

WRITINGS OF JEROME

by Jerome

Writings of Jerome (c. AD 420). Jerome was an early church father whose writings have been preserved for the edification of the church.

225 Chapters

Table of Contents

0. Writings of Jerome
1. Against Jovinianus - Book 1
2. Against Jovinianus - Book 2
3. Against Vigilantius
4. Against the Pelagians - Book 1
5. Against the Pelagians - Book 2
6. Against the Pelagians - Book 3
7. Against the Pelagians - Prologue
8. Biblical Prefaces - Chronicles
9. Biblical Prefaces - Daniel
10. Biblical Prefaces - Esther
11. Biblical Prefaces - Ezekiel
12. Biblical Prefaces - Ezra v2
13. Biblical Prefaces - Ezra
14. Biblical Prefaces - Genesis
15. Biblical Prefaces - Gospels
16. Biblical Prefaces - Isaiah
17. Biblical Prefaces - Jeremiah
18. Biblical Prefaces - Jerome's notes to the additions to Esther
19. Biblical Prefaces - Job
20. Biblical Prefaces - Joshua
21. Biblical Prefaces - Judith v2
22. Biblical Prefaces - Judith
23. Biblical Prefaces - Psalms (70)
24. Biblical Prefaces - Psalms (Hebrew)
25. Biblical Prefaces - The "Helmeted" introduction to Kings
26. Biblical Prefaces - The books of Solomon
27. Biblical Prefaces - Tobit
28. Biblical Prefaces - Twelve minor prophets
29. Biblical Prefaces - Vulgate preface to Paul's letters
30. Chronicle - Latin text of pages 188-332
31. Chronicle - Latin text of prefaces
32. Chronicle - Pages 188-332
33. Chronicle - Preface to the online edition
34. Chronicle - Prefaces of Jerome and Eusebius
35. Commentary on Amos
36. Commentary on Daniel
37. Commentary on Ecclesiastes v2
38. Commentary on Ecclesiastes

39. Commentary on Ephesians
40. Commentary on Ezekiel
41. Commentary on Galatians
42. Commentary on Habakkuk
43. Commentary on Haggai
44. Commentary on Hosea
45. Commentary on Isaiah
46. Commentary on Jeremiah
47. Commentary on Joel
48. Commentary on Jonah
49. Commentary on Malachi
50. Commentary on Matthew
51. Commentary on Micah
52. Commentary on Nahum
53. Commentary on Obadiah
54. Commentary on Philemon
55. Commentary on Song of Deborah
56. Commentary on Titus
57. Commentary on Zechariah
58. Commentary on Zephaniah
59. Hebrew Questions on Genesis
60. Homilies - homily_001
61. Letters - letter_001
62. Letters - letter_002
63. Letters - letter_003
64. Letters - letter_004
65. Letters - letter_005
66. Letters - letter_006
67. Letters - letter_007
68. Letters - letter_008
69. Letters - letter_009
70. Letters - letter_010
71. Letters - letter_011
72. Letters - letter_012
73. Letters - letter_013
74. Letters - letter_014
75. Letters - letter_015
76. Letters - letter_016
77. Letters - letter_017
78. Letters - letter_018
79. Letters - letter_019
80. Letters - letter_020

81. Letters - letter_021
82. Letters - letter_022
83. Letters - letter_023
84. Letters - letter_024
85. Letters - letter_025
86. Letters - letter_026
87. Letters - letter_027
88. Letters - letter_028
89. Letters - letter_029
90. Letters - letter_030
91. Letters - letter_031
92. Letters - letter_032
93. Letters - letter_033
94. Letters - letter_033_v2
95. Letters - letter_034
96. Letters - letter_035
97. Letters - letter_036
98. Letters - letter_037
99. Letters - letter_038
100. Letters - letter_039
101. Letters - letter_040
102. Letters - letter_041
103. Letters - letter_042
104. Letters - letter_043
105. Letters - letter_044
106. Letters - letter_045
107. Letters - letter_046
108. Letters - letter_047
109. Letters - letter_048
110. Letters - letter_049
111. Letters - letter_050
112. Letters - letter_051
113. Letters - letter_052
114. Letters - letter_053
115. Letters - letter_054
116. Letters - letter_055
117. Letters - letter_056
118. Letters - letter_057
119. Letters - letter_058
120. Letters - letter_059
121. Letters - letter_060
122. Letters - letter_061

- 123. Letters - letter_062
- 124. Letters - letter_063
- 125. Letters - letter_064
- 126. Letters - letter_065
- 127. Letters - letter_066
- 128. Letters - letter_067
- 129. Letters - letter_068
- 130. Letters - letter_069
- 131. Letters - letter_070
- 132. Letters - letter_071
- 133. Letters - letter_072
- 134. Letters - letter_073
- 135. Letters - letter_074
- 136. Letters - letter_075
- 137. Letters - letter_076
- 138. Letters - letter_077
- 139. Letters - letter_078
- 140. Letters - letter_079
- 141. Letters - letter_080
- 142. Letters - letter_081
- 143. Letters - letter_082
- 144. Letters - letter_083
- 145. Letters - letter_084
- 146. Letters - letter_085
- 147. Letters - letter_086
- 148. Letters - letter_087
- 149. Letters - letter_088
- 150. Letters - letter_089
- 151. Letters - letter_090
- 152. Letters - letter_091
- 153. Letters - letter_092
- 154. Letters - letter_093
- 155. Letters - letter_094
- 156. Letters - letter_095
- 157. Letters - letter_096
- 158. Letters - letter_097
- 159. Letters - letter_098
- 160. Letters - letter_099
- 161. Letters - letter_100
- 162. Letters - letter_101
- 163. Letters - letter_102
- 164. Letters - letter_103

- 165. Letters - letter_104
- 166. Letters - letter_105
- 167. Letters - letter_106
- 168. Letters - letter_107
- 169. Letters - letter_108
- 170. Letters - letter_109
- 171. Letters - letter_110
- 172. Letters - letter_111
- 173. Letters - letter_112
- 174. Letters - letter_113
- 175. Letters - letter_114
- 176. Letters - letter_115
- 177. Letters - letter_116
- 178. Letters - letter_117
- 179. Letters - letter_118
- 180. Letters - letter_119
- 181. Letters - letter_120
- 182. Letters - letter_121
- 183. Letters - letter_122
- 184. Letters - letter_123
- 185. Letters - letter_124
- 186. Letters - letter_125
- 187. Letters - letter_126
- 188. Letters - letter_127
- 189. Letters - letter_128
- 190. Letters - letter_129
- 191. Letters - letter_130
- 192. Letters - letter_131
- 193. Letters - letter_132
- 194. Letters - letter_133
- 195. Letters - letter_134
- 196. Letters - letter_135
- 197. Letters - letter_136
- 198. Letters - letter_137
- 199. Letters - letter_138
- 200. Letters - letter_139
- 201. Letters - letter_140
- 202. Letters - letter_141
- 203. Letters - letter_142
- 204. Letters - letter_143
- 205. Letters - letter_144
- 206. Letters - letter_145

- 207. Letters - letter_146
- 208. Letters - letter_147
- 209. Letters - letter_148
- 210. Letters - letter_149
- 211. Letters - letter_150
- 212. Lives of Illustrious Men
- 213. On Hebrew Names
- 214. Prefaces On The Commentaries
- 215. Prefaces On Translations from the Septuagint and Chaldee
- 216. Prefaces to Jerome's Early Works
- 217. Prefaces to the Books of the Vulgate Version of the Old Testament
- 218. Prefaces to the Vulgate Version of the New Testament
- 219. The Dialogue Against the Luciferians
- 220. The Life of Malchus
- 221. The Life of Paulus the First Hermit
- 222. The Life of S. Hilarion
- 223. The Perpetual Virginity of Blessed Mary
- 224. To Pammachius Against John of Jerusalem

Writings of Jerome

Against Jovinianus - Book 1

Book I.

Book I.

Jovinianus, concerning whom we know little more than is to be found in the two following books, had published at Rome a Latin treatise containing all, or part of the opinions here controverted, viz. (1) "That a virgin is no better as such than a wife in the sight of God. (2) Abstinence is no better than a thankful partaking of food. (3) A person baptized with the Spirit as well as with water cannot sin. (4) All sins are equal. (5) There is but one grade of punishment and one of reward in the future state." In addition to this he held the birth of our Lord to have been by a "true parturition," and was thus at issue with the orthodoxy of the time, according to which the infant Jesus passed through the walls of the womb as His Resurrection body afterwards did out of the tomb or through the closed doors. Pammachius, Jerome's friend, brought Jovinian's book under the notice of Siricius, bishop of Rome, and it was shortly afterwards condemned in synods at that city and at Milan (about a.d. 390). He subsequently sent Jovinian's books to Jerome, who answered them in the present treatise in the year 393. Nothing more is known of Jovinian, but it has been conjectured from Jerome's remark in the treatise against Vigilantius, where Jovinian is said to have "amidst pheasants and pork rather belched out than breathed out his life," and by a kind of transmigration to have transmitted his opinions into Vigilantius, that he had died before 409, the date of that work. The first book is wholly on the first proposition of Jovinianus, that relating to marriage and virginity. The first three chapters are introductory. The rest may be divided into three parts:

1 (ch. 4-13). An exposition, in Jerome's sense, of St. Paul's teaching in I Cor. vii.

2 (ch. 14-39). A statement of the teaching which Jerome derives from the various books of both the Old and the New Testaments.

3. A denunciation of Jovinianus (c. 40), and the praises of virginity and of jingle marriages derived from examples in the heathen world. The treatise gives a remarkable specimen of Jerome's system of interpreting Scripture, and also of the methods by which asceticism was introduced into the Church, and marriage brought into disesteem.

1. Very few days have elapsed since the holy brethren of Rome sent to me the treatises of a certain Jovinian with the request that I would reply to the follies contained in them, and would crush with evangelical and apostolic vigour the¹ Epicurus of Christianity. I read but could not in the least comprehend them. I began therefore to give them closer attention, and to thoroughly sift not only words and sentences, but almost every single syllable; for I wished first to ascertain his meaning, and then to approve, or refute what he had said. But the style is so barbarous, and the language so vile and such a heap of blunders, that I could neither understand what he was talking about, nor by what arguments he was trying to prove his points. At one moment he is all bombast, at another he grovels: from time to time he lifts himself up, and then like a wounded snake finds his own effort too much for him. Not satisfied with the language of men, he attempts something loftier.

2 "The mountains labour; a poor mouse is born."

3 "That he's gone mad ev'n mad Orestes swears."

Moreover he involves everything in such inextricable confusion that the saying of⁴ Plautus might be applied to him:—"This is what none but a Sibyl will ever read." To understand him we must be prophets. We read Apollo's⁵ raving prophetesses. We remember, too, what⁶ Virgil says of senseless noise.⁷ Heraclitus, also, surnamed the Obscure, the philosophers find hard to understand even with their utmost toil. But what are they compared with our riddle-maker, whose books are much more difficult to comprehend than to refute? Although (we must confess) the task of refuting them is no easy one. For how can you overcome a man when you are quite in the dark as to his meaning? But, not to be tedious to my reader, the introduction to his second book, of which he has discharged himself like a sot after a night's debauch, will show the character of his eloquence, and through what bright flowers of rhetoric he takes his stately course.

2. "I respond to your invitation, not that I may go through life with a high reputation, but may live free from idle rumour. I beseech the ground, the young shoots of our plantations, the plants and trees of tenderness snatched from the whirlpool of vice, to grant me audience and the support of many listeners. We know that the Church through hope, faith, charity, is inaccessible and impregnable. In it no one is immature: all are apt to learn: none can force a way into it by violence, or deceive it by craft."

3. What, I ask, is the meaning of these portentous words and of this grotesque description? Would you not think he was in a feverish dream, or that he was seized with madness and ought to be put into the strait jacket which Hippocrates prescribed? However often I read him, even till my heart sinks within me, I am still in uncertainty of his meaning.⁸ Everything starts from, everything depends upon, something else. It is impossible to make out any connection; and, excepting the proofs from Scripture which he has not dared to exchange for his own lovely flowers of rhetoric, his words suit all matter equally well, because they suit no matter at all. This circumstance led me shrewdly to suspect that his object in proclaiming the excellence of marriage was only to disparage virginity. For when the less is put upon a level with the greater, the lower profits by comparison, but the higher suffers wrong. For ourselves, we do not follow the views of⁹ Marcion and Manichaeus, and disparage marriage; nor, deceived by the error of¹⁰ Tatian, the leader of the Encratites, do we think all intercourse impure; he condemns and rejects not only marriage but also food which God created for the use of man. We know that in a great house, there are not only vessels of gold and silver, but also of wood and earthenware. And that upon the foundation, Christ, which Paul the master-builder laid, some build gold, silver, precious stones: others, on the contrary, hay, wood, straw. We are not ignorant of the words,¹¹ "Marriage is honourable among all, and the bed undefiled." We have read God's first command,¹² "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth"; but while we honour marriage we prefer virginity which is the offspring of marriage. Will silver cease to be silver, if gold is more precious than silver? Or is despoil done to tree and corn, if we prefer the fruit to root and foliage, or the grain to stalk and ear? Virginity is to marriage what fruit is to the tree, or grain to the straw. Although the hundred-fold, the sixty-fold, and the thirty-fold spring from one earth and from one sowing, yet there is a great difference in respect of number. The thirty-fold has reference to marriage. The very way the¹³ fingers are combined-see how they seem to embrace, tenderly kiss, and pledge their troth either to other-is a picture of husband and wife. The sixty-fold applies to widows, because they are placed in a position of difficulty and distress. Hence the upper finger signifies their depression, and the greater the difficulty in resisting the allurements of pleasure once experienced, the greater the reward. Moreover (give good heed, my reader), to denote a hundred, the right hand is used instead of the left: a circle is made with the same fingers which on the left hand represented widowhood, and thus the crown of virginity is expressed. In saying this I have followed my own impatient spirit rather than the course of the argument. For I had scarcely left harbour, and had barely hoisted sail, when a swelling tide of words suddenly swept me into the depths of the discussion. I must stay my course, and take in canvas for a little while; nor will I indulge my sword, anxious as it is to strike a blow for virginity. The farther back the catapult is drawn, the greater the force of the missile. To linger is not to lose, if by lingering victory is better assured. I will briefly set forth our adversary's views, and will drag them out from his books like snakes from the holes where they hide, and will separate the venomous head from the writhing body. What is baneful shall be discovered, that, when we have the power, it may be crushed.

He says that "virgins, widows, and married women, who have been once passed through the layer of Christ, if they are on a par in other respects, are of equal merit."

He endeavours to show that "they who with full assurance of faith have been born again in baptism, cannot be overthrown by the devil." His third point is "that there is no difference between abstinence from food, and its reception with thanksgiving." The fourth and last is "that there is one reward in the kingdom of heaven for all who have kept their baptismal vow."

4. This is the hissing of the old serpent; by counsel such as this the dragon drove man from Paradise. For he promised that if they would prefer fulness to fasting they should be immortal, as though it were an impossibility for them to fall; and while he promises they shall be as Gods, he drives them from Paradise, with the result that they who, while naked and unhampered, and as virgins unspotted enjoyed the fellowship of the Lord were cast down into the vale of tears, and sewed skins together to clothe themselves withal. But, not to detain the reader any longer, I will keep to the division given above and taking his propositions one by one will rely chiefly on the evidence of Scripture to refute them, for fear he may chatter and complain that he was overcome by rhetorical skill rather than by force of truth. If I succeed in this and with the aid of a cloud of witnesses from both Testaments prove too strong for him, I will then accept his challenge, and adduce illustrations from secular literature. I will show that even among philosophers and distinguished statesmen, the virtuous are wont to be preferred by all to the voluptuous, that is to say men like¹⁴ Pythagoras,¹⁵ Plato and¹⁶ Aristides, to¹⁷ Aristippus,¹⁸ Epicurus and¹⁹ Alcibiades. I entreat virgins of both sexes and all such as are continent, the married also and the twice married, to assist my efforts with their prayers. Jovinian is the common enemy. For he who maintains all to be of equal merit, does no less injury to virginity in comparing it with marriage than he does to marriage, when he allows it to be lawful, but to the same extent as second and third marriages. But to digamists and trigamists also he does wrong, for he places on a level with them whoremongers and the most licentious persons as soon as they have repented; but perhaps those who have been married twice or thrice ought not to complain, for the same whoremonger if penitent is made equal in the kingdom of heaven even to virgins. I will therefore explain more clearly and in proper sequence the arguments he employs and the illustrations he adduces respecting marriage, and will treat them in the order in which he states them. And I beg the reader not to be disturbed if he is compelled to read Jovinian's nauseating trash. He will all the more gladly drink Christ's antidote after the devil's poisonous concoction. Listen with patience, ye virgins; listen, I pray you, to the voice of the most voluptuous of preachers; nay rather close your ears, as you would to the Syren's fabled songs, and pass on. For a little while endure the wrongs you suffer: think you are crucified with Christ, and are listening to the blasphemies of the Pharisees.

5. First of all, he says, God declares that²⁰ "therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." And lest we should say that this is a quotation from the Old Testament, he asserts that it has been²¹ confirmed by the Lord in the Gospel-"What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder": and he immediately adds,²² "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." He next repeats the names of Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalalel, Jared, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech, Noah, and tells us that they all had wives and in accordance with the will of God begot sons, as though there could be any table of descent or any history of mankind without wives and children. "There," says he, "is Enoch, who walked with God and was carried up to heaven. There is Noah, the only person who, except his wife, and his sons and their wives, was saved at the deluge, although there must have been many persons not of marriageable age, and therefore presumably virgins. Again, after the deluge, when the human race started as it were anew, men and women were paired together and a fresh blessing was pronounced on procreation, ²³ "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." Moreover, free permission was given to eat flesh,²⁴ "Every moving thing that liveth shall be food for you; as the green herb have I given you all." He then flies off to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, of whom the first had three wives, the second one, the third four, Leah, Rachel, Billah, and Zilpah, and he declares that Abraham by his faith merited the blessing which he received in begetting his son. Sarah, typifying the Church, when it had ceased to be with her after the manner of women, exchanged the curse of barrenness for the blessing of child-bearing. We are informed that Rebekah went like a prophet to inquire of the Lord, and was told,²⁵ "Two nations and two peoples are in thy womb." that Jacob served for his wife, and that when Rachel, thinking it was in the power of her husband to give her children, said,²⁶ "Give me children, or else I die," he replied,²⁷ "Am I in God's stead, who hath withheld from thee the fruit of the womb?" so well aware was he that the fruit of marriage cometh from the Lord and not from the husband. We next learn that Joseph, a holy man of spotless chastity, and all the patriarchs, had wives, and that God blessed them all alike through the lips of Moses. Judah also and Tamar are brought upon the scene, and he censures Onan, slain by the Lord, because he, grudging to raise up seed to his brother, marred the marriage rite. He refers to Moses and the leprosy of Miriam, who, because she chided her brother on account of his wife, was stricken by the avenging hand of God. He praises Samson, I may even say extravagantly panegyricizes the uxorious Nazarite. Deborah also and Barak are mentioned, because, although they had not the benefit of virginity, they were victorious over the iron chariots of Sisera and Jabin. He brings forward Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, and extols her for arming herself with the²⁸ stake. He says there was no difference between Jephthah and his virgin daughter, who was sacrificed to the Lord: nay, of the two, he prefers the faith of the father to that of the daughter who met death with grief and tears. He then comes to Samuel, another Nazarite of the Lord, who from infancy was brought up in the tabernacle and was clad in a linen ephod, or, as the words are rendered, in linen vestments: he, too, we are told, begot sons without a stain upon his priestly purity. He places Boaz and his wife Ruth side by side in his repository, and traces the descent of Jesse and David from them. He then points out how David himself, for the price of two hundred foreskins and at the peril of his life, was bedded with the king's daughter. What shall I say of Solomon, whom he includes in the list of husbands, and represents as a type of the Saviour, maintaining that of him it was written,²⁹ "Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son"? And³⁰ "To him shall be given of the gold of Sheba, and men shall pray for him continually." Then all at once he makes a jump to Elijah and Elisha, and tells us as a great secret that the spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha. Why he mentioned this he does not say. It can hardly be that he thinks Elijah and Elisha, like the rest, were married men. The next step is to Hezekiah, upon whose praises he dwells, and yet (I wonder why) forgets to mention that he said,³¹ "Henceforth I will beget children." He relates that Josiah, a righteous man, in whose time the book of Deuteronomy was found in the temple, was instructed by Huldah, wife of Shallum. Daniel also and the three youths are classed by him with the married. Suddenly he betakes himself to the Gospel, and adduces Zachariah and Elizabeth, Peter and his father-in-law, and the rest of the Apostles. His inference is thus expressed: "If they idly urge in defence of themselves the plea that the world in its early stage needed to be replenished, let them listen to the words of Paul,³² 'I desire therefore that the younger widows marry, bear children.' And³³ 'Marriage is honourable and the bed undefiled.' And³⁴ 'A wife is bound for so long time as her husband liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is free to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord.' And³⁵ 'Adam was not beguiled, but the woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression: but she shall be saved through the child-bearing, if they continue in faith and love and sanctification with sobriety.' Surely we shall hear no more of the famous Apostolic utterance,³⁶ 'And they who have wives as though they had them not.' It can hardly be that you will say the reason why he wished them to be married was that some widows had already turned back after Satan: as though virgins never fell and their fall was not more ruinous. All this makes it clear that in forbidding to marry, and to eat food which God created for use, you have consciences seared as with a hot iron, and are followers of the Manichaeans." Then comes much more which it would be unprofitable to discuss. At last he dashes into rhetoric and apostrophizes virginity thus: "I do you no wrong, Virgin: you have chosen a life of chastity on account of the present distress: you determined on the course in order to be holy in body and spirit: be not proud: you and your married sisters are members of the same Church."

6. I have perhaps explained his position at too great a length, and become tedious to my reader; but I thought it best to draw up in full array against myself all his efforts, and to muster all the forces of the enemy with their squadrons and generals, lest after an early victory there should spring up a series of other engagements. I will not therefore do battle with single foes, nor will I be satisfied with skirmishes in which I meet small detachments of my opponents. The battle must be fought with the whole army of the enemy, and the disorderly rabble, fighting more like brigands than soldiers, must be repulsed by the skill and method of regular warfare. In the front rank I will set the Apostle Paul, and, since he is the bravest of generals, will arm him with his own weapons, that is to say, his own statements. For the Corinthians asked many questions about this matter, and the doctor of the Gentiles and master of the Church gave full replies. What he decreed we may regard as the law of Christ speaking in him. At the same time, when we begin to refute the several arguments, I trust the reader will give me his attention even before the Apostle speaks, and will not, in his eagerness to discuss the most weighty points, neglect the premises, and rush at once to the conclusion.

7. Among other things the Corinthians asked in their letter whether after embracing the faith of Christ they ought to be unmarried, and for the sake of continence put away their wives, and whether believing virgins were at liberty to marry. And again, supposing that one of two Gentiles believed on Christ, whether the one that believed should leave the one that believed not? And in case it were allowable to take wives, would the Apostle direct that only Christian wives, or Gentiles also, should be taken? Let us then consider Paul's replies to these inquiries.³⁷ "Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote: It is good for a man not to touch a woman. But, because of fornications, let each man have his own wife, and let each woman have her own husband. Let the husband render unto the wife her due: and likewise also the wife unto the husband. The wife hath not power over her own body, but the husband: And likewise also the husband hath not power over his own body, but the wife. Defraud ye not one the other, except it be by consent for a season, that ye may give yourselves unto prayer, and may be together again, that Satan tempt you not because of your incontinency. But this I say by way of permission not of commandment. Yet I would that all men were even as I myself. Howbeit each man hath his own gift from God, one after this manner, and another after that. But I say to the unmarried and to widows, it is good for them if they abide even as I. But if they have not continency, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn." Let us turn back to the chief point of the evidence: "It is good," he says, "for a man not to touch a woman." If it is good not to touch a woman, it is bad to touch one: for there is no opposite to goodness but badness. But if it be bad and the evil is pardoned, the reason for the concession is to prevent worse evil. But surely a thing which is only allowed because there may be something worse has only a slight degree of goodness. He would never have added "let each man have his own wife," unless he had previously used the words "but, because of fornications." Do away with fornication, and he will not say "let each man have his own wife." Just as though one were to lay it down: "It is good to feed on wheaten bread, and to eat the finest wheat flour," and yet to prevent a person pressed by hunger from devouring cow-dung, I may allow, him to eat barley. Does it follow that the wheat will not have its peculiar purity, because such an one prefers barley to excrement? That is naturally good which does not admit of comparison with what is bad, and is not eclipsed because something else is preferred. At the same time we must notice the Apostle's prudence. He did not say, it is good not to have a wife: but, it is good not to touch a woman: as though there were danger even in the touch: as though he who touched her, would not escape from her who "hunteth for the precious life," who causeth the young man's understanding to fly away.³⁸ "Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned? Or can one walk upon hot coals, and his feet not be scorched?" As then he who touches fire is instantly burned, so by the mere touch the peculiar nature of man and woman is perceived, and the difference of sex is understood, Heathen fables relate how³⁹ Mithras and⁴⁰ Erichonius were begotten of the soil, in stone or earth, by raging lust. Hence it was that our Joseph, because the Egyptian woman wished to touch him, fled from her hands, and, as if he had been bitten by a mad dog and feared the spreading poison, threw away the cloak which she had touched. "But, because of fornications let each man have his own wife, and let each woman have her own husband." He did not say, because of fornication let each man marry a wife: otherwise by this excuse he would have thrown the reins to lust, and whenever a man's wife died, he would have to marry another to prevent fornication, but "have his own wife." Let him he says have and use his own wife, whom he had before he became a believer, and whom it would have been good not to touch, and, when once he became a follower of Christ, to know only as a sister, not as a wife unless fornication should make it excusable to touch her. "The wife hath not power over her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power over his own body, but the wife." The whole question here concerns those who are married men. Is it lawful for them to do what our Lord forbade in the Gospel, and to put away their wives? Whence it is that the Apostle says, "It is good for a man not to touch a woman." But inasmuch as he who is once married has no power to abstain except by mutual consent, and may not reject an unoffending partner, let the husband render unto the wife her due. He bound himself voluntarily that he might be under compulsion to render it. "Defraud ye not one the other, except it be by consent for a season, that ye may give yourselves unto prayer." What, I pray you, is the quality of that good thing which hinders prayer? which does not allow the body of Christ to be received? So long as I do the husband's part, I fail in continency. The same Apostle in another place commands us to pray always. If we are to pray always, it follows that we must never be in the bondage of wedlock, for as often as I render my wife her due, I cannot pray. The Apostle Peter had experience of the bonds of marriage. See how he fashions the Church, and what lesson he teaches Christians:⁴¹ "Ye husbands in like manner dwell with your wives according to knowledge, giving honour unto the woman, as unto the weaker vessel, as being also joint-heirs of the grace of life; to the end that your prayers be not hindered." Observe that, as S. Paul before, because in both cases the spirit is the same, so S. Peter now, says that prayers are hindered by the performance of marriage duty. When he says "likewise," he challenges the husbands to imitate their wives, because he has already given them commandment:⁴² "beholding your chaste conversation coupled with fear. Whose adorning let it not be the outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing jewels of gold, or of putting on apparel: but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." You see what kind of wedlock he enjoins. Husbands and wives are to dwell together according to knowledge, so that they may know what God wishes and desires, and give honour to the weak vessel, woman. If we abstain from intercourse, we give honour to our wives: if we do not abstain, it is clear that insult is the opposite of honour. He also tells the wives to let their husbands "see their chaste behaviour, and the hidden man of the heart, in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit." Words truly worthy of an apostle, and of Christ's rock! He lays down the law for husbands and wives, condemns outward ornament, while he praises continence, which is the ornament of the inner man, as seen in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit. In effect he says this: Since your outer man is corrupt, and you have ceased to possess the blessing of incorruption characteristic of virgins, at least imitate the incorruption of the spirit by subsequent abstinence, and what you cannot show in the body exhibit in the mind. For these are the riches, and these the ornaments of your union, which Christ seeks.

8. The words which follow, "that ye may give yourselves unto prayer, and may be together again," might lead one to suppose that the Apostle was expressing a wish and not making a concession because of the danger of a greater fall. He therefore at once adds, "lest Satan tempt you for your incontinency." It is a fine permission which is conveyed in the words "be together again." What it was that he blushed to call by its own name, and thought only better than a temptation of Satan and the effect of incontinence, we take trouble to discuss as if it were obscure, although he has explained his meaning by saying, "this I say by way of permission, not by way of command." And do we still hesitate to speak of marriage as a concession to weakness, not a thing commanded, as though second and third marriages were not allowed on the same ground, as though the doors of the Church were not opened by repentance even to fornicators, and what is more, to the incestuous? Take the case of the man who outraged his step-mother. Does not the Apostle, after delivering him, in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, to Satan for the destruction of the flesh that his spirit might be saved, in the second Epistle take the offender back and strive to prevent a brother from being swallowed up by overmuch grief. The Apostle's wish is one thing, his pardon another. If a wish be expressed, it confers a right; if a thing is only called pardonable, we are wrong in using it. If you wish to know the Apostle's real mind, you must take in what follows: "but I would that all men were as I am." Happy is the man who is like Paul! Fortunate is he who attends to the Apostle's command, not to his concession. This, says he, I wish, this I desire that ye be imitators of me, as I also am of Christ, who was a Virgin born of a Virgin, uncorrupt of her who was uncorrupt. We, because we are men, cannot imitate our Lord's nativity; but we may at least imitate His life. The former was the blessed prerogative of divinity, the latter belongs to our human condition and is part of human effort. I would that all men were like me, that while they are like me, they may also become like Christ, to whom I am like. For⁴³ "he that believeth in Christ ought himself also to walk even as He walked."⁴⁴ "Howbeit each man hath his own gift from God, one after this manner, and another after that." What I wish, he says, is clear. But since in the Church there is a diversity of gifts, I acquiesce in marriage, lest I should seem to condemn nature. At the same time consider, that the gift of virginity is one, that of marriage, another. For were the reward the same for the married and for virgins, he would never after enjoining continence have said:⁴⁵ "Each man hath his own gift from God, one after this manner, and another after that." Where there is a distinction in one particular, there is a diversity also in other points. I grant that even marriage is a gift of God, but between gift and gift there is great diversity. In fact the Apostle himself speaking of the same person who had repented of his incestuous conduct, says:⁴⁶ "so that contrariwise ye should rather forgive him and comfort him, and to whom ye forgive anything, I forgive also." And that we might not think a man's gift contemptible, he added,⁴⁷ "for what I also have forgiven, if I have forgiven anything, for your sakes have I forgiven it, in the presence of Christ." There is diversity in the gifts of Christ. Hence it is that by way of type Joseph has a coat of many colours. And in the forty-fifth psalm we read,⁴⁸ "at thy right hand doth stand the queen in a vesture of gold wrought about with divers colours." And the Apostle Peter says,⁴⁹ "as heirs together of the manifold grace of God," where the more expressive Greek word poiki/lhj, i.e., varied, is used.

