the doctrine, whether it be of God" (John 7:17); "If ye continue in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed; and ye will know the truth, and the truth will make you free" (John 8:31-32).

Fifthly, maintain your scheduled devotional exercises. If you discontinue these, you will come into more darkness and become more estranged; however, if you maintain these, you will increase in light. Do not pressure yourself to be occupied with this for a long period of time, but do it in upright simplicity. Do not do so to add it to the register of your virtues, for then you would soon become discouraged. Instead, do it with the steadfast objective to use it as a means to receive more light. Read the Word of God, and supplicate and cry to the Lord who hears and sees you -- even if you do not behold Him. You nevertheless know Him by means of His Word. Particularly, pray for light, for light proceeds from Him alone. He can open the understanding with one word so that you will understand the Scriptures (Luke 24:45). He promises to give light and wisdom to those who pray to Him for it (James 1:5). And that which He is able and willing to do, He also will do, and you will yet praise Him for the help of His countenance. One day you will behold His face in righteousness and then you will be satisfied. Amen.

----- 1 Dutch: “redelooze rede.”

103. Chapter 98: Spiritual Deadness

----- CHAPTER NINETY-EIGHT -----

Spiritual Deadness[Note: The Dutch word is “dodigheid,” which refers to a deathlike state of insensibility, rather than the state of death.]

Believers are subject to many changes in all aspects of spiritual life. This is also true in respect to a lively or lifeless spiritual frame. By nature, man is entirely dead and estranged from divine life. He has a heart of stone, and at the very best has a stony heart which is not capable of bearing fruit. Some harden their heart and render it more insensitive than was previously the case. By continually heaping sin upon sin and going contrary to their conscience, they sear, so to speak, their conscience with a hot iron, and cause their heart, now having become fully calloused, to be immovable. In regeneration God removes that heart of stone and grants a heart of flesh in its stead, making it both tender and sensitive. As spiritual life, however, can at times be feeble, likewise there can be but a small measure of spiritual sensitivity in the beginning of spiritual life. One will then not be troubled about many of his secret faults, and there will be but little grief about the absence of great spiritual blessings. Thus, when comparing an immature Christian with a mature Christian, one would think that the immature Christian is in a lifeless condition, whereas comparatively speaking they (when considering their level of maturity) are more lively than mature Christians at certain occasions. For those who have made some progress in spiritual life do backslide in regard to their liveliness, and at times become subject to deadness. Even the most eminent Christian sometimes experiences this for a brief season. It can be that at the outset of his prayer he is in an entirely dead frame -- insensitive and without inner motions. As he perseveres, however, he regains his prior liveliness. It can also be, after beginning in a lively manner, that toward the middle or the end he is overcome by such a pervasive deadness that he must desist. This can also take place in regard to the Lord's Supper and other circumstances. Occasionally deadness will prevail for a long time, however, and become the habitual disposition of the soul. It is this disposition that we wish to discuss here. Five matters will be discussed: 1) the fact that believers do come into such a condition of deadness; 2) its causes; 3) its nature and consequences; 4) a word of encouragement for those who are in such a condition; and 5) some guidance relative to this issue.

Believers Do Experience Deadness That believers do come into such a condition is evident:

(1) From specific passages in which this condition is identified by various terms, such as:

- (i) hardening: “O Lord, why hast Thou ... hardened our heart from Thy fear?” (Isaiah 63:17); “Have ye your heart yet hardened?” (Mark 8:17);
- (ii) slumber: “I sleep, but my heart waketh” (Song of Solomon 5:2); “They all slumbered and slept” (Matthew 25:5);

(iii) heartlessness: "... therefore my heart faileth me" (Psalms 40:12); "Ephraim also is like a silly dove without heart" (Hosea 7:11);

(iv) barrenness: "My heart is smitten, and withered like grass" (Psalms 102:4);

(v) deadness: "I am as a man that hath no strength: free among the dead" (Psalms 88:4-6).

(2) From the prayer of saints for liveliness: "Quicken Thou me according to Thy word" (Psalms 119:25).

(3) From warnings relative to this: "But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin" (Hebrews 3:13).

(4) From exhortations: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light" (Ephesians 5:14).

Add to this the experiences of so many of the godly concerning whom you have either read or heard. From all of this you can perceive that no one should consider it strange when he also comes into this condition. So many of God's children have experienced this, as it is God's way to lead His children by way of deadness to a lively condition. Its Causes

There are various causes for this. First, deadness sometimes issues forth from the indwelling corruption of the residual old nature. There is much of the stony heart that still resides in the regenerate, and the old nature is averse to spiritual life and its activity. The regenerated man subdues this and proceeds with his activity. However, at times a man's dead nature will again assert itself, and bring spiritual life into bondage. It will pervade all the faculties of the soul and overwhelm the soul with its deadly stench. And thus both life and liveliness rapidly lose ground and are weakened as far as their disposition is concerned. Wherever spiritual life declines, deadness will increase.

Secondly, when we do not rightly value spiritual life -- however feeble it may be -- nor cherish it, but yield to lusts; when we do not give proper attention to lesser sins; when we fall from the one sin into the other; and when we frequently commit the same sin so that we become accustomed to it, our conscience will then become more insensitive, and that insensitivity will expand more and more. Furthermore, if more blatant sins are committed by which the conscience is ravaged, deep wounds will be inflicted upon the soul which will cause her to be mortally ill -- particularly when the Lord withholds His gracious influences because of these sins. All of this cannot but engender deadness, which frequently is not noticed until we have come so far that we have lost our strength to recover and we become sensible of our insensitivity.

Thirdly, unbelief concerning our spiritual state causes despondency, despondency listlessness, and listlessness discouragement. By these steps we arrive at deadness. We often actively stimulate unbelief and oppose faith. We advance every argument to come to the conclusion that we are without grace, acting as if we had then gained a victory. We then neglect to receive Christ in all simplicity and to entrust our soul and salvation to Him. Since faith is the means whereby one lives spiritually, one shall most certainly be overcome with deadness if faith, instead of being exercised, is suppressed.

Fourthly, erroneous ideas concerning spiritual life are very conducive to bring about deadness. Some are not aware of the fact that spiritual life consists in the enjoyment of union with God through Christ, and that it manifests itself in the conscious yearning of the heart after God, in being united with His will, and in conducting ourselves as being in the presence of God. Instead, such only take notice of the emotions and the sensible motions within, and the clear revelations of God to the soul. They consider only this to be the manifestation of life. If they do not perceive this -- which will very frequently be the case -- they then imagine themselves to be dead (or at the very best suffer from deadness), whereas it is possible that neither of the two is the case. However, the cherishing of such thoughts will indeed cause them to come into a state of deadness.

Fifthly, deadness is frequently caused by neglecting to acquaint ourselves with God and continually staying near to Him as being the only delight of our soul -- by the neglect of or a casual observance of our scheduled devotional times, doing so more to satisfy the conscience, than to exercise fellowship with God and to strive for increase in spiritual life. Also a spiritless ministry contributes to this in no small measure. Such a ministry leads us astray more than leading us further; it leads to the espousal of error. It can also be due to a lack of direction from and having no fellowship with, the godly. When glowing coals are joined together, they will show forth a lively glow. Upon being separated from each other, however, they will be extinguished and will find themselves in the midst of ashes. This is also true here. Someone who has a melancholy and despondent disposition will also be very vulnerable to spiritual deadness. This will also occur when we are too busy and have too many temporal concerns in either our family or vocation. This will be true when we are overwhelmed by an enduring cross; when we cleave too much to the creature, the godly, ministers, and the goods of this world; or when we are too prosperous in this world.

Sixthly, it pleases the Lord, who is sovereign and holy in all His ways, sometimes to withdraw the normal influences of His Holy Spirit whereby we are made lively. He never engenders hardness of heart, as this would be contrary to His holiness, and He never removes the propensity of spiritual life. He does withhold His operations, however, leaving a person, so to speak, to fend for himself, although He secretly preserves and sustains spiritual life. Furthermore, He gives the enemies within and without free reign to assault spiritual life. He then brings a person in such circumstances that his life is besieged round about, loses its vigor, and the residual hardness of the heart gains the upper hand. Its Nature and Consequences The nature and consequences of deadness are as follows:

(1) Its nature pertains to spiritual matters. We can be in a lively frame, perform our calling in a lively manner, interact with people, and be busy with all manner of temporal affairs -- and yet be dead and insensitive to spiritual matters.

(2) Such deadness and insensitivity are not a total deprivation of spiritual life and feeling, for spiritual life will permanently remain in believers. Rather, it is a partial deadness, and that in respect to both measure and time. The one may recede to a lower level than the other, and the same person may at one time be more lifeless than at other times. Yes, there can even be brief intermissions in which someone, who generally suffers from deadness, can be very tender, sensible, and lively, and is thus of the opinion that he has been delivered from it. It is, however, but a ray of sunlight on a dark and cloudy day in order that he may be supported for that which he must still endure.

(3) This deadness does not consist in an absence of sensible emotions, but in the coldness and lethargy of the intelligent will. The person who suffers from deadness retains his spiritual knowledge; he perceives spiritual matters in their essential nature -- however, from afar. He wishes to be lively and sensible, but that is then nearly all. As long as someone is able to exercise his intelligent will with composure, he ought not to complain about deadness. Even though there is not a sensible involvement of the affections, his activity may nevertheless be of a more spiritual nature than when his affections functioned in a much more feeling manner. If, however, his acquaintance with spiritual matters does not stir up love in his heart; if the heart closes up when he either thinks of spiritual matters or decides to practice them; if he is listless and lethargic in the performance of a duty (or consequently neglects it); if everything is but as a daydream and, so to speak, but a mental image; and if this is not only true for a short season, but rather is a long and prevailing tendency; if he thus has forgotten all that is good, there only being left a sensitivity about his insensitivity, and a spending of his days in a languishing frame -- that constitutes deadness and insensitivity.

Fourthly, let us consider the consequences of deadness. Those who previously had a tender heart; who were able to weep sweet tears before the countenance of God either due to love, a yearning within, the missing of God's lovely countenance, or their corruptions, have now a cold heart. The eye cannot shed one tear. The heart cannot bring forth one feeling sigh; instead, everything is, so to speak, of stone. They who previously could live only in the friendly presence of the Lord are now roaming about far from what was their life and love. When they come to the Word of God, which previously was so lively and efficacious, it appears to be but a dead letter. The promises do not encourage, and the threats do not trouble them. The rebukes only make them harder, and the exhortations do not move them. Under the ministry of the Word they are not attentive, and their thoughts flit about from one thing to the next -- yes, focus even purposely upon some vain thing near at hand. Whatever they hear does not penetrate their heart, and they leave church as they came -- yes, even worse than when they came. If they set themselves to pray (which previously was a delight), they collapse as a wet rag. There is neither reverence before God nor humility toward Him. Or else they will arise and depart, as they cannot utter a word. Or it can be that some matters are brought forth void of any earnestness or longing to attain them, doing so more intellectually than with the heart. It seems as if heaven is no longer desirable, damnation no longer deters, and the matters of inner peace, comfort, love, a watching over their souls, sin, and virtue no longer have any effect upon them. The company of those godly persons who are lively is a burden to them, and love for the godly has grown cold. They want to be alone and avoid company. They only want to be with those who are also in a state of deadness, so that by each other's wretched complaints they even increase their deadness. Not only is there no desire for the Lord's Supper, but they are fearful of it. They either abstain, or, by much wrestling of the conscience, are brought that far that they are resolved to attend. They are not able to prepare themselves, even though the greatest inner stirrings will occur around this time. Hardly any hunger or thirst is to be detected. When they receive the Lord Jesus by faith -- yes, surrender themselves -- they do not believe that they have been received by Him. Upon having attended the holy table, the fruit will be that they frequently think that they have eaten and drunk damnation unto themselves. If they have been somewhat enlivened during either the preparation or reflection, they readily return to a barren and dead frame. They hardly find delight in anything, except their insensitivity. They are as those who become faint and at that time would rather wish that they be left alone. The means which are used either to prevent further fainting or to revive them cause them to grieve. They also do not react very well to being aroused out of that sleep. They do not believe that restoration is to be expected for them. They deem themselves not to have been elected, to be without either life or grace, and to be subject to the wrath of God. They believe that they will perish forever. This closes up their heart even more, even though there is apprehension and fear. In one word, it is a deplorable condition -- a condition which is even more wretched since all the means of grace are ineffective for them, and all the help of men is vain. However, the Lord knows, secretly sustains, and will once more revive them.

Encouragement for Those Who Suffer from Deadness Fifthly, we shall encourage those who suffer from such deadness.

Even though all the means are ineffectual due to their lack of strength; and even though those who are in a dead frame have a secret aversion for all comfort and encouragement (as a sick person for medicine), the Lord nevertheless uses means when He is pleased to revive a person suffering from deadness. Furthermore, there is yet a desire in such a person to be restored if there were, somehow, counsel and hope for him. The most effective method is to show him that being in such a condition is not a sign of being without grace, and that marks of grace are also to be detected in that condition.

First, to that end it ought to be known that the Lord permits many of His dear children to come into this condition. Those whom He wishes to establish most and use to the benefit of others are made subject to the severest trials and led by Him into this condition. He does this to make known to them what they are and what their ability amounts to when the Lord withdraws His Spirit; thus He will always keep them small and humble. He does this so that they may esteem grace all the more, and not be too dependent upon feelings. Rather, He wants them to live by faith, deem the Word of God more precious, and rest upon it with more confidence. He wants to teach them not to judge others who come into such a condition, but conduct themselves wisely toward those who are in such misery by supporting them. Therefore, do not consider it to be strange when you come into such a condition, but rather that it is the Lord's way, and that He will cause it to be to your best advantage.

Secondly, if you come before the Lord with composure, being fearful of ungratefully denying received grace (which is a blot upon the goodness of God), you will yet be able to perceive that you have grace. Therefore, consider the following matters together, and you will be able to come to a conclusion about yourself.

(1) Reflect for a moment upon former days. Consider your previous convictions, sensitivity, earnestness, tears, and supplications; your looking unto and receiving of the Lord Jesus, sorrow over sin, sweet enjoyment of the Word of God, tender walk before the Lord -- and perhaps also your peace, joy, and assurance. You know indeed that you have enjoyed all these things prior to this, and you know furthermore that all God's callings and gifts are without repentance. Even if you are not able to reflect upon these matters in as lively a manner as when you previously enjoyed them, you know nevertheless that all these things cannot proceed from nature and that therefore they are the operations of the Spirit. You would believe with all your heart that they in whom these matters are to be found in truth are in a state of grace.

(2) And regarding the present, are you not acquainted with the Lord as He reveals Himself in the work of redemption? Are you not acquainted with the Lord Jesus in the execution of His suretyship? Are you not acquainted with the frame of a gracious person; that is, the light he receives, the functioning of his faith, his aversion for sin, his love for God, his godly walk before God's countenance, and his desire to serve God in a manner pleasing to Him? Are you not acquainted with all this, approving of and esteeming it -- and are you not desirous to be thus? When you compare natural men at their best, and gracious persons at their worst, do you not know this difference to be as great as day and night? Does not your heart go out after the little ones in grace, and does not your soul have an aversion for natural men -- even when they are at their very best? Judge now whether someone can perceive of this approvingly in the absence of spiritual light.

(3) Even if your inner motions are presently sluggish, lethargic, and barren, are they nevertheless not there -- namely, displeasure about your condition, and a desire to be lively in all spiritual exercises, and for the benefits of the covenant of grace? Are you not sensitive to your insensitivity -- not primarily because you fear judgment, but because you are so barren and dead in spiritual things? Is not your deadness your greatest burden? What is able to comfort your soul -- something temporal, or is it only God in Christ? Wherever there is feeling, there is life. Since you are therefore sensitive to your spiritual deadness, is not this then an indication that you have life? We are not examining you as to how strong and lively all this is, but rather as to the genuineness of it all.

(4) Are you entirely void of the activities and exercises of godliness, or are there yet sighs, prayers, and a fleeing to Jesus for reconciliation and power to be invigorated again? Do you yet have intermittent seasons when you are sensitive and utter heartfelt prayers with strong crying and tears? If you have to respond in the affirmative, albeit restlessly, due to the small measure, and this liveliness readily disappears, you must nevertheless conclude that there is life. When a sick person still moves his hand and head, yet breathes, and still has a pulse, then he is yet alive. Such is also the case here. Consider all this together and draw the conclusion from this that you possess life; and if you possess life, have courage, for it will not perish. The Lord will by renewal make you lively. A Final Directive for Those Who Suffer from Spiritual Darkness The sixth directive for those who are in a dead frame is that restoration is not to be accomplished by might or power. Such a person is also not capable of exerting himself. Therefore, I can only suggest such matters which are able to enliven the heart by a calm reflection and meditation of the heart.

First, you are acquainted with the sorrowful condition of lifeless insensitivity. You still can remember and bring before you a lively and active frame, and it is thus not necessary for me to deter you by the one and to stir you up by the other. I only counsel you to consider both conditions quietly. As you focus upon this, permit it to stir your heart; that is, as much as it pleases the Lord. You are but to observe.

Secondly, listen to the knocking and arousing voice of the Lord Jesus and reflect upon the words of the bride: "I sleep, but my heart waketh: it is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to Me, My sister, My love, My dove, My undefiled: for My head is filled with dew, and My locks with the drops of the night." She, being in no condition to arise, says, "My beloved put in His hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved for Him. ... My soul failed when He spake" Song of Solomon 5:2; Song of Solomon 5:4; Song of Solomon 5:6. This means that the reflection upon His friendly invitation, to which I did not respond, causes me to faint, considering the trouble I experienced due to my sluggishness and His departure. Subsequently she begins to seek. Imagine within yourself that the Lord Jesus were saying to you, "My child, I have loved you with an everlasting love. I love you and shall love you; I have become Surety for you, have drawn you out of the world, and shall keep you. I shall take you to Myself in felicity, and therefore neither turn away from Me, remain discouraged, nor respond in unbelief. I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals (Jeremiah 2:2). I remember the initial manifestation of My love and kindness toward you at the outset of your conversion. This motivates Me to stir you up again. You ought also to remember this My first love and acknowledge that those first motions, which still refresh you when you think upon them, were wrought in you by Me out of love. I am the same, and therefore, awake and arise My fair one." I repeat, take the time to reflect upon this attentively and without resisting in unbelief; let this stir up your soul as much as the Lord will permit.

Thirdly, esteem very highly the least stirring of the Holy Spirit, as well as those stirrings you have enjoyed previously. Do not strive against it; it will cause such stirring to cease. Rather, acknowledge that this has been true grace, for that will invigorate this spiritual motion. It can indeed not harm you if you acknowledge this to be grace, for it leads you to the Lord. Also highly esteem the least motions which you still detect daily. Consider them to be the supporting and stirring workings of the Spirit, as well as the activity of spiritual life which is suppressed within you and wishes to break through. Thank the Lord for it. You were the unwilling one; otherwise you would have had these stirrings, and would still have them. Quietly yield to them as much as the Lord enables you to.

Fourthly, persevere in the use of the means, even if you do not benefit from them at all; it will not be fruitless. Even if you do not notice this, it still sustains spiritual life, and it occasionally begets sweet and sensitive motions, keeps you near to the Lord, and will yet be a means to your restoration. Listen, read, pray, sing, and have discussions, doing so as one who is powerless and entirely destitute, and as a means which the Lord has sanctified to work thereby. Even if you find this to be difficult, and the flesh would prefer to perpetuate the slumber, pull yourself together and engage yourself in this manner. Permit the Lord to work by means of these things and you will experience that the Lord will make His promises true to you. He will make you glad according to the days wherein you have been afflicted, and the years wherein you have seen evil. And your doxology will be, "I waited patiently for the Lord; and He inclined unto me, and heard my cry" (Psalms 40:1).

104. Chapter 99: The Perseverance of the Saints

----- CHAPTER NINETY-NINE ----- The Perseverance of the Saints

Having considered sanctification, growth in grace, and its decline due to spiritual maladies, it is necessary that we add to this a consideration of the perseverance of the saints in grace. When considering this from God's side, it is called a keeping (terein) John 17:15, phulassein John 17:12, phrourein 1 Peter 1:5, sterizein, that is, to strengthen 2 Timothy 3:3, and bebaion, that is, to confirm (1 Corinthians 1:8). When considering this from the side of believers, it is denominated, hupomone, that is, to continue Romans 2:7, and steadfastness (Luke 8:15). In considering this matter, four things are to be noted: 1) in whom something is preserved, 2) what is preserved in them, 3) the cause and means whereby preservation occurs, and 4) its purpose.

Believers are the Objects of Divine Preservation

First, believers are the persons who are preserved; and it is in them that something is preserved. God maintains and preserves everything He has created. God also preserves good angels in their confirmed state -- they being referred to as the elect (1 Timothy 5:21). Our reference here is, however, to the preservation of the elect, the regenerate, the true believers -- viewing them as being in the church militant upon earth and as being under assault by their enemies: the devil, the world, and the flesh. Since the believer's renewal is but in part, he sins daily. These sins, strictly speaking, are worthy of reprobation, and believers, when left to themselves, do not have sufficient strength to preserve themselves, their faith, or their spiritual life. They would succumb to the assault of the enemy. Nevertheless, they are preserved, but by a strength which comes from without. "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation" (1 Peter 1:5); "Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down" (Psalms 37:24). By this power spiritual life and faith, bestowed upon them by the Spirit of God in regeneration, are preserved. It can be that spiritual life is so besieged by opposition and becomes so weak, that for a season it only manifests itself by a looking on high, a sigh, an inclination toward God, or an affection for God. Yes, a believer can faint, so to speak, so that spiritual life does not manifest itself at all for a season. However, spiritual life in its essence that is, union with Christ, will remain. It will never disappear. "Whosoever is born of God ... his seed remaineth in him" (1 John 3:9). The only cause of their steadfastness is the omnipotent and faithful God. That God is able to preserve spiritual life in them is a certainty for all. Of His willingness to preserve them, the Lord Jesus assures us: "And this is the Father's will which hath sent Me, that of all which He hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day" (John 6:39). That He will do so, is evident from the promises: "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation" (Hebrews 6:17-18). Peter states that God in actuality does so: "Who are kept by the power of God" (1 Peter 1:5).

Means Employed by God for Preservation

Just as the Lord works all things in the realm of nature by way of means, God likewise uses means in the work of grace. He also does so in preserving His saints. This is not to suggest that there is efficacy in the means or in the use of those means by believers. Rather, both the use of the means and the outcome of their use are dependent upon the Lord alone. "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Php 2:13); "Without Me ye can do nothing" (John 15:5). The means God uses for the preservation of His own are, among others:

(1) Instruction and direction by means of the Word: "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to Thy word. Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (Psalms 119:9;Psalms 119:105);

(2) Comforting and quickening promises: "This is my comfort in my affliction: for Thy word hath quickened me. Unless Thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction" (Psalms 119:50;Psalms 119:92).

(3) Stirring exhortations: "Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith" (Acts 14:22); "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matthew 26:41).

(4) Admonishing reproofs: "Rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith" (Titus 1:13); "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:3); "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die" (Romans 8:13).

(5) The rod of chastisement: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn Thy statutes" (Psalms 119:71); "... He (chastens us) for our profit, that we might be partakers of His holiness ... afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness" (Hebrews 12:10-11).

(6) Sacramental sealing: "Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (Romans 6:4); "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" (1 Corinthians 10:16).

(7) The use of the keys of the kingdom when they grievously depart from the way. "To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus" (1 Corinthians 5:5). The purpose for which believers are preserved is salvation itself. "Moreover whom He did predestinate ... them He also glorified" (Romans 8:30); "Who are kept by the power of God ... unto salvation" (1 Peter 1:5). God's ultimate objective is the manifestation of His goodness, longsuffering, faithfulness, immutability, wisdom, and power. "When He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day" (2 Thessalonians 1:10). From that which has been said it is evident that the perseverance of the saints is a gracious and powerful operation of God whereby He preserves the spiritual life and faith in the truly converted in such a fashion that it can neither self-destruct, nor be extinguished or removed by their enemies: the devil, the world, and the flesh. Instead, they will most certainly attain to eternal felicity.

Just as other truths have always had and still have their opponents, also this doctrine, so full of comfort, has its opponents. Yes, all parties within the church which to a greater or lesser degree deviate from the truth -- such as Papists, Socinians, Anabaptists, Arminians, and even Lutherans -- are opposed in one way or the other to the perseverance of the saints.

Question: Can those who are truly regenerate and are true believers apostatize as far as spiritual life and faith are concerned, and perish?

Answer: All other sects resolutely answer in the affirmative. The Lutherans confess that true believers can completely lose spiritual life and faith; however, God will restore them from this state of death and most certainly save them. They hold to a full apostasy, but not a final apostasy. The others hold to a full and final apostasy of the saints. We reject both the full and final apostasy of the saints, and confess that spiritual life in its essence, even though its manifestation may for a season be impeded to a greater or lesser degree, always remains in believers, and that they will most certainly be led to the state of felicity.

Proof #1: The Saints' Perseverance Proven from Scripture We derive this proof from specific texts.

A. "Though he (the righteous or godly man) fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the Lord upholdeth him with His hand" (Psalms 37:24). A godly man is here referred to as falling and sinning, as he still offends daily in many things. If he were to be cast away, it would have to be for the sake of his sins. The text says, however, that he will not be cast away for that reason. The reason is then added: It is not that he will restore himself and arise, but because the Lord sustains him and keeps him from falling. He will thus most certainly remain standing.

Evasive Argument: The text speaks of a falling due to temporal trials, and not of a falling into sin. Not to be cast down refers to a not perishing in these afflictions.

Answer (1) The godly generally have more afflictions than the ungodly, and they do indeed perish in them. "The righteous perisheth" (Isaiah 57:1). Thus, the promise, in the absolute sense of the word, cannot primarily be applicable to the temporal.

(2) If it were so that the godly would always be, and remain, blessed in a temporal sense, they would certainly also persevere in godliness. That which brings forth a positive effect thereby becomes more positive itself.

(3) And if the reference here is to a falling into wretched circumstances, then this is a powerful proof for perseverance, for the psalmist confirms what Paul writes: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation ...? For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life ... shall be able to separate us from the love of God" Romans 8:35; Romans 8:38-39.

(4) The psalmist speaks in this psalm of the exercise of godliness and that the Lord will bring forth their righteousness as the light (vss. 3-6), while declaring in verse 24 that they are yet imperfect and do stumble and fall. Nevertheless, they will not be cast away, because the Lord upholds them.

B. "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matthew 24:24). This chapter makes reference to a twofold violence inflicted upon the elect: persecution and deception. However, it indicates the impossibility of the elect being drawn away and deceived, and thus their spiritual state is sure.

Evasive Argument #1: "Impossible" here implies "difficult" (cf. Matthew 19:26; Matthew 26:39; Acts 20:16; Romans 12:18).

Answer: "Impossible" never means "difficult" -- also not in the quoted texts.

Evasive Argument #2: This text speaks of what false prophets are not able to do, but not what they themselves are able to do.

Answer (1) Believers are then most certainly set free from all external influences. All this then cannot have as its result, that with their intellect, will, and in very deed they would relinquish Christ, the faith, and godliness -- and thus that they would apostatize from all these. It is natural for man's desires to have an object which is external to them, and it is this object which sets desires in motion. Since there is then nothing from without which can set the desires of believers in motion and cause them to fall out of grace, they are thus in a state which is certain and sure.

(2) The text says that eternal election is the foundation of their spiritual state, making it impossible for them to be deceived unto apostasy. It is therefore an impossibility from every perspective -- for others as well as for themselves.

Evasive Argument #3: Christ speaks of the work of false prophets and what their objective would be -- not concerning the outcome; that is, whether or not the elect will be deceived thereby. Thus, the issue of certainty or uncertainty is not discussed here.

Answer: This flatly contradicts the text. It speaks of the result of this deception in respect to the elect, stating that their apostasy is impossible. It is therefore also recorded as a parenthetical argument.

Evasive Argument #4: This text speaks of some eminent Christians, and not of all Christians.

Answer (1) The text makes no exception, but speaks of the elect, which includes them all.

(2) There are thus some who cannot be deceived.

(3) It is not the strength or weakness of believers which is here defined as the foundation for this certainty, but rather election.

Evasive Argument #5: The elect can be deceived prior to their conversion, and thus also after their conversion.

Answer: No one is deceived prior to conversion, for one is then in sin, proceeding from sin to sin as others do.

Then there is nothing good within him which needs to be preserved. After conversion believers have both spirit and life, however, and preservation is predicated upon that life -- and that life will not be able to be removed.

Evasive Argument #6: The elect cannot be deceived; that is, upon condition that they perform their duty and persevere in faith and godliness.

Answer (1) No condition is mentioned here. The promise pertains to being preserved in faith itself.

(2) That is as much as to say: They cannot be deceived when they are not deceived, and they will persevere in faith, hope, and love when they persevere. Likewise, a man will not die when he does not die. This is nonsense.

C. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" Romans 8:35; Romans 8:38-39. This text speaks of the elect, stating that neither a creature, nor any event precipitated by them, will be able to remove the love which they have toward Christ and God, and which God and Christ have toward them.

Evasive Argument #7: Paul speaks of tribulations and not of sin. He does not say that sins are not able to separate believers from the love God has toward them and make them subject to the hatred of God. Rather, it states that tribulations are not capable of doing this.

Answer (1) Paul states that all tribulations are not able to take away the love they have toward God; that is, they cannot lead them to apostasy. That the apostle is speaking of the love of believers toward God is evident from the fact that these tribulations are against the godly which could cause them to succumb in faith, hope, and love, and thus separate them from God. These tribulations do not pertain to God Himself, and thus the thought cannot be entertained here that God would thereby change in His love toward them. The apostle says in verse 37 that believers in all their tribulations will be more than conquerors; thus there is not even a remote possibility that tribulations would separate them from their love toward Christ. The apostle therefore refers here to sins, declaring that all tribulations cannot cause believers to sin unto death -- which a forsaking of the love of God would be.

(2) If one understands the love of God here to refer to the love He has for His elect, and if it is here stated that no tribulations can remove the love of God toward His elect and change it into hatred, then this could only occur if, by reason of these tribulations, they would fall into sin, for there is nothing that removes God's love except sin. Since God's love for His elect cannot be removed, however, tribulations cannot bring believers to such a condition and to such a sin.

(3) No matter how one may view the love of God, the text says that this love remains immutable, and that all that is in heaven and earth cannot change that love.

D. "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God" (1 John 3:9). The apostle wrote to the congregation (where the wicked are always intermingled with the upright) to warn the members that they are not to deceive themselves by imagining that they will be saved anyway, even if they yield to sin. Instead, the truly regenerate neither sin nor can sin, for the seed of God is in them and will remain in them, and they are born of God. Thus, they who are born of God are in a state which is both certain and immutable in respect to the spiritual life which is in them and remains in them. This does not mean that they neither offend nor are able to offend, for the apostles confirm this to be so (cf. 1 John 1:8; James 3:2). Rather, "to sin" here refers to "living in sin," that is, to find delight in and to relish sin. This is true for the ungodly, concerning whom he says in verse 8, "He that committeth sin is of the devil." This refers to being under the dominion of sin, and such cannot be true for a regenerate person. "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Romans 6:14). Thus, the apostle strongly argues here for the perseverance of believers when he says that 1) the believer "doth not commit sin," 2) "his seed remaineth in him," 3) "he cannot sin," and 4) he cannot sin "because he is born of God." The papists, Arminians, and Lutherans each have a different response to this.

Evasive Argument #1: The Papists respond to this, saying that those who are born of God cannot sin insofar as they are born of God, but that they can yet fully and completely fall into sin when they neglect and do not preserve the seed of God which is in them.

Answer: If one understands the words "insofar as they are born of God" to refer to the regenerate part of the believer, then this evasive argument is not against us, but rather in our favor, for no sin can proceed from the regenerate man. If one understands "insofar as" to refer to a condition -- namely, if they persevere -- then this is contrary to the text and contradicts the matter itself. It is contrary to the text, for there is not the least indication of a condition. It is not stated here: "They cannot sin if they retain the seed of God and if they continue to be born of God." Instead, it is written: "... because the seed of God remains in them and because they are born of God." Here we have an absolute proposition: They do not sin and they cannot sin. This proposition is confirmed by arguments which are both absolute and established: for the seed of God remains in him, for he is born of God. It is also self-contradictory, for it is nonsense to say that he cannot sin if he does not sin.

Evasive Argument #2: The Arminians claim that this text only intends to say that to sin is contrary to the inclination and habit of the truly regenerate; they have an aversion for sin. The phrase "to be born of God" does not refer to a characteristic of true believers which would prevent them from sinning, but is identical to what is expressed in the words "not to commit sin," that is, to be conformed to God in their life. Furthermore, the remaining of God's seed in them is as much as to say that the seed of God is in them. Thus, the meaning of the text comes down to this: The propensity of grace cannot coexist with the propensity of sin, and when the propensity of sin prevails, the propensity of grace will be lost. It is therefore not the apostle's intent to say that believers cannot apostatize, for he says in Romans 6:14 that believers can also come under the dominion of sin and apostatize.

Answer (1) All these misinterpretations are obviously contrary to the text, and therefore we reject them as quickly as they are uttered. The apostle does not speak of an inclination, but rather of deeds -- of sin. He does not say that sin is contrary to their inclination and that they have an aversion for it, but that they neither sin nor are able to sin. This is not due to their aversion for it (which is a fact), but because the seed of God remains in them, they having been born of God.

(2) To be born of God expressly refers to a characteristic which has been brought forth in man by way of regeneration, for thereby he becomes a new creature 2 Corinthians 5:17, and thereby he becomes a partaker of the divine nature (2 Peter 1:4).

(3) The verb "to remain" expresses more than simply "to be." It expresses a being steadfast and durable -- something that neither departs nor is removed, and something that endures to the end. A small child knows this to be so. It is to be observed in the following passages: "I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him" (John 1:32); "Abide in Me, and I in you ... continue ye in My love" John 15:4;John 15:9.

(4) The apostle does not only say that the propensity of reigning sin cannot coexist with the propensity of grace, but says that wherever the seed of God (the propensity of grace) -- the new creature, being partaker of the divine nature -- is present, the propensity of sin cannot exist there, and thus he cannot sin.

(5) We deny strongly that true believers can become subject to reigning sins. The passage, "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death" 1 John 3:14, is no proof for this. The reference here is to the unconverted, and they are thereby distinguished from the truly converted who love the brethren. They who do not love the brethren are said to abide in death, and thus they had never been brought to life. We do indeed admit that true believers can fall into great sin; however, sin does not have dominion over them. There is and remains a warfare, and even if the regenerated man has been subdued for a season, he nevertheless renders no obedience to it as his lord. He will always reemerge and the seed of God will remain.

Evasive Argument #3: The Lutherans hold to full apostasy, but not to final apostasy. They say about this text that the believer's inability to sin means that he can neither yield to ungodliness nor find delight in living in sin to the extent and for the duration that the seed of God is in him. They say that the word "for" is not suggestive of the reason why he cannot sin, but is merely indicative of a restatement; it means "as much as and as long as the seed of God remains in him and he is born of God."

Answer (1) We admit that a regenerate person does not sin in the manner mentioned; that is, insofar as the seed of God is in him and he is born of God. For sin does not proceed from the spirit, but from the flesh (cf. Romans 7:1-25). It is also true that he does not sin as long as the seed of God remains in him and he is born of God. The apostle says, however, that the seed of God remains in him, will not spontaneously expire, and will never be removed from him. Thus, a regenerate person will never live under the dominion of sin.

(2) It is nonsense to maintain that he will not sin to the extent that the seed of God remains in him, and then quietly conclude from this that when it dissipates, he will sin. This would be as much as saying, "Fire heats insofar as it does not chill."

(3) The word "for" does not mean "and," but points to the cause why a regenerate person neither sins nor can sin. It thus remains an immovable truth that the regenerate cannot apostatize.

Proof #2: The Saints Persevere by Virtue of the Immutability of Eternal Election This proof we derive from the immutability of eternal election. This decree of the only wise and omnipotent God is immutable: "... that the purpose of God according to election might stand" (Romans 9:11); "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel ..." (Hebrews 6:17); "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are His" (2 Timothy 2:19). Therefore the apostle connects glorification to eternal election with an unbreakable tie: "Moreover whom He did predestinate ... them He also glorified" (Romans 8:30). God neither will nor can change this decree due to His immutability. "I am the Lord, I change not" (Malachi 3:6); "... the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning" (James 1:17). Man will not be able to annul God's counsel. He has not been chosen on the basis of any condition, but unconditionally -- in the absolute sense of the word. The Lord will save him in a way in which He himself will lead him. No creature will be able to annihilate this decree. "For the Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it?" (Isaiah 14:27). Since God wills and shall give salvation to His elect by an immutable, eternal decree, and will make them partakers of salvation in the way of faith and repentance, then those who have been called according to His purpose can neither become apostates as far as spiritual life and faith are concerned, nor perish. (Cf. chapter 6, vol. #1, p. 211.) Proof #3: The Saints Persevere by Virtue of Christ's Satisfaction, Intercession, and Preservation This proof we derive from the efficacy of Christ's satisfaction, intercession, and preservation.

(1) The satisfaction of Christ is perfect both in regard to original and actual sins -- all sins which are committed until the day of one's death. This is true for all His elect, and for them alone; it is not for others. There is absolutely no condition whereby it would be contingent upon man. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7). By His satisfaction God is reconciled with His elect. "When we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son" (Romans 5:10). They are perfect in Christ Colossians 2:10, and the "righteousness of God" (2 Corinthians 5:21). This is of eternal duration: "For by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified" (Hebrews 10:14; cf. chapter 22).

(2) The intercession of Christ is efficacious and cannot be resisted, since it occurs by the efficacy of His satisfaction. "We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and He is the propitiation for our sins" (1 John 2:1). Therefore He said, "I knew that Thou hearest Me always" (John 11:42). The Father promises to give what He demands: "Ask of Me, and I shall give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance" (Psalms 2:8). However, Christ demands preservation and salvation for His elect: "Holy Father, keep through Thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me. ... Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am; that they may behold My glory" (John 17:11; John 17:24); "Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Hebrews 7:25). Since Christ prays for their preservation and salvation, and He is always heard, they cannot apostatize.

(3) Preservation by Christ is a certainty. "My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of My hand. My Father, which gave them Me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of My Father's hand" (John 10:27-29). They who hear Christ's voice and follow Him are His sheep. Hearing and following come naturally to sheep. Those sheep the Lord Jesus knows, He grants them eternal life, and they will not perish. No one either will or is able to pluck them out of the hands of Christ and the Father. Their spiritual state is thus certain and well-preserved, and they cannot fall away. It cannot be stated more clearly than this.

Evasive Argument: They will be preserved as long as they remain sheep.

Answer (1) Christ says that they will remain sheep. Those who once are sheep; that is, those to whom He grants eternal life and who will not perish, will remain sheep.

(2) Christ says that no one -- whoever he may be -- and therefore also they themselves will not be able to pluck them out of His hand. There is no condition here: If someone has become a sheep, his preservation is certain.

(3) Christ is the good Shepherd. He is not a good shepherd who only protects his sheep against the wolf and the thief, but does not protect his sheep when they of their own accord would wander away from the flock and go astray. Therefore, the faithful Shepherd Jesus will keep His sheep from all evil, for to that end -- that He would keep them and give them eternal life -- they have been given to Him by the Father: "And this is the Father's will which hath sent Me, that of all which He hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day" (John 6:39).

Consider all this together. Those for whom Christ has made full satisfaction, for whom He prays that they may be kept and may have eternal life, and whom He Himself powerfully preserves -- they cannot lose spiritual and eternal life, apostatize, or perish.

Proof #4: The Saints Persevere by Virtue of the Abiding Operation of the Holy Spirit This proof is derived from the operation of the Holy Spirit in believers.

(1) The Holy Spirit abides with them eternally. "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever" (John 14:16).

(2) The Holy Spirit is the earnest of their salvation. "... in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Ephesians 1:13-14); "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption" (Ephesians 4:30).

(3) All the operations of the Holy Spirit in them are of a permanent nature. "For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (Romans 11:29).

Evasive Argument: This text refers to the conversion of the Jews. Answer: This text refers to eternal felicity by virtue of the election of grace Romans 11:5, upon the manifestation of mercy (vs. 32). He is speaking of the gifts of grace which were bestowed upon the elect Jews. Whatever is permanent for the elect Jews is permanent for all the elect. From that which has been said we conclude the following: He in whom the Holy Spirit resides eternally, for whom the Holy Spirit is an earnest of eternal felicity, who has been sealed by the Holy Spirit until the day of redemption, and in whom the operations of the Holy Spirit are of an irrevocable and permanent nature, cannot apostatize, but will most certainly be saved. All this is most certainly true for believers, and thus they will most certainly be saved.

Proof #5: The Saints Persevere by Virtue of the Immutability of the Covenant of Grace This proof we derive from the immutability of the covenant. First, this is evident from the following passage: "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but My kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of My peace be removed" (Isaiah 54:10). Evasive Argument: This text pertains to the immutability of the covenant from God's side; God from His side will not break it. It does not follow from this, however, that believers will not break it from their side.

Answer (1) It is a covenant of grace in which God has promised to give and do all that was to be accomplished for His children. Thus, in regard to man, this promise is not conditional: "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. And I will put My spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep My judgments, and do them" (Ezekiel 36:26-27). It is therefore sufficient that the covenant is immutable from the side of God. It is therefore entirely immutable, for the Lord Himself will cause them to walk upon the way in which He leads His own unto salvation.

(2) The covenant of grace is as steadfast as the covenant with Noah (Isaiah 54:9). This latter covenant cannot be changed by either man, sin, human will, or human might. Likewise, the covenant of grace cannot be changed, for it is said to be as steadfast as the covenant of Noah.

Secondly, the immutability of this covenant is also evident in the following texts: "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be My people" (Jeremiah 31:33); "And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put My fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from Me" (Jeremiah 32:40). This covenant neither can nor will be broken. This is true from God's side, for He, who is the faithful One, promises this, and it is a purely gracious covenant which was not established upon any conditions. Man will also not break it, for the Lord has promised that He will prevent them from doing so, and cause them to do according to His will -- even though their conduct is not a condition. This covenant is not in force for some days or years; it is an eternal covenant, and therefore it will remain steadfast.

Evasive Argument #1: These texts relate to the restoration of the Jews in Canaan but not to eternal felicity.

Answer (1) Jeremiah 31:33 very clearly refers to the days of the New Testament, as is evident from (Hebrews 8:8).

(2) Even though Jeremiah 32:40 also pertains to the restoration of the church in Canaan, it nevertheless primarily relates to the spiritual and eternal benefits of the covenant of grace. Out of this issued forth the restoration of Canaan, since the Surety of the covenant had to be born in Canaan. There is but one covenant: the covenant of grace. To this, temporal blessings are appended as a means and way to bring the elect to the promised salvation.

Evasive Argument #2: This promise was given to the entire Jewish nation. Since it is known that they are not all saved, it cannot be a promise concerning perseverance.

Answer (1) All Jews were never restored to Canaan. By reason of the same argumentation we would then also be permitted to say that this promise does not pertain to the Jewish nation. This is absurd, however, as is the evasive argument itself.

(2) There is an express reference here to the spiritual benefits of the covenant of grace: to have God as a God, to have the fear of God, not to depart from the Lord, and to have the law of the Lord written in the heart. Repeated mention is thus made of the benefits of the covenant and of their perseverance in it.

(3) When God makes promises to His church, these promises do not pertain to persons who merely "run along," but to true believers alone, who constitute the church. "For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel: neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed" (Romans 9:6-8). Even if it is true that all Jews will not be saved, God's covenant with His church will nevertheless abide -- whether it consists of Jews or Gentiles. It is one church which is steadfast and indestructible.

Evasive Argument #3: Here something is promised which had no prior existence. It can therefore not refer in any way to the perseverance of saints, since in our opinion perseverance has been part and parcel of believers from the very beginning.

Answer (1) This immutable covenant is in essence the same from the beginning unto the end of the world. There is, however, a difference in administration, and in that respect it is called new.

(2) God frequently promises the fulfillment of promises at a future date which he already had fulfilled in believers at an earlier date in order to further assure believers of a later date that He would also fulfill these promises for them. The repetition of promises is not a denial of promises made previously. It thus is and remains an immovable truth that believers cannot apostatize.

Objection #1: "Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while" (Matthew 13:21). It is thus evident that believers can apostatize.

Answer (1) All that is denominated as faith is not saving faith. Otherwise Agrippa would also have been a believer, for he believed the Holy Scriptures (Acts 26:27). Likewise, these temporal believers also had historical faith accompanied by a confession, but they did not have true saving faith. This is clearly to be observed in the contrasts made between true believers (the good earth) and the beaten path, as well as between the earth beneath the thorns and the good earth.

(2) Their heart was not right, they being represented by the stony ground. This heart of stone is removed from believers (Ezekiel 36:26).

(3) They were without root, whereas true believers are rooted in Christ (Colossians 2:7). (4) They bore no fruits, and thus their faith was a dead faith James 2:17, for believers bear manifold fruit Matthew 13:23, and their faith worketh by love (Galatians 5:6).

Objection #2: "Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away: ... If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered" (John 15:2; John 15:6). Here mention is made of branches which are in Christ, branches which due to their fruitlessness and not abiding in Christ, are cast out. True believers can therefore apostatize.

Answer (1) The congregation is the Lord's vineyard Isaiah 5:1-30. Many unconverted join the church and thus appear to be incorporated into Christ. We readily admit that such can fall out of this state and that they will be cast out. However, this does not relate to our point of contention.

(2) Those who are here said to be cast out were never true believers, for they bore no fruit and therefore their faith was dead.

(3) This is a parable and we must not make all details applicable at will. Rather, our focus must only be on the objective, and the objective is very clear. It is an exhortation to believers to be fruitful, and a warning to everyone not to be satisfied with only the external relationship to the church and a mere confession of Christ. For all who bear no fruit will be eliminated -- here from the church, and hereafter from heaven.

(4) It does not say that such persons were ever truly in Christ; rather, it speaks of those who are in Him but bear no fruit, as is true for all the unconverted who never bear fruit in Christ and who never have been in Christ. The fact that they do not abide in Him is proof that they have never been in Him and have never been true believers. "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us" (1 John 2:19).

Objection #3: "Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck" (1 Timothy 1:19). It is thus evident that they who have faith and a good conscience can lose them and in that respect can become apostate.

Answer: The apostle exhorts Timothy to remain steadfast and to adhere to the true doctrine of faith and of a good conscience. True doctrine is here referred to as faith, which is frequently the case. This is to be observed in the following passages: "Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils" (1 Timothy 4:1); "Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" Jude 1:3; "Who ... overthrow the faith of some" (2 Timothy 2:18). Many others -- also Hymenaeus and Alexander -- had this faith, this true doctrine of faith, in common with Timothy. However, they did not have that true saving faith in Christ unto justification and sanctification which Timothy possessed. Otherwise they would have persevered in it (1 John 2:19). Timothy had a good conscience which had been cleansed in the blood of Christ (Hebrews 9:14). Such a good conscience they did not have, even though they could have had a natural sincerity, conducting themselves according to their conscience without hypocrisy -- as was true of Paul prior to his conversion (Acts 23:1). Such a faith and such a good conscience the unconverted can readily cast away, reject, and let go if it happens to be in their interest. Furthermore, relative to themselves they are capable of spurning true saving faith and a good conscience by the blood and Spirit of Christ, so that they do not become partakers of them -- just as the Jews rejected the gospel (Acts 13:46). Paul delivered those who had fallen away from the doctrine of faith and from having an upright conscience to Satan as a means to their conversion -- as he did with the incestuous person (1 Corinthians 5:5). It is thus evident that we do not have a shred of evidence here for the apostasy of the saints.

Objection #4: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame" (Hebrews 6:4-6). All these things are applicable to none other but truly converted people and true believers. Such are able to apostatize and crucify the Son of God afresh. It will then be impossible for them to come again to repentance.

Answer (1) Paul uses conditional language here: "... if ...". A condition does not establish anything as a fact, however, nor does it suggest that it will be thus and can transpire as such. Paul speaks in this fashion: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Galatians 1:8). Such conditional propositions are but urgent warnings and exhortations to refrain from sin.

(2) It is very evident that Paul is speaking of such who have never been converted and who in their heart were without virtue. For as he continues to speak of such, he says, "For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God: but that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned." Apostates are like soil which is not good and brings forth thorns and thistles. Our point of contention does not relate to them and thus this text is not contrary to our view.

(3) All those things mentioned are no marks of true regeneration and faith. They can very well be, and frequently are, present in the unconverted. An unconverted person can be illuminated to the extent that he understands the truths of the gospel. Balaam said, "He hath said, which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty ... having his eyes open" (Numbers 24:4). He whose eyes have been enlightened can taste of the heavenly gift (Hebrews 6:4). Paul recounts such gifts in 1 Corinthians 12:1-31. The unconverted can also find delight in tasting such gifts. To receive revelations concerning future things, wisdom, gifts to heal the sick, and the ability to speak, understand, and interpret various languages are delightful things, even for the flesh. These gifts are heavenly and are sent from heaven by the Holy Spirit, for "all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit" (1 Corinthians 12:11). In this respect also the unconverted become partakers of the Holy Spirit. The unconverted also taste at times "the good Word of God, and the powers of the world to come." All knowledge of matters of which one had no prior knowledge is delightful. This is particularly true if one may be acquainted with the glorious state of the children of God, the benefits of the covenant of grace, redemption in Christ, the standing at the right hand of Christ in the last judgment, and being taken into eternal glory. To taste these blessings by way of reflection is to have delight and sweetness in them. This is true for many unconverted persons. Temporal believers received the Word with joy Luke 8:13, and Herod heard John gladly (Mark 6:20). Thus, all these matters can very well be known by unconverted persons -- and frequently are. It is an entirely different matter to be a partaker of the Holy Spirit unto regeneration, faith, hope, and love; and to be assured of being a partaker of all the benefits of the covenant of grace, and to rejoice and delight in the hope of glory, of which some believers do have some foretaste. This was, however, not the portion of those of whom the apostle speaks here.

(4) The words "to renew them again unto repentance" do not imply that they were ever truly converted. Rather, they imply that it is impossible to lead such to true repentance because they have been hardened. Furthermore, God generally withholds His grace from such, for otherwise it would not be impossible with God. "To renew" does not imply that something will be restored to its former condition; that is, to bring something which is old and dilapidated into a better condition. Rather it implies to bring something into a condition which is superior to its previous condition. Such is the meaning in the following passages: "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind" (Romans 12:2); "He saved us by ... renewing of the Holy Ghost" (Titus 3:5). The word "again" also does not imply that something will be restored to its previous condition, but implies a change to a condition in which it previously was not. The same word palin is used for the initial translation of a person from spiritual death to spiritual life -- regeneration. This is to be observed in the following passages: "He saved us, by the washing of regeneration" (Titus 3:5); "... that ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration" (Matthew 19:28).

(5) If one insists that "to renew again to repentance" means restoration into the previous state, then it means restoration into the state of a temporal believer. For repentance is not always indicative of regeneration, but can also signify only an external change. "The men of Nineveh ... repented at the preaching of Jonas" (Matthew 12:41).

Objection #5: "Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" (Hebrews 10:29). Such as have been sanctified by the blood of Christ do tread under foot the Son of God and do despite unto the Spirit of grace.

Answer (1) Paul speaks conditionally, from which nothing else can be concluded but that it is an exhortation.

(2) If one determines that such indeed occurs, then the entire strength of the argument appears to be in the words "to be sanctified by the blood of Christ," as if "to sanctify" only signifies true sanctification by the Holy Spirit, since it also signifies separation unto holy usage, and an external sanctification by an external entrance into the covenant. "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth" (Deuteronomy 7:6); "For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy" (1 Corinthians 7:14). Before one can conclude from Hebrews 10:29 that there is an apostasy of the saints, it must first be proven that the word "sanctified" here signifies true sanctification only, that is, the renewal of God's image in man. This simply cannot be done. Rather, it is evident that here it must be understood as referring to external sanctification, for the saints cannot apostatize.

Additional Objection: To be sanctified by Christ's blood is true sanctification.

Answer: We deny this. By His blood Christ has received the right and the authority to use all creatures and all men -- both good and evil -- according to His will, to the glory of God, and to the benefit of the elect. By His blood He has been authorized to be the Judge of heaven and earth John 5:27, and to damn the ungodly in judgment. Since He has been obedient to the Father, even unto the death of the cross, all knees must bow before Him (Php 2:8-10). It is for this reason that all power has been given Him in heaven and upon earth (Matthew 28:18). Thereby He has also received power to bestow many external blessings upon the non-elect: to heal their bodily diseases, to proclaim the gospel to their soul as prophet, to call and bring them externally into His church, and thus to externally sanctify and separate them from others. Thus, to be sanctified by Christ's blood neither signifies true conversion, growth in grace, nor the possession and manifestation of the image of God. Rather, it signifies a being brought into the church externally, and to have escaped the pollution of the world and gross sins through the knowledge of the Lord Jesus. That such can apostatize is a matter beyond controversy.

Objection #6: "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction" (2 Peter 2:1). To be bought by Christ is to be delivered by Christ's blood from guilt and punishment and to be His property (Revelation 5:9). Such persons can, however, apostatize and go lost.

Answer (1) Such persons have never been true believers, for they were false teachers who subtly introduced damnable heresies. Therefore this text does not relate to this controversy.

(2) Christ purchases His own unto salvation, and purchases others to be used for His purposes. This we have demonstrated relative to Hebrews 10:1-39 in the fifth objection. One purchases vessels both to honor and to dishonor. These false teachers who pretended to be partakers of the merits of Christ were bought in order to be ministers, but not unto salvation. There can be various reasons for purchasing something.

Objection #7: Many examples of apostatizing can be produced to counter the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints, such as the angels who have become devils, as well as Adam. If they have apostatized, then the godly can also apostatize.

Answer (1) We are not discussing here what could happen potentially to the godly as they are in and of themselves, and if left over to themselves, but what cannot happen, since they are kept by the power of God.

(2) The angels and Adam had no promises relative to preservation; however, the godly have promises that are sure.

Additional Objection: David fell into such sins which are not compatible with the preservation of faith and spiritual life, such as adultery and premeditated murder.

Answer (1) His repentance, restoration, and perseverance are clearly documented in Psalms 51:1-19 -- as well as in the description of the end of his life.

(2) Even though faith and spiritual life are in a state of lethargy when such gross sins are committed, the seed of God nevertheless abides in believers.

Additional Objection: Solomon fell into idolatry at the end of his life.

Answer (1) Solomon was called Jedidiah, the beloved of the Lord. However, the love of God does not change (Jeremiah 31:3; John 13:1).

(2) It has not been recorded to what extent Solomon fell into idolatry. It could be that it was only a yielding to the insistence of his idolatrous wives or that it was but an external act of worship, for he is not listed among the ungodly kings, but among those whose hearts were not perfect before the Lord as the heart of David (1 Kings 11:4). Thus he did not depart from the Lord.

(3) Subsequent to his death he, along with his father David, is recognized as an example for others. "For three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon" (2 Chronicles 11:17). It is thus evident that he died as a godly man.

(4) Everything has not been recorded, and one is thus not to conclude that he persevered in sin simply because no express mention is made of his repentance.

Additional Objection: Peter denied Christ thrice, and the denial of Christ cannot coexist with grace.

Answer: The Lord Jesus told him expressly that Satan would sift him, but that his faith would not fail (Luke 22:32). Furthermore, he quickly arose from his sudden fall, went outside, and "wept bitterly" (Matthew 26:75). A believer is indeed capable of committing an act of outward denial.

Additional Objection: Judas was an apostle and he became a traitor. Furthermore, Christ said in John 17:12 that He had kept all the apostles, except Judas. Thus, one of those whom the Father had given to Christ did perish.

Answer: Judas was never given by the Father to Christ in order to be redeemed by Him, for he was not one of the elect. "I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen" (John 13:18). Prior to becoming a traitor he already was a devil (John 6:70), and a thief (John 12:6). He had never been converted. In John 17:12 Judas is excluded from the number given by the Father unto salvation, and those who had been given are contrasted with Judas; Jesus preserved those who had been given to Him. Only Judas, being the son of perdition, did perish. Those who had been given to Jesus did not perish; however, Judas did. Judas' only purpose for being among the apostles was that God's decree might be executed.

Additional Objection: Demas left Paul and by renewal loved the present world (2 Timothy 4:10). They who love the world, however, do not have the love of the Father in them (1 John 2:15).

Answer: It must first be proven that Demas had indeed been regenerated; there is no evidence of this in the Word of God. The fact that he joined Paul is no evidence of conversion, for many who followed Christ departed from Him (John 6:66).

Alexander and Hymenaeus departed from the true doctrine of faith. They have been discussed previously.

Additional Objection: The incestuous person was a believer, which is evident from his repentance (2 Corinthians 2:7). He had fallen so deeply that he had been delivered up to Satan (1 Corinthians 5:5). A believer can thus fall away completely.

Answer (1) There is no evidence that he was a believer prior to his offense. This would have to be proven first.

(2) By reason of illumination and remorse of conscience someone can be overwhelmed with sorrow, upon which an excommunicated offender may be readmitted by the church.

(3) Excommunication could have been a means unto his true conversion.

(4) If he had been truly converted prior to that, the seed of God would have nevertheless remained in him. One cannot conclude total apostasy from the falling into one sin. To fall into one sin does not presuppose being under the dominion of sin. Excommunication brought him to repentance and caused him to forsake sin.

Comforts of this Doctrine

Having confirmed the truth regarding the perseverance of the saints, we shall now discuss the efficacy of this doctrine as far as comforting and stirring believers up in the way of sanctification.

It is this doctrine which underscores all comforts which believers derive from the other doctrines of the faith. For what comfort can be found in the fact that one is regenerated, has been adopted as a child of God, and has received the forgiveness of sin, if he knows that tomorrow he may be a child of the devil and of hell again? If, however, along with the reception of grace, one is assured that he shall be kept by the power of God, that the covenant is immutable, and that he shall most certainly become a partaker of eternal felicity -- only then will grace truly yield him joy, will he be quickened in love, and can he forget what is behind him and reach forth to that which is before him, pressing “toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God” (Php 3:14). Believers have many grievous and sinful encounters in this world; however, if this doctrine of perseverance is understood well, and is both believed and practiced, it will yield encouragement in the midst of all this. It is a serious deficiency in the godly to be so inclined to focus upon themselves, desiring to derive all their comfort from the enjoyment of spiritual blessings, and to have such an excessive desire for them. If they then are deprived of this (for it is not God’s way always to give them the sensible enjoyment of this), they are discouraged. This is the reason why the godly are often so melancholy. Instead, they would run their course with joy if they would focus more upon the immutability of God, the covenant, and the promises. Their life would be more to the honor of God and to the edification of their neighbor. Therefore, train yourself to be fully assured of this doctrine and to use it continually to your comfort. Then the efficacy unto sanctification will immediately issue forth from it.

Here there is a remedy against spiritual desertions. Believers do not always have the privilege to be on the holy mountain with the disciples, to be in the third heaven with Paul, and always to live in the enjoyment of the embraces and kisses of the Lord Jesus. Rather, the Lord frequently hides His lovely countenance from them, stands afar, covers Himself with a cloud so that not a single prayer can penetrate, remains silent as if He were not concerned about them, withholds the motions of His mercy toward them, brings thick darkness upon them, seemingly casts them away, and appears to be wrathful toward them. This doctrine is, however, the foundation of your comfort, true believers, for God’s love toward you is immutable, and His calling and gifts are irreversible. Therefore, exercise faith, and consider the Lord to be to you who He was when He visited you in the very sweetest manner -- yes, infinitely more. He will most certainly return to you, for He says: “For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid My face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee” (Isaiah 54:7-8); “But Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of My hands” (Isaiah 49:14-16); “For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed” (Malachi 3:6).

Here there is a remedy for the assaults of Satan. The Lord has established an irreconcilable enmity between the seed of the woman -- Christ, and all His members -- and the seed of the devil, the ungodly. As soon as God’s children are set free from the snares of the devil and are translated into the kingdom of Christ, so soon the devil will persecute them. One time he will use subtle delusion to entice them to sin; then again he will use fiery darts to frighten them; and then again he will buffet them in order to injure and prevent them from having peace. These assaults are capable of tossing a believer to and fro, causing his faith to totter. However, in spite of all the violence of this evil, powerful, and subtle enemy, the devil will not succeed in causing the apostasy of a single one, not even of the most tender sheep; nor will he succeed in plucking him out of the hand of Jesus. Instead, the devil himself will be trodden under foot by believers. “And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly” (Romans 16:20). Therefore, by the truth and in the might of God, they may triumph over the devil. “Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony” (Revelation 12:10-11).

Here is a remedy against the enmity of the world. Since God's children have forsaken the world, and convince it of sin by their light and conduct, the world consequently hates them and endeavors to draw them away from their faith and godly walk. It will do so either by caressing them with the lusts of the eye, the lusts of the flesh, and the pride of life; by threatening to take away all that could comfort them; or by way of cruel persecution and death. This causes a believer to be concerned whether he will remain steadfast in times of trial. Believers, do not fear, however, for also the world will not be able to separate you from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord Romans 8:38-39 -- neither by her caresses, nor by her persecutions. "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world" (John 16:33); "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world" (1 John 4:4).

Therefore, we may "glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed" (Romans 5:3-5). Be therefore also of good courage in this battle, and triumphantly exclaim with the apostle: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us" Romans 8:35; Romans 8:37.