9. Then come the words⁵⁰ "But I say to the unmarried and to widows, it is good for them if they abide even as I. But if they have not continency, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn." Having conceded to married persons the enjoyment of wedlock and pointed out his own wishes, he passes on to the unmarried and to widows, sets before them his own practice for imitation, and calls them happy if they so abide. "But if they have not continency, let them marry," just as he said before "But because of fornications," and "Lest Satan tempt you, because of your incontinency." And he gives a reason for saying "If they have not continency, let them marry," viz. "It is better to marry than to burn." The reason why it is better to marry is that it is worse to burn. Let burning lust be absent, and he will not say it is better to marry. The word better always implies a comparison with something worse, not a thing absolutely good and incapable of comparison. It is as though he said, it is better to have one eye than neither, it is better to stand on one foot and to support the rest of the body with a stick, than to crawl with broken legs. What do you say, Apostle? I do not believe you when you say "Though I be rude in speech, yet am I not in knowledge." As humility is the source of the sayings "For I am not worthy to be called an Apostle," and "To me who am the least of the Apostles," and "As to one born out of due time," so here also we have an utterance of humility. You know the meaning of language, or you would not quote Epimenides,⁵¹ Menander, and⁵² Aratus. When you are discussing continence and virginity you say, "It is good for a man not to touch a woman." And, "It is good for them if they abide even as I." And, "I think that this is good by reason of the present distress." And, "That it is good for a man so to be." When you come to marriage, you do not say it is good to marry, because you cannot then add "than to burn;" but you say, "It is better to marry than to burn." If marriage in itself be good, do not compare it with fire, but simply say "It is good to marry." I suspect the goodness of that thing which is forced into the position of being only the lesser of two evils. What I want is not a smaller evil, but a thing absolutely good.

10. So far the first section has been explained. Let us now come to those which follow.⁵³ "But unto the married I give charge, yea not I, but the Lord. That the wife depart not from her husband (but and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or else be reconciled to her husband): and that the husband leave not his wife. But to the rest say I, not the Lord: If any brother hath an unbelieving wife, and she is content to dwell with him, let him not leave her," and so on to the words "As God hath called each, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all the churches." This passage has no bearing on our present controversy. For he ordains, according to the mind of the Lord, that excepting the cause of fornication, a wife must not be put away, and that a wife who has been put away, may not, so long as her husband lives, be married to another, or at all events that her duty is to be reconciled to her husband. But in the case of those who are already married at the time of conversion, that is to say, supposing one of the two were a believer, he enjoins that the believer shall not put away the unbeliever. And after stating his reason, viz., that the unbeliever who is unwilling to leave the believer becomes thereby a candidate for the faith, he commands, on the other hand, that if the unbeliever reject the faithful one on account of the faith of Christ, the believer ought to depart, lest husband or wife be preferred to Christ, in comparison with Whom we must hold even life itself cheap. Yet at the present day many women despising the Apostle's command, are joined to heathen husbands, and prostitute the temples of Christ to idols. They do not understand that they are part of His body though indeed they are His ribs. The Apostle is lenient to the union of unbelievers, who having (believing) husbands, afterwards come to believe in Christ. He does not extend his indulgence to those women who, although Christians, have been married to heathen husbands. To these he elsewhere says,⁵⁴ "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers: for what fellowship have righteousness and iniquity? or what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what portion hath a believer with an unbeliever? And what agreement hath a temple of God with idols? For we are a temple of the living God." Although I know that crowds of matrons will be furious against me: although I know that just as they have shamelessly despised the Lord, so they will rave at me who am but a flea and the least of Christians: yet I will speak out what I think. I will say what the Apostle has taught me, that they are not on the side of righteousness, but of iniquity: not of light, but of darkness: that they do not belong to Christ, but to Belial: that they are not temples of the living God, but shrines and idols of the dead. And, if you wish to see more clearly how utterly unlawful it is for a Christian woman to marry a Gentile, consider what the same Apostle says,⁵⁵ "A wife is bound for so long time as her husband liveth: but if the husband be dead, she is free to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord," that is, to a Christian. He who allows second and third marriages in the Lord, forbids first marriages with a Gentile. Whence Abraham also makes his servant swear upon his thigh, that is, on Christ, Who was to spring from his seed, that he would not bring an alien-born as a wife for his son Isaac. And Ezra checked an offence of this kind against God by making his countrymen put away their wives. And the prophet Malachi thus speaks,⁵⁶ "Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loveth, and hath married the daughter of a strange god. The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this,⁵⁷ him that teacheth and him that learneth, out of the tents of Jacob, and him that offers an offering unto the Lord of hosts." I have said this that they who compare marriage with virginity, may at least know that such marriages as these are on a lower level than digamy and trigamy.

11. In the above discussion the Apostle has taught that the believer ought not to depart from the unbeliever, but remain in marriage as the faith found them, and that each man whether married or single should continue as he was when baptized into Christ; and then he suddenly introduces the metaphors of circumcision and uncircumcision, of bond and free, and under those metaphors treats of the married and unmarried.⁵⁸ "Was any man called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised. Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing: but the keeping of the commandments of God. Let each man abide in that calling wherein he was called. Wast thou called being a bondservant? Care not for it: but even if thou canst become free, use it rather. For he that was called in the Lord being a bondservant, is the Lord's freedman; likewise he that was called, being free, is Christ's bondservant. Ye were bought with a price; become not bondservants of men. Brethren, let each man, wherein he was called, therein abide with God." Some, I suppose, will find fault with the Apostle's way of reasoning. I would therefore ask first, What we are to infer from his suddenly passing in a discussion concerning husbands and wives to a comparison of Jew and Gentile, bond and free, and then returning, when this point is settled, to the question about virgins, and telling us "Concerning virgins I have no commandment from the Lord"; what has a comparison of Jew and Gentile, bond and free, to do with wedlock and virginity? In the next place, how are we to understand the words "Hath any been called in uncircumcision, let him not be circumcised"?⁵⁹ Can a man who has lost his foreskin restore it again at his pleasure? Then, in what sense are we to explain "For he that was called in the Lord, being a bondservant, is the Lord's freedman: likewise he that was called, being free, is Christ's bondservant." Fourthly, how is it that he who commanded servants to obey their masters according to the flesh, now says, "Become not bondservants of men." Lastly, how are we to connect with slavery, or with circumcision, his saying "Brethren, let each man, wherein he was called, therein abide with God," which even contradicts his previous opinion. We heard him say "Become not bondservants of men." How can we then possibly abide in that vocation wherein we were called, when many at the time they became believers had masters according to the flesh, whose bondservants they are now forbidden to be? Moreover, what has the argument about our abiding in the vocation wherein we were called, to do with circumcision? for in another place the same Apostle cries aloud "Behold I Paul tell you that, if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing"? We must conclude, therefore, that a higher meaning should be given to circumcision and uncircumcision, bond and free, and that these words must be taken in close connection with what has gone before. "Was anyone called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised." If, he says, at the time you were called and became a believer in Christ, if I say, you were called being circumcised from a wife, that is, unmarried, do not marry a wife, that is, do not become uncircumcised, lest you lay upon the freedom of circumcision and chastity the burden of marriage. Again, if anyone was called in uncircumcision, let him not be circumcised. You had a wife, he says, when you believed: do not think the faith of Christ a reason for disagreement, because God called us in peace.⁶⁰ "Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing; but the keeping of the commandments of God." For neither celibacy nor marriage availeth anything without works, since even faith, which is specially characteristic of Christians, if it have not works, is said to be dead, and vestal virgins and Juno's widows might upon these terms be numbered with the saints. "Let each man in the vocation wherein he was called, therein abide." Whether he had, or had not, a wife when he believed, let him remain in that condition in which he was when called. Accordingly he does not so strongly urge virgins to be married, as forbid divorce. And as he debars those who have wives from putting them away, so he cuts off from virgins the power of being married. "Thou wast called being a slave, heed it not; but even if thou canst become free, use it rather." Even if you have, he says, a wife, and are bound to her, and pay her due, and have not power over your own body; or if, to speak more clearly, you are the bondservant of your wife, be not sad upon that account, nor sigh for the loss of your virginity. But even if you can find some causes of discord, do not, for the sake of thoroughly enjoying the liberty of chastity, seek your own welfare by destroying another. Keep your wife awhile, and do not go too fast for her lagging footsteps: wait till she follows. If you are patient, your spouse will become a sister, "For he that was called in the Lord, being a bondservant, is the Lord's freedman: likewise, he that was called being free, is Christ's bondservant." He gives his reasons for not wishing wives to be forsaken. He therefore says, I command that Gentiles who believe on Christ do not abandon the married state in which they were before embracing the faith: for he who had a wife when he became a believer, is not so strictly devoted to the service of God as virgins and unmarried persons. But, in a manner, he has more freedom, and the reins of his bondage are relaxed; and, while he is the bondservant of a wife, he is, so to speak, the freedman of the Lord. Moreover, he who when called by the Lord had not a wife and was free from the bondage of wedlock, he is truly Christ's bondservant. What happiness to be the bondservant, not of a wife but of Christ, to serve not the flesh, but the spirit!⁶¹ "For he who is joined unto the Lord is one spirit." There was some fear that by saying "Wast thou called being a bondservant? Care not for it: but, even if thou canst become free, use it rather," he might seem to have flouted continence, and to have given us up to the slavery of marriage. He therefore makes a remark which removes all cavil: "Ye were bought with a price, become not servants of men." We have been redeemed with the most precious blood of Christ: the Lamb was slain for us, and having been sprinkled with hyssop and the warm drops of His blood, we have rejected poisonous pleasure. Why do we at whose baptism Pharaoh died and all his host was drowned, again turn back in our hearts to Egypt, and after the manna, angels' food, sigh for the garlic and the onions and the cucumbers, and Pharaoh's meat?

12. Having discussed marriage and continency he at length comes to virginity and says⁶² "Now concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord: but I give my judgement, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful. I think therefore that this is good by reason of the present distress, namely, that it is good for a man to be as he is," Here our opponent goes utterly wild with exultation: this is his strongest battering-ram with which he shakes the wall of virginity. "See," says he, "the Apostle confesses that as regards virgins he has no commandment of the Lord, and he who had with authority laid down the law respecting husbands and wives, does not dare to command what the Lord has not enjoined. And rightly too. For what is enjoined is commanded, what is commanded must be done, and that which must be done implies punishment if it be not done. For it is useless to order a thing to be done and yet leave the individual free to do it or not do it. If the Lord had commanded virginity He would have seemed to condemn marriage, and to do away with the seed-plot of mankind, of which virginity itself is a growth. If He had cut off the root, how was He to expect fruit? If the foundations were not first laid, how was He to build the edifice, and put on the roof to cover all! Excavators toil hard to remove mountains; the bowels of the earth are pierced in the search for gold. And, when the tiny particles, first by the blast of the furnace, then by the hand of the cunning workman have been fashioned into an ornament, men do not call him blessed who has separated the gold from the dross, but him who wears the beautiful gold. Do not marvel then if, placed as we are, amid temptations of the flesh and incentives to vice, the angelic life be not exacted of us, but merely recommended. If advice be given, a man is free to proffer obedience; if there be a command, he is a servant bound to compliance. "I have no commandment," he says, "of the Lord: but I give my judgement, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful." If you have no commandment of the Lord, how dare you give judgement without orders? The Apostle will reply: Do you wish me to give orders where the Lord has offered a favour rather than laid down a law? The great Creator and Fashioner, knowing the weakness of the vessel which he made, left virginity open to those whom He addressed; and shall I, the teacher of the Gentiles, who have become all things to all men that I might gain all, shall I lay upon the necks of weak believers from the very first the burden of perpetual chastity? Let them⁶³ begin with short periods of release from the marriage bond, and give themselves unto prayer, that when they have tasted the sweets of chastity they may desire the perpetual possession of that wherewith they were temporarily delighted. The Lord, when tempted by the Pharisees, and asked whether according to the law of Moses it was permitted to put away a wife, forbade the practice altogether. After weighing His words the disciples said to Him:⁶⁴ "If the case of the man is so with his wife, it is not expedient to marry. But He said unto them, all men cannot receive this saying, but they to whom it is given. For there are eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are eunuchs, which were made eunuchs by men: and there are eunuchs, which made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it." The reason is plain why the Apostle said, "concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord." Surely; because the Lord had previously said "All men cannot receive the word, but they to whom it is given," and "He that is able to receive it, let him receive it."⁶⁵ The Master of the Christian race offers the reward, invites candidates to the course, holds in His hand the prize of virginity, points to the fountain of purity, and cries aloud⁶⁶ "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." "He that is able to receive it, let him receive it." He does not say, you must drink, you must run, willing or unwilling: but whoever is willing and able to run and to drink, he shall conquer, he shall be satisfied. And therefore Christ loves virgins more than others, because they willingly give what was not commanded them. And it indicates greater grace to offer what you are not bound to give, than to render what is exacted of you. The apostles, contemplating the burden of a wife, exclaimed, "If the case of the man is so with his wife, it is not expedient to marry." Our Lord thought well of their view. You rightly think, said He, that it is not expedient for a man who is hastening to the kingdom of heaven to take a wife: but it is a hard matter, and all men do not receive the saying, but they to whom it has been given. Some are eunuchs by nature, others by the violence of men. Those eunuchs please Me who are such not of necessity, but of free choice. Willingly do I take them into my bosom who have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake, and in order to worship Me have renounced the condition of their birth. We must now explain the words, "Those who have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake." If they who have made themselves eunuchs have the reward of the kingdom of heaven, it follows that they who have not made themselves such cannot be placed with those who have. He who is able, he says, to receive it, let him receive it. It is a mark of great faith and of great virtue, to be the pure temple of God, to offer oneself a whole burnt-offering, and, according to the same apostle, to be holy both in body and in spirit. These are the eunuchs, who thinking themselves dry trees because of their impotence, hear by the mouth of⁶⁷ Isaiah that they have a place prepared in heaven for sons and daughters. Their type is⁶⁸ Ebed-melech the eunuch in Jeremiah, and the eunuch of Queen Candace in the⁶⁹ Acts of the Apostles, who on account of the strength of his faith gained the name of a man. These are they to whom Clement, who was the successor of the Apostle Peter, and of whom the Apostle Paul makes mention, wrote letters, directing almost the whole of his discourse to the subject of virgin purity. After them there is a long series of apostolic men, martyrs, and men illustrious no less for holiness than for eloquence, with whom we may very easily become acquainted through their own writings.⁷⁰ "I think, therefore," he says, "that this is good for the present distress." What is this distress which, in contempt of the marriage tie, longs for the liberty of virginity?⁷¹ "Woe unto them that are with child and to them that give suck in those days." We have not here a condemnation of harlots and brothels, of whose damnation there is no doubt, but of the swelling womb, and wailing infancy, the fruit as well as the work of marriage. "For it is good for a man so to be." If it is good for a man so to be, it is bad for a man not so to be.⁷² "Art thou bound unto a wife? Seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? Seek not a wife." Each one of us has his appointed bounds; let me have what is mine, and keep your own. If thou art bound to a wife, give her not a bill of divorce. If I am loosed from a wife, I will not seek a wife. As I do not dissolve marriages once contracted: so you should not bind what is loosed. And at the same time the meaning of the words must be taken into account. He who has a wife is regarded as a debtor, and is said to be uncircumcised, to be the servant of his wife, and like bad servants to be bound. But he who has no wife, in the first place owes no man anything, then is circumcised, thirdly is free, lastly, is loosed.

13. Let us run through the remaining points, for our author is so voluminous that we cannot linger over every detail. "But and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned." It is one thing not to sin, another to do good. "And if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned." Not that virgin who has once for all dedicated herself to the service of God: for, should one of these marry, she will have damnation, because she has made of no account her first faith. But, if our adversary objects that this saying relates to widows, we reply that it applies with still greater force to virgins, since marriage is forbidden even to widows whose previous marriage had been lawful. For virgins who marry after consecration are rather incestuous than adulterous. And, for fear he should by saying, "And if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned," again stimulate the unmarried to be married, he immediately checks himself, and by introducing another consideration, invalidates his previous concession. "Yet," says he, "such shall have tribulation in the flesh." Who are they who shall have tribulation in the flesh? They to whom he had before indulgently said "But and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Yet such shall have tribulation in the flesh." We in our inexperience thought that marriage had at least the joys of the flesh. But if they who are married have tribulation even in the flesh, which is imagined to be the sole source of their pleasure, what else is there to marry for, when in the spirit, and in the mind, and in the flesh itself there is tribulation. "But I would spare you." Thus, he says, I allege tribulation as a motive, as though there were not greater obligations to refrain. "But this I say, brethren, the time is shortened, that henceforth both those that have wives may be as though they had none." I am by no means now discussing virgins, of whose happiness no one entertains a doubt. I am coming to the married. The time is short, the Lord is at hand. Even though we lived nine hundred years, as did men of old, yet we ought to think that short which must one day have an end, and cease to be. But, as things are, and it is not so much the joy as the tribulation of marriage that is short, why do we take wives whom we shall soon be compelled to lose?⁷³ "And those that weep, and those that rejoice, and those that buy, and those that use the world, as though they wept not, as though they rejoiced not, as though they bought not, as though they did not use the world: for the fashion of this world passeth away." If the world, which comprehends all things, passes away, yea if the fashion and intercourse of the world vanishes like the clouds, amongst the other works of the world, marriage too will vanish away. For after the resurrection there will be no wedlock. But if death be the end of marriage, why do we not voluntarily embrace the inevitable? And why do we not, encouraged by the hope of the reward, offer to God that which must be wrung from us against our will. "He that is unmarried is careful for the things of the Lord, how he may please the Lord: but he that is married is careful for the things of the world, how he may please his wife, and is⁷⁴ divided." Let us look at the difference between the cares of the virgin, and those of the married man. The virgin longs to please the Lord, the husband to please his wife, and that he may please her he is careful for the things of the world, which will of course pass away with the world. "And he is divided," that is to say, is distracted with manifold cares and miseries. This is not the place to describe the difficulties of marriage, and to revel in rhetorical commonplaces. I think I delivered myself fully as regards this point in my argument against⁷⁵ Helvidius, and in the book which I addressed to⁷⁶ Eustochium. At all events⁷⁷ Tertullian, while still a young man, gave himself full play with this subject. And my teacher,⁷⁸ Gregory of Nazianzus, discussed virginity and marriage in some Greek verses. I now briefly beg my reader to note that in the Latin manuscripts we have the reading "there is a difference also between the virgin and the wife." The words, it is true, have a meaning of their own, and have by me, as well as by others, been so explained as showing the bearing of the passage. Yet they lack apostolic authority, since the Apostle's words are as we have translated them-"He is careful for the things of the world, how he may please his wife,⁷⁹ and he is divided." Having laid down this, he passes to the virgins and the continent, and says "The woman that is unmarried and a virgin thinks of the things of the Lord, that she may be holy in body and in spirit." Not every unmarried woman is also a virgin. But every virgin is of course unmarried. It may be, that regard for elegance of expression led him to repeat the same idea by means of another word and speak of "a woman unmarried and a virgin"; or at least he may have wished to give to "unmarried" the definite meaning of "virgin," so that we might not suppose him to include harlots, united to no one by the fixed bonds of wedlock, among the "unmarried." Of what, then, does she that is unmarried and a virgin think? "The things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in spirit." Supposing there were nothing else, and that no greater reward followed virginity, this would be motive enough for her choice, to think of the things of the Lord. But he immediately points out the contents of her thought-that she may be holy both in body and spirit. For there are virgins in the flesh, not in the spirit, whose body is intact, their soul corrupt. But that virgin is a sacrifice to Christ, whose mind has not been defiled by thought, nor her flesh by lust. On the other hand, she who is married thinks of the things of the world, how she may please her husband. Just as the man who has a wife is anxious for the things of the world, how he may please his wife, so the married woman thinks of the things of the world, how she may please her husband. But we are not of this world, which lieth in wickedness, the fashion of which passeth away, and concerning which the Lord said to the Apostles,⁸⁰ "If ye were of the world, the world would love its own." And lest perchance someone might suppose that he was laying the heavy burden of chastity on unwilling shoulders, he at once adds his reasons for persuading to it, and says:⁸¹ "And this I say for your profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is seemly, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction." The Latin words do not convey the meaning of the Greek. What words shall we use to render Proij to\ eusxhmon kali eu0pro/sedron tw Kuri/wa0perispa/stwj? The difficulty of translation accounts for the fact that the clause is completely wanting in Latin manuscripts. Let us, however, use the passage as we have translated it. The Apostle does not lay a snare upon us, nor does he compel us to be what we do not wish to be; but he gives his advice as to what is fair and seemly, he would have us attend upon the Lord and ever be anxious about that service, and await the Lord's will, so that like active and well-armed soldiers we may obey orders, and may do so without distraction, which, according to⁸² Ecclesiastes, is given to the men of this world that they may be exercised thereby. But if anyone considers that his virgin, that is, his flesh, is wanton and boiling with lust, and cannot be bridled, and he must do one of two things, either take a wife or fall, let him do what he will, he does not sin if he marry. Let him do, he says, what he will, not what he ought. He does not sin if he marry a wife; yet, he does not well if he marry:⁸³ "But he that standeth stedfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power as touching his own will, and hath determined this in his own heart, to keep his own virgin, shall do well. So then both he that giveth his own virgin in marriage doeth well; and he that giveth her not in marriage shall do better." With marked propriety he had previously said "He who marries a wife does not sin": here he tells us "He that keepeth his own virgin doeth well." But it is one thing not to sin, another to do well.⁸⁴ "Depart from evil," he says, "and do good." The former we forsake, the latter we follow. In this last lies perfection. But whereas he says "and he that giveth his virgin in marriage doeth well," it might be supposed that our remark does not hold good; he therefore forthwith detracts from this seeming good and puts it in the shade by comparing it with another, and saying, "and he that giveth her not in marriage shall do better." If he had not intended to draw the inference of doing better, he would never have previously referred to doing well. But where there is something good and something better, the reward is not in both cases the same, and where the reward is not one and the same, there of course the gifts are different. The difference, then, between marriage and virginity is as great as that between not sinning and doing well; nay rather, to speak less harshly, as great as between good and better.

14. He has ended his discussion of wedlock and virginity, and has carefully steered between the two precepts without turning to the right hand or to the left. He has followed the royal road and fulfilled the command⁸⁵ not to be righteous over much. Now again he compares monogamy with digamy, and as he had subordinated marriage to virginity, so he makes second marriages inferior to first, and says,⁸⁶ "A wife is bound for so long time as her husband liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is free to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord. But she is happier if she abide as she is, after my judgement: and I think that I also have the Spirit of God." He allows second marriages, but to such persons as wish for them and are not able to contain; lest,⁸⁷ having "waxed wanton against Christ," they desire to marry, "having condemnation, because they have rejected their first faith;" and he makes the concession because many had already turned aside after Satan.⁸⁸ "But," says he, "they will be happier if they abide as they are," and he immediately adds the weight of Apostolic authority, "after my judgement." And that an Apostle's authority might not, like that of an ordinary man, be without weight, he added, "and I think that I also have the Spirit of God." When he incites to continence, it is not by the judgement or spirit of man, but by the judgement and Spirit of God; when, however, he grants the indulgence of marriage, he does not mention the Spirit of God, but weighs his judgement with wisdom, and adapts the severity of the strain to the weakness of the individual. In this sense we must take the whole of the following passage:⁸⁹ "For the woman that hath a husband is bound by law to the husband while he liveth; but if the husband die, she is discharged from the law of the husband. So then if, while the husband liveth, she be joined to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if the husband die, she is free from the law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be joined to another man." And similarly the words to Timothy,⁹⁰ "I desire therefore that the younger widows marry, bear children, rule the household, give none occasion to the adversary for reviling: for already some are turned aside after Satan," and so on. For as on account of the danger of fornication he allows virgins to marry, and makes that excusable which in itself is not desirable, so to avoid this same fornication, he allows second marriages to widows. For it is better to know a single husband, though he be a second or third, than to have many paramours: that is, it is more tolerable for a woman to prostitute herself to one man than to many. At all events this is so if the Samaritan woman in John's Gospel who said she had her sixth husband was reproved by the Lord because he was not her husband. For where there are more husbands than one the proper idea of a husband, who is a single person, is destroyed. At the beginning one rib was turned into one wife. "And they two," he says, "shall be one flesh": not three, or four; otherwise, how can they be any longer two, if they are several. Lamech, a man of blood and a murderer, was the first who divided one flesh between two wives. Fratricide and digamy were abolished by the same punishment—that of the deluge. The one was avenged seven times, the other seventy times seven. The guilt is as widely different as are the numbers. What the holiness of second marriage is, appears from this—that a person twice married⁹¹ cannot be enrolled in the ranks of the clergy, and so the Apostle tells Timothy,⁹² "Let none be enrolled as a widow under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man." The whole command concerns those widows who are supported on the alms of the Church. The age is therefore limited, so that those only may receive the food of the poor who can no longer work. And at the same time, consider that she who has had two husbands, even though she be a widow, decrepit, and in want, is not a worthy recipient of the Church's funds. But if she be deprived of the bread of charity, how much more is she deprived of that bread which cometh down from heaven, and of which if a man eat unworthily, he shall be guilty of outrage offered to the body and the blood of Christ?

15. The passages, however, which I have adduced in support of my position and in which it is permitted to widows, if they so desire, to marry again, are interpreted by some concerning those widows who had lost their husbands and were found in that condition when they became Christians. For, supposing a person baptized and her husband dead, it would not be consistent if the Apostle were to bid her marry another, when he enjoins even those who have wives to be as though they had them not. And this is why the number of wives which a man may take is not defined, because when Christian baptism has been received, even though a third or a fourth wife has been taken, she is reckoned as the first. Otherwise, if, after baptism and after the death of a first husband, a second is taken why should not a sixth after the death of the second, third, fourth, and fifth, and so on? For it is possible, that through some strange misfortune, or by the judgement of God cutting short repeated marriages, a young woman may have several husbands, while an old woman may be left a widow by her first husband in extreme age. The first Adam was married once: the second was unmarried. Let the supporters of second marriages shew us as their leader a third Adam who was twice married. But granted that Paul allowed second marriages: upon the same grounds it follows that he allows even third and fourth marriages, or a woman may marry as often as her husband dies. The Apostle was forced to choose many things which he did not like. He circumcised Timothy, and shaved his own head, practised going barefoot, let his hair grow long, and cut it at Cenchrea. And he had certainly chastised the Galatians, and blamed Peter because for the sake of Jewish observances he separated himself from the Gentiles. As then in other points connected with the discipline of the Church he was a Jew to Jews, a Gentile to Gentiles, and was made all things to all men, that he might gain all: so too he allowed second marriages to incontinent persons, and did not limit the number of marriages, in order that women, although they saw themselves permitted to take a second husband, in the same way as a third or a fourth was allowed, might blush to take a second, lest they should be compared to those who were three or four times married. If more than one husband be allowed, it makes no difference whether he be a second or a third, because there is no longer a question of single marriage.⁹³ "All things are lawful, but not all things are expedient." I do not condemn second, nor third, nor, pardon the expression, eighth marriages: I will go still further and say that I welcome even a penitent whoremonger. Things that are equally lawful must be weighed in an even balance.

16. But he takes us to the Old Testament, and beginning with Adam goes on to Zacharias and Elizabeth. He next confronts us with Peter and the rest of the Apostles. We are therefore bound to traverse the same course of argument and show that chastity was always preferred to the condition of marriage. And as regards Adam and Eve we must maintain that before the fall they were virgins in Paradise: but after they sinned, and were cast out of Paradise, they were immediately married. Then we have the passage,⁹⁴ "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, and the twain shall become one flesh," in explanation of which the Apostle straightway adds,⁹⁵ "This mystery is great, but I speak in regard of Christ, and of the Church." Christ in the flesh is a virgin, in the spirit he is once married. For he has one Church, concerning which the same Apostle says,⁹⁶ "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church." If Christ loves the Church holily, chastely, and without spot, let husbands also love their wives in chastity. And let everyone know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour, not in the lust of concupiscence, as the Gentiles who know not God:⁹⁷ "For God called us not for uncleanness, but in sanctification: seeing that ye have put off the old man with his doings, and have put on the new man, which is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of him that created him: where there cannot be male and female, Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman: but Christ is all, and in all." The link of marriage is not found in the image of the Creator. When difference of sex is done away, and we are putting off the old man, and putting on the new, then we are being born again into Christ a virgin, who was both born of a virgin, and is born again through⁹⁸ virginity. And whereas he says "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth," it was necessary first to plant the wood and to let it grow, so that there might be an after-growth for cutting down. And at the same time we must bear in mind the meaning of the phrase, "replenish the earth." Marriage replenishes the earth, virginity fills Paradise. This too we must observe, at least if we would faithfully follow the Hebrew, that while Scripture on the first, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth days relates that, having finished the works of each, "God saw that it was good," on the second day it omitted this altogether, leaving us to understand that two is not a good number because it destroys unity, and prefigures the marriage compact. Hence it was that all the animals which Noah took into the ark by pairs were unclean. Odd numbers denote cleanness. And yet by the double number is represented another mystery: that not even in beasts and unclean birds is second marriage approved. For unclean animals went in two and two, and clean ones by sevens, so that Noah after the flood might be able to immediately offer to God sacrifices from the latter.

17. But if Enoch was translated, and Noah was preserved at the deluge, I do not think that Enoch was translated because he had a wife, but because he was⁹⁹ the first to call upon God and to believe in the Creator; and the Apostle Paul fully instructs us concerning him in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Noah, moreover, who was preserved as a kind of second root for the human race, must of course be preserved together with his wife and sons, although in this there is a Scripture mystery. The ark,¹⁰⁰ according to the Apostle Peter, was a type of the Church, in which eight souls were saved. When Noah entered into it, both he and his sons were separated from their wives; but when he landed from it, they united in pairs, and what had been separated in the ark, that is, in the Church, was joined together in the intercourse of the world. And at the same time if the ark had many compartments and little chambers, and was made with second and third stories, and was filled with different beasts, and was furnished with dwellings, great or small, according to the kind of animal, I think all this diversity in the compartments was a figure of the manifold character of the Church.

18. He raises the objection that when God gave his second blessing, permission was granted to eat flesh, which had not in the first benediction been allowed. He should know that just as divorce according to the Saviour's word was not permitted from the beginning, but on account of the hardness of our heart was a concession of Moses to the human race, so too the eating of flesh was unknown until the deluge. But after the deluge, like the quails given in the desert to the murmuring people, the poison of flesh-meat was offered to our teeth. The Apostle writing to the Ephesians¹⁰¹ teaches that God had purposed in the fulness of time to sum up and renew in Christ Jesus all things which are in heaven and in earth. Whence also the Saviour himself in the Revelation of John says,¹⁰² "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending." At the beginning of the human race we neither ate flesh, nor gave bills of divorce, nor suffered circumcision for a sign. Thus we reached the deluge. But after the deluge, together with the giving of the law which no one could fulfil, flesh was given for food, and divorce was allowed to hard-hearted men, and the knife of circumcision was applied, as though the hand of God had fashioned us with something superfluous. But once Christ has come in the end of time, and Omega passed into Alpha and turned the end into the beginning, we are no longer allowed divorce, nor are we circumcised, nor do we eat flesh, for the Apostle says,¹⁰³ "It is good not to eat flesh, nor to drink wine." For wine as well as flesh was consecrated after the deluge.

19. What shall I say of Abraham who had three wives, as Jovinianus says, and received circumcision as a sign of his faith? If we follow him in the number of his wives, let us also follow him in circumcision. We must not partly follow, partly reject him. Isaac, moreover, the husband of one wife, Rebecca, prefigures the Church of Christ, and reproves the wantonness of second marriage. And if Jacob had two pairs of wives and concubines, and our opponent will not admit that blear-eyed Leah, ugly and prolific, was a type of the synagogue, but that Rachel, beautiful and long barren, indicated the mystery of the Church, let me remind him that when Jacob did this thing he was among the Assyrians, and in Mesopotamia in bondage to a hard master. But when he wished to enter the holy land, he raised on Mount Galeed¹⁰⁴ the heap of witness, in token that the lord of Mesopotamia had failed to find anything among his baggage, and there swore that he would never return to the place of his bondage; and when,¹⁰⁵ after wrestling with the angel at the brook Jabbok, he began to limp, because the great muscle of his thigh was withered, he at once gained the name of Israel.¹⁰⁶ Then the wife whom he once loved, and for whom he had served, was slain by the son of sorrow near Bethlehem which was destined to be the birthplace of our Lord, the herald of virginity: and the intimacies of Mesopotamia died in the land of the Gospel.

20. But I wonder why he set¹⁰⁷ Judah and Tamar before us for an example, unless perchance even harlots give him pleasure; or¹⁰⁸ Onan who was slain because he grudged his brother seed. Does he imagine that we approve of any sexual intercourse except for the procreation of children? As regards Moses, it is clear that he would have been in peril at the inn, if¹⁰⁹ Sephora which is by interpretation a bird, had not circumcised her son, and cut off the foreskin of marriage with the knife which prefigured the Gospel. This is that Moses who when he saw a great vision and heard an angel, or the Lord speaking in the bush,¹¹⁰ could not by any means approach to him without first loosing the latchet of his shoe, that is, putting off the bonds of marriage. And we need not be surprised at this in the case of one who was a prophet, lawgiver, and the friend of God, seeing that all the people when about to draw nigh to Mount Sinai, and to hear the voice speaking to them, were commanded to sanctify themselves in three days, and keep themselves from their wives. I am out of order in violating historical sequence, but I may point out that the same thing was said by¹¹¹ Ahimelech the priest to David when he fled to Nob: "If only the young men have kept themselves from women." And David answered, "of a truth about these three days." For the shew-bread, like the body of Christ, might not be eaten by those who rose from the marriage bed. And in passing we ought to consider the words "if only the young men have kept themselves from women." The truth is that, in view of the purity of the body of Christ, all sexual intercourse is unclean. In the law also it is enjoined that the¹¹² high priest must not marry any but a virgin, nor must he take to wife a widow. If a virgin and a widow are on the same level, how is it that one is taken, the other rejected?¹¹³ And the widow of a priest is bidden abide in the house of her father, and not to contract a second marriage.¹¹⁴ If the sister of a priest dies in virginity, just as the priest is commanded to go to the funeral of his father and mother, so must he go to hers. But if she be married, she is despised as though she belonged not to him. He who has¹¹⁵ married a wife, and he who has planted a vineyard, an image of the propagation of children, is forbidden to go to the battle. For he who is the slave of his wife cannot be the Lord's soldier. And the layer in the tabernacle was cast from the mirrors of the women who¹¹⁶ fasted, signifying the bodies of pure virgins: And within,¹¹⁷ in the sanctuary, both cherubim, and mercy-seat, and the ark of the covenant, and the table of shew-bread, and the candle-stick, and the censer, were made of the purest gold. For silver might not be brought into the holy of holies.

21. I must not linger over Moses when my purpose is at full speed to lightly touch on each topic and to sketch the outline of a proper knowledge of my subject. I will pass to Joshua the son of Nun, who was previously called Ause, or better, as in the Hebrew, Osee, that is, Saviour. For he,¹¹⁸ according to the epistle of Jude, saved the people of Israel and led them forth out of Egypt, and brought them into the land of promise. As soon as this Joshua¹¹⁹ reached the Jordan, the waters of marriage, which had ever flowed in the land, dried up and stood in one heap; and the whole people, barefooted and on dry ground, crossed over, and came to Gilgal, and there was a second time circumcised. If we take this literally, it cannot possibly stand. For if we had two foreskins, or if another could grow after the first was cut off, there would be room for speaking of a second circumcision. But the meaning is that Joshua circumcised the people who had crossed the desert, with the Gospel knife, and he circumcised them with a stone knife, that what in the case of Moses' son was prefigured in a few might under Joshua be fulfilled in all. Moreover, the very foreskins were heaped together and buried, and covered with earth, and the fact that the reproach of Egypt was taken away, and the name of the place, Gilgal, which is by interpretation¹²⁰ revelation, show that while the people wandered in the desert uncircumcised their eyes were blinded. Let us see what follows. After this Gospel circumcision and the consecration of twelve stones at the place of revelation, the Passover was immediately celebrated, a lamb was slain for them, and they ate the food of the Holy Land. Joshua went forth, and was met by the Prince of the host, sword in hand, that is either to shew that he was ready to fight for the circumcised people, or to sever the tie of marriage. And in the same way that Moses was commanded, so was he:¹²¹ "loose thy shoe, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." For if the armed host of the Lord was represented by the trumpets of the priests, we may see in Jericho a type of the overthrow of the world by the preaching of the Gospel. And to pass over endless details (for it is not my purpose now to unfold all the mysteries of the Old Testament),¹²² five kings who previously reigned in the land of promise, and opposed the Gospel army, were overcome in battle with Joshua. I think it is clearly to be understood that before the Lord led his people from Egypt and circumcised them, sight, smell, taste, hearing, and touch had the dominion, and that to these, as to five princes, everything was subject. And when they¹²³ took refuge in the cave of the body and in a place of darkness, Jesus entered the body itself and slew them, that the source of their power might be the instrument of their death.

22. But it is now time for us to raise the standard of Joshua's chastity. It is written that Moses had a wife. Now Moses is interpreted both by our Lord and by the Apostle to mean the law:¹²⁴ "They have Moses and the prophets." And¹²⁵ "Death reigned from Adam until Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression." And no one doubts that in both passages Moses signifies the law. We read that Moses, that is the law, had a wife: shew me then in the same way that Joshua the son of Nun had either wife or children, and if you can do so, I will confess that I am beaten. He certainly received the fairest spot in the division of the land of Judah, and died, not in the twenties, which are ever unlucky in Scripture-by them are reckoned the years of¹²⁶ Jacob's service,¹²⁷ the price of Joseph, and¹²⁸ sundry presents which Esau who was fond of them received-but in the¹²⁹ tens, whose praises we have often sung; and he was buried in¹³⁰ Thamnath Sare, that is, most perfect sovereignty, or among those of a new covering, to signify the crowds of virgins, covered by the Saviour's aid on Mount Ephraim, that is, the fruitful mountain; on the north of the Mountain of Gaash, which is, being interpreted, disturbance: for¹³¹ "Mount Sion is on the sides of the north, the city of the Great King," is ever exposed to hatred, and in every trial says¹³² "But my feet had well nigh slipped." The book which bears the name of Joshua ends with his burial. Again in the book of Judges we read of him as though he had risen and come to life again, and by way of summary his works are extolled. We read too¹³³ "So Joshua sent the people away, every man unto his inheritance, that they might possess the land." And "Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua," and so on. There immediately follows: "And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the Lord, died, being an hundred and ten years old." Moses, moreover, only saw the land of promise; he could not enter: and¹³⁴ "he died in the land of Moab, and the Lord buried him in the valley in the land of Moab over against Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day." Let us compare the burial of the two: Moses died in the land of Moab, Joshua in the land of Judaea. The former was buried in a valley over against the house of Phogor, which is, being interpreted, reproach (for the Hebrew Phogor corresponds to Priapus¹³⁵); the latter in Mount Ephraim on the north of Mount Gaash. And in the simple expressions of the sacred Scriptures there is always a more subtle meaning. The Jews gloried in children and child-bearing; and the barren woman, who had not offspring in Israel, was accursed; but blessed was he whose seed was in Sion, and his family in Jerusalem; and part of the highest blessing was,¹³⁶ "Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine, in the innermost parts of thy house, thy children like olive plants, round about thy table." Therefore his grave is described as placed in a valley over against the house of an idol which was in a special sense consecrated to lust. But we who fight under Joshua our leader, even to the present day know not where Moses was buried. For we despise Phogor, and all his shame, knowing that they who are in the flesh cannot please God. And the Lord before the flood had said¹³⁷ "My spirit shall not abide in man for ever, for that he also is flesh." Wherefore, when Moses died, the people of Israel mourned for him; but Joshua like one on his way to victory was unmourned. For marriage ends at death; virginity thereafter begins to wear the crown.

23. Next he brings forward Samson, and does not consider that the Lord's Nazarite was once shaven bald by a woman. And although Samson continues to be a type of the Saviour because he loved a harlot from among the Gentiles, which harlot corresponds to the Church, and because he slew more enemies in his death than he did in his life, yet he does not set an example of conjugal chastity. And he surely reminds us¹³⁸ of Jacob's prophecy-he was shaken by his runaway steed, bitten by an adder and fell backwards. But why he enumerated Deborah, and Barak, and the wife of Heber the Kenite, I am at a loss to understand. For it is one thing to draw up a list of military commanders in historical sequence, another to indicate certain figures of marriage which cannot be found in them. And whereas he prefers the fidelity of the father Jephthah to the tears of the virgin daughter, that makes for us. For we are not commending virgins of the world so much as those who are virgins for Christ's sake, and most Hebrews blame the father for the rash vow he made,¹³⁹ "If thou wilt indeed deliver the children of Ammon into mine hand, then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, it shall be for the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." Supposing (they say) a dog or an ass had met him, what would he have done? Their meaning is that God so ordered events that he who had improvidently made a vow, should learn his error by the death of his daughter. And if Samuel who was brought up in the tabernacle married a wife, how does that prejudice virginity? As if at the present day also there were not many married priests, and as though the Apostle did not¹⁴⁰ describe a bishop as the husband of one wife, having children with all purity. At the same time we must not forget that Samuel was a Levite, not a priest or high-priest. Hence it was that his mother made for him a linen ephod, that is, a linen garment to go over the shoulders, which was the proper dress of the Levites and of the inferior order. And so he is not named in the Psalms among the priests, but among those who call upon the name of the Lord:¹⁴¹ "Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among those who call upon his name." For¹⁴² Levi begat Kohath, Kohath begat Amminadab, Amminadab begat Korah, Korah begat Assir, Assir begat Elkanah, Elkanah begat Zuph, Zuph begat Tahath, Tahath begat Eliel, Eliel begat Jeroham, Jeroham begat Elkanah, Elkanah begat Samuel. And no one doubts that the priests sprang from the stock of Aaron, Eleazar, and Phinees. And seeing that they had wives, they would be rightly brought against us, if, led away by the error of the Encratites, we were to maintain that marriage deserved censure, and our high priest were not after the order of Melchizedek, without father, without mother,¹⁴³ Agenealo/ghtoj, that is, unmarried. And much fruit truly did Samuel reap from his children! he himself pleased God, but¹⁴⁴ begat such children as displeased the Lord. But if in support of second marriage, he urges the instance of Boaz and Ruth, let him know that in the Gospel (S. Matt. i. 6) to typify the Church even Rahab the harlot is reckoned among our Lord's ancestors.

24. He boasts that David bought his wife for two hundred foreskins. But he should remember that David had numerous other wives, and afterwards received Michal, Saul's daughter, whom her father had delivered to another, and when he was old got heat from the embrace of the Shunammite maiden. And I do not say this because I am bold enough to disparage holy men, but because it is one thing to live under the law, another to live under the Gospel. David slew Uriah the Hittite and committed adultery with Bathsheba. And because he was a man of blood-the reference is not, as some think, to his wars, but to the¹⁴⁵ murder-he was not permitted to build a temple of the Lord. But as for us,¹⁴⁶ if we cause one of the least to stumble, and if we say to a brother¹⁴⁷ Raca, or¹⁴⁸ use our eyes improperly, it were good that a millstone were hanged about our neck, we shall be in danger of Gehenna, and a mere glance will be reckoned to us for adultery. He passes on to Solomon, through whom wisdom itself sang its own praises. Seeing that not content with dwelling upon his praises, he calls him uxorious, I am surprised that he did not add the words of the Canticles:¹⁴⁹ "There are threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and maidens without number," and those of the First Book of Kings;¹⁵⁰ And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines, and others without number." These are they who turned away his heart from the Lord: and yet before he had many wives, and fell into sins of the flesh, at the beginning of his reign and in his early years he built a temple to the Lord. For every one is judged not for what he will be, but for what he is. But if Jovinianus approves the example of Solomon, he will no longer be in favour of second and third marriages only, but unless he has seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, he cannot be the king's antitype or attain to his merit. I earnestly again and again remind you, my reader, that I am compelled to speak as I do, and that I do not disparage our predecessors under the law, but am well aware that they served their generation according to their circumstances, and fulfilled the Lord's command to increase, and multiply, and replenish the earth. And what is more they were figures of those that were to come. But we to whom it is said,¹⁵¹ "The time is shortened, that henceforth those that have wives may be as though they had none," have a different command, and for us virginity is consecrated by the Virgin Saviour.

25. What folly it was to include Elijah and Elisha in a list of married men, is plain without a word from me. For, since John Baptist came in the spirit and power of Elijah, and John was a virgin, it is clear that he came not only in Elijah's spirit, but also in his bodily chastity. Then the passage relating to Hezekiah might be adduced (though Jovinianus with his wonted stupidity did not notice it), in which after his recovery and the addition of fifteen years to his life he said, "Now will I beget children." It must be remembered, however, that in the Hebrew texts the passage is not so, but runs thus:¹⁵² "The father to the children shall make known thy faithfulness." Nor need we wonder that Huldah, the prophetess, and wife of Shallum, was¹⁵³ consulted by Josiah, King of Judah, when the captivity was approaching and the wrath of the Lord was falling upon Jerusalem: since it is the rule of Scripture when holy men fail, to praise women to the reproach of men. And it is superfluous to speak of Daniel, for the Hebrews to the present day affirm that the three youths were eunuchs, in accordance with the declaration of God which Isaiah utters to Hezekiah:¹⁵⁴ "And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away: and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the King of Babylon." And again in Daniel we read:¹⁵⁵ "And the king spake unto Ashpenaz the master of his eunuchs, that he should bring in certain of the children of Israel, even of the seed royal and of the nobles: youth in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science." The conclusion is that if Daniel and the three youths were chosen from the seed royal, and if Scripture foretold that there should be eunuchs of the seed royal, these men were those who were made eunuchs. If he meets us with the argument that in Ezekiel¹⁵⁶ it is said that Noah, Daniel and Job in a sinful land could not free their sons and daughters, we reply that the words are used hypothetically. Noah and Job were not in existence at that time: we know that they lived many ages before. And the meaning is this: if there were such and such men in a sinful land, they shall not be able to save their own sons and daughters: because the righteousness of the father shall not save the son, nor shall the sin of one be imputed to another.¹⁵⁷ "For the soul that sinneth, it shall die." This, too, must be said, that Daniel, as the history of his book shows, was taken captive with King Jehoiakim at the same time that Ezekiel was also led into captivity. How then could he have sons who was still a youth? And only three years had elapsed when he was brought in to wait upon the king. Let no one suppose that Ezekiel at this time remembers Daniel as a man, not as a youth; for "It came to pass," he says,¹⁵⁸ "in the sixth year," that is of King Jehoiakim, "in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month:" and, "as I sat in my house, and the elders of Judah sat before me." Yet on that same day it was said to him,¹⁵⁹ "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it." Daniel was therefore a youth, and known to the people, either on account of his interpretation of the king's dreams,¹⁶⁰ or on account of the release of Susannah, and the slaying of the elders. And it is clearly proved that at the time these things were spoken of Noah, Daniel, and Job, Daniel was still a youth and could not have had sons and daughters, whom he might save by his righteousness. So far concerning the Law.

26. Coming to the Gospel he sets before us Zacharias and Elizabeth, Peter and his mother-in-law, and, with a shamelessness to which we have now grown accustomed, fails to understand that they, too, ought to have been reckoned among those who served the Law. For the Gospel had no being before the crucifixion of Christ—it was consecrated by His passion and by His blood. In accordance with this rule Peter and the other Apostles (I must give Jovinianus something now and then out of my abundance) had indeed wives, but those which they had taken before they knew the Gospel. But once they were received into the Apostolate, they forsook the offices of marriage. For when Peter, representing the Apostles, says to the Lord:¹⁶¹ "Lo we have left all and followed thee," the Lord answered him,¹⁶² "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house or wife, or brethren, or parents, or children for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this time, and in the world to come eternal life." But if, in order to show that all the Apostles had wives, he meets us with the words¹⁶³ "Have we no right to lead about women or wives" (for gunh in Greek has both meanings) "even as the rest of the apostles, and Cephas, and the brethren of the Lord?" let him add what is found in the Greek copies, "Have we no right to lead about women that are sisters, or wives?" This makes it clear that the writer referred to other holy women, who, in accordance with Jewish custom, ministered to their teachers of their substance, as we read was the practice with even our Lord himself. Where there is a previous reference to eating and drinking, and the outlay of money, and mention is afterwards made of women that are sisters, it is quite clear, as we have said, that we must understand, not wives, but those women who ministered of their substance. And we read the same account in the Old Testament of the Shunammite who was wont to welcome Elisha, and to put for him a table, and bread, and a candlestick, and the rest. At all events if we take gunaikaj to mean wives, not women, the addition of the word sisters destroys the effect of the word wives, and shews that they were related in spirit, not by wedlock. Nevertheless, with the exception of the Apostle Peter, it is not openly stated that the Apostles had wives; and since the statement is made of one while nothing is said about the rest, we must understand that those of whom Scripture gives no such description had no wives. Yet Jovinianus, who has arrayed against us Zacharias and Elizabeth, Peter and his wife's mother, should know, that John was the son of Zacharias and Elizabeth, that is, a virgin was the offspring of marriage, the Gospel of the law, chastity of matrimony; so that by a virgin prophet the virgin Lord might be both announced and baptized. But we might say concerning Peter, that he had a mother-in-law when he believed, and no longer had a wife, although in the¹⁶⁴ "Sentences" we read of both his wife and daughter. But for the present our argument must be based wholly on Scripture. He has made his appeal to the Apostles, because he thinks that they, who hold the chief authority in our moral system and are the typical Christian teachers, were not virgins. If, then, we allow that they were not virgins (and, with the exception of Peter, the point cannot be proved), yet I must tell him that it is to the Apostles that the words of Isaiah relate:¹⁶⁵ "Except the Lord of hosts had left unto us a small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, we should have been like unto Gomorrah." So, then, they who were by birth Jews could not under the Gospel recover the virginity which they had lost in Judaism. And yet John, one of the disciples, who is related to have been the youngest of the Apostles, and who was a virgin when he embraced Christianity, remained a virgin, and on that account was more beloved by our Lord, and lay upon the breast of Jesus. And what Peter, who had had a wife, did not dare ask,¹⁶⁶ he requested John to ask. And after the resurrection, when Mary Magdalene told them that the Lord had risen,¹⁶⁷ they both ran to the sepulchre, but John outran Peter. And when they were fishing in the ship on the lake of Gennesaret, Jesus stood upon the shore, and the Apostles knew not who it was they saw;¹⁶⁸ the virgin alone recognized a virgin, and said to Peter, "It is the Lord." Again, after hearing the prediction that he must be bound by another, and led whither he would not, and must suffer on the cross. Peter said, "Lord what shall this man do?" being unwilling to desert John, with whom he had always been united. Our Lord said to him, "What is that to thee if I wish him so to be?" Whence the saying went abroad among the brethren that that disciple should not die. Here we have a proof that virginity does not die, and that the defilement of marriage is not washed away by the blood of martyrdom, but virginity abides with Christ, and its sleep is not death but a passing to another state. If, however, Jovinianus should obstinately contend that John was not a virgin, (whereas we have maintained that his virginity was the cause of the special love our Lord bore to him), let him explain, if he was not a virgin, why it was that he was loved more than the other Apostles. But you say,¹⁶⁹ the Church was rounded upon Peter: although¹⁷⁰ elsewhere the same is attributed to all the Apostles, and they all receive the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and the strength of the Church depends upon them all alike, yet one among the twelve is chosen so that when a head has been appointed, there may be no occasion for schism. But why was not John chosen, who was a virgin? Deference was paid to age, because Peter was the elder: one who was a youth, I may say almost a boy, could not be set over men of advanced age; and a good master who was bound to remove every occasion of strife among his disciples, and who had said to them,¹⁷¹ "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you," and,¹⁷² "He that is the greater among you, let him be the least of all," would not be thought to afford cause of envy against the youth whom he had loved. We maybe sure that John was then a boy because ecclesiastical history most clearly proves that he lived to the reign of Trajan, that is, he fell asleep in the sixty-eighth year after our Lord's passion, as I have briefly noted in my treatise on Illustrious Men.¹⁷³ Peter is an Apostle, and John is an Apostle-the one a married man, the other a virgin; but Peter is an Apostle only, John is both an Apostle and an Evangelist, and a prophet. An Apostle, because he wrote to the Churches as a master; an Evangelist, because he composed a Gospel, a thing which no other of the Apostles, excepting Matthew, did; a prophet, for he saw in the island of Patmos, to which he had been banished by the Emperor Domitian as a martyr for the Lord, an Apocalypse containing the boundless mysteries of the future Tertullian, more over, relates that he was sent to Rome, and that having been plunged into a jar of boiling oil he came out fresher and more active than when he went in. But his very Gospel is widely different from the rest. Matthew as though he were writing of a man begins thus: "The book of the Generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham;" Luke begins with the priesthood of Zacharias; Mark with a prophecy of the prophets Malachi and Isaiah. The first has the face of a man, on account of the genealogical table; the second, the face of a calf, on account of the priesthood; the third, the face of a lion, on account of the voice of one crying in the desert,¹⁷⁴ "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight." But John like an eagle soars aloft, and reaches the Father Himself, and says,¹⁷⁵ "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God," and so on. The virgin writer expounded mysteries which the married could not, and to briefly sum up all and show how great was the privilege of John, or rather of virginity in John, the Virgin Mother¹⁷⁶ was entrusted by the Virgin Lord to the Virgin disciple.

27. But we toil to no purpose. For our opponent urges against us the Apostolic sentence and says,¹⁷⁷ "Adam was first formed, then Eve; and Adam was not beguiled, but the woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression: but she shall be saved through the child-bearing, if they continue in faith and love and sanctification with sobriety." Let us consider what led the Apostle to make this declaration:¹⁷⁸ "I desire therefore that the men pray in every place, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and disputing." So in due course he lays down rules of life for the women and says "In like manner that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, and gold or pearls or costly raiment; but (which becometh women professing godliness) through good works. Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness." And that the lot of a woman might not seem a hard one, reducing her to the condition of a slave to her husband, the Apostle recalls the ancient law and goes back to the first example: that Adam was first made, then the woman out of his rib; and that the Devil could not seduce Adam, but did seduce Eve; and that after displeasing God she was immediately subjected to the man, and began to turn to her husband; and he points out that she who was once tied with the bonds of marriage and was reduced to the condition of Eve, might blot out the¹⁷⁹ old transgression by the¹⁸⁰ procreation of children: provided, however, that she bring up the children themselves in the faith and love of Christ, and in sanctification and chastity; for we must not adopt the faulty reading of the Latin texts, sobrietas, but castitas, that is,¹⁸¹ swfrosunh. You see how you are mastered by the witness of this passage also, and cannot but be driven to admit that what you thought was on the side of marriage tells in favour of virginity. For if the woman is saved in child-bearing, and the more the children the greater the safety of the mothers, why did he add "if they continue in faith and love and sanctification with chastity"? The woman will then be saved, if she bear not children who will remain virgins: if what she has herself lost, she attains in her children, and makes up for the loss and decay, of the root by the excellence of the flower and fruit.

28. Above, in passing, when our opponent adduced Solomon, who, although he had many wives, nevertheless built the temple, I briefly replied that it was my intention to run over the remaining points. Now that he may not cry out that both Solomon and others under the law, prophets and holy men, have been dishonoured by us, let us show what this very man with his many wives and concubines thought of marriage. For no one can know better than he who suffered through them, what a wife or woman is. Well then, he says in the Proverbs:¹⁸² "The foolish and bold woman comes to want bread." What bread? Surely that bread which cometh down from heaven: and he immediately adds¹⁸³ "The earth-born perish in her house, rush into the depths of hell." Who are the earth-born that perish in her house? They of course who follow the first Adam, who is of the earth, and not the second, who is from heaven. And again in another place: "Like a worm in wood, so a wicked woman destroyeth her husband." But if you assert that this was spoken of bad wives, I shall briefly answer: What necessity rests upon me to run the risk of the wife I marry proving good or bad?¹⁸⁴ "It is better," he says, "to dwell in a desert land, than with a contentious and passionate woman in a wide house." How seldom we find a wife without these faults, he knows who is married. Hence that sublime orator, Varius Geminus¹⁸⁵ says well "The man who does not quarrel is a bachelor."¹⁸⁶ "It is better to dwell in the corner of the housetop, than with a contentious woman in a house in common." If a house common to husband and wife makes a wife proud and breeds contempt for the husband: how much more if the wife be the richer of the two, and the husband but a lodger in her house! She begins to be not a wife, but mistress of the house; and if she offend her husband, they must part.¹⁸⁷ "A continual dropping on a wintry day" turns a man out of doors, and so will a contentious woman drive a man from his own house. She floods his house with her constant nagging and daily chatter, and ousts him from his own home, that is the Church. Hence the same Solomon previously commands:¹⁸⁸ "My son flows forth beyond." And the Apostle, writing to the Hebrews, says "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things spoken, lest haply we flow forth beyond." But who can hide from himself what is thus enigmatically expressed?¹⁸⁹ "The horseleech had three I daughters, dearly loved, but they satisfied her not, and a fourth is not satisfied when you say Enough; the grave, and woman's love, and the earth that is not satisfied with water, and the fire that saith not, Enough." The horse-leech is the devil, the daughters of the devil are dearly loved, and they cannot be satisfied with the blood of the slain: the grave, and woman's love, and the earth dry and scorched with heat. It is not the harlot, or the adulteress who is spoken of; but woman's love in general is accused of ever being insatiable; put it out, it bursts into flame; give it plenty, it is again in need; it enervates a man's mind, and engrosses all thought except for the passion which it feeds. What we read in the parable which follows is to the same effect: "For three things the earth doth tremble, and for four which it cannot bear: for a servant when he is king: and a fool when he is filled with meat: for an odious woman when she is married to a good husband: and an handmaid that is heir to her mistress." See how a wife is classed with the greatest evils. But if you reply that it is an odious wife, I will give you the same answer as before-the mere possibility of such danger is in itself no light matter. For he who marries a wife is uncertain whether he is marrying an odious woman or one worthy of his love. If she be odious, she is intolerable. If worthy of love, her love is compared to the grave, to the parched earth, and to fire.