Here there is also a remedy against sin. A believer is only regenerate in part. The old Adam still resides within him and he retains his nature and desires. These desires war against the soul and cause her to stumble and fall frequently -- yes, they may even keep her captive to sin. Not only does this grieve her, but it also begets many doubts and troubling thoughts within her as to whether she will be deceived in the end, as sanctification cannot be separated from justification. Since faith without works is dead, she therefore wonders whether she has fallen from grace. However, this is not so, believers! If you still battle sin (even if you have but little strength), are time and again restored and renew the battle, pray against sin, and flee to the Lord Jesus for strength -- then be of good courage. Also your sins, which remain in you contrary to your wishes, will neither pluck you out of the hand of Christ, nor will He cast you away because of them. He knew ahead of time -- before He called, converted, and comforted you -- who you were and what you would do, and He took hold of you out of sovereign grace and said, "I desire to love you and I shall love you to the end." "Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the Lord upholdeth him with His hand" (Psalms 37:24); "If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord" (Jeremiah 31:37).

Here is a remedy against the weakness of faith, darkness, and all negative frames of the soul. Sometimes the faith of God's children comes under assault from every angle, being assaulted by the devil, spiritual desertions, bodily crosses, sin, and darkness. Then they will not only be at a loss as to what to think of themselves, but they will wonder whether there are any true exercises of faith in them, for in this wretched darkness they can neither find Jesus nor engage in transactions with Him. This engenders despondency, listlessness, and deadness in them, so that it appears as if they give up. Nevertheless, the Lord preserves faith in their heart and causes it to resurface time and again. It will then be to their comfort that the Lord Jesus prays for them that their faith fail not Luke 22:32, and that they are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation" 1 Peter 1:5 -- just as experience has frequently taught them that this is so. Therefore, be encouraged, even while in that condition, to say with Paul, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day" (2 Timothy 1:12).

Here is a remedy against the fear of death. Death is contrary to nature and is the king of terrors. Even when a believer is reasonably well spiritually, if he begins to focus upon death, he will find fear and trembling within himself. Sometimes this will be in anticipation of physical death, and sometimes he will begin to realize how great the distinction is between felicity and damnation. When he then considers how feeble he is, he will think, "Where is my faith; does it have any root and validity? Where is my sanctification? I could yet be deceived at last!" Thus, the terror of death will arise in him. However, also in this we have a steadfast comfort in the certainty of God's preservation, who not only preserves His own in the state of grace in this life, but also in the hour of death. "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Corinthians 15:54-57). As the perseverance of the saints yields a most powerful comfort, it is likewise a powerful motive for sanctification. Opposing parties, being neither acquainted with the nature of grace nor the possessors of grace, are of the opinion that this doctrine renders men careless. The contrary is true, however. There is nothing that moves man so sweetly and purely unto sanctification as grace and the permanency of this grace, for the love of God kindles the love of those whom He loves. "We love Him, because He first loved us" (1 John 4:19). The steadfast hope and sure expectation of salvation is a powerful incentive unto holiness. "And every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure" (1 John 3:3). The apostle therefore uses the mercy of God as the basis for his exhortation. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice" (Romans 12:1).

(1) Therefore, acknowledge the certainty of your spiritual state and you will behold the sovereign grace, goodness, power, longsuffering, faithfulness, and immutability of God, who, till the day of their complete redemption, preserves the faith and spiritual life of a people who are so sinful and are surrounded and assaulted from every side. This will give you reason for adoration, to the praise and worship of the glorious perfections of God.

(2) Be encouraged in all perplexities; trust in the Lord who will also perfect that which concerneth you, will guide you with His counsel, and afterward receive you to glory.

(3) Be valiant in the battle, while trusting in God's safe-keeping. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Forsake the world and all its counterfeit glory, for faith is of such a nature that it overcomes the world (1 John 5:4). Refrain from indulging in fleshly lusts which war against the soul, knowing that the outcome of your walk is not uncertain, and your struggle is not as a beating in the air. Therefore, "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong" (1 Corinthians 16:13); "Be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 15:58).

106. Chapter 100: Concerning Death and the State of the Soul After Death

----- CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED ----- Concerning Death and the State of the Soul After Death

After God has led the elect in all the ways enumerated in the preceding, and they have fulfilled the Lord's counsel in their time, He then takes them to Himself into eternal felicity. However, this translation from time to eternity, from this sinful life to perfect holiness, from sorrow to joy, and from strife to the crown, takes place by way of the dark valley of the king of terrors, which is death. Only Enoch in the first, and Elijah in the second world have entered heaven without seeing death. With the exception of these two, however, no one will enter heaven except through this disagreeable way. Even though there is an incomprehensible difference between the final destiny of believers and the ungodly, they nevertheless have the experience of death in common. It is "the way of all the earth" (Joshua 23:14); "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" (Psalms 89:48). Regardless of whether one is a child, young man, or grown man, one must die. The end of everyone will be, "And he died." This is the certain and immutable injunction of God: "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment" (Hebrews 9:27). This is the sentence: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Genesis 3:19). This is confirmed to all men by experience, so that there is no need for proof, but rather that it be brought to remembrance. Temporal advantages are of no avail here. Wise Solomon dies as well as foolish Nabal; the strong Samson as well as a tender woman, the beautiful Rachel; Dinah as well as tender-eyed Leah; and the rich man as well as poor Lazarus. A king is removed as suddenly from his throne as a beggar from his hut. "There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest. There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor. The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master" (Job 3:17-19). Not only is it true that man must die, but between his birth and death there is but a small season. "Few and evil have the days of the years of my life been" (Genesis 47:9); "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble" (Job 14:1); "The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow" (Psalms 90:10). Man's life is spent as a "tale that is told" vs. 9, and "we fly away" vs. 10. Our life is swifter than a weaver's shuttle, which in one swift motion traverses the breadth of the loom (Job 7:9). Life is as grass and as a flower of the field, which endure but for a short season (Psalms 103:15). It is but as a "handbreadth," and a handbreadth of sun prior to sunset is but one hour (Psalms 39:5). Life passes by swifter than a post, swifter than ships and an eagle that hasteth to the prey (Job 9:25-26). It is as a vapor James 4:14, and as smoke that arises as a straight pillar but readily disappears (Psalms 102:4). It is as the tent of a shepherd which is removed quickly, and is cut off like the loom of a weaver which occurs in a moment (Isaiah 38:12). The Death of Believers is Not a Punishment

Even though dying is an experience common to all men, there is nevertheless a great difference between the death of the ungodly and of a believer. The ungodly face death as their prosecutor, and as a punishment upon sin. Death is the way whereby they are translated to eternal death. "For the wages of sin is death" (Romans 6:23). Believers are also subject to death. It is only a chastisement, however, for the Lord Jesus has borne the punishment for all their sins and has delivered believers from them. "And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin" (Romans 8:10). Death is for them a passage to eternal life. "And it came to pass, that the beggar (Lazarus) died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom" (Luke 16:22); "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth" (Revelation 14:13). The following question needs to be addressed: When it is not the cause of Christ which subjects believers to temporal misery and temporal death, are not these then punishments inflicted by God as an angry and righteous Judge?

Someone has come to the foreground in our days who, while advocating other soul-damning and Socinian-like errors, also proposes that the misery and temporal death of believers are punishments in the literal sense of the word. We maintain on the contrary that they are but paternal chastisements upon them. This is evident for the following reasons:

First, Christ is a complete Savior, and He has left believers with neither guilt nor punishment. Death is therefore not a punishment in the literal sense of the word. For if God were not entirely and fully reconciled with the elect, and were to punish believers as an angry and righteous Judge, then Christ would neither be a complete Savior nor would He have removed all guilt and punishment for believers. This sentiment is therefore a public denial that Christ is a complete Savior.

Secondly, if temporal misery and temporal death were punishments for believers in the literal sense of the word, then according to God's justice, the punishments should be commensurate to the sins. One of the following three possibilities must then be true: 1) all the sins of believers should not be subject to any temporal punishments beyond what they currently have to endure; 2) there must be some sins left for which Christ has not made satisfaction, which are thus not worthy of additional punishment in this life; or 3) there is a portion of the merited punishment which Christ has neither borne nor paid for, and therefore the believer himself must bear and pay for this. The disputants themselves must admit these three possibilities; however, none of these three are valid.

(1) Every sin and every partial sin is worthy of all temporal and eternal punishment to the utmost degree.

(2) Believers who have committed the largest number and most heinous sins would also have to be subject to the greatest measure of temporal punishment. However, experience frequently teaches the opposite. Moreover, there are no degrees when it comes to temporal death.

(3) Christ would then have paid more for the one than for the other, whereas the believer who has committed the least number of sins is occasionally subject to the severest temporal affliction. Since none of these three possibilities are valid, but are all absurd and contrary to God's Word, it is evident that temporal misery and temporal death are not punishments upon sin.

Thirdly, if any unrequited guilt were to be punished with temporal misery and death, the enduring of such punishment would yield this satisfaction, or it would be forgiven without total satisfaction. If the first is true, then man himself is able to make satisfaction for his sins; and if he is able to make satisfaction for some sins, one sin, or part of a sin, he should also be able to make satisfaction for all that he deserves to suffer in this life simply by suffering more. If the latter is true, then there is no need for total satisfaction and Christ's suffering would have been unnecessary. For if one sin can be forgiven without total satisfaction, this must be true for all sins, as one sin makes us guilty of all (James 2:10). Both views are contrary to God's Word -- the one is popish and the other Socinian.

Fourthly, Enoch and Elijah, who were also sinful men, did not die. They were thus delivered from what is said to be a literal punishment, of which they as well as others were deserving. If they were absolved of their punishment apart from satisfaction, absolution from all punishment can be granted apart from satisfaction and there would be no need for Christ. Or else Christ did endure the punishment of death for them, which He did not do for others.

Furthermore, consider the martyrs. They were deserving of death due to their sin, and yet the disputants will admit that their death was not a punishment for sin. However, in what manner are they then delivered from death as a punishment upon sin, of which they were worthy as well as other people? Does their martyrdom render satisfaction or have they been acquitted of their sins apart from satisfaction -- or has Christ made satisfaction for them which exceeds what He has done for others? Also believers who will be living on the last day will not die, even though they are deserving of death. It is thus evident that this error undermines the necessity of Christ's satisfaction.

Fifthly, all afflictions which believers experience in this life come from God as their Father, who does so in love (Hebrews 12:10; Revelation 3:19). They are thus not a punishment in the literal sense of the word.

Sixthly, Christ has also suffered physically and died a physical death. One of two things must be true: Either His suffering and death were in vain and are without efficacy, or He has thereby also removed temporal punishment. To hold to the first view is unchristian; the second is true. "With His stripes we are healed" (Isaiah 53:5). By way of the forgiveness of sins He delivered from physical maladies. "But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith He to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house" (Matthew 9:6). Consequently, physical maladies and death are no punishments in the literal sense of the word.

Seventhly, the bodies of believers are members of Christ 1 Corinthians 6:15; 1 Corinthians 6:19-20. Thus, both their bodies and souls are delivered from punishment. Furthermore, how can the members of Christ still be subject to the righteous wrath of God and be subject to punishment in the literal sense of the word? This would be contradictory.

Eighthly, if the miseries of the body and death are punishments upon sin, then also anxieties of the soul are punishments upon sin, for in all physical affliction the soul suffers more than the body. Believers would then derive no benefit from Christ in this life, but only after death; then we ought not to put our hope in Christ in this life.

Objection: Since this error to a large extent agrees with the errors of the Papists (which were discussed in chapter 22, vol. #1, p. 575), the same objections which we refuted at that time will also be advanced here. It all boils down to the point that physical miseries are deemed to be punishments (cf. Job 6:4; Psalms 88:17; Micah 7:9).

Answer (1) At least one text would have to be presented in which temporal death is designated a punishment. They have as yet not been able to find any text, however, and thus there is no proof for this aspect of the point of contention.

(2) The words anger, wrath, vengeance, and punishment have a twofold interpretation. Either they pertain to God as a righteous Judge or to God as a loving Father. A father can be outraged and angry, and will punish his children as much as a judge would mete out punishment for crimes. A child suffers as much as does a criminal when he is punished by a judge. Therefore, the same vocabulary is used in reference to both -- among people as well as in Scripture. Thus, we must go beyond the sound of the word and not conclude one thing or the other simply on the basis of the word itself. Rather, we must determine from the textual context whether it signifies punishment in the literal sense of the word or chastisement.

(3) Physical miseries are referred to as either chastisements or rebukes: "O Lord, rebuke me not in Thine anger, neither chasten me in Thy hot displeasure" (Psalms 6:1); "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten" (Revelation 3:19); "If ye endure chastening ..." (Hebrews 12:7). It is thus evident that rebukes and chastisements are identical in regard to believers. Thus, the word "rebuke" does not provide any basis for this error, and thus the error is confirmed.

Practical Use to be Made of the Reality That All Men Must Die

We have shown above that all men must die. The certainty of this ought to motivate us to be engaged toward 1) the godly, 2) the unconverted, and 3) ourselves.

First, since both you and the godly must die, you are therefore to interact with the godly -- to show them favors and to derive benefit from them.

(1) We must show favors to the godly, for they will not be with us long. If they are poor, give them alms, refresh them with food and drink, and clothe them, for it Christ is pleased when we are beneficent to his members. If they die before you, then, upon your death, they will welcome you into the eternal tabernacles (Luke 16:9). If they are not in need of physical support, but instead are weak spiritually, comfort and support them, helping them to bear this. If they go astray, restore them in love, and exhort them. If they are in a good spiritual condition, gladden them with your love and friendship, and if they are slandered, defend them.

(2) We must seek to derive benefit from the godly while they are with us, for they will soon die. Pay close attention to their virtues and how they behave themselves under specific circumstances. Let them be an example to you in their humility, meekness, wisdom, dignity, friendliness, and other virtues as they shine forth. Pay attention to them continually, and as you observe them, seek to bring your soul into the same frame, seeking to emulate them. If they are ministers, or other experienced or gifted saints, make diligent use of their instructions and directions, so that you may thus become acquainted with God's dealings with His children, and receive light in difficulties and cases of conscience. Being foolish people, we do not realize that something is good until we have lost it. If we are blessed with good ministers, we frequently do not make use of them. We assume that we can always have an opportunity. Once they have departed, however, we shall then have many questions for them. We shall then grieve that we have not made more use of them.

Therefore, make use of the godly while they are present, for they will depart from here.

Secondly, since both you and the ungodly will die, you are obligated to do something for the unconverted before they die. There are unconverted among your relatives, neighbors, acquaintances, and business associates, and thus the Lord grants you the opportunity to be a means to their conversion. It ought to grieve you that so many of them are no more, and perhaps are already in hell. Not once did you address them, warn them, point out the way of salvation to them, or take them by the hand to lead them to Christ, even though you knew that they were unconverted and were running toward hell. I repeat, this ought to grieve you, namely, that you -- as far as you are concerned -- are guilty in regard to their condemnation. Therefore, no longer follow in Cain's footsteps by saying, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Have compassion, and snatch them out of the fire while they are yet alive and before it is too late, for they and you are to die. Who knows -- you might be a means unto their conversion and salvation. How sweet it will be to be able to say: "Behold, Lord, here am I and the children which Thou hast given me!" If they are not willing to listen to you, you will preserve a peaceful conscience; and God, by means of you, will be glorified in His justice. Therefore, be filled with tender compassion toward precious souls. See to it that you are neither ashamed to speak of Christ and the way of salvation nor intimidated by either wisdom, greatness, riches, wickedness, or goodness. They will possibly not be as offended as you might fear, and you will subsequently meet with more approval than he who flatters with his tongue. Even if your words do not benefit them when spoken, they can come to remembrance years later and be a means unto conversion.

Thirdly, since you yourself will die, you must do something as far as you yourself are concerned. If you are unconverted, be fearful of death. If you are godly, rejoice over the fact that there will come an end to this miserable life and that death will usher in a happy life for you. Whoever you may therefore be, be prepared for your departure from this world.

If you are as yet unconverted, I have a word for you, so that, if it were possible, I might bring you to repentance by alarming you. Give ear, oh man -- you who are wallowing in the earth as a mole; you who only esteem that which is visible; you who only yearn for the tangible; and you who are only concerned about that. This is the focal point of all your mental activity and dreams which you are pursuing with all your might, and is the goal of all your initiatives. Give ear, you who lead an idle and wanton life, and determine and seek your enjoyment to be in eating, drinking, amusements, splendor, and all sorts of frivolity. Give ear, ungodly blasphemers, gamblers, drunkards, immoral adulterers and fornicators, liars, backbiting slanderers, and unrighteous, wicked, and envious persons.

First, you are unconverted and are walking upon the broad way to hell. You are going to die and you will not be here much longer. Perhaps it will be over for you tomorrow. When the king of terrors separates your soul from your body, it will be finished as far as your indulgence in delicacies, wine, the playing of cards, and gambling are concerned. Gone will be your money, profit, honor, offices you are holding, expensive clothing, and whatever else you have occupied yourself with. You will not be able to preserve those things and they will all declare to you: "Depart to hell; we no longer associate with you; we are no longer for you." They will no longer be able to entertain your fearful soul, nor be able to comfort you. Rather, they will all testify against you, and your oppressed conscience will be an unbearable burden to you.

Secondly, not only will joy have vanished, but terrors will come in its place. Presently you are such a hero, have such a strong spirit, and fear neither death, devil, nor hell. When death comes, however, your courage will depart readily. That which Belshazzar experienced will also come upon you. For a moment, let me hold before you the mirror of this history and you will discover your future condition in it. "Then the king's countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another" (Daniel 5:6). If the messenger of death were to come to you, saying, "Yet forty days and you shall perish"; or, "This night I shall require thy soul from thee"; would you then be joyful? Your conscience would then be very lively, and you would then have a different conception of the wrath of God and of eternal damnation than you presently have. If a drop of sweat will cling to every hair since God will be a terror to you, where will you then flee? Then seek out your previous ungodly company; they will flee from you, however. Let full dishes and goblets then be brought to you; but you will not be able to ingest them. Then play around with the money you have scraped together, but how wretched the sound of the coins will be! Then put on all your expensive clothing, but you will then say, "Away with all these rags." Then let all your prostitutes climb into your bed; but you will then say: "Depart from me; I do not want to see you." You will then say: "World, away with you; I abhor you." Tell me, what will you do then? Where will you take refuge? With God? With the foolish virgins you will find heaven to be closed. Then you will experience the truth of what you presently do not believe: "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out My hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all My counsel, and would none of My reproof: I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon Me, but I will not answer; they shall seek Me early, but they shall not find Me: for that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord" (Proverbs 1:24-29). Where will you flee when the Lord will bring you into judgment for all your sins? Where will you flee when the Lord will command the devil to drag your soul to hell? Then you can weep and howl all you want, but there will be neither pity nor help for you, and you will find yourself in eternal despair and pain to which there will come no end. Therefore today, as you hear the voice of the Lord, harden not your heart. "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light" (Ephesians 5:14).

You who are godly, however, need not be fearful of death. Instead, it should be to your comfort that you will not always remain here. When death comes, all your sorrow will come to an end. All dissatisfaction and restlessness; all weaknesses and pains; all poverty and concerns; and all sin and corruption will only follow you until death. You will leave all that behind, and all that will depart from you in the hour of death. What a blessing it is that there is deliverance, that our tribulations will very soon pass away, and that our weeping will be but for a short moment! It is true that death itself is dreadful, but it is at the same time also very beneficial. It cuts off all grievous and sinful crosses at once, and in one moment it will translate the soul into a state of felicity which it never could have truly anticipated prior to that. Death will be as the dreadful lion killed by Samson which, after having been killed, yielded sweet honey. It is as the Red Sea which served to deliver the children of Israel securely from Egypt and out of Pharaoh's hand. To die is to depart in peace and to begin residing with the Lord and to be with Christ. Therefore, believers, on the basis of Christ's merits, be of good courage as you bear your cross and as you face death. Be desirous to depart and to be with Christ. Being established by faith, triumph over this last enemy saying, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Corinthians 15:54-57).

Exhortation to Set One's House in Order

Since all men will die, you, too, will die -- unconverted and godly alike. What is then more necessary than to prepare yourself for death? Oh, that my exhortation would stir you up to do so!

First, you who read or hear this read, I have a message from the Lord to you. The Lord says to you: "Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live" (2 Kings 20:1). I am not saying, "Prepare yourself to die tomorrow," for it may well be that you will not live until the morrow, but that in this night your soul will be taken from you. Death comes unexpectedly, and frequently when one is most busily engaged and is least thinking about death. "Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of" Matthew 24:44; Matthew 24:50.

Secondly, as uncertain as the moment of death is, so uncertain is the manner of death. Perhaps you will be snatched from this life in one moment by way of a heart attack, an accident, or by another unanticipated event. Even if death will be preceded by an illness, you will perhaps immediately be unconscious and bereft of your mental faculties, or you will be so preoccupied with pain and anxiety that you will not be able to think composedly about God for one moment. Being thus troubled within, you will perhaps take the great step upon which eternity hinges.

Thirdly, everything is contingent upon death. As the tree falls, so it will lie. If you die as an unconverted person, your soul will go to hell; if you die as a converted person, your soul will instantly go to heaven and enter into joy. I am not suggesting that salvation is contingent upon the spiritual frame which the believer has at his final moment, but rather what he is in principle. If there is life within, his end will be peace -- even if he must depart with much darkness, weakness of faith, and strife. Just as the external manner of dying (that is, whether someone has a difficult or gentle deathbed) does not render someone saved or unsaved, likewise does not the internal condition of the soul; that is, whether a believer essentially goes his way in joy and assurance, or with much anxiety.

Fourthly, a late conversion is seldom a good conversion. God generally hides Himself and Christ generally refuses grace to those who, in spite of all the means, have stubbornly persevered in yielding to their lusts, having wasted the entire time of life allotted to them. All their sorrow is but a being fearful of hell; all their supplication for grace is but an outburst caused by fear and anxiety; and all their fleeing to Jesus is but a vehement desire to be delivered from perdition. Therefore, do not wait until the last moment. Many are, however, not even serious at the end, but rather are insensitive as they approach their end. How dreadful will their end be!

Fifthly, a worldly person is of the opinion that one would not be able to live if he were to reflect continually and intensely about death. It is true indeed that he would not be able to live peacefully in sin. Sin would no longer be a delight, and fear would take all his joy away. They who speak or think in this fashion, however, demonstrate that they have never yet walked upon the pathway of salvation, and that they would rather go carelessly to hell than presently repent. Believers ought to know, however, that it is not only genuinely wise to live in a state of preparation for death, but also that it is a most delightful life. All that is of the world will lose its beauty, the cross will be viewed as soon coming to an end, the conscience will be at peace within, the hope of glory will yield joy, one will actively pursue sanctification, and all will be plain within the heart. How delightful is Paul's condition when he writes: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing" 2 Timothy 4:7-8!

Sixthly, what would we not do to have a joyous deathbed! What a dreadful death it will be if we have neglected the time of grace and cannot look forward to anything but being cast into hell immediately upon death! How wretched it is even for believers when we must die in darkness; if we do not know whether there has ever been grace in the soul; if we fear that we shall not be saved, but rather must perish at that very moment; or if we must breathe our last breath in such a state of confusion and perplexity! What a joyful deathbed it is, on the contrary, if we may be strong in the faith, know ourselves to be reconciled in Christ and clothed with His righteousness, see heaven opened and Jesus standing ready to receive the soul, and presently taste the beginning of eternal joy! Oh, then death is not death! However, this frequently follows upon being occupied habitually with the preparation for death. It can happen that a feeble Christian, who has struggled much with sin and has been lethargic in seeking after God, has nevertheless a joyous end, whereas one who was a strong Christian in his lifetime occasionally dies in darkness. However, that is the exception. Generally, dying will be consistent with the measure in which one has prepared for it. It is not contingent upon the many comforts one has enjoyed in this life, but according to what extent he has been exercised spiritually. Those who have had much strife in this life, have experienced much darkness, have lived in weakness of faith, and have wrestled with the power of corruption, generally die in faith. Therefore, he who desires to have a joyous deathbed ought to be active in spending much time in preparing for death.

Question: What am I to do? In what does preparation consist?

Answer: First, in this time wean yourself from this world. "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares" (Luke 21:34). A tree which has burrowed its roots deep in the earth can only be extracted from the earth with much pulling and tearing, whereas a young tree not yet deeply rooted can easily be extracted from the earth. Such is also true for a person who greatly cleaves to this earth. His thoughts are focused on the things of this world and these fully or partially occupy his heart. This quietly robs him of his time, and man finds himself overtaken by death without having prepared himself for it -- and thus the dismay. Therefore, accustom yourself to view everything as vanity, as unsatisfactory, as dangerous, and as transitory; and then make use of everything in this weaned condition of soul. It requires effort to be habitually weaned from the visible. However, having acquired and preserved such a disposition, one will be able to depart that much more easily, for the soul will have previously been emptied of all these things.

Secondly, learn to live by faith, in reliance upon the Word of God alone. It does not please the Lord to lead His children here by way of seeing. If we have too strong a desire for this without being able to be submissive or satisfied with the way of faith, it will frequently occur that we shall be perplexed when death comes. This would not have been so if, generally speaking, he had lived by faith. If one has previously not learned to rejoice in faith and thus to lean sweetly upon Christ, it will hardly be possible to learn this at the end. It will be in the hand of him who has learned this, however, and he will be able to depart, saying, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day" (2 Timothy 1:12).

Thirdly, strive continually to have a reconciled conscience which is at peace. You will offend continually, but be sure that you continue not in it, going your way with a confused conscience. That is the most direct way to become more confused in the end, when faith will be most assaulted. Rather, you must accustom yourself to arise immediately after a fall, receive the blood of Christ time and again, and wrestle so long until reconciliation and peace have been regained. This will teach you at death to lay your sin upon the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. This will cause you to know that your conscience has been cleansed from dead works, and to have been cleansed from all sins in the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. You will then know yourself to be clothed with Christ's righteousness and thus to be perfect in Him. You shall have courage to come before Him without fear in the judgment that follows death.

Fourthly, accustom yourself to keep death continually in mind and to live continually with an impression of dying. This cannot be learned so readily, for we have a natural aversion for this and very quickly forget about death. Even if there are some fleeting thoughts about it, this will neither beget a proper disposition toward dying, nor will it give us a wise heart. Pagans accustomed themselves to actively think about death. They said that the life of the wise consists in the contemplation of death. There were those who caused it to be called out every morning: "Remember that you are a man and that you will die." Christ frequently spoke of His death, and saints prayed for a proper disposition toward death. "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am. Behold, Thou hast made my days as an handbreadth; and mine age is as nothing before Thee" (Psalms 39:4-5). Moses did likewise: "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom" (Psalms 90:12). As you accustom yourself to reflect upon death, strive to do everything as if it were your last deed, and to bear every cross as if you would be delivered from it by death that evening. How much patience this will bring forth and how little you will then strive in your conduct for honor, love, and advantage! How prepared you shall then be when death will come, having daily anticipated it for such a long time already! Therefore, engage yourself, for you must at once think as follows: "I must prepare myself; I must act." Any disposition is acquired by way of much exercise.

Fifthly, hasten to bring your work to its conclusion. Do now what you would wish to have been completed at death. There is still so much unfinished work, and the time yet remaining is very short. Do you already have sufficient faith? Is your heart already warm with love? Are there no longer any sins that must be fought against and overcome? Have you already been weaned from the visible and do you live for the invisible? Have you already become an example of humility, meekness, generosity, spirituality, and love for your enemies? Have you already imprinted a footstep which your descendants will recognize and of which they will think, "Oh, how exemplary did he live! If only I would follow in his footsteps!" In all this you fall considerably short, and therefore hasten with the impression of having but little time left. How sweet will death be if, with Hezekiah, you will be able to say, "Remember now, O Lord, I beseech thee, how I have walked before Thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in Thy sight" Isaiah 38:3!

Therefore, prepare yourself to die! "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matthew 26:41); "But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer" (1 Peter 4:7); "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning" (Luke 12:37). Be prepared for your journey, and, as the wise virgins, supply yourself with oil -- faith, hope, and love -- in your lamps, and thus await the coming of the Bridegroom. "Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching" (Luke 12:37); "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when He cometh shall find so doing" (Matthew 24:46). The State of the Soul after Death

Having observed that all men will die, the question arises how the soul fares after being separated from the body. In chapter 10 [vol. #1, p. 307] we have dealt comprehensively with the soul, the essence of its existence, its faculties, and its operations by way of its faculties. God created man with a soul and a body, and they would not have been separated to all eternity had man not sinned. However, death, a separation of soul and body, has come into the world in consequence of sin. This results in the soul being separated for some time from the body, whereupon the body will return to dust. However, the soul is an independent entity and an immortal being, not being dependent upon the body for its existence. Upon being separated from the body, her essential existence continues, she retains her faculties -- the intellect and the will -- and continues to function as such. Immediately after death, the souls of believers are taken up into the third heaven to God and enjoy everything there which man, after soul and body have been reunited, will enjoy eternally. The intellect will be occupied with the immediate beholding of God, and the will shall be filled with love, perfect holiness, and inexpressible joy; however, the measure in which this will be experienced is not known to us. They immediately enjoy felicity Revelation 14:13, immediately are in heaven (Luke 16:22); 2 Corinthians 5:1, are united with the church triumphant, are among "the spirits of just men made perfect" Hebrews 12:23, and are with Christ Php 1:23 in whom is all their joy (1 Thessalonians 4:18). The souls of the unconverted also continue in their essential existence and retain both intellect and will -- however, in the endurance of both punishment and pain (Luke 16:23). They are "the spirits in prison" 1 Peter 3:19, "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire" Jude 1:7.

There are abominable heresies concerning the state of souls when separated from the body. The Papists maintain that souls continue in their essential existence. It is their view, however, that souls who do not die in the commission of a mortal sin go to a fabricated purgatory, and that unbaptized children go to a certain place which is neither heaven nor hell, where they will have neither pain nor joy to all eternity. The Anabaptists believe that souls do continue in their essential existence until the day of judgment; however, they are asleep and are oblivious to everything -- thus having neither pain nor joy. Many among the Arminians are of the same sentiment as the Anabaptists, maintaining that souls do not carry on any mental activity after death; that is, neither manifesting any activity nor being receptive for any activity. Among the Socinians, who can neither be numbered among the Christians nor indeed are more than civilized pagans; and among the pagans (in life as well as in death) who have most in common with the Epicureans--there are some who are in agreement with the Anabaptists. Many of them (if not almost all) maintain, however, that the soul is no more than a divine breath, a characteristic, an operative function (albeit an intelligent function) just like all other human functions, such as strength, dexterity, etc. Moreover, when man dies, the soul returns as a breath unto God from whom it originated when He blew it into man's nostrils. And thus it returns to God as something belonging unto Him, and, just as is true for the souls of animals, it consequently vanishes and ceases to exist, and therefore is neither subject to pain nor to joy. Furthermore, they believe that in the resurrection another body and breath or motion are by renewal generated and will thus enjoy eternal life if that person was one of the righteous. If not, then its annihilation will be maintained. Others express themselves somewhat differently, but it all culminates in the same idea. It could be asked whether they believe in a resurrection at all. A rational human being can readily understand that such a new generation of a different body and a new breath is not one and the same person who lived previously and committed either good or evil. This would mean that in reality there would neither be a resurrection of the dead nor a last judgment. The Immortality of the Soul after Death

We shall first address the parties mentioned and defend the immortality of the soul and her subjection to pain in hell or her experience of joy in heaven; and we shall then “deliver” all those souls from purgatory.

Question: Upon death, is the soul of man, and does it remain, a personal, living, and rational being which enjoys eternal joy in heaven if it has been the soul of a believer? Or does it suffer eternal pain in hell, the place of the damned, if it has remained unconverted?

Answer: We answer in the affirmative. Socinians answer in the negative, and Anabaptists with the Arminians respond negatively to the last proposition. Our view is evident for the following reasons:

First, it is confirmed by such texts which state that the soul retains its being after death.

(1) “Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?” (Ecclesiastes 3:21). In Hebrew rouach signifies spirit, heart, breath, wind, and soul. It signifies the Holy Spirit, the third Person in the divine essence Psalms 33:6, the angels Psalms 104:4, and the soul of man: “Into Thine hand I commit my spirit” (Psalms 31:5). The preacher relates in verse 20 what transpires with the body after death: Both the bodies of beasts and of men return to the dust, and in this they resemble each other. In verse 21 he shows what transpires with the souls of both and wherein they differ, the difference being that the souls of animals (their blood) flows down into the earth, whereas the souls of men ascend toward God who has given them, for the purpose of receiving the sentence of life or death from Him as Judge. He speaks of all souls in a general sense -- the good as well as the evil -- saying the same about all: They all return to God. This cannot mean a gracious acceptance and felicity for the wicked; instead, this can only be as their Judge.

(2) “And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell” (Matthew 10:28). If the soul did not continue in its essential existence, people would be able to kill the soul as well as the body. Since, however, they are only able to kill the body and not the soul, it is thus evident that the soul remains alive after death.

(3) “I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living” (Matthew 22:32). Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are living subsequent to their death, for God is their God after their death. However, according to the body they are not alive; and thus they are alive according to the soul.

(4) "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven ... he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter" (2 Corinthians 12:2; 2 Corinthians 12:4). The apostle demonstrates here that the soul is able to exist and perceive outside of the body. Otherwise he would not have to doubt whether it happened out of the body or in the body. Thus, the soul is capable of being in the third heaven, knowing and enjoying things that are unspeakable, while the body is upon earth.

(5) "But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect" (Hebrews 12:22-23). All those to whom believers come do actually exist and among them are also the spirits of just men made perfect -- and thus their existence is real.

(6) "I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season" (Revelation 6:9-11). The altar is Christ (Hebrews 13:10). The souls of dead martyrs were covered by His reconciliation and were in His safe-keeping. Thus, the souls of martyrs truly exist after their death. These souls longed for the glorification of God's justice in avenging the shed blood of His children, this being expressed by their crying. They had been glorified, which is indicated by the long white robes. They were both addressed and informed about what was yet to come. All of this shows very clearly that souls continue their existence after death, are living, have understanding, and are active. Even though some things are expressed in physical terms, so that they may be understood, yet the entire manner of speech makes it clear that they are to be interpreted in a manner which is consistent with souls.

Evasive Argument: It is said of Abel's blood that it calls for vengeance Genesis 4:10, and he is also said to speak after he died (Hebrews 11:4). This is, however, not true in a literal sense. It is merely indicative of his suffering and actions while he was alive. In like manner Revelation 6:9-11 is to be interpreted.

Answer: We do not acknowledge this conclusion, as it lacks evidence. This text conveys something entirely different. Here it is not only stated what the souls did, but also what answer they received and what was done to them. Thus, the reference is to the soul, rather than to deeds. This is clear proof that, rather than sleep, they live after death, and use both reason and intellect.

Secondly, that the souls of believers do rejoice after death is evident from the description of their state after death, as well as from the longing the saints have for death. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them" (Revelation 14:13). Mention is made here of felicity after death, and thus souls continue in their actual existence, for nothing can be said of something that does not exist, nor can it enjoy felicity. The felicity of souls does not consist in sleeping, but in enjoyment. Furthermore, sleeping is meant for the body; the soul does not sleep. The fact that they rest also does not indicate that they are sleeping. Both Christ and people do rest, although they are awake. Resting indicates being at liberty and the cessation of burdensome activities. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" (2 Corinthians 5:1).

If the souls of believers are in heaven after the body, the earthly tabernacle, has been dissolved or has died 2 Peter 1:13, then they are indeed happy. "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord" (2 Corinthians 5:8). That which does not exist cannot be present with the Lord. Thus, these souls, upon having been separated from the body, are present with the Lord. Furthermore, the strong desire of believers to depart this world and to be present with the Lord is an indication that souls are in a much happier condition after this life than in this life, and thus souls are not asleep. Observe this desire also in the following text: "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better" (Php 1:23). Death in and of itself is not desirable. A living dog is better than a dead lion. Paul was not that weak and sorrowful that he wished for death due to grief, for he had learned to be content and was able to do all things through Christ who strengthened him Php 4:11;Php 4:13. Yes, by God sustaining him, he took "pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses" (2 Corinthians 12:10). There was, however, a different reason why he had a desire to die, namely, to be with Christ, which was far better to him. Thus, the apostle knew that his soul would live after his death, and that it would be in a far better condition after death.

Just as the souls of believers rejoice in heaven after death, likewise the souls of the ungodly are sent to hell, there to endure eternal pain. "By which also He went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient" (1 Peter 3:19-20). Christ, by His Spirit and through Noah, preached to the disobedient world. However, upon their death their souls were sent to prison, that is, to hell. "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire" Jude 1:7. If the souls of the disobedient of the first world and the souls of the ungodly from Sodom and Gomorrah are in prison and are suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, then they continue to exist after death and are enduring punishment and eternal pain (Matthew 25:46). Add to this the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:23-24). The objective of this parable is to describe the condition of souls after this life in order to deter man from sin and to exhort him to the practice of virtue. To that end, the soul of Lazarus is depicted as enjoying comfort in heaven, and the soul of the ungodly rich man is depicted as suffering grief in hell.

Thirdly, there is irrefutable evidence in the following examples: Christ, the thief on the cross, and others. Christ's soul most certainly continued in its actual existence after death. While dying he said, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit" (Luke 23:46). He said to the thief, "Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise" (Luke 23:43). Paradise is the third heaven (2 Corinthians 12:2;2 Corinthians 12:4). Thus, Christ and the thief would be in the third heaven on the very day of their death. Therefore the actual existence of their souls continued and they were in heaven where there is nothing but joy. This is also true for the souls of the martyrs (Revelation 6:9-11; Revelation 7:9-10;Revelation 7:14; Revelation 14:13). From all this, it has been proven clearly and irrefutably that souls continue to exist after death, are alive and active, and either rejoice in heaven or suffer pain in hell.

Fourthly, this understanding is innate. The pagans knew this, and they were therefore of the opinion that souls move into other creatures. The fabrications of designated and delightful places, and fields as residences for such souls originate from this. Even until this very day, barbaric pagans have the impression that souls continue to exist after death.

Objection #1: (Ecclesiastes 3:19-21).

Answer: We have commented on this text earlier.

Objection #2: Consider these passages: "... before I go hence, and be no more" (Psalms 39:13); "Rahel ... refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not" (Jeremiah 31:15).

Answer: This means that they were not in the land of the living.

Objection #3: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable" (1 Corinthians 15:19). Paul is engaged in proving the resurrection of the dead, and among other things he proves thereby that believers were of all men most miserable if there were no resurrection. This would make no sense if believers were already in felicity prior to the resurrection, for they do not expect felicity until the resurrection at the last day. This indicates that they will not enjoy felicity until then.

Answer (1) Paul speaks of being miserable in this life, and he is not stretching it out to the resurrection at the last day.

(2) Paul is dealing with people who maintained that man is annihilated after death -- both as to body and soul -- and all the entertainment there is for man is to be enjoyed in this life alone, it being their proverb: "Eat, drink, play, for after death no one sings." The apostle refutes this, and demonstrates that there is joy after this life, and that they therefore were not of all men most miserable since their hope was in Christ after this life.

Objection #4: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake" (Daniel 12:2). Here the dead are said to sleep, and thus souls do sleep.

Answer: Death is referred to as sleep. "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth. ... Howbeit Jesus spake of His death: but they thought that He had spoken of taking of rest in sleep" John 11:11; John 11:13. The dead are said to sleep because of the many resemblances between both. Souls are never said to sleep, since this is contrary to the nature of a soul. Sleeping is characteristic of the body.

Purgatory is a Human Invention We shall now deal with the fable of purgatory.

Question: Do the souls of believers, after having been separated from the body in death, go to purgatory in order to be perfectly purified -- be it by way of personal suffering or through the assistance of the prayers, masses, and merits of the saints? Or are the souls of believers taken to heaven immediately upon their death?

Answer: The point of contention does not relate to the death of the ungodly, for they go to hell immediately. The point of contention neither relates to whether the reformed come in purgatory, for even the Papists declare that they are delivered from this. Rather, the point is whether the Papists come there or not, for purgatory -- that wondrous place -- is only for them. Thus, in answer to these questions they confirm the first, and deny the second. We, on the contrary, deny the first and hold to the second. Our proof is as follows:

First, there is not one reference to purgatory in the entire Bible. They themselves do not know what to do about this -- even if they were to ask the devil (as one of them did) to point them to a text.

Secondly, Scripture knows but two ways and two destinies: life and perdition, heaven and hell (Matthew 7:13-14; Luke 16:22-23).

Evasive Argument: They who go to purgatory will come into heaven at last.

Answer: After death there are but two destinies. Purgatory would be a third one, and thus it must be rejected. Thirdly, there is no need for a purgatory. It can neither remove sin nor cleanse the soul. Instead, the Lord Jesus cleanses His own from all sins. In Him they are perfect, and are the righteousness of God. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7); "And ye are complete in Him" (Colossians 2:10); "... that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Corinthians 5:21).

What purpose could a purgatory have since all sins have already been removed? Furthermore, a purgatory cannot remove sin, for there is no forgiveness of sin without the shedding of blood. It is a physical fire which cannot bring about the cleansing of the soul. The intercession of the saints and the masses for souls of the deceased are but fabrications. The merits of the saints are null and void. The real issue is money, and with money heaven cannot be opened at all -- neither at an earlier nor at a later moment. The distinction between mortal and forgivable sins is not biblical. The Bible teaches that all sin is mortal, and that there is but one unforgivable sin: the sin against the Holy Ghost.

Fourthly, Scripture states plainly that the souls of believers immediately enter heaven upon death. When the earthly house of our tabernacle is dissolved, heaven will be our portion (2 Corinthians 5:1). To be absent from the body is to be present with Christ vs. 8. To depart and to be with Christ is better than life (Php 1:23). It would be better to live until the last day, than to be in purgatory (if there were such a thing) until that time. The dead who die in the Lord are blessed from henceforth (Revelation 14:13). This was not only true from the moment that this was said, for also prior to that time there was salvation in Christ for those who died, and thus also from the time of their death forward. The converted thief was already with Christ upon the day of his death. "Today thou shalt be with Me in Paradise." Christ confirmed this with the word "verily." Hereby is not expressed that He was saying it to him today, but rather that today he would be with Christ in heaven. The first did not need to be confirmed, for the thief and others could adequately hear this. Rather, it was the second which the thief requested, and He promised him that he would enjoy this on this very day, immediately upon his death.

Objection #1: "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water" (Zechariah 9:11).

Answer (1) This most certainly cannot be a reference to purgatory -- not even according to their proposition -- for it did not exist as yet. Rather, this would then be a reference to that fabricated place where the believers of the Old Testament were kept until the time of Christ.

(2) The prophet speaks of the deliverance from the prison of Babylon. He refers to this as a pit, since prisons generally were, and still are, in caverns under the earth. "There being no water" means that there was no refreshment which those who were thirsty could receive by drinking.

Objection #2: "... lest at any time ... thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing" (Matthew 5:25-26).

Answer: This is a parable that relates to the dealings of creditors with debtors who are without means. Hereby Christ is referring to the eternal damnation which awaits unrepentant sinners, from which there will be no deliverance until full payment is made for their sins -- which will not occur to all eternity.

Objection #3: "It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come" (Matthew 12:32). Thus, forgiveness can yet be anticipated after this life; this can only occur in purgatory.

Answer: This means that no forgiveness can be anticipated after this life, for it is stated expressly that sin will not be forgiven in the world to come. No mention is made at all that there is forgiveness in the world to come. This is as much as to say: either now or never.

Objection #4: "Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire" (1 Corinthians 3:13-15). It is thus expressly stated that everyone will be tried by fire and that he will be saved by fire.

Answer (1) If one would wish to construct a purgatory from this, it would first have to be proven that trial and salvation by fire do occur after the day of man's death. However, the apostle speaks of what man's experience in this life will be.

(2) Fire is not to be understood here as physical fire which would be capable of affecting man's soul and his works. Rather, fire must be understood as referring to persecution and oppression in this world for the sake of the Word (cf. Zechariah 3:2; Malachi 3:2-3). "I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled?" (Luke 12:49). The apostle says that by way of persecution it will be manifest how and what everyone has built upon the foundation of the gospel. When persecution comes, nothing but the truth will be able to be the foundation for one's suffering, and whatever has been peripheral to that he will reject, and thus the fire will save him. If, however, he has conducted himself in a genuine manner, he will be bold in suffering and his uprightness will be manifest in the day of trial.

Objection #5: "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth" (Php 2:10). No one can honor Jesus under the earth, however, except those who are in purgatory, and thus there must be a purgatory.

Answer: There are indeed creatures under the earth and there are also devils there. However, Christ, by His suffering and death, has merited all power in heaven and on earth, and everything must be subject to Him -- which the devils were when He commanded them to depart. The bending of the knees cannot be taken in a literal sense, for souls in purgatory have no knees. Instead, it signifies subjection to Him -- be it willingly or unwillingly. It thus remains a fact that there is no purgatory. Consequently, all popish souls have been delivered from it. In addition to purgatory, the Papists, on very precarious grounds, fabricate two additional subterranean localities. The one locality was for the fathers of the Old Testament, from which Christ would have delivered them in His descent into hell. Since they are already delivered from this, however, we shall spare ourselves any further effort. The other fabricated locality is for children who die without being baptized, and in their view may neither enter heaven nor hell, but must eternally remain secluded there without pain or joy. We have refuted this above, for Scripture knows of no such place. The children of members of the covenant have the promise of salvation. It is not in the hands of adults to save or cause children to perish by either having them baptized or by depriving them of it.

Thus, the soul does not die, but rather continues its actual existence, retains its intellect and will, and immediately upon death remains active, without coming into purgatory. It will either suffer all the terrors of hell and endure the wrath of God; or it will enjoy all joy and happiness in immediate fellowship with God in perfect love and holiness, doing so in the presence of angels and the souls of the just made perfect, eternally to jubilate hallelujahs. This all being true, you who are unconverted ought to fear! Do not entertain the illusion that there will yet be the hope of being saved by being purified in purgatory. It is but a fable and you will find yourself deceived when immediately you will find yourself to be in hell, from which there will be no deliverance to all eternity. And you, believers, do not be fearful of death, for according to the promises of the God of truth, your soul will immediately be taken into glory and joy. You may freely desire to depart and to be with Christ, which will be far better for you. Oh, what a sudden change it will be when the soul will find herself free from all sin, darkness, and torments, and instead may behold the countenance of God in righteousness and be satisfied with His likeness! She will thus be preserved until the last day, when the soul will be reunited with the body in order to enjoy forever with body and soul that glory and that joy which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him" (1 Corinthians 2:9). Amen.

107. Chapter 101: The Resurrection of the Dead

----- CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED-ONE ----- The Resurrection of the Dead When after death the body will have returned unto dust, and the soul will have been preserved in her designated place until the last day, then all particles will return to their original substance to constitute the very same body with which the soul will be reunited. These will constitute the very same human being who previously existed. To arise from the dead or from the grave occasionally signifies:

(1) to be delivered from great oppression: "Behold, O My people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel" (Ezekiel 37:12);

(2) regeneration: "Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) and hath raised us up together" (Ephesians 2:5-6); "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead" (Ephesians 5:14).

However, it generally refers to the actual resurrection of the deceased. This specifically refers to those who, in both the Old and New Testaments, have been resurrected by way of a miracle, and have subsequently died again -- as well as to the general resurrection of all men when the Lord Jesus will come to execute judgment at the end of the world. It is the latter we shall now discuss. This doctrine, which cannot be deduced from nature, is ridiculed by pagans and rejected by heretics. However, the Holy Scriptures reveal it so clearly -- to the terror of the ungodly and the comfort of the godly -- that it is amazing that men dare to deny it in like fashion as those during the time of the apostles who began to contradict it. "How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" (1 Corinthians 15:12). The Nature of This Resurrection This resurrection will not have a natural cause -- as if those bodies could again be brought to life after a period of time by certain motions, changes, and transformations. This can neither be accomplished by an angel nor any other creature. Rather, this is a work of omnipotence and will therefore be performed by God, the Creator of heaven and earth, "Who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were" (Romans 4:17); "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them" (John 5:21).

Just as there neither were nor could have been secondary causes in creation, it will be likewise at the resurrection of the dead, for it is a work of omnipotence in which no finite powers are involved. The angels will not be instrumental in the resurrection itself. However, God will use them to gather those before the judgment seat who have been resurrected: "And He shall send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matthew 24:31). Just as Jesus generally made use of external signs when performing miracles to make the miracle all the more obvious, so the Lord will also add an external sign at the general resurrection of the dead: a very great sound that will resound throughout the world. "The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible" (1 Corinthians 15:52); "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thessalonians 4:16).

Enoch and Elijah will not be resurrected, for they did not die. Neither will those who have arisen from the graves at the resurrection of Christ, nor all those who will be alive at the last day, be resurrected, for they will not die but be changed in the twinkling of an eye (1 Corinthians 15:51-52). However, with the exception of all such persons, all who have died from the beginning of the world unto the end (either prior to or after their birth) will arise -- be they small or great, be they godly or ungodly. The very same bodies which were either burned, drowned in the sea, eaten by beasts or men, or died a common death and thus returned to dust -- those same bodies will be reunited with their very own souls which neither died nor were able to die, and thus they will be the same persons they were prior to their death. However, their physical characteristics will have been changed. This change will render the ungodly immortal and capable of eternally bearing all punishments and the suffering of pain. The godly, who according to the soul will have the image of God perfectly, and who will be bodily conformed to Christ Php 3:21, will put on incorruption, immortality, glory, power, and spirituality 1 Corinthians 15:42;1 Corinthians 15:44;1 Corinthians 15:53-54.

All men will be resurrected simultaneously on the last day. Prior to that time there will not be a physical resurrection of martyrs who would reign with Christ for a thousand years, as chiliasts or millennialists fabricate from Revelation 20:1-15. Rather, when Christ will come to execute judgment, all men will be resurrected simultaneously. "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day" (John 11:24); "... at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible" (1 Corinthians 15:52); "I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:40). How astonishing it will be when all particles will return to their original substance and every bone will return to its skeleton -- when the dead will become alive and stand together upon the earth!

Two matters must be proven more specifically: 1) that there will be a resurrection of the dead, and 2) that the identical bodies will be resurrected.

Both the Godly and the Ungodly Will be Resurrected Question: Will there truly be a resurrection of the dead of both the godly and the ungodly?

Answer: The Socinians insist that the soul will no longer exist after death, the same body will not arise again, and the ungodly will not arise at all. This is therefore a total denial of the resurrection. We, however, deem the resurrection of the dead -- both of the good as well as the evil -- to be an irrefutable truth. This is confirmed by express textual references. First, there is Job 19:25-27 : "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."

(1) Job does not speak of a physical restoration from his misery, but of a resurrection on the last day: "He shall stand at the latter day."

(2) He anticipates this to be after his death when the worms will have destroyed his skin and his body, and he will have turned to dust.

(3) He states that Christ will stand at the last day, that is, make him alive again. [Note: The Statenvertaling differs here from the KJV. The Dutch text reads as follows: “Hij zal de laatste over het stof opstaan,” that is, “He shall at the latter day resurrect my dust.” In the KJV this reads: “He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.”]

(4) He states that with his own eyes he will see God in the flesh. All this cannot relate to the restoration of his health, but is a clear reference to the resurrection on the last day. Secondly, “And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt” (Daniel 12:2). This reference is neither to the deliverance from Babylon nor from Antiochus, having spoken previously of these. Instead the prophet speaks of what should happen subsequently, namely, that Michael (that is, who is like unto God) who is the Lord Jesus, would arise in a most distressful time such as had never been before. This time of distress would be when Gog and Magog would surround the camp of the saints and the beloved city (Revelation 20:9).

(1) At that time the Lord Jesus will come to execute judgment; that is, when all the dead shall be resurrected (vss. 11-15). In these verses the very same matters are recounted in the identical order as they are recorded in Daniel, and it is therefore evident that they refer to the same matter. However, Revelation 20:1-15 clearly pertains to the coming of Christ to execute judgment, and to the resurrection of the dead. This is therefore also true for (Daniel 12:2).

(2) At that time the “wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever” (Daniel 12:3). This neither refers to the deliverance from Babylon, nor from Antiochus, for the priests were wicked.

(3) Upon this resurrection either eternal life or eternal contempt would follow, which will not occur other than at the end of world.

(4) At that time the dead will be resurrected and arise. When it is said that there will be “many” rather than “all,” this is not suggestive of a contrast to others who would not be resurrected. Rather, it implies that there are many dead. Or else it points to the distinction between those who will inherit salvation and those who will go lost. Many will arise unto eternal life, and many unto eternal contempt. There is a similar manner of speech in the following passage: “For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God ... hath abounded unto many; ... many were made sinners ... many be made righteous” Romans 5:15; Romans 5:19. As a confirmation of this truth, consider (Isaiah 26:19).

Thirdly, “And this is the Father’s will which hath sent Me, that of all which He hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. And this is the will of Him that sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day” (John 6:39-40). A Socinian concludes from this that the deceased no longer exist and come to a renewed existence in the resurrection. The text confirms their existence, however, for they have eternal life prior to being resurrected in the last day. That which is nonexistent is incapable of being resurrected, for that which is resurrected already existed, even though it was not alive. Nothing can be said about something that does not exist.

Fourthly, “But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you”

(Romans 8:11). It does not say here, as the Socinians maintain, that another person will take the place of the deceased. Resurrection implies the restoration of that which has decayed, and our mortal bodies will be made alive. Thus there is no substitution of one person for another.

Fifthly, it is evident that the ungodly will also be resurrected (1) From Daniel 12:2, where the prophet states that “many ... shall awake ... to shame and everlasting contempt.” (2) From what the Lord Jesus says: “And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation” (John 5:29). A Socinian will say that the reference is to spiritual resurrection; however, the text refutes him. Consider also “... all that are in the graves.” To be in the grave never signifies being in an unconverted state, nor does coming out of the grave signify conversion. Furthermore, those who are in the grave will not be regenerated or converted. Therefore this text cannot be a reference to regeneration. Verse 25 refers to spiritual resurrection. There the unconverted are referred to as the dead, and being made alive is limited to all who hear the voice of Christ, in contrast with others who do not hear Him. Moreover, the resurrection is said to be unto damnation as well as unto life. This cannot be said of regeneration, for that is only unto life. The ultimate destiny of either damnation or life is applicable to those who do good and those who do evil. The reference is therefore not to regeneration, but to the resurrection of the dead.

(3) “And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust” (Acts 24:15). It cannot be stated more clearly than this.

Evasive Argument: This only proves the resurrection of the good, for the apostle speaks of a resurrection which he anticipated. By those whom he calls the “unjust” he understands the good, who prior to their conversion were unjust.

Answer i) Then some must have been righteous prior to their conversion, for otherwise there could not have been a distinction between the just and the unjust, and thus none are excepted here. ii) Paul’s comforting hope indeed referred to the resurrection of the just; however, his declaration was of a general nature and thus encompassed all. There is a resurrection of both the just and the unjust.

(4) This is also confirmed in 2 Corinthians 5:10 : “For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.” If all men are to appear before the judgment seat of Christ, then they must first arise; they also who have done evil will appear there and bear their punishment according to their evil. Therefore the ungodly will also arise.

Evasive Argument: By “for we all” is to be understood of those persons who will yet be alive on the last day. Answer: Paul speaks of all who were living at that time; that is, he himself and all to whom he was writing, whose ears and eyes this letter would reach. At the same time he includes all men, for as they are all alike in death, so will they also be alike in the resurrection. He is therefore here not speaking of those people only who will be living on the last day, but of all men -- good and evil. We have thus observed that all men will arise. The Same Bodies that Died Will be Resurrected Question: Will the same bodies which died also be resurrected? The Socinians answer negatively, and we affirmatively for the following reasons:

First, it is evident from the words “to arise” and “to be resurrected.” If other bodies were to be created, then there would neither be a resurrection nor a rising again.

Secondly, the Scriptures say most clearly that the same bodies which we had in this life and which died will arise. (1) There is (Job 19:25-27). See our comments in the above. I shall see God in my flesh and I shall see Him with my eyes.

(2) “It [the body] is sown [that is, dies and is buried] in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality” 1 Corinthians 15:42-44; 1 Corinthians 15:53. The apostle shows that in the resurrection our bodies will have different characteristics, but that it will be the same entity. For he states that the body which is sown in corruption, will be raised in incorruption, and that this corruptible and mortal body will put on incorruption and immortality. He speaks here of the identical subject, that is, how it will be in death and how it will be in the resurrection. If, upon being resurrected, the body which dies would become something else as far as substance is concerned, he would not be able to say “this body.”

(3) “Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body” (Php 3:21). He speaks of our body and of our vile body, and states what will happen to it in the resurrection: it will be fashioned like unto a glorious body.

Evasive Argument: This manner of speech implies nothing else but that we shall have another body -- just as is true for a flower which reappears in the month of May.

Answer: We never say that a fallen leaf reappears. If we say this concerning a flower, we understand it to refer to the same type of flower and as proceeding from the same root. There is also no agreement, however, as far as use of language is concerned. It is stated expressly here: our, this, and vile.

Thirdly, it is also evident from the resurrection of Christ who with His own body, which had died, became alive again. The actual body which had been laid in the grave arose and left the grave. Therefore the angels said, “He is not here: for He is risen” (Matthew 28:6). When Christ came to His disciples, He said, “Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself: handle Me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have” (Luke 24:39). It is also proven by the resurrection of the saints at the time of Christ’s death and resurrection. It is expressly stated there that those bodies which had been buried -- those bodies of the saints which had expired -- were in actuality resurrected. “And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose” (Matthew 27:52). Thus, the resurrection pertains to the identical bodies.

Fourthly, it is also confirmed by the righteousness of God which demands that it will go well with the righteous and ill with the ungodly. This does not always occur in this life, and thus it must occur after this life. “Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven with His mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thessalonians 1:6-8). This righteous retribution, oppression, and comfort would occur in the day of Christ. This could not occur, however, unless they were resurrected and unless the same bodies were resurrected. For otherwise the same bodies which had suffered would not find rest, but others instead. And the same bodies which had been troublesome would not in turn be troubled and punished with flaming fire, but others instead. The apostle states expressly, however, that this must occur to the same bodies. "... that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad" (2 Corinthians 5:10). From all this it is evident that the same bodies will be resurrected.

Objection #1: "But man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up: so man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep" (Job 14:10-12).

Answer (1) A comparison is made here between what man is in his life and in his death. At his death he is no more in the land of the living, nor among people, nor will he be seen any longer.

(2) He will neither return to nor be in the company of men. He will arise neither naturally nor by his own power.

(3) He will not arise prior to the last day when the heavens will pass away with a great noise (2 Peter 3:10). All this we readily admit, but it does not therefore follow that man will not arise on the last day.

Objection #2: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity" (Ecclesiastes 3:19).

Answer: In this life man is preeminent above the beasts in many ways. In death they resemble each other in that they both die and their bodies return to dust. However, the difference in them is that the soul of animals goes downward and is annihilated, whereas the soul of man goes upward to God, and thus continues its existence. Furthermore, the body of man will be resurrected on the last day to be reunited with the soul. The resemblance of which the preacher speaks here pertains to death. He does not, however, mention the resurrection; therein they do not resemble each other.

Objection #3: "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption" (1 Corinthians 15:50); "Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them" (1 Corinthians 6:13).

Answer (1) The apostle does not speak here of the essence of the body, but rather of its weakness and corruption which will be taken away; in the place of corruption, dishonor, and weakness, the body will receive incorruption, glory, and power (cf. 1 Corinthians 15:42-44; 1 Corinthians 15:53-54).

(2) When the apostle says that the belly will be destroyed, he is referring to the natural use of food and drink. The latter will cease at death and in the resurrection the belly will no longer serve the purpose of digesting food.

Objection #4: "They are equal unto the angels" (Luke 20:36).

Answer: This is not true as far as essence is concerned, but rather to the fact that they neither die, marry, nor procreate.

Objection #5: "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him," etc. (1 Corinthians 15:36-41). Paul demonstrates here that the same body which dies will not become alive again, but rather that God grants a different body.

Answer (1) Paul is answering the following question: "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" (1 Corinthians 15:35). He thus confirms the resurrection of the dead, and if there is a resurrection of the dead, it follows that the same bodies will arise; else there would be no resurrection, but a new creation instead. Rather, he asks concerning the manner in which this resurrected body will function, as well as about its qualities.

(2) The Lord Jesus applies this same comparison to His resurrection (John 12:24). And yet Christ arose with His own and very same body.

(3) The apostle shows that death must precede the resurrection and that the very same grain becomes alive again, the very same shoot and corn coming from the same grain. Thus also man's own and identical body will become alive again. From this very same body a different body comes forth, not in essence, but as far as characteristics are concerned -- as we have observed in verse 40, etc. Therefore, it will not be resurrected with the same characteristics it had when it died, but with more glorious characteristics, and these will be more preeminent in the one than in the other.

Objection #6: Many bodies have been burned and have even been eaten by beasts and men. It is therefore impossible that the same bodies would arise again.

Answer: "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God" (Matthew 22:29). God is omniscient and knows where every particle is located, and He is almighty to bring them together again, even though we cannot understand this. Take a pound of steel filings and mix it with twenty pounds of filings of copper, tin, lead, and sand. Would an ignorant person be able to understand how -- without melting and removing it from the container -- all the steel can be separated and brought together from all the other materials from which it cannot be distinguished? Would he not say that this is impossible? And yet it can be done quickly and easily by rolling a magnet around in the mixture which will only attract the steel, so that it can all be brought together again to its former weight.