29. Let us come to Ecclesiastes and adduce a few corroborative passages from him also.¹⁹⁰ "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven: a time to be born, and a time to die: a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted." We brought forth young under the law with Moses, let us die under the Gospel with Christ. We planted in marriage, let us by chastity pluck up that which was planted. "A time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing: a time to love, and a time to hate: a time for war, and a time for peace." And at the same time he warns us not to prefer the law to the Gospel; nor to think that virgin purity is to be placed on a level with marriage:¹⁹¹ "Better," he says, "is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof." And he immediately adds: "Say not thou, what is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not inquire wisely concerning this." And he gives the reason why the latter days are better than the former:¹⁹² "For wisdom with an inheritance is good." Under the law carnal wisdom was followed by the sword of death; under the Gospel an eternal inheritance awaits spiritual wisdom. "Behold, this have I found,¹⁹³ saith the Preacher, one man among a thousand have I found; but a woman among all those have I not found. Behold this only have I found, that God made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." He says that he had found man upright. Consider the force of the words. The word man comprehends both male and female. "But a woman," he says, "among all these have I not found." Let us read the beginning of Genesis, and we shall find Adam, that is man, called both male and female. Having then been created by God good and upright, by our own fault we have fallen to a worse condition; and that which in Paradise had been upright, when we left Paradise was corrupt. If you object that before they sinned there was a distinction in sex between male and female, and that they could without sin have come together, it is uncertain what might have happened. For we cannot know the judgements of God, and anticipate his sentence as we choose. What really happened is plain enough,-that they who in Paradise remained in perpetual virginity, when they were expelled from Paradise were joined together. Or if Paradise admits of marriage, and there is no difference between marriage and virginity, what prevented their previous intercourse even in Paradise? They are driven out of Paradise; and what they did not there, they do on earth; so that from the very earliest days of humanity virginity was consecrated by Paradise, and marriage by earth.¹⁹⁴ "Let thy garments be always white." The eternal whiteness of our garments is the purity of virginity. In the morning we sowed our seed, and in the evening let us not cease. Let us who served marriage under the law, serve virginity under the Gospel.

30. I pass to the Song of Songs, and whereas our opponent thinks it makes altogether for marriage, I shall show that it contains the mysteries of virginity. Let us hear what the bride says before that the bridegroom comes to earth, suffers, descends to the lower world, and rises again.¹⁹⁵ "We will make for thee likenesses of gold with ornaments of silver while the king sits at his table." Before the Lord rose again, and the Gospel shone, the bride had not gold, but likenesses of gold. As for the silver, however, which she professes to have at the marriage, she not only had silver ornaments, but she had them in variety-in widows, in the continent, and in the married. Then the bridegroom makes answer to the bride, and teaches her that the shadow of the old law has passed away, and the truth of the Gospel has come.¹⁹⁶ "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away, for lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone." This relates to the Old Testament. Once more he speaks of the Gospel and of virginity: "The flowers appear on the earth, the time of the pruning of vines has come." Does he not seem to you to say the very same thing that the Apostle says:¹⁹⁷ "The time is shortened that henceforth both those that have wives may be as though they had none"? And more plainly does he herald chastity:¹⁹⁸ "The voice," he says, "of the turtle is heard in our land." The turtle, the chastest of birds, always dwelling in lofty places, is a type of the Saviour. Let us read the works of naturalists and we shall find that it is the nature of the turtle-dove, if it lose its mate, not to take another; and we shall understand that second marriage is repudiated even by dumb birds. And immediately the turtle says to its fellow:¹⁹⁹ "The fig tree hath put forth its green figs," that is, the commandments of the old law have fallen, and the blossoming vines of the Gospel give forth their fragrance Whence the Apostle also says,²⁰⁰ "We are a sweet savour of Christ."²⁰¹ "Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away. O my dove, thou art in the clefts of the rock, in the covert of the steep place. Let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely."²⁰² Whilst thou coveredst thy countenance like Moses and the veil of the law remained, I neither saw thy face, nor did I condescend to hear thy voice. I said,²⁰³ "Yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear." But now with unveiled face behold my glory, and shelter thyself in the cleft and steep places of the solid rock. On hearing this the bride disclosed the mysteries of chastity:²⁰⁴ "My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth his flock among the lilies," that is among the pure virgin bands. Would you know what sort of a throne our true Solomon, the Prince of Peace, has, and what his attendants are like?²⁰⁵ "Behold," he says, "it is the litter of Solomon: threescore mighty men are about it, of the mighty men of Israel. They all handle the sword, and are expert in war: every man hath his sword upon his thigh." They who are about Solomon have their sword upon their thigh, like Ehud, the left-handed judge, who slew the fattest of foes, a man devoted to the flesh, and cut short all his pleasures.²⁰⁶ "I will get me," he says, "to the mountain of myrrh;" to those, that is, who have mortified their bodies; "and to the hill of frankincense," to the crowds of pure virgins; "and I will say to my bride, thou art all fair, my love, and there is no spot in thee." Whence too the Apostle:²⁰⁷ "That he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing."²⁰⁸ "Come with me from Lebanon, my bride, with me from Lebanon. Thou shalt come²⁰⁹ and pass on from the beginning of faith, from the top of Sanir and Hermon, from the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards." Lebanon is, being interpreted, whiteness. Come then, fairest bride, concerning whom it is elsewhere said²¹⁰ "Who is she that cometh up, all in white?" and pass on by way of this world, from the beginning of faith, and from Sanir, which is by interpretation, God of light, as we read in the psalm:²¹¹ "Thy word is a lantern unto my feet, and light unto my path;" and "from Hermon," that is, consecration: and "flee from the lions' dens, and the mountains of the leopards who cannot change their spots." Flee, he says, from the lions' dens, flee from the pride of devils, that when thou hast been consecrated to me, I may be able to say unto thee:²¹² "Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my bride, thou hast ravished mine heart with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck." What he says is something like this-I do not reject marriage: you have a second eye, the left, which I have given to you on account of the weakness of those who cannot see the right. But I am pleased with the right eye of virginity, and if it be blinded the whole body is in darkness. And that we might not think he had in view carnal love and bodily marriage, he at once excludes this meaning by saying²¹³ "Thou hast ravished my heart, my bride, my sister." The name sister excludes all suspicion of unhallowed love. "How fair are thy breasts with wine," those breasts concerning which he had said above, My beloved is mine, and I am his: "betwixt my breasts shall he lie," that is in the princely portion of the heart where the Word of God has its lodging. What wine is that which gives beauty to the breasts of the bride, and fills them with the milk of chastity? That, forsooth, of which the bridegroom goes on to speak:²¹⁴ "I have drunk my wine with my milk. Eat, O friends: yea, drink and be drunken, my brethren." Hence the Apostles also were said to be filled with new wine; with new, he says, not with old wine; because²¹⁵ new wine is put into fresh wine-skins, and they²¹⁶ did not walk in oldness of the letter, but in newness of the Spirit. This is wine wherewith when youths and maidens are intoxicated, they at once thirst for virginity; they are filled with the spirit of chastity, and the prophecy of Zechariah comes to pass, at least if we follow the Hebrew literally, for he prophesied concerning virgins:²¹⁷ "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof. For what is his goodness, and what is his beauty, but the corn of the elect, and wine that giveth birth to virgins?" They are virgins of whom it is written in the forty-fifth psalm:²¹⁸ "The virgins her companions that follow her shall be brought unto thee. With gladness and rejoicing shall they be led: they shall enter into the King's palace." 31. Then follows:²¹⁹ "A garden shut up is my sister, my bride: a garden shut up, a fountain sealed." That which is shut up and sealed reminds us of the mother of our Lord who was a mother and a Virgin. Hence it was that no one before or after our Saviour was laid in his new tomb, hewn in the solid rock. And yet she that was ever a Virgin is the mother of many virgins. For next we read: "Thy shoots are an orchard of pomegranates with precious fruits." By pomegranates and fruits is signified the blending of all virtues in virginity.²²⁰ "My beloved is white and ruddy"; white in virginity, ruddy in martyrdom. And because He is white and ruddy, therefore it is immediately added²²¹ "His mouth is most sweet, yea, he is altogether lovely." The virgin bridegroom having been praised by the virgin bride, in turn praises the virgin bride, and says to her:²²² "How beautiful are thy feet in sandals,²²³ O daughter of Aminadab," which is, being interpreted, a people that offereth itself willingly. For virginity is voluntary, and therefore the steps of the Church in the beauty of chastity are praised. This is not the time for me like a commentator to explain all the mysteries of virginity from the Song of Songs I have no doubt that the fastidious reader will turn up his nose at what has already been said.

32. Isaiah tells of the mystery of our faith and hope:²²⁴ "Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Emmanuel." I know that the Jews are accustomed to meet us with the objection that in Hebrew the word Almah does not mean a virgin, but a young woman. And, to speak truth, a virgin is properly called Bethulah, but a young woman, or a girl, is not Almah, but Naarah!²²⁵ What then is the meaning of Almah? A hidden virgin, that is, not merely virgin, but a virgin and something more, because not every virgin is hidden, shut off from the occasional sight of men. Then again, Rebecca, on account of her extreme purity, and because she was a type of the Church which she represented in her own virginity, is described in Genesis as Almah, not Bethulah, as may clearly be proved from the words of Abraham's servant, spoken by him in Mesopotamia:²²⁶ "And he said, O Lord, the God of my master Abraham, if now thou do prosper my way which I go: behold I stand by the fountain of water; and let it come to pass, that the maiden which cometh forth to draw, to whom I shall say, Give me, I pray thee, a little water of this pitcher to drink; and she shall say to me, Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels: let the same be the woman whom the Lord hath appointed for my master's son." Where he speaks of the maiden coming forth to draw water, the Hebrew word is Almah, that is, a virgin secluded, and guarded by her parents with extreme care. Or, if it be not so, let them at least show me where the word is applied to married women as well, and I will confess my ignorance. "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son." If virginity be not preferred to marriage, why did not the Holy Spirit choose a married woman, or a widow? For at that time Anna the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser, was alive, distinguished for purity, and always free to devote herself to prayers and fasting in the temple of God. If the life, and good works, and fasting without virginity can merit the advent of the Holy Spirit, she might well have been the mother of our Lord. Let us hasten to the rest:²²⁷ "The virgin daughter of Zion hath despised thee and laughed thee to scorn." To her whom he called daughter the prophet also gave the title virgin, for fear that if he spoke only of a daughter, it might be supposed that she was married. This is the virgin daughter whom elsewhere he thus addresses:²²⁸ "Sing, O barren, thou that dost not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate, than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord." This is she of whom God by the mouth of Jeremiah speaks, saying:²²⁹ "Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire." Concerning her we read of a great miracle in the same prophecy²³⁰ -that a woman should compass a man, and that the Father of all things should be contained in a virgin's womb.

33. "Granted," says Jovinianus, "that there is a difference between marriage and virginity, what have you to say to this,-Suppose a virgin and a widow were baptized, and continued as they were, what difference will there be between them?" What we have already said concerning Peter and John, Anna and Mary, may be of service here. For if there is no difference between a virgin and a widow, both being baptized, because baptism makes a new man, upon the same principle harlots and prostitutes, if they are baptized, will be equal to virgins. If previous marriage is no prejudice to a baptized widow, and past pleasures and the exposure of their bodies to public lust are no detriment in the case of harlots, once they have approached the laver they will gain the rewards of virginity. It is one thing to unite with God a mind pure and free from any stain of memory, another to remember the foul and forced embraces of a man, and in recollection to act a part which you do not in person. Jeremiah, who was²³¹ sanctified in the womb, and was known in his mother's belly, enjoyed the high privilege Because he was predestined to the blessing of virginity. And when all were captured, and even the vessels of the temple were plundered by the King of Babylon, he alone was²³² liberated by the enemy, knew not the insults of captivity, and was supported by the conquerors; and Nebuchadnezzar, though he gave Nebuzaradan no charge concerning the Holy of Holies, did give him charge concerning Jeremiah. For that is the true temple of God, and that is the Holy of Holies, which is consecrated to the Lord by pure virginity. On the other hand, Ezekiel, who was kept captive in Babylon, who saw the²³³ storm approaching from the north, and the whirlwind sweeping all before it, says,²³⁴ "My wife died in the evening and I did in the morning as I was commanded." For the Lord had previously told him that in that day he should open his mouth, and speak, and no longer keep silence. Mark well, that while his wife was living he was not at liberty to admonish the people. His wife died, the bond of wedlock was broken, and without the least hesitation he constantly devoted himself to the prophetic office. For he who was called being free, is truly the Lord's bondservant. I do not deny the blessedness of widows who remain such after their baptism; nor do I disparage those wives who maintain their chastity in wedlock; but as they attain a greater reward with God than married women who pay the marriage due, let widows themselves be content to give the preference to virginity. For if a chastity which comes too late, when the glow of bodily pleasure is no longer felt, makes them feel superior to married women, why should they not acknowledge themselves inferior to perpetual virginity.

34. All that goes for nothing, says Jovinianus, because even bishops, priests, and deacons, husbands of one wife, and having children, were appointed by the Apostle. Just as the Apostle²³⁵ says he has no commandment respecting virgins, and yet gives his advice, as one who had obtained mercy from the Lord, and is anxious throughout the whole discussion to give virginity the preference over marriage, and advises what he does not venture to command, lest he seem to lay a snare, and to put a heavier burden upon man's nature than it can bear; so also in establishing the constitution of the Church, inasmuch as the elements of the early Church were drawn from the Gentiles, he made the rules for fresh believers somewhat lighter that they might not in alarm shrink from keeping them. Then, again, the Apostles and elders wrote²³⁶ letters from Jerusalem that no heavier burden should be laid on Gentile believers than that they should keep themselves from idolatry, and from fornication, and from things strangled. As though they were providing for infant children, they gave them milk to drink, not solid food. Nor did they lay down rules for continence, nor hint at virginity, nor urge to fasting, nor repeat the directions²³⁷ given in the Gospel to the Apostles, not to have two tunics, nor scrip, nor money in their girdles, nor staff in their hand, nor shoes on their feet. And they certainly did not bid them,²³⁸ if they wished to be perfect, go and sell all that they had and give to the poor, and "come follow me." For if the young man who boasted of having done all that the law enjoins, when he heard this went away sorrowful, because he had great possessions, and the Pharisees derided an utterance such as this from our Lord's lips: how much more would the vast multitude of Gentiles, whose highest virtue consisted in not plundering another's goods, have repudiated the obligation of perpetual chastity and continence, when they were told in the letter to keep themselves from idols, and from fornication, seeing that fornication was heard of among them, and such fornication as was not "even among the Gentiles." But the very choice of a bishop makes for me. For he does not say: Let a bishop be chosen who marries one wife and begets children; but who marries one wife, and²³⁹ has his children in subjection and well disciplined. You surely admit that he is no bishop who during his episcopate begets children. The reverse is the case-if he be discovered, he will not be bound by the ordinary obligations of a husband, but will be condemned as an adulterer. Either permit²⁴⁰ priests to perform the work of marriage with the result that virginity and marriage are on a par: or if it is unlawful for priests to touch their wives, they are so far holy in that they imitate virgin chastity. But something more follows. A layman, or any believer, cannot pray unless he abstain from sexual intercourse. Now a priest must always offer sacrifices for the people: he must therefore always pray. And if he must always pray, he must always be released from the duties of marriage. For even under the old law they who used to offer sacrifices for the people not only remained in their houses, but purified themselves for the occasion by separating from their wives, nor would they drink wine or strong drink which are wont to stimulate lust. That married men are elected to the priesthood, I do not deny: the number of virgins is not so great as that of the priests required. Does it follow that because all the strongest men are chosen for the army, weaker men should not be taken as well? All cannot be strong. If an army were constituted of strength only, and numbers went for nothing, the feeble men might be rejected. As it is, men of second or third-rate strength are chosen, that the army may have its full numerical complement. How is it, then, you will say, that frequently at the ordination of priests a virgin is passed over, and a married man taken? Perhaps because he lacks other qualifications in keeping with virginity, or it may be that he is thought a virgin, and is not: or there may be a stigma on his virginity, or at all events virginity itself makes him proud, and while he plumes himself on mere bodily chastity, he neglects other virtues; he does not cherish the poor: he is too fond of money. It sometimes happens that a man has a gloomy visage, a frowning brow, a walk as though he were in a solemn procession, and so offends the people, who, because they have no fault to find with his life, hate his mere dress and gait. Many are chosen not out of affection for themselves, but out of hatred for another. In most cases the election is won by mere simplicity, while the shrewdness and discretion of another candidate elicit opposition as though they were evils. Sometimes the judgement of the commoner people is at fault, and in testing the qualities of the priesthood, the individual inclines to his own character, with the result that he looks not so much for a good candidate as for one like himself. Not unfrequently it happens that married men, who form the larger portion of the people, in approving married candidates seem to approve themselves, and it does not occur to them that the mere fact that they prefer a married person to a virgin is evidence of their inferiority to virgins. What I am going to say will perhaps offend many. Yet I will say it, and good men will not be angry with me, because they will not feel the sting of conscience. Sometimes it is the fault of the bishops, who choose into the ranks of the clergy not the best, but the cleverest, men, and think the more simple as well as innocent ones incapable; or, as though they were distributing the offices of an earthly service, they give posts to their kindred and relations; or they listen to the dictates of wealth. And, worse than all, they give promotion to the clergy who besmear them with flattery. To take the other view, if the Apostle's meaning be that marriage is necessary in a bishop, the Apostle himself ought not to have been a bishop, for he said,²⁴¹ "Yet I would that all men were even as I myself." And John will be thought unworthy of this rank, and all the virgins, and the continent, the fairest gems that give grace and ornament to the Church. Bishop, priest, and deacon, are not honourable distinctions, but names of offices. And we do not read:²⁴² "If a man seeketh the office of a bishop, he desireth a good degree," but, "he desireth a good work," because by being placed in the higher order an opportunity is afforded him, if he choose to avail himself of it, for the practice of virtue.

35. "The bishop, then, must be without reproach, so that he is the slave of no vice: "the husband of one wife," that is, in the past, not in the present; "sober," or²⁴³ better, as it is in the Greek, "vigilant," that is nhfaleon; "chaste," for that is the²⁴⁴ meaning of sw/fona;²⁴⁵ "distinguished," both by chastity and conduct: "hospitable," so that he imitates Abraham, and with strangers, nay rather in strangers, entertains Christ; "apt to teach," for it profits nothing to enjoy the consciousness of virtue, unless a man be able to instruct the people intrusted to him, so that he can exhort in doctrine, and refute the gainsayers;²⁴⁶ "not a drunkard," for he who is constantly in the Holy of Holies and offers sacrifices, will not drink wine and strong drink, since wine is a luxury. If a bishop drink at all, let it be in such a way that no one will know whether he has drunk or not. "No striker," that is,²⁴⁷ a striker of men's consciences, for the Apostle is not pointing out what a boxer, but a pontiff ought not to do. He directly teaches what he ought to do: "but gentle, not contentious, no lover of money, one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all chastity." See what chastity is required in a bishop! If his child be unchaste, he himself cannot be a bishop, and he offends God in the same way as did²⁴⁸ Eli the priest, who had indeed rebuked his sons, but because he had not put away the offenders, fell backwards and died before the lamp of God went out.²⁴⁹ "Women in like manner must be chaste," and so on. In every grade, and in both sexes, chastity has the chief place. You see then that the blessedness of a bishop, priest, or deacon, does not lie in the fact that they are bishops, priests, or deacons, but in their having the virtues which their names and offices imply. Otherwise, if a deacon be holier than his bishop, his lower grade will not give him a worse standing with Christ. If it were so, Stephen the deacon, the first to wear the martyr's crown, would be less in the kingdom of heaven than many bishops, and than Timothy and Titus, whom I venture to make neither inferior nor yet superior to him. Just as in the legions of the army there are generals, tribunes, centurions, javelin-men, and light-armed troops, common soldiers, and companies, but once the battle begins, all distinctions of rank are dropped, and the one thing looked for is valour: so too in this camp and in this battle, in which we contend against devils, not names but deeds are needed: and under the true commander, Christ, not the man who has the highest title has the greatest fame, but he who is the bravest warrior.

36. But you will say: "If everybody were a virgin, what would become of the human race"? Like shall here beget like. If everyone were a widow, or continent in marriage, how will mortal men be propagated? Upon this principle there will be nothing at all for fear that something else may cease to exist. To put a case: if all men were philosophers, there would be no husbandmen. Why speak of husbandmen? there would be no orators, no lawyers, no teachers of the other professions. If all men were leaders, what would become of the soldiers? If all were the head, whose head would they be called, when there were no other members? You are afraid that if the desire for virginity were general there would be no prostitutes, no adulteresses, no wailing infants in town or country. Every day the blood of adulterers²⁵⁰ is shed, adulterers are condemned, and lust is raging and rampant in the very presence of the laws and the symbols of authority and the courts of justice. Be not afraid that all will become virgins: virginity is a hard matter, and therefore rare, because it is hard: "Many are called, few chosen." Many begin, few persevere. And so the reward is great for those who have persevered. If all were able to be virgins, our Lord would never have said:²⁵¹ "He that is able to receive it, let him receive it:" and the Apostle would not have hesitated to give his advice,²⁵² "Now concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord." Why then, you will say, were the organs of generation created, and why were we so fashioned by the all-wise creator, that we burn for one another, and long for natural intercourse? To reply is to endanger our modesty: we are, as it were, between two rocks, the²⁵³ Symplegades of necessity and virtue, on either side; and must make shipwreck of either our sense of shame, or of the cause we defend: If we reply to your suggestions, shame covers our face. If shame secures silence, in a manner we seem to desert our post, and to leave the ground clear to the raging foe. Yet it is better, as the story goes, to shut our eyes and fight like the²⁵⁴ blindfold gladiators, than not to repel with the shield of truth the darts aimed at us. I can indeed say: "Our hinder parts which are banished from sight, and the lower portions of the abdomen, which perform the functions of nature, are the Creator's work." But inasmuch as the physical conformation of the organs of generation testifies to difference of sex, I shall briefly reply: Are we never then to forego lust, for fear that we may have members of this kind for nothing? Why then should a husband keep himself from his wife? Why should a widow persevere in chastity, if we were only born to live like beasts? Or what harm does it do me if another man lies with my wife? For as the teeth were made for chewing, and the food masticated passes into the stomach, and a man is not blamed for giving my wife bread: similarly if it was intended that the organs of generation should always be performing their office, when my vigour is spent let another take my place, and, if I may so speak, let my wife quench her burning lust where she can. But what does the Apostle mean by exhorting to continence, if continence be contrary to nature? What does our Lord mean when He instructs us in the various kinds of eunuchs.²⁵⁵ Surely²⁵⁶ the Apostle who bids us emulate his own chastity, must be asked, if we are to be consistent, Why are you like other men, Paul? Why are you distinguished from the female sex by a beard, hair, and other peculiarities of person? How is it that you have not swelling bosoms, and are not broad at the hips, narrow at the chest? Your voice is rugged, your speech rough, your eyebrows more shaggy. To no purpose you have all these manly qualities, if you forego the embraces of women. I am compelled to say something and become a fool: but you have forced me to dare to speak. Our Lord and Saviour,²⁵⁷ Who though He was in the form of God, condescended to take the form of a servant, and became obedient to the Father even unto death, yea the death of the cross-what necessity was there for Him to be born with members which He was not going to use? He certainly was circumcised to manifest His sex. Why did he cause John the Apostle and John the Baptist to make themselves eunuchs through love of Him, after causing them to be born men? Let us then who believe in Christ follow His example. And if we knew Him after the flesh, let us no longer know Him according to the flesh. The substance of our resurrection bodies will certainly be the same as now, though of higher glory. For the Saviour after His descent into hell had so far the selfsame body in which He was crucified, that²⁵⁸ He showed the disciples the marks of the nails in His hands and the wound in His side. Moreover, if we deny the identity of His body because²⁵⁹ He entered though the doors were shut, and this is not a property of human bodies, we must deny also that Peter and the Lord had real bodies because they²⁶⁰ walked upon the water, which is contrary to nature.²⁶¹ "In the resurrection of the dead they will neither marry nor be given in marriage, but will be like the angels." What others will hereafter be in heaven, that virgins begin to be on earth. If likeness to the angels is promised us (and there is no difference of sex among the angels), we shall either be of no sex as are the angels, or at all events which is clearly proved, though we rise from the dead in our own sex, we shall not perform the functions of sex.

37. But why do we argue, and why are we eager to frame a clever and victorious reply to our opponent?²⁶² "Old things have passed away, behold all things have become new." I will run through the utterances of the Apostles, and as to the instances afforded by Solomon I added short expositions to facilitate their being understood, so now I will go over the passages bearing on Christian purity and continence, and will make of many proofs a connected series. By this method I shall succeed in omitting nothing relating to chastity, and shall avoid being tediously long. Amongst other passages, Paul the Apostle writes to the Romans:²⁶³ "What fruit then had ye at that time in the things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto sanctification, and the end eternal life." I suppose too that the end of marriage is death. But the compensating fruit of sanctification, fruit belonging either to virginity or to continence, is eternal life. And afterwards:²⁶⁴ "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also were made dead to the law through the body of Christ; that ye should be joined to another, even to him who was raised from the dead, that we might bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the flesh, the sinful passions, which were through the law, wrought in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we have been discharged from the law, having died to that wherein we were holden; so that we serve in newness of the Spirit, and not in oldness of the letter." "When," he says, "we were in the flesh, and not in the newness of the Spirit but in the oldness of the letter," we did those things which pertained to the flesh, and bore fruit unto death. But now because we are dead to the law, through the body of Christ, let us bear fruit to God, that we may belong to Him who rose from the dead. And elsewhere, having previously said,²⁶⁵ "I know that the law is spiritual," and having discussed at some length the violence of the flesh which frequently drives us to do what we would not, he at last continues: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me out of the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." And again, "So then I myself with the mind serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin." And,²⁶⁶ "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus made me free from the law of sin and death." And more clearly in what follows he teaches that Christians do not walk according to the flesh but according to the Spirit:²⁶⁷ "For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit the things of the spirit. For the mind of the flesh is death; but the mind of the spirit is life and peace: because the mind of the flesh is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be: and they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you," and so on to where he says,²⁶⁸ "So then, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh: for if ye live after the flesh, ye must die; but if by the spirit ye mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God." If the²⁶⁹ wisdom of the flesh is enmity against God, and they who are in the flesh cannot please God, I think that they who perform the functions of marriage love the wisdom of the flesh, and therefore are in the flesh. The Apostle being desirous to withdraw us from the flesh and to join us to the Spirit, says afterwards:²⁷⁰ "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service. And be not fashioned according to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. For I say, through the grace that was given me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think according to chastity"²⁷¹ (not soberly as the Latin versions badly render), but "think," he says, "according to chastity," for the Greek words are eōi to swfronein. Let us consider what the Apostle says: "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." What he says is something like this-God indeed permits marriage, He permits second marriages, and if necessary, prefers even third marriages to fornication and adultery. But we who ought to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service, should consider, not what God permits, but what He wishes: that we may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. It follows that what He merely permits is neither good, nor acceptable, nor perfect. And he gives his reasons for this advice:²⁷² "Knowing the season, that now it is high time for you to awake out of sleep: for now is salvation nearer to us than when we first believed. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand." And lastly: "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." God's will is one thing, His indulgence another. Whence, writing to the Corinthians, he says,²⁷³ "I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal." He who²⁷⁴ is in the merely animal state, and does not receive the things pertaining to the Spirit of God (for he is foolish, and cannot understand them, because they are spiritually discerned), he is not fed with the food of perfect chastity, but with the coarse milk of marriage. As through man came death, so also through man came the resurrection of the dead. As in Adam we all die, so in Christ we shall all be made alive. Under the law we served the old Adam, under the Gospel let us serve the new Adam. For the first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.²⁷⁵ "The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is of heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." This is so clear that no explanation can make it clearer: "Flesh and blood," he says, "cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." If corruption attaches to all intercourse, and incorruption is characteristic of chastity, the rewards of chastity cannot belong to marriage.²⁷⁶ "For we know that if the earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For verily in this we groan, longing to be clothed upon with our habitation which is from heaven. We are willing to be absent from the body, and to be at home with the Lord. Wherefore also we make it our aim, whether in the body, or out of the body, to be well-pleasing unto God." And by way of more fully explaining what he did not wish them to be he says elsewhere:²⁷⁷ "I espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a pure virgin to Christ." But if you choose to apply the words to the whole Assembly of believers, and in this betrothal to Christ include both married women, and the twice-married, and widows, and virgins, that also makes for us. For whilst he invites all to chastity and to the reward of virginity, he shows that virginity is more excellent than all these conditions. And again writing to the Galatians he says:²⁷⁸ "Because by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Among the works of the law is marriage, and accordingly under it they are cursed who have no children. And if under the Gospel it is permitted to have children, it is one thing to make a concession to weakness another to hold out rewards to virtue.