We have thus abundantly vindicated this most comforting doctrine of the resurrection. This Doctrine Is a Terror to the Ungodly and a Comfort to the Godly The doctrine of the resurrection is a terror to the ungodly, for the very body, which they now cherish so much, and for which they slave so much to satisfy and beautify it, will eternally bear unbearable pain in hell. Those eyes which you now misuse so greatly to stir up filthy lust, whereby you now display the wrath, pride, and vanity of the heart, will behold with terror the Lord Jesus, the righteous Judge, and will never see light any more. Those ears, which are now ready to receive all vanities, curiosities, immoral language, foolishness, and backbiting, will hear with terror the sentence of the Judge: "Depart from Me, ye cursed," and to all eternity your ears will be filled with the howling of those who are damned together with you, along with the dreadful manifestation of God's wrath. That mouth and tongue, which you now misuse to curse, lie, backbite, say vain things, indulge, carouse, drink, and fornicate, will then howl and scream, and in grief you will chew on that tongue. Instead of the scents which you exude to show your greatness, make yourself attractive, arouse others sexually, and be stimulated toward fornication yourself, there shall be nothing but unbearable stench for you. You who now despise the smell of the poor will be no more than a filthy stench. Those hands which now handle cards and dice, and which you now misuse in unrighteousness and the execution of all manner of subtle devices, you will then wring in pain. Yes, all those members which you are now using as weapons of unrighteousness to serve the world and sin will eternally be in the flames. Oh, dreadful state! Oh unconverted, if only you had some perception of this! May the terror of the Lord persuade you to believe! As much as the resurrection of the dead is a terror to the ungodly, so much is it a comfort to the godly. Believers have much sorrow in this life -- also according to the body. Many have weak bodies; are full of pain and subject to many sicknesses and mishaps; weep and cry sorrowfully; observe with sorrow the ungodliness of the world; must endure being mimicked by many; must hear the contemptuous, biting, and slanderous words of their opponents; and must suffer hunger, cold, nakedness, and wrong. Moreover, their corruptible body burdens the soul and their earthly tabernacle oppresses their heart so filled with concerns. Believers, be it known, however, that your bodies, in which you must now suffer so much, will one day be delivered from all sorrows. The Lord will then wipe all tears from your eyes and will change this vile body so that it may be conformed to the glorious body of Christ. Then your body will shine forth as the stars, and as the brightness of the firmament. Your eyes will rejoice in beholding your beloved Jesus and all those glorious things which are to be seen in heaven. Your ears will delight themselves in hearing the heavenly hallelujahs, and you will join them in singing the heavenly doxologies. All that God has prepared to the delight of your body, the Lord will cause you to enjoy forever. What a wondrous exchange that will be! Therefore, in all patience suffer all that is distasteful to the body, and counteract your suffering by the expectation of glory.

Believers Exhorted to Use Their Bodies to the Glory of God

If such glory is to be anticipated for your bodies, oh believers, then also use your bodies presently for the service of the Lord. "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God" (Romans 6:12-13); "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). The inner man is concealed from the eye of man; however, it is made manifest by the body. If we then are to let our light shine before men in order that God might be glorified, we must do so with the body. Therefore, give heed to your entire physical constitution. Your conduct ought to be such that you do not give the impression of being affectatious or fraudulent. Let your conduct be upright, natural, moral, wise, honorable, and pleasing. Use your eyes to behold the works of God and for the reading of His Word. Be on guard for offending by way of your eyes or to let your eyes be the cause of offenses. See to it that your eyes are neither stern, angry, proud, shifty, shameless, adulterous, curious, nor unstable. Rather, control them so that they may convey wisdom, dignity, honor, and straightforwardness, and let them be moved in earnestness, showing friendliness or compassion -- all according to what the subjects are. "Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee" (Proverbs 4:25). May it be your continual prayer "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity" (Psalms 119:37). Close your ears to all foolishness, vain and frivolous conversations, backbiting, and curiosity. Rather let your ear be open for the Word of the Lord, for the complaints of the poor and sorrowful, and with composure seek to understand well what is being said to us. Use your tongue to God's honor; that is, to sing His praises, to declare His perfections, and to be of benefit to your neighbor. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers" (Ephesians 4:29); "What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile" (Psalms 34:12-13). Make David's resolution your own: "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle" (Psalms 39:1). May it be your continual prayer: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips" (Psalms 141:3). Use your hands to be diligent in an honorable profession. "And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you" (1 Thessalonians 4:11). In all the management of your body and the utilization of its life, only endeavor to adorn godliness, to be an example to others, and to render glory to God -- until this corruptible put on incorruption, this mortal immortality, and this vile body glory.

108. Chapter 102: Concerning the Last Judgment and the End of the World

----- CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED-TWO ----- Concerning the Last Judgment and the End of the World When all men who are to be born according to God's decree have come into existence and become the recipients of life, and the elect will have been converted and gathered in, the Lord, upon a day designated by Him, will summon all men before His judgment seat and publicly judge them. God has dominion and reigns over all men who live upon earth. Already in this life He punishes the ungodly and chastises His children; this is also denominated a judgment: "My flesh trembleth for fear of Thee; and I am afraid of Thy judgments" (Psalms 119:120). God also judges every man who by death is translated from time to eternity, sending them to their destination. "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment" (Hebrews 9:27). There will come a moment, however, when God will cause all men to appear before Him collectively, and this is preeminently referred to as the eternal judgment (Hebrews 6:2).

Scripture's Testimony Concerning the Last Judgment That there will be such a public and general judgment cannot be ascertained from nature. It can only be ascertained from Scripture and be confirmed by faith. The human conscience also convinces the heathen that they must anticipate the judgment of God after this life, culminating in either glory or damnation (Romans 2:15). It is also common knowledge that God is a righteous Judge who will cause it to be well with the righteous and ill with the wicked. That which Solomon says is also in some measure imprinted upon man's nature: "Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before Him: but it shall not be well with the wicked" (Ecclesiastes 8:12-13). This does not always happen in this life, however, and therefore one can conclude that it will occur after this life. However, the general and public nature of this judgment and procedure are only revealed in Scripture. That there will be such a judgment is evident from these texts and many others: "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him" Jude 1:14-15; "But know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment" (Ecclesiastes 11:9); "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil" (Ecclesiastes 12:14); "But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment" (Matthew 12:36); "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad" (2 Corinthians 5:10); "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at His appearing and His kingdom" (2 Timothy 4:1).

These suffice to convince a believer of the Word of God of the truth of these matters. Additional texts will be presented as we proceed. The Final Judgment Executed by God in the Person of His Son Jesus Christ. The Judge is God who created heaven and earth. Abraham calls him “the Judge of all the earth” (Genesis 18:25); David and Paul call Him “the righteous Judge” (2 Timothy 4:8); and this judgment is “the righteous judgment of God” Romans 2:5, executed by “God the Judge of all” (Hebrews 12:23).

However, this judgment will be executed by the Lord Jesus in a visible manner. “And hath given Him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of man” (John 5:27). The reason for this is that He, as the Son of God, has assumed the human nature, has been obedient to the Father unto the death of the cross, and has executed the great work of redemption for the elect, in consequence of which the good pleasure of God would prosper in His hand (Isaiah 53:10). This is what the Lord Jesus says, “For the Father judgeth no man, (that is, separate from the Son and in such a visible manner) but hath committed all judgment unto the Son” (John 5:22). This is also to be observed in the following passage, “Because He hath appointed a day, in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom He hath ordained; whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead” (Acts 17:31). The Lord Jesus will come from heaven as Judge. He will not come to earth to reign a thousand years, as the premillennialists are dreaming; they misinterpret Revelation 20:1-15. Rather, He will come upon a great cloud -- not clothed with humility, but in power and glory, the greatness of which far exceeds one’s imagination. Once already Christ has been transfigured on the holy mountain before the eyes of His three disciples, who were witnesses of His majesty and glory which He received from God (cf. Matthew 17:5; 2 Peter 1:17-18). His glorious appearance will, however, also infinitely exceed that event when He will come in His essential glory and in the glory of His Father, together with the holy angels who will accompany Him as His servants. Observe this in the following passages: “He (the Son of man) shall come in His own glory, and in His Father’s, and of the holy angels” (Luke 9:26); “And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory” (Luke 21:27). The manifestation of this glory will be all the more awesome due to:

(1) The great sound of the last trumpet: “For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God” (1 Thessalonians 4:16).

(2) The splendor of the throne which will be placed in the clouds upon which He as Judge will be seated. The splendor of this throne is shown to Daniel in a vision. “His throne was like the fiery flame, and His wheels as burning fire” (Daniel 7:9). Of this throne the Lord Jesus says that He will “sit upon the throne of His glory” (Matthew 25:31).

(3) The innumerable multitude of holy angels who will be present there as His servants, “when the Son of man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him” (Matthew 25:31). Oh, how awesome and majestic will the appearance of that great Judge be!

It is also written that the saints will judge: “Ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel” (Matthew 19:28); “Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?” (1 Corinthians 6:2). They will, however, not judge with legal authority and power; rather, as members of Christ they will enhance the glory and the work of their Head -- particularly approving of the judgment of Christ, as is written of an angel, “And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy judgments” (Revelation 16:7). They will also do so with their deeds which will become manifest there, and with their godly presence they will condemn the ungodly, as Noah did the first world (Hebrews 11:7). The Objects of This Judgment:

The Devils and All Men

Those who will be judged are: (1) The devils whom God will cast down to hell, and deliver into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment

2 Peter 2:4, having reserved them in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day Jude 1:6. "Know ye not that we shall judge angels?" (1 Corinthians 6:3).

(2) All men without exception: great, small, young, old, rich, poor, kings, and beggars. No qualifications will come into consideration here. He who is a human being will be judged: "And before Him shall be gathered all nations" (Matthew 25:34); "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ" (2 Corinthians 5:10); "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ" (Romans 14:10); "... who shall judge the quick and the dead" (2 Timothy 4:1); "Because He hath appointed a day, in the which He will judge the world in righteousness" (Acts 17:31). The ungodly, even though they "shall not stand in the judgment" Psalms 1:5, will nevertheless be there. Believers will also be present at this general judgment Matthew 25:34 -- even though they will not go into perdition, but instead will be translated from death to life. The Execution of this Judgment In the execution of this judgment we shall consider all that belongs to a righteous judgment, such as citation, appearance, cross-examination, the pronouncement of sentence, and execution.

First, the citation or the issuance of a subpoena will occur by the voice of the archangel, the trumpet of God 1 Thessalonians 4:16, and the great sound of a trumpet (Matthew 24:31). The contents of this will be: "Arise ye dead and come to the judgment."

Secondly, the appearance of the defendants will follow immediately upon this. No one will be able to turn aside as if the Lord were not his lawful judge, nor will anyone be able to plead extenuating circumstances. No one will be able to hide himself, nor avoid this judgment. No one will be forgotten, for the omniscient and omnipotent God will cause everyone to appear, and the angels will gather them before the throne. The Lord Jesus will separate the good from the evil, placing the sheep on His right hand and the goats on His left hand. The good will be taken to meet Christ in the clouds, whereas the wicked will remain standing upon the earth. "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thessalonians 4:17). Concerning this separation we read: "... and He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left" (Matthew 25:32-33). The angels will also be used to that end: "And He shall send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matthew 24:31); "The angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just" (Matthew 13:49).

Thirdly, subsequent to this, the examination will be conducted meticulously. All the sins of every person will be made manifest there. These include:

(1) All thoughts which everyone has ever thought, and thus also the most intimate frame of soul: "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men" (Romans 2:16); "... until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts" (1 Corinthians 4:5).

(2) All words which everyone has ever spoken: "For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment" (Matthew 12:36-37); "To execute judgment upon all ... of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him" Jude 1:15.

(3) All deeds which have been committed, either secretly or publicly, or have been committed in conjunction with others; and all the motions of the members of the body, as well as what has been done with each member -- with eyes, ears, tongue, hands, feet, etc. It will be manifest how we have obtained our belongings and how we have used them -- our clothing, homes, furnishings, gardens, food and drink -- as well as how we have engaged in our profession and what our conduct has been. It will be revealed how we have used the means of grace -- every sermon, every conviction, and the Word of God which we have had in our homes. It will pertain to the duration of our life and what we have done every year, month, day, and hour. In one word, everything will be considered -- small and great, good and evil. This will not only be true in a general sense, but for every individual matter. It will not only occur in the conscience of every man, but it will be made manifest to all. "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil" (Ecclesiastes 12:14). The standard by which this examination will occur is the law, which God has written upon the heart of every man (Romans 2:14-15), and which He has declared more plainly to the church by way of the Scriptures. According to this law men will be judged as to their status. "For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law" (Romans 2:16). When the apostle says, "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel" Romans 2:16, he does not mean to say that the gospel will be the rule by which this examination will be conducted, and whereby the quick and the dead will be judged, for the gospel will never have been proclaimed to most of them. Instead he is saying that in proclaiming the gospel, he also declared at the same time that there would be such a general judgment and that, by the terror of the Lord, he had sought to persuade men (2 Corinthians 5:11). The gospel will magnify the sins of the unconverted and make their damnation all the more severe, for "it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you" (Matthew 11:22). Believers will be acquitted by reason of the gospel, however, since they are partakers of the satisfaction and holiness of the Lord Jesus and thus have the righteousness of the law fulfilled in them (Romans 8:4). The law is therefore the standard whereby man's disposition, thoughts, words, and deeds will be judged. This is the opening of the books -- the book of everyone's conscience, the book of God's omniscience, as well as the book of God's eternal decree. "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works" (Revelation 20:12).

Question: Will the sins of believers also be made manifest in this judgment?

Answer: Some answer negatively, and others in the affirmative. It is not a fundamental doctrine of faith, and we therefore need not render each other suspect about this. We maintain that the sins of believers will be made manifest in the judgment -- however, not as being unforgiven. This is evident:

(1) From general statements which are all-inclusive and do not make the sins of believers an exception. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Romans 14:12; cf. Ecclesiastes 12:14; Acts 17:31). Whenever Scripture makes no exception, we also may make none.

(2) From the fact that both believers and the ungodly will appear before the judgment seat of God, He being their Judge as well as of the ungodly. Since a righteous judge will most carefully examine what is both for and against the defendant, it thus follows that the judgeship of the Lord Jesus demands that He also examine the deeds of the godly. "The dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books" (Revelation 20:12).

(3) From the express statement that those faithful ministers who watch over souls "must give account" (Hebrews 13:17). An account cannot be given, however, except by a careful disclosure of one's entire conduct, and thus the imperfections and failures of the faithful will of necessity also be made public.

(4) When considering that the justice of God can only become manifest in the acquittal of believers if guilt and satisfaction are contrasted with each other.

(5) When considering that the satisfaction of Christ can only be viewed in its magnitude and efficacy when the sins for which He has made satisfaction are made manifest.

(6) When considering that the goal of salvation is the praise of God's glorious grace and mercy, and this cannot be perceived except by manifestation of the guilt incurred by the vessels of mercy.

(7) When considering that the godly have committed sins in conjunction with the ungodly. Thus, if the sin of an ungodly person committed in conjunction with a godly person is made manifest, then the sin of the godly person must become manifest likewise.

Objection #1: The Judge Himself has made satisfaction for all their sins. Why would He then bring all their sins to the foreground again and accuse them of those sins once more?

Answer: They will not be accused of those sins, nor will those sins be brought to the foreground as being unforgiven. Rather, they will be presented as having been committed indeed, but also as having been atoned for by the Surety.

Objection #2: God has already forgiven all their sins; He remembers them no more. He has cast them behind His back into the depth of the sea. They are covered Psalms 32:1, and thus they can no longer come to the fore.

Answer: "Not to remember" means "not to be punished," "not to be treated as a sinner" -- for with God there is no forgetfulness. To cover does not mean "to hide," for God, the angels, other godly persons, and also the ungodly have seen them. Rather, it means that He does not punish them.

Objection #3: It would be to the grief and shame of the godly if all their sins would be held before them again.

Answer: They will indeed be willing to own that they have been such sinners, since this manifestation will be to the glory of God's mercy and justice as well as of the satisfaction of Christ on their behalf. Neither shame nor grief will be an issue, since they have been reconciled.

Objection #4: Only the good deeds will be mentioned in the judgment -- and not the evil deeds. "For I was an hungered, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in: naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me: I was in prison, and ye came unto Me" (Matthew 25:35-36).

Answer: These words neither belong to the judicial sentence nor to the examination, both of which are under discussion here. In pronouncing the sentence, the Judge will advance the fact that they have loved, have been redeemed by Christ, and have been believers (as being the reason and evidence that they are elect); for love is the fruit of faith Galatians 5:6, and is evidence of the love of God toward them (1 John 4:19; 1 Corinthians 8:3). These deeds will not be mentioned as the meriting causes of salvation (for they receive heaven as an inheritance), but as a proof that they are partakers of the righteousness of Christ. Justification and sanctification are linked together and can never be separated from each other.

Fourthly, we are also to consider the sentence of the defendants in this judgment, which will be pronounced separately toward the godly and the ungodly. "Then shall the King say unto them on His right hand, Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Then shall He say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels" Matthew 25:34; Matthew 25:41. The sentence upon the godly will first be pronounced in order to glorify them before the eyes of all the ungodly and to the increased grief and shame of the ungodly.

Fifthly, this will finally be followed by the execution of the sentence. The ungodly will be cast away into hell to be tormented there forever. Subsequent thereto, however, the godly will be ushered into the third heaven -- the paradise of God -- by the King, in order to have the eternal satisfaction of joy in immediate fellowship with God. "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal" (Matthew 25:46).

Place, Time, and Duration of the Final Judgment The place where the judgment will be executed is not the valley of Jehoshaphat, as some of the Papists maintain by misinterpretation of the following text: "I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there. ... Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about" (Joel 3:2; Joel 3:12). In this text the reference is to an extraordinary deliverance of the people of God and to a specific judgment upon their enemies, similar to the special deliverance God gave to Israel and the judgment He executed upon the enemies at the time of Jehoshaphat. He praised the Lord for this and consequently called the place the "the valley of Berachah," that is, the valley of praise (2 Chronicles 20:26). Instead, the place of the last judgment will be in the air -- in the clouds. "They will see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven" (Matthew 24:30); "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thessalonians 4:17); "Behold, He cometh with clouds" (Revelation 1:7). The time when the final judgment will occur is the last day, upon which the world will perish immediately. However, how long it will be before this will occur is hidden from man. But we do know that this day will come suddenly and unexpectedly. "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father" (Mark 13:32); "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh" (Matthew 25:13); "For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth" (Luke 21:35); "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power" (Acts 1:7). There have always been curious and bold individuals who have endeavored to calculate its time and have declared when the time will be. They have, however, been put to shame throughout history. There is still a Jewish fable which judges from the first verse of Genesis that the world will remain six thousand years since the Hebrew letter א (aleph) is found six times in that verse, this being the first letter of eleph, which means "thousand." However, a faulty foundation results in a faulty building.

Even though the Lord has concealed the precise moment from us, He has nevertheless given us several signs in His Word which must precede Christ's coming unto judgment. Some of these have already been fulfilled to a large extent, such as powerful delusion by way of many heresies and false prophets, apostasy, terrifying wars, earthquakes, floods, famines, dreadful persecution and oppression of the church, prevailing carelessness and ungodliness, the proclamation of the gospel throughout the entire world, and the revelation of the antichrist. There are yet matters, however, which are to be fulfilled prior to Christ's coming to judgment. There must yet be the destruction of the city of Rome, the throne of the beast (Revelation 16:13); the undressing, forsaking, and contemptuous rejection of the harlot of Babylon (Revelation 17:16); the eradication of her empire Revelation 18:1-24; (Revelation 19:2); the conversion of the entire Jewish nation to the acknowledgment that Jesus is the Messiah (Romans 11:15); the glorious millennial state of the church upon earth; the rebellion of Gog and Magog which will follow this Revelation 20:1-15, and the time when they will encompass the camp of the saints and oppress them in an extraordinary manner. It is then that the Lord Jesus will suddenly come to execute judgment. From these things we can deduce that the day of judgment is not that near as yet. This day is near for every individual person, however, and the day of judgment will find a man in the state in which he was at the time of his death. There is another sign which will accompany the coming of Christ, such as the sign of the Son of man which will then appear in heaven (Matthew 24:30). No mention is made of the nature of the sign, and this can therefore not be determined at all. Some are of the opinion that it will be the coming of Christ Himself, others believe it to be the erection of His glorious throne Matthew 25:31, others an extraordinary and glorious radiance, and again others believe it to be the great noise of the last trumpet. The superstitious papists believe that it will be a great and glorious cross. Whatever it may be, however, it will be something whereby the living will acknowledge and say, "Now the Judge is coming unto judgment, and the end is here." The duration of this judgment is also unknown. From that which has been said it can indeed be deduced that it will neither be a silent proceeding, nor only last one or several hours, or even for a day, as some imagine. Instead, it may last a very long time, and were it to last -- give or take -- two thousand years, there will be no haste if this task were to require that much time. Believers will then be in glory and in a state of bliss already, and the ungodly will suffer anxiety which is so unbearable that they would wish that they could escape the presence of Christ. However, the duration of it is not to be determined. The Final Judgment to be Greatly Feared by the Ungodly

Consider all the above collectively and bring it vividly to your attention. Christ will come to judgment; He will appear in a very conspicuous manner and every eye will see Him; He will come with great glory and as Judge to execute judgment; He will summon all men before Him and separate the good from the evil; He will examine everyone painstakingly and make all their deeds manifest; He will pronounce the sentence of life or death upon everyone's work. Thereupon He will execute the sentence and cast the ungodly into hell and usher the godly into heaven.

How this should cause the hair of the ungodly to stand on end for fear, for it will be a dreadful day for them! It is "that great and notable day of the Lord" (Acts 2:20). "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch" (Malachi 4:1). Then they will experience what is written: "The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" (Isaiah 33:14). Then they shall say "to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" (Revelation 6:16-17). It is amazing that people who are so desirous to know future things and so careful to make provision for their own old age as well as for their children and grandchildren -- and if possible gather treasures -- are nevertheless so careless about this great and terrible day. Their conscience convinces them of sin, and if they would but give a little heed to their conscience, they would be fearful of wrath. This day makes no impression in the hearts of many, however; they neither wish to think of it nor reflect upon what it will be like. They ignore it, as if the likelihood of this day would be less if they do not think about it. The devils tremble for this day and Felix became very fearful when he heard Paul speak of the impending judgment. Who is, however, presently persuaded by the terror of the Lord to believe? It is a grievous sign when someone who lives in sin nevertheless does not tremble for this great judgment.

You who are careless, insensitive, comfortable in your sin, carnal, worldly-minded, of the earth earthy, immoral, fornicators, adulterers, proud boasters, gamblers, drunkards, liars, backbiters, hypocrites, and disobedient rejecters of the gospel -- hear and take notice. How do you think you will fare? I assure you that you will be summoned to judgment just as you are. You will see the Lord Jesus in glory, sitting as your Judge upon the throne of His glory. The call will go out to you, "Adam, where art thou? What have you done?" You will then tremblingly appear, and there the history of your life, together with a review of all your private and public sins will be read to you. This will silence you and the Judge will look upon you in wrath, and in anger will address you as a cursed one. The godly will behold you with contempt and approve of your condemnation. All this you will have to endure for a long time with utmost anxiety. It will be unbearable to you that those whom you now despise will then be in glory and will judge you. Upon this will follow the eternal casting away into the pool which burns with sulphur and where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. There the smoke of your torment will arise to all eternity, and there the worm of your conscience, which will bite you furiously, will never die. There you will seek death but not find it, and in unbearable despair you will bite your tongue for grief. All this will come upon you. Where will you then flee? All grace will then be withheld from you; all hiding places will have been removed, and all refreshment, change of condition, and relief will then cease. Only your sorrows according to soul and body will have no end. Oh, that by the terror of the Lord we could persuade you and that we could save you through fear! Now the wrath of God can still be escaped, since Christ as the way, the truth, and the life is yet offered to you in the gospel. Therefore, repent now and believe in the Lord Jesus, and you will be saved. May the almighty God now cause you to come tremblingly to the Lord and His goodness, so that you may stand in that day before the Son of man with great liberty and joy when He will come in His glory. The Final Judgment to be Joyously Anticipated by the Godly Believers, you who seek Jesus unto justification and sanctification, do not fear the coming of the Lord. Instead, long for it and anticipate it with great joy; love His appearing (2 Timothy 4:8). "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James 5:8). Comfort each other with the promise of His coming 1 Thessalonians 4:16-18, and lift up your heads, for your redemption is drawing nigh (Luke 21:28). Ought you not to do so?

First, our Lord Jesus will then be glorified before the eyes of all men, angels, and devils. He who has been humbled so deeply while upon earth; who then was a Man of sorrows, tempted in all miseries, and abhorred and despised by the people; who died upon the cross while experiencing the wrath of God and the mockery of the people; and who presently is so little acknowledged, revered, and feared wherever He is preached, but instead is contemptuously rejected by the world and is still mocked and persecuted in His members -- that Jesus will then be seen in His glory, sitting on the throne of His glory as the Judge of all. Therefore, rejoice ye lovers of the Lord Jesus, and long for that day, for then your Jesus will be glorified in all His saints and "be admired in all them that believe" (2 Thessalonians 1:10).

Secondly, this day will be a day of great refreshment for you, for it will be the time of refreshing Acts 3:19, a day of deliverance from all your misery Luke 21:28, a day of being received at the marriage feast Matthew 25:6, and a day of crowning (2 Timothy 4:8).

Thirdly, the good and the evil will then be separated from each other. Presently -- to your grief -- they are intermixed in the church, but then you will "discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not" (Malachi 3:18). All the godly will then stand as a single assembly together at the right hand of Christ. Not one ungodly person or hypocrite will be able to find a place among them. Rather, they will all be placed together at the left hand of the Judge.

Fourthly, you will then observe the execution of righteous wrath upon all the ungodly and the oppressors of the church. Then He will come, "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thessalonians 1:8).

Fifthly, He will then confess before the angels and all men that He loves you, that, as your Surety, He has atoned for all your sins, and that you are an heir of eternal life. Oh, how great will your glory then be when you will be acknowledged by that great Judge as His bride, and when He will usher you into the house of His Father where there will be nothing but light, glory, holiness, and joy! Therefore, lift up your head out of all your sorrows and rejoice. "Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations: that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Peter 1:6-7).

Believers Rebuked and Exhorted

It is a deplorable situation that believers rejoice so little over the coming of Christ unto judgment and are unable to comfort themselves with this in their current spiritual and temporal tribulations. If you ask what the reason for this is, then I answer:

(1) It proceeds from a misconception that it would be more glorious for the Lord Jesus, the church, and you if it were to occur presently in this life, as if it would not be such a great thing in the day of judgment.

(2) It proceeds from unbelief, because you fear that you are not a child of God and that you would yet find yourself at the left hand. Oh, why this continual doubting about one's state, since there are so many reasons to acknowledge grace? It is so harmful if the believer, in essence believing that he has been translated from death and is a possessor of life, nevertheless does not function as being in this state and as being an heir with Christ, and does not rejoice in this.

(3) It proceeds from the weakness of historical faith. One secretly believes that the Lord Jesus will come to judgment. If, however, historical faith were stronger, you would focus upon this day and deem it to be a present reality. You would then be conscious of the principle from which your present motions would proceed.

(4) It proceeds from carelessness. In your mind you remain too attached to the earthly and, with Peter, you would wish to erect tabernacles here to find pleasure for soul and body. Therefore, you reflect so little about the future -- as if that were not desirable. If you do not reflect much upon that great and glorious day, nor deem this to be to your comfort, joy, and glory; if you do not comfort others with those words, then it is no wonder that you neither have high thoughts of it nor much desire for it.

(5) It proceeds from a lack of love for Christ. If you had more of a desire for Christ's glory, and if you were more desirous of seeing Jesus in His glory and to be with your Bridegroom, your heart would reflect more upon it and long more for it.

Since the Lord Jesus will come to judgment: (1) Review your account, examine your debts, and place the satisfaction of Christ over against it. Endeavor by faith to have this account signed with the blood of the Lord Jesus.

(2) Adorn yourself for such a time with the glorious wedding garment -- the righteousness of the Lord Jesus -- so that you, being clothed with the garments of salvation and having put on the robe of righteousness, may see yourself as perfect in Him, as the righteousness of God, and thus anticipate that day with liberty.

(3) Be watchful, so that this day may not come upon you unawares. Furnish your lamps with oil, keep your loins girded and your candle burning Luke 12:35, and prayerfully anticipate the coming of the Bridegroom: "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that will come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21:36). You must now work and be abundant in the exercise of virtue: "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing" (Matthew 24:46). You must now be doing, if you then wish to hear: "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in: naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me: I was in prison, and ye came unto Me" (Matthew 25:34-36). The End of the World

Once the ungodly will have been incarcerated in hell forever and the Judge will have entered heaven with His elect, the world shall perish. At the time of Noah, the first world, after having existed approximately 1656 years, did perish by water -- the history of which has been recorded in Genesis 38:1-30. The Lord has promised and sworn that the world will no more perish by water, and, as a confirmation, has appointed the rainbow to be the sign thereof (cf. Genesis 8:21-22; Genesis 9:9-17; Isaiah 54:9). Even though the world will no more perish by water, it will perish once more with all that is in it. "Of old hast Thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of Thy hands. They shall perish, but Thou shalt endure: yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt Thou change them, and they shall be changed" (Psalms 102:25-26). The heavens and the earth will perish by fire. "But the heavens and the earth ... are ... reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men ... in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up ... wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat" 2 Peter 3:7; 2 Peter 3:10; 2 Peter 3:12.

Heaven and Earth to be Purged and Restored Rather than Annihilated

Question: Will the structural edifice of heaven and earth be annihilated, or will they be purified by fire and be restored to their original purity, beauty, and glory?

Answer: There are differences of opinion about this. Some maintain the first, and some the second. It is not a point worthy of dispute. We are of the opinion that the heavens and the earth will be purified and be restored in their original luster. The reasons are as follows:

Proof #1: "Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things" (Acts 3:21). This time is none other than the coming of Christ to judgment. Prior to that day we do not expect Christ from heaven. In the millennium all things will not be restituted. Corruption and sin will remain as long as the world stands. This time of Christ's coming unto judgment is called "the times of restitution of all things." "All things" does not refer to people; rather, as we have observed earlier from Peter's epistle, heaven and earth and all that is in it will, according to the apostle, be fully restored. They will thus continue as far as their substance is concerned and will only be changed as far as their characteristics are concerned.

Proof #2: "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope, because the creature itself also will be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body" (Romans 8:19-23). The "creature" and "the whole creation" cannot refer to believers, and much less to the apostles being contrasted with other believers. For not only did the apostles have the firstfruits of the Spirit, but also all believers have it, and they are all "firstfruits of His creatures" (James 1:18). That "creation" and "creature" are not to be understood to refer to believers is evident as follows:

(1) There is a distinct contrast between creature and believers, for the creature anticipates the revelation of the children of God. The creature is not subject to vanity due to his own doings and to inherent guilt, but that of another, namely, the guilt of man -- for which reason God has cursed the earth (Genesis 3:17; Genesis 5:29). Believers, together with all men, are subject to vanity due to their own doings. We repeat Romans 8:23 : “And not only they, but ourselves also.” Thus, there is an immediate contrast between the creature and believers. Believers are therefore not the creature, nor were the apostles, for the apostles were also subject to vanity -- not due to the guilt of believers, but, as is true for all believers, due to their own guilt.

(2) Neither the apostles nor believers are ever referred to as “the creature” or as “the whole creation”; but every believer is indeed called a new creature (2 Corinthians 5:17). However, this pertains to themselves; that is, relative to who they were previously, for nowhere are they in themselves, or in comparison to others, denominated as either the creature, or “the whole creation.” Others are, however, called creatures in contrast to believers. “... that we should be a kind of firstfruits of His creatures” (James 1:18; cf. Mark 13:19; Romans 8:39; Hebrews 4:13). Thus, creature or creation does not refer to believers but to the edifice of heaven and earth. This creation, contrary to its nature, is subject to vanity and must be subservient to sinful man. This creation will be delivered from bondage. Of this creation it is said (figuratively speaking) that it groans and hopes (as it is said to rejoice and clap hands), to be freed and restored to liberty, consistent with its mode of existence -- just as the children of God will then be placed in glorious liberty.

Therefore, the substance of heaven and earth will not be destroyed, but will remain.

Thirdly, “They shall perish; but Thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt Thou fold them up, and they shall be changed” (Hebrews 1:11-12). That which waxes old, is folded up, and is changed continues to exist in essence. Furthermore, perishing also does not mean annihilation, but rather a change in state and characteristics. We thus say that people perish when they drown in the sea. Likewise the apostle Peter did say that the first world perished, whereas it nevertheless remained as far as its substance was concerned.

Fourthly, “Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now ... reserved unto fire ... shall pass away with a great noise ... shall be burned up ... be dissolved ... melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness” 2 (Pet 3:6-7,10-13); “And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea” (Revelation 21:1).

(1) All these expressions are indicative of a wondrous change, but not of annihilation. All that perishes, burns, and melts in the world, remains the same as far as substance is concerned. Its condition and characteristics are changed. It is dissolved into its elements, but it is not annihilated as far as substance is concerned. From these expressions one can therefore not conclude that heaven and earth will be annihilated.

(2) The first world perished, but was not annihilated. After the world perishes, there will be a new heaven and a new earth. We know, however, that whatever is renewed is also said to be new (John 13:34; Galatians 6:15). There will be a new heaven and a new earth; this cannot be denied. How will this take place? Will this be by way of a new creation? Such a statement is not found in the Bible. Thus, the heaven and earth which now exist will remain as far as substance is concerned and be renewed as far as condition and characteristics are concerned. Only as far as the sea is concerned do we read a different expression: It will be no more. Whether this refers to substance or characteristics, we shall leave unanswered. Whatever may be advanced contrary to that are but figures of speech which have been mentioned before, and upon which we have commented.

Man in his curiosity asks many questions about this, such as, "Shall God create new persons, animals, trees, etc. Will those persons fare better than Adam did and not sin, since it is stated that righteousness will dwell in that earth? Will there be animals? Will death among animals and vegetation also take place there? Will animals procreate?" etc. We have no desire to answer these and similar foolish questions. It is certain that the continuation of heaven and earth will not be purposeless. They will exist to the glory of the Creator, and for angels and men who may possibly (due to the mobility of their bodies) be able to travel from heaven to earth and from the earth to heaven. As angels currently do not miss heaven when they are upon earth, so will glorified believers also not miss heaven and communion with God if they were to come upon earth to observe the works of God there. They would thereby be able to glorify God as the angels did when God created heaven and earth Job 38:1-41.

We ought to aspire to be an heir of God and a fellow heir with Christ -- to be quickened to a godly walk by the hope of inheritance, and leave the earth with all that is in it for the ungodly as their portion. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever" 1 (John 2:15;John 2:17); "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God" (2 Peter 3:11-12).

109. Chapter 103: Concerning Eternal Glory

----- CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED-THREE ----- Concerning Eternal Glory The Blessed Portion of the Elect

Upon completion of the judgment and the casting of the ungodly into hell, the Lord Jesus will usher the elect into eternal glory Psalms 73:24, the Father's house in which there are many mansions John 14:2, the house not made with hands which is eternal in the heavens 2 Corinthians 5:1, the third heaven, paradise 2 Corinthians 12:2; 2 Corinthians 12:4, the city which has foundations and whose builder and maker is God Hebrews 11:10, the joy of the Lord Matthew 25:21, and the heavenly kingdom (2 Timothy 4:18). He will give them eternal life John 10:28, place the crown of righteousness upon their head 2 Timothy 4:8, grant them the crown of life James 1:12, and make them partakers of "an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven" (1 Peter 1:4). Furthermore, they will enjoy that which the Lord Jesus has merited and petitioned for them: "Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given me, be with Me where I am; that they may behold My glory, which Thou hast given Me" (John 17:24).

God Himself who alone is omnipotent, wise, and merciful, has built the third heaven Hebrews 11:10, and has prepared this kingdom from the foundation of the world for His blessed ones (Matthew 25:34). He has chosen them from the beginning unto salvation 2 Thessalonians 2:13, He has sent His Son into the world to save His people Matthew 1:21, and it is His pleasure to give them the kingdom (Luke 12:32). "For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever" (Romans 11:36). The Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, has earned and merited salvation for the elect. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Romans 6:23), who is "... the captain of their salvation" Hebrews 2:10, who "is able also to save them to the uttermost" Hebrews 7:25, and has said, "I lay down My life for the sheep ... and I give unto them eternal life" John 10:15; John 10:28. Therefore, He bears the title Savior, for man contributes nothing to salvation; he is led to and subsequently ushered into it. "It is He that hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are His people, and the sheep of His pasture" (Psalms 100:3). "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began" (2 Timothy 1:9). Therefore, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy Name give glory, for Thy mercy, and for Thy truth's sake" (Psalms 115:1). The elect, they who are foreordained, are those who will become partakers of salvation: "Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also ... glorified" (Romans 8:30); they are the blessed of the Father: "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom" (Matthew 25:34); they are those who have been given to Christ by the Father: "Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am" (John 17:24); and they are believers: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life" (John 3:36). They alone, and they all, are the persons who will enjoy felicity. The Godly Will Differ in Glory in Heaven Question: In heaven, will one person have a greater measure of glory than another?

Answer: Some think this will not be the case, whereas others believe that there are various degrees. We maintain that all they who are glorified will be filled with felicity to overflowing; that is, as much as they can endure. Thus, there neither will be a desire for more, nor will this be possible. It will be impossible to be deprived of anything there. "As for me, I will behold Thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with Thy likeness" (Psalms 17:15). As one vessel can, however, contain more than another vessel, while yet all being full, we believe that also the one will excel the other in glory. This is, however, not due to merit. The papists maintain this when they say that virgins, monks, ministers, and martyrs who excel in merit here, will also stand out there. Rather, on the basis of His free grace, God will elevate in glory those who have done or suffered much as a witness for His Name. This is evident in the following passages:

First, "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever" (Daniel 12:3). In verse 2 the prophet relates what all believers will be equal partakers of: eternal life. Subsequently, in verse 3, a distinction is made between ministers and those who have been instrumental in the conversion of many. They especially will shine forth as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars.

Secondly, "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead" (1 Corinthians 15:41-42). The apostle not only indicates that the same bodies will have different characteristics, but also that these characteristics will differ in individual persons -- the one will be more glorious than the other. There is a difference between the luster of the sun, the moon, and the stars, and also the stars among themselves differ in luster.

Thirdly, "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" (2 Corinthians 9:6). This promise does not pertain to this life, for this does not always occur. Rather, it pertains to eternal life, which is confirmed from Galatians 6:8 where the apostle states: "He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." The word "sparingly" is contrasted with "bountifully." It is not indicative of a lack, but rather of a difference of degree.

Fourthly, consider (Luke 19:12-19). "And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come" vs. 13; "Have thou authority over ten cities" vs. 17; "Be thou also over five cities" vs. 19. Not only is the reward of the faithful servants recounted, and the fact that there is a reward in a general sense (as is the case in Matthew 25:21; Matthew 25:23), but also the measure of reward given in accordance with each person's profit. This is figuratively expressed by having authority over either ten or five cities.

Fifthly, "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour" (1 Corinthians 3:8). We neither have a contrast here between the faithful and the unfaithful, and between the good and the evil, nor is it said of them that the good are to be rewarded and the evil punished. Rather, the apostle only speaks of faithful servants -- of Paul and Apollos -- and relates the task of each person. It is the one who plants and the other who waters -- even though the planting of a church in a given locality requires more work than the administering of that which is subservient to her growth. He declares that they both are indeed unable to facilitate its growth, but nevertheless, each one would be rewarded according to whether his work was of greater or lesser importance.

Sixthly, "Many ... shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 8:11); "And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom" (Luke 16:22); "When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matthew 19:28). The reference here is to heaven, for Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob do not belong to the church here on earth. Lazarus enjoyed sitting down with Abraham after he had died and the apostles would sit upon the twelve thrones when Christ would sit upon the throne of His glory. Following this time state there would be a difference between Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and the many who would sit down with them; between Abraham and Lazarus; and between the apostles and other believers -- namely, that the apostles would sit upon the twelve thrones, which is not said about others in this text. From this it is evident that there will be a difference in degree in the measure of glory.

Objection #1: "So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny" (Matthew 20:8-10). Equal wages were given to those who had labored much or little, and thus there are no degrees in heaven.

Answer (1) The objective here is to show that the reward is not meritorious, but rather is given out of free grace. (2) The penny is not to be understood as referring to eternal life, for there will be no one there who has an evil eye and who murmurs.

Objection #2: All believers are equal partakers of the same election, satisfaction of Christ, justification, adoption of children, and designation as heirs. Thus, they are also equal partakers of glorification. This proves that there are no degrees in glorification.

Answer: This argument is futile, for by way of the same argument we could conclude that believers are all equal partakers in sanctification. Experience and Scripture both teach that this is not so, but that in this life there are fathers in Christ, young men, and children. Just as there are degrees in this life in regard to grace and its outworking, so likewise in the reward. The least of them will, however, be filled to overflowing and eternally enjoy as much glory and felicity as he is able to contain. This must nevertheless motivate us to do and suffer much for Christ. The Saints Will Recognize Each Other in Heaven

Question: Will there be mutual recognition in heaven? Answer: Even though such knowledge will not be what it is here (it being associated with a physical relationship and affections), we nevertheless believe that ministers will know their members, members their minister, the husband his wife, the wife her husband, parents their children, and children their parents. Relatives and acquaintances will know each other. Furthermore, all men of renown in the Bible, and all who excel in glory will be known by all. All who are in heaven will mutually know each other by divine revelation and through the eternal fellowship they will have with each other. No one will be a stranger to each other or be considered as such by anyone, for there will be no loss of memory. Ignorance is a weakness, and there will be no imperfection. Mutual fellowship will be perfect there; it will not be engaged in ignorantly, but knowledgeably. I believe that they shall recount to each other the ways in which the Lord had led them. They shall then praise and magnify the perfections of God which manifested themselves at each step of the way. They shall thus not be occupied with the immediate beholding of God only, without thinking of each other. Rather, as glorified men they shall fellowship together, unitedly glorifying God. The disciples knew Moses and Elijah when they were on the holy mountain (Matthew 17:3). The poor will know their benefactors when "they may receive you into everlasting habitations" (Luke 16:9). The absence of relatives will not engender sorrow since all physical relationships and affections cease there. The righteousness of God will give as much reason for joy and rendering of glory to God as His goodness. That they shall have the ability to speak is evident from the fact that inability to speak is an imperfection. How else would they be able to sing praises? Moses and Elijah spoke with Christ, its purpose being to render glory to God. We believe, however, that the difference between languages will cease, this being a consequence of sin. However, which language will be spoken there is not known. It may possibly be the language that Adam spoke, which up to the moment when the languages were confused (a period of nearly two thousand years) was the only language -- the Hebrew language. Perhaps it will be a language enabling the saints to express the essence of heavenly matters better than any earthly language, which is generally derived from temporal matters. Whatever the language will be, however, it will be to the glorification of God. The Essential Elements of the Glory of God's Children

We shall now consider the matter itself; that is, that which constitutes the glory of God's children. This glory is very great, as is confirmed first of all by its inexpressible nature. Anyone who receives but a glimpse and tastes but a little of this will be dumbfounded and his pen will stop, for he will not be able to find words to express it. He will be ashamed about the expressions he makes concerning it, as they do not correspond to the matter itself. When David wishes to give expression to this, all he is able to say is: "Oh how great is Thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee; which Thou hast wrought for them that trust in Thee before the sons of men!" (Psalms 31:19). If anyone should be able to tell us something about this, it ought to be Paul, for he was drawn into the third heaven. All he could say about it, however, was that he "heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter" 2 Corinthians 12:4 -- thus, unspeakable matters. And even if someone were able to express the matter somewhat more particularly, no one would be able to understand it unless he were of a more heavenly disposition. The inexpressible and incomprehensible nature of this glory ought not to cause us to think less of salvation, but ought to stir us up to think of greater glory. Nevertheless, the Lord has revealed that much of heaven in His Word, and made it known to the souls of His children, that they may know enough of heaven to enable them to endure all tribulations and heartily desire to be a partaker of that salvation.

Secondly, that which the only wise and omnipotent God has conceived and thought out within Himself (let me speak as a man), namely, to exalt man to the highest level of felicity, fill him with incomprehensible glory and delight, and glorify Himself in His saints and be admired in all them that believe 2 Thessalonians 1:10, must be glorious to the highest degree. Therefore God, who is the Creator of heaven and earth, is called the Builder and Maker of heaven. "For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God" (Hebrews 11:10).

Thirdly, this is to be deduced from the fact that they whom God leads unto salvation are His children. One reserves his very best for his children. Men of renown provide great inheritances for their children. Would that which the great God has prepared for His beloved children not be most eminent? "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" (Romans 8:17).

Fourthly, this is evident when considering that the means whereby this salvation was procured for them is of inestimable worth; it is the precious blood of Christ, the Son of God. The Son of God would not have suffered that much to provide man with only a small measure of happiness. Therefore, how great is that salvation which has been purchased at such a high price! "For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings" (Hebrews 2:10).

Fifthly, it ought to be considered furthermore that when God wishes to promise His children the very greatest blessing, He promises them eternal life. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. ... He ... shall not be hurt of the second death. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it" (Revelation 2:7; Revelation 2:11; Revelation 2:17); "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of My God, ... and I will write upon him the name of My God, and the name of the city of My God ... to him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne" (Revelation 3:5; Revelation 3:12; Revelation 3:21); "He that overcometh shall inherit all things" (Revelation 21:7).

Sixthly, salvation constitutes the entire hope and comfort of believers. This has enabled them to endure all manner of torment and cruel deaths. For this salvation they have longed with great yearning. "Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward" (Hebrews 11:26); "... having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better" (Php 1:23). From all this it can readily be concluded that future felicity will be inexpressibly great. Would you not dare to put all your trust in this, believers? Would you not joyously forsake all that is of the world, endure all suffering, and courageously engage in all battles in return for this -- even if all that you could perceive of it is no more than what you can deduce by way of conclusion? Surely, if faith were but lively, you would have sufficient reason to long for this. The Experience of Felicity

I can understand that the godly reader is desirous to hear a bit more concerning the state of felicity, expecting more particulars concerning this matter to follow. I must tell you, however, that I shall not be able to satisfy your desire and expectation. You are not interested in words, but in the matter itself, and this I cannot give you. Human words are not able to express the inexpressible. Nevertheless, I wish to mention some things. May it please the Lord to make it an occasion for someone to get the matter itself in view and begin to taste it. First we shall say what will not be there, and then what will be experienced there, both according to body and soul.

There will be nothing of all that which causes either body or soul any discomfort or unrest in this life. No darkness will stupefy the mind and no sinfulness will pollute the soul. Souls will no longer be deserted, and there will no longer be any battle against the flesh, the world, and the devil. All sorrow, grief, heartache, anxiety and fear will have been eliminated. There will be no poverty, opposition, oppression, pain, hunger, or anything else that would grieve soul and body. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Revelation 21:4); "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat" (Revelation 7:16).

Instead of misery, there will be everything that can satisfy the soul and the body. The body will be clothed with glory and “be fashioned like unto His glorious body” (Php 3:21). Furthermore, since the body will have perfect vision and hearing, nothing will be lacking to render a man happy. Everything will be present there and will be subservient to the glory of God. However, what the eye and ear will see and hear is hidden from us. In general we can say that whatever will be seen and heard there will be wondrous, joyous, and enrapturing.

Heaven, as a locality, is inexpressibly great and filled with divine glory. It is described for us in a figurative sense in Revelation 21:1-27, and is there compared to the most eminent circumstances that can be construed upon earth. “And the city lieth foursquare. ... And the twelve gates were twelve pearls: every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof” Revelation 21:16; Revelation 21:21; Revelation 21:23.

Fellowship there will be very conducive to promotion of joy. “I will give thee places to walk among these that stand by” (Zechariah 3:7). All the saints (each in his own glory, delightfulness, and loveliness); all the godly from Adam until the day of Christ; all the patriarchs, prophets, and apostles; and all the martyrs and those who have heroically fought for the truth, will have fellowship with each other, speak together, and together will praise the name of the Lord. “And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshiped God, saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen” (Revelation 7:10-12). The Quintessence of Felicity: To Be in the Presence of God and Enjoy His Fellowship The foregoing can, however, not ultimately satisfy the soul which has an infinite desire, and which cannot find fulfillment in anything else but the enjoyment of the infinite. It is thus necessary to lead the soul to a higher plane.

First, there believers will be forever with the Lord. It is their grief in this life that they live so far from the Lord. This costs them many a tear. All their desire, yearning, and delight is focused upon communion with God. “Nevertheless I am continually with Thee. ... But it is good for me to draw near to God” Psalms 73:23; Psalms 73:28. However, communion there will be both immediate and eternal. This renders them comfort in this life: “So shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words” (1 Thessalonians 4:17-18). This was Paul’s desire: “For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better” (Php 1:23). This is the promise made by our faithful Jesus: “... and where I am, there shall also My servant be” (John 12:26). This was His petition: “Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am” (John 17:24). We are given a view of this: “Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple: and He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them” (Revelation 7:15). Oh, how sweet it shall be to sit eternally under the shadow of the almighty, good, loving, all-sufficient, and benevolent God!

Secondly, felicity consists in seeing God. God cannot be seen with physical eyes, for He is the invisible One (cf. 1 Timothy 6:16; Hebrews 11:27). The Lord Jesus, according to the body, will, however, be seen with physical eyes with overwhelming joy and love by all the citizens of heaven.

Since the fullness of the Godhead will dwell bodily and visibly in Him, the nature of this will be such that the reflection of divine glory will be seen in Him. Believers will see Jesus in His glory, and they will speak with Him and He will speak with them face to face. God, however, will be seen with the enlightened eyes of the understanding. Presently, the believer sees God only from afar and sees but a small ray, seeing it but for a fleeting moment. This yields a wondrous joy to the soul; however, it is but a rare moment of brief duration. [Note: The Dutch phrase reads as follows: "Is een zelden uur van eenen korten duur."] It readily disappears and leaves behind a strong desire intermixed with sorrow in those who have seen and tasted something of this. Time and again they must say, "Why standest Thou afar off, O Lord? why hidest Thou Thyself in times of trouble?" (Psalms 10:1); "How long wilt Thou hide Thy face from me?" (Psalms 13:1); "O when wilt Thou come unto me?" (Psalms 101:2); "Show me Thy glory" (Exodus 33:18). Then it shall be as the sun in its clearest light at dawn. "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known" (1 Corinthians 13:12); "I will behold Thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with Thy likeness" (Psalms 17:15). David said of it, "In Thy presence is fulness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Psalms 16:11). When God in an immediate and immanent manner -- in a manner which God presently has not made known to us -- will reveal His glorious perfections to His children, will cause the soul to experience that He is her portion, and cause her to taste the gratifying efficacy of this, only then shall they know what it means to see God's friendly, glorious, loving, holy, gladdening, and satisfying countenance.

Thirdly, such a life by way of beholding will neither consist nor end in mere reflection, but it will be accompanied by the enjoyment of mutual and perfect love. "God is love" (1 John 4:8). This infinite love will encompass and fill the soul, and as the soul experiences the warmth and sweetness of this divine love, it will respond to God in reciprocal love. In the enjoyment of this mutual love it will enjoy an incomprehensible sweetness and joy which will satisfy it forever. "Charity never faileth" (1 Corinthians 13:8).

Fourthly, perfect love is perfect holiness. Since the mind beholds God in perfection, and the will enjoys God in perfect love and immediate union, there can be no room for imperfection. "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away" (1 Corinthians 13:10). There the image of God will be perfect in everyone. "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with Thy likeness" (Psalms 17:15). There they will be partakers of the divine nature perfectly (2 Peter 1:4). Everyone will shine forth in holy luster as the sun, moon, and stars. This perfection will manifest itself in all the fellowship with the glorified saints, who will be united in perfect love.

Fifthly, there will only be joy and bliss. "Enter Thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matthew 25:21). When the soul may behold God perfectly and be surrounded by the glory of the Lord, walk forever in the light of His countenance; when God will fill the soul with His all-sufficiency, encompass it with His love, and overshadow it with all His perfections -- how can it be any different but that the soul will delight itself in a "peace which passeth all understanding," in adoration which will bring the soul into ecstasy, and in an inexpressible joy, and thus lose herself entirely in God. Oh, how wondrous it will be when, together with all the angels and the elect, they may reverently bow before the Lord and jubilate forever with them the eternal hallelujah!

Sixthly, bring to mind all that you have ever beheld of God: all the joy and peace you have ever tasted, all the union and communion with God you have ever enjoyed, and all the being lifted heavenward you have ever experienced. Then add thereto all the enrapturing sermons you have ever heard, all that others have shared with you of their experiences, and all the love you have ever perceived in a gathering of saints. Consider all this collectively and then compare these minute rays of light to the joy and bliss that will be enjoyed in the state of perfection. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him" (1 Corinthians 2:9). That which will enhance all this blessedness even more is that there will neither be fear of losing it nor of its termination -- for no one will disturb it, assault it, or remove it. Instead, it will endure to all eternity. This life is "eternal life" John 10:28, an "eternal inheritance" Hebrews 9:15, "eternal glory" 1 Peter 5:10, "the everlasting kingdom" 2 Peter 1:11, and it is "eternal in the heavens" (2 Corinthians 5:1). The Unconverted Exhorted to Strive to Become Partakers of This Glory

Such glory and bliss is laid away for believers. Therefore, you who are unconverted, strive for that faith in Christ in order that you also may become a partaker of that salvation and may flee the eternal perdition which otherwise awaits you. It is presently offered to you, and therefore, take hold of it before it is too late. If you are not willing, then be no longer amazed about the strife and the tribulation the godly have to endure, as well as everything else they are engaged in. No longer think that it is but illusion, obstinacy, and stubbornness. Consider rather that they are acquainted with this glory, delight in it, and that they strive to receive that crown.

Believers Exhorted to Conduct Themselves in Anticipation of Such an Inheritance And you believers, who may anticipate so great a salvation, conduct yourself as heirs of the same. First, deem all things of this world as too insignificant and transitory than that you would concern yourself with it. Do not set your heart on prosperity, riches, honor, and entertainment. They are not worthy of mention in comparison with this inheritance. Turn away from them and do not permit them to hinder you as you pursue this crown. If you encounter adversity, oppression, persecution, death for the name of Christ, poverty, or whatever else it may be, be not too troubled by it, for in comparison to this inheritance it amounts to nothing. "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Romans 8:18). Yes, suffering prepares us for a greater degree of glory -- that is, if one bears it well. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Corinthians 4:17). Rather, rejoice in tribulation instead of succumbing to it in discouragement. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love Him" (James 1:12). In place of the cross the Lord will grant you abundant and eternal comforts. Observe this in (Revelation 7:13-17). As this was the last text my deceased father preached upon, I shall quote it in its entirety: "And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple: and He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.”

Secondly, if you may anticipate so great a salvation, then rejoice in this future inheritance. “Rejoicing in hope” (Romans 12:12). Many believers have the deficiency that they focus too much upon the present. They would like to fare a bit better in this world, for this would then yield a somewhat more quiet life for them. At another time they are only concerned about the state of their soul, considering whether they are in the state of grace. Time and again they insist on examining themselves and repeatedly must be able to conclude that they are in a state of grace. Then they insist that they ought to have more sensible grace and more power to resist sin. In the meanwhile time passes on, and they do not lift up their heart enough to anticipate the great glory they may look forward to. They have but a few fleeting thoughts about it. Instead, one ought to be occupied in reflecting upon eternity, and upon the certainty and reality of this your inheritance. One ought to focus continually upon the glory of this inheritance, and by faith traverse heaven, beholding how gloriously the Lord Jesus manifests Himself; how the angels bow before Him; in what intimate manner He deals with the glorified saints; what light and immediate fellowship with God they enjoy; how they are moved and filled with a magnificent happiness toward God, Christ, the angels, and each other; how sweetly they may sing the praises of the Lord; and how they may adore and lose themselves in the perfections of God and the perfection of their state! We would then forget ourselves and, so to speak, find ourselves among the glorified multitude. With them we would bow ourselves before the Lord and glorify Him. In coming back to ourselves upon earth, we would then delight ourselves in bringing this glory to mind and we would go our way with joy, not stumbling over every spiritual difficulty. We would then be as someone who departs to take possession of a very great inheritance, and who, presently being poor and destitute, will endure a difficult day of travel. Therefore, I say again, “Rejoice in the hope of glory.” “Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost” (Romans 15:13).

Thirdly, cause this glory to be the only goal you pursue. The goal motivates the worker, and the more vehemently he delights in it, the more seriously he will apply himself to his work. Therefore, do not pursue any worldly goals, and do not seek anything here in which you might find your rest. Do not take it so seriously if you must be deprived of what you would desire to have, or if your soul does not prosper according to your wishes. This is not the season to be drawn into the third heaven with Paul. Now is the season of warfare and of tribulation. Therefore, look ahead and only have this glory in view. Depart neither to the right nor to the left side, and do not become inactive. Rather, let this glory be your goal, and pursue it so that you may enter heaven while being in a full run. Paul thus holds himself up as an example: “This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus” (Php 3:13-14).

You must do what our Lord Jesus did. Of Him the apostle writes: “Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God” (Hebrews 12:2). Moses did likewise when “he had respect unto the recompence of the reward” (Hebrews 11:26). Therefore, keep heaven in view and “fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called” (1 Timothy 6:12); “Strive to enter in at the strait gate” (Luke 13:24).

Fourthly, by way of anticipating this glory, stir yourself up to live a holy and heaven-oriented life. In this world conduct yourself as a stranger who is travelling to his homeland Hebrews 11:9-10; Hebrews 11:13-16, and lift yourself continually above the things of this earth so that you may presently live for the invisible, have your conversation in heaven, purify yourself, and lead a heaven-oriented life. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Corinthians 4:17-18); "For our conversation is in heaven" (Php 3:20). He who may have such a lively expectation of glory, holding this before him, will be motivated by that hope to prepare himself for this. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure" (1 John 3:2-3).

Believers, you may therefore anticipate that such glory will shortly be your portion. Thus, hasten to complete your task, and be an example of godliness, faith, and courage; and hope upon glory. Make this glory, and the way which leads to it, known to others and lead them along unto felicity, so that you may join the Lord Jesus in saying, "I have glorified Thee on the earth: I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do ... I have manifested Thy name unto ... men. And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me!" (John 17:4-6). HALLELUJAH!

110. Appendix

APPENDIX The Administration of the Covenant of Grace in the Old and New Testaments “And in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord. And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering: but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect.” -- Genesis 4:3-5 “The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.” -- Hebrews 9:8-12 “Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.” -- Revelation 1:3

111. Chapter 1: The Church of the Old Testament from Adam to Abraham

----- CHAPTER ONE ----- The Church of the Old Testament from Adam to Abraham

Thus far we have given a comprehensive presentation of both the nature and the characteristics of the gracious work of man's redemption. We shall now proceed to consider the difference of the administration of this work prior and subsequent to the incarnation of Christ. The administration preceding the time of Christ is called the Old Covenant or Testament; after His incarnation it is referred to as the New Covenant or Testament. Since Scripture uses the words berith and diatheke, I have used the words "covenant" as well as "testament" to show that there is no basis for erroneous views which are propagated by making a distinction between them. The distinction between the manner in which the covenant of grace is administered in the Old and New Testaments is based upon the Word: "... ministers of the New Testament" 2 Corinthians 3:14 "... in the reading of the Old Testament" (2 Corinthians 3:14); "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second" Hebrews 8:13 "In that He saith, A new covenant, He hath made the first old" (Hebrews 8:13). The Old Testament is an administration during which it was promised that the Surety and Savior would come. Thus, the time from Adam to Christ was the age of promise, wherein the Savior was typified in His natures, suffering, and death -- the purpose being that the people of Israel would be better acquainted with and believe in Him. This was accomplished by way of many sacrifices, which the apostle denominates as figures. They clearly depicted Christ; and thus the people, so to speak, with their physical eyes daily witnessed and beheld Christ in His suffering and death.

"Which was a figure for the time then present" Hebrews 9:9, Christ not having as yet become incarnate. The writer of Hebrews also refers to these ceremonies as types. All types were constructed according to the divine prescription, precisely typifying the coming Christ. Thus, we do not define Christ according to the types, but the types are defined according to Christ; in the type, the people beheld the image of Christ who was to come. "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things" (Hebrews 8:5). The ceremonies were also referred to as shadows -- not because their intent was to darken, conceal, and obscure the matter, but to depict the matter as clearly as possible, even though the matter itself could not yet be seen. This can be compared to a man standing on one side of a fence in the brightly shining sun, who is able to see the shadow of another man standing on the other side of the fence. He cannot see the person himself because the fence blocks his view. However, the shadow extending beyond the end of the fence can be observed by him. Furthermore, he is not only able to infer from this shadow that a human being is present whom he has not yet seen, but he can also observe whether this person is a child or an adult; and by way of the clothing he can determine whether it is a man or woman -- yes, whether the person is moving or standing still, standing upright or bending over, and even what he might be doing. The sacrifices of the Old Testament were such shadows. "Which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ" (Colossians 2:17). They are commonly referred to as ceremonies;

however, this word is not to be found in the Bible. [Note: This is not true for the KJV, as the word "ceremonies" is found in Numbers 9:3.] Ceremonies are external exercises, accompanied with words or gestures. Since the term is not scriptural, we only wish to say that the term tends to incline the reader to either not understand or misunderstand the matters at hand. It is therefore better to use scriptural words. Such a practice we wish to adhere to. The Old Testament Administration of the Covenant of Grace Begins in Paradise The Old Testament or Covenant encompasses the entire period from the gospel declaration in Paradise until Christ. During this entire time frame there was no diversity in its manner of administration -- an administration which functioned during this entire period by way of promises and figures. However, relative to the subjects of this administration, we can make a chronological distinction between the church prior to Abraham and thereafter. Prior to Abraham the church consisted of various nationalities -- as is also true in the New Testament era. However, God took Abraham and his seed to be His church. Thus, subsequent to Abraham's time, other nations rapidly became estranged from true religion. This pure religion was preserved, however, among the descendants of Abraham. Therefore, when speaking of a national covenant, it must be understood as the covenant of grace established with that particular nation. The term does not imply more than that. Not much has been recorded concerning the condition of the church from Adam to Abraham. What has been recorded, however, is sufficient to show us that the gospel and true religion were as well-known and practiced then as was the case thereafter. It was by way of that generational line that the Lord Jesus descended from Adam. His descent from Adam was necessary in order to His being the Mediator. It was necessary that this be known in order to acknowledge Him as such. The time frame from Adam to Abraham encompasses about two thousand years and has been recorded in the first chapters of the first book of Moses. We shall briefly outline the most significant matters and then answer some questions.

After Adam and Eve had transgressed the covenant of works, the Lord announced a new covenant, a covenant of grace, with the following words: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her Seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise His heel" (Genesis 3:15). This text has been expounded previously in this work. The words are few, but they encompass the great work of the redemption of the sinner; the overthrow of the devil's tyranny over the elect; the enmity and warfare between God's children and the children of the devil -- and they point to the Person through whom this would be accomplished, who is called the Seed of the Woman (and thus not seed of the man). This Person is Christ -- the seed of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, and Mary -- who through His death has destroyed the devil (Hebrews 2:14). God had expounded this matter more clearly to Adam and the holy men after him. Adam remained in the church for nine hundred thirty years. Enoch was a prophet who proclaimed the day of judgment Jude 1:14-15. Noah was a preacher of righteousness. The content of his preaching was Christ 1 Peter 3:19-21, and he prophesied concerning the calling of the Gentiles after the rejection of the seed of Shem (Genesis 9:27). God also instructed and strengthened these believers by faith in the sacrifices of the fruits of the field, clean cattle, and of the firstborn (cf. Genesis 4:4; Genesis 8:20).

Hereby the people acquired knowledge concerning the mysteries of salvation and were led to believe in Christ. When Eve gave birth to Cain, her eye was upon Christ. She viewed his birth either as the beginning of the procreative process out of which Christ would be born, or she was in error concerning the person, thinking that he would be the Redeemer. For upon giving birth to Seth, she said, "For God hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew" (Genesis 4:25). She knew that God had rejected and cursed Cain and his descendants Genesis 4:26, and believed that the Savior would be born out of Seth. Abel was a righteous man Matthew 23:35 and a strong believer -- and thus pleasing to God (Hebrews 11:5). Enoch walked with God and was taken away without seeing death, having this testimony that he pleased God (Hebrews 11:5). During the time of Enos, believers separated themselves from the ungodly, joined one another in fellowship, and called upon the name of the Lord (Genesis 4:26).

Also then the church became corrupt, so that its members married unbelievers. By this the church became even more corrupt, and therefore God did not want His people to intermarry with other nations (cf. Daniel 7:3; 2 Corinthians 6:14). The earth became increasingly corrupt. Contributing to this were the proud Lamech -- the first man who had two wives and boasted of the sword of his son -- and the fierce giants who relied upon their strength and reputation, ruled with violence, and made a name for themselves (Genesis 6:4). Since the world and the church had become extremely ungodly, God caused all men with whatever moved upon the face of the earth to perish by means of the flood.

However, Noah and his wife, together with his three sons and their wives, as well as a representation of every living species, were preserved alive in the ark, by which they were saved. Noah planted a vineyard and became drunk -- either because of his great desire for wine which he had not drunk in a long time, or because he had become unaccustomed to wine and was affected by it that much more quickly, or because the wine was stronger than the wine he had drunk previously. The fact is that at one time he became drunk and laid down to sleep. Due to stirring in his sleep, his covering was removed, and he lay there naked. When his son Ham entered the tent and saw his father's nakedness, he went out and informed both his brothers. While approaching their father backward, they took a covering and spread it over him. Ham's sin was not merely in the act of seeing, for if in moving about he had unexpectedly seen this and had quickly departed, he would not have sinned and brought such a curse upon himself. Rather, while seeing this, something occurred which amounted to mockery: Either Ham went so far as to mock with his father, or his son Canaan, seeing his grandfather lying there naked, paused and mocked with him. In fact, the curse was not pronounced upon the person of Ham and his entire posterity, but upon his son Canaan. It could be that he had mocked, or that Ham was punished in his child -- this being the severest punishment for a father. It could also be that they were both guilty, for Shem and Japheth received a blessing of their father, whereas Ham was passed by.

Ham's genealogy is placed side by side with those of Japheth and Shem. In this genealogy Nimrod is mentioned, of whom it is said, "He was a mighty hunter before the Lord" (Genesis 10:9 a). This can be interpreted as a description of an ungodly man, being a terrible tyrant who cared neither for God nor man. It could also be a description of a Godfearing man, being desirous to provide a safe shelter for people -- or more particularly, who killed and drove away the animals of prey for the benefit of his family. Wild animals had multiplied greatly and prevented people from living quietly and peacefully. Thus, it was not the timid hare or the quickly-frightened deer which he hunted, but rather lions, bears, tigers, wolves, and similar animals of prey. This required courage and, being accompanied with danger, caused him to flee to God for refuge, and with His help, overcame the wild beasts, thereby creating a safe residence for people.

These people, who intended to make a name for themselves by building a high tower and erecting a beacon to prevent their dispersion, were prevented in doing so by having their language confounded -- and were thus dispersed over the entire face of the earth. These are the particulars of what has been recorded for us concerning the first two thousand years. Then Moses turns to Abraham, as the church was restricted thereafter to his family only.

Six Rules to Be Observed in Determining Whether Something is a Type

Prior to Christ's coming, men sought for the substance itself, longing and yearning for the fulfillment of the promises and shadows. Now that both the light and the substance have come, people look for shadows and types -- rejoicing when they believe to have found a shadow. While in darkness, people sought for the light, and now that there is light, people look for darkness. This is deemed to be scholarship, and therefore everyone feels compelled to look for something new. The rule adhered to in such a pursuit is that there must be similarity in regard to name, issue, and circumstances. He who finds or constructs that, believes then to have found a type. Before we discuss the types to be found during the time from Adam to Abraham, we shall first show what constitutes a type.

First, it is to be observed that, according to Paul's exhortation, a man must think soberly, and not think of himself more highly than he ought to think (Romans 12:3). In this matter one must conduct himself with fear and trembling, and assign no other meaning to the holy words of God than what God has expressed by them. By allegorizing nearly everything, and by fabricating as many prophecies and types as the mind can contrive, one will deprive the Word of its sanctity and spirituality.

Secondly, the similarity between names or their meanings, the congruency and analogy of certain matters, and the fact that the exegesis neither conflicts with the context of the text nor the rule of faith, are not rules by which types are established. The reasons for this are as follows:

(1) Where are such rules to be found in God's Word? If, however, one does establish his own rules, any exposition according to such self-made rules is no more than a fabrication of one's own mind. I reject these rules; let their validity be proven. Would it not be appropriate that irrefutable proof be rendered for a method used to interpret nearly the entire Bible?

(2) If one is to recognize a type by his own rules, then any type incompatible with those rules would be unacceptable -- even if God Himself, with great clarity, has designated it to be a type.

(3) If one adopts his own rules, the entire Scripture can be distorted at will. Every grapevine, every tree, every foundation upon which a house is built, every kernel of grain, every door, every road and pathway, as well as the sun, the morning star, a lion, a hen, a worm (and very many other things) would be a type of Christ, for all these names are attributed to Him. There is some analogy and similarity between them and Christ; they are neither in conflict with the context of those texts nor do they contradict the regulative principle of faith. Thus it is readily perceived that to designate all these things as types would be foolishness -- nevertheless, to do so would conform to such rules. This makes it very clear that these rules yield neither proof nor any foundation to designate a given matter to be a type.

One might say that the precise analogy between given matters is not accidental, it having been the intent of the omniscient and all-wise God to direct things in such a way that one thing would be a type of the other. I reply that the intent of a precise analogy is not to recognize a type. Were it so, nearly everything in the Bible could be designated as a type, and the entire Scripture could be made into an allegory and be reduced to a number of comparisons. A painting can resemble a different person as well as he whom the painter had in mind. It could be that such persons either resemble each other, or that the painting, without this being the painter's intent, depicts certain features whereby it resembles the other person more than him of whom the painting was made. Would one conclude on the basis of this resemblance that it was the painter's intent to paint the other person? This is also the case here. Even though God knows what matters resemble each other, it has not been His intent that the one thing would be a depiction or type of the other. Also in the New Testament there are descriptions of many matters and people who have a semblance and are analogous to those of later date. Who would conclude on the basis of such similarities that matters spoken of in the New Testament are types of matters of some later date? Furthermore, things occur daily that resemble matters and people related to occurrences of one hundred or two hundred years ago. Also these are not outside of God's providence. Would one thus conclude that the former are types of the latter? It is therefore evident that something is a type not by virtue of analogy, but rather by divine appointment.

Thirdly, even the word type (or example) does not always signify a representation -- a future depiction -- exemplifying the Christ who would come. Rather, examples are also matters which, by way of application, are presented for the purpose of warning, emulation, or as an explanation, so that one may come to a clearer understanding of a given matter by way of analogy. This does not then say, that those matters which are used as examples were established for the purpose of predicting and depicting given events. Instead, they are used in retrospect by way of application.

(1) Consider an example which is given to us as a warning. "Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted" (1 Corinthians 10:6); "Now all these things happened to them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition" vs. 11; "And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes ... making them an ensample (cf. Hebrews 8:5) unto those that after should live ungodly" (2 Peter 2:6). Obviously, these examples are not types of Christ, nor did they typify the time of the apostles. Instead, by way of application, they may in retrospect be used as a warning. This may and must occur in all ages.

(2) Consider an example given for emulation. "Brethren, be followers together of me ... as ye have us for an ensample" (Php 3:17).

(3) Consider an example given with the intent to explain it by way of analogy. "... Adam ... who is the figure of Him that was to come" (Romans 5:14). In this chapter Adam is presented as being the cause of death of all who are comprehended in him, that is, the entire human race; and Christ is presented as quickening all who are in Him, that is, the elect. It is beyond controversy that Adam, prior to the fall, did not depict Christ as the One who was to come, since there was as yet no sin which needed to be removed -- the purpose of Christ's coming. There was then no need of Him; therefore He had not been promised as yet. Also in his fall, Adam was no type of the Christ who would come to remove sin, for there was neither any covenant of grace revealed nor had Christ yet been promised and typified. Also after his fall, Adam was not presented to the Old Testament church as a type of Christ. Rather, it is very clear that all we have here is a comparison. The matter with which the apostle was dealing could be explained by way of analogy and contrast -- that is, as Adam was the original and only cause of sin and condemnation, so Christ is the original and only cause of atonement for and the eternal felicity of the elect who had died in Adam. The same applies to Jeremiah 33:20-26 : "Thus saith the Lord; if ye can break My covenant of the day, and My covenant of the night ... then may also My covenant be broken with David My servant," etc. The permanent institution of day and night was not a type of the covenant with David, even though the covenant with David is compared to it. Rather, the institution of day and night serves as an analogy and an application in order to point out the immutability of the covenant with David.

Fourthly, whatever is a sign is not necessarily a type. All types are signs, but all signs are not types. The lying in the crib and the being wrapped in swaddling clothes were signs that this child was the Messiah (Luke 2:12); however, they were not types. The star which went before the wise men of the east and which remained stationary above the dwelling place (of Joseph and Mary) was a sign that the newborn King was present there; however, it was not a type. A type anticipates something in the future, whereas a sign points out a certain matter -- past, present, or future -- and unveils it to the understanding. In this sense the Lord Jesus established Jonah as a sign of His burial. "There shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matthew 12:39-40). Nowhere is Jonah either presented or designated to the Old Testament church as an example of Christ's burial. Thus, they committed no sin if they neither perceived nor believed Jonah to be a type of His burial. Moreover, Christ did not say that Jonah was a type of Himself for the church of the Old Testament. Instead, the Lord Jesus gave Jonah as a sign to the Jews of His time. Nowhere in the entire New Testament does this ever mean that whatever befell Jonah is typical of what would also befall Christ. Thus, what we have in these verses is an explanation of what would happen to Jesus -- by way of analogy with Jonah -- so that when it would come to pass, they would be convinced that He was the true Messiah.

Fifthly, in the New Testament both expressions and matters are transferred from the Old Testament by way of allusion in order to explain the matter at hand -- however, without being types. Consider Revelation 2:7; Revelation 22:1-2, where the Lord Jesus is called the Tree of Life. The reference is, without a doubt, to the tree of life in Paradise, the sacrament of the covenant of works. It is, however, a certainty that Christ had not been presented to Adam; that there was no need for a Surety there; and that Christ was not the object of Adam's faith. Thus, the tree of life did not depict Christ to Adam. After the fall, Adam was no longer permitted to either see or touch the tree of life. This came to an end upon the breaking of the covenant of works, and subsequently this tree was never held before the Old Testament church as a type of Christ who was then promised. Never did the Old Testament church believe in Christ by means of the tree of life. Thus, by way of allusion and application, Christ is called the tree of life in the New Testament. As Adam saw this tree daily, ate of it, and thereby rejoiced in the promise of eternal life, likewise believers also use Christ, live in the enjoyment of Him, and will live and rejoice in Him. From all this we observe that one must not immediately designate something as a type if, in some measure, it is analogous and applicable to Christ.

Sixthly, consider attentively that God caused matters to transpire in the Old Testament with the intent that His wise and adorable providence would be observed afterwards, and that these matters would be applied allegorically. Thus, it is not only so that there would (or could) be an analogy between both, but God indeed intended it to be so. The apostle therefore presents Hagar and Sarah as having allegorical significance (Galatians 4:24). The Greek word is allegoroumena. Hagar was not a type of the Old Testament, for as the Old Testament is designated a typical covenant, the one type would thus be a type of another. Even without such a supposition, Hagar would be a type of those types which are presented therein -- which is a complete absurdity. Moreover, the apostle does not call her a type. Instead, he states that they are allegoroumena, which signifies matters which, by way of analogy, are transposed from one meaning to another. Thus, it is permissible to transpose the meaning of many matters to other matters, even though it may not be possible to determine with unquestionable certainty that God had that meaning in mind with that given situation. Consequently, one can thus delight himself in the wise providence of God which, for example, can be observed in God's command to Abraham to offer his son Isaac upon Mount Moriah, the place where hundreds of years later the temple of Solomon was built and where sacrifices were made. One can do likewise in many other situations. One must, however, refrain from making types of them. I believe this is a solution to eliminate the differences of opinion concerning types. A Type Defined in the Strict Biblical Sense of the Word A type is something ordained of God prior to the coming of Christ, to typify the Savior who was to come. Its purpose was to instruct His church during that time frame and lead her to faith in Christ.

If one is to designate something as a type, the following must be true:

(1) It must have been appointed by God to be a type, for a type is an essential element of religion whereby the people of Israel were called to faith in Christ. However, their religion had to be utterly divorced from all will-worship and human precepts.

(2) Types had been given to the church of the Old Testament in order that during that time frame she would thereby look unto Christ and believe in Him. This is to be observed in Hebrews 9:9, "Which was a figure for the time then present."

(3) Since the types had been given to the church of the Old Testament for the practice of religion, all those who did not use these types for their intended purpose -- to know and believe in the future Messiah -- did sin.

Therefore, something is most certainly a type (1) when one finds a person or matter designated as such in either the Old or New Testament;

(2) when such a person or matter had been revealed and given as such to the church of the Old Testament; and

(3) if one were guilty of sin because he failed to make use of this given type. When these three criteria are absent, however, one may not appoint or designate something as a type. We believe that this will convince the conscience of all who esteem God's holy Word and delight in sound religion, making them to be careful in establishing and designating types. From what has been said, it is evident that:

(1) Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, etc., cannot be designated as types of the Lord Jesus, for there is neither evidence that they were appointed to be types, nor were they given as such to the Old Testament church -- nor is there evidence that it was or would be a sin to the church if she were not to avail herself of these men as types.

(2) The garments of Adam and Eve may not be designated as types of the righteousness of Christ wherewith believers are clothed. Aside from the fact that no word is mentioned about this in God's Word, the basis upon which one does so is improbable; namely, that these clothes were made from the skins of those animals which Adam had sacrificed. Adam was at that time still in Paradise, and when God dressed them with these clothes, which were a rebuke for their sins, He derided them, saying, "Behold, the man is become as one of Us" (Genesis 3:22).

(3) For the identical reason, the ark of Noah is not a type of Christ. A similarity does not make something to be a type.

(4) The flood was neither a sacrament of the covenant of grace nor a type of holy baptism. Nowhere is it designated as such; the argument rests only on similarity.

Objection: The flood has been designated as a sacrament of the covenant of grace: "For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee" (Isaiah 54:9). Furthermore, holy baptism is identified as an antitype of the flood: "The like figure [Note: The Statenvertaling uses the word "tegenbeeld," that is, antitype.] whereunto even baptism doth also now save us" (1 Peter 3:21). The form for baptism speaks in like manner of the flood and the Red Sea, saying, "... by which baptism was signified."

Answer: The text, Isaiah 54:9, does not speak of the actual flood as to the time and occasion of its occurrence. Rather, it speaks of something which transpired subsequently: the oath of God upon Noah's sacrifice, that He would no more destroy the world by means of a flood. The flood is also not designated as either a sacrament or type -- neither are the Jews commanded to designate and use it as such. Instead, God declares what the matter, which transpired after the flood, meant to Him: He would be as true to His promise that He would not be wroth with His church as He was true to the oath He swore after the flood. Israel could be as sure of this as they were of the fact that the world would not again be drowned. The text, 1 Peter 3:21, does not establish the flood as a shadow or type of baptism. For even though holy baptism and the Lord's Supper have come in the place of the Old Testament sacraments, these sacraments are not a type of the New Testament sacraments -- and much less of the flood. Where is the flood designated as a type? Did it serve that purpose during that time frame? This would have to be proven; however, not a word about this is to be found. We have shown before that examples are also mentioned which did not typify anything. They are only presented by way of application, as a warning, or for the purpose of emulation or explanation. Thus, holy baptism is here designated as an antitype for the purpose of explanation; that is, as Noah was protected against the water by the water which raised the ark, likewise is baptism, which seals and assures believers of their atonement by the blood of Christ, a means unto their salvation. The form for baptism does not say that the flood is a type of baptism, but rather that baptism is signified thereby. We have already shown in a previous paragraph that an alternate meaning does not presuppose a covenant. The Rainbow is Not a Sacrament of the Covenant of Grace

Question: Is the rainbow a sacrament of the covenant of grace? Answer: One might be inclined to think that this is so, since it is called the token of the covenant (cf. Genesis 9:12-13). We answer negatively for the following reasons:

(1) It is a token of the covenant between God and the earth, all men (both good and evil), and all living animals which had been in the ark with Noah (cf. Genesis 9:9-17). The covenant of grace is only a covenant between God and believers.

(2) By means of the rainbow, the Lord did not seal any spiritual benefits in Christ, but temporal blessings only; this blessing being that there would be no more flood upon the earth. The covenant of grace, however, contains spiritual promises.

(3) Since the covenant and the rainbow will remain until the end of the world, this would mean that we would have three New Testament sacraments. The first one would then be the rainbow -- which is absurd.

(4) The word "covenant" does not always refer to a covenant in the actual sense of the word. It can also refer to an unchangeable promise or institution as in Jeremiah 33:20 : "If ye can break My covenant of the day, and My covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season." The word "covenant" is here to be interpreted as an unchangeable promise and institution.

Objection: In Revelation 4:3 we read there was a rainbow round about the throne upon which Christ sat. This causes us to reflect upon the rainbow of the covenant established with Noah, indicating that this rainbow points to Christ.

Answer (1) This was a prophetic vision and must not be stretched beyond that.

(2) The rainbow reflected the radiance of Him who sat on the throne -- just as the rays of the sun shining through water vapor upon a heavy cloud cause the rainbow. Even if it were to refer to Noah's rainbow (which is not certain), it would be an indication of the immutability and certainty of the things which would be revealed to John -- just as the rainbow gave assurance that there would be no reoccurrence of a global flood. There is no mention here whatsoever of the covenant of grace being sealed by the rainbow. The Old Testament Begins Neither at Mount Horeb nor Consists in the Inheritance of Canaan Question: Did the Old Testament begin with the first promise in Paradise, or did it begin at Mount Horeb, consisting in the inheritance of Canaan as a type of heaven?

Answer: Some distinguish between the time before Mount Horeb, referred to as the time of promise, and the time after Horeb, referred to as the Old Testament, but not a covenant, which they distinguish from a testament. The first period they designate as a period of freedom, the other as one being under the hard yoke of bondage. This latter period would neither consist in the holding forth of the promises of salvation through Christ, nor as being the covenant of grace, but would consist in the inheritance of Canaan.

We respond in the first place by saying that Scripture does not make a distinction between covenant and testament, since the one word (berith) is used in the Old Testament, and the word (diatheke) is used in the New Testament. Furthermore, Scripture makes no distinction between these matters. Even the very time period they exclusively want to be designated as the Old Testament is referred to as a covenant in Scripture, describing this era in such terms as cannot be applicable to a testament. "Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers ... because they continued not in My covenant" (Hebrews 8:9). The heir cannot disannul the testament, but a member of a covenant can break a covenant. Their distinction between testament and covenant is due to the entire construction of their argument being founded upon that distinction. If one were to refer to it as a testament, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would have to be assigned to the first time frame, called the time of promise. By assigning them to this testament, the period of the Old Testament could neither be designated as a period of hard bondage, nor be limited to the inheritance of Canaan as being the substance of the Old Testament. They did not have Canaan in their possession as yet, but only the promise that their descendants would possess it. However, as we have shown in the appropriate place, the distinction between covenant and testament is unfounded.

Secondly, we maintain that the Old Testament does not consist in the inheritance of Canaan as a pledge of heaven.

(1) God's Word states nowhere that Canaan is a pledge of heaven; this would have to be proven. It is indeed true that heaven is called a rest Hebrews 4:1 and that Canaan is also called a rest (Hebrews 3:18). However, one cannot designate something to be either a type or a pledge on the basis of name. It is not even Paul's objective to compare Canaan and heaven with each other. Rather, he admonishes to be diligent to enter heaven by faith, using as his motive the evil consequences for the unbelieving Israelites in the desert. They did not enter Canaan because of unbelief, provoking God to wrath -- and are thus given as a warning example (1 Corinthians 10:11).

(2) If Canaan were a pledge of heaven, all ungodly Jews who lived in Canaan would have a pledge of heaven, and thus they would most certainly be saved -- for to whomever God gives a pledge, He will most certainly also give the matter itself.

(3) Since the disputants claim that the Jews lived in the fear of missing Canaan, such ungodly Jews could not have lived in such fear of death if Canaan were indeed a pledge of heaven. One would readily and easily dispense with the pledge in exchange for the matter it represents, as the pledge cannot even be compared to it. Since Canaan is not a pledge of heaven, it follows that the Old Testament does not consist in the inheritance of Canaan as being a pledge of heaven. The words "as a pledge" would then have to be left out and it would have to be said that the Old Testament consists in the inheritance of Canaan -- as something of a physical nature, and thus end in that which is physical. This point can also be verified as follows:

(1) God, by His very nature, cannot establish an external covenant, promising only temporal blessing upon outward obedience. We have dealt extensively with this in volume one, chapter 16. If God cannot enter into an external covenant with man, the Old Testament does not consist in the inheritance of Canaan.

(2) It is immaterial whether the Old Testament consists in either the promise of Canaan or in the possessing of it. If it consists in the promise, it did not begin at Mt. Horeb, but rather with Abraham who received the promise four hundred thirty years before that. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would then also belong to the Old Testament -- a fact the disputants deny.

(3) If the Old Testament consists in the possession of Canaan, it would not have begun at Mt. Horeb, but upon the entrance into Canaan -- consequently, forty years later. How then will Israel's presence in Babylon be explained? Were they outside of the Old Testament during that time?

We thus conclude that the Old Testament does not consist in the inheritance of Canaan -- neither outwardly, physically, nor as a pledge of Canaan -- but rather that Canaan pertained to a temporal promise flowing out of the covenant of grace. Also in the New Testament the covenant of grace includes temporal blessings. The apostle Paul therefore changes the promise of Canaan into the promise of the earth: "That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth" (Ephesians 6:3).

Thirdly, we maintain that the Old Testament did not begin at Mount Horeb, but rather with the first promise of the gospel given to Adam in Paradise. This is true for the following reasons:

(1) It is evident from what has been said before: The Old Testament does not consist in the inheritance of Canaan, and therefore did neither begin with Abraham, nor with Horeb, nor with the entrance into Canaan.

(2) The first book of Moses describes the state of the church prior to the exodus of the children of Israel from Egypt. This book is a book of the Old Testament, as the apostle confirms: "For until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament. ... But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart" (2 Corinthians 3:14-15). Paul here refers to the books of Moses -- not only the last four, but also the first one. Thus, the first book of Moses is a book of the Old Testament. Consequently, the church was at that time in the Old Testament; therefore, the Old Testament did not begin with Horeb, but with Adam.

(3) During the Old Testament period, Christ was depicted and sacrificed typically in the sacrifices. Thereby it was understood and confessed that satisfaction for sin had not actually occurred -- satisfaction which one day would be accomplished by the seed of the woman. This period the apostle refers to as the first covenant: "For if that first covenant had been faultless. ... In that He saith, A new covenant, He hath made the first old" Hebrews 8:7; Hebrews 8:13. However, what was the first covenant or testament? That covenant which was administered by way of types and sacrifices, for:

(i) there is no other text in which it is contrasted with the new; that is, the one which came in its place;

(ii) the apostle shows this in the same chapter, verse 5: "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things."

Thus, the entire period during which Christ was exemplified and typified was the Old Testament. Christ was, however, depicted and sacrificed by way of shadows in the sacrifices not only in and after Moses' time, but also prior to Moses -- from the very time of Abraham. Already then they had altars and sacrifices of the firstborn of clean cattle as well as of the fruits of the field. We observe this with Cain and Abel Genesis 4:3-4, Noah Genesis 8:20, Abraham Genesis 12:7-8, the sacrifice of Isaac and of the ram in Isaac's place Genesis 22:13, Isaac Genesis 26:25, and Jacob, who built an altar upon God's command (Genesis 35:1-7). In all this Christ was depicted for them; therefore it is said of Christ that He is "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13:8).

Whereas the Old Testament consists of the ministry of shadows, and since the ministry of shadows has functioned since Adam, the Old Testament thus originates with Adam.

(4) The period when sins were atoned for by Christ prior to His incarnation belongs to the Old Testament. This is evident from Hebrews 9:15 : “And for this cause He is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.” However, Christ did not only atone for the sins committed subsequent to Moses, but also prior to Moses, that is, since the time of Adam. This is beyond controversy.

Evasive Argument: Christ did indeed make atonement for those sins, but the apostle nevertheless speaks only of the Old Testament which began with the exodus of the church from Egypt, and thus limits the forgiveness of sins to that period.

Answer (i) Since the disputants believe that the inheritance of Canaan constitutes the Old Testament, the apostle would then have to speak only of those sins which were committed relative to that testament. This is absurd and contradicts the objective of the apostle.

(ii) Scripture does not divide the period prior to Christ as a period of promise prior to Moses, and a period subsequent to Moses, denominating only that period as the Old Testament. Scripture only knows of two periods: yesterday and today. Yesterday is the entire period prior to Christ, and today is the period subsequent to Christ. It declares that the death of Christ was equally efficacious in both periods: “Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever” (Hebrews 13:8).

(iii) The apostle shows in the same chapter, Hebrews 9:1-28, that he does not restrict the atonement of sin to the period from Moses forward; rather, he has in view all sins of believers committed prior to Christ -- and thus also those sins which have been committed from the foundation of the world. This is evident in verse 26: “For then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world.” This means that His one sacrifice would then have lacked the efficacy to remove all the sins of His elect which had been committed from the foundation of the world. Thus it is a certainty that the time from Adam to Christ is the time of the Old Testament.

(5) The Old Testament constitutes that period, the sacrifices and typical ministry of which had to cease and be annulled by virtue of their fulfillment through Christ, the substance of the shadows. “In that He saith, A new covenant, He hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away” (Hebrews 8:13). It cannot be maintained here that the apostle has only the period of Moses in view, calling it the first testament. In addition to what has been stated above, none would be able to show that the sacrifices and other shadows in use prior to Moses had been abolished. However, all those sacrifices and shadows in use prior to Moses also belong to “those things that are shaken,” which have to be removed (Hebrews 12:27). All those things were abolished, just as those in use during and after Moses. Consequently, the sacrifices since the time of Adam belong to the Old Testament. This period is as much the time of the Old Testament as is the time after Moses.

Objection #1: “The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day” (Deuteronomy 5:2-3). Thus, the covenant commenced at Horeb.

Answer: Israel stood before Jordan, ready to enter Canaan. Moses, addressing those who were alive at that moment, contrasted them with their fathers. The covenant which God made with them there was not made with their fathers. Who were the fathers? They were those who died during the forty-year sojourn in the wilderness -- this in accordance with God's threat that all who had left Egypt, being twenty years of age or above, would not enter Canaan. The Lord had indeed made a covenant with the nation of Israel at Horeb. Those involved, however, were already dead and did not receive the fulfillment of the promise of Canaan. Instead, those who were then alive would possess it, and with them God made this covenant. The essence of this covenant was no different from the covenant God made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and with Israel at Horeb. In essence they are one and the same: "... that the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which He swore unto thy fathers" (Deuteronomy 7:12). However, the circumstances were different, involving different people: a people who now stood ready to cross Jordan and enter into Canaan. It was a solemn renewal of that covenant; it had not taken place with their fathers, but it had with them. Circumstances will change a given situation; thus a given matter is referred to in different terms, thereby negating the former as to measure and manner. Observe this in John 7:39 : "The Holy Ghost was not yet given," who, however, was from all eternity, and of whom believers prior to and during the time of Christ were partakers. Consider also Romans 16:25-26 : "... according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest." It is even clearer in Ephesians 3:5 : "Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed." The intent here is the same: not with our fathers, but with us. Those who advance the initial text as a counter argument cannot but understand this text to mean just that, for they do not place the beginning of the Old Testament at the moment when Israel stood before the Jordan and solemnly renewed the covenant, but at the exodus or at Horeb.

Objection #2: "Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt" (Jeremiah 31:32). Since God established the Old Testament then, one must therefore place its commencement at that time, and not any earlier.

Answer (1) This has already been answered; that is, when a matter which in essence already existed is said to have transpired subsequent thereto, it means that it has occurred in a different manner and measure. The covenant made at Horeb in its essence existed prior to that, for it was the covenant which God had made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. It is by virtue of that covenant that God delivered Israel from Egypt in order to bring them to Canaan (Exodus 2:24). It is by virtue of that covenant that God inaugurated the covenant with Israel at Horeb and at the Jordan. "Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God ... that thou shouldest enter into covenant with the Lord thy God ... that He may establish thee to day for a people unto Himself, and that He may be unto thee a God, as He hath said unto thee, and as He hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob" Deuteronomy 29:10; Deuteronomy 29:12-13. Yes, it was the covenant of grace itself, as we shall demonstrate in the next chapter. Thus, the reference to the time of the exodus is due to the public execution and inauguration of the covenant, but not relative to its essence. Things are therefore ascribed to Moses which had been instituted long before his time, such as circumcision. "Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision" (John 7:22). Likewise, even though altars and sacrifices, the distinction between clean and unclean cattle, and circumcision had been instituted and were in use long before Moses, the law of shadows is ascribed to him because in his time the ministry of shadows was deployed in its full eminence and glory.

Objection #3: "... these (Hagar and Sarah) are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar" (Galatians 4:24). The Old Testament therefore necessarily begins at Sinai.

Answer: The apostle does not state that it began at Sinai. Rather, he refers to this place due to the official ratification and the solemn inauguration of this covenant, for it has been shown that the covenant, as far as its essence is concerned, already existed prior to this. If Hagar were the covenant, it must consequently originate with her. By way of application, she is referred to as the covenant retroactively, there being similarity and agreement in some matters (cf. p. 382). We shall discuss this text more comprehensively elsewhere. From what has been said, it has been shown sufficiently that this text does not state that the Old Testament commenced at Sinai.

Objection #4: "Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood" (Hebrews 9:18). The word "dedicated" signifies the construction of something new; thus, one must place the origin of the Old Testament at Sinai. There, by way of a large system, it was ratified with blood. The apostle refers to this time, which is evident from the verses which follow.

Answer (1) Dedication does not signify the beginning of a matter which previously did not exist, for this word is also used for something which is either improved or renewed: "And it was at Jerusalem the feast of the dedication" (John 10:22). Here is the same word, signifying renewal.

(2) The first covenant was already ratified in Adam's time with the first sacrifice. Noah ratified it by blood when he exited the ark. When the covenant was established with Abraham and his seed, it was also solemnly ratified with blood (Genesis 15:8-9).

(3) A marriage may have been arranged long before the official ceremony; however, this does not constitute a different marriage. A king may already be king and have reigned prior to having been crowned. However, the crowning ceremony neither makes him a new king nor does it even make him a king. It is the same here. The covenant spoken of at Sinai existed already and had been initiated several times previously. However, in this situation it manifests itself under entirely different circumstances. At this occasion, there was a general and public ratification of the covenant which had been established with their father Abraham. The shadows and types were now regulated and arranged in a different order, all of which would be subservient to keep the church in the midst of that nation faithful to true religion. Thus, the identical covenant, which had already existed and had already been inaugurated, was ratified anew with festive ceremonies. Therefore, this text does not indicate that the Old Testament commenced at Sinai.

Remission of Sins by the Shedding of Blood by Way of Sacrifices Predates Moses and the Ceremonial Laws

We have hereby demonstrated that the Old Testament did not begin at Sinai, but with Adam; and that the Old Testament did not consist in the inheritance of Canaan as being an example and pledge of heaven. Consequently, the period from Adam to Moses can no longer be referred to as the time of promise in contrast with the time after Sinai. The entire period from Adam to Christ is the time of promise. What the apostle says of the fathers of the Old Testament in Hebrews 11:13 is most certainly true for the believers of all that time: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them." The supposition which distinguishes between the time prior to Moses as being the time of promise only, and the time after Moses as being the Old Testament, engenders another supposition: The sacrifices from Adam to Moses were neither mandatory nor imposed, but were offered voluntarily, and then only when men had a desire to do so. These sacrifices were not intended to declare men guilty in regard to sin, unpaid debt, and inability to make personal satisfaction, and to lead them to the only sacrifice of Christ, He being the fulfilling antitype of their foreshadowing sacrifice.

We respond, first of all, that we cannot imagine there would be anyone who would maintain that the sacrifices of that period were neither instituted nor mandated, for:

(1) How would man himself be able to fabricate such suitable types of Christ, they being the same types as were commanded of God subsequent to Sinai, and to that end distinguish between clean and unclean cattle?

(2) Their sacrifices would then not even have been religious in nature. Instead, it would have been a self-willed religion established by men, which had been forbidden by God and declared by the Lord Jesus to be vain (Matthew 15:9).

(3) They would then not have been able to sacrifice in faith -- which nevertheless they did. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain" (Hebrews 11:4). Their sacrifices could then not have been pleasing to God -- which nevertheless they were. "And the Lord smelled a sweet savour" (Genesis 8:21).

(4) God had expressly commanded to build an altar: "And God said unto Jacob ... make there an altar" (Genesis 35:1). If there is a command to build an altar, then there is also a command to offer up sacrifice, this being the purpose for which the altar was made.

Secondly, it is God's will that all religion instituted and commanded of God be practiced. God has never given man the freedom of choice as to whether he would practice a mandatory religious exercise or not. Noncompliance with God's commandment is disobedience toward Him. Furthermore, God does not want compulsory service. All service must proceed from faith and love; and wherever these are present, there will be voluntary compliance. Any religious exercise which one does against his wishes and by coercion will not be well-pleasing to God. "To obey is better than sacrifice" (1 Samuel 15:22). Whatever was needed for the construction of the tabernacle had to be given voluntarily. It is commanded that it be so: "Serve Him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind" (1 Chronicles 28:9). Since God had commanded the sacrifices, and everyone was thus obligated to comply, God uses motives to stimulate men to be obedient, doing so at times with promises and at other times with threats -- it being God's will that transgressors of His law be punished by having them expelled from the church. Since God also had a separated people (a congregation or church) who practiced religion prior to Moses and Abraham, there was necessarily also order -- and thus also rebuke and excommunication from the congregation if someone was and continued to be disobedient.

Both prior to and after Moses, the shadows were not given for punitive purposes; that is, as a vexatious and troublesome burden. Rather, they were a divine blessing and benefit. They constituted the gospel which instructed them about Christ and led them to Him. The more types God afforded them, the greater benefit God bestowed upon them, and the more clearly He made Christ known to them. The godly found great delight in these types and thanked the Lord for them. Therefore, we readily admit that the sacrifices prior to the time of Moses were not given to be a vexatious burden -- as is also true for the sacrifices subsequent to Moses. Among all the ordinances prior to Christ, there was none more difficult or painful than circumcision, which Peter refers to as "a yoke ... which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear" (Acts 15:10). This circumcision had already been instituted several hundred years prior to Moses; nevertheless, compliance with this ordinance was delightful and easy for those whose pleasure it was to serve God according to His will.

Thirdly, all sacrifices point to Christ. Apart from that purpose they were neither instituted, nor were they pleasing to God, who is not pleased with external service. Thus, the sacrifices prior to Moses also looked forward to Christ, and it is for that reason that Christ is called "the Lamb which was slain before the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13:8). Moreover, they sacrificed in faith, which always points to Christ. Therefore, the sacrifices prior to Moses typified Christ.

Fourthly, all the sacrifices were a remembrance again of sins to the humbling of those who sacrificed. All sacrifices declare that the guilt of sin had not been satisfied, but would be satisfied by the substitutionary Surety, Jesus Christ. All sacrifices declare that neither he who sacrifices nor the sacrifice itself can remove sin, but point to the substance of those shadows. All this is characteristic of a sacrifice; otherwise a sacrifice is not a sacrifice. Consequently, all sacrifices point to sins and their removal. This is to be observed in Leviticus 1:4 : "And he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt offering; and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him." Thus also the sacrifice of Job -- who did not descend from Abraham and who, in all probability, lived prior to Moses -- pointed to sin and atonement. When offering a burnt offering, he said, "It may be that my sons have sinned" (Job 1:5). All sacrifices are of an identical nature. Nowhere is a distinction made between the sacrifices before and after Moses. There is no argument that the sacrifices after Moses pointed to sin and atonement; therefore, this is equally true prior to Moses. Even in the New Testament, holy baptism and the Lord's Supper point to sin and atonement -- much more so than the sacrifices in the Old Testament. From all this it is very clear that religion prior to and after Moses does not differ as to nature and sort -- nor is there a difference between the state of the church prior to and after Moses.

112. Chapter 2: The Church from Abraham to the Law, or Sinai

----- CHAPTER TWO ----- The Church from Abraham to the Law, or Sinai

During the time preceding Abraham -- a period of approximately two thousand years -- the church consisted of an indiscriminate variety of nationalities, there being no connection with any particular nation or locality. Beginning with Abraham, however, God made a distinction among the nations. He established the church among the descendants of Abraham, and in a given locality, determining this to be Canaan. Thereby one could acquire knowledge about the Christ who was to come with that much more certainty. By way of ancestry, Christ descended from Adam and was thus the promised seed of the woman. Subsequently, this seed was restricted to Abraham, thereafter to Isaac, Jacob, Judah, and finally to David, after whom there was no further restriction. The distinction between the church before and after Abraham does not relate to the practice of religion (this being one and the same), but rather to her being restricted to one nation. Subsequent to the church having been restricted to Abraham's seed, several transformations occurred. They can be reduced to six: 1) from Abraham to Moses, 2) from Moses to the Judges 3:1-31) from the judges to the kings, 4) from the kings to the captivity in Babylon, 5) from the beginning of the captivity to the return to Canaan, and 6) from this return to Christ, all of which comprehends a period of approximately two thousand years. The Church from Abraham to Moses

Abraham, the son of Terah, Nahor, Reu, Peleg, Eber, Selah, Arphaxad, Shem, and Noah, lived in Mesopotamia (which in our language means "the land between two rivers"), in a city named Ur, thereafter inhabited by the Chaldeans. Soon after the flood, true religion had been corrupted -- even in the generation of Shem, among whose descendants the church existed until Christ. Abraham's ancestors had become very degenerate, and, like Abraham, were worshipers of idols (cf. Joshua 24:14-15). Thus, there was not the least probability for true religion to be restored in their generational line -- much less for the church to exist strictly among their descendants. But God, who in all things manifests His sovereign grace, called Abraham in an extraordinary manner and revealed to him that the Messiah would come forth from him -- commanding him to leave his country and kindred. He was to go to a different land, the location of which God did not reveal to him at that time. God only told him that He would show it to him. Abraham obeyed God, left Ur, and resided for a period of time in Haran, also located in Mesopotamia. After his father's death, however, Abraham departed from Haran as well, and crossed the river Euphrates, taking with him his wife Sarah, his brother's son, Lot, and all that belonged to him -- his possessions as well as those servants and maids who were his property. After much roaming about, he entered Canaan near Sichem and settled there, not knowing that this was the land that God would show to him. There God appeared to him and promised that his seed would inherit this land. In response, Abraham built an altar to sacrifice unto the Lord to show his gratitude -- as Noah did after he left the ark. A famine in Canaan caused Abraham to leave that land and to travel to Egypt. From there he returned to Canaan -- to the place where he had previously built the altar. He dwelt there as a stranger, however, not having one square foot as his own property. As a result of the multiplication of their cattle, Abraham and Lot could no longer dwell together. Abraham gave Lot the choice as to where he wished to settle, and Lot chose the region of Sodom and Gomorrah. After having lived there for a period of time, the region was conquered by Chedorlaomer, who led away captive both man and beast. Lot was among the captives. Having been notified thereof, Abraham gathered an army of three hundred eighteen men, born in his house, and defeated Chedorlaomer, and rescued his nephew Lot. Lot remained in this region until the time that those cities and the surrounding region were overthrown, at which time the Lord rescued him by means of angels. After he had left the city together with his wife and two daughters, his wife, contrary to God's command, looked back at Sodom. Immediately God punished her by changing her into a pillar of salt -- a pillar as hard and impossible to melt as a stone. The daughters of Lot afterward committed their shameful deed that resulted in the emergence of two evil nations which became the mortal enemies of the children of Israel.

Upon Abraham's return from his victorious battle, he met Melchizedek, king of Salem, who supplied refreshments for him. The identity of this Melchizedek, and whom he typified, has been dealt with in volume one, chapter 20. Thereafter the Lord again appeared to Abraham, renewed the previous promise of the Messiah to come and the multiplication of his seed, and in an extraordinary manner confirmed the covenant of grace with him. At that time God revealed to him that his descendants would be oppressed in a strange land for four hundred years, after which they would return to Canaan to possess it as their inheritance.

Since Abraham probably did not know that the Messiah and the multiplication of his seed would proceed from Sarah, he, upon Sarah's advice, lay with her maid Hagar, and begot Ishmael by her. By renewal God appeared to Abraham, repeated the same promise, and added to it that this promise would be fulfilled by means of a son whom he would beget from his wife Sarah, commanding Abraham to call him Isaac. God also renamed Abram and Sarai: Instead of Abram, God called him Abraham, and instead of Sarai, God called her Sarah. In renewing His promise, God confirmed the covenant by way of the sacrament of circumcision. He commanded Abraham to circumcise all the males among his descendants at the eighth day -- the command being accompanied by the threat that whoever would not be circumcised would be cut off from his people and be recognized as neither a descendant of Abraham nor a member of the covenant.

Circumcision: (1) was a seal of the covenant of grace, sealing to believers the forgiveness through the Messiah who was to come. "And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith" (Romans 4:11).

(2) pointed out the uncleanness of nature unto humiliation. This uncleanness, being expressed by the foreskin of the heart, displeased the Lord, and thus He wanted it removed. "Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiffnecked" (Deuteronomy 10:16); "... all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in the heart" (Jeremiah 9:26).

(3) placed the children of Israel under obligation, and sealed to them their sanctification. "Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem" (Jeremiah 4:4); "In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ" (Colossians 2:11).

(4) was a very evident mark of distinction for both the Israelites and strangers alike, as it indicated that they were in a covenant relationship with the Lord, and as the seed of Abraham belonged to the church.

True to the promise and the covenant which had been sealed, Sarah became pregnant and begat Isaac at the age of ninety -- contrary to the course of nature. Abraham was one hundred years of age when, to his great joy, Isaac was born to him. It was, however, also a great trial, for God commanded him to sacrifice this precious son upon Mount Moriah. Abraham obeyed God in a matter of the very greatest import. One can imagine, however, that he did so with great pain in his heart. Even if he were to kill his son, he nevertheless believed that the Messiah would come forth from this son -- even if God would have to resurrect him from ashes. However, God prevented him from doing so by providing him a ram which, in close proximity, was caught with his horns in the thicket and was sacrificed in his son's stead. Thereupon God renewed his previous blessings, pertaining to both the Messiah and the multiplication of his seed through Isaac; for Ishmael had already been sent away at the request of Sarah and upon God's command. At the occasion of Sarah's death, Abraham purchased the field of Ephron where the cave of Machpelah was located. There he buried Sarah, and later he was buried there himself, along with Isaac and Jacob. In principle the promise of Canaan -- Canaan being a land in which he, prior to this, did not own as much as one square foot -- was here fulfilled for Abraham. Jacob likewise purchased a parcel of land; this portion was so precious to him, that upon this parcel having been forcefully taken from him, he regained it with his sword, and preserved it as a precious earnest which he bequeathed to Joseph.

Isaac, upon the direction of his father Abraham, and due to the faithfulness of Abraham's servant, Eliezer, obtained Rebekah, the daughter of Bethuel and the sister of Laban, as his wife. She was barren, but the Lord heard Isaac's prayer and Rebekah conceived and gave birth to Esau and Jacob after God had made known to her that the older would serve the younger. God renewed the covenant and the former promise to Isaac, who also built an altar unto the Lord and called upon His name. A profane Esau sold his birthright to Jacob. Isaac, being old and blind, believed himself to be blessing his son Esau, but unknowingly, due to the quick maneuvering of Rebekah, he blessed Jacob and gave him the rights pertaining to the firstborn.

Upon the advice of Rebekah, Isaac sent Jacob to Mesopotamia. God revealed Himself to Jacob in an extraordinary manner, promising him glorious blessings: the inheritance of Canaan and the multiplication of his seed. Upon arriving in Mesopotamia, Jacob, via a special direction of divine providence, became acquainted with Rachel and through her with her father Laban. He promised his daughter to Jacob as a reward for seven years of service. Laban deceived him, however, and secretly put Leah into Jacob's bed. Consequently, Jacob had to serve an additional seven years for Rachel. Thus, without this having been his objective, Jacob acquired two wives. From these wives and their maids Jacob fathered twelve sons and traveled with them to Canaan. Along the way he wrestled with the Lord, who changed his name to Israel, and blessed him greatly. Jacob cleansed his family of idols, built an altar unto the Lord, and served him uprightly.

Due to the envy of his brothers, Joseph was sold as a slave to some merchants, who brought him into Egypt where he was sold. After many vicissitudes, Joseph was highly exalted by Pharaoh, who enabled him to bring his father, together with his entire house, into Egypt, thereby preserving them during the seven-year famine. At first, Israel was treated in a friendly manner, but afterward the Egyptians greatly oppressed Israel, making the people their slaves in accordance with God's prophecy to Abraham. What could be said about types during this period has been expressed in the previous chapter. When the oppression reached its zenith and all means were employed to eradicate Israel completely by killing all newborn male children, the Lord came to their rescue and delivered Israel from the hand of Pharaoh, led them into the land of Canaan, and fulfilled His oft-repeated promise.

After having been preserved for some time, Moses was put into an ark of bulrushes by his parents, who no longer dared to hide him. They placed him among the flags by the river's brink where Pharaoh's daughter and her companions found him and picked him up. On the recommendation of Moses' sister, Pharaoh's daughter committed him to his own parents for the purpose of raising him, and later adopted him as her son. God called and sent him to deliver Israel. Moses began by punishing an Egyptian; but Israel did not recognize him as their deliverer. He fled and married Zipporah, the daughter of Jethro who was a priest or ruler in Midian. While watching the sheep of His father-in-law at Mount Horeb, the Lord appeared to him in a bush which burned, but was nevertheless not consumed. God sent him forth to deliver Israel, but he sought to be released from that task. God strengthened him by way of signs, however, and permitted his eloquent brother Aaron to accompany him. Upon this, Moses departed and requested of Pharaoh to let Israel go. In response to his repeated refusals, Pharaoh was afflicted with no less than ten plagues, after which he at last allowed Israel to leave. The people of God were also made willing to go. God gave Israel the treasures of Egypt for their heavy labor. Therefore they demanded silver and gold from them, and the Egyptians gave willingly in order to be rid of the people of Israel. The last plague consisted in the death of all the firstborn of the Egyptians. In order to exempt the people of God from this plague, God commanded them to kill a lamb -- a one-year-old male without blemish -- in their homes during the preceding evening. They then had to apply the blood to both of the side-posts and the lintel of their doors. Furthermore, they were commanded to roast the entire lamb in the fire, without breaking any bones, and to eat it with bitter herbs during the night, having their loins girded, shoes on their feet, and their staffs in their hands -- and thus be ready to journey. They had to eat this lamb in its entirety, doing so with haste. God promised that the angel who would slay all the firstborn of Egypt would pass over all the houses where the blood of the lamb had been applied to the doors, and thus would not slay the firstborn -- which indeed did occur that very night. Upon this, Pharaoh commanded Moses and Aaron to depart -- yes, the people strongly urged them to depart and Israel did so that very same night in a hasty yet orderly manner, each squadron being five by five. The Lord decreed that this slaying of the lamb -- the blood of which was applied to the doorposts to deliver Israel from the slaying angel -- was to be observed annually during the evening of the fourteenth day of the first month. He called it the Passover, which means to pass by. And since the blood of the lamb was the means, the lamb itself was called the Passover. "... and kill the passover" (Exodus 12:21); "Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed" (Luke 22:7). The following particulars are to be observed:

(1) God changed the months; God designated the seventh month to be the first month. Upon the tenth day of the month Abib the Israelites were to take a lamb from the flock, and set it apart in isolation until the fourteenth day. On that day the Israelites were to kill it toward the evening

(Exodus 13:6).

(2) The lamb, be it of a sheep or a goat, was to be a one-year-old male without blemish (Exodus 12:5).

(3) The people were to kill it in their homes until the time that God chose a location for the ministry of types. From that time it was no longer to be killed in the homes, but only in the temple Deuteronomy 16:5-6 where the blood was to be sprinkled upon the altar 2 Chronicles 35:11, for the Passover was a sacrifice -- being interchangeably called the sacrifice of the Lord's passover (Exodus 12:27); 2 Chronicles 35:7-9, or sacrifice Numbers 9:7; Numbers 9:13.

(4) The lamb was neither permitted to be boiled nor to be eaten raw. Instead, it was to be roasted in the fire as one entire piece, without breaking its bones (Exodus 12:9).

(5) Having been roasted, it was to be eaten, along with unleavened bread and bitter herbs (Exodus 12:8).

(6) The lamb had to be eaten in its entirety; nothing was permitted to remain. Therefore, if a family was too small, as many families as necessary would have to assemble in order that everything could be consumed; or else the leftovers had to be burned by fire (Exodus 12:10).

(7) Neither strangers, the uncircumcised, nor the unclean were permitted to eat; only the circumcised and the clean were permitted to do so -- men, women, as well as children (Exodus 12:45-47). If anyone was prevented from doing so due to extraordinary and unavoidable circumstances (or whatever else the reason may have been), he would have to observe it on the fourteenth day of the following month (Numbers 9:11).

(8) They had to eat the Passover being prepared to journey, having shoes on their feet, staffs in their hands, their loins girded (since they wore long garments in those lands), and in haste. No one was permitted to leave the house (Exodus 12:11-12). It is credible, however, that some of these particulars only pertained to the first Passover -- Israel having to depart from Egypt immediately upon the eating of the Passover. The Passover, given by God to Israel as an institution, being a sacrifice, belonged to the law of shadows, also called the ceremonial law. It was a type of Christ, as are all sacrifices. Christ is called "our passover [even Christ] is sacrificed for us" (1 Corinthians 5:7); "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29). Peter says that we are redeemed "with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Peter 1:19). Christ was the Son of man; He was a Man of sorrows who was without blemish, was holy, and was killed in the full strength of His life. Not one of His bones was broken, and by His shed and sprinkled blood He delivers all His own from all plagues, and they receive eternal salvation.

After having eaten the Passover, Israel departed Egypt in haste as if they were fleeing. Yet they departed in an orderly fashion by groups of five. They deviated, however, from the normal route leading out of Egypt. When this came to Pharaoh's knowledge, he reversed his decision to let them go, quickly gathered an army, and pursued them as if they were a flock of helpless sheep. Israel came into great distress. Before them was the sea, at their sides were either the mountains or a way which was not passable, and behind them was Pharaoh who pursued them with his armed forces. Escape was impossible. Moses called upon God who responded by dividing the sea so that the waters stood as walls on both sides, and Israel traveled on dry ground across the bottom of the sea to the other side. As Pharaoh pursued them, the waters converged upon Pharaoh and his army and drowned every one of them. This crossing of the sea was a sacrament to them, sealing redemption in Christ to the believer (1 Corinthians 10:2). Israel, being joyful, praised the Lord and continued their journey. However, the least mishap caused them to distrust the Lord and to murmur. Nevertheless, the Lord helped them. When they were without bread, God caused manna to rain from heaven every night. When they were without water, God cleaved a rock, making water to come forth as a river, which followed them as a flood. They arrived at Mount Horeb, where God had determined that they should worship Him in a solemn manner. This manna and this rock were the sacraments for their spiritual life and of their redemption in Christ (1 Corinthians 10:3-4). Here they entered into a covenant with God; here God gave them the rule of life, the ten commandments; here the tabernacle was constructed at God's command; and here the ceremonial worship was prescribed to them in an orderly fashion. These matters need to be discussed in more detail.

After Israel had arrived at Horeb, Moses ascended the mountain. God commanded Moses to ask the people on His behalf if they wished to remain in the covenant and be obedient to Him (Exodus 19:8). Moses relayed the message, and the people responded at once: "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do" (Exodus 19:8). Thus, we truly have a covenant transaction here: God proposed the covenant and added a promise, upon which the people accepted it. The Covenant Made at Horeb: The Confirmation of the Covenant of Grace This raises the following question: Is the covenant made at Horeb the covenant of grace itself, or is it a national, external, and typical covenant, having as its only promise the inheritance of Canaan -- and is thus the point at which the Old Testament commences?

We answer as follows: (1) It is the covenant of grace itself. This transaction is but a solemn renewal of that covenant of which all believers since Adam have been partakers. God renewed this covenant with Abraham and his seed, confirming it with the sacrament of circumcision.

(2) The sound of the term national covenant is such, that it sometimes causes confusion for those who are not well-informed. It is, however, the covenant of grace which had previously been established with believers, but since the time of Abraham had been restricted to the posterity of Abraham. Only in that respect, and in none other, may it be referred to as a national covenant. The word "national" is not to be found in the Bible.

(3) An external covenant, consisting in temporal promises contingent upon external obedience, had never been established. There can be no such covenant between God and man. We have dealt with this extensively in volume one (chapter 16, pp. 457-463).

(4) The covenant of grace is a typical covenant, and therefore can be referred to as such, since it was administered by types which pointed to Christ. The administration of the covenant is therefore occasionally denominated as the covenant (Genesis 17:3; Jeremiah 31:31). In designating this covenant as a typical covenant, one is not to imply that it did not have an inherent spiritual promise; that is, that the covenant was only typical of spiritual benefits -- particularly those of the New Testament. There is not one trace of evidence in God's Word that this is so. Such a notion is thus to be rejected as quickly as it is stated.

(5) The Old Testament is the very embodiment of the covenant of grace, administered in the old fashion by way of shadows -- and nothing other than that. If the Old Testament were other than the covenant of grace, the death of a testator other than Jesus Christ would be necessary, for no testament is confirmed except in the death of the testator (Hebrews 9:16-17). Furthermore, the Old Testament neither began at Horeb, having been in existence since the time of Adam, nor consisted in the inheritance of Canaan, as we have shown in detail in the previous chapter.

We have stated all this by way of general introduction. Since the Old Testament neither began at Horeb, but rather with Adam and neither consists in the inheritance of Canaan nor is an external covenant, it remains that the covenant made at Horeb is the covenant of grace itself. This is evident for the following reasons:

First, the covenant made at Horeb is not a new covenant, but a renewal of a covenant previously established. This is evident from Exodus 19:1-25 and from all God's dealings with Israel during their stay at Horeb. Nothing is stated there which even resembles the establishment of a new covenant -- a covenant which previously had not existed. Rather, the covenant dealt with is consistently the covenant which existed previously. Observe this at the beginning of the chapter: "Now therefore, if ye will obey My voice indeed, and keep My covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people: for all the earth is Mine: and ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel. And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do" (Exodus 19:5-6; Exodus 19:8). Here we have the solemn confirmation of the covenant. God proposes His requirements and makes promises, and all of Israel acquiesces. God neither speaks a word about Canaan nor of anything new. In His proposition He speaks of My covenant as a covenant that already existed and of which Israel knew. It is this covenant to which they simultaneously and solemnly agreed. Thus, the covenant was already in existence. On the basis of and following this proceeded 1) the giving of the law of the ten commandments by God as their God (if this law were a formula of the covenant of grace, it would powerfully confirm the matter) and 2) the institution of an orderly worship, by way of types of Jesus Christ. Therefore, this covenant was not first established at Horeb, but existed prior to it. The transaction there pertained to a covenant that already existed. Prior to this there was, however, no other covenant than the covenant of grace. Thus, the covenant at Horeb is the covenant of grace.

Secondly, the covenant established with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob was the covenant of grace. The covenant at Horeb was, however, the same covenant as was established with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Thus, the covenant established at Horeb is the covenant of grace.

It is evident that the covenant with Abraham is the covenant of grace for the following reasons:

- (1) It had Christ as its Mediator (Genesis 12:2-3; Galatians 3:17).
- (2) It had God as a God who was a shield and a great reward (Genesis 15:1; Genesis 17:8).
- (3) By it Abraham was established as the father of all believers (Genesis 17:2; Genesis 17:4; Romans 4:11).
- (4) It had to be embraced by faith (Genesis 25:6; Genesis 17:3; Romans 4:18-20).

(5) It had circumcision as a seal of the righteousness of faith (Romans 4:11). That the covenant made at Horeb was the same covenant made with Abraham is first of all evident from the fact that it contained the same promises, had the same rule of life, and had the same manner of worship.

(1) It contained the same spiritual and temporal promises. The spiritual promise was that God would be their God, and that they would belong to God. "I am the Lord thy God" (Exodus 20:2); "And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God" (Exodus 29:45); "Ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people" (Exodus 19:6). That this is the essence of the covenant of grace is evident from 2 Corinthians 6:16 : "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people." Furthermore, they were a royal priesthood and a holy nation: "And ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Exodus 19:6); "But ye are ... a royal priesthood, an holy nation" (1 Peter 2:9). The temporal promises were also the same -- as for instance, the promise of Canaan. God gave this land to Abraham. "And I will give unto thee ... the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession" (Genesis 17:8); "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it" (Genesis 28:13). Thus, Canaan belonged to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob successively, and their descendants inherited it as an inheritance received from their father. The possessions of the parents are for the children.

(2) It had the same rule of life -- the will of God to love the Lord, and to fear, believe, and trust Him. All this is comprehended in the command: "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect" (Genesis 17:1). At Mount Horeb, God gave the identical command to Israel by way of the law of the ten commandments annunciated there.

(3) There was the same manner of worship -- by way of shadows. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob made altars of earth, and also offered sacrifices as Cain, Abel, and Noah did before them. They had mishmor, mitsvah, chakkah, and thorah. These are words which are generally expressive of laws -- both moral and ceremonial.

"Because that Abraham obeyed My voice, and kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes, and My laws" (Genesis 26:5). They had circumcision as a sacrament of the covenant. Israel had the same ordinance -- the same sacrament. Since everything was identical, Israel had the same covenant which was established with Abraham.