38. Something else I will say to my friends who marry and after long chastity and continence begin to burn and are as wanton as the brutes:²⁷⁹ "Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now perfected in the flesh? Did ye suffer so many things in vain?" If the Apostle in the case of some persons loosens the cords of continence, and lets them have a slack rein, he does so on account of the infirmity of the flesh. This is the enemy he has in view when he once more says:²⁸⁰ "Walk by the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh." It is unnecessary now to speak of the works of the flesh: it would be tedious, and he who chooses can easily gather them from the letter of the Apostle. I will only speak of the Spirit and its fruits, love, joy, peace, long suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness,²⁸¹ continence. All the virtues of the Spirit are supported and protected by continence, which is as it were their solid foundation and crowning point. Against such there is no law.²⁸² "And they that are of Christ have crucified their flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof. If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk." Why do we who with Christ have crucified our flesh and its passions and desires again desire to do the things of the flesh?²⁸³ "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth unto his own flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life." I think that he who has a wife, so long as he reverts to the practice in question, that Satan may not tempt him, is sowing to the flesh and not to the Spirit. And he who sows to the flesh (the words are not mine, but the Apostle's) reaps corruption. God the Father chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we might be holy and without spot before Him.²⁸⁴ We walked in the lusts of the flesh, doing the desires of the flesh and of the thoughts, and were children of wrath, even as the rest. But now He has raised us up with Him, and made us to sit with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus,²⁸⁵ that we may put away according to our former manner of life the old man, which is corrupt according to the lusts of deceit, and that blessing may be applied to us which so finely concludes the mystical Epistle to the Ephesians:²⁸⁶ "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in uncorruptness."²⁸⁷ "For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory."²⁸⁸ Whatsoever things then are true, whatsoever are chaste, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things pertain to purity, let us join ourselves to these, let us follow these.²⁸⁹ Christ hath reconciled us in his body to God the Father through his death, and has presented us holy and without spot, and without blame before himself: in whom we have been also circumcised, not with the circumcision made with hands, to the spoiling of the body of the flesh, but with the circumcision of Christ, having been buried with him in baptism, wherein also we rose with him. If then we have risen with Christ, let us seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God; let us set our affections on things above, not upon the things that are upon the earth. For we are dead, and our life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ our life shall appear, then we also shall appear with him in glory.²⁹⁰ No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier.²⁹¹ For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us, to the intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live purely and righteously and godly in this present world."

39. The day would not be long enough were I to attempt to relate all that the Apostle enjoins concerning purity. These things are those concerning which our Lord said to the Apostles:²⁹² "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all the truth." After the crucifixion of Christ, we find in the²⁹³ Acts of the Apostles that one house, that of Philip the Evangelist, produced four virgin daughters, to the end that Caesarea, where the Gentile Church had been consecrated in the person of Cornelius the centurion, might afford an illustration of virginity. And whereas our Lord said in the Gospel:²⁹⁴ "The law and the prophets were until John," they because they were virgins are related to have prophesied even after John. For they could not be bound by the law of the Old Testament, who had shone with the brightness of virginity. Let us pass on to James, who was called the brother of the Lord, a man of such sanctity and righteousness, and distinguished by so rigid and perpetual a virginity, that even²⁹⁵ Josephus, the Jewish historian, relates that the overthrow of Jerusalem was due to his death. He, the first bishop of the Church at Jerusalem, which was composed of Jewish believers, to whom Paul went, accompanied by Titus and Barnabas, says in his Epistle:²⁹⁶ "Be not deceived, my beloved brethren. Every good gift and every perfect boon is from above, coming down from the Father of lights,²⁹⁷ with whom there is no difference, neither shadow that is cast by turning. Of his own will he brought us forth by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." Himself a virgin, he teaches virginity in a mystery. Every perfect gift cometh down from above, where marriage is unknown; and it cometh down, not from any one you please, but from the Father of lights, Who says to the apostles, "Ye are the light of the world;" with Whom there is no difference of Jew, or Gentile, nor does that shadow which was the companion of the law, trouble those who have believed from among the nations; but with His word He begat us, and with the word of truth, because some shadow, image, and likeness of truth went before in the law, that we might be the first-fruits of His creatures. And as He who was Himself the²⁹⁸ first begotten from the dead has raised all that have died in Him: so He who was a virgin, consecrated the first-fruits of His virgins in His own virgin self.

Let us also consider what Peter thinks of the calling of the Gentiles:²⁹⁹ "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his great mercy begat us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, unto an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who by the power of God are guarded through faith unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." Where we read of an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, prepared in heaven and reserved for the last time, and of the hope of eternal life when they will neither marry, nor be given in marriage, there, in other words, the privileges of virginity are described. For he shows as much in what follows:³⁰⁰ "Wherefore girding up the loins of your mind, be sober and set your hope perfectly on the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ; as children of obedience, not fashioning yourselves according to your former lusts in the time of your ignorance; but like as he which called you is holy, be ye yourselves also holy in all manner of living; because it is written, ye shall be holy; for I am holy.³⁰¹ For we were not redeemed with contemptible things, with silver or gold; but with the precious blood of a lamb without spot, Jesus Christ,³⁰² that we might purify our souls in obedience to the truth, having been begotten again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, through the word of God,³⁰³ who liveth and abideth. And as living stones let us be built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood offering up spiritual sacrifices through Christ our Lord.³⁰⁴ For we are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession.³⁰⁵ Christ died for us in the flesh. Let us arm ourselves with the same conversation as did Christ; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that we should no longer live the rest of our time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. For the time past is sufficient for us when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, and other vices. Great and precious are the promises attaching to virginity which He has given us,³⁰⁶ that through it we may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped from the corruption that is in the world through lust.³⁰⁷ The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to keep the unrighteous under punishment unto the day of judgement, but chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of defilement, and despise dominion, daring, self-willed. For they, as beasts of burden, without reason, think only of their belly and their lusts, railers who shall in their corruption be destroyed, and shall receive the reward of iniquity: men that count unrighteousness delight, spots and blemishes, thinking of nothing but their pleasures; having eyes full of adultery and insatiable lust, deceiving souls not yet strengthened by the love of Christ. For they utter swelling words and easily snare the unlearned with the seduction of the flesh; promising them liberty while they themselves are the slaves of vice, luxury, and corruption. For of what a man is overcome, of the same is he also brought into bondage. But if, after they had escaped the defilements of the world through the knowledge of our Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again overcome by that which they before overcame, the last state is become worse with them than the first. And it were better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after knowing it, to turn back and forsake the holy commandment delivered unto them. And it has happened unto them according to the true proverb, the dog hath turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that had washed to wallowing in the mire." I have hesitated, for fear of being tedious, to quote the whole passage of the second Epistle of Peter, and have merely shown that the Holy Spirit in prophecy foretold the teachers of this time and their heresy. Lastly, he more clearly denotes them, saying,³⁰⁸ "In the last days seducing mockers shall come, walking after their own lusts."

40. The Apostle has described Jovinianus speaking with swelling cheeks and nicely balancing his inflated utterances, promising heavenly liberty, when he himself is the slave of vice and self-indulgence, a dog returning to his vomit. For although he boasts of being a monk, he has exchanged his dirty tunic, bare feet, common bread, and drink of water, for a snowy dress, sleek skin, honey-wine and dainty dishes, for the sauces of³⁰⁹ Apicius and³¹⁰ Paxamus, for baths and rubbings, and for the cook-shops. Is it not clear that he prefers his belly to Christ, and thinks his ruddy complexion worth the kingdom of heaven? And yet that handsome monk so fat and sleek, and of bright appearance, who always walks with the air of a bridegroom, must either marry a wife if he is to show that virginity and marriage are equal: or if he does not marry one, it is useless for him to bandy words with us when his acts are on our side. And John agrees with this almost to the letter:³¹¹ "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world is the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of this life, which is not of the Father, but is of the world." And, "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever. A new commandment have I written unto you, which thing is true both in Christ and in you; because the darkness is passing away, and the true light already shineth." And again,³¹² "Beloved, now are we the children of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. But we know that, if he shall be manifested, we shall be like him: for we shall see him even as he is. And every one that hath this hope purifieth himself, even as he is pure."³¹³ Herein is our love made perfect, if we have boldness in the day of judgement: that as he is, even so may we be in this world." The Epistle of Jude also expresses nearly the same:³¹⁴ "Hating even the garment spotted by the flesh." Let us read the Apocalypse of John, and we shall there find the Lamb upon Mount Sion,³¹⁵ and with Him "a hundred and forty-four thousand of them that were sealed, having His name and the name of His Father written in their foreheads, who sing a new song, and no one can sing that song save they who have been redeemed out of the earth. These are they who have not defiled themselves with women, for they continued virgins. These follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth: for they were redeemed from among men, first-fruits to God and to the Lamb, and in their mouth was found no guile, and they are without spot."³¹⁶ Out of each tribe, the tribe of Dan excepted, the place of which is taken by the tribe of Levi, twelve thousand virgins who have been sealed are spoken of as future believers, who have not defiled themselves with women. And that we may not suppose the reference to be to those who know not harlots, he immediately added: "For they continued virgins." Whereby he shows that all who have not preserved their virginity, in comparison of pure and angelic chastity and of our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, are defiled.³¹⁷ "These are they who sing a new song which no man can sing except him that is a virgin. These are first-fruits unto God and unto the Lamb, and are without blemish." If virgins are first-fruits, it follows that widows and the continent in marriage, come after the first-fruits, that is, are in the second and third rank: nor can a lost people be saved unless it offer such sacrifices of chastity to God, and with pure victims reconcile the spotless Lamb. It would be endless work to explain the Gospel mystery of the ten virgins, five of whom were wise and five foolish. All I say now is, that as mere virginity without other works does not save, so all works without virginity, purity, continence, chastity, are imperfect. And we shall not be hindered in the least from taking this view by the objection of our opponent that our Lord was at Cana of Galilee, and joined in the marriage festivities when He turned water into wine. I shall very briefly reply, that He Who was circumcised on the eighth day, and for Whom a pair of turtle-doves and two young pigeons were offered on the day of purification, like others before He suffered, shewed His approval of Jewish custom, that He might not seem to give His enemies just cause for putting Him to death on the pretext that He destroyed the law and condemned nature. And even this was done for our sakes. For by going once to a marriage, He taught that men should marry only once. Moreover, at that time it was possible to injure virginity if marriage were not placed next to it, and the purity of widowhood in the third rank. But now when heretics are condemning wedlock, and despise the ordinance of God, we gladly hear anything he³¹⁸ may say in praise of marriage. For the Church does not condemn marriage, but makes it subordinate; nor does she reject it, but regulates it; for she knows, as was said before, that³¹⁹ in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and silver, but also of wood and earthenware; and that some are to honour, some to dishonour; and that whoever cleanses himself will be a vessel of honour, necessary, prepared for every good work.

41. I have given enough and more than enough illustrations from the divine writings of Christian chastity and angelic virginity. But as I understand that our opponent in his commentaries summons us to the tribunal of worldly wisdom, and we are told that views of this kind are never accepted in the world, and that our religion has invented a dogma against nature, I will quickly run through Greek and Roman and Foreign History, and will show that virginity ever took the lead of chastity. Fable relates that Atalanta, the virgin of Calydonian fame, lived for the chase and dwelt always in the woods; in other words that she did not set her heart on marriage with its troubles of pregnancy and of sickness, but upon the nobler life of freedom and chastity.³²⁰ Harpalyce too, a Thracian virgin, is described by the famous poet; and so is³²¹ Camilia, queen of the Volsci, on whom, when she came to his assistance, Turnus had no higher praise which he could bestow than to call her a virgin. "O Virgin, Glory of Italy!" And that famous daughter of³²² Leos, the lady of the brazen house, ever a virgin, is related to have freed her country from pestilence by her voluntary death: and the blood of the virgin³²³ Iphigenia is said to have calmed the stormy winds. What need to tell of the Sibyls of Erythrae and Cumae, and the eight others? for Varro asserts there were ten whose ornament was virginity, and divination the reward of their virginity. But if in the Aeolian dialect "Sibyl" is represented by Qeobou/lh, we must understand that a knowledge of the Counsel of God is rightly attributed to virginity alone. We read, too, that Cassandra and Chryseis, prophetesses of Apollo and Juno, were virgins. And there were innumerable priestesses of the Taurian Diana, and of Vesta. One of these, Munitia, being suspected of unchastity was³²⁴ buried alive, which would be in my opinion an unjust punishment, unless the violation of virginity were considered a serious crime. At all events how highly the Romans always esteemed virgins is clear from the fact that consuls and generals even in their triumphal chariots and bringing home the spoils of conquered nations, were wont to make way for them to pass. And so did men of all ranks. When³²⁵ Claudia, a Vestal Virgin, was suspected of unchastity, and a vessel containing the image of Cybele was aground in the Tiber, it is related that she, to prove her chastity, with her girdle drew the ship which a thousand men could not move. Yet, as³²⁶ the uncle of Lucan the poet says, it would have been better if this circumstance had decorated a chastity tried and proved, and had not pleaded in defence of a chastity equivocal. No wonder that we read such things of human beings, when heathen error also invented the virgin goddesses Minerva and Diana, and placed the Virgin among the twelve signs of the Zodiac, by means of which, as they suppose, the world revolves. It is a proof of the little esteem in which they held marriage that they did not even among the scorpions, centaurs, crabs, fishes, and capricorn, thrust in a husband and wife. When the thirty tyrants of Athens had slain Phidon at the banquet, they commanded his virgin daughters to come to them, naked like harlots, and there upon the ground, red with their father's blood, to act the wanton. For a little while they hid their grief, and then when they saw the revellers were intoxicated, going out on the plea of easing nature, they embraced one another and threw themselves into a well, that by death they might save their virginity. The virgin daughter of Demotion, chief of the Areopagites, having heard of the death of her betrothed,³²⁷ Leosthenes, who had originated the Lamian war, slew herself, for she declared that although in body she was a virgin, yet if she were compelled to accept another, she should regard him as her second husband, when she had given her heart to Leosthenes. So close a friendship long existed between Sparta and Messene that for the furtherance of certain religious rites they even exchanged virgins. Well, on one occasion when the men of Messene attempted to outrage fifty Lacedaemonian virgins, out of so many not one consented, but they all most gladly died in defence of their chastity. Whence there arose a long and grievous war, and in the long run³²⁸ Mamertina was destroyed. Aristoclides, tyrant of Orchomenos, fell in love with a virgin of Stymphalus, and when after the death of her father she took refuge in the temple of Diana, and embraced the image of the goddess and could not be dragged thence by force, she was slain on the spot. Her death caused such intense grief throughout Arcadia that the people took up arms and avenged the virgin's death.³²⁹ Aristomenes of Messene, a just man, at a time when the Lacedaemonians, whom he had conquered, were celebrating by night the festival called the³³⁰ Hyacinthia, carried off from the sportive bands fifteen virgins, and fleeing all night at full speed got away from the Spartan territory. His companions wished to outrage them, but he admonished them to the best of his power not to do so, and when certain refused to obey, he slew them, and restrained the rest by fear. The maidens were afterwards ransomed by their kinsmen, and on seeing Aristomenes condemned for murder would not return to their country until clasping the knees of the judges they beheld the protector of their chastity acquitted. How shall we sufficiently praise the daughters of Scedasus at Leuctra in Boeotia? It is related that in the absence of their father they hospitably entertained two youths who were passing by, and who having drunk to excess violated the virgins in the course of the night. Being unwilling to survive the loss of their virginity, the maidens inflicted deadly wounds on one another. Nor would it be right to omit mention of the Locrian virgins. They were sent to Ilium according to custom which had lasted for nearly a thousand years, and yet not one gave occasion to any idle tale or filthy rumour of virginity defiled. Could any one pass over in silence the seven virgins of Miletus who, when the Gauls spread desolation far and wide, that they might suffer no indignity at the hands of the enemy, escaped disgrace by death, and left to all virgins the lesson of their example—that noble minds care more for chastity than life? Nicanor having conquered and overthrown Thebes was himself overcome by a passion for one captive virgin, whose voluntary self-surrender he longed for. A captive maid, he thought, must be only too glad. But he found that virginity is dearer to the pure in heart than a kingdom, when with tears and grief he held her in his arms slain by her own hand. Greek writers tell also of another Theban virgin who had been deflowered by a Macedonian foe, and who, hiding her grief for a while, slew the violator of her virginity as he slept, and then killed herself with the sword, so that she would neither live when her chastity was lost, nor die before she had avenged herself.

42. To come to the Gymnosophists of India, the opinion is authoritatively handed down that Buddha, the founder of their religion, had his birth through the side of a virgin. And we need not wonder at this in the case of Barbarians when cultured Greece supposed that Minerva at her birth sprang from the head of Jove, and Father Bacchus from his thigh.³³¹ Speusippus also, Plato's nephew, and³³² Clearchus in his eulogy of Plato, and³³³ Anaxelides in the second book of his philosophy, relates that Perictione, the mother of Plato, was violated by an apparition of Apollo, and they agree in thinking that the prince of wisdom was born of a virgin.³³⁴ Timus writes that the³³⁵ virgin daughter of³³⁶ Pythagoras was at the head of a band of virgins, and instructed them in chastity.³³⁷ Diodorus, the disciple of Socrates, is said to have had five daughters skilled in dialectics and distinguished for chastity, of whom a full account is given by Philo the master of³³⁸ Carneades. And mighty Rome cannot taunt us as though we had invented the story of the birth of our Lord and Saviour from a virgin; for the Romans believe that the founders of their city and race were the offspring of the virgin³³⁹ Ilia and of Mars.

43. Let these allusions to the virgins of the world, brief and hastily gathered from many histories, now suffice. I will proceed to married women who were reluctant to survive the decease or violent death of their husbands for fear they might be forced into a second marriage, and who entertained a marvellous affection for the only husbands they had. This may teach us that second marriage was repudiated among the heathen. Dido, the sister of Pygmalion, having collected a vast amount of gold and silver, sailed to Africa, and there built Carthage. And when her hand was sought in marriage by Iarbas, king of Libya, she deferred the marriage for a while until her country was settled. Not long after, having raised a³⁴⁰ funeral pyre to the memory of her former husband Sichus, she preferred to "burn rather than to marry." Carthage was built by a woman of chastity, and its end was a tribute to the excellence of the virtue. For the³⁴¹ wife of Hasdrubal, when the city was captured and set on fire, and she saw that she could not herself escape capture by the Romans, took her little children in either hand and leaped into the burning ruins of her house.

44. What need to tell of the wife of³⁴² Niceratus, who, not enduring to wrong her husband, inflicted death upon herself rather than subject herself to the lust of the thirty tyrants whom Lysander had set over conquered Athens?³⁴³ Artemisia, also, wife of Mausolus, is related to have been distinguished for chastity. Though she was queen of Caria, and is extolled by great poets and historians, no higher praise is bestowed upon her than that when her husband was dead she loved him as much as when he was alive, and built a tomb so great that even to the present day all costly sepulchres are called after his name, mausoleums.³⁴⁴ Teuta, queen of the Illyrians, owed her long sway over brave warriors, and her frequent victories over Rome, to her marvellous chastity. The Indians and almost all the Barbarians have a plurality of wives. It is a law with them that the favourite wife must be burned with her dead husband. The wives therefore vie with one another for the husband's love, and the highest ambition of the rivals, and the proof of chastity, is to be considered worthy of death. So then she that is victorious, having put on her former dress and ornaments, lies down beside the corpse, embracing and kissing it, and to the glory of chastity despises the flames which are burning beneath her. I suppose that she who dies thus, wants no second marriage. The famous Alcibiades, the friend of Socrates, when Athens was conquered, fled to Pharnabazus, who took a bribe from Lysander the Lacedaemonian leader and ordered him to be slain. He was strangled, and when his head had been cut off it was sent to Lysander as proof of the murder, but the rest of his body lay unburied. His concubine, therefore, all alone, in defiance of the command of the cruel enemy, in the midst of strangers, and in the face of peril, gave him due burial, for she was ready to die for the dead man whom she had loved when living. Let matrons, Christian matrons at all events, imitate the fidelity of concubines, and exhibit in their freedom what she in her captivity preserved.

45. Strato, ruler of Sidon, thought of dying by his own hand, that he might not be the sport of the Persians, who were close by and whose alliance he had discarded for the friendship of the king of Egypt. But he drew back in terror, and eyeing the sword which he had seized, awaited in alarm the approach of the enemy. His wife, knowing that he must be immediately taken, wrested the weapon from his hand, and pierced his side. When the body was properly laid out she lay down upon it in the agony of death, that she might not violate her virgin troth in the embraces of another.³⁴⁵ Xenophon, in describing the early years of the eider Cyrus, relates that when her husband Abradatas was slain, Panthea who had loved him intensely, placed herself beside the mangled body, then stabbed herself, and let her blood run into her husband's wounds. The³⁴⁶ queen whom the king her husband had shewn naked and without her knowledge to his friend, thought she had good cause for slaying the king. She judged that she was not beloved if it was possible for her to be exhibited to another. Rhodogune, daughter of Darius, after the death of her husband, put to death the nurse who was trying to persuade her to marry again.³⁴⁷ Alcestis is related in story to have voluntarily died for Admetus, and Penelope's chastity is the theme of Homer's song. Laodamia's praises are also sung by the poets, because, when³⁴⁸ Protesilaus was slain at Troy, she refused to survive him.

46. I may pass on to Roman women; and the first that I shall mention is³⁴⁹ Lucretia, who would not survive her violated chastity, but blotted out the stain upon her person with her own blood. Duilius, the first Roman who won a³⁵⁰ naval triumph, took to wife a virgin, Bilia, of such extraordinary chastity that she was an example even to an age which held unchastity to be not merely vicious but monstrous. When he was grown old and feeble he was once in the course of a quarrel taunted with having bad breath. In dudgeon he betook himself home, and on complaining to his wife that she had never told him of it so that he might remedy the fault, he received the reply that she would have done so, but she thought that all men had foul breath as he had. In either case this chaste and noble woman deserves praise, whether she was not aware there was anything wrong with her husband, or if she patiently endured, and her husband discovered his unfortunate condition not by the disgust of a wife, but by the abuse of an enemy. At all events the woman who marries a second time cannot say this. Marcia, Cato's younger daughter, on being asked after the loss of her husband why she did not marry again, replied that she could not find a man who wanted her more than her money. Her words teach us that men in choosing their wives look for riches rather than for chastity, and that many in marrying use not their eyes but their fingers. That must be an excellent thing which is won by avarice! When the same lady was mourning the loss of her husband, and the matrons asked what day would terminate her grief, she replied, "The same that terminates my life." I imagine that a woman who thus followed her husband in heart and mind had no thought of marrying again. Porcia, whom³⁵¹ Brutus took to wife, was a virgin; Cato's wife,³⁵² Marcia, was not a virgin; but Marcia went to and fro between Hortensius and Cato, and was quite content to live without Cato; while³⁵³ Porcia could not live without Brutus; for women attach themselves closely to particular men, and to keep to one is a strong link in the chain of affection. When a relative urged Annia to marry again (she was of full age and a goodly person), she answered, "I shall certainly not do so. For, if I find a good man, I have no wish to be in fear of losing him: if a bad one, why must I put up with a bad husband after having had a good one?"³⁵⁴ Porcia the younger, on hearing a certain lady of good character, who had a second husband, praised in her house, replied, "A chaste and happy matron never marries more than once." Marcella the elder, on being asked by her mother if she was glad she was married, answered, "So much so that I want nothing more." 355 Valeria, sister of the Messalas, when she lost her husband Servius, would marry no one else. On being asked why not, she said that to her, her husband Servius was ever alive.

47. I feel that in giving this list of women I have said far more than is customary in illustrating a point, and that I might be justly censured by my learned reader. But what am I to do when the women of our time press me with apostolic authority, and before the first husband is buried, repeat from morning to night the precepts which allow a second marriage? Seeing they despise the fidelity which Christian purity dictates, let them at least learn chastity from the heathen. A book On Marriage, worth its weight in gold, passes under the name of 356 Theophrastus. In it the author asks whether a wise man marries. And after laying down the conditions—that the wife must be fair, of good character, and honest parentage, the husband in good health and of ample means, and after saying that under these circumstances a wise man sometimes enters the state of matrimony, he immediately proceeds thus: "But all these conditions are seldom satisfied in marriage. A wise man therefore must not take a wife. For in the first place his study of philosophy will be hindered, and it is impossible for anyone to attend to his books and his wife. Matrons want many things, costly dresses, gold, jewels, great outlay, maid-servants, all kinds of furniture, litters and gilded coaches. Then come curtain-lectures the livelong night: she complains that one lady goes out better dressed than she: that another is looked up to by all: 'I am a poor despised nobody at the ladies' assemblies.' 'Why did you ogle that creature next door?' 'Why were you talking to the maid?' 'What did you bring from the market?' 'I am not allowed to have a single friend, or companion.' She suspects that her husband's love goes the same way as her hate. There may be in some neighbouring city the wisest of teachers; but if we have a wife we can neither leave her behind, nor take the burden with us. To support a poor wife, is hard: to put up with a rich one, is torture. Notice, too, that in the case of a wife you cannot pick and choose: you must take her as you find her. If she has a bad temper, or is a fool, if she has a blemish, or is proud, or has bad breath, whatever her fault may be—all this we learn after marriage. Horses, asses, cattle, even slaves of the smallest worth, clothes, kettles, wooden seats, cups, and earthenware pitchers, are first tried and then bought: a wife is the only thing that is not shown before she is married, for fear she may not give satisfaction. Our gaze must always be directed to her face, and we must always praise her beauty: if you look at another woman, she thinks that she is out of favour. She must be called my lady, her birth-day must be kept, we must swear by her health and wish that she may survive us, respect must be paid to the nurse, to the nursemaid, to the father's slave, to the foster-child, to the handsome hanger-on, to the curled darling who manages her affairs, and to the eunuch who ministers to the safe indulgence of her lust: names which are only a cloak for adultery. Upon whomsoever she sets her heart, they must have her love though they want her not. If you give her the management of the whole house, you must yourself be her slave. If you reserve something for yourself, she will not think you are loyal to her; but she will turn to strife and hatred, and unless you quickly take care, she will have the poison ready. If you introduce old women, and soothsayers, and prophets, and vendors of jewels and silken clothing, you imperil her chastity; if you shut the door upon them, she is injured and fancies you suspect her. But what is the good of even a careful guardian, when an unchaste wife cannot be watched, and a chaste one ought not to be? For necessity is but a faithless keeper of chastity, and she alone really deserves to be called pure, who is free to sin if she chooses. if a woman be fair, she soon finds lovers; if she be ugly, it is easy to be wanton. It is difficult to guard what many long for. It is annoying to have what no one thinks worth possessing. But the misery of having an ugly wife is less than that of watching a comely one. Nothing is safe, for which a whole people sighs and longs. One man entices with his figure, another with his brains, another with his wit, another with his open hand. Somehow, or sometime, the fortress is captured which is attacked on all sides. Men marry, indeed, so as to get a manager for the house, to solace weariness, to banish solitude; but a faithful slave is a far better manager, more submissive to the master, more observant of his ways, than a wife who thinks she proves herself mistress if she acts in opposition to her husband, that is, if she does what pleases her, not what she is commanded. But friends, and servants who are under the obligation of benefits received, are better able to wait upon us in sickness than a wife who makes us responsible for her tears (she will sell you enough to make a deluge for the hope of a legacy), boasts of her anxiety, but drives her sick husband to the distraction of despair. But if she herself is poorly, we must fall sick with her and never leave her bedside. Or if she be a good and agreeable wife (how rare a bird she is!), we have to share her groans in childbirth, and suffer torture when she is in danger. A wise man can never be alone. He has with him the good men of all time, and turns his mind freely wherever he chooses. What is inaccessible to him in person he can embrace in thought. And, if men are scarce, he converses with God.³⁵⁷ He is never less alone than when alone. Then again, to marry for the sake of children, so that our name may not perish, or that we may have support in old age, and leave our property without dispute, is the height of stupidity. For what is it to us when we are leaving the world if another bears our name, when even a son does not all at once take his father's title, and there are countless others who are called by the same name. Or what support in old age is he whom you bring up, and who may die before you, or turn out a reprobate? Or at all events when he reaches mature age, you may seem to him long in dying. Friends and relatives whom you can judiciously love are better and safer heirs than those whom you must make your heirs whether you like it or not. Indeed, the surest way of having a good heir is to ruin your fortune in a good cause while you live, not to leave the fruit of your labour to be used you know not how."