Secondly, it is evident that the covenant established with Israel was identical to the covenant God established with Abraham from the fact that when mention is made of the covenant with Israel, reference is continually made to the covenant with Abraham, the declaration being that they are one and the same. "Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them. Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments, and keep, and do them, that the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which He swore unto thy fathers" (Deuteronomy 7:11-12); "Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them. ... Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God. ... That thou shouldest enter into covenant with the Lord thy God, and into His oath, which the Lord thy God maketh with thee this day: that He may establish thee to day for a people unto Himself, and that He may be unto thee a God, as He hath said unto thee, and as He hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob" Deuteronomy 29:9-10; Deuteronomy 29:12-13.

Thus, the covenant which God established with Israel, along with the promises and the benefits, is the same; it is none other than the covenant God made with Abraham -- and is thus the covenant of grace itself.

Evasive Argument: In these texts it is indeed stated that God swore to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob that the covenant He made with Israel at Horeb would be established with their seed; but not that it is the same covenant.

Answer (1) This is merely conjecture and its conclusion can be answered with a denial.

(2) It expressly contradicts those texts which declare that God has established this covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that God would confirm that identical covenant with Israel, their seed.

(3) It contradicts Genesis 17:7 where the Lord enters into covenant with Abraham, and in him with his seed -- it being declared to be one and the same covenant. Furthermore, regarding Canaan, it was given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; it was their land. "And I will give unto thee ... all the land of Canaan" (Genesis 17:8); "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it" (Genesis 28:13). Israel received it from their father as an inheritance. Abraham had the property rights, and Israel, by reason of those rights, came into its possession in accordance with the Lord's promise made to Abraham that He would do so.

Thirdly, not one person who is of Reformed persuasion will deny (no one can deny it!) that the covenant which has Christ as its Surety and Mediator is the covenant of grace. Such is true, however, for the covenant of Horeb, for it does have Christ as its Mediator, which is evident from the fact that it was ratified with blood. "And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you" (Exodus 24:8); "Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people" (Hebrews 9:18-19).

God had given the blood to make atonement for man. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Leviticus 17:11). The blood of animals was not capable of reconciling man with God. "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins" (Hebrews 10:4). This efficacy is, however, to be found in the blood of the Lord Jesus: "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood" (Romans 3:25); "In whom we have redemption through His blood" (Ephesians 1:7). The blood of animals sacrificed in the Old Testament was a type of the blood of Christ -- just as the entire law of shadows pointed to future benefits and was not the essence of the matter itself (Hebrews 10:1). This is particularly to be observed in Hebrews 9:1-28 where the apostle continually compares the blood of bullocks and goats with the blood of the Lord Jesus, that is, the type with the antitype (vss. 12-14, 20, 25). Speaking of this in verse 23, he says, "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these" (Hebrews 9:23). Therefore, just as Moses sprinkled the book and the people, the blood of Christ is called the blood of sprinkling (Hebrews 12:24; 1 Peter 1:2). It is thus both certain and obvious that the sprinkling of the book of the covenant and of the people pointed to the sprinkling of the blood of Christ (that is, the appropriation and application thereof), confirming the covenant of grace. Thus, the covenant of Sinai had Christ as its Mediator, and consequently was the covenant of grace.

Fourthly, that covenant is the covenant of grace itself which has as its sacraments the sacraments of grace. A seal confirms a covenant -- and then only that covenant of which it is a seal. To sever a seal from one covenant and to attach it to another covenant of an entirely different content is the height of infidelity. However, the covenant of Sinai has as its seals the seals of the covenant of grace. It was confirmed by circumcision and the Passover, both of which the children of Israel were commanded to strictly observe upon the threat of excommunication; that is, expulsion from the congregation of God and the covenant. It has been confirmed in the previous chapter that circumcision and the Passover were the seals of the covenant of grace. Both were instituted prior to the covenant at Horeb. The disputants admit that nothing but the covenant of grace existed previously. Both sealed the covenant of grace: Circumcision was the seal of the righteousness of faith Romans 4:11, and the Passover was Christ (1 Corinthians 5:7).

Along with the three previous proofs, this proves that the covenant of Horeb was the covenant of grace.

Refutation of Objections to the Covenant at Horeb being the Covenant of Grace Objection #1: The Word of God continually makes a distinction between the covenant at Horeb and the covenant of grace. Thus, the covenant at Horeb is not the covenant of grace, but an external covenant, consisting in the promise of Canaan as typifying heavenly benefits. This is evident from Deuteronomy 5:3 : "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day." Here the fathers, who were not present at Horeb, are contrasted with those who were. It is expressly stated here that the covenant made at Horeb was not made with the fathers. Thus, the covenant at Horeb is a different covenant from the covenant of grace in which the fathers were comprehended, and which remains the same from Adam until the end of the world.

Answer (1) The contrast is not with the fathers prior to the exodus, but with those who had been present at Horeb and who, according to God's threat, had died in the wilderness; and with those who presently were alive, were in the fields of Moab, and forty years later stood ready to cross the Jordan and enter Canaan. At that time God solemnly renewed the covenant; therefore the objection is null and void.

(2) This covenant made in Moab was the same in essence, but different in regard to time, persons, and manner. In this context it is said that God did not make that covenant with their forefathers who died in the wilderness -- just like Scripture frequently speaks of or denies a matter which did not exist under given circumstances. (Cf. John 7:39; Romans 16:25-26; Ephesians 3:5; Appendix, chapter 1, p. ###373).

(3) If one wishes to interpret the fathers as referring to Adam, Noah, Abraham, etc. the contrast also does not pertain to the essence of the covenant, but is relative to the circumstances, for it was one in essence, as has been shown in the confirmation: "The Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which He swore unto thy fathers" (Deuteronomy 7:12). However, here the reference is not to fathers but to Horeb.

Objection #2: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which My covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts" (Jeremiah 31:31-33). Here there is an obvious contrast between the covenant at Horeb and the new covenant in the days of the New Testament -- not in regard to circumstances, but the essence itself. In the New Testament God would write the laws in their heart and He, as is promised in verses 33-34, would forgive their unrighteousness and remember their sins no more. The text in question does not connect any of this to the covenant at Horeb. Thus, the covenant at Horeb is not the covenant of grace, but an external, typical covenant, the promise of which only pertained to the inheritance of Canaan.

Answer: It is a fact that there is a distinction here between the Old and New Testaments. It is equally certain that the New Testament did not exist during the days of the Old Testament, but came after the Old Testament; that is, it replaced and set aside the Old Testament. Furthermore, it is true that the New Testament is the covenant of grace, comprehending the spiritual benefits in Christ -- and to remain with the text: the writing of the law in their hearts, to have God as their God (vs. 33), to have enlightened eyes of the understanding, and to have the forgiveness of sins (vs. 34). Moreover, it is equally certain that the Old Testament comprehended all these benefits of the covenant of grace and the covenant of grace itself. This we shall show in the following chapters.

It is also agreed that the covenant of grace has been since Adam and will remain the same in essence until the end of the world -- as in our opinion it has been irrefutably proven in the previous chapter that the Old Testament began with the very first promise in Paradise. Consequently, it follows with equal certainty that the contrast between the Old and New Testaments cannot be one of essence. Since the New Testament is the covenant of grace -- the New Testament having been nonexistent during the Old Testament, existing subsequent to, instead of, and the setting aside of the Old Testament being implied -- then all who lived prior to the time of the New Testament would not have had a covenant of grace. There would then have been no fear of God, no knowledge of the mystery of salvation, and no forgiveness of sins; whereas people were indeed saved and did possess all the benefits of the covenant of grace.

Therefore, the contrast pertains to the circumstances, the manner of administration, and the measure of light, faith, hope, and love. Old Testament believers had the law written in their hearts, had God as their God, had the knowledge of the mystery of salvation, and had the forgiveness of sins. They did not have this, however, with the same clarity as New Testament believers. The Old Testament is the covenant of grace, administered by shadows and examples. The New Testament is also the covenant of grace -- but administered without shadows. The one testament is called "old" because of its previous and original existence; and it has become old and has vanished. The other testament is called "new" because it chronologically followed the old, and it was also administered differently from the old. Scripture calls something new which, though it existed previously, is renewed. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another" (John 13:34).

Additional Objection: Man cannot annul the covenant of grace. However, the Jews did set the Old Testament aside (vs. 32). Thus, the Old Testament is not the covenant of grace.

Answer (1) He who has truly entered into the covenant of grace will by reason of the immutability of God and the influence of preserving grace not break it. This is according to the promise found in (Jeremiah 32:40). The unconverted Jews, however, made a covenant of works of the old covenant. They desired to be justified by observing the ceremonial service, and believed that the blood of animals removed their sins. Thus, they broke the old covenant, changing and distorting its administration and objective in such a manner as to make it differ completely from the purpose for which the ceremonial service was instituted.

(2) By their ungodly lives the unconverted Jews showed that they had never entered rightly into the covenant of grace, but had only entered in externally and thus were no partakers of the benefits of the covenant. Thus, this breach of covenant relates to them and their activities.

(3) If the Old Testament consisted in the promise of Canaan, and if they had rendered that null and void, the unconverted Jews would have rescinded the inheritance of Canaan; it would no longer be their inheritance. To this, however, they will not admit.

Objection #3: "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ" (John 1:17). Here we have an express contrast between Moses and Christ -- between law, and truth and grace. Moses was the mediator of the Old Testament, and Christ of the New Testament. The law, the Old Testament, did not provide grace. It only had the promise of the land of Canaan. In the New Testament, however, there is truth and grace. The covenant at Horeb was thus not the covenant of grace.

Answer (1) For the sake of the honor of Christ, I vehemently deny that Moses was a mediator of the Old Testament. To maintain this is very detrimental to the mediatorial office of Christ. Christ was the Mediator -- and the only Mediator -- of the Old as well as the New Testament. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today (Hebrews 13:8). Christ is "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13:8).

(2) Moses is only called mediator in Galatians 3:19 in consequence of his transmitting of the law as a messenger -- the law which had been placed in his hands by angels. However, he is never called the mediator of the Old Testament and was never a mediator in Canaan, for he had already expired prior to Israel's arrival in Canaan. Or was he a mediator in heaven? Moses was no more a mediator of the children of Israel than he is for us at the present time. We have the law, transmitted by Moses, as much as they had it.

(3) The contrast on which this text focuses is between law, grace, and truth, and conveys that the law (interpret this as broadly as you wish) could not grant salvation. "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in His sight" (Romans 3:20); "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices ... make the comers thereunto perfect" (Hebrews 10:1). All the shadows, when divorced from their substance, are of no value; they were not instituted as such. Their design was to lead to Christ, in order to believe in Him. Christ is the true image and embodiment of the shadows. By virtue of His satisfaction, believers both of the Old and New Testaments obtain grace. That is the contrast expressed in this text. What then is left in this text of an external covenant? What basis is there for asserting that the covenant at Horeb is not the covenant of grace itself?

Objection #4: Consider 2 Corinthians 3:1-18. In this chapter there is a contrast between the Old and New Testaments. The apostle calls the Old Testament the letter that kills (vs. 6), “the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones” (vs. 7), and “the ministration of condemnation” (vs. 9); whereas the New Testament is called “the ministration of the spirit” (vs. 8), and “the ministration of righteousness” (vs. 9). It is thus very evident that the Old Testament was not the covenant of grace.

Answer (1) It can be seen very clearly that the reference here is to the law of the ten commandments, which alone was written upon and engraven in tables of stone. This was not the case with the ceremonial laws. And since the disputants postulate the ten commandments to be a declaration of the covenant of grace, how can they avoid contradicting themselves? Is the compendium of the covenant of grace a ministry of death and a ministry of condemnation? They will therefore have to answer me concerning their own objections.

(2) If the Old Testament were a ministry of condemnation, it would be without promise; and it would also not have Canaan as its inheritance. It would then be a covenant of condemnation. Who would ever be willing and delighted to enter into a covenant of condemnation? Old Testament believers would then have been partakers of a covenant of condemnation. If they had been partakers of a covenant of condemnation, not one believer from the time of Moses would have been saved, but all would have been condemned. And thus by using this text, one contradicts himself, the Scriptures, and the children of God.

(3) The text neither distinguishes nor contrasts the Old and New Testaments. Rather, it does so relative to both the moral and ceremonial laws (let us consider it in such broad terms) and their administration as such, that is, divorced from Christ. This is how the Jews viewed and used the ceremonial law. This is to be observed throughout the entire letters to the Galatians and the Hebrews, as well as in what Paul expresses in Romans 9:31-32 : “But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness. Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law.” And thus he declares that the administration of the law, when divorced from Christ, is but a dead letter -- a ministry of death and condemnation. For no one could be justified in that manner; but all who adhere to this external structure, divorced from and without Christ, could only be condemned. Apart from Christ there is no salvation, “for as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse” (Galatians 3:10). He contrasts this with Christ and the proclamation of Him, calling that the ministration of the Spirit and a ministration of righteousness. For all believers are called to Christ by the gospel which was present in both the Old and New Testaments -- and who, believing in Christ, are justified. Therefore, there is nothing here which could either be supportive of an external covenant, or disprove that the Old Testament is the covenant of grace.

Objection #5: “But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all” (Galatians 4:23-26). Here the Old and New Testaments are contrasted with each other. The Old Testament, depicted by Hagar and her son Ishmael, was established at Sinai. It commenced at that time as a carnal and external covenant (having Canaan as its inheritance and having no true and spiritual benefits), imposing hard bondage by way of the ceremonies. In contrast, the New Testament, depicted by Sarah and Isaac, is a spiritual covenant, sets at liberty, and grants spiritual and eternal benefits. Thus, the covenant at Sinai is not the covenant of grace.

Answer: To respond to this objection, we shall first exegete the text, and then counter the objection extracted from this text. The history at hand pertains to Abraham, who laid with Hagar upon Sarah's request and fathered Ishmael, who according to the flesh was from Abraham. Subsequently, Abraham received a specific promise that he would receive a son by his wife Sarah, whom he would call Isaac, and that from Isaac would proceed the multiplication of his seed and the Messiah. Isaac having been born, Ishmael hates, mocks, and persecutes him to the utmost of his ability (vs. 29). Verse 30 states that Ishmael, together with his mother Hagar, was cast out without inheritance. However, godly Isaac remained at home and became the heir of everything. The apostle does not refer to these matters as examples, for they were not such in the true sense of the word. They were neither incorporated as part of the body of worship, nor did they belong to the ceremonial law, as then there would also be examples of examples -- and they in turn of others. Hagar would have been an example of the Old Testament, and that in turn of Jerusalem (vs. 25). Rather, he calls them allegoroumena -- matters which by reason of similarity to and agreement with certain matters can be applied to other matters and meanings. (See previous chapter.)

He calls Hagar and Sarah two covenants. God, in Adam, had established the covenant of works with the human race, the demands of which are repeated in the law of the ten commandments. This covenant having been rendered ineffectual due to sin, God reestablished it as the covenant of grace, which in essence is the same and will abide from Adam until the end of the world. However, since the Surety of that covenant did not come at the very outset, but about four thousand years after the initial establishment of the covenant, it was necessary, and it pleased God in His wisdom and goodness, to administer that covenant of grace by way of examples and shadows of the promised Surety until the advent of Christ, the Surety. Subsequent to His coming, however, there was no longer any need or purpose for them; Christ now administers the covenant without them. The distinction made between the old and the new covenant relates to the administration thereof, they being one in essence. Its denomination as either old or new does not relate to the essence of the covenant, but to its administration, as is evident from what follows:

(1) The old covenant is no external covenant which promised external benefits upon external obedience, did not commence at Sinai, and does not consist in the inheritance of Canaan; rather, it is the covenant of grace itself -- all of which has been shown in the previous chapter. Consequently, it is called "old" relative to its administration.

(2) The new covenant is not called "new" relative to its essence, for it is the covenant of grace itself which has been operative since Adam. Rather, it is called new relative to its administration. The new covenant or testament has come subsequent to the old, has taken its place by annulling the former, and was not new as long as the old covenant was operative. The New Testament did not exist in the days of the Old Testament, whereas the covenant of grace did. Consequently, the covenant of grace is called the new covenant or testament only relative to its administration. In this text the apostle speaks of the covenant of grace in its twofold administration, calling it two covenants. The apostle calls the one the covenant of Sinai. This does not imply that the covenant of grace commenced at that time (see previous chapter), but that it was at that time solemnly inaugurated, and attained its greatest glory and luster. This engendered bondage or servitude -- just as Hagar gave birth to Ishmael. Servitude can be either good or bad. Good servitude consists in serving God in spirit and in truth, and according to His will. The godly are therefore often called the servants of God, as well as servants of righteousness (Romans 6:19). They yield their "members servants to righteousness unto holiness" (vs. 19) and are "servants of God" (vs. 22). In that light Paul says of himself in 1 Corinthians 9:27, "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection." It is such service God had in view by giving the ceremonies. They were given to that end as the contents of the old covenant. There is also an evil servitude when one serves sin and is in bondage to sin. "... as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity" (Romans 6:19). This also applies when one wishes to serve God in a manner contrary to what He has commanded: "Which things have indeed a show of wisdom in will worship" (Colossians 2:23). The covenant of Sinai which engenders bondage brought forth illegitimate children, just as Ishmael was illegitimate. This was not a consequence of the nature of this covenant, for it was an administration instituted by God for the purpose of worship. It was pleasing to Him, and therefore the godly found great delight in it, praising and thanking the Lord for it. Rather, it was through human perversion that this evangelical manner of worship -- which the old administration was -- was changed into a covenant of works. Thus, the antitype, Christ, was separated from the types, thereby removing the very soul from them. They adhered to the external deeds of the law and sought their righteousness therein. This Sinai was synonymous to "Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children" (Galatians 4:29). This was the nature of the condition of Jerusalem in the days when Paul wrote this. There was no adherence to the covenant of Sinai which had been broken, as the Lord testified in (Jeremiah 31:32). It had been changed into a covenant other than what the Lord had given -- into a covenant of works -- and they sought their righteousness therein. "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God" (Romans 10:3); "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace" (Galatians 5:4). Since they were mired in the external things, they were not serving God, for He had not given these ceremonies for that purpose. Their servitude toward the ceremonies was an evil servitude. God had not imposed this servitude upon them in this covenant. The apostle issues a warning against this, saying: "Be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Galatians 5:1); "How turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?" Galatians 4:29 All who had brought themselves therefore in a bondage of this nature were in a condition just like unto Ishmael, who was a son of a bondwoman, and by virtue of that relationship, he himself was in bondage. They did indeed issue forth from Abraham according to the flesh, but they were not the children of promise. They had no spiritual graces and no spiritual inheritance. "For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel: neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed" (Romans 9:6-8). Just as Ishmael was a reviler and persecutor of Isaac, likewise the Jews under bondage were revilers and persecutors of those gracious souls who had been born after the Spirit (Galatians 4:29). Just as Ishmael had been expelled, God had likewise rejected them -- their destruction with that of Jerusalem already being imminent. Thus Hagar and her son Ishmael represent all who are in the covenant only in an external sense. This is what is meant by Hagar, Sinai, and Jerusalem. The covenant contrasted with the covenant of Sinai (which, as stated above, in this context is represented by Sarah) is the new covenant. In its essence it already existed in the Old Testament; all the godly were partakers of it, and by it they obtained redemption and the eternal inheritance. Relative to its administration, however, it is a new covenant which had its beginning with the suffering, death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ. As far as essence was concerned, this covenant was one and the same as the old covenant. It is a gracious covenant, pertains to heavenly benefits and a heavenly inheritance, and begets free and heavenly children. "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all" (Galatians 4:27). This covenant, administered in the new manner, would be very fruitful in bringing forth free and spiritual children. "Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband" (Galatians 4:27). This is Sarah and the Jerusalem which is from above. Paul's objective in presenting these matters was to draw the Jews away from their errors, and to prevent believing Jews from succumbing to them. The latter continually wanted to return to the ceremonies -- not to use them again as types, for they believed that the Messiah, Christ, had already come, but to use those things and activities for worship, and thereby to seek their righteousness.

Now we shall proceed with the rebuttal of the objection extracted from this text: The covenant made at Sinai is not the covenant of grace. The entire thrust of this argument is derived from 1) the covenant at Sinai being depicted by Hagar and Ishmael, 2) it being said to be a covenant of bondage, and 3) this covenant being contrasted with the New Testament, depicted by Sarah and Isaac and consisting in heavenly benefits.

Answer (1) Not one word is mentioned here of Canaan being the inheritance in which they who object insist the Old Testament consists. It also does not concur with it being typified by Hagar and Ishmael, who were sent away without an inheritance.

(2) Also here it is not stated that the Old Testament had its beginning at Sinai. Sinai is mentioned since the Old Testament was solemnly inaugurated and adorned with all its luster and glory at that occasion -- a covenant, as has been shown in the previous chapter, which already existed since the time of Adam. It is likewise stated that circumcision was given by Moses, even though it had been given to Abraham long before that.

(3) Paul, who compares the Old Testament with Hagar, does this not as it had been instituted of old, but as it had been perverted into a covenant of works. So it was in Jerusalem at the time when Paul wrote this -- a city which had completely deviated from the proper institution of the covenant. The objection can therefore not be sustained.

(4) Also the word "bondage" does not contribute at all to the discrediting of our proof. Divine servitude, even though it is grievous for the flesh, is a holy work and has the promise of all spiritual benefits and salvation. It is not expressive at all of an external covenant pertaining to temporal promises only. However, God did not impose the grievousness of this bondage. Rather, this bondage was in consequence of their perversion of the gospel (which is what the ceremonies were), making it a covenant of works in order to be justified by it. This yoke was therefore an unbearable burden.

(5) It cannot be true that Hagar depicts an external covenant, for the godly were also comprehended in the covenant of Sinai, and thus they would simultaneously hail from Hagar and Sarah. They would have been ungodly Ishmaels, mockers, persecutors of those who are after the Spirit, no heirs, and subject to being cast out -- and simultaneously be sons, freemen, and heirs. It is thus evident that this objection is without substance, a fact which becomes all the more clear when one adds to this the exposition of the text as mentioned.

Objection #6: "By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament" (Hebrews 7:22); "How much also He is the Mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises" (Hebrews 8:6). The New Testament is a better covenant, having better promises and Jesus as a Surety. Thus, the Old Testament is an external covenant, having temporal promises without having Jesus as a Surety.

Answer (1) One could at best conclude from this objection that the Old Testament was not such a good covenant, and did not have such good promises; but not that the Old Testament was simply an external covenant, having only temporal promises. That which differs in measure does not differ in nature; that which differs as far as circumstances are concerned does not differ in essence. The essence of the covenants is one and the same. As to the covenant of grace itself, the manner of administration differs as far as clarity and scope are concerned. That is the reason why the one is better than the other.

(2) The apostle's objective here is to show the excellency of Christ, and how in His ministry He is superior to the priests, their work, and the types of the Old Testament. Paul speaks of all this -- as they are in and of themselves, divorced from the antitype Christ. In this manner the Jews of that time viewed the entire ministry of shadows; they embraced it as a covenant of works and sought to be justified thereby. Such were the persons the apostle opposed, showing them that all such service, when divorced from Christ, was neither efficacious nor beneficial. Instead, it was ineffective, useless, and flawed. Over against this the apostle placed the Lord Jesus, who is the antitype of those shadows and the Mediator of the covenant of grace. The objectors place the external administration as such in opposition to the covenant of grace and Christ as its Surety -- just as if one were to divorce the water of baptism and the bread and wine of the Lord's Supper from their spiritual meaning, considering these elements just as they are, while contrasting them with the Lord Jesus and His fullness. The covenant of grace is indeed a better covenant than all those external administrations -- better than all those animal sacrifices. Of that better covenant Jesus is Surety and Mediator. That covenant has better promises than its external administration as such and when viewed as divorced from the antitype. To make such a separation is fruitless, for the covenant was not instituted apart from the antitype.

Objection #7: "For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more: (for they could not endure that which was commanded) ... but ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. ... And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain" Hebrews 12:18-20; Hebrews 12:22; Hebrews 12:27. In this passage we observe a very significant distinction between the two covenants -- one is so dreadful, whereas the other is so lovely. The people prayed that the one be concealed, whereas the other is so desirable. The one is so unbearable, whereas the other is so light, gentle, and sweet. The one is finite, whereas the other is of eternal duration. All these distinctions indicate very clearly that one, the Old Testament, is but an external covenant.

Answer (1) This objection contradicts itself. In verses 18-20 mention is made only of the giving of the ten commandments. The ceremonial laws were not given in that fashion, and furthermore, the opposing parties deemed the law of the ten commandments to be a formula of the covenant of grace. This would then mean that the covenant of grace would have been announced in such a dreadful fashion. How can the disputants then conclude from this frightful event that the covenant established there cannot be the covenant of grace?

(2) There is not even a reference to a covenant here. No name is mentioned, nor is the matter referred to. Thus, one cannot construct an external covenant from this passage.

(3) All that is stated in the text neither refers to the matter nor to the contents of the ten commandments -- which they were also unable to either fulfill or practice. Rather, it refers to the manner in which it was given, which they could not bear. Their prayer was that God would no longer speak to them in that manner, but that God would speak to them instead through Moses.

(4) The fact that the things of the Old Testament are said to be shaken (vs. 27) is not indicative of an external covenant. Rather, the specific manner in which the covenant of grace was administered had to cease, since the substance of that of which the types were a shadow had come. The administration of the New Testament will also cease, but does this therefore mean that it is not the covenant of grace? The change of administration is not indicative of a change of covenant.

Objection #8: That covenant into which an entire nation, head for head, the godly and the ungodly, must enter (and also did enter); the sacraments of which every single individual had to partake of; and which was capable of being broken and annulled, is not the covenant of grace, but is an external covenant. However, the covenant of Sinai was such a covenant. Therefore:

Answer (1) All who are called in both Old and New Testaments are obligated to obey the voice of the gospel and to enter into the covenant.

(2) There is a difference between the act of entering into the covenant, and the covenant itself. The act of entering can be of a deceitful and external nature, but it is therefore not true that the covenant is an external covenant. Those who did not enter in the right manner sinned most dreadfully, for they were all obligated to enter with an upright heart.

(3) Every believer is obliged to use the sacraments and to have their children sealed by the sacrament of incorporation. An ungodly person is also obliged to believe and to use the sacraments while believing. However, an ungodly person who was and continued to be ungodly was no more permitted to eat the Passover and bring sacrifices than they are presently permitted to be baptized and partake of the Lord's Supper.

(4) A temporal believer can fall away; however, he does not fall out of the covenant of grace, for he was never in it. The actual breaking of the covenant occurred when he entered. There was an external entering into, and thus an external breaking of the covenant, as shown above. When all these things are considered together, it is evident that the first proposition is false -- and thus the entire syllogism is null and void.

Objection #9: The covenant of Sinai was external in every respect. The blood, the commandments, the obedience, the promises, the atonement, the mediator (such as Moses), the sacraments, the sanctuary, and the manner of worship -- all were of an external sort, and therefore it was also an external covenant.

Answer (1) If all these matters existed independently, and neither pointed to nor were united with the antitype; and if God were to have made a covenant with man thereby, we would allow the objection. However, neither the one nor the other is true.

(2) By way of such argumentation, it could also be concluded that the New Testament is an external covenant. There is external water, external bread and wine, external preaching, external confession, external physical activity along with words to glorify God thereby, and external and temporal promises. The covenant is therefore external. This proves the futility of the objection.

(3) All the external matters and forms of worship pertained to the antitype, Christ. Apart from Him they neither had meaning nor were instituted as such. Rather, they were united with the antitype. The manner of worship was therefore spiritual, and both the atonement and the sealing of it were in truth. The promises were not only temporal in nature, but also pertained to all the spiritual benefits of the covenant of grace. As shown earlier, Moses was not the mediator of the covenant, but only the one who transmitted the covenant. God was not satisfied with external worship; He demanded the heart instead. Thus, this objection refutes itself.

113. Chapter 3: The Ceremonial Laws Given at Sinai and the State of the Church from Sinai Unt...

----- CHAPTER THREE ----- The Ceremonial Laws Given at Sinai and the State of the Church from Sinai Until Christ

After Israel's solemn entering into covenant with God, He gave laws to the partakers of His covenant -- laws to which each would have to be subject. These laws are generally distinguished as follows: 1) the moral law, directing everyone unto a holy life; 2) the ceremonial law, governing man in his worship through faith in the future Messiah; and 3) the civil law, governing society in the form of a republic -- its special focus being the maintenance of religion.

We have dealt comprehensively with the giving and contents of the Moral Law in volume 3, chapters 45-55. There we dealt with, among others, the following questions:

(1) Is the Moral Law a covenant of works?

(2) Is the Law of the Ten Commandments a formula of the covenant of grace?

(3) Is the law, the covenant at Horeb, a mixed covenant -- partially derived from the covenant of works and partially from the covenant of grace?

(4) Was the covenant made at Horeb external, typical, and national -- and thus distinct from the covenant of grace? For our response to these questions see volume 1, chapter 16, p. 427, and volume 3, chapter 45, p. 35. We shall therefore not discuss this law any further here. The ceremonial laws governed religion in harmony with the circumstances of that time frame, in order that by way of shadows the future Messiah and His works could be made known, and thus lead Israel to exercise faith in Him unto their salvation. These laws can be arranged under three headings: 1) the location where the ceremonial acts of worship were publicly performed, which first was the tabernacle and afterwards the temple; 2) the persons who performed these ceremonies -- the priests; and 3) the ceremonies themselves and the manner in which they were performed. The Location of Israel's Ceremonial Worship: The Tabernacle and the Temple The location of the ceremonial worship was first the tabernacle, and afterwards the temple. After Moses had been commanded and instructed to make the tabernacle (but prior to its completion), Moses erected a tent outside the camp where the people would congregate for religious worship until the tabernacle was constructed (Exodus 33:7). David likewise made a tent for the ark until his son Solomon would build the temple, bringing the ark to this tent from the house of Obededom (cf. 2 Samuel 6:17; 1 Chronicles 16:1). Concerning the tabernacle we must note: 1) the pattern after which it was constructed; 2) the materials from which it was made; and 3) its structural form, and the tools to be used. The pattern of the tabernacle was neither an invention of Moses nor of any other wise builder. Rather, it was God Himself who stipulated everything from the greatest to the smallest detail. Thereby He depicted the Messiah in the clearest possible fashion. Thus, Christ is not patterned after the ceremonies, but the ceremonies are patterned after Christ. It was God's will that nothing of man would either be taken from or added to it, as the ceremonies belong to the realm of religion -- a realm in which only God has a right to legislate, and where there is not the least room for any institutions of man. God revealed everything to Moses, piece by piece, emphatically commanding him to construct everything according to the exact specifications. "And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was showed thee in the mount" (Exodus 25:40). Likewise, God gave commandments pertaining to all the details concerning the construction of the temple, giving David a pattern of all these things by the Spirit. David, in turn, gave that pattern to his son Solomon, reassuring him that "all this ... the Lord made me understand in writing by His hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern" (1 Chronicles 28:11-19).

Concerning the construction of the tabernacle, the materials used were of the most precious sort. They were the following: shittim wood (for it was not a house of stone, but rather of wood, so that it could be transported that much more efficiently), gold, silver, precious stones, copper, fine linen, fine twined threads, the most excellent colors (such as heavenly blue, purple, and scarlet), ram skins dyed red, badger-skins, goat's hair, various items to decorate the sanctuary within, and various items to decorate the sanctuary without. All these materials were prepared in a most magnificent manner by the cunning workmen, Bezaleel and Aholiab, whom God had endowed with extraordinary wisdom for that purpose. Everyone donated these materials voluntarily in such an abundant measure that a proclamation had to be made that no one should bring any more. These voluntary gifts represented a value of multiple millions of pieces of gold. Add to these the half shekel contributed by every numbered male in Israel after the shekel of the sanctuary, concerning which no one was permitted to give either more or less. As the total of all the numbered men was 603,550, all of these together constituted a sum greater than could be imagined if God had not stated what it was. Where did this more-than-royal treasure have its origin, considering that Israel was in an uninhabited wilderness? The wood was possibly hewn from an adjacent forest. Furthermore, God had blessed Israel in an extraordinary manner prior to their oppression, and He had given them the most precious things of Egypt at their exodus. You will find these materials listed in Exodus 35:1-35; Exodus 36:1-38, whereas the entire construction of the tabernacle is described in the remainder of the book. From this we may learn that everyone must contribute something to the upbuilding of God's church. The most insignificant thing is as necessary as the best thing. All must be contributed without compulsion and with a willing heart. God gives more gifts to the one than to the other. Nevertheless, the weaving of the women was as pleasing to God as was the skill of Bezaleel. Neither gold nor silver is of any avail when it comes to the redemption of souls. Jesus paid the same price for the one soul as for the other.

Concerning the structural form of the tabernacle, we shall present every part with the furniture and tools pertaining thereto, and add a few applications. We wish to say first, however, that we can speak with certainty about only those matters explained for us in the New Testament. In all other instances we shall proceed according to our judgment. We do not wish to debate about this, for the foundation of this is certain: The tabernacle and all it contains had been instituted by God for the ceremonial ministry.

Here we must note the courtyard and the tabernacle itself. The courtyard, measuring one hundred cubits long and fifty cubits wide, was a spacious area surrounding the tabernacle, and was encompassed with curtains made of netting, so that the people (who were not permitted to enter), while standing round about the courtyard could see what the priests did within. In this way one could also behold the gospel, Christ, and the mysteries of salvation -- albeit from afar. These curtains, five cubits high, were suspended from fifty-six pillars, overlaid with silver. Thus, there was a separation between the courtyard and all that was external to it. The church is likewise separated from the world and surrounded by a wall of separation and preservation. The tabernacle had but one courtyard, whereas the temple had two -- one for the priests and one for the people. Herod had constructed a third area surrounding the others, called the court of the Gentiles.

Within this courtyard was the tabernacle. Its location was most likely not in the center. The brazen altar and the laver were located at the eastern end between the gate and the tabernacle. Since the sacrifices were performed here, more space was necessary. If we determine the distance from the gate to the tabernacle as fifty cubits and the tabernacle itself being thirty cubits, a distance of twenty cubits remained at the western end (all of which adds up to one hundred cubits). This distance was one cubit more than the space on both sides of the tabernacle, where a space of nineteen cubits remained. There were nineteen cubits on the one side; the tabernacle itself was twelve cubits wide, and there were nineteen cubits remaining on the other side -- adding up to fifty cubits. Inside the courtyard, between the entrance and the tabernacle, stood the brazen altar and the laver. The brazen altar, made of shittim wood, was covered within and without with brass. It had a brazen grating in the middle whereby a draft could make the fire burn that much better, while allowing the ashes to fall through. The altar was square, each side being five cubits wide, and three cubits high. From each corner protruded a horn to which the sacrificial animals were bound (Psalms 118:27). All the tools belonging to the altar were also made of brass, and consequently were thus suitable for their use: to withstand the fire. Neither gold nor silver were suitable in that respect. It stood in the open air between the entrance of the courtyard and the entrance of the tabernacle. It is here that the sacrificial animals were burned and the blood was sprinkled. The Lord Jesus is called an altar (Hebrews 13:10). In an external sense He had no glory, yet He was perfect, capable of reconciling the elect with God through His sacrifice, offered publicly before everyone's eyes, and the refuge of all who take hold of His strength. One cannot enter heaven except he have dealings with Him -- and thus enter through Him who is able to save to the uttermost all who go unto God through Him. The laver also stood in the courtyard between its entrance and the tabernacle's. It was made of brass. It should be noted that it was made of the brazen mirrors of the godly women, who, instead of using glass as we do, had mirrors of polished brass which also reflected an image. The purpose of the mirror is to show the blemishes on a person's countenance, as well as to see if his clothing is properly arranged. That which served the purpose of purification was given for that very purpose. The laver was always filled with water so that the priests could wash themselves and purify the sacrificial animals. Thus, one cannot enter heaven except through the blood of Jesus unto justification and by being sanctified by the Holy Spirit. Christ is the fountain that has been opened against sin and uncleanness. The tabernacle itself had two chambers or compartments covered by one roof. The external layer of the roof consisted of badger skins in order to preserve the inner layers. Beneath this was another layer of ram skins dyed red and beneath this was a layer of goat's hair which constituted the tent itself. The walls, constructed of boards made of the very best shittim wood, rested on silver footings. The boards themselves were overlaid with pure gold and designed in a most artful manner. The tabernacle -- thirty cubits long, twelve cubits wide, and ten cubits high -- was situated in an east-west direction. Its entrance at the eastern end faced the gate of the courtyard, from which one, having passed the brazen altar and the laver, would enter the first compartment, called the Holy Place. From here he would continue into the second compartment, called the Holy of Holies. These compartments were separated from each other by an expensive and artistically designed piece of tapestry, called the veil. This tabernacle and all that it contained was a type suitable for that time period. God -- who as far as His essence is concerned does not dwell upon earth, the heavens and the heaven of heavens not being able to contain Him -- is nevertheless said to dwell in an earthly sanctuary. He did so particularly between the cherubim and upon the mercy seat with an extraordinary manifestation of His presence. Yes, He Himself is a sanctuary for His people, just as the church is called the sanctuary of the Lord, in which He dwells with His grace. Believers are the temples of God, and the Holy Ghost dwells in them. However, within Christ, in whose bosom is the name of the Lord, dwells all the fullness of the Godhead. "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (in Greek: hastabernacled)."

He who has given Himself to be a sacrifice and a burnt offering, thereby being a sweetsmelling savor unto God, has entered in by way of the greater and more perfect tabernacle. Not only was the tabernacle in its entirety a type of Christ, but every part and whatever was to be found in it had reference to Him. We shall now proceed to reflect upon this. In the holy place the candlestick, the table of shewbread, and the altar of incense were found. The candlestick stood on the north side. [Note: This contradicts Exodus 40:24, "And he put the candlestick ... on the side of the tabernacle southward."] It was made out of one piece of pure gold, had six tubes (three on each side), the upright shaft being the seventh one. At the top of every pipe there was a lamp which was filled daily with pure olive oil. They were lit in the evening and extinguished in the morning, having snuffers and snuffdishes made of pure gold. The Lord Jesus is the candle, the light, the sun, and the morning star who illuminates His church. He is the pillar and ground of truth. He is the candlestick who always has light within Himself and manifests it, He being lit by the Holy Spirit, with whom He is anointed. The table of shewbread stood on the south side. [Note: The table stood not on the south side, as à Brakel states, but on the north side Exodus 40:22.] It was made of shittim wood, was overlaid with pure gold, had a golden crown roundabout, and had a border of a handbreadth round about the table which in turn was surrounded by another golden crown. The table was two cubits long, one cubit wide, and one-and-one-half cubits high. It was covered with vessels, dishes, spoons, and covers -- all made of pure gold. Loaves of bread, placed in two rows, were always on this table and were replaced every Sabbath with fresh loaves. The Lord Jesus is the Bread of Life, who by way of the precious gospel is always displayed and offered. Whoever wills may come and eat of His bread by faith and be satisfied. The altar of incense was positioned centrally, a bit further into the holy place, and opposite to the ark of the covenant which stood behind the veil. It was made of shittim wood, overlaid with pure gold, and had a golden crown roundabout. It was square (each side being one cubit), and was two cubits high. Each morning after the lamps had been extinguished, cleaned, and refilled with oil, the incense was lit on this altar. This also occurred in the evening when the lamps were lit. When Christ, by the eternal Spirit, offered Himself as a sin offering upon the cross, He was seen by everyone.

While upon earth, however, He more often offered prayers for His own in secret -- just as He does presently in heaven, where He prays for His own without being seen. Our prayers and thanksgivings, offered before God in Christ, are as incense laid and ignited upon the golden altar which is before the throne, and are thereby pleasing to God. He who desires to go to heaven must go to the congregation of the Lord. There he will find Christ, who dwells there as within His temple. There he will receive light, be strengthened, and enjoy sweet comforts unto his refreshment. The Holy of Holies, into which the High Priest entered once a year, signified Christ's entrance into heaven. Here we need to consider the veil and what was to be found in the Holy of Holies. The veil was an artful and exquisite piece of tapestry made with colors of extraordinary beauty: heavenly blue, purple, scarlet and fine twined linen, embroidered in a most skillful manner with cherubs. This veil was suspended from four pillars which rested on silver footings and were made of shittim wood overlaid with gold. It was attached at the top with golden hooks and extended from the one wall to the other. It was ten cubits high and twelve cubits wide, separating the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies. This veil either had an opening through which the high priest entered or it had to be lifted on one side. In a special sense, the veil had reference to the human nature of Christ. It rent from the top to the bottom when the Lord Jesus died -- His death whereby He merited eternal glory and an entrance into heaven for His people. We may thus have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh" (Hebrews 10:19-20). This veil signified at the same time that Christ -- the Way, the Truth, and the Life -- had not yet been made fully manifest; that is, He had not yet come in the flesh. Just as a shadow ceases when the body itself is present, Christ annulled all the ceremonies with His coming -- all those representations which were to the benefit of the church prior to His coming. Within the Holy of Holies was the Ark of the Covenant. This was a chest made of shittim wood, completely overlaid with gold and having a crown round about made of pure gold. It was two-and-one-half cubits long, a half cubit wide and one-and-one-half cubits high. It had a covering made of pure gold, called the mercy seat. [Note: The Dutch word is "verzoendeksel," that is, "the covering of atonement."] At either end of the mercy seat was a cherub made of pure gold, whose elevated wings were bent toward each other and whose countenances gazed toward the mercy seat. It was there that God revealed His gracious presence; therefore He is said to dwell between the cherubims. Within the ark were the tables upon which God had written the ten commandments, as well as the golden pot containing an omer of manna and Aaron's rod that had blossomed. In 1 Kings 8:9 mention is made only of the two tables of the law, whereas in Hebrews 9:4 the golden pot and Aaron's rod are also mentioned. The reason for this is that in Hebrews Paul speaks of the tabernacle; however, the reference in 1 Kings 8:9 is to the temple. Paul also posits that the golden censer was in the Holy of Holies -- either kept there and removed on the Day of Atonement, or restricted for use only in the Holy of Holies. The Lord Jesus is hylasterion; that is, He Himself is the atonement by His blood. He delivers His people from the curse of the law, accomplishes the law for them, and clothes them with holiness. The Father is pleased in Him as Surety; therefore He is said to dwell upon the mercy seat, between the cherubims. The angels are desirous to observe Christ in the execution of His suretyship. Therein they behold God's perfections and glorify Him in response thereto, teaching us also to look unto Jesus continually.

The Persons who Performed the Ceremonies: The Priests and Levites

Having considered the location where the ceremonial worship occurred, we shall now proceed to consider the ceremonial persons, the priests, and the service they performed. As far as we know there was no law prior to Moses regulating who would sacrifice and administer the holy things. The fathers of the families generally did this. Nevertheless, everyone was free to do so; it was by no means the exclusive privilege of the firstborn. God claimed the firstborn for Himself after He had slain the firstborn of the Egyptians and had spared the children of Israel. This was, however, not for the purpose of ministering in holy things, for God had also claimed the firstborn of the beasts for Himself. These, men as well as beasts, God claimed for Himself, and were therefore not permitted to be counted among the congregation. After the Lord chose the tribe of Levi, however, the firstborn of men and beasts had to be redeemed with money and be purchased from the Lord.

God did not reject the firstborn because of the sin with the golden calf, as evidenced by the fact that Aaron and his sons were already chosen to the priesthood prior to this incident. Also, thereafter, the firstborn remained the Lord's as a perpetual institution, for else they could not have been redeemed. Furthermore, it is stated nowhere that the firstborn had made themselves guilty of this sin. It is a fact that the firstborn, who were then still small and young, could not have done so -- and thus could also not have been rejected for this. Moreover, it is also not recorded anywhere that God rejected the firstborn because of the sin of the golden calf. Did God then also reject the firstborn of the cattle because of this sin? Were they no longer permitted to be placed on the altar? Nevertheless, the firstborn of the beasts of the Levites took the place of all firstborn animals (Numbers 3:41). When it is written in Numbers 3:12, "And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the firstborn," then the reference is to proprietorship rather than ministry in the sanctuary. The tribe of Levi was not chosen in its entirety to sacrifice and enter the sanctuary; this was true only for Aaron and his sons. God had given the beasts of the Levites in the stead of all the firstborn among the beasts of the children of Israel. Nevertheless they remained the Lord's. The unclean among them had to be redeemed, but not the clean animals; they had to be brought to the sanctuary. There they were killed and part of the animal was sacrificed upon the altar, whereas the other part had to be eaten before the countenance of the Lord (cf. Numbers 18:17; Deuteronomy 12:6-17; Deuteronomy 14:23). Moreover, the role of the firstborn in the inheritance in Canaan did not agree with ministering in the sanctuary. It would have hindered them in their task. It was therefore not an angry rejection of the firstborn, but rather a promotion. The tribe of Levi, having been chosen for the holy ministry, was divided into common Levites and priests. The common Levites did not enter into the sanctuary, but assisted the priests. They had no inheritance in Canaan, for the Lord was their inheritance; they lived from the sanctuary. The priests, by way of a lawful marriage, had to be descendants of Aaron, for they and their sons were called to that office by the Lord. Their calling was confirmed by the blossoming of Aaron's rod and its bearing of almonds. They were therefore very careful in preserving their genealogy. Thus, after the Babylonian captivity, some claimed to belong to the priestly family but were not able to produce their genealogy; they were barred from the priesthood as unclean persons. Not only did the priests have to be descendants of Aaron, but they also had to have a perfect body -- without blemish. If anyone had a visible or secret blemish, he was not permitted to minister in the priest's office, even though he was a descendant of Aaron. He was not permitted to take a harlot, a desecrated woman, or a rejected woman as his wife. Furthermore, the high priest was forbidden to take a widow to wife. He was only permitted to take a virgin.

There was a distinction between the common priests and the one high priest. The common priests, upon the express command of God to David, were divided into twenty-four ranks. These ranks did not pertain to worthiness or superiority, but only to the time and order of ministry. At the head of each rank or class was a chief priest. The high priest was not elected upon the death of the predecessor. Rather, his son -- or in the absence of a son, his nearest relative -- took his place by reason of birth. The priestly order was not inaugurated by way of oath-swearing; nevertheless it was done in a very solemn manner. Aaron and his sons were led to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. There Moses washed them with water from the laver and dressed them with the holy garments. He caused them to place their hands upon the head of the heifer to be slain as a sin offering. Following this, a ram was slain for a burnt offering, after which another ram was brought forward. Aaron and his sons would place their hands upon its head; it was then slain. Moses would apply the blood of this ram to the earlobe, the right thumb, and the right great toe. The blood was also sprinkled upon them and upon their clothing. This was followed by the sacrificing of the ram of consecration. Moses then anointed them with the holy oil which had been skillfully prepared from the most eminent spices: pure myrrh, cinnamon, calamus, and cassia. There was to be no imitation of this holy oil by anyone, nor was anyone permitted to anoint himself with it. Its smell, signifying both ordination and qualification, was not to be upon anyone except those upon whom it had to be according to God's command. Aaron and his sons were not only installed into their offices, but at the same time into the priesthood in its entirety, which also encompassed all their descendants. Therefore, a renewed anointing did not occur each time. Nevertheless, there was a difference between the anointing of Aaron as high priest and the anointing of his sons, the common priests. The difference was this: The anointing oil was poured out upon Aaron's head in such an abundant measure that it descended upon his beard and from there to the hem of his garments -- that is, the upper hem which was near his neck. His sons, however, were sprinkled with the anointing oil in like manner as they were anointed with the blood of the ram -- be it individually or as a group. There was also a difference between the garments of the high priest and the common priests. They wore these garments (which were kept in a dressing room) only while they were serving.

They were made in a very skillful and splendid manner. The common priests had linen garments, whereas the high priest had two sets of garments. One was made of linen and was worn on the great Day of Atonement when entering into the Holy of Holies. However, when he entered the holy place on any day other than the Day of Atonement, he would wear the most eminent, beautiful, and elegant garments wrought with gold. These garments consisted of a robe, a coat with pomegranates and golden bells hanging on the bottom thereof, an ephod with two stones upon the shoulder pieces, a breastplate attached to the ephod which contained twelve stones whereon the names of the twelve tribes of Israel were engraven (which also contained the Urim and Thummim), a curiously wrought girdle, a beautiful mitre, and upon his forehead a golden plate on which was engraved: Holiness to the Lord. The entire priesthood, and particularly the high priest, was a glorious type of the Lord Jesus Christ, as the apostle subsequently shows us in his letter to the Hebrews. Furthermore, each particular matter had its specific meaning. However, we do not presume to be an expositor of each particular. We do indeed have our thoughts concerning this subject, and find meditation thereon a sweet work, but as we cannot speak about it with certainty, we shall remain silent, leaving everyone free in his thoughts concerning this. I wish to neither concur nor contradict, since we would not be able to agree with others in all things. The Ceremonies Themselves

Having spoken of the location where the ceremonies were performed and of the persons who functioned as types, it remains yet to speak of the ceremonies themselves, which preeminently consisted of the sacrifices -- noting the things which were sacrificed and the sacrifice itself.

First, the sacrifices consisted of 1) four-footed, clean animals such as heifers, oxen, cows, sheep, and goats; 2) birds, such as doves and turtledoves; and 3) the fruits of the field, such as green ears, dried flowers, oil, frankincense, salt, and wine.

Secondly, as far as the sacrifices themselves were concerned, there was great variety.

(1) As far as manner and purpose were concerned, there were the offerings by fire which were burned by the fire which came down from heaven and was continually maintained: the burnt offering, meat offering, drink offering, offering of consecration, sin offering, trespass offering, thank offering, peace offering, and the memorial offering.

(2) As far as time was concerned, there were the daily morning and evening sacrifices, and the sacrifices upon the Sabbath, new moon, feast days, and the Day of Atonement. There were also sacrifices offered at the occasion of committed sins or defilement; for the cleansing of an impurity; or if someone were inclined to offer a freewill offering to the Lord.

(3) Regarding persons, there were sacrifices for priests, elders, the entire congregation, the common man, the rich or the poor. Such a person would enter the courtyard with the sacrificial animal and go as far as the brazen altar. There, while confessing his sins, he would lay his hands upon the sacrificial animal, after which the priest would take and sacrifice it in accordance with the nature of the sacrifice. Some were burned completely and some partially. In the latter case, the remains were for the priest and for him on whose behalf it had been sacrificed. They would then eat these remains before the countenance of the Lord.

(4) All these sacrifices were excelled by the sacrifices of the High Priest upon the great Day of Atonement. The high priest had to wash himself with water, put on the holy linen garments rather than his beautiful garments, and then take a heifer both for himself and for his house. He had to take two goats from the congregation, cast the lot upon them, and then sacrifice one as a sin offering and present the other alive to the Lord; afterwards he would send it away into the wilderness. He would then have to kill the heifer and with its blood and his censer enter into the Holy of Holies. Once there, he would create a cloud of incense by placing the incense upon the fire in his censer. He would then take of the blood of the heifer and sprinkle it upon and before the mercy seat, thereby making reconciliation for himself and for his house. The high priest would thereupon exit and take the ram which was for the people, kill it, and carry its blood and the censer into the Holy of Holies. He would then perform the identical procedure as he did with the blood of the heifer, thereby making reconciliation for the sins of the people. Thereafter he would take the blood, both of the heifer as well as of the ram, and apply it to the horns of the altar by sprinkling it with his finger seven times. He would thus accomplish the ministry of the sanctuary, where from the moment he entered until the moment he exited, no person -- not even a priest -- was to be present. Thereafter he would take the living goat and lay his hands upon its head. He then directed someone to send it into the wilderness. Thus, in regard to the day, the high priest would enter the Holy of Holies once in a year; that is, at no other time but on the Day of Atonement. However, on that very day he would enter twice: first for himself and thereafter for the people. In addition to these laws, God had given many other institutions pertaining to the conduct of every individual -- relative to clothing, foods, clean or unclean animals, and also pertaining to pollution and purity. The purpose of all these laws was the preservation of the people's health according to the body, while also instructing them about the impurity of the soul.

We have thus briefly presented the most important elements of the ceremonial worship. All these ceremonies were not given for the purpose of being justified before God and to please Him with the performance of these acts. The apostle makes this plain in his letter to the Hebrews. Instead, they were given to depict the Savior who was to come -- to display Him in a lively manner in His holy nature, suffering, and death, as well as in His efficacy to bring about the reconciliation of believers with God and to merit eternal salvation. Herein is manifested the unsearchable wisdom of God, His awesome holiness, His wondrous goodness, and His faithful care for His adopted people. The Lord gave the priests and prophets, whom he sent time and again, the knowledge and ability to explain the types to the people and thus to lead them to Christ -- as the godly indeed were acquainted with the types and thereby believed in Christ. We have spoken of this and presented Christ in His priestly administration in volume one, chapter 20, "The High-Priestly Office of Christ," and will speak of this further in the next chapter. We shall show that these types were already instituted prior to the sin with the golden calf, and subsequently did not receive another form. The types did not become punishments for this sin, but solely were and remained evangelical blessings. On the other hand, however, one cannot read without being emotionally stirred about the wickedness, unbelief, distrust, and idolatry of that people toward whom the Lord had manifested so much goodness and longsuffering.

It was God's will that this divinely instituted worship would be maintained without change until Christ, the substance of the shadows, would come, at which time it would have served its purpose and be annulled. How little came of this observance will become evident when we briefly sketch the state of the church in the wilderness, in Canaan under the rule of the judges, under the rule of the kings, and thereafter during the captivity in Babylon and the return which followed -- until the days of Christ. Israel's Grievous Conduct in Response to Their Gospel Privileges That people who had seen so many of the wondrous deeds of the Lord in Egypt -- that people who had experienced the wonder of the separation of the waters of the sea, having crossed its bottom dryshod, and witnessed the drowning of Pharaoh and his host -- that people who had seen the hand of God in the changing of the bitter water into sweet water, in having (without sowing or harvesting) fresh supplies rained down daily from heaven, in providing a rock to bring forth water abundantly, in satisfying them for a month with the flesh of quails, covering the camp by reason of their quantity, and in defeating Amalek before their countenance, whereas humanly speaking, Amalek would have slaughtered them as a flock of defenseless sheep -- that people who only recently had so solemnly entered into covenant with their God and subsequently had heard God's voice pronouncing the ten commandments -- that people became repugnant and immediately involved themselves in idolatry. For, after Moses had ascended the mountain and did not return for forty days, the people thought that he would never return. They wanted to serve the Lord in a manner pleasing to themselves. They wanted a physical object by which to serve God, and said to Aaron: "Make us gods." They gave him their golden earrings which he melted and fashioned into a calf. He did this either to mock with them or to imitate the idolatry of Egypt. He also built an altar for the calf, whereupon the people offered burnt and peace offerings, sat down to eat, and arose to dance and to play. When Moses subsequently entered the camp, he, with vehement zeal for the Lord, broke the two tables of stone which the Lord had given him with the law inscribed upon them, because the people had broken the covenant with their God. Moses then ground the calf to powder, sprinkled this powder upon the water, and caused the people to drink it. Upon the command to take vengeance upon the idolaters, those who were zealous for the Lord fell upon the camp and killed about three thousand men. Subsequently, God refused to go up with Israel; however, He permitted Himself to be entreated by Moses. Then Moses again ascended the mountain with two tables of stone he had made at the command of God. He again remained there forty days, and God wrote His law upon these tables. Moses then descended the mountain once more, having the new tables in his hands -- and behold, his countenance, without his knowledge, shone to such an extent that the people were afraid to look at him. Since they could not endure this radiance, he covered his face when he spoke with them. The Old Testament Church During the Forty Years in the Wilderness

Shortly after all that had transpired at Mount Sinai, Moses proceeded with Israel to Canaan. Having arrived in its immediate proximity, Moses sent spies into the land of Canaan. When these spies returned from Canaan and brought up an evil report that the people were too mighty and the cities too strong for Israel to conquer, the people immediately began to murmur and rebel. They wanted to appoint a leader to return to Egypt, and desired to stone Moses. God wanted to kill the people, but once more He was entreated. Nevertheless, God killed the spies (Joshua and Caleb being the exceptions) who had been sent forth and discouraged the people from marching toward Canaan. God then declared that they would now wander for forty years in the wilderness, that they would all die in the wilderness, and that He would give Canaan as a possession to their children. When they heard this, they wanted to invade the land despite the warning of Moses. Though they began courageously, they were thoroughly defeated.

It did not take long before that stiffnecked people relapsed into bitterness and murmuring against God. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram stirred up the people against Moses and Aaron. As a punishment for this offense, they descended alive into the earth with their families and possessions. The people, instead of fearing the Lord, rose up against Moses and Aaron, saying that they had killed those men. Upon this, God sent a plague into the camp which consumed fourteen thousand seven hundred people in a moment. However, the Lord permitted Himself to be entreated once more. He stayed the plague and confirmed Aaron's calling to the priestly office by causing his staff (which had been laid up before the countenance of the Lord along with the staffs of the other tribes) to blossom and bring forth almonds.

However, the people continued to murmur against the Lord and to rise up against Moses. In response, God sent fiery serpents among them, resulting in the death of many people. God permitted Himself to be entreated once more and commanded Moses to construct a brazen serpent, which, due to its smoothness and coppery color, resembled one of those fiery serpents. He was then directed to erect this serpent upon a pole, so that if any who had been bitten by a serpent looked upon the brazen serpent, he would live. A sin such as this engenders a penalty according to its nature. This brazen serpent would stimulate them to think of the first sin, committed upon the suggestion of the serpent. Their depravity proceeded from this sin, and all their evil deeds toward the Lord proceeded from this depravity. Herein was the reason they were punished with serpents. At the same time, the raising of the serpent upon a pole would be suitable to cause them to look forward to the Redeemer to come. Indeed, in retrospect, we can observe (the Lord Jesus having expounded it as such Himself) that as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lifted up -- that is, be hung on the pole of the cross. The serpent itself does not come into consideration. It is neither a type of nor an allusion to Christ. Rather, it is the lifting up of the serpent and the crucifixion of Christ which resemble each other.

After Israel had wandered in the wilderness for a lengthy period of time, they again approached Canaan -- from a different side than the former time. They did so after a period during which they were guilty of much bitterness toward and tempting of the Lord, who with great longsuffering had borne with them for those forty years. He did not cease to give them bread from heaven and water from the rock, while shielding them during the day from the scorching heat of the sun with a cloud, which at night also functioned as an illuminating fire. Thus, their lives were perpetuated by means of miracles. Balak, king of the Moabites, then hired Balaam to curse Israel. Balaam was indeed a prophet, but he lived an ungodly life, having a love for the wages of unrighteousness. Even though he desired the money, Balaam nevertheless did not want to go unless God permitted him to do so. After much pleading for permission, God did permit him to go. During his journey, he was met by an angel, who appeared to be intent on killing him. The donkey upon which Balaam rode saw the angel, and repeatedly turned aside until she could no longer do so. The donkey laid down, and when beaten by Balaam, she rebuked him, speaking in human language. Thereupon Balaam saw the angel, after which he offered to return. He did receive permission to proceed, however, with the stipulation that he would say nothing else but what the Lord commanded him. Thus he who came to curse Israel blessed Israel; and as he sought to get permission to be able to curse, moving from one place to the other, he was compelled to bless time and again. Perceiving that he could not obtain the money, he suggested the evil advice to seduce Israel to commit physical and spiritual fornication, that is, idolatry. For having given this counsel, he was later punished by being put to death with the sword of the children of Israel. His advice bore fruit. Israel committed fornication with the daughters of the Moabites, linked itself with Baalpeor in idolatry, and bowed itself before the idols. God then commanded that the guilty one be punished with death. The princes of the people who took the initiative in this transgression were hung at sunrise, whereas the others were put to death. Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, being informed that a man of Israel was lying with a Moabitish woman, entered into their tent. Driven by a holy zeal, he put both to death. Hereby he pleased God, who had commanded that such be put to death. God then commanded that war be waged against the Moabites in retaliation for their seduction, and gave Og, the king of Bashan, and Sihon, the king who dwelt at Heshbon, into the hands of Israel. The Israelites put everything to death, destroyed all the cities in their land, and took all the land and cattle into their possession. The tribes of Reuben and Gad requested that these lands be given them as an inheritance, stating that they would not inherit anything on the other side of Jordan -- promising, however, to help conquer it. Moses bestowed these two kingdoms as an inheritance upon the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh. This was the initial bestowal of their inheritance.