48. When Theophrastus thus discourses, are there any of us, Christians, whose conversation is in heaven and who daily say³⁵⁸ "I long to be dissolved, and to be with Christ," whom he does not put to the blush? Shall a joint-heir of Christ really long for human heirs? And shall he desire children and delight himself in a long line of descendants, who will perhaps fall into the clutches of Antichrist, when we read that³⁵⁹ Moses and³⁶⁰ Samuel preferred other men to their own sons, and did not count as their children those whom they saw to be displeasing to God? When Cicero after³⁶¹ divorcing Terentia was requested by³⁶² Hirtius to marry his sister, he³⁶³ set the matter altogether on one side, and said that he could not possibly devote himself to a wife and to philosophy. Meanwhile that excellent partner, who had herself drunk wisdom at Tully's fountains, married³⁶⁴ Sallust his enemy, and took for her third husband Messala Corvinus, and thus, as it were, passed through three degrees of eloquence. Socrates had two wives, Xantippe and Myron, grand-daughter of Aristides. They frequently quarrelled, and he was accustomed to banter them for disagreeing about him, he being the ugliest of men, with snub nose, bald forehead, rough-haired, and bandy-legged. At last they planned an attack upon him, and having punished him severely, and put him to flight, vexed him for a long time. On one occasion when he opposed Xantippe; who from above was heaping abuse upon him, the termagant soused him with dirty water, but he only wiped his head and said, "I knew that a shower must follow such thunder as that."³⁶⁵ Metella, consort of L. Sulla the³⁶⁶ Fortunate (except in the matter of his wife) was³⁶⁷ openly unchaste. It was the common talk of Athens, as I learnt in my youthful years when we soon pick up what is bad, and yet Sulla was in the dark, and first got to know the secrets of his household through the abuse of his enemies. Cn. Pompey had an impure wife³⁶⁸ Mucia, who was surrounded by eunuchs from Pontus and troops of the countrymen of Mithridates. Others thought that he knew all and submitted to it; but a comrade told him during the campaign, and the conqueror of the whole world was dismayed at the sad intelligence.³⁶⁹ M. Cato, the Censor, had a wife Actoria Paula, a woman of low origin, fond of drink, violent, and (who would believe it?) haughty to Cato. I say this for fear anyone may suppose that in marrying a poor woman he has secured peace. When³⁷⁰ Philip king of Macedon, against whom³⁷¹ Demosthenes thundered in his Philippics, was entering his bed-room as usual, his wife in a passion shut him out. Finding himself excluded he held his tongue, and consoled himself for the insult by reading a tragic poem.³⁷² Gorgias the Rhetorician recited his excellent treatise on Concord to the Greeks, then at variance among themselves, at Olympia. Whereupon³⁷³ Melanthius his enemy observed: "Here is a man who teaches us concord, and yet could not make concord between himself his wife, and maid-servant, three persons in one house." The truth was that his wife envied the beauty of the girl, and drove the purest of men wild with daily quarrels. Whole tragedies of Euripides are censures on women. Hence Hermione says,³⁷⁴ "The counsels of evil women have beguiled me." In the semi-barbarous and remote city³⁷⁵ Leptis it is the custom for a daughter-in-law on³⁷⁶ the second day to beg the loan of a jar from her mother-in-law. The latter at once denies the request, and we see how true was the remark of³⁷⁷ Terence, ambiguously expressed on purpose—"How is this? do all mothers-in-law hate their daughters-in-law?" We read of a certain Roman noble who, when his friends found fault with him for having divorced a wife, beautiful, chaste, and rich, put out his foot and said to them, "And the shoe before you looks new and elegant, yet no one but myself knows where it pinches." Herodotus³⁷⁸ tells us that a woman puts off her modesty with her clothes. And our own comic poet³⁷⁹ thinks the man fortunate who has never been married. Why should I refer to Pasiphaë,³⁸⁰ Clytemnestra, and Eriphyle, the first of whom, the wife of a king and swimming in pleasure, is said to have lusted for a bull, the second to have killed her: husband for the sake of an adulterer, the third to have betrayed Amphiaras, and to have preferred a gold necklace to the welfare of her husband. In all the bombast of tragedy and the overthrow of houses, cities, and kingdoms, it is the wives and concubines who stir up strife. Parents take up arms against their children: unspeakable banquets are served: and on account of the rape of one wretched woman Europe and Asia are involved in a ten years' war. We read of some who were divorced the day after they were married, and immediately married again. Both husbands are to blame, both he who was so soon dissatisfied, and he who was so soon pleased. Epicurus the patron of pleasure (though³⁸¹ Metrodorus his disciple married Leontia) says that a wise man can seldom marry, because marriage has many drawbacks. And as riches, honours, bodily health, and other things which we call indifferent, are neither good nor bad, but stand as it were midway, and become good and bad according to the use and issue, so wives stand on the border line of good and ill. It is, moreover, a serious matter for a wise man to be in doubt whether he is going to marry a good or a bad woman.³⁸² Chrysippus ridiculously maintains that a wise man should marry, that he may not outrage Jupiter³⁸³ Gamelius and Genethlius. For upon that principle the Latins would not marry at all, since they have no Jupiter who presides over marriage. But if, as he thinks, the life of men is determined by the names of gods, whoever chooses to sit will offend Jupiter³⁸⁴ Stator.

49. Aristotle and Plutarch and our Seneca have written treatises on matrimony, out of which we have already made some extracts and now add a few more. "The love of beauty is the forgetting of reason and the near neighbour of madness; a foul blot little in keeping with a sound mind. It confuses counsel, breaks high and generous spirits, draws away men from great thoughts to mean ones; it makes men querulous, ill-tempered, foolhardy, cruelly imperious, servile flatterers, good for nothing, at last not even for love itself. For although in the intensity of passion it burns like a raging fire, it wastes much time through suspicions, tears, and complaints: it begets hatred of itself, and at last hates itself." The course of love is laid bare in Plato's Phaedrus from beginning to end, and Lysias explains all its drawbacks-how it is led not by reason, but by frenzy, and in particular is a harsh gaoler over lovely wives. Seneca, too, relates that he knew an accomplished man who before going out used to tie his wife's garter upon his breast, and could not bear to be absent from her for a quarter of an hour; and this pair would never take a drink unless husband and wife alternately put their lips to the cup; and they did other things just as absurd in the extravagant outbursts of their warm but blind affection. Their love was of honourable birth, but it grew out of all proportion. And it makes no difference how honourable may be the cause of a man's insanity. Hence³⁸⁵ Xystus in his Sentences tells us that "He who too ardently loves his own wife is an adulterer." It is disgraceful to love another man's wife at all, or one's own too much. A wise man ought to love his wife with judgment, not with passion. Let a man govern his voluptuous impulses. and not rush headlong into intercourse. There is nothing blacker than to love a wife as if she were an adulteress. Men who say they have contracted marriage and are bringing up children, for the good of their country and of the race, should at least imitate the brutes, and not destroy their offspring in the womb; nor should they appear in the character of lovers, but of husbands. In some cases marriage has grown out of adultery: and, shameful to relate! men have tried to teach their wives chastity after having taken their chastity away. Marriages of that sort are quickly dissolved when lust is satiated. The first allurements gone, the charm is lost. What shall I say, says Seneca, of the poor men who in numbers are bribed to take the name of husband in order to evade the laws promulgated against bachelors? How can he who is married under such conditions be a guide to morality, teach chastity, and maintain the authority of a husband? It is the saying of a very learned man, that chastity must be preserved at all costs, and that when it is lost all virtue falls to the ground. This holds the primacy of all virtues in woman. This it is that makes up for a wife's poverty, enhances her riches, redeems her deformity, gives grace to her beauty; it makes her act in a way worthy of her forefathers whose blood it does not taint with bastard offspring; of her children, who through it have no need to blush for their mother, or to be in doubt about their father; and above all, of herself, since it defends her from external violation. There is no greater calamity connected with captivity than to be the victim of another's lust. The consulship sheds lustre upon men; eloquence gives eternal renown; military glory and a triumph immortalise an obscure family. Many are the spheres ennobled by splendid ability. The virtue of woman is, in a special sense, purity. It was this that made³⁸⁶ Lucretia the equal of Brutus, if it did not make her his superior, since Brutus learnt from a woman the impossibility of being a slave. It was this that made³⁸⁷ Cornelia a fit match for Gracchus, and³⁸⁸ Porcia for a second Brutus.³⁸⁹ Tanaquil is better known than her husband. His name, like the names of many other kings, is lost in the mists of antiquity. She, through a virtue rare among women, is too deeply rooted in the hearts of all ages for her memory ever to perish. Let my married sisters copy the examples of³⁹⁰ Theano,³⁹¹ Cleobuline, Gorgente,³⁹² Timoclia, the³⁹³ Claudias and Cornelias; and when they find the Apostle conceding second marriage to depraved women, they will read that before the light of our religion shone upon the world wives of one husband ever held high rank among matrons, that by their hands the sacred rites of Fortuna³⁹⁴ Muliebris were performed, that a priest or³⁹⁵ Flamen twice³⁹⁶ married was unknown, that the high-priests of Athens to this day³⁹⁷ emasculate themselves by drinking hemlock, and once they have been drawn in to the pontificate, cease to be men.

1: From this expression and that quoted in the notice above, it would be supposed that Jerome knew Jovinianus and his mode of life. But there is no reason to think that he had this knowledge; and his imputations against his adversary must be taken as the inferences which he draws from his opinions.

2: Hor. Ars Poet. 139.

3: Pers. Sat. iii. 118.

4: Plautus, Pseudolus, i. 1. 23.

5: The allusion is probably to the Sybilline books.

6: Aen x. 640.

7: The philosopher of Ephesus. Flourished about b.c. 513.

8: Ibi est distinctio. Instead of clearness we have to make a choice between possible meanings.

9: Marcion lived about a.d. 150, and was co-temporary with Polycarp, who is said to have had a personal encounter with him at Rome. Unlike other Gnostics he professed to be purely Christian in his doctrines. He is specially noted for his violent treatment of Scripture: he rejected the whole of the Old Testament, while of the New he acknowledged only the Gospel of S. Luke and ten of S. Paul's Epistles, and from these he expunged whatever he did not approve of. His sect lasted until the sixth century.

10: By birth an Assyrian, and a pupil of Justin Martyr. His followers were called Encratites, or Temperates, from their great austerity. They also bore the names Water-drinkers and Renouncers.

11: Heb. xiii. The Revised Ver. translates "let marriage be, etc." There is no verb in the original, the sentence being probably designed to be a Christian proverb, and capable of serving either as an assertion or as a precept. The revised rendering is preferred by the chief modern commentators.

12: Gen. i. 28.

13: For much interesting information relating to counting on the fingers, and for authorities on the subject, see Mayor's note on Juvenal x. 249.

14: The philosopher of Crotona, in Italy, b.c. 580-510. See some of his sayings in Jerome's Apology, iii. 39-40.

15: The great teacher of the Academy at Athens; lived b.c. 428-389.

16: Surnamed the "Just." He was the opponent of Themistocles. He fought at Marathon (490), and although in exile did good service at Salamis (480). He was now recalled, and after commanding the Athenians at Plataea (479) died, probably in 468, so poor that he did not leave enough to pay for his funeral.

17: Flourished about b.c. 370. A disciple of Socrates, and founder of the Cyrenaic School of Philosophy; he was luxurious in his life, and held pleasure to be the highest good.

18: Epicurus (b.c. 342-270), though a disciple of Aristippus, does not appear to have deserved the odium attached to his name by Jerome and many others. "Pleasure with him was not a mere momentary and transitory sensation, but something lasting and imperishable, consisting in pure and noble enjoyments. that is, in ataracia and aponia , or the freedom from pain and from all influences which disturb the peace of our mind, and thereby our happiness which is the result of it." See Zeller's Socrates and the Socratic Schools (Reichel's translation), second ed., p. 337 sq.

19: The famous Athenian, talented, reckless and unscrupulous; born about b.c. 450, assassinated 404.

20: Gen. ii. 24.

21: Matt. xix. 5.

22: Gen. i. 28; Gen. ix. 1.

23: Gen. ix. 1.

24: Gen. ix. 3.

25: Gen. xxv. 23.

26: Gen. xxx. 1.

27: Gen. xxx. 2.

28: Palo. Rev. Vers. tent-pin.

29: Ps. lxxii. 1.

30: Ps. lxxii. 15.

31: Is. xxxviii. 19. Sept.

32: 1 Tim. v. 14.

33: Hebr. xiii. 4. See note on sec. 3.

34: 1 Cor. vii. 39.

35: 1 Tim. ii. 14.

36: 1 Cor. vii. 29.

37: 1 Cor. vii. 1 sq.

38: Prov. vi. 27, Prov. vi. 28.

39: Mithras was the God of the Sun among the Persians. His worship was introduced at Rome under the Emperors, and thence spread over the empire.

40: Son of Vulcan, king of Athens, and the first to drive a four-in-hand, Virg. G. iii. 113: "First to the chariot, Erichonius dared four steeds to join, and o'er the rapid wheels victorious hang."

41: 1 Pet. iii. 7.

42: 1 Pet. iii. 2, 1 Pet. iii. 3.

43: 1 John ii. 6.

44: 1 Cor. vii. 7.

45: 2 Cor. ii. 7.

46: 2 Cor. ii. 10. Margin.

47: Ps. xlv. 9, Ps. xlv. 13, Ps. xlv. 14.

48: 1 Peter iii. 7, joined with 1 Peter iv. 10.

49: 1 Cor. vii. 8.

50: Tit. i. 12.

51: 1 Cor. xv. 33.

52: Acts xvii. 28.

53: 1 Cor. vii. 10 sq.

54: 2 Cor. vi. 14 sq.

55: 1 Cor. vii. 39.

56: Mal. ii. 11, Mal. ii. 12.

57: R. V. "To the man that doeth this, him that waketh and him that answereth."

58: 1 Cor. vii. 18 sq.

59: But S. Paul hints at a surgical operation. See Josephus, Antiq. Bk. xii. c. v. sec. 1, where certain apostates from Judaism are said "to have hid their circumcision that even when they were naked [in the gymnasium] they might appear to be Greeks." See also Celsus, Bk. vii. c. xxv.

60: Gal. v. 19.

61: 1 Cor. vi. 17.

62: 1 Cor. vii. 25, 1 Cor. vii. 26.

63: Ferias nuptiarum. The reference is to 1 Cor. vii. 5.

64: Matt. xix. 10 sq.

65: Jerome uses the Greek word agwnoqethj -President of the Games.

66: S. John vii. 37.

67: Is. lvi. 3.

68: Jer. xxxviii. 7.

69: Acts viii. 27.

70: 1 Cor. vii. 26.

71: Matt. xxiv. 19, &c.

72: 1 Cor. vii. 27.

73: 1 Cor. vii. 30 sqq.

74: See Rev. Ver. Margin.

75: See the treatise on the Perp. Virginity of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Rome, 384.

76: Ep. xxii. on the guarding of virginity. Rome, 384.

77: Jerome apparently, here, alludes to some early work of Tertullian not now extant.

78: Jerome often alludes to his relation to Gregory, in the year 381; he was present at the council of Constantinople, of which Gregory was then the bishop.

79: This rendering supposes kai memeristai 80: S. John xv. 19.

81: 1 Cor. vii. 35.

82: 1 Cor. iii. 10.

83: 1 Cor. vii. 37, 1 Cor. vii. 38.

84: Ps. xxxvi. 27.

85: Eccles. vii. 16.

86: 1 Cor. vii. 39, 1 Cor. vii. 40.

87: 1 Tim. v. 11, 1 Tim. v. 15.

88: 1 Cor. vii. 40.

89: Rom vii. 2, Rom. vii. 3.

90: 1 Tim. v. 14, 1 Tim. v. 15.

91: See 1 Tim. iii. 12. Most ancient writers interpreted S. Paul's words as referring to second marriages after loss of first wife, however happening. And certain Councils decided in the same sense, e.g. Neocaesarea (a.d. 314). Ellicott's Pastoral Ep., fifth ed., p. 41.

92: 1 Tim. v. 9. Other authorities, however, suppose the words to refer to an order of widows, and pertinently ask, would the Church thus limit her alms.

93: Cor. vi. 12.

- 94: Eph. v. 31: Gen. ii.
- 95: Eph. v. 32.
- 96: Eph. v. 25: Col. iii. 9-11.
- 97: 1 Thess. iv. 7.
- 98: Lit. through a virgin. The allusion is, probably, to his baptism by a virgin, i.e., John Baptist.
- 99: But see Gen. iv. 26.
- 100: 1 Pet. iii. 20.
- 101: Eph. i. 10.
- 102: Rev. i. 8; Rev. xxii. 13.
- 103: Rom. xiv. 21.
- 104: Gen. xxxi. 46-49, where the heap itself is called Galeed.
- 105: Gen. xxxii. 25, Gen. xxxii. 28, Gen. xxxii. 31.
- 106: Gen. xxxv. 16, Gen. xxxv. 20.
- 107: Gen. xxxviii.
- 108: Gen. xxxviii. 9.
- 109: Ex. iv. 24-26.
- 110: Ex. iii. 5.
- 111: 1 Sam. xxi. 4.
- 112: Levit. xxi. 13, Levit. xxi. 14.
- 113: The reference is, probably, to Levit. xxii. 13. But the second marriage is not there prohibited, and in the ideal polity of Ezekiel (xliv. 22) a priest might marry the widow of a priest.
- 114: Levit. xxi. 3.
- 115: Deut. xx. 6, Deut. xx. 7, where an indulgence, not a prohibition, is clearly indicated.
- 116: Ex. xxxviii. 8. Sept. Vulg. "who watched;" Onkelos' Targum "who assembled to pray," and so the Syriac Version. The Hebrew word signifies "to go forth to war," but is applied to the temple service, a sort of militia sacra (Gesenius). Hence Rev. Version, "the serving women which served at the door of the tent of meeting;" and Margin, "the women which assembled to minister." Comp. Numb. iv. 3, Numb. iv. 23, Numb. iv. 30, Numb. iv. 35, Numb. iv. 39; and 1 Sam. ii. 22.
- 117: Ex. xxxvii.
- 118: In Jude 5, instead of "the Lord," A. B. read Jesus, and this is accepted by many ancient authorities. Farrar observes ("Early Days of Christianity," pop. ed., p. 128) "Jesus" is the more difficult, and therefore more probable reading of A. B. It is explained by 1 Cor. x. 4, and the identification of the Messiah with the "Angel of the Lord" (Ex. xiv. 19, Ex. xxiii. 20, &c.) and with the Pillar of Fire in Philo.

119: Josh. iii.

120: Jerome derives Gilgal from yly 121: Ex. iii. 5: Jos. v. 15.

122: Josh. x. 3.

123: Josh. x. 16.

124: S. Luke xvi. 29.

125: Rom. v. 14.

126: Gen. xxxi. 41.

127: Gen. xxxvii. 28.

128: Gen. xxxii. 14.

129: Joshua died at the age of 110 years. Josh. xxiv. 29.

130: Timnath-Serah was the original name of Joshua's inheritance (Josh. xix. 50), but in Judges ii. 9, we find the name changed to Timnath-Heres. Timnath-Serah and the tomb of its illustrious owner were shown in the time of Jerome (Letter cviii. 13). "Paula wondered greatly that he who assigned men their possessions had chosen for himself a rough and rocky spot." Jerome is looking at the inheritance with the eyes of an ardent controversialist when he describes it as "the fairest spot in the land of Judah."

131: Ps. xlviii. 2. The correct rendering of the Hebrew is much disputed.

132: Ps. lxxiii. 2.

133: Josh. xxiv. 28.

134: Deut. xxxiv. 6.

135: Worshipped more especially at Lampsacus on the Helles pont. He was regarded as the promoter of fertility in vegetables and animals.

136: Ps. cxxviii. 3.

137: Gen. vi. 3. R. V. Strive or rule in.

138: Gen. xlix. 17. Samson was of the tribe of Dan.

139: Judg. xi. 30, Judg. xi. 31.

140: 1 Tim. iii. 2.

141: Ps. xcix. 6.

142: See 1 Chron. vi. 34-38.

143: Heb. vii. 3. The Greek word in the text ("without genealogy") is unknown to secular writers. and occurs here only in the New Test. It cannot mean without descent (see verse 6). Unmarried appears to be a false inference from this supposed meaning. Ignatius also (Ep. ad. Philad.) reckoned Melchizedek among celibates. Rev. Version translates, "without genealogy," i.e., his ancestry was unrecorded. See Farrar's "Early Days of Christianity," pop. ed., p. 221.

144: 1 Sam. ii. 22.

145: See, however, 1 Chron. xxii. 8.

146: S. Matt. xviii. 6.

147: S. Matt. v. 22.

148: S. Matt. v. 27.

149: Cant. vi. 8.

150: 1 Kings xi. 3.

151: 1 Cor. vii. 29.

152: Is. xxxviii. 19.

153: 2 Kings xxii. 14.

154: 2 Kings xx. 18.

155: Dan. i. 3, Dan. i. 4.

156: Ezek. xiv. 14, Ezek. xiv. 20.

157: Ezek. xviii. 4.

158: Ezek. viii. 1.

159: Ezek. xiv. 14.

160: Apocryphal additions to Daniel.

161: Matt. xix. 27.

162: Luke xviii. 29, Luke xviii. 30.

163: 1 Cor. ix. 5. The text has been much tampered with by the advocates or opponents of celibacy. The reading first quoted by Jerome is that of F, a manuscript of the eighth or ninth century, and is found in Tertullian; the other chief readings introduce the Greek equivalent for sister, either in the sing. or plural. The Rev. Version renders, "have we no right to lead about a wife that is a believer" (or sister). Augustine, Tertullian, Theodoret, &c., together with Cornelius-a-Lapide and Estius among the moderns, agree with Jerome in referring the passage to holy women who ministered to the Apostles as they did to the Lord Himself. The third canon of Nicaea is supposed to be directed against the practice encouraged by this interpretation of the Apostle's words.

164: Attributed to Clement by Jerome.

165: Isa. i. 9.

166: S. John xiii. 25.

167: S. John xx. 4.

168: S. John xxi. 7 sq.

169: S. Matt. xvi. 18.

170: S. Matt. xviii. 18; S. John xx. 22, John xx. 23.

171: S. John xiv. 27.

172: S. Matt. xx. 27; S. Luke xxii. 26.

173: See this book in Vol. III. of this series.

174: Is. xl. 3.

175: S. John i. 1.

176: S. John xix. 26, John xix. 27.

177: 1 Tim. ii. 13, 1 Tim. ii. 15.

178: 1 Tim. ii. 8 sqq.

179: Apparently, Eve's transgression imputed to her descendants.

180: The original admits of the rendering "by means of her child-bearing." But Ellicott and others interpret of the Incarnation.

181: Rev. Version, "sobriety." Sobermindedness or discretion are given by Ellicott (Notes on translation) as alternative renderings. The word cannot mean chastity, but rather "the well-balanced state of mind resulting from habitual self-restraint" in general.

182: Prov. vi. 26?

183: Prov. vii. 27; Prov. ix. 18.

184: Prov. xxi. 19.

185: Often mentioned by Seneca. A saying is reported of him: "Ho, traveller, stop. There is a miracle here: a man and his wife not at strife."

186: Prov. xxi. 9; Prov. xxv. 24.

187: Prov. xxvii. 15.

188: Supereffluas. Prov. iii. 21 Sept., Heb. ii. 1. The Greek word signifies to fall away like flowing water. See Schleusner on pararruomai. In Heb. ii. 1, Rev. V. translates "We drift away:" Vaughan, "We be found to have leaked, or ebbd away."

189: Prov. xxx. 15, Prov. xxx. 16.

190: Eccles. iii. 1, Eccles. iii. 2, sqq.

191: Eccles. vii. 10.

192: R.V. "Good as an inheritance."

193: Eccles. vii. 28, Eccles. vii. 29.

194: Eccles. ix. 8.

195: Cant. i. 10, Cant. i. 11. "laits of gold with studs of silver." R.V.

196: Cant. ii. 1, Cant. ii. 10-12.

197: 1 Cor. vii. 29.

198: Cant. ii. 12.

199: Verse 13.

200: 2 Cor. ii. 15.

201: Cant. ii. 13, Cant. ii. 14.

202: Ex. xxxiv. 33, Ex. xxxiv. 35; 2 Cor. iii. 7 sq.

203: Is. i. 15.

204: Cant. ii. 16.

205: Cant. iii. 7, Cant. iii. 8.

206: Cant. iv. 6.

207: Eph. v. 27.

208: Cant. iv. 8.

209: Sept. R.V. "Look from the top of Amana."

210: Cant. viii. 5.

211: Ps. cxix. 105.

212: Cant. iv. 9.

213: Cant. iv. 9, Cant. iv. 10.

214: Cant. v. 1.

215: S. Matt. ix. 17.

216: Rom. vii. 6.

217: Zech. viii. 5; Zech. ix. 17, R. V. "How great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! Corn shall make the young men flourish, and new wine the maids."

218: Ps. xlv. 16, Ps xlv. 17.

219: Cant. iv. 12, Cant. iv. 13.

220: Cant. v. 10.

221: Cant. v. 16.

222: Cant. vii. 1.

223: R. V. " O Prince's daughter! " Sept., also " daughter of Nadab. "

224: Is. vii. 14.

225: Delitzsch remarks, "The assertion of Jerome is untenable." See Cheyne, critical note on Is. vii. 14. The word probably denotes a female, married or unmarried, just attaining maturity. But in every other passage, the context shows that the word is used of an unmarried woman.

226: Gen. xxiv. 42 sq.

227: Is. xxxvii. 22.

228: Is. liv. 1.

229: Jerem. ii. 32.

230: Jer. xxxi. 22.

231: Jer. i. 5.

232: Jer. xxxix. 11; Jer. xl. i.

233: Ezek. i. 4.

234: Ezek. xxiv. 18.

235: 1 Cor. vii. 25.

236: Acts xv. 28, Acts xv. 29.

237: S. Matt. x. 10; S. Luke x. 5.

238: S. Matt. xix. 21.

239: 1 Tim. iii. 2, 1 Tim iii. 4; Tit. i. 6.

240: Sacerdotes: that is, bishops.

241: 1 Cor. vii. 7.

242: 1 Tim. iii. x.

243: V. supra, c. 27. R. V. "temperate." Ellicott observes, "under any circumstances the derivative translation Vigilant, Auth., though possibly defensible in the verb, is a needless and doubtful extension of the primary meaning."

244: R. V. "orderly." V. above, c. 27.

245: kosmion . R. V. "orderly."

246: Non vinolentum. R.V. "no brawler," i.e., as the Margin explains, "not quarrelsome over wine." The original is not thus a mere synonym for nhfalioj in v. 2.

247: So Chrysostom and Theodoret. The simple meaning appears to suit the context better.

248: 1 Sam. ii. and 1 Sam. iv.

249: 1 Tim. iii. 11.

250: The Code of Constantine, following the Mosaic law, imposed the penalty of death for adultery. See Gibbon, ch. xliv.

251: S. Matt. xix. 12.

252: 1 Cor. vii. 25.

253: "Two rocky islands in the Euxine, that, according to the fable, floated about, dashing against and rebounding from each other, until at length they became fixed on the passage of the Argo between them."

254: Andabatae.

255: Matt. xix. 12.

256: 1 Cor. vii. 7.

257: Phil. ii. 6-8.

258: S. John xx. 20.

259: S. John xx. 19.

260: S. Matt. xiv. 28.

261: S. Matt. xxii. 30.

262: 2 Cor. v. 17.

263: Rom. vi. 21, Rom. vi. 22.

264: Rom. vii. 4 sq.

265: Rom. vii. 14, Rom. vii. 24, Rom. vii. 25.

266: Rom. viii. 1, Rom. viii. 2.

267: Rom. viii. 5 sq.

268: Rom. viii. 11, Rom. viii. 14.

269: R. V. "mind."

270: Rom. xii. 1-3.

271: See ch. 27.

272: Rom. xiii. 11, Rom. xiii. 12, Rom. xiii. 14.

273: 1 Cor. iii. 1, 1 Cor. iii. 2, 1 Cor. iii. 3.

274: That is, under the dominion of the psyche, or principle of life common to man and the beasts, hence, natural. Opposed to the psyche is the pneuma, capable of being influenced by the Spirit of God. A man thus influenced is pneumatikos or spiritual. See also 1 Cor. xv. 44.

275: 1 Cor. xv. 47 sq.

276: 2 Cor. v. 1 sq.

277: 2 Cor. xi. 2.

278: Gal. ii. 16.

279: Gal. iii. 3, Gal. iii. 4.

280: Gal. v. 16, Gal. v. 17.

281: Properly, self-control in the wide sense.

282: Gal. v. 24, Gal. v. 25.

283: Gal. vi. 7, Gal. vi. 8.

284: Eph. ii. 3, Eph. ii. 4.

285: Eph. iv. 22.

286: Eph. vi. 24.

287: Phil. iii. 20, Phil. iii. 21.

288: Phil. iv. 8.

289: Coloss. ii. 11; Coloss. iii. 1 sq.

290: 2 Tim. ii. 4.

291: Titus ii. 11, Titus ii. 12.

292: S. John xvi. 12, John xvi. 13.

293: xxi. 9.

294: Matt. xi. 13.

295: The passage is not found in existing copies of Josephus.

296: S. James i. 16-18.

297: R. V. "can be no variation." The word "difference," as used by Jerome, is explained by the context.

298: Rev. i. 5.

299: 1 Pet. i. 3-5.

300: Pet. i. 13-16.

301: 1 Pet. i. 18, 1 Pet. i. 19.

302: 1 Pet. i. 22, 1 Pet. i. 23.

303: In Jerome's rendering `living and abiding, 0' are attributes of God. But in the original the participles may be taken as predicates of either word or God. The R. V. refers them to the former.

304: 1 Pet. ii. 9.

305: 1 Pet. iv. 1 sq.

306: 2 Pet. i. 4.

307: 2 Pet. ii. 9 sq.

308: 2 Pet. iii. 3.

309: The notorious epicure of the time of Augustus and Tiberius.

310: Paxamus wrote a treatise on cooking, which, Suidas states, was arranged in alphabetical order.

311: 1 John ii. 15 sq.

312: 1 John iii. 2, 1 John iii. 3.

313: 1 John iv. 7. R. V. "that we may have."

314: Jude, 23.

315: xiv. 1 sq.

316: Rev. vii. 5 sq.

317: Apoc. xiv. 3, Apoc. xiv. 4.

318: or they may say.

319: 2 Tim. ii. 20, 2 Tim. ii. 21.

320: Virg. Aen i. 317.

321: Virg. Aen. vii. 803: id. xi. 535.

322: Leos was the hero from whom the tribe Leontis derived its name. Once when Athens was suffering from famine or plague, the oracle at Delphi demanded that his daughters should be sacrificed. The father complied. The shrine called Leocorium was erected by the Athenians to their honour.

323: Jerome's memory appears to be at fault. When the Greek fleet was on its way to Troy, it was detained by a calm at Aulis. The seer Calchas advised that Iphigenia, daughter of Agamemnon should be sacrificed. See Dict. of Ant.

324: According to the law of Numa, the punishment of a Vestal Virgin for violating the vow of chastity was stoning to death. Tarquinius Priscus first enacted that the offender should be buried alive, after being stripped of her badges of office, scourged and attired like a corpse. "From the time of the triumvirs each [Vestal] was preceded by a lictor when she went abroad; consuls and praetors made way for them, and lowered their fasces; even the tribunes of the plebs respected their holy character, and if any one passed under their litter, he was put to death."

325: It is said, however, that Claudia (Quinta) was a Roman matron, not a Vestal Virgin. The soothsayers announced that only a chaste woman could move the vessel referred to. Claudia, who had been accused of incontinency, took hold of the rope, and the vessel forthwith followed her. b.c. 204.

326: Seneca.