Thereafter Moses ascended the heights of Mount Pisgah, where God showed him the land of Canaan. He saw it from afar and requested that he might enter; however, God refused him. After having completed his task of leading Israel, and after having made known to them that he would die, he ascended Mount Nebo at the heights of Pisgah. There he died, being one hundred twenty years old and having his full strength. God buried him in a valley, so that no one has ever known where he was buried. When the devil wanted to unearth the body of Moses, he was prevented from doing so by Michael, the archangel. And thus Moses, whose faithfulness Paul magnifies in Hebrews 3:5, completed his great work and life -- however, not as a type of the Lord Jesus. Rather, he resembles Christ as servant and as lord. In retrospect, there are indeed similarities between Moses and Christ which might be applied. However, similarity does not constitute something to be a type. A type must be divinely designated as such, which is lacking in this instance. The Old Testament Church During the Period of the Judges

Following the death of Moses, Israel was governed by Judges. The first was Joshua, who, while Moses was yet alive, had already been appointed by God to be the successor. As long as Joshua was alive, Israel fared well and lived according to the instituted form of worship. Joshua sent two spies who, upon arriving in Jericho, spent the night in the house of Rahab. She shared with them the perplexity of the people, granted them lodging, and secretly permitted them to escape after they had promised to spare her and whoever would be in her house when the children of Israel would conquer Jericho. Upon their return, the spies related everything to Joshua, who upon God's command marched forward with the people. The ark, carried by the priests, went before them, and as soon as the feet of the priests touched the water, the Jordan separated and Israel crossed dryshod as they previously had done at the Red Sea. Joshua then took twelve stones from the Jordan and placed them near the brink of the river as a memorial. This place was called Gilgal (that is, a turn), because the Lord had turned the shame of Egypt from them and elevated them to a position of honor and respect. At Gilgal the entire nation of Israel was circumcised, for circumcision had been neglected in the wilderness. There they also observed the Passover with unleavened bread and ate the corn of the land, at which time the falling of manna ceased. Joshua, having been strengthened upon the appearance of the Lord Jesus to him, marched forward to conquer Canaan. Arriving at Jericho, the city walls collapsed of themselves, after the ark and the men of war had gone about the city for seven days -- one time each day, and seven times upon the seventh day. They conquered the city and destroyed all that was to be found in it, except for Rahab and all who were in her house. Contrary to God's command, Achan took of the accursed thing, for which reason Israel failed in her quest of Ai. Thirty-six men perished, causing the heart of Israel to melt and become as water due to their distrust of the Lord. Joshua, having been strengthened by the Lord, encouraged Israel and punished Achan. Ai was then conquered. The Gibeonites, being fearful, feigned to come from a far land and made peace with Israel. Five Canaanitish kings then conspired to eradicate Gibeon; however, the Lord gave these kings into the hands of Israel and slew them with great hailstones from heaven. In order to eradicate them to an even greater extent, upon Joshua's request the Lord caused the sun and moon to stand still. Thereafter all the kings of Canaan gathered against Israel; however, they were completely routed and Israel conquered all of Canaan. Joshua then divided the land among the tribes of Israel by the casting of the lot. The Reubenites, Gadites, and half of the tribe of Manasseh were sent home, having already received their inheritance, at which time they built an altar on the other side of the Jordan. When the other tribes heard of this, they came up against them, thinking that they had involved themselves in idolatry. This is how zealous they were at that time! Once they understood the true reason for it, they returned home to their inheritance. Soon afterward, Joshua, having earnestly exhorted Israel, died at the age of one hundred ten years.

After the death of Joshua, Israel corrupted itself exceedingly. The people departed from the Lord, became involved in all manner of idolatry and served the gods of the nations whose lands they had conquered -- many of whom they had not destroyed, contrary to God's command. The wrath of the Lord was therefore kindled against Israel, so that the people were not able to resist those who stood up against them -- and then Israel became a spoil to all.

439 Among those who had dominion over them were the following: 1) Cush, the king of Mesopotamia; 2) Eglon, king of the Moabites; 3) Jabin, the king of the Canaanites; 4) the Midianites; and 5) the Philistines. There were also civil wars whereby Israel destroyed itself. Thus,

Israel was often in a more miserable condition in Canaan than they ever had been in Egypt.

However, the Lord did not want to eliminate His people. Therefore He sent them judges time and again to deliver Israel out of the hand of their enemies. Israel persisted, however, in departing from the Lord and in engaging in the most abominable forms of idolatry. Sometimes they gave heed to the judges in some measure; but generally this was not so, even though the Lord delivered them time and again. The judges whom the Lord gave did not succeed each other without intermission. Rather, God raised them up each time when the need was most acute. Then, after Israel had been delivered, their rest would not be of long duration. The longest period during which the land was at peace was eighty years. The judges were the following:

(1) Joshua.

(2) Othniel.

(3) Ehud.

(4) Deborah, who made use of Barak, cursed Meroz because this people did not come to battle, and praised the heroine, Jael, who, with a hammer, drove a large nail through the head of Sisera.

(5) Gideon, who, with three hundred men, defeated the entire army of the Midianites.

(6) Abimelech, who, during a civil war, was killed by a woman who threw a large stone from the city wall, crushing his skull.

(7) Tola.

(8) Jair.

(9) Jephthah, who made an ill advised vow that he, were he to return victoriously, would sacrifice to the Lord as a burnt offering the very first thing coming to him from his house, thinking that this could but be a heifer, sheep, or goat. It proved to be his own daughter -- and thus, had he indeed killed her, would have responded to God's blessing with an abominable act.

(10) Ibzan.

(11) Elon.

(12) Abdon.

(13) Samson, who according to a promise made by an angel, was born to Manoah and his wife. He performed many wondrous deeds to the deliverance of Israel from the hands of the Philistines. In the end, he was betrayed by the harlot Delilah and lost his eyes. Upon taking vengeance for his eyes he caused the idol temple to collapse, thereby killing himself along with a large multitude of Philistines.

(14) Israel having degenerated to practice the worst sort of ungodliness, God raised up Samuel, the prophet. The ark of the Lord, having been preserved -- either because it was hidden by the Israelites, or because the enemies, by divine direction, had too much respect for this sacred object -- was brought into the camp of the children of Israel, whereby the Israelites assured themselves of victory. They were defeated, however, and the ark was captured. God plagued the Philistines for this in such a measure that they returned the ark. From that time forward, Israel's condition improved due to Samuel's government. He appointed his sons to be judges, but they conducted themselves in an unfaithful manner, thereby prompting Israel to demand a king. They indeed received one after having been sharply rebuked by God through Samuel. As far as the external condition of Israel was concerned, matters had degenerated to such an extent that there was no blacksmith to be found in Israel. Anyone who therefore needed something constructed or sharpened had to go to the Philistines. Consequently, the Philistines oppressed Israel to such an extent that they could make neither sword nor spear. With the advent of the kings, however, Israel's outward manifestation improved. The Old Testament Church During the Reign of Saul, David, and Solomon

Israel's first king was Saul. He was indeed a capable statesman, but in regard to religion he was a failure. Saul used religion for his own advantage. Since he laid hands on religion in this way, he was rejected of God. He gathered an army of 330,000 men to deliver Jabesh in Gilead. There was, however, no one who had a sword, except Saul and his son Jonathan. Nevertheless, God gave the enemies into his hands and he prospered everywhere, delivering Israel to a large extent from the hand of the Philistines. However, for having assaulted and killed the priests, God caused him to perish during a battle with the Philistines. This occurred in such a manner that he became his own executioner by thrusting himself through. He reigned for thirteen years. The second king of Israel was David, who hailed from the tribe of Judah. He was a valiant war hero who not only delivered Israel from the hands of her enemies, but also had dominion over many nations, which were thus included in his territory. He thereby brought Israel to the pinnacle of glory and renown. In addition, he was an eminently Godfearing king, a man after God's own heart. The church, being the object of all his delight and care, was brought to a noble and orderly condition. Upon God's command, he organized the priests into twenty-four ranks, who, each at their own time, performed the holy service. He brought the ark to Jerusalem and erected a tent for it until a temple for worship was built. It was his intention to do this himself; therefore he amassed a vast treasury of gold, silver, copper, and whatever else could be of use for such a great and glorious building. It was not God's will, however, that David would do so, because he had shed much blood in all the wars he had fought. Nevertheless, his desire and intention were pleasing to the Lord, who promised him that the Messiah would be born from his seed. God also gave him a pattern after which his son Solomon would build the temple. Having brought both church and state into a flourishing condition, David died after reigning forty years.

Israel's third king was Solomon, who was full of wisdom and was granted riches, honor, and glory. He found the kingdom at peace, possessed it in peace, and left it in peace. He was pleasing to the Lord, and He therefore directed the prophet Nathan to call him Jedidiah. It is he who built the temple, doing so primarily after the pattern of the tabernacle. However, it was much greater and more glorious. Thus, it excelled all the wonders of the world in design, beauty, and glory. Solomon reigned forty years.

During the reigns of David and Solomon, the church of the Old Testament reached her pinnacle of glory. Immediately after Solomon's death, she rapidly lost her luster and purity. The kingdom was divided into two sections. Ten tribes defected from the house of David and retained the name "Israel." The tribes of Judah and Benjamin, being neighbors, united with each other, as they had become virtually intermixed. Thus, even a portion of Jerusalem belonged to the tribe of Benjamin.

These remained with the house of David and were called the Kingdom of Judah. The Old Testament Church During the Period of the Divided Kingdom The first king of Israel was Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin. In order to keep his subjects away from Jerusalem, and thus from observing the religious worship instituted by God in the temple, he designated two cities -- Dan and Bethel -- to be centers of worship. In each locality he placed an idol -- a golden calf. Since the priests had left Israel, having defected to Judah and Jerusalem, he took a number of evil men and bribed them to become priests. In order not to draw the people away from true religion too rapidly, Jeroboam imitated the true form of worship to some extent by appointing a feast on the very day that a feast of the Lord would be celebrated in Jerusalem. Furthermore, he offered sacrifices to the idols at Dan and Bethel. He thus seduced Israel into idolatry. All his royal successors followed in his footsteps; consequently Israel did not have a single good king. Rather, she had only ungodly kings, by which the entire kingdom fell into idolatry -- albeit God preserved His own even under their reign. Jeroboam reigned twenty-two years. The second king was Nadab, who reigned two years. The third was Baasha (23 years); the fourth Elah (1 year); the fifth Zimri (7 days); the sixth Omri (11 years); the seventh Ahab (12 years); the eighth Ahaziah (2 years); the ninth Joram (12 years); the tenth Jehu (28 years); the eleventh Jehoahaz, who as yet called upon the Lord when he was oppressed (16 years); the twelfth Jehoash (16 years); the thirteenth Jeroboam II (41 years); the fourteenth Zachariah (6 months); the fifteenth Shallum (1 month); the sixteenth Menahem (10 years); the seventeenth Pekahiah (2 years); the eighteenth Pekah (20 years); and the nineteenth Hoshea (9 years). It was then that Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, conquered Samaria with the entire kingdom of Israel, and led it captive to his nation. These tribes never returned to their land, but were partly assimilated among the Gentiles. A remnant did gradually return to Jerusalem and dwelt throughout Judah, whereas another part remained dispersed while maintaining the Jewish religion -- as is now true for the entire nation. That which the Jews fabricate concerning the ten tribes are fables. Thus, the entire kingdom of Israel was annihilated. The kingdom of Judah had twenty-three kings, all of whom were direct descendants of David. The fourth king was Rehoboam, who with his subjects, departed from God and did that which was evil in His sight. He reigned seventeen years. The fifth king was Abijah (3 years); the sixth king was the God-fearing Asa (41 years); the seventh king was the God-fearing Jehoshaphat (25 years); the eighth king was Jehoram, who was an ungodly king (8 years, four of which were together with his father); the ninth was the ungodly Ahaziah (1 year); the tenth was Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, even though the kingdom belonged to Joash (6 years); the eleventh king was Joash, who was brought to the throne by his uncle Jehoiada, the high priest, when he was seven years old (40 years). Joash was a good king as long as Jehoiada lived, but thereafter he was an ungodly king. The twelfth king was Amaziah, who at first reigned well, but not with a perfect heart -- which he subsequently revealed in his ungodly deeds (29 years); the thirteenth was Uzziah, who partially reigned well, but when he laid hands on that which was holy, the Lord smote him with leprosy (52 years); the fourteenth king was Jotham, who was godly (16 years); the fifteenth was Ahaz, who was exceedingly ungodly (16 years); the sixteenth was the godly Hezekiah (22 years); the seventeenth was Manasseh, who was first ungodly and thereafter repented (55 years); the eighteenth was Amon, who was ungodly (2 years); the nineteenth was the godly Josiah (31 years); the twentieth was Jehoahaz (3 months); the twenty-first was the ungodly Jehoiakim (11 years); the twenty-second was the ungodly Jehoiachin (3 months); and the twenty-third was the ungodly Zedekiah (11 years).

During Zedekiah's reign, Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed and all of Judah was taken captive to Babylon. Thus, subsequent to the time of David and Solomon, Judah had only five or six kings who made it their business to reform religious worship and the people. However, the ungodly kings were in the majority. The church became very corrupt, and often did not even exhibit the appearance of godliness -- generally being totally immersed in abominable idolatry. Even though the Lord had sent many prophets to them who very earnestly and boldly rebuked, warned, admonished, and instructed them (whereby the godly were stirred up and comforted), the people nevertheless stubbornly persevered in their idolatry. At all times there have been many godly in the church of the Old Testament. So it was during the time of Elijah, who believed that he alone was left, whereas there remained yet seven thousand, that is, many thousands. How great must the number of the godly have been then during the time of David, Solomon, and other pious kings! There is thus reason to esteem the church of the Old Testament in some respects; on the other hand there is reason to be amazed about the longsuffering of God concerning such an ungodly people. The Old Testament Church During the Period of the Babylonian Captivity

After many threats, God sent Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, who destroyed Canaan, Jerusalem, the temple, and everything else. He removed the spoil and the entire population to Babylon into slavery. There they mourned and wept when they thought of Zion. The temple and religion, for which they had previously no desires, had now become precious and desirable to them. Nevertheless, God was good to them and gave prophets who supported and comforted them concerning their future restoration. Frequently the Lord caused them to find grace in the eyes of their captors. They were assigned to a rugged area in order to cultivate it; thereby the majority of the Jews remained together. It was also to the advantage of the teaching and preserving of the true religion. As they lived in subjection to the heads of the families in their appointed land, there were also prominent individuals at the court of the king who promoted their welfare. Among those was Daniel, who, by divine direction, was highly respected at the court of the king. The Jews remained in this captivity for a period of seventy years -- which, generally speaking, constitutes the longest portion of a man's life. Just as God did not want those who left Egypt to arrive in Canaan, but rather their children, God likewise did not want those who had been exiled for their sins to be brought back to Canaan. They died in Babylon instead -- with the exception of some who returned at a very great age together with the children of those who had died. These still had memories of the temple of Solomon. Even though it seemed highly improbable that the Jews would ever be restored to their land again, nevertheless the Lord, who has the hearts of kings in His hands and for whom nothing is too wonderful, did cause them to return after the seventy years foretold by Jeremiah had been completed. He did so by means of Cyrus, who long before had already been identified by name. Yes, not only did the people return, but the holy vessels of the temple were also returned to them. This was in order that they might be used in the service of the Lord in that temple for which they had received permission and commandment to rebuild. The return from Babylon occurred in a similar fashion to the exile. The exile first pertained to a few, and thereafter to all. Likewise, all the people did not return at once -- yes, many never returned, even though they were at liberty to do so. Instead, they remained voluntarily in exile, being more fond of their earthly possessions than of Canaan and pure religion -- even though the majority adhered to the Jewish religion and remained isolated without intermingling with the heathen. As Israel left Egypt with great riches, so did they when they left Babylon. They departed under the direction of Zerubbabel, the prince from the seed of David; Joshua the high priest; Nehemiah, the man of zeal; and others.

Their first task was to build the altar and offer the morning and evening sacrifices thereon. Subsequently, they zealously undertook the task of building the walls of Jerusalem, which, to everyone's amazement, was accomplished in a very short time. The foundation for the temple was also laid, but the building of the temple itself proceeded slowly, as everyone worked primarily on his own house. The Lord rebuked them concerning this by means of the prophet Haggai. The second temple was a much simpler structure than the first, and thus the elderly who had seen the first temple wept when they looked upon the foundation. Furthermore, there were several things absent which were present in the first temple. Nevertheless, the glory of the latter temple would be greater than that of the first, since the substance of all shadows, the Lord Jesus Christ, would be present there. With His radiance He would drive away all darkness. The Old Testament Church During the Inter-testamental Period

Also after the return there was little rest and unity. The princes of the house of David had little authority. The high priests assumed too much power in political matters, so that at last they gained the upper hand and, during the Maccabean period, took over the entire government. The people of Israel were oppressed by the wicked Antiochus, so that there was neither rest nor stability anywhere in Israel. At last Israel became subject to the Roman emperor, who, by means of Herod, provided government and external rest. After the return from Babylon, we do not read that the Jews returned to idolatry. Religious affairs were more diligently managed and maintained in accordance with the divine precepts given by Moses than ever was the case since Israel entered Canaan. However, the church became overrun with hypocrisy, superstition, and a variety of errors. The most prominent proponents of these were the Pharisees (the least serious error), the Sadducees, and the Essenes.

If one thus observes the church in Canaan from its inception to its conclusion, one must be amazed that Canaan is designated as a type of heaven. There is no resemblance between the two; there is nothing but dissimilarity. Nevertheless one can and may make sweet comparisons and consider the journey of the children of Israel to be an allusion to the journey of God's children to heaven -- a journey in which they encounter both tribulations as well as divine deliverances of the soul, experiencing these while in the body. Canaan can be alluded to as representing all that pertains to the flesh -- that is, when in the world all is at its very best, it is yet sorrow and grief; and also that one neither ought to seek nor expect rest here below. Furthermore, a consideration of the state of the church during the Old Testament will cause one to perceive how the glory of the New Testament church excels that of the Old Testament church. One rightfully complains about the wretched condition of the church in our days, when comparing it with the perception of what she ought to be. When comparing her with the church of the Old Testament, however, the very worst of that which is in truth is far better than the best at that time. We have therefore reason to thank and magnify the Lord.

114. Chapter 4: The Nature of the Suretyship of Jesus Christ During the Old Testament

----- CHAPTER FOUR ----- The Nature of the Suretyship of Jesus Christ During the Old Testament

Thus far we have considered the state of the church during the Old Testament in general terms. Presently we shall consider the state of believers in particular, as there are various opinions among the Reformed concerning this. We shall present them in an orderly fashion by dealing with some questions pertaining to 1) the Surety and 2) Old Testament believers. In this chapter we shall speak of the nature of this Suretyship.

Conflicting Views Examined The following questions need to be considered: Did the Lord Jesus take upon Himself and fully remove from Old Testament believers their guilt and punishment? Did He do so by obligating Himself before God, in accordance with His will, to make satisfaction for them? Or did these believers remain subject to their guilt and punishment by consequence of God reserving for Himself the authority, right, and liberty to punish their sins in them until the Surety would have made satisfaction?

These are the main issues as well as the reason for the subsequent differences of opinion. The very honor of the Lord Jesus is at stake. First we shall consider the various types of sureties, then a few matters in which the opposing parties agree, followed by their differences.

First, civil law knows of three sureties. (1) The first is called Fide-jussor, under benefit of ordinis et excussionis; that is, one person becomes surety for another person, the condition being that the debtor retains his debt, being first obliged to pay as much as he is capable of. Should the debtor come up short, the surety will make satisfaction for the remainder until the full sum has been paid.

(2) The second is called Fide-jussor, with renunciation of the benefit of ordinis et excussionis; that is, the surety places himself on the same level as the debtor. This means that the creditor may file a claim and demand payment of whomever he wishes, be it the debtor or the surety; both remain under obligation. Thus, if the claim is initially filed against the surety, and he is not able to render full payment, the debtor has to make restitution for the remaining sum -- or if the claim is initially filed against the debtor and he is not able to render full payment, the surety is required to make restitution for the remaining sum.

(3) The third type of surety is called an Expromissor, who, with the concurrence of the creditor, assumes the debt as being his own in order to personally pay it. The debtor is thus released from all debt, is no longer under obligation, and can never be held accountable again -- even if the surety were to be remiss and would neither be willing nor able to pay.

These three types of sureties only play a role in settling monetary debts between individuals; therefore, these cannot be transferred and applied in all particulars to the suretyship of the Lord Jesus. For relative to that suretyship, God comes to the foreground as Judge, executing justice upon the defendant in both the sentencing and carrying out of this sentence. We are dealing here with a debtor who is worthy of death; therefore, either he or the Surety must die. Payment cannot be made jointly in this case. This Surety is both God and man and is capable of bearing and fully exhausting the punishment. Since the three types of suretyship are really not applicable here, we shall neither dwell upon these words nor shall we get involved in any disputes over those things one may wish to extract from them. If, however, we would be compelled to use one of these terms, then we maintain that Christ neither is, nor can be, a surety Fide-jussor, for this would be to imply imperfection in the surety or his suretyship. Such a surety would neither be of any benefit to a sinner nor could he render any comfort. Rather, we say that Christ is a Surety Expromissor who has taken upon Himself both guilt and punishment as being His own, and has given Himself in the place of the sinner. The Father ordained this to be so. He Himself sent the Surety, and was satisfied and well-pleased with the suretyship of His Son. Whether He would, or actually had made satisfaction, was equally certain with God. The future is with God as if it were in the past.

Secondly, the matters in which there is agreement are the following:

- (1) Old Testament believers were taken into heaven immediately upon their death, there enjoying eternal bliss.
- (2) They were not saved apart from the satisfaction of God's justice.
- (3) They were saved solely on the basis of the suffering and death of the promised Messiah, who at the appointed time would pay for their sins.
- (4) God has decreed from eternity never to punish the sins of the elect in themselves personally, but solely and in no other way than in the Surety Jesus Christ.
- (5) After the fall, God established only one covenant of grace with man. This commenced with the first promise in Paradise, and is and remains immutable until Christ's coming unto judgment. It is by way of this covenant that Old Testament believers were and New Testament believers are saved.
- (6) Thus, God has only one church upon earth, which is and remains the same in essence from Adam until the judgment. In these points there is agreement, and one is mutually opposed to those parties who challenge any of these truths. Both sides consider all those, who in any of these points lean toward such opponents, to be opponents as well.

Thirdly, the difference of opinion consists in this: The common sentiment among the Reformed is that the suretyship of the Lord Jesus in the Old Testament was identical to that of the New Testament. We believe that He took upon Himself and removed all the sins of all the elect (and thus also of all Old Testament believers) in order to pay for them by His suffering and death. Old Testament believers have thus been as free from guilt and punishment as are New Testament believers. Others maintain, however, that in the Old Testament the Surety did not take upon Himself the guilt of His people in an absolute sense. Rather, He would only have been an assisting, helping Surety who obligated Himself only upon the condition that it would please God to punish their sins in Him and not in them. They would thus remain subject to guilt and punishment while God retained the authority, right, and liberty to punish their sins in themselves until such a time when the Surety would render payment in full. In the event the Surety would fail to do so, and would either be unable or unwilling to render payment, they would then eternally be punished themselves. If one wishes to define the difference in terms of the various suretyships, then the commonly understood difference is this: Christ has been Expromissor in both the Old and New Testaments, whereas others maintain that in the Old Testament Christ was only a Fide-jussor rather than an Expromissor. If anyone asks how the latter proposition harmonizes with the propositions posited in the above (to which both parties subscribe), I answer that I neither know nor am able to tie them all together. I leave that to those who propose both to be true. The Lord Jesus Was Surety in the Old Testament in the Absolute and Full Sense of the Word. That the Lord Jesus was such an absolute and vicarious Surety in the Old Testament as well as in the New Testament is proven as follows:

Proof #1: There is one single covenant of grace which is and remains the same from Adam until Christ's coming unto judgment -- a covenant in which all partakers have an equal portion and the same rights, and of which Jesus Christ is Surety (Hebrews 7:22). Since there is but one covenant and one Surety, and all the partakers of the covenant have equal rights and partake of this covenant in the same way, Christ must also be the same Surety at all times, and His suretyship must be of the same efficacy both before as well as after His actual satisfaction.

Proof #2: The apostle states in express terms that Christ was the same Surety in the Old Testament as He was in the New Testament: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever" (Hebrews 13:8). Yesterday pertains to the past; that is, the days of the Old Testament when those were alive of whom the apostle states in verse 7 that we should follow their faith and consider the end of their conversation. Today pertains to the present time, that is, the days of the New Testament. The thrust of the apostle's argument is that we should no less put our trust in Christ and have no less expectation of a good outcome than did the believers in the Old Testament, since the Lord Jesus is the same now as He was then. Thus, in respect to His Person He is the eternal and unchangeable God, and in regard to atonement and the meriting of all redemption and salvation, His Suretyship in the New Testament is of the same efficacy as previously in the Old Testament. He is presently as much our altar (vs. 10) as He was then, and He presently sanctifies His people with His own blood as He did then, they being one and the same people (vs. 12). Furthermore, He is not only given to be the atonement for the transgressions of those who were under the first Testament, but also is given as the atonement of New Testament believers. Therefore the apostle desires that we would strengthen our hearts with grace and not cleave to external things. Since the apostle derives the foundation of comfort and confidence from Christ as He was for His people in the Old Testament, in order to strengthen us in the New Testament, it is therefore a certainty that Christ was as efficacious a Surety in the Old Testament as He is in the New Testament. Since Christ is one and the same in both the Old and New Testaments, and since in the New Testament Christ is a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word, then He has also been so in the Old Testament.

Proof #3: The nature of Christ's suretyship in the Old Testament accords with His assumption of that suretyship in the covenant of redemption or the eternal Counsel of Peace, and as He has been in the execution of that suretyship. Since in this counsel and in the execution of His suretyship He has been a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word, He has necessarily also been a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word in the Old Testament.

(1) That He has given Himself as a vicarious Surety in the eternal Counsel of Peace is self-evident in light of God's wisdom, truth, and other attributes. God's objective was the salvation of the elect in the absolute sense of the word. He chose them in Christ to the praise of His glorious grace (Ephesians 1:5); God gave them to Christ in order that He would save them (John 17:6); and Christ has written them in His book (Revelation 21:27). There is not the least contingency. How could God oblige the elect to pay for their sins when He had decreed from eternity not to punish sin in the elect, but only in the Surety? To what purpose would God, in the covenant of redemption, keep the elect subject to eternal condemnation? Did God not trust His Son? Was He not sufficiently powerful? Did the Son of God have need of guarantees, so that in the event that He would fall short, men would then assist Him and pay the remainder? Or did the Son commit Himself upon the condition of rendering payment if the Father were pleased to lay hold of Him rather than the elect -- and not know this until He would enter the world in the fullness of time -- so that it could have happened that He would not have had to suffer and render payment? Or else would God deal with His elect in this time state in a manner differing from His original intent, and thus think and act differently? As you see, all these absurdities show that the true, omniscient, and all-wise God could only deal with the Son in a way whereby He ordained Him to be a vicarious Surety for all the elect in the absolute sense of the word -- and thus without treating the one elect person differently from the other. The Son could do no differently than to give Himself to be a vicarious Surety to the fullest degree for all the elect on equal terms.

(2) Just as the Surety has been ordained in God's eternal purpose to be a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word, Christ has also executed His suretyship as such a Surety. He has rendered payment in full for the one as well as for the other. Without any reservation or condition, He has taken the place of all the elect, doing so upon equal terms. "But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him ... the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all. He was oppressed, and He was afflicted" (Isaiah 53:57). The prophecies were to the benefit of the people who were living during that time period, and to whom they were proclaimed. Thus, the believers of that time understood the Surety to have taken their sins upon Himself, and that He would make satisfaction for them at the appointed time. Therefore, He executed His suretyship in agreement with His eternal appointment as Surety. It is in this way alone that He could be presented as the object of faith, for the object of faith must necessarily be true. It is therefore incontrovertible that Christ has been a vicarious Surety in the Old Testament in the absolute sense of the word.

Proof #4: To believers in the Old Testament, Christ was held forth in no other way than as a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word -- as a Surety who took their place, and who took their sins from them upon Himself in order to make satisfaction for them. This is evident for the following reasons:

(1) The sacrifices were types of Jesus in His making satisfaction by way of suffering and dying. When a sinner came to the temple with a sacrificial animal, surrendering it to the priest for sacrifice, the sinner would lay his hands upon the sacrificial animal, signifying thereby that he laid his sins upon the future Messiah who was typified by that sacrificial animal. That animal would then be put to death in the place of the sinner, and consequently he would go home justified. By way of the sacrifices there was an absolute transfer of sins to the Messiah. Here faith was exercised in the Messiah -- it being a certainty that He would render payment. Here justification by faith occurred -- faith which must have truth as its object. Thus, in the Old Testament, Christ was a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word.

(2) Furthermore, Old Testament believers either did or did not know that they were still subject to guilt and the punishment of eternal condemnation. They also either did or did not know that God would not punish their sins in themselves, but rather that He willed and would punish them in the Surety. Had they understood that they were still subject to guilt and punishment, while not knowing that God willed and would punish their sins, not in them, but in the Surety, they would not have been able to believe in the future Messiah, since there was not a sure promise which faith necessarily requires. They would still have been and remained subject to guilt. Thus, having had no faith, they would not have been saved. If they indeed did have faith, however, which they certainly did, there had to be an absolute promise; consequently, there had to be a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word. If, in fact, they did not know that they were and remained subject to guilt and punishment, the implication would be that God had hidden their obligation to bear the punishment themselves in His secret counsel, and not made this known to them. Had they actually known, however, that God willed and would punish their sins in the Surety, they could only have considered Christ as being a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word, and thus believing in Him, they could be at peace and consider themselves as being free from guilt and punishment. Otherwise the concern would remain that the Surety would come short, or that His payment would be insufficient and that they, being the primary debtors, would therefore have to render either a full or partial payment. What a dreadful thing it is, however, to think of God and of the almighty and faithful Jesus in such terms! He would not even have been a perfect Surety. If, however, He became Surety with the Father's approbation, then, upon the debt having been transferred, the justified debtor could never be held accountable for his debt again.

(3) If one maintains that these believers indeed knew that Christ alone, and not they themselves, would render payment, but that God, nevertheless, made known to them that He reserved the right and the authority to punish sin in them rather than in the Surety -- then I answer that it is contradictory to know on the one hand that Christ would most certainly render payment, and to know on the other hand that God is at liberty not to require payment from the Surety, but rather to punish them. God cannot command faith in contradictory matters. It thus remains a certain fact that Christ has been a vicarious Surety in the Old Testament.

Proof #5: Old Testament believers were saved and translated into heaven immediately upon their death. This is not a point of contention. However, either they were in heaven while yet subject to guilt and punishment until Christ died; or they were fully justified from all guilt and punishment, and declared to be heirs of the eternal salvation they already possessed. If they were still subject to guilt in heaven, they would also have to fear that the moment would arrive when subjection to punishment would yet be required, and that it would be possible for them to be expelled from heaven and be cast into hell. These are contradictory matters indeed: to be saved in heaven while yet being subject to guilt and punishment, fearing the possibility of expulsion. If they were fully justified, this occurred either without total satisfaction of God's justice -- which is impossible -- or by virtue of the perfect suretyship of the Messiah who, though He had not yet rendered payment, had in the absolute sense of the word removed their sins from them and taken them upon Himself in order to render payment for them at the appointed time. If the latter is true by virtue of the satisfaction of Christ, then Christ, in the absolute sense of the word, was in the Old Testament a vicarious Surety to believers after their death. Thus, relative to this suretyship, future payment and actual payment are of equal efficacy. If Christ is the vicarious Surety of believers subsequent to their death, He is also such prior to their death. They are the very same elect; God does not change toward them, and Christ did not change relative to His suretyship each time a believer died. Thus, in the Old Testament the Lord Jesus was a vicarious Surety in the absolute sense of the word.

Proof #6: Old Testament believers had the benefits of reconciliation with God, the adoption of children, true saving faith, full justification, peace with God, etc. We shall prove this to be true in what follows. They could not be partakers of those benefits except by way of a perfect, vicarious Surety. The Lord Jesus was therefore such a Surety in the Old Testament.

Objections Answered

Objection #1: If the Surety were to be remiss, would believers in the Old Testament have been saved? The justice of God would not permit this, and therefore the fathers of the Old Testament had to remain subject to guilt until the Surety had in actuality made satisfaction.

Answer (1) Then those believers who had the promise prior to Sinai would be in one and the same state as those who lived subsequent to Sinai. However, the opposing party exalts the state of the former far above the state of the latter.

(2) Would the souls of the just made perfect then be expelled from heaven if the Surety would prove to be remiss?

(3) It is a dreadful thing to believe, let alone to say, "if the Surety would prove to be remiss." God cannot lie, the counsel of the Lord will stand, and the Lord Jesus is both obedient and faithful. Thus, what room is there for such a foolish argument?

Objection #2: If Christ were to have taken the guilt of the elect upon Himself in the absolute sense of the word, He would then have to render payment for His own guilt, and believers would then be redeemed by having their guilt assumed, rather than by satisfaction.

Answer (1) One could maintain the same thing by positing Christ to be only a promising Surety -- one whose suretyship is contingent upon conditions.

(2) Christ has rendered payment for the sins of the elect, whose guilt He took upon Himself in order to make satisfaction for them in their stead.

(3) The same would be true in the New Testament.

Objection #3: "And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins" (1 Corinthians 15:17). This proves that one had to render payment himself if the Surety proved to be remiss. Thus, Christ was not a vicarious Surety in the Old Testament; instead, believers remained subject to guilt until the Surety had rendered payment.

Answer (1) In using the word "you" and "ye," the apostle is speaking of the New Testament period, stating the condition believers would be in had Christ not risen. Would one then conclude thereby that Christ is but a Fide-jussor in the New Testament -- that is, a supporting and assisting Surety who will step in when man cannot render payment? Or are we to conclude that if God were to require restitution from either or both of the parties, that New Testament believers would yet be subject to guilt and punishment?

(2) The apostle declares it to be an impossibility that Christ, being God and man, would not have arisen from the dead. He establishes with certainty that our faith is not in vain and that we are not in our sins.

(3) He proves the resurrection of the dead, which some denied, by the resurrection of Christ, proving that Christ had arisen by stating the absurdities which would follow had Christ not risen. It is therefore not the apostle's objective to teach what the consequences are of Christ not having risen, but rather what absurdities and impossibilities follow from such a position.

(4) The subject under consideration is neither the state of Old Testament believers nor the notion that they, for fear that Christ would be remiss, would have remained subject to guilt and punishment until Christ had rendered payment. Conditio impossibilis nihil ponit in esse: An impossible condition does not establish anything. It was impossible that Christ would not perfectly execute everything required by His suretyship. It is therefore foolishness to imagine certain matters which would follow if there were no satisfaction.

Objection #4: Since payment had not been rendered for guilt, it remained until full payment had been made.

Answer: What sort of conclusion is this? Is Christ therefore not a vicarious Surety? One denies this, insisting that Christ is a vicarious Surety. This means therefore that Christ was a vicarious Surety who at the proper time would make satisfaction. Believers did not remain subject to guilt; the Surety had taken it upon Himself. It had not been paid as yet, but the infallible One would make satisfaction for it.

Objection #5: For Old Testament believers, the handwriting against them had to be rescinded daily (Colossians 2:14). Hereby they obligated themselves to render payment; thus Christ was not a vicarious Surety.

Answer: It is not true that believers obligated themselves daily to render payment for their sins. The word "handwriting" does not imply this. Rather, it signifies that the sacrifices could not remove their sins, but that their sins would most certainly be paid for by the Surety who had taken their guilt upon Himself. Of this the sacrifices assured them. This handwriting was in some way not entirely against them, as the promised Messiah neither had come as yet nor had made satisfaction for everything. This did not weigh them down, however, nor result in less assurance concerning the payment by the Surety.

All errors in this matter arise from comparing God and His doings with man and his doings -- which conflicts with Isaiah 55:8 -- and from comparing the Surety Jesus Christ relative to death and the righteous judgment of God, as Judge, with the functioning of human sureties relative to monetary debts. We have refuted this, and have confirmed that Jesus Christ as Surety, as to method and efficacy, is the same in both the Old and New Testament; that is, in having taken both the guilt and punishment from the elect upon Himself. It thus follows that in regard to the essence of the matter, Old Testament believers have been in the same state of reconciliation, sonship, peace, and friendship with God as have New Testament believers. We shall discuss this subject in the next chapter.

115. Chapter 5: The State of Old Testament Believers

----- CHAPTER FIVE ----- The State of Old Testament Believers

Between Old and New Testament believers there are significant differences in regard to the measure of light, faith, comfort, and various other matters -- a few eminent saints being the exception. However, as far as the essence of the matter is concerned, there are no differences. They have the same Spirit, the same faith, the same justification and forgiveness of sins, the same peace of conscience, and the same sonship. There are some, however, who maintain that the difference does not pertain to the measure of application, but rather to the essence of this application and to their state as such. Several questions need to be addressed concerning this issue.

Old Testament Believers Enjoyed the Full Forgiveness of Sins

Question: Were Old Testament believers, prior to Christ's coming, reconciled with God, fully justified by a true, saving faith, and did they have the full forgiveness of sins; or were they in an unreconciled state, not justified by faith, and without the full forgiveness of sins?

Answer: These matters are interrelated and pertain to the true essence of the state of believers. The confirmation of the one matter will at once confirm the other. We have therefore joined them together and answer the latter part of the proposed question negatively, and the first part affirmatively. There are others, however, who have denied the first and maintained the second. Such propositions appear at first glance to be entirely Socinian, and those who adhere to such propositions will have a considerable task in refuting the Socinian. Nevertheless, we do not accuse them of Socinianism. We declare the wise and stable among them, based upon their explanations and declarations, to be free of Socinianism.

We deal with them as brothers, albeit as weak brothers who in some respects are in error. The radicals who know not what they are saying and affirming, we shall let fend for themselves; they are not esteemed by either party. The one party maintains that in the Old Testament Christ as Surety was not a vicarious Expromissor, but rather a promising, supporting, and assisting Fide-jussor. They maintain that God made known to the Old Testament saints that one day there would come such a Surety, who at the appointed time would make satisfaction for their sins, and that they had to view the sacrifices as types -- and thus had to believe in Him in that manner. However, as long as the Surety had not rendered payment, they, as the primary debtors, would remain subject to guilt. Thus, they were also subject to the curse and wrath, since God reserved the right and authority to pour this wrath out upon them, even though He neither wanted to, nor actually did so.

They maintain that God tolerated them until the Surety had paid; that is, even though He did not forgive their sins, He bypassed them. He closed His eyes to their sins and overlooked them as if He did not see them, for He Himself knew that one day the Surety would render satisfaction. This passing by they express with the word pæsis, insisting that this word is the antonym of the word aphesis. They relate the first word to the Old Testament and the latter to the New Testament. During the time of my youth and academic studies, when these sentiments initially surfaced and began to get a foothold, there were intense arguments about the words aphasis and paresis, but later on those with clearer understanding came to realize that on the basis of these words a distinction cannot be maintained between forgiveness in the Old and New Testaments. Thus, they discontinued the debate about these words, but nevertheless preserved a distinction within the matter itself, and made use of these words only to express their understanding of the issue.

We believe that we have hereby clearly expressed the very nature of the difference. We shall now proceed to prove our viewpoint, and thereafter consider the thrust of the arguments advanced for the contrary views.

Proof #1: It is evident from the suretyship of the Lord Jesus that Old Testament believers have been reconciled with God, have been fully justified by a saving faith, and have had the full forgiveness of sins. If in the Old Testament the Lord Jesus has been a vicarious Surety in the absolute and complete sense of the word, then those believers have been in the state as just described. And whereas Jesus has been such a Surety in the Old Testament, believers were indeed in that state. The first premise is a certainty, and we believe that none will deny or argue the premise. If all sins have been fully and forever removed from believers and have been imputed to the Surety, and if these sins have been taken upon Himself upon the command and with the consent of God as the Judge of heaven and earth, they are then not liable for anything, and all the merits of the Surety are their portion. In Him they are righteous before God, reconciled, and have complete forgiveness. The second premise is equally certain, as has been shown and confirmed in the previous chapter. The conclusion is thus a certainty as well.

Proof #2: We derive this proof from clear texts of Scripture which not only state expressly that Old Testament believers have been reconciled and justified, and have had the forgiveness of sins, but which express these matters in those very terms -- terms which are identical to those whereby reconciliation, justification, and the forgiveness of sins of believers are expressed in the New Testament. There being too many, we shall only present a few.

(1) Kipper "... when they give an offering unto the Lord, to make an atonement for your souls" (Exodus 30:15); "... to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Leviticus 17:11); "The good Lord pardon every one that prepareth his heart to seek God, the Lord God of his fathers" (2 Chronicles 30:18-19); "Iniquities prevail against me: as for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away" (Psalms 65:3). The New Testament uses this same word to express reconciliation on the basis of the actual payment of the Surety. "Seventy weeks are determined ... to make reconciliation for iniquity" (Daniel 9:24).

(2) salach "... pardon our iniquity and our sin" (Exodus 34:9); "And the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them" (Leviticus 4:20); "For Thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive" (Psalms 86:5); "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities" (Psalms 103:3). David speaks of himself, praises God for the benefits bestowed upon him, and rejoices in the enjoyment of them. Forgiveness in the New Testament is, however, expressed with the same word: "I will forgive their iniquity" (Jeremiah 31:34). Everyone concurs that this prophecy pertains to the New Testament era.

(3) nasa "... forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin" (Exodus 34:7); "Pardon, I beseech Thee, the iniquity of this people according unto the greatness of Thy mercy, and as Thou hast forgiven this people, from Egypt even until now" (Numbers 14:19); "Thou wast a God that forgavest them" (Psalms 99:8). This same word is found in Psalms 32:1-2 : "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity." The one party insists adamantly that this is a prophecy relating to the New Testament. Let us assume that this is so. We then conclude on the basis of their own testimony that forgiveness expressed by the word nasa is the forgiveness bestowed upon Old Testament believers. However, such forgiveness as expressed by the word nasa is the forgiveness granted to Old Testament believers. This is evident from the texts quoted above, as well as many others. Thus, Old Testament believers had the same complete forgiveness as did New Testament believers. We do deny, however, that this text only pertains to the days of the New Testament. David speaks of himself and applies this forgiveness to himself to his own comfort. "I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin" (Psalms 32:5). He presents this benefit bestowed upon him as an encouragement for everyone to seek the Lord when He is to be found (vs. 6). The apostle quotes this text in Romans 4:6-8 -- however, not as a prophecy, but as proof for his proposition that man is freely justified, without the works of the law. It is noteworthy that the apostle translates the word nasa with aphienai. Thus, Old Testament believers had aphenai; he shows that such forgiveness already occurred in the Old Testament at the time of Abraham, prior to circumcision. In Romans 4:9 he asks: "Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also?" He answers in Romans 4:10 that Abraham was a partaker of this blessedness, consisting in the forgiveness of sins, when he was still uncircumcised: "How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision." In the New Testament it is stated expressly that in the Old Testament, and antecedent to Christ's incarnation, believers had the satisfaction and forgiveness expressed by the word aphenai: "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission" (Hebrews 9:22). John the Baptist preached "the baptism of repentance unto the forgiveness (aphenai) of sins" (Mark 1:4). The Lord Jesus taught His disciples already prior to His death and resurrection to pray: "Forgive (aphenai) us our debts" (Matthew 6:12). He said to the palsied man: "ἀφεναι, thy sins are forgiven thee" (Matthew 9:2). All these texts prove that Old Testament believers have had the forgiveness of sins -- a forgiveness as New Testament believers have, as expressed by the word aphenai.

Proof #3: We derive this proof from justification by faith, of which Scripture speaks expressly in respect to the Old Testament believers. That they did have true saving faith is evident from Romans 4:3 : "Abraham believed God." Yes, he is even called the father of New Testament believers: "... that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also" (Romans 4:11). David believed: "I believed" (Psalms 116:10); "I have believed Thy commandments" (Psalms 119:66). Daniel believed: "... because he believed in his God" (Daniel 6:23). In Hebrews 11:1-40 Paul gives a long list of Old Testament believers from Abel onward. To believe is to accept, surrender to, lean upon, rely upon, and entrust one's self to Jesus in order to be justified, sanctified, and glorified. By this faith, Old Testament believers have been justified. "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness" (Romans 4:2-3; cf. James 2:23). Justification is a work of God as righteous Judge. If God is to justify anyone and pronounce the sentence of acquittal, there must be a perfect righteousness -- a righteousness no one had of himself in the Old Testament, even as none have it in the New Testament. Therefore, if anyone is to be justified, the righteousness of the Surety must be applied to him -- from God's side this happens on the basis of suretyship by way of imputation, and from man's side by way of the acceptance by faith upon the basis of the divine offer. There is no room here for a turning away, overlooking, or passing by of something as unnoticed. God's judgment is righteous and in truth; one is either guilty or righteous. If God did indeed justify Old Testament believers -- which He most certainly did, as we have shown from the justification of Abraham -- then the full righteousness of the Surety has been applied to them, and they have thus been fully acquitted from their sins and have been declared the heirs of salvation.

Proof #4: This proof we derive from the covenant of grace. Those who are in actuality in the covenant of grace are in actuality reconciled with God and have their sins forgiven. Since, however Old Testament believers have truly been partakers of the covenant of grace, they have in actuality been reconciled with God and have had forgiveness of sin. The first premise is self-evident, for the covenant of grace encompasses the deliverance from all evil, participation in all good, and particularly also the forgiveness of sins; that is, the removal of all guilt and punishment. "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord ... I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more" (Jeremiah 31:33-34); "And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity ... and I will pardon all their iniquities" (Jeremiah 33:8).

Evasive Argument: These texts speak of the days of the New Testament, so that one cannot draw a conclusion about forgiveness in the days of the Old Testament.

Answer: These promises pertain to the benefits of the covenant of grace, and not to the manner of its administration. The New Testament was neither before nor during the days of the Old Testament. Rather, it came thereafter and in its place. If, however, these promises were only in force during the days of the New Testament -- and thus by virtue of the New Testament rather than by virtue of the covenant of grace, which, as all concur, has remained unaltered from Adam and will be so until the Day of Judgment -- then Old Testament believers would not have been privy to these benefits, among which is the forgiveness of sins. The following promise would also not have pertained to Old Testament believers: "I ... will be their God, and they shall be My people" -- a promise found in both Jeremiah 31:33 and Jeremiah 32:38, and placed on the same level as the forgiveness of sins. But was God not the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? Was not this the express promise of the covenant of grace made with Abraham and his seed in Genesis 17:8? However, since God was the God of Old Testament believers by reason of the immutable covenant of grace and not by virtue of the New Testament (which did not exist during the Old Testament), Old Testament believers also had the forgiveness of sins -- not by virtue of a new administration, but by virtue of the covenant of grace itself. The two promises mentioned in this text, "I ... will be their God," and "I will forgive their iniquity" Jeremiah 31:33-34, are benefits of one and the same covenant, called a new covenant due to its new administration. I ask, "Is not the Old Testament the covenant of grace?" If not, then God is not the God of believers. Then believers do not have the forgiveness of sins by reason of the covenant of grace, but by reason of another covenant which did not commence until the days of the Lord Jesus, and did not exist previous thereto. Then Old Testament believers did not have God as their God, since there was no covenant. If the Old Testament is the covenant of grace, then Old Testament believers who truly were in the covenant of grace have been partakers of all the benefits of this covenant -- and thus also of these promises: I shall be their God; and I shall forgive their unrighteousness, and remember their sins no more. The covenant is called new here by reason of its new administration and not relative to its essence.

Proof #5: We derive this proof from the state of Old Testament believers prior to, and after their death. Prior to their death they were God's regenerated children and God was their reconciled Father. They did indeed have assurance of their blessed state, did indeed have peace with God in their conscience concerning their justification, and did indeed rejoice in God. We shall demonstrate this in our response to the questions which follow. After their death they were taken into heaven -- into eternal bliss and glory. Concerning these facts both parties concur. If, therefore, Old Testament believers enjoyed salvation in the fullest sense of the word after their death, then they were completely justified, had the complete forgiveness of sins, and were completely sanctified. The souls of the dead believers are "the spirits of just men made perfect" (Hebrews 12:23). No one can enter heaven except it be upon the foundation of being fully justified before God, the righteous Judge. To be in heaven enjoying perfect communion, perfect joy in God, and perfect felicity, while yet being in an unreconciled state, subject to guilt and punishment, and unjustified, are contradictory matters which cannot coexist. Likewise, not having a perfect holiness and to be reconciled are mutually exclusive matters. Justification and sanctification cannot be separated. Those whom He has justified, He has also glorified (Romans 8:30). Also the reverse is true: Those whom He has glorified were also predestinated, called, and justified. From all this it is certain and sure that Old Testament believers were not in a state wherein they were unreconciled, not justified, and laden with guilt and punishment. Instead, they were fully reconciled with God, were fully justified by God, and had the complete forgiveness of sins. In justification there are no degrees. Either one is fully and completely justified, or he is not justified at all.

We shall now consider and respond to the objections of those who are of a different persuasion.

Ten Objections Refuted

Objection #1: "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God" (Romans 3:25). The Old Testament is here called the time of God's forbearance. Wherever forbearance is exercised, there is neither reconciliation nor forgiveness. Both curse and wrath are and remain in effect. Sins are only overlooked and bypassed. This is the reason why the word pæresis is used, which stands in opposition to aphesis. The latter constitutes forgiveness in the true sense of the word, and only takes place in the New Testament.

Answer #1: We admit that the word "forbearance" signifies a time frame: the time of the Old Testament. This is all the more evident since the apostle, speaking of the same matter, calls this time the time of the Old Testament. "... for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament" (Hebrews 9:15). We admit that the word pæresis is found here, and is translated as "to forgive." We deny, however, that the conclusion drawn from this is valid.

(1) "To forbear" neither signifies to leave unreconciled and unforgiven, nor does it mean to overlook curse and wrath. Rather, "to forbear" is to refrain from punishing sin, and to postpone judgment. One can observe this in Romans 2:4, "Or despisest thou the riches of His goodness and forbearance?" and also in Romans 9:22, "What if God, willing to show His wrath, and to make His power known, endured with much longsuffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction?" God neither overlooks the sins of the unconverted nor does He shut His eyes and pass them by. He only postpones His punishment and by His forbearance gives them space to repent. God also tolerated sin in the Old Testament in this manner. He postponed His judgments upon the unconverted. He did indeed punish Israel, but He did not eliminate this ungodly nation. Rather He bore with them until after Christ's ascension. Then He punished them with total destruction. God did also bear with the sins of believers; that is, He did not punish them immediately. He postponed the punishment, but not to leave their sins unpunished. God's justice would not permit this. If he did, we would have no need for Christ. Rather, He would punish them at the appointed time -- not in themselves, for then they would have been eternally lost. Instead, their sins would be punished in the Surety Jesus Christ at the appointed time, who as Expromissor, as vicarious Surety, had removed the sins of the elect by taking them upon Himself. The forbearance of which the apostle speaks here has reference to the Jewish nation which was in a covenant relationship with God, and was the church of God. She was ungodly and tempted God; however, God did not want to eliminate her. He bore with her until the appointed time of her total destruction. This is what is meant by the time of forbearance or longsuffering of God. Thus, it is incorrect and contrary to the text to maintain that forbearance applies to a forgiveness of sorts, a closing of the eyes, an overlooking, or a bypassing of the sins of God's elect.

(2) The word "forbearance" can neither be connected with "forgiveness of sins," nor with "remission of sins that are past." Rather, it is connected with "to declare His righteousness." God has declared His righteousness during the time of His forbearance in the Old Testament by forgiving sins for the sake of the merits of Christ, received by faith. This is evident from the apostle's objective in this chapter, which is to show that man is not justified by works, but upon the basis of the atonement -- through the merits of Christ, embraced by faith. (cf. Romans 3:20-22; Romans 3:28). He shows that justification without works, through the merits of Christ, and received by faith, occurred in both the Old and New Testaments. As far as justification is concerned, there was no difference. In the Old Testament the Jews were equally a partaker of justification as were the Gentiles in the New Testament. Yes, the apostle establishes justification in the Old Testament as being certain, irrefutable, and acknowledged by all. His primary argument is that justification by faith, without works, occurred both in the New Testament among the Gentiles, as it did in the Old Testament among the Jews. "Is He the God of the Jews only? is He not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also: Seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith" (Romans 3:29-30). The apostle declares that Christ is set forth in both the Old and New Testaments to that end as a propitiation (hilasterion) -- the name of the mercy seat of the ark, which is an extraordinary type of the Lord Christ. Furthermore, he shows that in both Testaments the righteousness of God shone forth in the forgiveness of sins by reason of the atonement set forth and embraced by faith. God's righteousness manifested itself in the giving of the Surety, in punishing sin in the Surety, in the forgiveness of sins, and in the satisfaction made by the Surety. In Romans 3:25 the apostle declares that this occurred in the past -- in the Old Testament, the time of forbearance. In Romans 3:26 he declares that this does occur in the New Testament -- in the present time. This proves that this text does not support the sentiments of some, but rather refutes them forcefully.

Answer #2: The proof derived from the word parestasis, that is, forgiveness, no longer is valid.

(1) This word stands here entirely by itself; it is found nowhere else in the Bible. The word aphasis is found neither in this verse, this chapter, nor in the entire letter to the Romans. Only in Romans 4:7 the verb aphethesan is found. Thus, there is not the least evidence that the word “to forgive,” here only expressed as paresis, is being contrasted by the apostle with forgiveness expressed by aphasis, the former only occurring in the Old Testament and the latter in the New Testament.

(2) Furthermore, paresis does not mean “to pass by,” or “to close the eyes,” or “to overlook.” Rather, it means “to loosen,” or “to release.” If one were to apply the word paresis to the time of the Old Testament, it would not support the above sentiment in the least. It would signify that God in forgiving sin in the Old Testament dispensation, loosed and released people from sin -- just as forgiveness is expressed by a variety of expressions, such as: to remove, to blot out, not to remember, to cast into the depth of the sea, not to impute, to forgive, to atone, etc. All these expressions signify a complete, real, and actual acquittal from guilt and punishment.

(3) The words aphasis and paresis are never contrasted with each other. Rather, they are used indiscriminately in the Bible (the word paresis being found but once and without comparison or contrast), as well as by the Greek translators of the Old Testament and the Greek writers.

(4) In Scripture the forgiveness of sins by way of aphasis is generally attributed to Old Testament believers. This we have proven above.

(5) The apostle Paul, speaking of forgiveness in the Old Testament in the identical circumstances as in the text posited here, expresses forgiveness in Hebrews 9:22 (combined with Hebrews 9:15) with aphasis--just as he does here with paresis.

(6) The text itself shows that the word paresis is expressive of a forgiveness which is both absolute and complete. The apostle speaks of such a forgiveness by which the righteousness of God is manifested. However, the shutting of the eyes to sin, the overlooking of, and the blind passing by of sin does not manifest the righteousness of God in the least -- neither in the punishment of sin in the Surety, nor by the forgiveness of sin due to the satisfaction of the Surety. This righteousness is only manifested in complete forgiveness.

Objection #2: “For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law” (Romans 5:13). Here the apostle establishes two facts: 1) Sin was in the world prior to Christ’s coming, and beginning at Adam, remained upon believers until the actual satisfaction of Christ occurred; 2) the sin of the golden calf and other sins were not imputed as a result of the giving of the ceremonial law; that is, these sins were silently overlooked, payment was not required on account of them, and believers were not blamed for them. However, the sins committed after that time were imputed to believers; that is, they were held accountable for them, and were under and remained under obligation to pay for those sins. Thus, they neither had atonement nor forgiveness, but remained subject to guilt, wrath, and curse.

Answer (1) The apostle is not speaking here of either Old or New Testament believers, nor of those who lived either prior to or after Moses. Rather, he is speaking of all men as they have sinned in Adam and must die due to sin. This he had declared in the previous verse; consequently, this text does not apply at all to the controversy pertaining to the state of believers.

(2) To impute is to charge a person with, to hold him guilty, and to treat him as such. "If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account ... I will repay it" Philemon 1:18-19. Not to impute is the opposite; that is, a person is not charged with sins, and is thus considered free of guilt and sin. "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity" (Psalms 32:1-2). The one party insists that this text is prophetic, declaring what the state of New Testament believers would be. They refute themselves, however, by insisting that Romans 5:13 is applicable to the state of believers prior to Moses. These believers would then have had forgiveness and the non-imputation of sins such as New Testament believers have (since nonimputation in the New Testament means full acquittal and complete forgiveness), even though Christ had not made satisfaction as yet.

(3) The apostle speaks neither of the ceremonial law, or of the sin of the golden calf, nor does he imply a change from better to worse in the believer's state after that time. It is therefore entirely erroneous to infer such a change from this text.

(4) In this chapter the apostle contrasts Adam and Christ -- Adam as the cause of sin, and Christ as the cause of justification. He ascertains that sin has come upon all men through the fall of Adam (Romans 5:12). In Romans 5:13-14 he deduces this from the fact that death has reigned since Adam. "For the wages of sin is death" (Romans 6:23). Where there is death, there is sin.

Evasive Argument: Where there is no law, there is no transgression. There was, however, no law prior to Moses, for the law was given by him.

Answer: The apostle states that there was indeed a law, for there was judgment upon sin, and thus there was sin. When there is sin, there is also a law. Prior to Moses, the moral law was impressed upon man's nature. Furthermore, there were ceremonial laws governing the making of altars, sacrifices, and the objects to be sacrificed. Upon the giving of the law at Sinai, sin has been more clearly defined; but sin, the punishment of sin, and death had previously existed.

(5) Even if one insisted that this text pertains to believers -- this being the point of contention -- it obviously would contradict the text which speaks of all men and even of small children who have no actual sins as yet. Thus, no other conclusion could be drawn than that believers did sin prior to the giving of the law at Sinai; but their sins were not imputed to them because the Surety had already taken all their sins from them upon Himself in order to make satisfaction for them.

Objection #3: "And by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses" (Acts 13:39). Here it is declared that no one in the Old Testament could be justified, sin not having been punished and atoned for. Rather, it states that justification takes place subsequent to Christ's satisfaction.

Answer: Such a conclusion is in direct conflict with the text. The apostle is not speaking of either a time prior to or after Christ, nor is he speaking of either the Old or New Testament. Rather, he is speaking of the cause of justification, which could not be accomplished by either the law of Moses, the moral law, or the ceremonial law. It could not be the moral law, for having been transgressed, it is incapable of rendering man righteous. It could not be the ceremonial law divorced from the antitype; for then the ceremonial acts would be divorced from the exercise of faith in the antitype. These laws neither did nor were capable of rendering a ransom unto God. The only thing he posits here is that Christ is the sole cause of justification to all who believe in Him -- be it in the Old Testament where believers believed in Christ by means of the types, or in the New Testament.

Objection #4: "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to His cross" (Colossians 2:14). The ceremonies were a code of obligation, requiring the payment for incurred guilt. By participating in the ceremonies, the Israelites would daily concur in this. God could therefore require from them the punishment of sin -- which indeed He did by rebuking them for their sins and keeping them subject to guilt, curse, and wrath. It is thus very evident that Old Testament believers did not have the forgiveness of sins.

Answer (1) Everyone will admit that this text uses figurative speech. It is not a document which is under discussion, but rather animals which were killed and sacrificed. The ceremonial law, that is, the ceremonial procedures themselves are referred to as "handwriting," rather than anything believers presented to God. They did not present these ceremonies as they were not ceremonies instituted by them. Instead, it was God who had given them these laws and institutions. In sacrificing, believers did not obligate themselves to anything. They did not obligate themselves to render payment; nothing was further from the truth. The sacrifices pointed them to the fact that a Surety would come at His appointed time -- a Surety who had obligated Himself to render payment. The sacrifices sealed the forgiveness of sins to the believers through the satisfaction of the Surety. In that respect the handwriting was as a receipt, but not an obligation for which they were responsible. The nature of these divine institutions (the ceremonial laws) was such that in some measure they were a handwriting, declaring that payment would have to be rendered, and the repetition of those sacrifices indicated that the payment for that guilt had not been rendered as yet. Upon having rendered payment, the Surety Jesus Christ did remove the handwriting (the ceremonial institutions), having nailed them to the cross. He thereby terminated them as having been completed and having served their purpose. In that sense the ceremonies were as a handwriting, and it is evident from what is stated in the text that believers did not present a signed statement obligating themselves to the payment of their sins.

(2) When the apostle states that the handwriting was against us, he indicates thereby that it was not against Old Testament believers, but against the Gentiles. He states: "which was contrary to us" -- hyphenation; that is, there is something obscure there, something which is hidden and which is contrary. It means that as long as the ceremonies were in force, the Gentiles were deprived of the true religion. Thus, the ceremonial worship distinguished and separated the church from the Gentiles. The congregation of Colosse consisted primarily of Gentiles: "And you, that were sometime alienated ..." (Colossians 1:21). These converted Jews wanted to lead the believing Gentiles to the Jewish ceremonies. The apostle opposes this, showing in this text that the ceremonies were no longer of any benefit, having served their purpose by reason of the coming of Christ, who was the embodiment of the shadows.

(3) If one wishes this handwriting to be applicable to the Jewish church, then there was indeed also something in the shadows which was contrary to them. Aside from the fact that the ceremonies led them to Christ and sealed to them the forgiveness of sins, they would confess that the Surety had not yet come. They had not yet received the fulfillment of the promise of Christ coming into the flesh, for which they so yearned. Thus, they were deprived of the glorious state of the church, not then being permitted to behold that state. That is the meaning of this text.

Objection #5: "Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin" (Hebrews 10:18). Thus, when there are offerings, there is no forgiveness of sins. In the Old Testament there were offerings, and thus there was no forgiveness of sins in the Old Testament.

Answer (1) If this conclusion were valid, there would be neither aphasis nor paresis in the Old Testament. There would have been no forgiveness whatsoever, nor any overlooking of sin. The sacrifices of that time were neither able to remove sins nor to cause them to be overlooked. God's justice would neither permit sin to go unpunished nor grant the sinner admittance into heaven, since the sacrifice of Christ had not been accomplished in actuality. Besides, the Scriptures know of no distinction between aphasis and paresis; it makes no difference whether the one or the other word is used. By reason of such a conclusion, one would have to join the Socinians.

(2) This text states a general truth, which is dictated by logic, and neither is nor can be denied by anyone. When there is forgiveness of sins, there is no longer a need for a satisfying sacrifice. What purpose would it serve? That which it would accomplish has already been accomplished. It is very poor reasoning to conclude from this text that there was no forgiveness of sins in the Old Testament because there were offerings. Indeed, these sacrifices did not render satisfaction, but only typified the one perfect sacrifice of Christ -- that sacrifice which is of one and the same efficacy relative to the forgiveness of sins prior as well as subsequent to His actual sacrifice. He is the same yesterday and today.

(3) The apostle is not dealing here with the manner of forgiveness in either the Old or New Testament. Rather, he is speaking of the cause of forgiveness; that is, which sacrifice was efficacious to that end: either the ceremonial sacrifice or the sacrifice of Christ. The apostle contrasts these two, showing that the ceremonial law could never remove sin, but that Christ with one sacrifice has perfected forever them that are sanctified. He proved the ineffectiveness of the first by its continual repetition. That which needs to be repeated time and again is not a complete work. That which needs to be repeatedly sacrificed has neither made satisfaction for nor removed sin. Since Christ's sacrifice has made full satisfaction, however, it can no longer be repeated, for where there is forgiveness, there is no longer a purpose for a sacrifice. Since full satisfaction has been made through the sacrifice of Christ, the ceremonial sacrifices of the Old Testament no longer need occur; they have served their purpose.

(4) This text, therefore, neither speaks of the sacrifices of the Old Testament nor of the sacrifice of Christ. Rather, it declares the general truth that upon satisfaction for and removal of sin, a sacrifice no longer serves a purpose. There can no longer be any room for the performance of a sacrifice, for what the repeated sacrifices sought to accomplish has been accomplished. By this argument the apostle shows that the sacrifice of Christ, which had fully removed sin, could not be repeated, and that the typifying sacrifices of the Old Testament had served their purpose.

Objection #6: "And for this cause He is the Mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance" (Hebrews 9:15). Here the apostle shows that those sins which had been committed during the Old Testament were first atoned for by the death of Christ; that is, at the time when Christ died. If they were then first atoned for, they were not previously atoned for, but constituted an outstanding debt charged to the account of believers who did not have the forgiveness of sins; their sins were only bypassed.

Answer (1) We state once more that Scripture does not differentiate between paresis and aphasis, or between forgiving and overlooking something. God's righteousness does not permit the one any more than the other. If He can bypass sin by overlooking it, He can also forgive sin -- yes, to forgive and to bypass are one and the same thing. If the sins of the Old Testament believers had not been atoned for because the actual satisfaction had not yet been made, then Old Testament believers would have had no forgiveness whatsoever. No matter how one wishes to express this, they would then have lived and died in an entirely unreconciled state, and consequently would have gone lost. Since they were saved, however, they were therefore also reconciled, and thus their sins had been forgiven them.

(2) We must make a distinction between the act by which the atonement was merited and the efficacy of this act. The act by which the atonement was merited occurred only once; it was accomplished at the time of Christ's suffering. In the Old Testament the act of atonement had not been performed as yet. Christ had not yet come into the flesh, and had neither suffered nor died. This is a known fact, admitted by everyone. However, the efficacy of the act of atonement does not only pertain to the New Testament and to sins which had not occurred but would be committed. Rather, it also pertains retroactively to the sins of Old Testament believers since the time of Adam. One will have to admit that the bearing with and the bypassing of sin in the Old Testament occurred by virtue of the efficacy of this act, and that believers by reason of this atoning act have been saved. This means that Christ's atoning act was already efficacious several thousand years prior to its actual occurrence. If it was efficacious unto the overlooking of sin and unto salvation, it was efficacious unto atonement and forgiveness.

(3) The text itself shows that Old Testament believers did have the atonement and forgiveness. It states very clearly that the death of Christ was for the redemption of the transgression of those who were under the first testament. Believers were therefore partakers of this redemption in the Old Testament. Or is it true that Old Testament believers first received redemption at the time of the death of Christ? Did those who were called not receive the promise of eternal inheritance until Christ's death; and did they only then enter heaven? Were they, prior to Christ's death, imprisoned in limbus patrum, a fabrication of popery? Did Christ only remove them from there after His death? Indeed not! They have received the promise of eternal inheritance already after their death. They have entered heaven -- as the opposing party admits and acknowledges -- by reason of the redemption of their transgressions through the death of the Mediator, who is here declared to be the cause of their receiving their inheritance. To have been in heaven and enjoyed a complete salvation while yet being unreconciled; to have enjoyed perfect communion with God for several thousand years, and not to have received redemption until thereafter -- consequently to have obtained the forgiveness of sins while in heaven -- is altogether contradictory.

(4) That Christ is called the Mediator of the New Testament is of no support to the opposing party, for they themselves admit that Christ was also Surety and Mediator during the Old Testament era. The covenant of grace is one and the same covenant since Adam and will continue unchanged until Christ returns unto judgment. This testament is called "new" relative to its administration. Upon the coming of the Mediator, who is the embodiment of the shadows, the entire ceremonial worship ceases, and the more excellent administration of this Mediator begins -- and thus He is called the Mediator of the New Testament.

Objection #7: "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshipers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year" (Hebrews 10:1-3). Since in the Old Testament there was made an annual remembrance of sins, and believers were conscious of their sins, there was no forgiveness of sins in the Old Testament.

Answer (1) We fully concur that the ceremonial sacrifices did not remove sin, nor were they capable of doing so. We agree that the ceremonial law did not have the substance itself, but only the shadows, and the repetition of the sacrifices was proof that these were not capable of removing sin and purifying the conscience.

(2) When the apostle speaks of having conscience of sin, he is thereby not denying that believers had peace of conscience by reason of the forgiveness of sins. Rather, he states that this peace could not be obtained by means of the sacrifices, for he says that the law could never make "the comers thereunto perfect." The sacrifices could therefore not remove the consciousness of sin. He speaks here of the sacrifices and their efficacy, contrasting them with the sacrifice of Christ. He denies that the sacrifices have any efficacy to remove sin, to cleanse those who sacrificed, and to purify the conscience from sin of those who participated in the ceremonial service. He attributes that efficacy to the sacrifice of Christ and states in verse 14 that with one sacrifice He has perfected forever them that are sanctified. In Hebrews 9:14 he states that Christ has purged the conscience from dead works. This sacrifice of Christ was not only efficacious subsequent to His death, but also prior to His death, that is, in the Old Testament. He was Surety in the same measure then as He is presently in the New Testament; He is the same yesterday and today. By virtue of that sacrifice Old Testament believers were delivered from punishment, sanctified, and saved in just the same measure as are New Testament believers. Thus, there is no denial here of the matter to be addressed more comprehensively below, but a denial that these blessings were due to the efficacy of the sacrifices.

(3) When the apostle states, "But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year," he is only expressing that upon the Day of Atonement (the day he has in view) it was demonstrated and confessed that the act whereby sin would be removed, that is, the atoning sacrifice of Christ, had not yet occurred, but was anticipated in faith, and that all the ceremonial sacrifices could not remove sin. "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins" (Hebrews 10:4). The apostle immediately joins these words to the preceding passage, proving by way of the words "remembrance again made of sins every year" the impotency of the sacrifices, and that their repetition in the Old Testament taught that the sacrifices neither removed nor atoned for sin, but that the promised Mediator would do so. By His efficacy believers would become partakers of the atonement and not by any efficacy the typical sacrifices would have.

Objection #8: "For I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more" (Jeremiah 31:34). Here we have a pronounced contrast between the Old and New Testaments. In this contrast the forgiveness of iniquity and the not remembering of sin any more are solely and uniquely ascribed as belonging to the New Testament. This forgiveness is expressed by the word aphesis (cf. Hebrews 8:12; Hebrews 10:17). Thus, Old Testament believers did not have complete forgiveness -- yes, they did not have forgiveness in the sense of aphasis. Instead, God remembered their sins; they continued to be unatoned for before the countenance of God; God continually upbraided them for their sins.

Answer (1) For the exegesis of this passage, and the defense of it, refer to chapter 2 of this appendix.

(2) The forgiveness promised here is expressed by the word salach -- the identical word whereby forgiveness of sins is referred to in the Old Testament (cf. Exodus 34:9; Leviticus 4:20; Psalms 103:3; Psalms 86:5). Thus, believers in both testaments have been partakers of the very same forgiveness.

(3) In the Old Testament they also had the benefits of the covenant of grace promised here to the church in the New Testament. The comprehensive summary of this is, "I shall be your God, and you shall be My people" (Jeremiah 31:33). This is promised to New Testament believers, and believers already had the benefits thereof in the Old Testament. The opposing parties do not deny this, but rather admit it -- a fact which could otherwise be proven from a multitude of texts. Therefore, that which is promised to the New Testament church has been equally promised in the Old Testament.

(4) The non-remembrance of sin which is here promised to the New Testament church was already a reality in the Old Testament and is expressed with the same word zakhar: "Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions" (Psalms 25:7); "O remember not against us former iniquities" (Psalms 79:8); "But thou hast not called upon Me, O Jacob ... thou hast wearied Me with thine iniquities. I, even I, am He that blot out thy transgressions for Mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins" (Isaiah 43:22; Isaiah 43:24-25); "But if the wicked will turn from all his sins ... all his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him" (Ezekiel 18:21-22); "None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him" (Ezekiel 33:16). [Note: In the Statenbijbel various forms of the verb "to remember" are used in all five texts.]

(5) God promises to establish the covenant of grace in the New Testament, even though both parties agree that it has existed without change from Adam until the times of the Messiah, and will remain so until the coming of Christ unto judgment. Just as one cannot deny the existence of the covenant of grace in the Old Testament, because it was promised in the New Testament, the reality of the forgiveness of sins and a not remembering of sins in the Old Testament can likewise not be denied simply because it has been promised to the New Testament church. From all this it can be clearly deduced that whatever is promised to the New Testament church in this text, already existed in the Old Testament church. The contrast does not pertain to the matter itself, but to the manner of administration and the degree of application. The agreement lies herein: The covenant of grace and all its benefits are as much a reality in the New Testament church as they have been in the Old Testament church.

Objection #9: "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect" (Hebrews 11:39-40). Since Old Testament believers did not witness the fulfilment of the promises, the ransom had not yet been paid, and they had not yet been made perfect; and whereas New Testament believers have received better things, Old Testament believers did not have the complete forgiveness of sins, and were deprived of all the benefits which flow forth from the complete forgiveness granted in the New Testament.

Answer: The promise, which Old Testament believers did not and New Testament believers did receive, does not pertain to the forgiveness of sins, but rather to the incarnation of Christ, whereby He fulfilled all the prophecies and types, paying the ransom for the sins of all the elect by His death. The better thing which New Testament believers have is the fulfillment of God's promises in the long-promised Savior Himself. He had not yet come in the Old Testament, although He was promised. However, to have the thing itself is better than the promise; "to have" is better than "shall have." The better thing having come, the administration is also better. It is without shadows, and there is more spirituality, light, faith, hope, love, holiness, peace and joy in the conscience. If we apply the phrase "that they without us should not be made perfect" to the church in general, then the Old Testament church was not complete as far as membership was concerned; the church was anticipating the addition of more children. All the elect had not been gathered in and New Testament believers still had to be added before the church would be complete as far as her membership was concerned. It is in this sense that the congregation is called Christ's body, "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Ephesians 1:23). If one applies this passage specifically to believers, it states that Old Testament believers were not made perfect without that fulfillment of the promise which we enjoy: the actual satisfaction made by Christ in the flesh. The text does not deny perfection in the Old Testament. Rather, it states expressly: They have been made perfect. The phrase "without us" does not imply that New Testament believers render Old Testament believers perfect. It also does not imply that Old Testament believers did not attain perfection until the New Testament era, having been imperfect in heaven until that time. In heaven there is no room for that which is sinful, impure, and imperfect. Rather it states that they were perfect by virtue of the satisfaction of Christ, who had not accomplished the act of atonement in their days, but did so during our days in the New Testament. "The promise" is to be understood as referring to the Messiah; "the better things" as referring to the execution of His suretyship upon which a better administration followed; and "they without us should not be made perfect" as referring to Christ's atonement, which is equally efficacious in both testaments (even though the act of atonement transpired in the New Testament). There is thus no proof for an incomplete forgiveness of sins in the Old Testament -- a forgiveness distinguished from and contrasted with the forgiveness of sins in the New Testament.

It is evident from Hebrews 11:39 that all these matters are as we have stated them to be: "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith." What was the object of their faith? None other than Christ, who had then been promised and who now had come. Abel's eye was upon Christ when he sacrificed, for thereby he obtained witness that he was righteous. This could not have occurred in any other way but by a faith which looked unto Christ (Hebrews 11:4). The faith of Enoch, who was taken up, looked unto Christ (Hebrews 11:5). Abraham's faith looked unto Christ, the promised seed, and thereby he was justified (Hebrews 11:12 cf. Romans 4:11-22; Galatians 3:16). Moses looked unto Christ, whereby he esteemed the reproach of Christ the greatest of all riches (Hebrews 11:26). For this Christ they all yearned, and even though they did not receive Him in the flesh, they nevertheless saw Him from afar, believed in Him, and embraced Him (Hebrews 11:13).

Since these two matters are facts (and in our estimation it has been clearly shown that they are facts), namely, that the Lord Jesus has been the same perfect vicarious Surety in the Old Testament as He is in the New Testament, and that Old Testament believers have been as fully reconciled with God and have received as complete a forgiveness of sins as New Testament believers, the following questions will be more readily answered.

Old Testament Believers Had the Spirit of Adoption

Question: Did Old Testament believers have the Spirit of adoption? Answer: Some neither deny that Old Testament believers have been partakers of God's Spirit and of regeneration nor that they were indeed children of God. They posit that believers generally had less light, less assurance, and less comfort, etc. In these two matters there is agreement. Some insist, however, that Old Testament believers did not have the Spirit of adoption, which would enable them to approach unto God as their Father with liberty and a childlike heart, to address Him, "Abba, Father!," and to serve and obey God as a reconciled Father with a free and childlike disposition. They maintain that only New Testament believers have this, claiming that Old Testament believers have always gone their way with a troubled heart, with dread and fear, and as a slave who fears a beating and is compelled to do his work out of fear. They claim that the Spirit inclined their hearts to yield to slavish bondage and to submit their shoulders to the yoke of the ceremonies. They were subject to the slavish dominion of angels, priests, principalities, and devils, who as rulers compelled them to perform their work. Moreover, these insist that this spirit of bondage did not exist prior to, but only from the golden calf incident until the New Testament. They also claim that the unconverted did not have this spirit of bondage. This only occurred in believers, and this spirit worked in them compliance with God's instituted form of worship and its observance by faith.

What poor faith and sonship this is! We completely deny these claims to be true. We acknowledge instead that they had the same Spirit of faith, the same Spirit of the adoption of children, the same access, the same childlike disposition, and the same childlike obedience. The evidence for this is as follows:

First, as Christ was a vicarious Surety in the Old Testament who fully removed all guilt from believers, having taken their guilt upon Himself in order to make satisfaction for them at the appointed time, and since they had the complete forgiveness of their sins as much as we do, they also had a childlike disposition of the heart, and thus the Spirit of adoption. There is nothing which separates God and man, preventing God from manifesting His fatherly favor and love, except sin. When God removes sin, He embraces the soul in love: "Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it ... for Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back" (Isaiah 38:17). Christ was, however, their vicarious Surety, and God forgave them all their sins. This has been proven in the previous chapter, as well as earlier in this chapter. Consequently, they had a childlike disposition of heart and the Spirit of adoption.

Secondly, both Old and New Testament believers possessed and exercised faith, and whenever faith is lively and active, there will also be this childlike disposition -- the Spirit of adoption. That they did indeed exercise saving and justifying faith is evident throughout the entire eleventh chapter of Hebrews, as well as in 2 Corinthians 4:13 : "We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed." They trusted in God: "But I trusted in Thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God" (Psalms 31:14). Whenever faith is in exercise, however, there is also the Spirit of adoption: "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name" (John 1:12). Whenever faith is in exercise, there is also peace: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Romans 5:1). Whenever faith is in exercise, there is also joy: "In whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Peter 1:8). Whenever faith is in exercise, there is an intimate walk with God: "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God" (James 2:23). The Lord Jesus likewise calls His believing disciples His friends: "I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of My Father I have made known unto you" (John 15:15). It is thus a certainty that they had a childlike disposition and the Spirit of adoption.

Thirdly, that Old Testament believers had the Spirit of adoption -- that is, that God made known to them that He accepted them as His children and begat a childlike disposition in them -- is evident from the manner in which He led His children.

(1) God made known to them that He was their God: "I am the Lord thy God" (Exodus 20:2).

(2) He called them His children: "Is Ephraim My dear son? is he a pleasant child?" (Jeremiah 31:20); "Surely they are My people, children that will not lie" (Isaiah 63:8).

(3) He loved them and made known to them that He loved them: "Since thou wast precious in My sight, thou hast been honorable, and I have loved thee" (Isaiah 43:4); "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee" (Jeremiah 31:3).

(4) God showed His fatherly compassion to them in their distresses, and they acknowledged this as such: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him" (Psalms 103:13).

(5) The Lord refreshed them by His presence and gave to them, upon their prayers, the desires of their soul: "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth. He will fulfil the desire of them that fear Him: He also will hear their cry, and will save them" (Psalms 145:18-19).

(6) The Holy Spirit taught and guided them: "Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God: Thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness" (Psalms 143:10).

(7) The Lord Jesus dealt with them in a loving manner. He kissed them with the kisses of His mouth Song of Solomon 1:3, and He called them His love (Song of Solomon 5:2). When considering all these and other similar dealings of God with Old Testament believers, then I would ask whether God deals differently with New Testament believers. Are there indeed any different expressions in the New Testament? Does He who deals thus with believers give them the spirit of bondage rather than the Spirit of adoption? Truly, if one were to ignore all these dealings and insist that the Old Testament believers had a wretched, slavish disposition, does one then do justice to the workings of God's Spirit in His children? If one speaks in such terms, would he then not offend the generation of God's children? We conclude, therefore, from all these fatherly dealings of God that Old Testament believers did have the Spirit of adoption.

Fourthly, consider also the description of the disposition of God's children in the Old Testament.

(1) “Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers” (Acts 3:25); “Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants” (Romans 9:4).

(2) They had the same Spirit of faith which New Testament believers have (cf. 2 Corinthians 4:13).

(3) They were assured of God’s fatherly heart and love toward them, and put their full trust in Him: “The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. ... Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me” (Psalms 23:1; Psalms 23:4).

(4) They had free access to the throne of grace: “Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation; and uphold me with Thy free Spirit” (Psalms 51:12); “Nevertheless I am continually with Thee” (Psalms 73:23).

(5) They addressed God with the name Father -- just as the Lord Jesus taught His disciples in (Matthew 6:9). Elihu said: “My desire is that Job may be tried” (Job 34:36). [Note: The Statenvertaling reads: “Mijn Vader! Laat Job beproefd worden tot het einde,” that is, “My Father! let Job be tried to the end.”] Believers spoke as follows: “Doubtless Thou art our Father” (Isaiah 63:16); “But now, O Lord, Thou art our Father” (Isaiah 64:8). The Lord put the word “Father” into their mouth: “Wilt thou not from this time cry unto Me, My Father, Thou art the guide of my youth?” (Jeremiah 3:4).

(6) They found delight and joy in the Lord and His service: “The joy of the Lord is your strength” (Nehemiah 8:10); “My meditation of Him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord” (Psalms 104:34); “Serve the Lord with gladness: come before His presence with singing” (Psalms 100:2).

Let us consider all the things mentioned together: Those who have Jesus as their vicarious Surety; those who have complete forgiveness of sins; those who have an active faith in God through Christ which engenders peace and joy; those whom God calls His friends and children, dealing with them in a familiar manner as one would with children; those who address God in Christ with the name Father; and those who have fellowship with God as their Father in a familiar, sweet, soul-satisfying manner, and delight themselves in Him -- those most certainly have the Spirit of adoption. Old Testament believers had all these, however, and thus they did not have a slavish disposition, but a childlike disposition and the Spirit of adoption.

Objection #1: “For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father” (Romans 8:15). Here the spirit of bondage is contrasted with the Spirit of adoption, and the fruits of the one with the fruits of the other -- which are to fear, and to cry, “Abba, Father.” The “spirit of bondage again to fear” is divorced from the New Testament and attributed to the Old Testament, which generally is designated as having been a period of bondage, whereas the Spirit of adoption and the crying of “Abba, Father” is attributed to the New Testament church and denied to the Old Testament church. Therefore, the spirit of bondage was only to be found in the Old Testament, and the Spirit of adoption was only found in the New Testament.

Answer: First, we categorically deny that what is spoken of here even remotely pertains to the Old and New Testaments. Furthermore, we deny that a distinction is made here between believers of both testaments, and that the spirit of bondage is attributed to the Old Testament and the Spirit of adoption is attributed to the New Testament -- and thus that they feared in the Old Testament, whereas they cried "Abba, Father" in the New Testament. Until we draw all arguments together, we have herewith sufficiently responded to the objection.

Secondly, the very opposite is proven by the text itself.

(1) Neither in this verse, in the previous verses, nor in those which follow is there a single reference to either the Old or New Testament, or anything that even suggests a distinction between believers in both testaments. To suggest this is only conjecture. If one states that the words "bondage again to fear" and "have received the Spirit of adoption" are indicative of any distinction, we reply that this is petitio principii; that is, this is the very principal point itself, which is here denied. Thus, these words do not support the objection at all. This is all the more evident when considering that Old Testament believers had the Spirit of adoption, and they did cry, "Abba, Father." This we have proven with four arguments. Moreover, there is also fear in the New Testament: "Afterward shall the children of Israel ... fear the Lord and His goodness in the latter days" (Hosea 3:5); "Let us therefore fear" (Hebrews 4:1); "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Php 2:12).

(2) The apostle does not speak in this verse of various persons -- some belonging to the Old Testament and others to the New Testament. Rather, he speaks of the very same persons: the members of the congregation at Rome as they presently dwelt there. The text says: "... ye have not received ... ye have received." If there were but the least possibility that this was so, it would first of all have to be proven that this congregation solely or primarily consisted of Jews. Furthermore, it would have to be proven that these Jews, prior to believing that Jesus was the Messiah, had been believers and converted persons. The disputants state resolutely that the unconverted in the Old Testament did not have the spirit of bondage, but that only believers had the spirit of bondage again to fear. This argument does not even have a semblance of validity, for the church had already been transferred to the Gentiles. God had already deserted Jewry, the godly had in principle already moved elsewhere, and the destruction of Jerusalem was imminent. One thing is certain: The church of Rome consisted of converted Gentiles. This can be observed in Romans 1:5-6; Romans 1:13 : "... for obedience to the faith among all nations, [Note: The Statenvertaling uses the word "heidenen," that is, "Gentiles."] for His name: among whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ ... that I might have some fruit among you also, even as among other Gentiles."

Evasive Argument: The apostle does indeed speak of the same persons and of converted Gentiles. However, he says concerning them that they were not brought into the state in which the Jewish church had been of old; namely, having the spirit of bondage again to fear, and with fear of heart being subject to the ceremonies. Rather, they were in a much better state -- an evangelical state.

Answer: We deny that there is such a difference. Moreover, would it make any sense for the apostle to speak to converted Gentiles about the state of believers who lived in a very distant land during a period long gone by -- of whose form of worship they had no knowledge and which had already been done away with? Would it make any sense for him to say that they had not come into the state in which the Jewish church had been of old?

Thirdly, the spirit of bondage again to fear is a spirit of fear. "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind" (2 Timothy 1:7). Whenever there is fear, there is the inclination to subordinate and subject one's self to the will of those who threaten and inflict suffering. The world, the enemies of God, persecuted the church very fiercely during that time. To confess and experience Jesus was to make oneself a prey of the persecutors who robbed believers of their possessions and their lives. This method was very capable of making men's hearts faint with fear, and causing them, by way of this fear, to depart from the faith and the practice of religion. It was against this threat that the apostle sought to bolster the believing Romans by stirring them up to be steadfast in the faith and in godliness -- even if they were to become subject to physical suffering. That he spoke of a fear for suffering, which caused an inclination to forsake the pathway of godliness and to subject themselves to the bondage of the will of the persecutors is evident in the following passage: "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Romans 8:17-18). However, (thus speaks the apostle) you are children, for you are partakers of the Holy Spirit and have received the Spirit of adoption which cries, "Abba, Father!" You are therefore the heirs of God. You should not fear suffering, for it will not rob you of your eternal inheritance. That inheritance incomparably transcends all the suffering and whatever else could supposedly be gained upon earth if you were to forsake the truth due to fear of suffering. The Spirit you have received is a Spirit of power (2 Timothy 1:7); He is a free Spirit (Psalms 51:12).

(1) Natural men seek their portion, peace, and delight in visible things. They are slaves to earthly possessions, fearing all that might rob them of those possessions. However, you, being converted, have not received this spirit, this disposition of bondage -- the spirit of the world 1 Corinthians 2:12 -- so that again you would fear the loss of earthly possessions as you did before. You have received the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of adoption. This spirit does not engender bondage to earthly possessions; it does not cause fear again as before, but instead gives a free, childlike, and bold disposition to address God as a reconciled Father -- to endure all suffering for Christ's sake in anticipation of the heritage of the children of God.

(2) The spirit of bondage again to fear is a bondage of fear -- a being in bondage to earthly, visible things. The converted Gentiles in Rome did not receive again the spirit of the world, the spirit of bondage which formerly made them fearful of all those things which could deprive them of their earthly belongings. Rather, they had been delivered from this bondage. They had now become the children of God and had received the Spirit of adoption which gave them liberty to address God by the name of Father. They had the hope of glory. By way of this argument the apostle stirs them up to godliness and not to succumb because of suffering, but rather that they might glory with him, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us" Romans 8:35; Romans 8:37. This is his intent.

Objection #2: "To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father" (Galatians 4:5-6). In verse 3 the state of the church is defined as being one of bondage, in verse 1 as being the state of a servant, whereas verse 5 states that Christ delivered them by His coming. The apostle contrasts this with the state of the New Testament church, consisting in the adoption of children, which causes them to call upon God as “Abba, Father!” Thus, Old Testament believers did not have the Spirit of adoption.

Answer (1) Let us put it this way: In the Old Testament was the spirit of bondage, during which period the Holy Spirit worked regeneration, faith, and sanctification in believers. In the New Testament there was the Spirit of adoption. The apostle contrasts the two. And then what? One could at the very most conclude a difference in measure rather than of essence, for also in the New Testament the Holy Spirit works through fear. Paul persuades men to faith by way of the terror of the Lord (2 Corinthians 5:11); Jude admonishes to “save some with fear” Jude 1:23; and conversion wrought fear in the Corinthians (2 Corinthians 7:11). Paul himself had fightings without and fears within. Moreover, Old Testament believers had the Spirit of adoption and bold access to the throne of grace, crying out, “Abba, Father!” We have demonstrated this in our proof. They also had peace and joy as we shall show below, and thus the distinction can only be one of measure -- with which we fully concur.

(2) The apostle does not speak here of the Spirit of adoption, but of adoption itself. If it were to be construed as a contrast between the Old and New Testaments, the adoption of children as having occurred in the Old Testament would have to be completely denied, for it is connected here with the New Testament in comparison with the Old Testament. However, that is contrary to both Scripture and their own sentiments.

(3) The apostle here demonstrates the benefits and efficacy of Christ’s suretyship among the Gentiles -- which the Galatians were prior to their conversion, having been idolaters. “Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods” (Galatians 4:8). We do not have here a contrast between church and church, but rather between nation and nation. Formerly only the Jews enjoyed the benefits of the covenant of grace, but presently the Gentiles do likewise. They presently also receive the adoption of children.

(4) The sending forth of the Spirit of His Son into the hearts of believers and the crying out, “Abba, Father,” flow forth from their sonship: “... and because ye are sons,” etc., rather than out of the state of the church in either the Old or New Testament. Since no one is a child of God, God sheds forth the Spirit of His Son, who cries out, “Abba, Father.” However, since New Testament believers are as much God’s children as they of the Old Testament, God has bestowed the same blessings upon them, and vice versa.

(5) Understand it to be as follows: There being a contrast here between the Old and New Testaments, it is not one of essence, but rather of degree -- as between immature and mature children. They both are children, both have a childlike disposition, and both cry out, “Abba, Father.”

Old Testament Believers Enjoyed Peace of Conscience

Question: Did Old Testament believers have peace of conscience and spiritual joy in God, or did they live with continual fear in their conscience? Did they live with continual fear and an anxious spirit because they were in an unreconciled state, being accused of sin, being subject to the curse and wrath of God, to which they would remain subject until the Surety had paid -- and being in a slavish bondage to the ceremonies?

Answer: Some respond to the latter question in the affirmative (however, not in the manner as the ungodly would experience this), and claim that it was God's will not to pour out His curse and wrath upon them unto their perdition. However, we answer negatively upon this question. These believers did have peace of conscience and joy in God. They were not in such a wretched state. We confirm this as follows:

(1) We have previously proven that in the Old Testament the Lord Jesus was a vicarious Surety in the full sense of the word; that Old Testament believers did have full justification by faith and the forgiveness of sins; and that they were adopted as children and had the Spirit of adoption. When such is the case, there is neither curse, wrath, nor a being accused of unpaid debt; instead, there is peace and joy in God. However, Old Testament believers had all these benefits. Thus, etc. [Note: à Brakel obviously assumes here that the reader can complete the argument himself.]

(2) There are clear texts. Consider, among others, the following: "Thou hast put gladness in my heart. ... I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for Thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety" (Psalms 4:7-8); "Truly my soul waiteth upon God" (Psalms 62:1); "Nevertheless I am continually with Thee ... God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever. But it is good for me to draw near to God" (Psalms 73:23;Psalms 73:26;Psalms 73:28); "My meditation of Him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord" (Psalms 104:34); "... that I may rejoice in the gladness of Thy nation, that I may glory with Thine inheritance" (Psalms 106:5); "How precious also are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! ... when I awake, I am still with Thee" (Psalms 139:17-18); "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me" (Psalms 23:4).

He who considers these spiritual frames will be incapable of having such dismal thoughts of Old Testament believers. Are there expressions anywhere in Scripture to indicate that the frames of New Testament believers are more spiritual, familiar, and joyful than those of Old Testament believers? Furthermore, although Christ had not actually paid for the sins of Old Testament believers, did they not have perfect peace, joy in God, and communion with God in heaven? If the unpaid debt was no obstacle to prevent them from having perfect joy after their death, why then could this be a reason for their state on earth to be a wretched one? We thus conclude that Old Testament believers have had the same peace and joy in God as did New Testament believers. That there was generally a difference in measure was not ascribed to unpaid debt, but to the wisdom of God.

Objection #1: Old Testament believers were subject to wrath. "Because the law worketh wrath: for where no law is, there is no transgression" (Romans 4:15). This law is the ceremonial law, which demonstrated that satisfaction for sin had not yet been made. The ceremonial law accused Old Testament believers of sin and indicated to them that they were still subject to divine wrath, and that the curse still rested upon them. The apostle contrasts this with the state of New Testament believers and posits that the ceremonial law ceased upon Christ having rendered satisfaction; consequently there was no longer any transgression which was not atoned for.

Answer (1) Such sentiments are very erroneous; they are therefore to be fully rejected.

(2) Even though the transgression of the ceremonial law also merited the wrath of God, the apostle is not referring here to the ceremonial law, but to the moral law. He speaks of the law which stands in contrast to faith; however, the ceremonial law is not contrary to faith. In this as well as the previous chapter, the apostle contrasts justification by the law with justification by faith, declaring that man cannot be justified by the works of the law, since that law engenders wrath. He states that if man is to be justified, it is to be by faith. He posits that Abraham was not justified by the works of the law, but by faith (Romans 4:1-5). It follows that all who seek their justification in the works of the law will not obtain it, but will remain subject to God's wrath, since man is a transgressor of the law and has a curse pronounced upon him. If God had given no law to man, he would not have been capable of sinning, since he then would have been neither commanded nor prohibited anything. He would thus also not have been subject to punishment. Since, however, God has given man a law, and man has transgressed the law, the violated law provokes to wrath and therefore cannot justify man. This does not constitute a difference between the state of Old and New Testament believers.

(3) The apostle does not say that New Testament believers are without the law, nor does he say that they are free from transgression. They have both: law and transgression. It is indeed true that they do not sin against the ceremonial law, as it is no longer in force. However, they do have the moral law and sin against it. Being without transgressions is not to be without atonement, but rather to be without sin.

Objection #2: Old Testament believers were subject to the curse. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse" (Galatians 3:10). Old Testament believers were under the law, but New Testament believers are not. "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Romans 6:14).

Answer (1) This argument does not pertain to the unconverted, but to Old Testament believers. The former are under the dominion of sin, whereas the latter, having been regenerated, are not. The former are under the curse, and the latter are under grace and not under the curse. Had Old Testament believers been under the curse, they would not have been under grace nor have obtained salvation.

(2) The apostle, speaking of justification in Galatians 3:1-29, shows that it does not proceed out of the law -- neither the moral nor the ceremonial law. The Jews at that time mingled the ceremonial laws with the moral law. They separated them from the antitype, expecting to be justified by their actions, that is, by works. Of such the apostle declares that they are far from being justified, and renders them subject to the curse. In the very same verse he adds the following as an argument for his proposition: "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them" (Galatians 3:10). By contrast, he shows that justification transpires by faith, and faith stands in opposition to the law in justification, stating immediately thereafter in verse 11: "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, the just shall live by faith." Thus, the apostle does not speak here of Old Testament believers and of their state -- which is the point of contention -- but of the unconverted, who strive to be justified by the law and to whom Christ has thus become of no value.

(3) Concerning the passage in Romans 6:14, there is not the least mention made of any contrast between Old and New Testament believers, for the apostle says that sin has no dominion over those who are under grace. The dominion of sin pertains to man being under the power of sin. Sin then compels man to commit all manner of sin, even to obey it in the lusts thereof -- as he says in verse 12 [Romans 6:12]: "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof" (Romans 6:12). Had the apostle considered Old Testament believers to be under the law, he would have said that sin did have dominion over Old Testament believers. However, this cannot be -- for to be regenerate, to be a believer, and yet to be under the dominion of sin are contradictory matters. Thus, the apostle, when contrasting man as being under the law and being under grace, is not referring to the Old and New Testaments, but to the unregenerate and regenerate states of man, whoever he may be. To be under the law is to be subject to the power of the law -- this being the case in either the Old or New Testament -- whereby one is either justified by the law if it is perfectly obeyed, or condemned by transgression against it. The law points out man's duty; it promises and threatens. Hereby man is convinced that in his natural state he is in direct opposition to the law, that he does nothing but sin, and that the law can neither justify, change, nor sanctify him. To be under grace is to have Christ unto justification and sanctification. He who is under grace, having the blood and Spirit of Christ, is a partaker of the divine nature, and cannot be under the dominion of sin. By virtue of this argument, the apostle admonishes believers to fight earnestly against sin, and exhorts them to the practice of holiness; they have God's seed in them and have received Christ unto justification and sanctification.

Objection #3: Old Testament believers did not enjoy peace of conscience, for they were still conscious of sin. "For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshipers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins" Hebrews 10:19 Peace of conscience is for New Testament believers -- for those living subsequent to the satisfaction made by Christ. "How much more shall the blood of Christ purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (Hebrews 9:14). Only subsequent to Christ have believers had freedom to approach unto God. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience" (Hebrews 10:19-22). Peace of conscience was reserved for New Testament believers. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God" (Hebrews 4:9).

Answer: In Hebrews 10:2 the apostle does not say that Old Testament believers had any remembrance again of sins; that is, that they had terror or trembled due to committed and unforgiven sins. Rather, the apostle speaks of the efficacy of the sacrifices of the Old Testament as contrasted with the efficacy of the sacrifice of Christ. He denies the sacrifices of the Old Testament had the efficacy to pacify the conscience, as they were not capable of removing sin; rather, he ascribes that efficacy to the sacrifice of Christ (Hebrews 10:19-22). That is the very argument of the apostle in that chapter (cf. Hebrews 9:13-14). However, His sacrifice had the same efficacy prior to His actual atoning sacrifice as thereafter, for as Surety He had taken sin upon Himself prior to this. Christ is the same yesterday and today -- and thus believers in both dispensations have enjoyed the efficacy and fruits of His death, which also include peace of conscience. We have proven this to be true (cf. pp. ###474-475). Hebrews 4:9 does not speak of the rest of the New Testament, but rather of the rest of heaven (cf. vol. 3, chapter 6).

Objection #4: Old Testament believers continually lived in the fear of death. Their continual wish was to have a long life. This is to be observed in David (Psalms 6:1-10 and Psalms 30:1-12), Heman Psalms 88:1-18, and Hezekiah Isaiah 38:1-22. Paul states this expressly in Hebrews

2:14-15 : "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Paul speaks of the Jews, for this letter is addressed to the Hebrews. He states that they were subject to bondage -- a being in bondage under the ceremonies. They were in fear of death, and were so all their lifetime.

Answer (1) Death is unnatural; it is the king of terrors. All Old and New Testament believers would, with Paul, rather be clothed than unclothed (2 Corinthians 5:4). Thus, fear of death was not only peculiar to the Old Testament, for in the New Testament believers are sometimes very fearful of death. Why else did other believers, who were called to martyrdom, yield? And why would Old Testament believers have been more fearful of death? Was this due to the weakness of their faith? That is possible. Was it because they had such a love to be of service to God's people, to make God's name known among the people, and to worship and glorify Him? This would have been laudable. Was it because they would then come short of Canaan? How foolish! Would he who had received the matter itself be fearful of having lost the earnest of it -- that is, if Canaan was indeed an earnest, which supposition we deny? Or was the earth more dear to them than heaven?

(2) In Hebrews 2:15 Paul is neither speaking of the Old Testament nor of the bondage under the ceremonies, even though he is speaking to the Hebrews. The Word of God -- and thus the entire covenant of grace -- had been proclaimed to the Hebrews. Does this therefore only pertain to the Hebrews? Rather, he speaks of the fear of death as being a punishment upon sin -- a punishment that had been threatened in Genesis 2:17 and had come upon all men (Romans 5:12). All men fear this death. The one banishes this fear by reason of his base ignorance, not knowing what follows thereafter; the other does so in proud presumption in order to have glory among men; others do so by considering death to be an unavoidable fate; others have the false notion that they will thereby be delivered from their misery; and some do so by entertaining an unfounded hope of salvation. The apostle, however, shows the true cause whereby one can be delivered from the fear of death -- the death of the Lord Jesus received by faith. Through sin man has become captive to the power of the devil, having believed and obeyed him. Thus, to be subject to the power of the devil and to the fear of death and bondage are the results of the sins which have come upon all men, who are all by nature children of wrath. Since man has become subject to the power of the devil through sin, he is in bondage to the devil, is in his snares, is captive to his will 2 Timothy 2:26, and desires to do the lusts of the devil. Christ delivers His children from this wretched state, and to that end He has bruised Satan's head, according to the promise made in Genesis 3:1-24. In delivering His own from the power of the devil, He also delivers them from the accompanying evil: bondage to the devil and its resultant consequence, the fear of death. This is evident from the text itself. Those who during their entire lifetime have been subject to this bondage in fear are said to be delivered from it. However, when and whereby are believers delivered from it? This would not be during their lifetime, since, according to the opposing view, they would have to be subject to it until their death. Were they delivered from this bondage when Christ died? Then they also would have been subject to the fear of death in heaven, a matter which is a contradiction in itself. Or were they delivered from the fear of death by reason of their own death? This would be in conflict with the text, which declares that they have been delivered from the power of the devil and the fear of death by the death of Christ. Thus, these words cannot be understood to refer to this fabricated fear of death in the Old Testament, but as referring to deliverance from the power of the devil and the fear of death to which man by nature is subject and from which he is delivered by the death of Christ. Man becomes a partaker of this benefit at regeneration by faith. Prior to that he, along with all men, is subject to the power of the devil and to the fear resulting from being in bondage to the devil and sin. It is just like saying that a man who is born blind, but later receives his sight, has been blind his entire lifetime. One does not understand this to mean until his death, but rather until the moment he received his sight. Likewise here, "all their lifetime" is equivalent to saying, "as long as they were unconverted -- until the time of regeneration and faith in Christ."

Old Testament Believers Did not Live in Grievous Bondage Question: Did Old Testament believers live in grievous bondage to governors, priests, angels, and devils?

Answer: Some answer affirmatively, and we answer negatively. They did indeed have many tribulations in this present life -- as do New Testament believers. They were obligated to obey principalities, and listen to the priests and the prophets, just as we are to do in the New Testament. They were subject to the assaults of Satan, just as we are in the New Testament. However, such grievous dominion and slavery as is suggested we fully deny.

(1) Old Testament believers did have Christ as their vicarious Surety; they therefore also had a true, saving faith, complete justification and forgiveness of sins, the Spirit of adoption, peace of conscience, and joy in God -- which has previously been proven. Who shall lay any charge against the elect of God who are in such a state? They cannot be subject to such grievous bondage.

(2) To whom were believing governors and priests then to be subject? -- to other governors and priests? Did they become violent toward each other? Was the tribe of Levi lord and master over the other tribes? And did the governors rule over religious affairs and church people in an ecclesiastical sense? These and similar absurdities follow from such assumptions, proving that these propositions themselves are absurd.

(3) Did such dominion by governors, priests, angels, and devils pertain to the body or the soul? It neither pertained to the soul, the conscience, nor to religious practice; these are only subject to God, and one is to be obedient to God alone in these matters. If it pertained to the body alone, it was either a punishment or a chastisement. It was not a punishment, for sin having been forgiven, no punishment remains. If it were a fatherly chastisement, it would not pertain to the point of contention.

Objection #1: "Now I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world" (Galatians 4:1-3). The apostle is here speaking of the Old Testament church, declaring that it differs nothing from a servant or from a slave, but that it is the same as being under bondage -- under tutors and governors, which are the angels, governors, and priests.

Answer (1) Why are devils not mentioned along with these? Furthermore, some governors and priests were thoroughly ungodly people. Wretched child who is subject to such tutors and guardians!

(2) The text consists of an analogy and its application. The analogy is in the first and second verses, and the application is in the third verse. It is a known fact that every analogy is not true in every detail, but only insofar as the objective of the analogy is concerned. This is very evident here, for tutors and guardians are appointed over those children whose fathers are deceased; however, the Father of the church is the God who lives forever. A child who is subject to tutors differs much from a servant. He is clothed better, eats better, is raised in a more relaxed setting, is served, and is not assigned to do slavish labor, etc. The analogy here only pertains to the enjoyment and use of the possession of which the child is the proprietor. The child has no more of this than the servant. However, what benefit did the Old Testament church not possess? It was Christ who had been promised to them in the flesh, but who had not come as yet. The Old Testament church did indeed partake of Him, but they did not actually possess Him as far as His coming was concerned. This is evident in verse 4 which follows immediately: "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law."

(3) Who were the tutors and governors? Were they angels, authorities, or priests? This is absolutely not the case; the text itself states who they were: the elements of the world, the ceremonies. By these they were, so to speak, led by the hand to Christ. These preserved them from errors in religious worship, doctrine, and life. These ceremonies were the foundational principles -- the ABC's whereby they became acquainted with Christ, although they differed much from the matter itself: Christ in the flesh. To these ceremonies they were in bondage. In this way they worshiped -- not the ceremonies, for that would be idolatry -- and served God by means of this divinely instituted service. These ceremonies were the parameters for their religious worship, and directed them to the exercises of faith in Christ. Thus, there is nothing to be found in this text in support of such a grievous state of Old Testament believers. On the contrary, it describes their blessed state, showing how they had been provided for by God so well; that is, in accordance with the time in which they lived, prior to Christ's coming.

Objection #2: "And having spoiled principalities and powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (Colossians 2:15). The principalities and powers are the angels, authorities, and priests in the Jewish church. They were as a garment behind which Christ, the eternal King, was hidden. However, Christ by His coming has laid them all aside as a garment and deposed them from their offices, so that they no longer have any authority in the New Testament.

Answer: The principalities and powers mentioned here are neither angels nor earthly authorities and priests. These principalities were enemies of Christ, of whom He has made an open show (Greek: stripped of everything), as is done to a conquered enemy. The garment implied here is not placed between Christ and those powers which conceal Christ. Rather, it refers to the garments worn by the enemies which were removed from them. If these were the garments of the ceremonies, they would have been the garments of Christ and Christ would have removed Himself. Christ triumphantly led about the enemies -- as was customary during that era. The conquered enemies were led about as captives in bonds and made a public display for everyone to see when the general triumphantly made his entry. Angels and principalities were, however, not the enemies of Christ, and thus they cannot be intended here. Even the angels were not types of Christ, and the principalities and priests did not make up the garments of Christ. Instead, the principalities and powers are the devils; they carry this name. "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places" (Ephesians 6:12); "... according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Ephesians 2:2). The Lord Jesus bruised their head and destroyed them in His death (Hebrews 2:14-15); He made an open show of and triumphed over them.

Objection #3: "For unto the angels hath He not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak" (Hebrews 2:5). The law has been given by angels (cf. Acts 7:53; Galatians 3:19; Hebrews 2:2). Thus, by way of the giving of the law, they have been established as masters and gods over the Old Testament church. However, He has not put the New Testament church in subjection to them. Therefore, by denying subjection to angels in the New Testament, their dominion in the Old Testament can be concluded.

Answer (1) The fact that the law was given into the hands of Moses by means of the angels does not vest them with the least dominion over the church. No less does the fact that they were the first messengers of Christ's birth and resurrection give them dominion over the New Testament church. In both cases, the angels were but ministering spirits.

(2) The text is a comparison between angels and Christ -- not between the Old and New Testaments. The apostle hereby wishes to display the eminent glory of the Lord Jesus -- just as he does in the previous chapter by comparing Him to angels. "Being made so much better than the angels. ... For unto which of the angels said He at any time ..." (Hebrews 1:4-5). So it is here: He did not bring the world to come into subjection to the angels, but to the Son, of whom He speaks in the following verses.

(3) To conclude from the negation that since the world to come has not been put into subjection to the angels, and therefore the world of the past -- the Old Testament church -- had been put into subjection to the angels, is selfcontradictory. It would then follow that the church from Adam to Moses, as well as after the giving of the law (and thus prior to the sin with the golden calf, which the disputants focus on), would have been subject to the angels, a supposition they themselves deny. The Old Testament church also existed during that era. There is no evidence whatsoever that the angels were given more dominion over the church subsequent to the incident with the golden calf than was given beforehand.

(4) The conclusion is invalid, for otherwise it would also be evident that whatever does not apply to the world to come is applicable for the past world. This would mean that since the world to come is subject to Christ, the world of the past was not; and since in the New Testament the angels are not crowned with honor and glory, they necessarily were in the Old Testament. What other absurdities could we then deduce by way of such a conclusion? However, the texts speak of a comparison between Christ and the angels in order to demonstrate the excellency of Christ, rather than of a display of the power of the angels in the Old Testament and the reduction of that power in the New Testament.

Objection #4: "Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but He for our profit, that we might be partakers of His holiness" (Hebrews 12:9-10). The "fathers of the flesh" were the priests and the elders of the people. They compelled the people to observe the ceremonial laws, and punished them according to their whim.

Answer (1) To be delivered from such fathers of our flesh would be good indeed! It is our wish that we may continue to be delivered from them and that we shall not have such fathers of the flesh again who would chastise us according to their whim. What a sad state of affairs that would be!

(2) We readily admit that the authorities in the Old Testament governed the people and punished those who disobeyed God and the government. The priests taught the people, guided and directed them in the way of godliness, and exercised ecclesiastical discipline. We also admit that the people were obliged to have respect for them. Thus did matters transpire then, and this is how they must transpire in the New Testament. Both parties -- that is authorities and subjects, as well as priests, elders, and members of the church -- must do all things according to the precepts of God's Word, rather than establish their own will as a law in both government and obedience.

(3) We fervently deny, however, that the apostle is here speaking of the Old Testament or of the authorities and priests in those days. There is nothing whatsoever here to indicate that. We deny that the authorities and teachers of the Old Testament have ever been referred to as fathers of the flesh. Let any proof for either proposition be presented.

(4) Rather, "the fathers of the flesh" refer to natural parents; this is the reason why their children are called "children of the flesh." "They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God" (Romans 9:8); "But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh" (Galatians 4:23). The text in question only shows that as the primary meaning of "fathers of the flesh," one is to understand natural parents who chastise their children as it pleases them in order to raise them well. We must adhere to this literal meaning, unless a valid reason presents itself to deviate therefrom -- which is not at all the case here. The apostle hereby encourages the believing Hebrews to be patient in their suffering for the faith, by using as an argument the manner in which natural parents chastise their children for their benefit. He applies this to the spiritual, saying that God is exalted above all and thus pursues a superior objective with His chastisements. We must therefore with patience submit to the Father of spirits. He is referred to as such not in contrast with the Old Testament, but rather in contrast with the soul and body of man, whose body is of the flesh from the seed of the parents, and whose soul is created immediately of nothing at the moment of its generation.

Objection #5: "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death" (Revelation 12:9-11). Here is spoken of a battle in heaven (Revelation 12:7) -- heaven being understood to refer to the church. The devil was conquered and expelled from the church at the occasion of Christ's death, resurrection, and ascension. Consequently, it follows that Satan previously resided in the church and had power to instill terror and fear in believers due to their unrequited guilt.

Answer (1) We deny that heaven is to be understood to mean the church. John was in the Spirit; a prophetic vision is recounted here. As long as it cannot be proven that heaven is to be understood as referring to the church, the entire argument is without foundation.

(2) How was the devil in the church? As a member? If so, was it as a common member, or as an elder? Choose either; it is foolishness, no matter what! One cannot be part of the church in any different way; nevertheless, the objectors say that the devil was in the church, since there was a battle in heaven and the devil was cast out. We admit that he, not being in the church, assaults the church from without in both the Old and New Testament dispensations. However, this cannot support their sentiments.

(3) The casting down of and triumphing over the devil is here ascribed to believers; that is, to faithful martyrs who, for the cause of Christ, had no regard for their lives -- even unto death. They have overcome the devil by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. This indicates that this did not occur during the time frame of Christ's death, resurrection, and ascension.

(4) The event that transpired here did not occur until three hundred years later when the persecutions by the heathen emperors came to an end under the emperor Constantine the Great. We shall prove this later on when discussing this chapter Revelation 12:1-17. The Ceremonies were a Divine Blessing Rather than a Judgment Imposed in Response to the Golden Calf Episode

Question: Were the ceremonies of the Old Testament blessings from God, or were they a punishment imposed in response to the golden calf?

Answer: Some maintain the latter; we adhere to the former. As time progressed, God caused His church to grow. In this respect we may distinguish between three phases as far as age is concerned: The time from Adam to Abraham is childhood; the time from Abraham to Christ constitutes youth; and the time from Christ until the judgment is manhood -- even though these occurred under varying circumstances. By reason of Christ's coming, the church increased in the light, and the closer the coming of Christ approached, the clearer the prophets revealed this mystery. Those who consider the church prior to Sinai to be more eminent than after, and that God penalized them for the sin of the golden calf by imposing a yoke and the servitude of a multitude of ceremonies upon them, are in error. The fact is that the church continually grew and increased; and the ceremonies, being part and parcel of the precious and saving gospel, were and remained singular blessings. We shall show this to be true as follows:

First, that which is a privilege, of eminent glory, and to the benefit of a people cannot be a punishment imposed upon them for a given sin. The ceremonies and the ceremonial service, however, were a privilege of eminent glory and of benefit to Israel after the time of Moses; thus they were not a punishment imposed upon them because of the sin of the golden calf. The first premise is so very obvious to human reason that none will deny it. The second premise is confirmed by the apostle. "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way" (Romans 3:1-2); "Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises" (Romans 9:4); "And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron" (Hebrews 5:4). Thus, the conclusion is firm: The ceremonies are not judgments, but are blessings.

Secondly, the Israelites recognized the entire ceremonial worship in all its particulars, not as a punishment, but rather as a peculiar blessing.

(1) They made a show of and boasted of the ceremonies. "Behold, thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law. ... Thou that makest thy boast of the law" (Romans 2:23).

(2) They were grieved and had sorrow when they had to miss this blessed service (cf. Psalms 79:1-13; Psalms 80:1-19; Psalms 102:1-28). "Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar!" (Psalms 120:5-6); "When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the house of God" (Psalms 42:4).

(3) They longed greatly for the exercises of the ceremonial service. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?" (Psalms 42:1-2); "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in His temple" (Psalms 27:4).

(4) From the ceremonial service they derived the joy and strength of their soul. "To see Thy power and Thy glory, so as I have seen Thee in the sanctuary" (Psalms 63:2).

(5) They delighted themselves in the ceremonies and could not get enough of it. "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of Thy house" (Psalms 36:8); "We shall be satisfied with the goodness of Thy house, even of Thy holy temple" (Psalms 65:4).

(6) They rejoiced exceedingly when they had the privilege of serving in the temple. "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord" (Psalms 122:1).

(7) They thanked and glorified God for it. "Praise ye the Lord: for ... He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for His judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord" (Psalms 147:1; Psalms 147:19-20). All this shows very plainly that they did not consider the ceremonial service to be a punishment, but rather as a great blessing.

Thirdly, the gospel is a blessing, not a punishment. However, the ceremonies and all that was ceremonial constituted the gospel. The ceremonies declared to the people that Christ would come; they taught them how Christ would pay for their sins; they sealed to them the forgiveness of sins, received through Christ by faith. Thus, rather than a punishment, they were a blessing.

Fourthly, the state of the church after Sinai and subsequent to the sin with the golden calf was more eminent than the state of the church prior to Sinai. Thus, the laws given them at Sinai were not judgments to make the church more wretched than before. "The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day" (Deuteronomy 5:2-3); "These are the words of the covenant, which the Lord commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab, beside the covenant which He made with them in Horeb" (Deuteronomy 29:1). God had solemnly established the covenant of grace with Israel. This is stated to be a blessing whereby they excelled the fathers. God renewed that very same covenant in a solemn manner in the fields of Moab. Moses even elevated the state ensuing from this event above the state of Israel at Horeb, having in addition to the first transaction the repetition and solemn confirmation of that very same covenant. If the ceremonial worship had indeed been a judgment relative to the golden calf, then a solemn repetition of that covenant which had been made prior to the incident of the golden calf could not have taken place. Instead, God would have removed Himself further and would have maintained more of a distance from them.

Fifthly, the greater part of the ceremonial laws had been given prior to the sin with the golden calf, and therefore they cannot be a judgment upon that sin. These pertained to the sacrifices, the distinction between clean and unclean cattle, circumcision, the Passover, the firstborn, the washings, the priests, the feast days, and the entire tabernacle along with the altars, the ark, and the sacrifices. All of these had already been instituted and given prior to the sin with the golden calf. Thus, the ceremonies cannot be a judgment upon that sin. Was the gospel transformed into a judgment after this sin? Absolutely not! To suggest this cuts a tender and godly person in the heart, and does injustice to the goodness of God.

Objection #1: "Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live" (Ezekiel 20:25). God is the Giver of these laws. These laws were not the moral law, for they were unto life for those who did them (Ezekiel 20:11; Ezekiel 20:21). Rather, they were the ceremonial laws, which are referred to as the law of a carnal commandment Hebrews 7:18, as being weak and unprofitable Hebrews 7:18, and as incapable of giving life (Galatians 3:21). God had given these laws to them since they already had broken the moral law, the breaking of which can be no other sin but the idolatry committed with the golden calf. Thus, the ceremonial laws were given as a judgment upon the sin with the golden calf.

Answer: First, far be it from the Almighty to be unrighteous; far be it from the holy God to give unrighteous and evil laws! All the laws which God has ever given were good and unto life; this is true for the moral law and the ceremonial laws. "Thou ... gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments" (Nehemiah 9:13); "To keep the commandments of the Lord, and His statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good" (Deuteronomy 10:13). In substance the ceremonies and sacrifices consisted of the flesh and blood of animals; the apostle therefore calls them carnal commandments. The ceremonies were given in order to be united with the antitype, Jesus Christ, and constituted the gospel by which Christ was both proclaimed and offered. However, they were not given to exist and to be performed independently -- that is, divorced from the antitype -- and in order thereby to bring about atonement. They were too weak and ineffectual to accomplish that. They did not have the inherent ability to make alive; else it would have been unnecessary for Christ to have died. United with the antitype, however, they were both necessary and beneficial. We deny that these laws which were not good are to be understood as referring to the ceremonial laws. This cannot be proven. Those laws which were not good pertained to the sacrificing of their children by causing them to pass through the fire -- and thus pertained to a fabricated worship of idols, as is confirmed in the next verse (Ezekiel 20:26).

Secondly, the reason for the giving of these laws was not the sin with the golden calf. This is not even mentioned in this chapter -- yes, there is not even one word or argument which would lead one's thoughts in that direction. Therefore, to introduce the golden calf here and to propose it as being the cause of the giving of the ceremonial laws is nothing but a fabrication. This is furthermore evident from the fact that the ceremonial laws already had been given prior to the incident with the golden calf; consequently, this cannot be the cause for the giving of these laws. Other sins are delineated here as being the cause for the giving of these laws, namely, the entire sequence of the sins of the people of Israel from their residence in Egypt until the time of Ezekiel.

Among them is even mentioned the transgression of the ceremonial laws, such as the desecration of the sabbaths, which pertains not only to the Sabbath of the seventh day, belonging to the moral law, but to the several sabbaths which belong to the ceremonies. Therefore, the reference here is neither to the ceremonies nor to the calf.

Thirdly, God is said to have given these evil laws, not by way of command, but by way of permission, punishing sin with sin. This is very evident in the following verse (Ezekiel 20:26): "And I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb." Just as God polluted them by way of the commission of sin, so He likewise gave them evil laws. Both occurred by way of permission, that is, by giving them over to themselves. Such a manner of speech occurs frequently in God's Word. "For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections" (Romans 1:26); "Because the Lord hath said unto him, Curse David" (2 Samuel 16:10); "So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels" (Psalms 81:12). The judgment God executed upon the sin with the golden calf is described by Stephen: "And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands. Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven" (Acts 7:41-42). The meaning of this text Ezekiel 20:25 is as follows: Since Israel was so ungodly, and persisted so stubbornly and rebelliously in sin, God departed from them and gave them over to all manner of dreadful idolatry by permitting them to fabricate their own religion and to make laws accordingly. These were not good and thereby they would not live; whereas by virtue of the keeping of God's laws they would have lived. However, these laws which they themselves had fabricated would be unto death for them.

Objection #2: "... to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?" (Acts 15:10); "... and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Galatians 5:1). A yoke, the yoke of bondage, is a judgment. The ceremonies are a yoke, however, and thus they are a judgment.

Answer (1) What mention is made here of the golden calf? Such would have to be the case, would it not? Thus, it cannot be concluded from this text that the ceremonies are a judgment in response to the golden calf.

(2) Circumcision is the point of discussion here, as it belonged to the ceremonial service. Circumcision had already been instituted several hundred years prior to the incident with the golden calf. Was circumcision therefore also a judgment upon Abraham? How then could it have been the seal of the righteousness of faith? How can a sacrament of the covenant of grace be a judgment?

(3) The gospel is also referred to as a yoke, albeit an easy yoke (Matthew 11:29-30). Thus, one cannot deduce a judgment from the word "yoke." God wills that His children be not licentious. Instead, He sets boundaries and subjects them to Himself -- that is, to His laws which He imposes upon them as a yoke so that they might be of service to Him. Is being of service to God -- being under His yoke -- a judgment?

(4) A yoke implies bondage; however, a yoke that is unbearable does not imply judgment, but rather difficulty and distress. A matter is either impossible in and of itself -- such laws the righteous God has not imposed upon anyone -- or a matter is unbearable due to the weakness of man, a weakness into which he has brought himself. This is true for the moral law which sinful man cannot keep. The very best among men daily offend in many things. Since the moral law is an unbearable burden for sinful man, does that mean therefore that it is a judgment? The same also applies to the ceremonial laws. They were demanding and difficult, and even in an outward sense it was difficult to observe them without becoming defiled in some way. It does not follow, however, that they were a greater judgment than the moral law. They were nothing but blessings, even though they were demanding for the flesh. If someone must journey several miles to hear a sermon, it is indeed inconvenient; however, it is not a judgment, but a blessing, for by way of this difficulty he may still receive the Word.

Objection #3: "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgression" (Galatians 3:19). Was the ceremonial law (this is the law of which the apostle speaks) added to the promise because of the transgression? Then it is a judgment upon sin.

Answer (1) Once again, no mention is made of the calf, which is the issue being disputed. This renders the objective to use this text invalid.

(2) We deny that the apostle here has the ceremonial law in view. That would have to be proven. It is just an assumption, and whoever does not wish to believe this is free in this.

(3) The ceremonial laws were already partially in existence when Abraham received the promise. Therefore, the apostle cannot have them in mind. The fact that something is more or less true does not change the nature of a matter.

(4) Even though we do not wish to exclude the ceremonial laws from this chapter, it is nevertheless evident that the apostle has the law of the ten commandments in view. He speaks of that law which brings a curse upon the person who is subject to that law (Galatians 3:10); by the works of which no one can be justified (Galatians 3:11); which is contrasted with faith (Galatians 3:13); and which by angels has been placed in the hands of the Mediator (Galatians 3:19). This law is not the ceremonial law, but the law of the ten commandments.