327: In the year after the death of Alexander (b.c. 323), Leosthenes defeated Alexander's general Antipater, near Thermopylae. Antipater then threw himself into the town of Lamia (in Phthiotis in Thessaly) which thus gave its name to the war. Leosthenes pressed the siege with great vigour, but was killed by a blow from a stone.

328: Another name for Messana (or Messene, derived from the Mamertini, a people of Campania, is some of whom were mercenaries in the army of the tyrant Agathocles, and were quartered in the town. At his death (b.c. 282) they rose and gained possession of it.

329: The semi-legendary hero of the second war between Sparta and Messene. He lived about b.c. 270.

330: The spring festival held in honour of Hyacinthus, the beautiful youth accidentally slain by Apollo, and from whose blood was said to have sprung the flower of the same name.

331: He succeeded Plato as president of the Academy (b.c. 347-339). His works are all lost.

332: One of Aristotle's pupils, and author of a number of works, none of which are extant.

333: Diogenes Laërtius (so named from Laërte in Cilicia), who probably lived in the end century after Christ, in the Third Book of his "Lives of the Philosophers" refers to a treatise by Anaxelides on the same subject. It has therefore been conjectured that Jerome may have written Philosophica Historia for philosophiae.

334: Timaeus of Locri, in Italy, a Pythagorean philosopher, is said to have been a teacher of Plato. There is an extant work bearing his name; but its genuineness is considered doubtful, and it is in all probability only an abridgment of Plato's dialogue of Timaeus.

335: Damo. Pythagoras is said to have entrusted his writings to her, and to have forbidden her to give them to any one. She strictly observed the command, although she was in extreme poverty, and received many requests to sell them. According to some accounts Pythagoras had another daughter, Myia.

336: Flourished about b.c. 540-510.

337: Clement of Alexandria (died about a.d. 220) in his Stromata (i.e. literally, patchwork) or Miscellanies, Bk. iv., relates the same story and gives the names of the daughters. The Diodorus referred to in the text lived at Alexandria in the reign of Ptolemy Soter (b.c. 323-285), by whom he was said to have been surnamed Cronos or Saturn, on account of his inability to solve at once some dialectic problem when dining with the king, perhaps with a play upon the word chronos (time), or with a sarcastic allusion to Cronos as the introducer of the arts of civilized life. The philosopher is said to have taken the disgrace so much to heart, that he wrote a treatise on the problem, and then died in despair. Another account derives his name from his teacher Apollonius Cronus.

338: Born about b.c. 213, died b.c. 129. He was the determined opponent of the Stoics, and maintained that neither our senses nor our understanding gives us a safe criterion of truth.

339: The poetical name of Rhea Silvia, daughter of Numitor and mother of Romulus and Remus.

340: According to the legend she stabbed herself on the funeral pyre. Jerome ignores the modifications introduced into the legend by Virgil, who, in defiance of the common chronology, makes Dido a contemporary of Aeneas, and represents her as destroying herself when forsaken by the hero.

341: Hasdrubal and his family, with 900 deserters and desperadoes, retired into the temple of Aesculapius, as if to make a brave defence. But the commandant's heart failed him; and, slipping out alone, he threw himself at the feet of Scipio, and craved for pardon. His wife, standing on the base of the temple, was near enough to witness the sight, and reproaching her husband with cowardice, cast herself with her children into the flames which were now wrapping the Citadel round on all sides. b.c. 146.

342: Son of Nicias the celebrated Athenian general.

343: She succeeded Mausolus and reigned b.c. 352-350.

344: She was the wife of Agron, and assumed the sovereign power on the death of her husband, b.c. 231. War was declared against her by Rome in consequence of her having caused the assassination of an ambassador, and in 228 she obtained peace at the cost of the greater part of her dominions.

345: Cyropaedia, Book vii.

346: The wife of Candaules, also called Myrsilus. She was exhibited to Gyges, who, after the murder of her husband, married her. Herod. B. i.

347: The story, as is well known, formed the subject of the play by Euripides bearing the heroine's name, which was brought out about b.c. 438.

348: Protesilaus was the first of the Greeks to fall at Troy. According to some accounts he was slain by Hector. When her husband was slain Laodamia begged the gods to allow her to converse with him for only 3 hours. The request having been granted, Hermes led Protesilaus back to the upper world, and when he died a second time, Laodamia died with him.

349: The wife of L. Tarquinius Collatinus, whose rape by Sextus led to the dethronement of Tarquinius Superbus and the establishment of the republic.

350: Over the Carthaginian fleet near Mylae, 260 b.c.

351: One of the assassins of Julius Caesar. Jerome appears to be at fault here. Porcia, the daughter of Cato by his first wife Atilia, before marrying Brutus in 45 b.c., had been married to M. Bibulus and had borne him three children. He died in 48. After the death of Brutus in 42 she put an end to her own life, probably by the fumes of a charcoal fire.

352: Marcia is related to have been ceded by Cato to his friend Hortensius. She continued to live with the latter until his death, when she returned to Cato.

353: It has been conjectured that instead of "Marcia, Cato's younger daughter," a few lines above, we should read Porcia.

354: Probably the daughter of Cato by his second wife Marcia.

355: Jerome, apparently, makes a mistake here. Valeria, sister of the Messalas, married Sulla towards the end of his life. Valeria, the widow of Galerius, after the death of her husband in 311, rejected the proposals of Maximinus. Her consequent sufferings are related by Gibbon in his fourteenth chapter.

356: The Greek philosopher to whom Aristotle bequeathed his library and the originals of his own writings. He died b.c. 287, after being President of the Academy for 35 years. If he were the author of the book here referred to, it is not to be found among his extant writings.

357: Cicero at the beginning of the third book of the De Officiis, makes Cato quote this saying as one frequently in the mouth of Publius Scipio.

358: Phil. i. 23.

359: We hear very little of the two sons of Moses, Gershom and Eliezer. See Ex. iv. 20, Ex. xviii. 3, 1 Chron. xxiii. 14. Their promotion is nowhere recorded, and Moses appointed a person of another tribe to be his successor.

360: See 1 Sam. viii. 1-4 and ch. 1 Sam. ix.

361: b.c. 46. "What grounds for displeasure she had given him besides her alleged extravagance it is hard to say. His letters to her during the previous year had been short and rather cold." Watson, Select Letters of Cicero. third ed. p. 397.

362: Hirtius was the friend personal and political of Julius Caesar, and during Caesar's absence in Africa he lived principally at his Tusculan estate which adjoined Cicero's villa. Hirtius and Cicero though opposed to each other in politics were on good terms, and the former is said to have received lessons in oratory from the latter.

363: But not long after divorcing Terentia he married Publilia, a young girl of whose property he had the management, in order to relieve himself from pecuniary difficulties. She seems to have received little affection from her husband. Watson, p. 397.

364: This statement is without authority. See Long's Article on Sallust in Smith's Dict. of Classical Biography.

365: Caecilia Metella, the third of Sulla's five wives, had previously been married to M. Aemilius Scaurus, consul b.c. 115. She fell ill during the celebration of Sulla's triumph on account of his victory over Mithridates in 81; and as her recovery was hopeless, Sulla for religious reasons divorced her. She soon afterwards died, and Sulla honoured her memory with a splendid funeral.

366: The famous dictator claimed the name Felix for himself in a speech which he delivered to the people at the close of the celebration of his triumph, because he attributed his success in life to the favour of the gods.

367: But Sulla's youth and manhood were disgraced by the most sensual vices. He was indebted for a considerable portion of his wealth to a courtesan Nicopolis, and his death in b.c. 78 at the age of 60 was hastened by his dissolute mode of life.

368: Pompey, like Sulla, was married five times. Mucia, his third wife, daughter of Q. Mucius Scaevola, the augur, consul b.c. 95, was divorced by Pompey in 62, and afterwards married M. Aemilius Scaurus, son of the consul by Caecilia and thus stepson of Sulla.

369: Born b.c. 234. died b.c. 149. He was the great-grandfather of Cato of Utica.

370: b.c. 382-336.

371: b.c. 385-322.

372: Born about b.c. 480 at Leontini in Sicily. He is said to have lived 105, or even 109 years. He was held in high esteem at Athens, where he had numerous distinguished pupils and imitators.

373: An Athenian tragic poet, celebrated for his wit.

374: See the Andromache.

375: There were two cities of this name, Leptis Magna and Parva, in N. Africa.

376: Or "on another day," that is, than the marriage day implied in the context.

377: Terence Hecyra II. i. 4.

378: Bk I. ch 8. "Candaules addressed Gyges as follows: `Gyges, as I think you do not believe me when I speak of my wife's beauty (for the ears of men are naturally more incredulous than their eyes), you must contrive to see her naked. O' But he, exclaiming loudly, answered: `Sire, what a snocking proposal do you make, bidding me behold my queen naked! With her clothes a woman puts off her modesty, O'" etc.

379: Perhaps Terence, Phormio I, iii. 21.

380: For these legends, see Classical Dict.

381: The most distinguished disciple and the intimate friend of Epicurus. His philosophy appears to have been of a more sensual kind than that of his master. He made perfect happiness to consist in having a well-constituted body. He died b.c. 277 in the 53rd year of his age, 7 years before Epicurus.

382: Chrysippus (b.c. 280-207) the Stoic philosopher, born at Soli in Cilicia. He opposed the prevailing scepticism and maintained the possibility of attaining certain knowledge. It was said of him "that if Chrysippus had not existed the Porch (i.e., Stoicism) could not have been." He is reported to have seldom written less than 500 lines a-day, and to have left behind him 705 works.

383: That is Zeus, regarded as presiding over marriages and the tutelary god of races or families.

384: Literally, "Jupiter who causes to stand": hence Jerome's play upon the word. Jupiter Stator was the god regarded as supporting, preserving, etc. Cic., Cat. I. 13, 31-"quem (sc. Jovem) statorem hujus urbis atque imperil vere nominamus."

385: The greater number of manuscripts read Sextus, an alternative name for the same person. Jerome in his version of the Chronicon of Eusebius speaks of "Xystus a Pythagorean philosopher" who flourished at the time of Christ's birth; but there is great difficulty in establishing the identity of the author of the "Sentences." See also the Prolegomena to Rufinus who translated the Sentences of Xystus, in Vol. III. of this Series.

386: See note above, p. 382.

387: Daughter of P. Scipio Africanus, and wife of Ti. Sempronius Gracchus, censor b.c. 169. The people erected a statue to her with the inscription "Cornelia, mother of the Gracchi."

388: See note p. 376.

389: Wife of Tarquinius Priscus.

390: Theano was the most celebrated of the female philosophers of the Pythagorean school. According to some authorities she was the wife of Pythagoras.

391: Cleobuline, or Cleobule, was celebrated for her riddles in hexameter verse. One on the subject of the year runs thus-"A father has 12 children, and each of these 30 daughters, on one side white, and on the other side black, and though immortal they all die."

392: Timoclia was a woman of Thebes, whose house at the capture of the city in b.c. 335 was broken into and pillaged by the soldiery. She was herself violated by the commander, whom she afterwards contrived to push into a well.

393: A vestal virgin who proved her innocence of the unchastity imputed to her by setting free a stranded ship with her girdle.

394: The epithet is said to have been given to the goddess at the time when Coriolanus was prevented by the entreaties of the women from destroying Rome.

395: The name for any Korean priest devoted to the service of one particular god. He took his distinguishing title from the deity to whom he ministered, e.g. Flamen Martialis.

396: Comp. Tertullian De Monogamia, last chapter-"Fortunae, inquit, muliebri coronam non imponit, nisi univira ...Pontifex Maximus et Flaminica (the wife of a Flamen) nubunt semel."

397: See Origen, Contra Celsum, Bk. VII. The water hemlock, or cowbane, is the variety referred to.

Against Jovinianus - Book 2

Book II.

Book II.

Jerome answers the second, third, and fourth propositions of Jovinianus.

I. (c. 1-4). That those who have become regenerate cannot be overthrown by the devil, Jerome (c. 1) puts it that they cannot be tempted by the devil. He quotes 1 John i. 8-ii. 2, as shewing that faithful men can be tempted and sin and need an advocate. The expressions (3) in Heb. vi. as to those who crucify the Son of God afresh do not apply to ordinary sins after baptism, as supposed by Montanus and Novatus. The epistles to the Seven Churches show that the lapsed may return. The Angels, and even our Lord Himself, (4) could be tempted.

II. (c. 5-17). That there is no difference (morally) between one who fasts and one who takes food with thanksgiving. Jovinian has quoted (5) many texts of Scripture to show that God has made animals for men's food. But (6) there are many other uses of animals besides food. And there are many warnings like 1 Cor. vi. 13, as to the danger arising from food. There are among the heathen (7) many instances of abstinence. They recognize (8) the evil of sensual allurements, and often, like Crates the Theban, (9) have cast away what would tempt them; the senses, they teach. (10) should be subject to reason; and, that (11) except for athletes (Christians do not want to be like Milo of Crotona) bread and water suffice. Horace (12), Xenophon and other eminent Greeks (13), the Essenes and the Brahmins (14), as well as philosophers like Diogenes, testify to the value of abstinence. The Old Testament stories (15) of Esau's pottage, of the lusting of Israel for the flesh-pots of Egypt, and those in the New Testament of Anna, Cornelius, &c., commend abstinence. If some heretics inculcate fasting (16) in such a way as to despise the gifts of God, and weak Christians are not to be judged for their use of flesh, those who seek the higher life (17) will find a help in abstinence.

III. (c. 18-34). The fourth proposition of Jovinianus, that all who are saved will have equal reward, is refuted (19) by the various yields of thirty, sixty, and a hundred fold in the parable of the sower, by (20) the "stars differing in glory" of 1 Cor. xv. 41. It is strange (21) to find the advocate of self-indulgence now claiming equality to the saints. But (22) as there were differences in Ezekiel between cattle and cattle, so in St. Paul between those who built gold or stubble on the one foundation. The differences of gifts (23), of punishments (24), of guilt (25), as in Pilate and the Chief Priests, of the produce of the good seed (26), of the mansions promised in heaven (27-29), of the judgment upon sins both in the church and in Scripture (30-31), of those called at different times to the vineyard (32) are arguments for the diversity of rewards. The parable of the talents (33) holds out as rewards differences of station, and so does the church (34) in its different orders.

Jerome now recapitulates (35) and appeals (36) against the licentious views of Jovinianus, which have already induced many virgins to break their vows; and which, as the new Roman heresy (37), he calls upon the Imperial City (38) to reject.

1. The second proposition of Jovinianus is that the baptized cannot be tempted¹ by the devil. And to escape the imputation of folly in saying this, he adds: "But if any are tempted, it only shows that they were baptized with water, not with the Spirit, as we read was the case with Simon Magus." Hence it is that John says,² "Whosoever is begotten of God doeth no sin, because his seed abideth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is begotten of God. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil." And at the end of the Epistle,³ "Whosoever is begotten of God sinneth not; but his being begotten of God keepeth him, and the evil one toucheth him not."

2. This would be a real difficulty and one for ever incapable of solution were it not solved by the witness of John himself, who immediately goes on to say,⁴ "My little children, guard yourselves from idols." If everyone that is born of God sinneth not, and cannot be tempted by the devil, how is it that he bids them beware of temptation? Again in the same Epistle we read:⁵ "If we say that we have no sins, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." I suppose that John was baptized and was writing to the baptized: I imagine too that all sin is of the devil. Now John confesses himself a sinner, and hopes for forgiveness of sins after baptism. My friend Jovinianus says,⁶ "Touch me not, for I am clean." What then? Does the Apostle contradict himself? By no means. In the same passage he gives his reason for thus speaking:⁷ "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye may not sin. But if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the whole world. And hereby know we that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily hath the love of God been perfected. Hereby know we that we are in him: he that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked." My reason for telling you, little children, that everyone who is born of God sinneth not, is that you may not sin, and that you may know that so long as you sin not I you abide in the birth which God has given you. Yea, they who abide in that birth cannot sin.⁸ "For what communion hath light with darkness? Or Christ with Belial?" As day is distinct from night, so righteousness and unrighteousness, sin and good works, Christ and Antichrist cannot blend. If we give Christ a lodging-place in our hearts, we banish the devil from thence. If we sin and the devil enter through the gate of sin, Christ will immediately withdraw. Hence David after sinning says:⁹ "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation," that is, the joy which he had lost by sinning.¹⁰ "He who saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Christ is called the truth:¹¹ "I am the way, the truth, and the life." In vain do we make our boast in him whose commandments we keep not. To him that knoweth what is good, and doeth it not, it is sin.¹² "As the body apart from the spirit is dead, even so faith apart from works is dead." And we must not think it a great matter to know the only God, when even devils believe and tremble. "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked." Our opponent may choose whichever of the two he likes; we give him his choice. Does he abide in Christ, or not? If he abide, let him then walk as Christ walked. But if there is¹³ rashness in professing to copy the virtues of our Lord, he does not abide in Christ, for he does not walk as did Christ.¹⁴ "He did not sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: when he was reviled, he reviled not again, and as a lamb is dumb before its shearer, so opened he not his mouth." To Him came the prince of this world, and found nothing in Him: although He had done no sin, God made Him sin for us. But we, according to the Epistle of James,¹⁵ "all stumble in many things," and¹⁶ "no one is pure from sin, no not if his life be but a day long."¹⁷ For who will boast "that he has a clean heart? or who will be sure that he is pure from sin?" And we are held guilty after the similitude of Adam's transgression. Hence David says,¹⁸ "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." And the blessed Job,¹⁹ "Though I be righteous my mouth will speak wickedness, and though I be perfect, I shall be found perverse. If I wash myself with snow water and make my hands never so clean, yet wilt thou plunge me in the ditch and mine own clothes shall abhor me." But that we may not utterly despair and think that if we sin after baptism we cannot be saved, he immediately checks the tendency:²⁰ "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins. And not for ours only, but also for the whole world." He addresses this to baptized believers, and he promises them the Lord as an advocate for their offences. He does not say: If you fall into sin, you have an advocate with the Father, Christ, and He is the propitiation for your sins: you might then say that he was addressing those whose baptism had been destitute of the true faith: but what he says is this, "We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, and he is the propitiation for our sins." And not only for the sins of John and his contemporaries, but for those of the whole world. Now in "the whole world" are included apostles and all the faithful, and a clear proof is established that sin after baptism is possible. It is useless for us to have an advocate Jesus Christ, if sin be impossible.

3. The apostle Peter, to whom it was said,²¹ "He that is bathed needeth not to wash again," and²² "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church," through fear of a maid-servant denied Him. Our Lord himself says,²³ "Simon, Simon, behold Satan asked to have you, that he might sift you as wheat. But I made supplication for thee, that thy faith fail not." And in the same place, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." If you reply that this was said before the Passion, we certainly say after the Passion, in the Lord's prayer,²⁴ "Forgive us our debts, as we also forgive our debtors; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one." If we do not sin after baptism, why do we ask that we may be forgiven our sins, which were already forgiven in baptism? Why do we pray that we may not enter into temptation, and that we may be delivered from the evil one, if the devil cannot tempt those who are baptized? The case is different if this prayer belongs to the Catechumens, and is not adapted to faithful Christians. Paul, the chosen vessel,²⁵ chastised his body, and brought it into subjection, lest after preaching to others he himself should be found a reprobate, and²⁶ he tells that there was given to him "a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet" him. And to the Corinthians he writes:²⁷ "I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness, your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is toward Christ." And elsewhere:²⁸ "But to whom ye forgive anything, I forgive also: for what I also have forgiven, if I have forgiven anything, for your sakes have I forgiven it in the person of Christ: that no advantage may be gained over us by Satan: for we are not ignorant of his devices." And again:²⁹ "There hath no temptation taken you, but such as man can bear; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it." And,³⁰ "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." And to the Galatians:³¹ "Ye were running well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?" And elsewhere:³² "We would fain have come unto you, I Paul once and again; and Satan hindered us." And to the married he says:³³ "Be together again, that Satan tempt you not because of your incontinency." And again:³⁴ "But I say, walk by the Spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are contrary the one to the other: that ye may not do the things that ye would." We are a compound of the two, and must endure the strife of the two substances. And to the Ephesians:35 "Our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." Does any one think that we are safe, and that it is right to fall asleep when once we have been baptized? And so, too, in the epistle to the Hebrews:36 "For as touching those who were once enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the age to come, and then fell away, it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." Surely we cannot deny that they have been baptized who have been illuminated, and have tasted the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the good word of God. But if the baptized cannot sin, how is it now that the Apostle says, "And have fallen away"?37 Montanus and38 Novatus would smile at this, for they contend that it is impossible to renew again through repentance those who have crucified to themselves the Son of God, and put Him to an open shame. He therefore corrects this mistake by saying:39 "But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak; for God is not unrighteous to forget your work and the love which ye shewed towards his name, in that ye ministered unto the Saints, and still do minister." And truly the unrighteousness of God would be great, if He merely punished sin, and did not welcome good works. I have so spoken, says the Apostle, to withdraw you from your sins, and to make you more careful through fear of despair. But, beloved, I am persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation. For it is not accordant with the righteousness of God to forget good works, and the fact that you have ministered and do minister to the Saints for His name's sake, and to remember sins only. The Apostle James also, knowing that the baptized can be tempted, and fall of their own free choice, says:40 "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he hath been approved, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord promised to them that love him." And that we may not think that we are tempted by God, as we read in Genesis Abraham was, he adds: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, and He Himself tempteth no man. But each man is tempted when he is drawn away by his own lust and enticed. Then the lust, when it hath conceived, beareth sin: and the sin, when it is full grown, bringeth forth death." God created us with free will, and we are not forced by necessity either to virtue or to vice. Otherwise, if there be necessity, there is no crown. As in good works it is God who brings them to perfection, for it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that pitieth and gives us help that we may be able to reach the goal: so in things wicked and sinful, the seeds within us give the impulse, and these are brought to maturity by the devil. When he sees that we are building upon the foundation of Christ, hay, wood, stubble, then he applies the match. Let us then build gold, silver, costly stones, and he will not venture to tempt us: although even thus there is not sure and safe possession. For the lion lurks in ambush to slay the innocent.41 "Potters' vessels are proved by the furnace, and just men by the trial of tribulation." And in another place it is written:42 "My son, when thou comest to serve the Lord, prepare thyself for temptation." Again, the same James says:43 "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only. For if any one is a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a mirror: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth away, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was." It was useless to warn them to add works to faith, if they could not sin after baptism. He tells us that⁴⁴ "whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble in one point, he is become guilty of all." Which of us is without sin?⁴⁵ "God hath shut up all unto disobedience, that he might have mercy upon all." Peter also says:⁴⁶ "The Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation." And concerning false teachers:⁴⁷ "These are springs without water, and mists driven by a storm; for whom the blackness of darkness hath been reserved. For, uttering proud words of vanity, they entice in the lusts of the flesh, by lasciviousness, those who had just escaped, and have turned back to error." Does not the Apostle in these words seem to you to have depicted the new party of ignorance? For, as it were, they open the fountains of knowledge and yet have no water: they promise a shower of doctrine like prophetic clouds which have been visited by the truth of God, and are driven by the storms of devils and vices. They speak great things, and their talk is nothing but pride:⁴⁸ "But every one is unclean with God who is lifted up in his own heart." Like those who had just escaped from their sins, they return to their own error, and persuade men to luxury, and to the delights of eating and the gratification of the flesh. For who is not glad to hear them say: "Let us eat and drink, and reign for ever"? The wise and prudent they call corrupt, but pay more attention to the honey-tongued. John the apostle, or rather the Saviour in the person of John, writes thus to the angel of the Church of Ephesus:⁴⁹ "I know thy works and thy toil and patience, and that thou didst bear for my name's sake, and hast not grown weary. But I have this against thee, that thou didst leave thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come to thee, and will move thy candlestick out of its place, except thou repent." Similarly He urges the other churches, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, Laodicea, to repentance, and threatens them unless they return to the former works. And in Sardis He says He has a few who have not defiled their garments, and they shall walk with Him in white, for they are worthy. But they to whom He says: "Remember from whence thou art fallen "; and, "Behold the devil is about to cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried"; and, "I know where thou dwellest, even where Satan's throne is"; and, "Remember how thou hast received, and didst hear, and keep it, and repent," and so on, were of course believers, and baptized, who once stood, but fell through sin.

4. I delayed for a little while the production of proofs from the Old Testament, because, wherever the Old Testament is against them they are accustomed to cry out that⁵⁰ the Law and the Prophets were until John. But who does not know that under the other dispensation of God all the saints of past times were of equal merit with Christians at the present day? As Abraham in days gone by pleased God in wedlock, so virgins now please him in perpetual virginity. He served the Law and his own times; let us now serve the Gospel and our times,⁵¹ upon whom the ends of the ages have come. David the chosen one, the man after God's own heart, who had performed all His pleasure, and who in a certain psalm had said,⁵² "Judge me, O Lord, for I have walked in mine integrity: I have trusted also in the Lord and shall not slide. Examine me, O Lord, and prove me; try my reins and my heart," even he was afterwards tempted by the devil; and repenting of his sin said,⁵³ "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness." He would have a great sin blotted out by great loving-kindness. Solomon, beloved of the Lord, and to whom God had twice revealed Himself, because he loved women forsook the love of God. It is related in the⁵⁴ Book of Days that Manasses the wicked king was restored after the Babylonish captivity to his former rank. And Josiah, a holy man,⁵⁵ was slain by the king of Egypt on the plain of Megiddo.⁵⁶ Joshua also, the son of Josedeck and high-priest, although he was a type of our Saviour Who bore our sins, and united to Himself a church of alien birth from among the Gentiles, is nevertheless, according to the letter of Scripture, represented in filthy garments after he attained to the priesthood, and with the devil standing at his right hand; and white raiment is afterwards restored to him. It is needless to tell how Moses and Aaron⁵⁷ offended God at the water of strife, and did not enter the land of promise. For the blessed Job relates that even the angels and every creature can sin.⁵⁸ "Shall mortal man," he says, "be just before God? Shall a man be spotless in his works? If he putteth no trust in his servants, and chargeth his angels with folly, how much more them that dwell in houses of clay," amongst whom are we, and made of the same clay too.⁵⁹ "The life of man is a warfare upon earth."⁶⁰ Lucifer fell who was sending to all nations, and he who was nurtured in a paradise of delight as one of the twelve precious stones, was wounded and went down to hell from the mount of God. Hence the Saviour says in the Gospel:⁶¹ "I beheld Satan falling as lightning from heaven." If he fell who stood on so sublime a height, who may not fall? If there are falls in heaven, how much more on earth! And yet though Lucifer be fallen (the old serpent after his fall),⁶² "his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the muscles of his belly. The great trees are overshadowed by him, and he sleepeth beside the reed, the rush, and the sedge."⁶³ He is king over all things that are in the waters—that is to say in the seat of pleasure and luxury, of propagation of children, and of the fertilisation of the marriage bed⁶⁴ "For who can strip off his outer garment? Who can open the doors of his face? Nations fatten upon him, and the tribes of Phenicia divide him." And lest haply the reader in his secret thought might imagine that those tribes of Phenicia and peoples of Ethiopia only are meant by those to whom the dragon was given for food, we immediately find a reference to those who are crossing the sea of this world, and are hastening to reach the haven of salvation:⁶⁵ "His head stands in the ships of the fishermen like an anvil that cannot be wearied:⁶⁶ he counteth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood. And all the gold of the sea under him is as mire. He maketh the deep to boil like a pot: he values the sea like a pot of ointment, and the blackness of the deep as a captive. He beholdeth everything that is high." And my friend Jovinianus thinks he can gain an easy mastery over him. Why speak of holy men and angels, who, being creatures of God, are of course capable of sin? He dared to tempt the Son of God, and though smitten through and through with our Lord's first and second answer, nevertheless raised his head, and when thrice wounded, withdrew only for a time, and deferred rather than removed the temptation. And we flatter ourselves on the ground of our baptism, which though it put away the sins of the past, cannot keep us for the time to come, unless the baptized keep their hearts with all diligence.

5. At length we have arrived at the question of food, and are confronted by our third difficulty. "All things were created to serve for the use of mortal men.' And as man, a rational animal, in a sense the owner and tenant of the world, is subject to God, and worships his Creator, so all things living were created either for the food of men, or for clothing, or for tilling the earth, or conveying the fruits thereof, or to be the companions of man, and hence, because they are man's⁶⁷ helpers, they have their name jumenta.⁶⁸ 'What is man,' says David, 'that thou art mindful of him? And the son of man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him but little lower than the angels, and crownest him with glory and honour. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thine hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field: the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.' Granted, he says, that the ox was created for ploughing, the horse for riding, the dog for watching, goats for their milk, sheep for their fleeces. What is the use of swine if we may not eat their flesh?

of roes, stags, fallow-deer, boars, hares, and such like game? of geese, wild and tame? of wild ducks and⁶⁹ fig-peckers? of woodcocks? of coots? of thrushes? Why do hens run about our houses? If they are not eaten, all these creatures were created by God for nothing. But what need is there of argument when Scripture clearly teaches that every moving creature, like herbs and vegetables, were given to us for food, and the Apostle cries aloud⁷⁰ 'All things are clean to the clean, and nothing is to be rejected, if it be received with thanksgiving,' and⁷¹ tells us that men will come in the last days, forbidding to marry, and to eat meats, which God created for use? The Lord himself was called by the Pharisees a wine-bibber and a glutton, the friend of publicans and sinners, because he did not decline the invitation of Zacchaeus to dinner, and went to the marriage-feast. But it is a different matter if, as you may foolishly contend, he went to the dinner intending to fast, and after the manner of deceivers said, I eat this, not that; I do not drink the wine which I created out of water. He did not make water, but wine, the type of his blood. After the resurrection he ate a fish and part of a honey-comb, not sesame nuts and service-berries. The apostle, Peter, did not wait like a Jew for the stars to peep, but went upon the house-top to dine at the sixth hour. Paul in the ship broke bread, not dried figs. When Timothy's stomach was out of order, he advised him to drink wine, not perry. In abstaining from meats they please their own fancy: as though superstitious Gentiles did not observe the⁷² rites of abstinence connected with the Mother of the Gods and with Isis."