(5) Paul does not ask why or for what reason the law has been given, but rather for what purpose, to what end, and for what use it has been given. Since the inheritance is not by the law but by the promise, he asks whether the law has then been given in vain. Does the law then have no purpose? "Yes, it does indeed," so states the apostle; "it has been added to the promises charin [for the purpose of], or charin ton parabaseon [to the end], that is, 'because of the transgressions.'" The purpose was that one would know his transgressions by means of the law, and thus be drawn away from his own righteousness as a means unto justification by seeking the promise in the law. Its purpose is that one would seek to obtain the inheritance by faith in Jesus Christ. Observe this in the following verses: "But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith" (Galatians 3:22-24). The apostle shows this to be the purpose in Romans 5:20: "Moreover the law entered, that the offence might abound." Thus, the phrase "because of transgressions" does not relate to the cause of the giving of the law, as if the giving of the law were a judgment upon sin; rather, it speaks of the purpose for which the law was given: to know sin.

116. Chapter 6: The New Testament Church from the Birth of Jesus Christ to the Revelation of ...

----- CHAPTER SIX ----- The New Testament Church from the Birth of Jesus Christ to the Revelation of John The Life and Ministry of Jesus Christ

Having considered the state of the church from Adam to Abraham, and from Abraham to Christ, which constitutes the Old Testament era and the administration of the covenant of grace during those periods, we shall now proceed to consider the New Testament church. We shall commence by considering the birth and death of the Lord Jesus Christ. He was the focal point of all the prophecies. All the types pointed to Him. When the time arrived which God had decreed in His counsel, denominated by Paul as the fullness of time Galatians 4:4, God sent forth the angel Gabriel to Zacharias, a priest, and announced to him that his wife Elizabeth (even though they were both of great age) would bear a son whose name would be John, that is, delightful one. He would be the forerunner of the Lord Jesus, and according to prophecy would go before Him in the spirit and power of Elijah. Approximately six months later the angel Gabriel was sent to Mary, a very godly virgin of the seed of David, and made known to her that by the creative operation of the Holy Spirit she would conceive and bear a Son. She was commanded to name Him Jesus, as He would be the Savior. At the conclusion of nine months, she bore her first born son, who had been promised for a period of approximately four thousand years, and whom believers had already anticipated with great yearning. Subsequent to this, heaven and earth came into motion. An angel announced the birth of the Savior to some shepherds, which was confirmed by a multitude of angels glorifying God with these words, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14). Thereafter the shepherds went to Bethlehem and found the newborn Savior wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. They made this known everywhere. Subsequently, prominent wise men came from the east to Jerusalem, asking for the newborn King of the Jews. This caused great consternation in all of Jerusalem. Herod convened the great council of the chief priests and scribes in order to learn from them where the promised Messiah would be born. Thereupon he sent the wise men to Bethlehem. They found and glorified Him by way of an extraordinary star that went before them and remained standing above the place where Jesus was. The birth of the Lord Jesus received even more publicity through the murdering of the children of two years old and under -- a murder committed by Herod in Bethlehem and its surrounding region in order to kill the infant Messiah, whom he expected to be among those children. Joseph and the mother of Jesus, having been admonished by divine revelation, fled with Him to Egypt. Upon returning to the Jewish nation, they set up their residence in Nazareth in Galilee. Jesus at twelve years of age so manifested a glimpse of His divinity while in the presence of the doctors in the temple that they were astonished about His understanding.

After Jesus remained in hiding until His thirtieth year, John the Baptist began to preach, baptize, and prepare the way for the Lord Jesus. The Lord Jesus came to him and was baptized by him. John, knowing who Jesus was, made Him known to the people. Subsequently, the Lord Jesus appeared in public and preached in a most powerful and delightful manner. He showed Himself to be the Savior by performing innumerable miracles which resulted in the healing and deliverance of numerous wretched ones. Consequently the people clung to Him, and His reputation not only pervaded the Jewish nation, but also went forth into various regions and nations outside of Canaan. Since He neither came with external pomp nor made any move toward the establishment of an earthly kingdom and the deliverance of the Jewish people from the dominion of the emperor -- and being esteemed by the people above the Pharisees and scribes -- they were filled with envy and hatred toward Him, and therefore sought to kill Him. The Lord, upon having finished His course, gave Himself as a ransom for the elect by the accomplishment of His sacrifice. He permitted Himself to be taken captive and to be subjected to all that was prophesied concerning Him -- even to His being put to death on the cross. After the third day He arose again; He ascended into heaven after forty days. Ten days later, on the day of Pentecost, He poured out His Spirit upon the apostles. By the agency of their preaching in various languages, three thousand people were converted in one day, and as they continued to preach and perform miracles, a large multitude of many thousands of Jews believed in Christ. These blessings were not restricted to the Jews only, but the gospel was also proclaimed among the Gentiles who were very desirous to hear and receive it, and were thus converted.

Prior to this, the Lord, by means of many internal and external adversities, had dispersed a large portion of the Jewish nation among numerous nations under the sun. Of those dispersed Jews an innumerable multitude, in obedience to God's command, came every year to Jerusalem to celebrate the three feasts. Since Easter and Pentecost follow shortly upon each other, most who came from a great distance stayed in Jerusalem in order to celebrate both feast days. The Lord ordered in His providence that Jesus was crucified on the Passover, arose after three days, and that the Holy Spirit was poured out in an extraordinary manner upon the day of Pentecost -- and thus a large multitude of Jews received Christ as the long-promised Messiah. This paved the way for the conversion of the Gentiles, for upon returning to their native country, these Jews would recount there all that had happened, namely, all that had transpired in Jerusalem as well as that Jesus had been acknowledged and received by many as the Messiah. The dispersed apostles -- and other believers upon arriving in their native land -- subsequently gained entrance among the Jews, and by reason of that opportunity, among the Gentiles. The Gospel Sent Forth to the Gentiles As the gospel increased among the Jews, the devil did not sit still. He stirred up his instruments against the Christian Jews. The deeply rooted hatred against Christ and against all who believed in Him and acknowledged Him to be the Messiah, stirred up the chief priests and scribes to persecute the congregations in Jerusalem and Judea to the utmost of their ability. To accomplish this, they stirred up the chief magistrates as much as possible to lend a hand at times in the work of persecution. The more the persecutions intensified, however, the more powerfully the gospel broke forth. At last there ceased to be conversions among the Jews; blindness came upon the entire nation, and the gospel was unanimously rejected. It was thus in this way that the gospel resided among the Gentiles. One must be amazed that the gospel spread so rapidly among the Gentiles, permeating within a short time Asia, Africa, and Europe. "... their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world" (Romans 10:18). The Lord was found of them that sought Him not, and was revealed to them that asked not for Him (Romans 10:20). Thus, all the prophecies concerning the calling of the Gentiles were fulfilled, and the Lord Jesus received His promised portion: "Ask of Me, and I shall give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession" (Psalms 2:8); "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth" (Psalms 72:8). The gospel having been confirmed among the Gentiles and the Jewish nation having been blinded, the Lord poured out His wrath in an extraordinary manner upon that ungrateful, wicked, and God-forgetting people -- a people who had wished upon them and their children the blood of the Lord Jesus, whom they had rejected and whose death they had required. He gave Jerusalem into the hands of Titus Vespasianus, who burned and levelled Jerusalem to the ground in approximately AD 70 or AD 72. This occurred approximately forty years after the ascension of Christ. The Lord dispersed the Jewish nation among all the nations of the earth, and wheresoever they dwell it is in utter shame and contempt -- which remains upon them everywhere until this very day. Thus, the city which once was the jewel of all the earth, the perfection of beauty, and the gathering place of God's people for His worship, was destroyed to such an extent that the place was no longer recognizable. The temple, wherein the ceremonial worship had been performed and where God dwelt between the cherubim, was removed along with all the ceremonial services which long since had ceased to have a purpose and had become unprofitable. The gospel, however, was dispersed among those Gentiles who worshiped God in spirit and in truth.

Differences Between the Old and New Testament Church as to the Manner of Worship

There is a great distinction between the church and her manner of worship in the Old Testament, and the church and her manner of worship in the New Testament. The latter greatly excels the former, doing so, among other things, in these four matters:

First, even though the same covenant, the same Mediator Jesus, and the same spiritual benefits were a reality in the Old Testament as much as they are today, the worship of God transpired by way of physical and visible matters which were shadows of the future Messiah and His works. It was indeed a most eminent blessing that the Messiah was daily depicted for them before their very eyes, and that by way of external washings they were led to the internal cleansing of the soul. However, as far as the body is concerned, it was a difficult and cumbersome service. It consisted of a multitude of duties to be performed: painful circumcision, a continual watching against touching or tasting something, and a multitude of washings and sacrifices for bodily defilements. In the New Testament, however, all these things have been eliminated, and instead of all physical performances, the Lord has instituted a more spiritual, exalted, visible, and thus a more immediate manner of worship. One now comes to the heart of the matter without shadows. "The true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth" (John 4:23). Now we may enter the sanctuary at once without shadows. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water" (Hebrews 10:19-22). No one may presently judge us "in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ" (Colossians 2:16-17). "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another" (Galatians 5:13).

Secondly, even though the church was comprised of various nationalities prior to the calling of Abraham, she nevertheless made little progress, and had little light and glory. After God made a covenant with Abraham, the Lord separated all other nations from him, permitting them to walk in their own ways; however, the church was comprehended among the descendants of Abraham through Isaac. "He sheweth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for His judgments, they have not known them" (Psalms 147:19-20). Subsequent to the coming of the Lord Jesus, however, that distinction among the nations has been removed. Yes, the Lord Jesus has given His old people over to blindness and accepted the Gentiles to be His people. "In every nation He that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him" (Acts 10:35); "But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For He is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in His flesh the enmity" (Ephesians 2:13-15). The Gentiles are now followers of Shiloh and are gathered unto Him, Genesis 49:10, and the root of Jesse has now become the banner of the nations (Isaiah 11:10). Now many nations go forth saying, "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths" (Isaiah 2:3); "It was necessary," says the apostle, "that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth. And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad" (Acts 13:46-48). Abraham has thus become an heir of the world Romans 4:17 and a father of many nations Romans 4:17 -- this because 1) Abraham, being an idolater, was called immediately; 2) his seed was instructed by him; and 3) through his seed the gospel was proclaimed and transferred to the Gentiles, through which they have believed in Christ, the promised seed of Abraham. "Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed" (Romans 9:7-8).

Thirdly, in the Old Testament the entire mode of worship was much stricter and functioned in a more legalistic manner. In the New Testament, however, everything is more evangelical and delightful. Consider the comparison: "For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest. ... But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels" Hebrews 12:18; Hebrews 12:22.

Fourthly, in the Old Testament everything was more scarce, fewer people truly believed, and those who were indeed believers possessed those spiritual benefits in a lesser degree and measure. However, in the New Testament there is an abundance of everything. From this issues forth:

(1) A greater measure of the Spirit. "For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour My spirit upon thy seed, and My blessing upon thine offspring: and they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courses" (Isaiah 44:3-4); "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out My spirit upon all flesh" (Joel 2:28). The Lord Jesus having come, He now baptizes His children with the Holy Ghost and with fire Matthew 3:11, pouring it upon them in abundance (Titus 3:6).

(2) A greater measure of light. Thus it had been prophesied: "... the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isaiah 11:9). And thus it also transpired: "But the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie" (1 John 2:27).

(3) A greater measure of holiness: "Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of My planting, the work of My hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time" (Isaiah 60:21-22); "... he that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David" (Zechariah 12:8); "... the Lord ... hath made them as His goodly horse in the battle. And they shall be as mighty men" (Zechariah 10:3; Zechariah 10:5); "Let the weak say, I am strong" (Joel 3:10).

(4) More familiarity and freedom in one's communion with God: "Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need" Hebrews 4:14; Hebrews 4:16.

(5) More comfort, peace, and joy. "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children" (Isaiah 54:13); "In His days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth" (Psalms 72:7). In light of the above (and other considerations), make a frequent comparison between the state of the church of the New Testament with the Gentiles who are utterly estranged from the gospel, with those heretical assemblies which have the name of being Christian, and also with the state of the church in the Old Testament. Then consider how gloriously our dispensation excels theirs, and:

(1) Rejoice in this. Oh, how the Old Testament believers yearned for this time! They prayed for it, sang about it, and rejoiced in it. And now that we are in this dispensation, should our hearts not be enlarged and rejoice in having all those blessings which they anticipated?

(2) Thank and glorify God concerning this. If the church of the Old Testament was so grateful for the promises of the ministry of shadows, how joyfully our souls ought to praise the Lord! Our mouths should be filled with His praises, continually giving Him both glory and honor.

(3) Walk therefore in that light in the way of holiness. "O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord" (Isaiah 2:5); "Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called" (Ephesians 4:1); "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ" (Php 1:27).

We have thus considered the rejection of the Jews and the receiving of the Gentiles to be the people of God. Here the following question needs to be answered:

Question: Will the Jewish nation always be a rejected nation, or will the entire nation yet come to repentance, believing and confessing that the Messiah has already come, and that Jesus is the Christ?

Answer: When speaking of the conversion of the Jews, we understand this to refer to the entire nation, and not only to Judah and Benjamin who had returned from Babylon and lived in Canaan until the destruction of Jerusalem. Rather, it also refers to the ten tribes. These tribes neither remained together nor are they hidden in an unknown corner of the world, as the Jews fabricate. Instead, they partially intermingled with the eastern nations, forsaking the Jewish religion. Another part, having dispersed themselves among the nations of the earth, continued to adhere to their religion; whereas a very large multitude also returned to Canaan and intermingled with the other Jews. Anna, the prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel from the tribe of Aser, served God at Jerusalem in the temple (Luke 2:36). Furthermore, very many from the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi did not return from Babylon. Among those who did return were also very many who again left their native land due to internal disturbances, and thus were dispersed throughout the entire world among various nations, still maintaining the Jewish religion. James wrote to the "twelve tribes which are scattered abroad" (James 1:1). The dispersed Jews came from all manner of nations to Jerusalem on the feast days for the purpose of worship, as is to be observed in (Acts 2:5-11).

After the destruction of Jerusalem, the entire Jewish nation was dispersed and no longer has a specific residence. We are speaking here of this nation without distinction, and we believe that it will acknowledge that Jesus is the Christ -- the Messiah who was promised in the Old Testament and anticipated by the fathers. This is the general sentiment of the theologians of all ages -- even Lutheran and papist theologians. There are, however, also those who doubt this, and some deny it. In order to confirm this matter, we shall not now say all that can be said about it. Rather, we shall only take two proofs from the New Testament and give them a place of prominence, since they are not subject to any evasive arguments of substance. After having given a clear exegesis of them, the few proofs we shall present from the Old Testament will give us more clarity and steadfastness in this matter. The Future Conversion of the Jews Examined in Light of Romans 11:1-36

Proof #1: This proof we derive from Romans 11:1-36. We shall give a brief exposition of the entire chapter, since the effectiveness of our proof is derived from the context. This chapter has three divisions: 1) a question which is presented by way of an objection (Romans 11:1-2), 2) the answer to that question (Romans 11:3-32), and 3) the conclusion (Romans 11:33-36).

First Division. The question is stated in Romans 11:1 : "I say then, hath God cast away His people?" By God's people the apostle understands the Jewish nation, which he generally refers to as Israel -- also in this chapter. God had given Jacob the name of Israel after he had wrestled with the Lord, and his descendants were called by this name. In order to eliminate any secret doubts, one ought to know that throughout the entire New Testament the name Israel is never assigned to believers, that is, the church of the New Testament. Rather, it is always understood that this refers to the Jewish nation; that is, in distinction to and separation from all other nations. Only two texts need to be clarified.

Question: "Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel: neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed" (Romans 9:6-8). Is not the apostle here referring to the believers among the Gentiles as Israel?

Answer: Not at all; the apostle does not speak here at all of the Gentiles, but strictly of the Jews. His objective is to prove that God has not annulled His covenant with Abraham and his seed, even though the majority of them have rejected the Messiah, have not believed in Him, and have been disobedient to the gospel. "Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect" (Romans 9:6).

God has not annulled His promises and covenant, for not all who descended from Abraham were partakers of the covenant and the promises. Ishmael and the children of Keturah did not belong to the covenant, but only Isaac. Furthermore, all of Isaac's children were not partakers of the covenant and the promises. Esau was cast out as an unholy one, but the covenant and the promises were Jacob's. And so it goes on, for even though many of Jacob's descendants were unbelievers in whom God had no pleasure, nevertheless God's covenant remains steadfast with him and his seed in his believing descendants, who are accounted as that seed. And thus they are not all Israel which are of Israel, that is, of Jacob. Furthermore, the conversion of the Gentiles did not constitute the confirmation of the covenant of Abraham and his seed, for then the covenant with Abraham and his seed would have been confirmed even if none of his natural seed had been converted. This would be absurd. Paul is speaking of his kinship according to the flesh and God's covenant with them, demonstrating that the covenant remains steadfast with them; that is, with the converted among them, even though many remained unbelievers. Thus, this text neither speaks of Gentiles at all, but only of Jews, nor does it call the New Testament church Israel.

Question #2: "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God" (Galatians 6:16). Are not all believers, Jews as well as Gentiles, here called Israel?

Answer: No; for the church at that time consisted of Jews, and the Gentiles, as wild branches, had been grafted into the olive tree. The believing Jews insisted that the Gentiles, who joined them and were united with them in the church, be circumcised. The apostle opposed this, declaring that neither circumcision nor uncircumcision was of any value or engendered any privilege when it comes to faith, but only a new creature (Galatians 6:15). While continuing to join circumcision and uncircumcision, he declared peace and mercy to be upon those who walk according to this rule; that is, upon the believers of the uncircumcision and of the circumcision. Then he calls the Israel of God, which is indicated by the word "and." If he had not been speaking of both Jews and Gentiles, the word "and" would not fit here. Rather, the apostle is saying that peace and mercy were upon the believing Gentiles as well as upon the believing Jews, thereby exhorting them not to quarrel over circumcision and uncircumcision. "Israel" therefore refers to believing Jews and not to believing Gentiles. As everywhere "Israel" is understood to refer to the Jewish nation, this is likewise true in this chapter. This is evident from the entire argument of the apostle, the purpose of which is to confirm that God has not annulled His covenant with Abraham and his seed, even though many would remain unbelievers. This covenant would not be confirmed by the conversion of the Gentiles, but by the conversion of the Jews during Paul's time and thereafter. God would indeed annul His covenant if the Jewish nation were cast away in its entirety -- and if this would continue to be so. Note the continual contrast between Israel and the Gentiles. Romans 10:20 : "I was found of them that sought me not"; these were the Gentiles. Romans 10:21 reads: "But to Israel He saith ..." This is likewise true in Romans 11:11 : "... through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles"; Romans 11:12 : "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world ..."; Romans 11:13 : "For I speak to you Gentiles ..."; Romans 11:14 : "If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh ..."; Romans 11:15 "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world ..."; and in Romans 11:24 the Gentiles are as branches of a wild olive tree contrasted with the Jews as being natural branches. From all this it is evident that the apostle is here speaking of the Jewish nation, which he calls "Israel," contrasting it with believing Gentiles.

He calls the Jewish nation, which at that time (after the conversion of the Gentiles) had been hardened and cast away by God, the people of God. "Hath God cast away His people?" He does not call them the people of God due to their faith and conversion, for they were unbelieving and disobedient; but because of the covenant which God had established with Abraham and his seed (Genesis 17:7). Peter demonstrates this as well: "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed" (Acts 3:25). We have dealt with this more extensively, so that in what follows there can be no resorting to the evasive argument that the apostle spoke of believing Gentiles, or also of believing Jews. The question is: "Hath God cast away His people?" This question has its origin in what has been stated in the previous chapter. The apostle, having confirmed that faith is by hearing, declares in Romans 10:18 that both Jews and Gentiles have heard the gospel, and that the Gentiles have received it (Romans 10:19-20), whereas the Jews rejected the Messiah, and thus had become a disobedient and gainsaying people. This the apostle confirms from the prophecies (cf. Daniel 12:11; Isaiah 65:2). Out of all this the following question arises: Since God had established an eternal covenant with Abraham and his seed that He would be their God and they would be His people, did not God indeed break His covenant with this nation and did He not ultimately reject it fully when the seed of Abraham had rejected the Messiah and God had withdrawn His Spirit and grace from them and forsaken them? That is the question -- the substance of the first portion of this chapter. The second part of the chapter is the response to this question -- which is twofold. The initial answer is brief, thereafter substantiated by various proofs. The short answer consists in a negation and in a confirmation of the opposite. The negation is not merely a factual statement, but it is stated with vehemence and indignation: "God forbid!" It is as much as to say, "It should not even enter one's thoughts." It is a sin to entertain doubts about this, for it is to doubt the faithfulness and veracity of God. Would God cast away His people? Would God break His eternal covenant established with Abraham and his seed? Would God be unfaithful? Would God not cause His Word to stand firm, and not fulfil His promises? That is impossible. The confirmation occurs by way of the vocabulary of the question, accompanied with an inner conviction: "God hath not cast away His people which He foreknew" (Romans 11:2). God will neither do it, nor intends to do it, nor is it possible that He would do it. He is the faithful God; they are His people, and they are His property from among all the generations of the earth. He has foreknown them. The foreknowledge of God whereby a given matter is predestined and predetermined makes this matter immovably sure. God has known and predestined Abraham's seed, and taken them into an eternal covenant with Himself. It is thus impossible that God would reject His people. They are His people and they will remain His people. He has known them as such and He will know them as such. The apostle adds various proofs to this, the essence of which is that God has neither cast away His people entirely, nor will cast them away ultimately. The apostle proves by his own example that God has not cast away His people entirely. He reasons as follows: "I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. However, I have not been cast away. Instead, I have been received, do believe, and am an apostle. Therefore, all of Israel has not been cast away."

"Furthermore, not only am I a believer who has been saved, but there is also a large multitude of Israelites with me. It is presently just as it was in the days of Elijah, who was of the opinion that all of Israel had forsaken the Lord and that he alone was left. God answered him, however, that there were yet seven thousand left. Likewise there are yet many thousands of Israelites who are faithful to the covenant, who acknowledge the Lord Jesus as the promised Messiah, and who believe in Him. This is therefore a certain proof that God has not rejected His people, but that there is yet a remnant according to the election of grace.”

Then the apostle proceeds to render proof that God will not ultimately, eternally, and completely cast away His people. In Romans 11:7-10 the apostle makes a distinction between the believing remnant of the Jewish nation and the bulk of that nation who not only were unbelieving, but also had been blinded to the gospel. He shows the cause thereof and the prophecies of it found in Isaiah 29:10 and (Psalms 69:22). Thereafter, he leaves the believing remnant to be what it is and no longer speaks of it. Instead, in what follows he speaks of this blinded nation, as is evident in nearly every verse. He speaks in Romans 11:11 of those who stumbled, in Romans 11:12 of those who have fallen, in Romans 11:15 of those who are cast away, in Romans 11:17-18 of natural branches which are broken off through unbelief, in Romans 11:25 of the blinded portion of the nation, and in Romans 11:28 of those who have become enemies for the sake of the gospel. Concerning this blind nation he declares that it would not always remain an outcast, but that there would come a time when God would convert them and bring them to Himself. In their state of exile He still has His eye upon them, thereby maintaining the isolation of this nation. Hereby their conversion, and thus the immutability of God's covenant with Abraham and his seed, would be all the more obvious.

Concerning this blinded Israel the apostle asks in Romans 11:11, “Have they stumbled that they should fall”; that is, in order that they would remain in their fallen state? His initial answer is brief, and thereafter he enlarges and proves his answer forcefully by way of four convincing arguments. He answers “God forbid” with the same earnestness, indignation, and abhorrence, saying how God would then break His covenant and not remain faithful to His promises. Man's unfaithfulness would then nullify God's faithfulness -- which is impossible. Therefore, he answers indignantly: God forbid; absolutely not; this cannot occur. They have not stumbled in order that they would fall and remain fallen. They will rise again and be converted, being aroused to jealousy (Romans 11:11). The entire fullness of the Jews will come in again (Romans 11:12). They will become delightful again (vs. 14> [Romans 11:14-23]). They will be grafted in again after they have been broken off (Romans 11:24). After their blindness and the coming in of the fullness of the Gentiles, “all Israel shall be saved” by the Deliverer which shall come out of Zion, “and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob” (Romans 11:26). They will again obtain mercy (Romans 11:31-32).

Having determined that blinded Israel shall come to repentance, he enlarges upon this by speaking of its excellency and benefit (Romans 11:11-15). If their fall be the riches of the world, how much more will this be true for their fullness, for that will be a most excellent change!

(1) Their fall is the salvation, the riches of the Gentiles -- of the world. It is not the essential cause, but rather the occasion. “It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles” (Acts 13:46).

(2) The steadfast faith and the holy life of the Gentiles will provoke blind Israel to jealousy, cause them to be zealous to acknowledge, believe in, and live out of the Messiah who had been promised to them and came forth from them. The apostle knew that it was not yet their time, and therefore he labored that he might save some of them. This obligation also devolves upon us, even though their general conversion will not occur as yet.

(3) The general conversion of Israel, who at present are blind, will bring about much more blessing, light, life, and zeal among the Gentiles than did their fall. "How much more their fullness" (Romans 11:12); "What shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead" (Romans 11:15). When God will fill this blind nation with His Spirit and grace, resulting in the acknowledging and receiving of the Messiah (David, their king), then a wondrous love, joy, and holiness in believing will manifest itself in them. It will be a more eminent time than the age of the apostles. The church of the Gentiles will be so quickened and revived by the conversion of Israel that her former state will appear to be such as the difference between a dead and a living person. The unconverted will be converted in great numbers, and the converted will become partakers of a wondrous increase in the measure of grace. Oh, what a glorious time this will be! Who will then be alive?

Hereupon the apostle demonstrates the absolute certainty of their conversion by comparing two matters. "For if the firstfruits be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches" (Romans 11:16). The first analogy is derived from their instituted form of worship, whereas the second is derived from a natural process known to all. Among the firstfruits, also the firstfruits of the dough had to be dedicated and sanctified to God (Numbers 15:20-21). Israel is called the firstfruits of God, for He claimed this nation for Himself from among the nations of the world (Jeremiah 2:3). This is also true for believers (James 1:18). By firstfruits the apostle does not understand so much the Jews who were converted at the beginning of the apostolic period, for he calls them a remnant (Romans 11:5). Such a conclusion would be very weak since many Jews were converted at the beginning, and then the entire nation ought to have been converted thereafter. Rather, by the firstfruits the apostle understands in particular Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to which could be added the Old Testament believers. By the root the apostle also understands Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, out of whom the entire nation sprang forth as branches. He states that if the one is holy, the other must be holy as well. The word "holy" here does not refer to internal holiness and virtue, but to 1) a being separated from others, as Israel was a separated people unto worship (Deuteronomy 7:6); and 2) a being devoted to God (Exodus 13:2). The latter occurs by entering into the covenant, be it in truth or in pretense (cf. Exodus 19:6; 2 Corinthians 7:14). Abraham is not to be noted here as the father of his natural descendants, such as Ishmael and the children of Keturah also were; rather, he is to be noted as the father of the covenant established with him and his seed in Isaac, and through Jacob. The dough is gathered together in a lump. From this lump, something is first taken and devoted to God, whereby the entire lump becomes holy and blessed to them. The root produces such branches as are of the same nature as the root. As the nature of the root is, so is the nature of the branches and the fruits. If, however -- thus speaks the apostle -- the firstfruits and the root are holy, that is, devoted and consecrated to God, then this is also true for the dough, and thus also the branches are holy. If Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are holy by virtue of the covenant, then also the entire nation is holy and consecrated to God. From this the apostle concludes that the nation neither will nor can be cast away forever, but will come to repentance and be received again by God. For if that were not to occur, and if they were to be cast away forever, then neither the dough would be sanctified by the firstfruits, nor would the branches be sanctified by the root. Since, however, they are sanctified thereby, the entire nation will also come to repentance. In Romans 11:17-24, the apostle applies this as a warning to the converted Gentiles. In this warning the apostle makes plain statements about the conversion of the Jews. He warns the Gentiles not to boast against the broken off branches, nor to be proud and conceited, despising blind Israel. For the Jews were the natural branches of the olive tree, whereas the Gentiles were grafted as wild olive branches into their stems -- into the covenant established with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They do not owe you any gratitude for having entered into covenant with God. Rather, they are the means that you have been brought into that same covenant established with them. You do not bear the root, but the root bears you. Furthermore, you are not to boast against them, thinking that God will cast them away forever. No, as natural branches they will again be grafted into their own olive tree. This is more compatible with nature, is easier to perform, and has better results than that you, being wild by nature, are grafted into their stem. The apostle proves this from the Old Testament Scriptures in Romans 11:25-27. He calls the conversion of blinded Israel a mystery. It was no mystery to anyone that during the times of the apostles a great multitude of the Jews believed in the Messiah. That was known to everyone. However, that this Israel, so hardened and hostile toward the gospel, would once embrace in faith, and with love and joy, the very gospel they now so hated, seemed entirely improbable -- and nevertheless, this would transpire. It would not be the conversion of only a few -- of a few individuals here and there -- but it would be a conversion of the entire nation. "And so all Israel shall be saved" -- that Israel, upon which hardening had been imposed, would once become so blessed that it would as yet turn to the Messiah. This does not mean that they will all be truly born again and become partakers of eternal salvation, but that they would all acknowledge and confess that Jesus is the Christ, the promised Messiah, the Savior. And when would this be? "... that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in" (Romans 11:25). This condition will last so long and no longer, until the harvest of the Gentiles, a multitude foreordained, would, prior to the conversion of the Jews, be brought to conversion. This does not mean that there would still be a large multitude left, but rather that when the gospel would have borne its fruit among the Gentiles, it would return to the blinded Jewish nation which would also believe -- a fact which would constitute a wondrous change and revival. The apostle calls this a mystery -- not because God did not reveal it to him until now, nor that it had not been foretold in the prophetic Scriptures, but because it was neither observed nor understood. He wanted people to know this, desiring that they would view and anticipate this as a matter which would certainly come about. He did not want them to become proud and conceited, and to despise the Jewish nation, but to have pity upon them and anticipate their conversion. This already had been prophesied before, and Paul mentions some declarations made by the prophets. "And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord" (Isaiah 59:20); "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days ... I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more" (Jeremiah 31:33-34). Here we can neither argue nor quarrel about whether these texts are to be applied to a different time period, for to do so is to argue with Paul who spoke and wrote being immediately and infallibly inspired by the Holy Spirit. He states that this points to the time when the fullness of the Gentiles will have come in. He asserts that these texts indicate that blind Israel will as yet come to repentance -- and that is the end of all arguments. The apostle adds in the last place a proof derived from the immutability of the covenant made with Abraham and his seed (Romans 11:28-32). In verse 28, the partakers of this covenant are described in a twofold manner in regard to their state. They are described in relation to the gospel, of which they are enemies (and therefore of all the Gentiles who have received the gospel); however, they are the beloved, not relative to their present state and as far as they individually are concerned, but relative to 1) the covenant with their forefathers: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and 2) election -- not in respect to eternal election unto salvation, but to their election as partakers of the covenant. "The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself" (Deuteronomy 7:6); "For the Lord hath chosen Jacob unto Himself, and Israel for His peculiar treasure" (Psalms 135:4). The apostle declares this covenant with them, even though they are presently enemies of the gospel, to be unbreakable and immutable. "For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (Romans 11:29). This is always, in all circumstances and for all persons, a matter of truth. Such is also the case with the calling of Abraham and with the covenant which God established out of free grace with him and his descendants through Isaac and Jacob. That covenant neither can nor will be changed, God being immutable. Israel, which is blind at present, will therefore not always continue to be cast away, but Israel will again obtain mercy (Romans 11:30-32). Just as you who are presently Gentiles have previously been disobedient to God and have received mercy by reason of Israel's disobedience, rejection, and persecution of the gospel, Israel will likewise, though presently disobedient (as was true for you previously), obtain mercy by reason of the mercy which you have obtained from God. When the Gentiles will flow to the gospel in great numbers, and will be filled with a great measure of the Spirit, grace, and holiness, blind Israel, being the people of God by virtue of the covenant, will become jealous of the fact that the Gentiles serve God and are loved by Him. Being aroused to diligence by the mercy and grace of God toward the Gentiles, they will then turn to the Lord. And after God will have concluded the entire nation under disobedience for a long time by giving them over to themselves and leaving them in their blindness and wickedness, He will then be merciful to them all and receive them again in grace. The third section of the chapter is found in the concluding verses -- Romans 11:33-36. This is an acknowledgment of the unsearchable wisdom of God in all His dealings, particularly with respect to His people. This is true relative to judgments and blessings, as well as to all the ways by which God rules His church and leads the elect unto salvation. When considering all this together, the attentive and truth-loving heart will be convinced that the apostle first concludes that God has not fully cast away His people, the people of Israel, for he himself, along with so many thousands, had believed in Christ, the promised Messiah. Following this, he made a distinction between the converted and blind Jews of that time, declaring, verifying, and confirming that this blind Israel will again return, be received, be grafted in, and obtain mercy after having been in a state of blindness for a long period; that is, after the fullness of the Gentiles will have come in. The Future Conversion of the Jews Examined in Light of 2 Corinthians 3:1-18

Proof #2: This proof of the anticipated conversion of the Jews we derive from 2 Corinthians 3:1-18. This conversion is emphatically affirmed in verse 16: "Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away." In order to understand the thrust of this verse, one needs to consider the context. The obscurity some consider to be in this text proceeds from a misunderstanding of the word "veil." They understand this "veil" to refer to the ceremonial worship, and "the end of that which is abolished" (2 Corinthians 3:13) to Christ. The extent to which this misses the mark will become evident by examining the context. The apostle is generally engaged in showing that the justification of the poor sinner cannot be acquired by the law -- neither by the moral law nor the ceremonial law when considered in and of themselves without being united to the antitype Christ, who is the soul of the ceremonies. The Jews understood the ceremonial law as such, considering it to be of the same nature as the moral law and therefore sought their justification in its observance. This is also the apostle's objective in this chapter, where he speaks of the ministry of death and condemnation, and of the ministry of righteousness. In this chapter, the Old Testament and its administration according to God's institution is not contrasted with the New Testament and its administration. It will become evident that the entire contents of this chapter contradict this; and the matters which are contrasted contradict this as well. Who would dare to say that the Old Testament and the administration of the ceremonies, the ceremonial worship as instituted by God, were a ministry of death and condemnation? Could the holy and good God bind man to such a ministry? Far be this from the Almighty! When the ceremonial worship was performed according to God's institution -- that is, by faith, leading the type to the antitype, and uniting the antitype, Christ, with the types -- believers served the Lord in a spiritual sense, and that ministry was unto life for them. On the contrary, to those in the New Testament who cling to external matters, not progressing to the exercise of a true faith in Christ, the ministry of the New Testament is a ministry of death and condemnation -- a savor of death unto death (2 Corinthians 2:16). The old administration could be performed in a spiritual manner, and the new administration can be performed in an external manner. Thus, the contrast here is not between the Old and New Testaments, but between the letter and the Spirit. The ministry of the Spirit is exalted above the ministry of the letter. The elevation of the ministry of the Spirit above the ministry of the letter occurs in three ways: 1) relative to what follows (2 Corinthians 3:6-7; 2 Corinthians 3:9); 2) relative to its glory (2 Corinthians 3:7-11); and 3) relative to its manner (2 Corinthians 3:12-18).

First, that which emanates from the letter and the Spirit is the following: "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life" (vs. 6). "The letter" is not to be understood to refer to the Old Testament and its administration (that the Old Testament is neither an external covenant, nor consists in the inheritance of Canaan, has been demonstrated at the appropriate place), for the Holy Spirit was also present in the Old Testament and that administration was also spiritual. Else no one in the Old Testament could have been saved nor would have been able to please the Lord -- not even Abel, whose sacrifices pleased the Lord (Hebrews 11:4). Thus, the Old Testament cannot be contrasted with the Spirit. Nowhere is this done, just as the Old Testament is never referred to as the letter.

"The letter" is also not to be understood as referring to the ceremonies, for in this chapter the apostle is specifically and literally focusing upon the moral law: "But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones ..." (2 Corinthians 3:7). When the countenance of Moses shone as he descended the mountain, he held two tables of stone upon which the moral law had been recorded (Exodus 34:29-30). However, by "the letter" the apostle understands the moral law in 1) its demand, "do this," 2) its promise, "the man that doeth these things shall live by them," and 3) its threat, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." If man adheres to the external aspect of the law and if he seeks his righteousness and salvation in this law, he cannot be saved. The ministry is a ministry of death and condemnation for him. If we assume (even though it is not true) that the apostle understood "the letter" to refer to the ceremonial laws -- like the Jews considered them, namely, as being of one and the same nature as the moral law, divorced from the antitype, their observance consisting in external deeds -- then the ministry was indeed a ministry of death and condemnation whereby no salvation could be obtained.

Therefore, “the letter” is to be understood as referring to the moral law in its demands, promises, and threats -- as being a condition of the covenant of works. Add to this the observance of the ceremonial law in regard to the external deeds, divorced from the antitype. It is this letter the apostle refers to as “the ministry of death” (2 Corinthians 3:7), and “the ministry of condemnation” (2 Corinthians 3:9), because man is not able to keep it, but transgresses it and thereby brings the curse due upon transgressors upon himself.

Over against this, he posits that which emanates from the Spirit. By “the Spirit” he understands Christ (2 Corinthians 3:17). “The Lord is that Spirit.” As Surety, Christ has rendered payment for all guilt by His suffering and death, and has by His obedience merited perfect holiness for His own. The ministry of the Spirit is the gospel in which Christ is offered and men are allured to come to Christ to be justified by His merits. This ministry makes alive. Hereby man is regenerated, justified, sanctified, and led to eternal salvation. By the covenant of works, that is by the law, no flesh can be justified. This is an impossibility as far as the law is concerned, for the law has been rendered ineffectual by the flesh (Romans 8:3). However, through Christ the ministry of the gospel has been held forth unto justification and life -- in the Old Testament in its promise, and in the New Testament in its fulfillment. This is the first contrast, by which the ministry of the Spirit, that is, of Christ, is so eminently elevated above the covenant of works -- its condition being the law of the ten commandments, engraven with letters upon tables of stone, and considered in its internal demands. As such there is no comparison, for the one kills and the other makes alive. The second distinction between the letter and the Spirit by which it is evident that the ministry of the Spirit is more excellent than that of the letter is the glory which is manifested in its administration (2 Corinthians 3:7-10). The letter had glory relative to:

- (1) the matter itself, its contents being love and pure holiness unto the glory of God;
- (2) its being given upon Mt. Sinai, which in every respect was awe-inspiring: the voice, the fire, the annunciation, and the inscribing upon tables of stone; and
- (3) its messenger, Moses, whose face shone to such an extent that when he came down the mountain with the tables of the law, one could not endure the shining of his countenance. The Spirit had glory relative to:

- (1) The Person of Christ, the express image of His Father’s glory, of whom the Father declared with an audible voice from heaven, “This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.” He revealed a glimpse of this glory upon the holy mountain.

- (2) The outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost upon the apostles, whereby they proclaimed the great deeds of the Lord in various languages, inspiring awe in all who heard them; as well as thereafter upon believers, whereby the assembly of believers inspired such fear that no one else dared to join with them.

- (3) The matters related to His administration; that is, the justification of the sinner to the glory of the righteousness, wisdom, and free grace of God.

- (4) The efficacy of His ministry in illuminating, converting, and rejoicing souls. Consider these two and compare them with each other. You will find that whatever is glorious has not even been glorified when considering how eminently the glory of the Spirit excels the glory of the letter. The glory of the letter, when compared with the glory of the Spirit, is extinguished, obscured, and becomes black, so to speak. The third aspect in which the Spirit is more excellent than the letter is the manner of administration. Moses' administration of the letter was accompanied by a veil (vs. 13> [2 Corinthians 3:13-17]), whereas the ministry of the Spirit consists in an uncovered countenance, observing not the glory of Moses, but the glory of the Lord in the face of Christ (2 Corinthians 3:18). The apostle dwells on this veil a bit longer in order to demonstrate the difference between the letter and the Spirit -- between the law and Christ. By the veil one is not to understand the ceremonies, for:

(1) the literal reference here is to the moral law inscribed with letters upon tables of stone (2 Corinthians 3:7);

(2) the ceremonies were not given to cover or conceal their antitype, Christ, but to reveal Him and by them to lead men to Christ;

(3) Old Testament believers were strongly encouraged to look to Christ -- yes, not to do so was sin. Evasive Argument: It was indeed not the objective of the ceremonies to conceal Christ, but the outcome was such due to the foolishness of men.

Answer (1) This is contrary to the text, which does not speak of an outcome due to chance, but of a deliberate purpose and objective, using the word "that."

(2) Many looked unto Christ through the ceremonies, doing so with intensity, longing, and yearning. Thus, the ceremonies did not have this effect with all. The best among them were those who "could not stedfastly look to the end of that which is abolished." Thus, one cannot understand the veil to refer to the ceremonies, and the most significant purpose of the ceremonies was therefore not the concealing of Christ. Instead, the veil upon Moses' countenance was a depiction of the veiling of the glory of the moral law as to its demands, promises, and threats, lest one would cling to that and seek his justification and salvation thereby. This would be ruinous for them and therefore the covering of Moses' countenance was a blessing; it kept them from a way which would not lead them to salvation. There was indeed glory in the law, but it could not justify man, as it had become ineffectual through the flesh. One may thus not cling to the law in that manner.

"The end of that which is abolished" does not refer to Christ, for:

(1) Christ is here contrasted with the letter, and thus He cannot be the end of the letter.

(2) They were indeed permitted to look intently upon Christ. They were obligated to do so, for to forbear doing so was sin. The purpose of this veil, however, was not to look steadfastly to the end, but to restrain anyone from doing so. Instead, "by the end of the letter" one is to understand the justification of man by the works of the law. To that end the law had been given to Adam, and in the keeping of the commandments is eternal life. The man who does these things shall live by them. That end neither can nor may be pursued in living according to this rule, for man cannot attain that end by the keeping of the law. If he were to cling to such keeping of the law, he would find himself deceived at last. That which is abolished is the letter, that is, the moral law -- not as far as its end is concerned whereto it had been given upon Sinai -- to be a rule of life for the partakers of the covenant, who do not seek their justification in the law, but rather in Christ. Instead, it is abolished by believers as far as:

(1) Being justified thereby, justification being impossible by way of the law due to sin. In this respect Christ takes the place of the law, relative to which the apostle says: "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Romans 10:4).

(2) Its condemning power over all who transgress the law -- as believers have done and do daily. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" (Galatians 3:13). Moses' veil was an indication that they had to look away from the law so as to be justified thereby. Instead, they had to be led by the law as a schoolmaster to Christ. The apostle applies this to the present state of the Jews in their blindness, doing so by transposing this to another matter (2 Corinthians 3:14-16). The apostle does not understand the veil to refer here to that which was upon Moses' countenance, but by way of analogy he refers to something that lays upon them as a covering veil. This veil is not upon their countenance, but upon their heart, intellect, and will. He understands hereby the ignorance and blindness of the heart of which the prophet speaks: "Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed" (Isaiah 6:9-10). The apostle applies this to Israel and its blindness during his time (Acts 28:26). This darkness lies upon them as a veil in the reading of the Old Testament, wherein Christ is clearly portrayed. They do not see Him there, however, and this veil remains upon them until this present day, and will remain upon them until it is done away for them in Christ. And indeed, it will once be taken away. They will one day turn to the Lord, as the apostle states in plain language in 2 Corinthians 3:16 : "Nevertheless when it (the people of Israel, and not this or that person) shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away." They will then know Christ, receive Him, and believe in Him, and with us "beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord" will be "changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord," Amen. The Future Conversion of the Jews Examined in Light of Matthew 23:38-39

Proof #3: This proof is derived from Matthew 23:38-39 : "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord." Here we have a prophecy concerning the destruction of Jerusalem (Matthew 23:38), followed by Christ being hidden from them. This is the blindness of Israel of which we have spoken in light of Romans 11:1-36. Here we have the designation of a time frame: "till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh." There will come a day that they will say, "Blessed is He that cometh"; "There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (Romans 11:26). Until then they will neither see, know, nor acknowledge Jesus -- however, no longer than that. Christ will then come again to His old people Israel and they will then be turned again.

"And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24). The Lord Jesus prophesied of the eradication of the Jewish nation and of the subsequent dispersion of the Jews among all the nations, as well as the long duration of the desolation of Jerusalem, designating the time when this dispersion and desolation would end as being when the times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled. This is identical to what the apostle says: "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery ... that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (Romans 11:25). The word "until" does not imply

“never,” but rather a certain moment; that is, after that time, when the fullness of the Gentiles shall have come in. Then will Israel no longer remain blind, and then Israel will repent, as is stated expressly in Romans 11:26 : “And so all Israel shall be saved.” The partial conversion during the time of the apostles is not the global conversion of Israel, but that of a small remnant. However, the blinded part of Israel would also be converted when the fullness of the Gentiles will have come in, and thus will all Israel be saved. If, therefore, their dispersion and the treading down of Jerusalem will last until the times of the Gentiles will have been fulfilled, there will most certainly be a restoration of the nation, not only in a spiritual sense, but also in a physical sense. This we shall now consider. The Future Conversion of the Jews Examined in Light of Isaiah 61:1-4

Proof #4: We derive this proof from Isaiah 61:1-11. “The spirit of the Lord GOD is upon Me; because the Lord hath anointed Me to preach good tidings ... to proclaim liberty to the captives” (Isaiah 61:1); “To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord” (Isaiah 61:2); “To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes ... that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He might be glorified” (Isaiah 61:3); “And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations” (Isaiah 61:4); “But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves” (Isaiah 61:6); “For your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double: everlasting joy shall be unto them” (Isaiah 61:7). Here a most excellent restoration of Israel after her destruction is prophesied -- according to body and soul. Nothing can be construed against this, except if one were to maintain that the prophet is speaking of the deliverance from Babylon. Since it is a certainty, however, that after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in 40 A.D., and the dispersion of the Jews by them, there will be a general restoration of the Jews -- as we have previously shown from the New Testament -- one would have to show from this text that the reference here is to the deliverance from Babylon rather than to their last conversion.

Objection: This is the point of contention, namely, whether such a conversion is to be anticipated.

Answer: If the matter itself has been confirmed from other texts, and one then arrives at this text, the point of contention is: Of which of the two deliverances does this text speak? If one claims that the reference is to the first, one will have to prove this to be so. However, let us consider the text by itself, and it will be proven that the reference here is not to the deliverance from Babylon, but to a deliverance of Israel which as yet has not transpired, but will occur.

(1) This deliverance after a lengthy desolation would occur after the coming of the Messiah. This is evident when we compare Isaiah 61:1-3 with Luke 4:14; Luke 4:21, where the Lord Jesus, having read this prophecy, states, “This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears.”

(2) This conversion and restoration would take place after a desolation of Canaan, the duration of which would be from generation to generation. It cannot be said of the captivity in Babylon, which lasted but seventy years, that it lasted from generation to generation, for the same generation returned. There were those among them who still had a good memory of the glory of the first temple (Ezra 3:12).

(3) They did not receive double after their deliverance from Babylon -- also not spiritually. Generally speaking, they were buried under a deep layer of ignorance, superstition, and ungodliness. How wretched was their condition when Christ came! After this deliverance, however, Israel would be "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He might be glorified." This was also not true in physical terms, for during the entire period from the restoration from Babylon until the destruction of Jerusalem, which is a period of approximately five hundred years, they have experienced nothing but unrest, troubles, wars, and their land being occupied. They did not possess their land, but were cast out -- as is the case until this day.

(4) Israel would be adorned with an extraordinary luster and glory after this deliverance. They would be called priests of the Most High. In the Old Testament, the priestly office was limited to the tribe of Levi, to the house of Aaron, while other tribes were barred from this. However, here a time is prophesied of when the entire nation would thus be glorified, and all would approach unto God, as did the priests. After their deliverance from Babylon they have never been in such a state as is promised here. "And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isaiah 61:9). From all that has been said it is evident that this text does not speak of the deliverance from Babylon, but of a conversion and restoration which as yet is to be anticipated, and which is promised here in certain terms. The Future Conversion of the Jews Examined in Light of Jeremiah 31:31-40

Proof #5: This proof we derive from Jeremiah 31:1-40. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah" (Jeremiah 31:31); "I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be My people" (Jeremiah 31:33); "... they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more" (Jeremiah 31:34); "If those ordinances (that is, of day and night) depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever" (Jeremiah 31:36); "If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord" (Jeremiah 31:37); "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord" (Jeremiah 31:38); "And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron (these were unclean places) ... shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more for ever" (Jeremiah 31:40). That the spiritual benefits recounted in Jeremiah 31:33-34 are the benefits of the New Testament, and that the Gentiles have become partakers of them, is a certainty. However, the Gentiles would not be the sole partakers of these benefits; the text states that Israel and Judah will also partake of them. The names of Israel and Judah refer to the Jewish nation. They never refer to the church -- the believers among the Gentiles. These are never denominated by the names of Israel and Judah in the New Testament. Not only would a remnant become believing, but they would "all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them"; that is, the entire seed of Israel would not be cast away, but would be saved. This would occur after a great destruction and dispersion. Jerusalem would be rebuilt and be further expanded, and also the unclean places in Jerusalem would be removed. There is no room for an exception here, namely, that mention would be made here of the deliverance from Babylon, for:

(1) all that has been related would occur after the coming of the Messiah (Jeremiah 31:22), and after the infanticide at Bethlehem (Jeremiah 31:15);

(2) after the restoration from Babylon, Israel did not partake of these benefits in either a spiritual or physical sense -- a fact which is beyond dispute;

(3) they were removed and broken down after five hundred years. This restoration, however, would be of everlasting duration. It is thus evident from these texts that the Jewish nation will once most certainly be converted, and be re-established in her country. The Future Conversion of the Jews Examined in Light of Hosea 3:4-5

Proof #6: "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim: afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and His goodness in the latter days" (Hosea 3:4-5). This text speaks of the children of Israel, the Jewish nation. It is prophesied to them that they will experience a lengthy desertion during which they will be devoid of a leader, true religion, and idolatry. Hereupon it is prophesied that they will return in the latter days and will acknowledge and receive Christ as the Messiah. From this it can be clearly perceived that we are to anticipate a general conversion of the Jews who as yet are in this state as is described here. One could advance the evasive argument here that the reference is to the deliverance from Babylon, but the texts show the contrary to be true.

(1) While in Babylon, Israel had not been in the state which is described here. They still had princes and governors who ruled them with the permission of the kings of Babylon. They still had priests and prophets to teach them, and also their captivity did not last long.

(2) Neither during nor after their Babylonian captivity has Israel turned to the Lord in the manner described.

(3) Their restoration was to be after the coming of the Messiah. They would seek and turn to David their king -- the Messiah -- and would acknowledge Him to be the true, promised Messiah.

(4) This would transpire in the latter days, which is an expression generally understood to refer to the New Testament (cf. Isaiah 2:2; Joel 2:28 in conjunction with Acts 2:17; Micah 4:1; Jeremiah 23:20). Thus, this cannot be understood as referring to the restoration from Babylon. Rather, it proves that such a conversion is yet to be anticipated.

He who wishes to have at his disposal more texts wherein this conversion is prophesied ought to consider the following texts which we will make note of in order to prove that not only will the Jews turn to the Messiah, but also that they will again dwell in Canaan.

Proof #7: In addition to the above six Scripture passages pointing to the anticipated conversion of the Jews, consider the following:

(1) Throughout the world the Jewish nation remains isolated, even though the genealogies have been lost. The Jews do not intermingle with the nations among whom they live -- neither by marriage, nor by way of religion. They also stand out among all the nations, no matter in what land they reside.

(2) They still adhere to the externals of the Jewish church, such as circumcision, feast days, distinction among foods, and a careful avoidance of idolatry.

(3) They preserve the Holy Scriptures very carefully and acknowledge their divinity.

(4) They still expect the Messiah to come to deliver them. Even though these matters do not prove that their conversion will occur, nevertheless, when added to the quoted prophecies, the heart will be inclined all the more quickly and powerfully to believe these prophecies. God's providential dealings with this nation are still very evident. He is preserving her until her conversion, in order that the fulfillment of the prophecies concerning her will be all the more obvious. The Return of the Jews to Canaan Proven from Various Old Testament Passages

One more question remains to be answered: Will the Jewish nation be gathered together again from all the regions of the world and from all the nations of the earth among which they have been dispersed? Will they come to and dwell in Canaan and all the lands promised to Abraham, and will Jerusalem be rebuilt?

We believe that these events will transpire. We deny, however, that the temple will be rebuilt, and that therein the previous mode of worship will be observed, which prior to Christ's coming was of a typifying nature and would then be of a reflective nature. We also deny that Israel will then have dominion over the entire world -- and other such things which the Jews imagine and some Christians dream about. Rather, they will be an independent republic, governed by a very wise, good-natured, and superb government. Furthermore, Canaan will be extraordinarily fruitful, the inhabitants will be eminently godly, and they will constitute a segment of the glorious state of the church during the thousand years prophesied in Revelation 20:1-15. We shall not enlarge here by vindicating every text over against evasive arguments one could construe -- as if those texts referred to the deliverance from Babylon. They could easily be refuted from the answers already given to evasive arguments, and by the attentive examination of texts, comparing them with the actual state of Israel's restoration from Babylon.

We prove this from the two passages we have dealt with: Isaiah 61:1-9 and (Jeremiah 31:31-40). We have refuted those evasive arguments against these texts, for they state expressly that the Jews will again return to their land, and that both their ruined places and Jerusalem will be rebuilt. Consider in addition to this the following texts.

Deuteronomy 30:1-6 : "... when all these things are come upon thee" -- namely, "that the whole land thereof is brimstone, and salt, and burning, that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein, like the overthrow of Sodom" (Deuteronomy 29:23). This did not occur during the Babylonian captivity, as the land remained fruitful and was cultivated. Canaan was in this condition after the destruction of Jerusalem (and it is nearly still the case) -- "thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shalt return unto the Lord thy God ... with all thine heart, and with all thy soul (which occurred neither upon their return from Babylon nor thereafter); that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will He fetch thee: and the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and He will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers. (This did not occur at all after the Babylonian captivity, as those times bore no resemblance whatsoever to the times of David, Solomon, and other kings. There was continual warfare and external dominion, and there were continual troubles within.) And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live." Since these things will most certainly befall Israel, and since this has occurred neither in a spiritual nor in a physical sense after the Babylonian captivity, then such a spiritual conversion and a restoration to the land of Canaan is still to be anticipated.

Amos 9:14-15 : "And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." However, after the Babylonian captivity they only possessed the land for five hundred years, having then been evicted from their land until this very day. Thus, this conversion is yet to be anticipated.

Ezekiel 37:21-25 : "I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land ... and one king shall be king to them all (they did not even have a king after Babylon). ... And David (Christ) My servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one Shepherd: they shall also walk in My judgments, and observe My statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob My servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever: and My servant David shall be their prince for ever." Israel did not experience this after the Babylonian captivity -- neither spiritually, nor physically. This would occur in the days of the Messiah, after His coming -- after which the Jews did not reside in the land of Canaan from generation to generation. Instead, the land has been destroyed and they have been dispersed. Thus, that time is yet to come.

Isaiah 62:1-4 : "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married." Israel is referred to as such in these days. She is the forsaken one and her land is desolate. Therefore, this cannot be said of them after the Babylonian captivity. During this period Israel was also not in the glorious state spoken of here. Thus, it is yet to come.

"... Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein" (Zechariah 2:4); "... and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem" (Zechariah 12:8); "In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David" (Zechariah 12:8); "... and it (Jerusalem) shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place" (Zechariah 14:11); "And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited" (Zechariah 14:11). Jerusalem has not been in such a state after the Babylonian captivity; she has been fully destroyed, and is now in a state of exile. It is therefore not applicable to the return from Babylon, but to a period of time yet to come. From all this it is clearly evident that the Jewish nation will yet be converted, come to her land Canaan, and reside there.

Evasive argument: All the texts quoted above speak of the glorious state of the church of the New Testament, and all these expressions are to be understood as referring to spiritual matters, rather than to the conversion of the Jews and their restoration to Canaan.

Answer: This is being asserted, but has not been proven. With every text we have shown emphatically that they speak of Israel and what would befall them according to soul and body.

Objection: "And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined ... and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate" (Daniel 9:26-27). Here it is stated that it has been determined that there will be desolations until the end. Thus, the Jewish nation will neither be converted, nor return to Canaan to possess it.

Answer: The angel Gabriel not only made known to Daniel their deliverance from Babylon, but also the time when the Messiah would be born, suffer, and die in Canaan, as well as how the Jews would fare in Canaan. There would be continual warfare there until Jerusalem would be destroyed to the ground -- a destruction that was most surely decreed and would therefore certainly come to pass. No mention is made of what would befall the Jewish nation and Jerusalem after their destruction, but rather that which would precede their destruction and that which would befall them shortly before the death of Christ: warfare until the end. [Note: The equivalent phrase of the KJV "and the end thereof shall be with a flood," reads as follows in the Statenbijbel: "en tot het einde toe zal er krijg zijn," that is, "there shall be war until the end."] This does not refer to the end of the world, but of Jerusalem. The warfare would not cease until Jerusalem would be destroyed in a dreadful manner by the Romans, the destruction of which would signal the end of the warfare. Thus, this text does not speak against the conversion of the Jews and their restoration to their land.

Various Reasons Given for Focusing upon the Conversion of the Jewish Nation

We have not considered the conversion of the Jewish nation and her restoration to Canaan merely for the purpose of ascertaining this to be so, and to end in this as a matter for contemplation. Rather, we have done so in order that we would be exercised to engage in the performance of various duties.

(1) Attentively observe the immutability of the covenant God made with Abraham and his seed. Consider that God, in spite of all their sins and stiffneckedness under it, does not break His promise nor will He permit any of the good words spoken to them to fall to the earth. Believers, glorify God concerning this and be strengthened thereby as to the immutability of the covenant of grace and its promises, which God will most certainly fulfill to you. Therefore, anticipate their fulfillment with faith and patience.

(2) Do not despise the Jewish nation. "Boast not against the branches" Romans 11:28, the natural branches of that olive tree into which you, as branches of a wild olive tree, have been grafted contrary to nature. "Be not highminded, but fear" (Romans 11:28). 1) They have received more than enough contempt from the unconverted. 2) They are in one and the same covenant with Abraham, their father. 3) "They are beloved for the fathers' sakes" (Romans 11:28). Therefore, let there be the love of benevolence toward them. They are the children of the covenant (Acts 3:25). 4) They will once be converted and be a glorious and holy people above all the nations on the face of the earth. Therefore, esteem, honor, and love them.

(3) Have pity upon their state, which is so wretched according to the flesh, being despised and detested among the nations -- this is a righteous judgment of God upon them for their rejection of Christ. They are even more wretched spiritually. They hate the Lord Jesus, the true Messiah, with an evil hatred, and are living without the true religion -- yes, have a religion which does not even resemble a religion. Nevertheless, they find a wonderful delight in it; thus they live in a state in which they cannot be saved, but have nothing to look forward to but eternal damnation.

(4) Pray for their conversion. How they have prayed for the conversion of the Gentiles! How they rejoiced in the prophecies that one day the Gentiles would be converted! Therefore, you ought to do likewise for their conversion, for you can pray this in faith, since they will certainly be converted.

(5) By way of a holy life show that you are walking in the footsteps of their father Abraham. The life of many so-called Christians offends them and keeps them from exercising faith in Christ. They do not know, except it be to a very limited extent, that among Christians there are presently many who fear and love Jehovah, the God of Israel. Therefore, manifest the image of Christ by way of a holy walk, so that they may be convicted by it and yet be aroused to jealousy. Occasionally make use of opportunities to speak in a friendly manner with them, making your affection known to them, as well as your anticipation of their restoration in Canaan. Speak to them about the Lord Jesus by the name of Messiah. Speak of the dreadfulness of sin and of eternal damnation to follow upon sin, and show this from the Scriptures of the Old Testament if you are able to do so. Show them that man cannot be justified before God by works, and that all their deeds cannot justify them. Show them from the Old Testament that the Messiah would make satisfaction for sin by His death, reconcile God with man, and convert souls, proving this from Isaiah 53:1-12, and Daniel 9:1-27. Perhaps you would be instrumental in the salvation of one. The fact is that in doing so you have done your duty, and it will be a delight to your soul that you have done so. Be very careful not to quarrel, however, thereby giving them an opportunity to slander and grieve you by their diatribe. Their national conversion will not occur in our day, but it will indeed come to pass. At His time the Lord will cause it to come to pass suddenly. May the Lord be gracious to His people of old. Oh, that the Redeemer would come to Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob! Israel would then rejoice and the Gentiles would glory, and together they would render the Lord honor, glory, and thanksgiving. Hallelujah!

Thus far we have considered the state of the church and God's dealings with her from Adam to Abraham, from Abraham to Sinai, from Sinai to Christ, and from Christ until the Revelation of John. It now remains for us to consider the state of the church, and God's dealings with her, from the Revelation of John until the end of the world, as recorded for us in the Revelation of John. [Note: à Brakel's exposition of the book of Revelation is not included in this four-volume set due to its controversial nature. However, out of respect for à Brakel and for the sake of historicity, it has been decided to publish this exposition as a separate volume at a future date.]

Grow in Your Walk with Christ

Listen and read messages that will stir your heart for Christ and point you to deeper repentance and devotion.

- 50,000+ Sermons from speakers past and present
- 3,900+ Classic Christian Books freely readable online
 - 1,200+ Bible Translations and Commentaries
- Over 450k forum posts — Join our vibrant online Christian forum

www.sermonindex.net