6. I will follow in detail the views now expounded, and before I come to Scripture and show by it that fasting is pleasing to God, and chastity accepted by him, I will meet philosophic argument with argument, and will prove that we are not followers of Empedocles and Pythagoras, who on account of their doctrine of the transmigration of souls think nothing which lives and moves should be eaten, and look upon him who fells a fir-tree or an oak as equally guilty with the parricide or the poisoner: but that we worship our Creator Who made all things for the use of man. And as the ox was created for ploughing, the horse for riding, dogs for watching, goats for milk, sheep for their wool: so it was with swine and stags, and roes and hares, and other animals: but the immediate purpose of their creation was not that they might serve for food, but for other uses of men. For if everything that moves and lives was made for food, and prepared for the stomach, let my opponents tell me why elephants, lions, leopards, and wolves were created; why vipers, scorpions, bugs, lice, and fleas; why the vulture, the eagle, the crow, the hawk; why whales, dolphins, seals, and small snails were created. Which of us ever eats the flesh of a lion, a viper, a vulture, a stork, a kite, or the worms that crawl upon our shores? As then these have their proper uses, so may we say that other beasts, fishes, birds, were created not for eating, but for medicine. In short, to how many uses the flesh of vipers, from which we make our antidotes against poison, may be applied, physicians know well. Ivory dust is an ingredient in many remedies. Hyena's gall restores brightness to the eyes, and its dung and that of dogs cures gangrenous wounds. And (it may seem strange to the reader) Galen asserts in his treatise on Simples, that human dung is of service in a multitude of cases. Naturalists say that snake-skin, boiled in oil, gives wonderful relief in ear-ache. What to the uninitiated seems so useless as a bug? Yet, suppose a leech to have fastened on the throat, as soon as the odour of a bug is inhaled the leech is vomited out, and difficulty in urinating is relieved by the same application. As for the fat of pigs, geese, fowls, and pheasants, how useful they are is told in all medical works, and if you read these books you will see there that the vulture has as many curative properties as it has limbs. Peacock's dung allays the inflammation of gout. Cranes, storks, eagle's gall, hawk's blood, the ostrich, frogs, chameleons, swallow's dung and flesh-in what diseases these are suitable remedies, I could tell if it were my purpose to discuss bodily ailments and their cure. If you think proper you may read Aristotle and⁷³ Theophrastus in prose, or⁷⁴ Marcellus of Side, and our⁷⁵ Flavius, who discourse on these subjects in hexameter verse; the⁷⁶ second Pliny also, and⁷⁷ Dioscorides, and others, both naturalists and physicians, who assign to every herb, every stone, every animal whether reptile, bird, or fish, its own use in the art of which they treat. So then when you ask me why the pig was created, I immediately reply, as if two boys were disputing, by asking you why were vipers and scorpions? You must not judge that anything from the hand of God is superfluous, because there are many beasts and birds which your palate rejects. But this may perhaps look more like contentiousness and pugnacity than truth. Let me tell you therefore that pigs and wild-boars, and stags, and the rest of living creatures were created, that soldiers, athletes, sailors, rhetoricians, miners, and other slaves of hard toil, who need physical strength, might have food: and also those who carry arms and provisions, who wear themselves out with the work of hand or foot, who ply the oar, who need good lungs to shout and speak, who level mountains and sleep out rain or fair. But our religion does not train boxers, athletes, sailors, soldiers, or ditchers, but followers of wisdom, who devote themselves to the worship of God, and know why they were created and are in the world from which they are impatient to depart. Hence also the Apostle says:⁷⁸ "When I am weak, then am I strong." And.⁷⁹ "Though our outward man is decaying, yet our inward man is renewed day by day." And⁸⁰ "I have the desire to depart and be with Christ." And,⁸¹ "Make not provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof." Are all commanded⁸² not to have two coats, nor food in their scrip, money in their purse, a staff in the hand, shoes on the feet? or to sell all they possess and give to the poor, and follow Jesus? Of course not: but the command is for those who wish to be perfect. On the contrary John the Baptist lays down one rule for the soldiers, another for the publicans. But the Lord says in the Gospel to him who had boasted of having kept the whole law:⁸³ "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and come, follow me." That He might not seem to lay a heavy burden on unwilling shoulders, He sent His hearer away with full power to please himself, saying "If thou wilt be perfect." And so I too say to you: If you wish to be perfect, it is good not to drink wine, and eat flesh. If you wish to be perfect, it is better to enrich the mind than to stuff the body. But if you are an infant and fond of the cooks and their preparations, no one will snatch the dainties out of your mouth. Eat and drink, and, if you like, with Israel rise up and play, and sing⁸⁴ "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die." Let him eat and drink, who looks for death when he has feasted, and who says with Epicurus, "There is nothing after death, and death itself is nothing." We believe Paul when he says in tones of thunder:⁸⁵ "Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats. But God will destroy both them and it."

7. I have quoted these few passages of Scripture to show that we are at one with the philosophers. But who does not know that no universal law of nature regulates the food of all nations, and that each eats those things of which it has abundance? For instance, the Arabians and Saracens, and all the wild tribes of the desert live on camel's milk and flesh: for the camel, to suit the climate and barren soil of those regions, is easily bred and reared. They think it wicked to eat the flesh of swine. Why? Because pigs which fatten on acorns, chestnuts, roots of ferns, and barley, are seldom or never found among them: and if they were found, they would not afford the nourishment of which we spoke just now. The exact opposite is the case with the northern peoples. If you were to force them to eat the flesh of asses and camels, they would think it the same as though they were compelled to devour a wolf or a crow. In Pontus and Phrygia a paterfamilias pays a good price for fat white worms with blackish heads, which breed in decayed wood. And as with us the woodcock and fig-pecker, the mullet and scar, are reputed delicacies, so with them it is a luxury to eat the⁸⁶ xylophagus. Again, because throughout the glowing wastes of the desert clouds of locusts are found, it is customary with the peoples of the East and of Libya to feed on locusts. John the Baptist proves the truth of this. Compel a Phrygian or a native of Pontus to eat a locust, and he will think it scandalous. Force a Syrian, an African, or Arabian to swallow worms, he will have the same contempt for them as for flies, millepedes, and lizards, although the Syrians are accustomed to eat land-crocodiles, and the Africans even green lizards. In Egypt and Palestine, owing to the scarcity of cattle no one eats beef, or makes the flesh of bulls or oxen, or calves, a portion of their food. Moreover, in my province⁸⁷ it is considered a crime to eat veal. Accordingly the Emperor Valens recently promulgated a law throughout the East, prohibiting the killing and eating of calves. He had in view the interests of agriculture, and wished to check the bad practice of the commoner sort of the people who imitated the Jews in devouring the flesh of calves, instead of fowls and sucking pigs. The Nomad tribes, and the⁸⁸ Troglodytes, and Scythians, and the barbarous⁸⁹ Huns with whom we have recently become acquainted, eat flesh half raw. Moreover the Ichthyophagi, a wandering race on the shores of the Red Sea, broil fish on the stones made hot by the sun, and subsist on this poor food. The⁹⁰ Sarmatians, the⁹¹ Chuadi, the⁹² Vandals, and countless other races, delight in the flesh of horses and wolves. Why should I speak of other nations when I myself, a youth on a visit to Gaul, heard that the Atticoti, a British tribe, eat human flesh, and that although they find herds of swine, and droves of large or small cattle in the woods, it is their custom to cut off the buttocks of the shepherds and the breasts of their women, and to regard them as the greatest delicacies? The Scots have no wives of their own; as though they read Plato's Republic and took Cato for their leader, no man among them has his own wife, but like beasts they indulge their lust to their hearts' content. The Persians, Medes, Indians, and Ethiopians, peoples on a par with Rome itself, have intercourse with mothers and grandmothers, with daughters and granddaughters. The⁹³ Massagetae and⁹⁴ Derbices think those persons most unhappy who die of sickness-and when parents, kindred, or friends reach old age, they are murdered and devoured. It is thought better that they should be eaten by the people themselves than by the worms. The⁹⁵ Tibareni crucify those whom they have loved before when they have grown old. The⁹⁶ Hyrcani throw them out half alive to the birds and dogs: the Caspians leave them dead for the same beasts. The Scythians bury alive with the remains of the dead those who were beloved of the deceased. The Bactrians throw their old men to dogs which they rear for the very purpose, and when Stasanor, Alexander's general, wished to correct the practice, he almost lost his province. Force an Egyptian to drink sheep's milk: drive, if you can, a Pelusiote to eat an onion. Almost every city in Egypt venerates its own beasts and monsters, and whatever be the object of worship, that they think inviolable and sacred. Hence it is that their towns also are named after animals Leonto, Cyno, Lyco, Busyris, Thmuis, which is, being interpreted, a he-goat. And to make us understand what sort of gods Egypt always welcomed, one of their cities was recently called⁹⁷ Antinous after Hadrian's favourite. You see clearly then that not only in eating, but also in burial, in wedlock, and in every department of life, each race follows its own practice and peculiar usages, and takes that for the law of nature which is most familiar to it. But suppose all nations alike ate flesh. and let that be everywhere lawful which the place produces. How does it concern us whose conversation is in heaven? who, as well as Pythagoras and Empedocles and all lovers of wisdom, are not bound to the circumstances of our birth, but of our new birth: who by abstinence subjugate our refractory flesh, eager to follow the allurements of lust? The eating of flesh, and drinking of wine, and fulness of stomach, is the seed-plot of lust. And so the comic poet says,⁹⁸ "Venus shivers unless Ceres and Bacchus be with her."

8. Through the five senses, as through open windows, vice has access to the soul. The metropolis and citadel of the mind cannot be taken unless the enemy have previously entered by its doors. The soul is distressed by the disorder they produce, and is led captive by sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch. If any one delights in the sports of the circus, or the struggles of athletes, the versatility of actors, the figure of women, in splendid jewels, dress, silver and gold, and other things of the kind, the liberty of the soul is lost through the windows of the eyes, and the prophet's words are fulfilled:⁹⁹ "Death is come up into our windows." Again, our sense of hearing is flattered by the tones of various instruments and the modulations of the voice; and whatever enters the ear by the songs of poets and comedians, by the pleasantries and verses of pantomimic actors, weakens the manly fibre of the mind. Then, again, no one but a profligate denies that the profligate and licentious find a delight in sweet odours, different sorts of incense, fragrant balsam,¹⁰⁰ kuphi,¹⁰¹ oenanthe, and musk, which is nothing but the skin of a foreign rat. And who does not know that gluttony is the mother of avarice, and, as it were, fetters the heart and keeps it pressed down upon the earth? For the sake of a temporary gratification of the appetite, land and sea are ransacked, and we toil and sweat our lives through, that we may send down our throats honey-wine and costly food. The desire to handle other men's persons, and the burning lust for women, is a passion bordering on insanity. To gratify this sense we languish, grow angry, throw ourselves about with joy, indulge envy, engage in rivalry, are filled with anxiety, and when we have terminated the pleasure with more or less repentance, we once more take fire, and want to do that which we again regret doing. Where, then, that which we may call the thin edge of disturbance, has entered the citadel of the mind through these doors, what will become of its liberty, its endurance, its thought of God, particularly since the sense of touch can picture to itself even bygone pleasures, and through the recollection of vice forces the soul to take part in them, and after a manner to practice what it does not actually commit?

9. At the call of reasoning such as this, many philosophers have forsaken the crowded cities, and their pleasure gardens in the suburbs with well-watered grounds, shady trees, twittering birds, crystal fountains, murmuring brooks, and many charms for eye and ear, lest through luxury and abundance of riches, the firmness of the mind should be enfeebled, and its purity debauched. For there is no good in frequently seeing objects which may one day lead to your captivity, or in making trial of things which you would find it hard to do without. Even the Pythagoreans shunned company of this kind and were wont to dwell in solitary places in the desert. The Platonists also and Stoics lived in the groves and porticos of, temples, that, admonished by the sanctity of their restricted abode, they might think of nothing but virtue. Plato, moreover, himself, when¹⁰² Diogenes trampled on his couches with muddy feet (he being a rich man), chose a house called¹⁰³ Academia at some distance from the city, in a spot not only lonely but unhealthy, so that he might have leisure for philosophy. His object was that by constant anxiety about sickness the assaults of lust might be defeated, and that his disciples might experience no pleasure but that afforded by the things they learned. We have read of some who took out their own eyes lest through sight they might lose the contemplation of philosophy. Hence it was that¹⁰⁴ Crates the famous Theban, after throwing into the sea a considerable weight of gold, exclaimed, "Go to the bottom, ye evil lusts: I will drown you that you may not drown me." But if anyone thinks to enjoy keenly meat and drink in excess, and at the same time to devote himself to philosophy, that is to say, to live in luxury and yet not to be hampered by the vices attendant on luxury, he deceives himself. For if it be the case that even when far distant from them we are frequently caught in the snares of nature, and are compelled to desire those things of which we have a scant supply: what folly it is to think we are free when we are surrounded by the nets of pleasure! We think of what we see, hear, smell, taste, handle, and are led to desire the thing which affords us pleasure. That the mind sees and hears, and that we can neither hear nor see anything unless our senses are fixed upon the objects of sight and hearing, is an old saw. It is difficult, or rather impossible, when we are swimming in luxury and pleasure not to think of what we are doing: and it is an idle pretence which some men put forward¹⁰⁵ that they can take their fill of pleasure with their faith and purity and mental uprightness unimpaired. It is a violation of nature to revel in pleasure, and the Apostle gives a caution against this very thing when he says,¹⁰⁶ "She that giveth herself to pleasure is dead while she liveth."

10. The bodily senses are like horses madly racing, but the soul like a charioteer holds the reins. And as horses without a driver go at break-neck speed, so the body if it be not governed by the reasonable soul rushes to its own destruction. The philosophers make use of another illustration of the relations between soul and body;¹⁰⁷ they say the body is a boy, the soul his tutor. Hence the¹⁰⁸ historian tells us "that our soul directs, our body serves. The one we have in common with the gods, the other with the beasts." So then unless the vices of youth and boyhood are regulated by the wisdom of the tutor, every effort and every impulse sets strongly in the direction of wantonness. We might lose four of the senses and yet live,-that is we could do without sight, bearing, smell, and the pleasures of touch. But a human being cannot subsist without tasting food. It follows that reason must be present, that we may take food of such a kind and in such quantities as will not burden the body, or hinder the free movement of the soul: for it is the way with us that we eat, and walk, and sleep, and digest our food, and afterwards in the fulness of blood have to bear the spur of lust.¹⁰⁹ "Wine is a mocker, strong drink a brawler." Whosoever has much to do with these is not wise. And we should not take such food as is difficult of digestion, or such as when eaten will give us reason to complain that we got it and lost it with much effort. The preparation of vegetables, fruit, and pulse is easy, and does not require the skill of expensive cooks: our bodies are nourished by them with little trouble on our part; and, if taken in moderation, such food is easier to digest, and at less cost, because it does not stimulate the appetite, and therefore is not devoured with avidity. No one has his stomach inflated or overloaded if he eats only one or two dishes, and those inexpensive ones: such a condition comes of pampering the taste with a variety of meats. The smells of the kitchen may induce us to eat, but when hunger is satisfied, they make us their slaves. Hence gorging gives rise to disease: and many persons find relief for the discomfort of gluttony in emetics,-what they disgraced themselves by putting in, they with still greater disgrace put out.

11.¹¹⁰ Hippocrates in his Aphorisms teaches that stout persons of a coarse habit of body, when once they have attained their full growth, unless the plethora be quickly relieved by blood-letting, develop tendencies to paralysis and the worst forms of disease: they must therefore be bled, that there may be room for fresh growth. For it is not the nature of our bodies to continue in one stay, but go on either to increase or decrease, and no animal can live which is incapable of growth.

Whence¹¹¹ Galen, a very learned man and the commentator on Hippocrates, says in his exhortation to the practice of medicine that athletes whose whole life and art consists in stuffing cannot live long, nor be healthy: and that their souls enveloped with superfluous blood and fat, and as it were covered with mud, have no refined or heavenly thoughts, but are always intent upon gluttonous and voracious feasting. Diogenes maintains that tyrants do not bring about revolutions in cities, and foment wars civil or foreign for the sake of a simple diet of vegetables and fruits, but for costly meats and the delicacies of the table. And, strange to say, Epicurus, the defender of pleasure, in all his books speaks of nothing but vegetables and fruits; and he says that we ought to live on cheap food because the preparation of sumptuous banquets of flesh involves great care and suffering, and greater pains attend the search for such delicacies than pleasures the consumption of them. Our bodies need only something to eat and drink. Where there is bread and water, and the like, nature is satisfied. Whatever more there may be does not go to meet the wants of life, but are ministers to vicious pleasure. Eating and drinking does not quench the longing for luxuries, but appeases hunger and thirst. Persons who feed on flesh want also gratifications not found in flesh. But they who adopt a simple diet do not look for flesh. Further, we cannot devote ourselves to wisdom if our thoughts are running on a well-laden table, the supply of which requires an excess of work and anxiety. The wants of nature are soon satisfied: cold and hunger can be banished with simple food and clothing. Hence the Apostle says: "Having food and clothing let us be therewith content." Delicacies and the various dishes of the feast are the nurses of avarice. The soul greatly exults when you are content with little: you have the world beneath your feet, and can exchange all its power, its feasts, and its lusts, the objects for which men rake money together, for common food, and make up for them all with a sack-cloth shirt. Take away the luxurious feasting and the gratification of lust, and no one will want riches to be used either in the belly, or beneath it. The invalid only regains his health by diminishing and carefully selecting his food, i.e., in medical phrase, by adopting a "slender diet." The same food that recovers health, can preserve it, for no one can imagine vegetables to be the cause of disease. And if vegetables do not give the strength of Milo of Crotona—a strength supplied and nourished by meat—what need has a wise man and a Christian philosopher of such strength as is required by athletes and soldiers, and which, if he had it, would only stimulate to vice? Let those persons deem meat accordant with health who wish to gratify their lust, and who, sunk in filthy pleasure, are always at heat. What a Christian wants is health, but not superfluous strength. And it ought not to disturb us if we find but few supporters; for the pure and temperate are as rare as good and faithful friends, and virtue is always scarce. Study the temperance of¹¹² Fabricius, or the poverty of¹¹³ Curius, and in a great city you will find few worthy of your imitation. You need not fear that if you do not eat flesh, fowlers and hunters will have learnt their craft in vain.

12. We have read that some who suffered with disease of the joints and with gouty humours recovered their health by proscribing delicacies, and coming down to a simple board and mean food. For they were then free from the worry of managing a house and from unlimited feasting. Horace¹¹⁴ makes fun of the longing for food which when eaten leaves nothing but regret.

"Scorn pleasure; she but hurts when bought with pain." And when, in the delightful retirement of the country, by way of satirizing voluptuous men, he described himself as plump and fat, his sportive verse ran thus:

"Pay me a visit if you want to laugh, You'll find me fat and sleek with well-dress'd hide, Like any pig from Epicurus' sty." But even if our food be the commonest, we must avoid repletion. For nothing is so destructive to the mind as a full belly, fermenting like a wine vat and giving forth its gases on all sides. What sort of fasting is it, or what refreshment is there after fasting, when we are blown out with yesterday's dinner, and our¹¹⁵ stomach is made a factory for the closet? We wish to get credit for protracted abstinence, and all the while we devour so much that a day and a night can scarcely digest it. The proper name to give it is not fasting, but rather debauch and rank indigestion.

13.¹¹⁶ Dicaerchus in his book of Antiquities, describing Greece, relates that under Saturn that is in the Golden Age, when the ground brought forth all things abundantly, no one ate flesh, but every one lived on field produce and fruits which the earth bore of itself. Xenophon in eight books narrates the life of Cyrus, King of the Persians, and asserts that they supported life on barley, cress, salt, and black bread. Both the aforesaid Xenophon, Theophrastus, and almost all the Greek writers testify to the frugal diet of the Spartans.¹¹⁷ Chaeremon the Stoic, a man of great eloquence, has a treatise on the life of the ancient priests of Egypt, who, he says, laid aside all worldly business and cares, and were ever in the temple, studying nature and the regulating causes of the heavenly bodies; they never had intercourse with women; they never from the time they began to devote themselves to the divine service set eyes on their kindred and relations, nor even saw their children; they always abstained from flesh and wine, on account of the light-headedness and dizziness which a small quantity of food caused, and especially to avoid the stimulation of the lustful appetite engendered by this meat and drink. They seldom ate bread, that they might not load the stomach. And whenever they ate it, they mixed pounded hyssop with all that they took, so that the action of its warmth might diminish the weight of the heavier food. They used no oil except with vegetables, and then only in small quantities, to mitigate the unpalatable taste. What need, he says, to speak of birds, when they avoided even eggs and milk as flesh. The one, they said, was liquid flesh, the other was blood with the colour changed? Their bed was made of palm-leaves, called by them baiae a sloping footstool laid upon the ground served for a pillow, and they could go without food for two or three days. The humours of the body which arise from sedentary habits were dried up by reducing their diet to an extreme point.`

14.¹¹⁸ Josephus in the second book of the history of the Jewish captivity, and in the eighteenth book of the Antiquities, and the two treatises against Apion, describes three sects of the Jews, the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes. On the last of these he bestows wondrous praise because they practised perpetual abstinence from wives, wine, and flesh, and made a second nature of their daily fast.¹¹⁹ Philo, too, a man of great learning, published a treatise of his own on their mode of life.¹²⁰ Neanthes of Cizycus, and¹²¹ Asclepiades of Cyprus, at the time when Pygmalion ruled over the East, relate that the eating of flesh was unknown. Eubulus, also, who wrote the history of¹²² Mithras in many volumes, relates that among the Persians there are three kinds of Magi, the first of whom, those of greatest learning and eloquence, take no food except meal and vegetables. At Eleusis it is customary to abstain from fowls and fish and certain fruits.¹²³ Bardesanes, a Babylonian, divides the Gymnosophists of India into two classes, the one called Brahmans, the other Samaneans, who are so rigidly self-restrained that they support themselves either with the fruit of trees which grow on the banks of the Ganges, or with common food of rice or flour, and when the king visits them, he is wont to adore them, and thinks the peace of his country depends upon their prayers. Euripides relates that the prophets of Jupiter in Crete abstained not only from flesh, but also from cooked food.¹²⁴ Xenocrates the philosopher writes that at Athens out of all the laws of¹²⁵ Triptolemus only three precepts remain in the temple of Ceres: respect to parents, reverence for the gods, and abstinence from flesh.¹²⁶ Orpheus in his song utterly denounces the eating of flesh. I might speak of the frugality of Pythagoras, Socrates, and¹²⁷ Antisthenes to our confusion: but it would be tedious, and would require a work to itself. At all events this is the Antisthenes who, after teaching rhetoric with renown, on hearing Socrates, is related to have said to his disciples, "Go, and seek a master, for I have now found one." He immediately, sold what he had, divided the proceeds among the people, and kept nothing for himself but a small cloak. Of his poverty and toil Xenophon in the Symposium is a witness, and so are his countless treatises, some philosophical, some rhetorical. His most famous follower was the great Diogenes, who was mightier than King Alexander in that he conquered human nature. For Antisthenes would not take a single pupil, and when he could not get rid of the persistent Diogenes he threatened him with a stick if he did not depart. The latter is said to have laid down his head and said, "No stick will be hard enough to prevent me from following you."¹²⁸ Satyrus, the biographer of illustrious men, relates that Diogenes to guard himself against the cold, folded his cloak double: his scrip was his pantry: and when aged he carried a stick to support his feeble frame, and was commonly called "Old Hand-to-mouth," because to that very hour he begged and received food from any one. His home was the gateways and city arcades. And when he wriggled into his tub, he would joke about his movable house that adapted itself to the seasons. For when the weather was cold he used to turn the mouth of the tub towards the south: in summer towards the north; and whatever the direction of the sun might be, that way the palace of Diogenes was turned. He had a wooden dish for drinking; but on one occasion seeing a boy drinking with the hollow of his hand he is related to have dashed the cup to the ground, saying that he did not know nature provided a cup. His virtue and self-restraint were proved even by his death. It is said that, now an old man, he was on his way to the Olympic games, which used to be attended by a great concourse of people from all parts of Greece, when he was overtaken by fever and lay down upon the bank by the road-side. And when his friends wished to place him on a beast or in a conveyance, he did not assent, but crossing to the shade of a tree said, "Go your way, I pray you, and see the games: this night will prove me either conquered or conqueror. If I conquer the fever, I shall go to the games: if the fever conquers me, I shall enter the unseen world." There through the night he lay gasping for breath and did not, as we are told, so much die as banish the fever by death. I have cited the example of only one philosopher, so that our fine, erect, muscular athletes, who hardly make a shadow of a footmark in their swift passage, whose words are in their fists and their reasoning in their heels, who either know nothing of apostolic poverty and the hardness of the cross. or despise it, may at least imitate Gentile moderation.

15. So far I have dealt with the arguments and examples of philosophers. Now I will pass on to the beginning of the human race, that is, to the sphere which belongs to us. I will first point out that Adam received a command in paradise to abstain from one tree though he might eat the other fruit. The blessedness of paradise could not be consecrated without abstinence from food. So long as he fasted, he remained in paradise; he ate, and was east out; he was no sooner cast out than he married a wife. While he fasted in paradise he continued a virgin: when he filled himself with food in the earth, he bound himself with the tie of marriage. And yet though cast out he did not immediately receive permission to eat flesh; but only the fruits of trees and the produce of the crops, and herbs and vegetables were given him for food, that even when an exile from paradise he might feed not upon flesh which was not to be found in paradise, but upon grain and fruit like that of paradise. But afterwards when¹²⁹ God saw that the heart of man from his youth was set on wickedness continually, and that His Spirit could not remain in them because they were flesh, He by the deluge passed sentence on the works of the flesh, and, taking note of the extreme greediness of men,¹³⁰ gave them liberty to eat flesh: so that while understanding that all things were lawful for them, they might not greatly desire that which was allowed, lest they should turn a commandment into a cause of transgression. And yet even then, fasting was in part commanded. For, seeing that some animals are called clean, some unclean, and the unclean animals were taken into Noah's ark by pairs, the clean in uneven numbers (and of course the eating of the unclean was forbidden, otherwise the term unclean would be unmeaning), fasting was in part consecrated: restraint in the use of all was taught by the prohibition of some. Why did Esau lose his birthright? Was it not on account of food? and he could not atone with tears for the impatience of his appetite. The people of Israel cast out from Egypt and on their way to the land of promise, the land flowing with milk and honey, longed for the flesh of Egypt, and the melons and garlic, saying:¹³¹ "Would that we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots." And again,¹³² "Who shall give us flesh to eat? We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt for nought; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic: but now our soul is dried away: we have nought save this manna to look to."

They despised angels' food, and sighed for the flesh of Egypt. Moses for forty days and forty nights fasted on Mount Sinai, and showed even then that man does not live on bread alone, but on every word of God. He says to the Lord, "the people is full and maketh idols." Moses with empty stomach received the law written with the finger of God. The people that ate and drank and rose up to play fashioned a golden calf, and preferred an Egyptian ox to the majesty of the Lord. The toil of so many days perished through the fulness of a single hour. Moses boldly broke the tables: for he knew that drunkards cannot hear the word of God.¹³³ "The beloved grew thick, waxed fat, and became sleek: he kicked and forsook the Lord which made him, and departed from the God of his salvation." Hence also it is enjoined in the same Book of Deuteronomy:¹³⁴ "Beware, lest when thou hast eaten and drunk, and hast built goodly houses, and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and gold is multiplied, then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God." In short the people ate and their heart grew thick, lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart: so the people well fed and fat-fleshed could not bear the countenance of Moses who fasted, for, to correctly render the Hebrew, it was¹³⁵ furnished with horns through his converse with God. And it was not, as some think, to show that there is no difference between virginity and marriage, but to assert his sympathy with severe fasting, that our Lord and Saviour when he was transfigured on the Mount revealed Moses and Elias with Himself in glory. Although Moses and Elias were properly types of the Law and the Prophets, as is clearly witnessed by the Gospel:¹³⁶ "They spake of his departure which he was about to accomplish at Jerusalem." For the passion of our Lord is declared not by virginity or marriage, but by the Law and the Prophets. If, however, any persons contentiously maintain that by Moses is signified marriage, by Elias virginity, let me tell them briefly that Moses died and was buried, but Elias was carried off in a chariot of fire and entered on immortality before he approached death. But the second writing of the tables could not be effected without fasting. What was lost by drunkenness was regained by abstinence, a proof that by fasting we can return to paradise, whence, though fulness, we have been expelled. In¹³⁷ Exodus we read that the battle was fought against Amalek while Moses prayed, and the whole people fasted until the evening.¹³⁸ Joshua, the son of Nun, bade sun and moon stand still, and the victorious army prolonged its fast for more than a day.¹³⁹ Saul, as it is written in the first book of Kings, pronounced a curse on him who ate bread before the evening, and until he had avenged himself upon his enemies. So none of his people tasted any food. And all they of the land took food. And so binding was a solemn fast once it was proclaimed to the Lord, that Jonathan, to whom the victory was due, was taken by lot, and¹⁴⁰ could not escape the charge of sinning in ignorance, and his father's hand was raised against him, and the prayers of the people scarce availed to save him.¹⁴¹ Elijah after the preparation of a forty days fast saw God on Mount Horeb, and heard from Him the words, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" There is much more familiarity in this than in the "Where art thou, Adam?" of Genesis. The latter was intended to excite the fears of one who had fed and was lost; the former was affectionately addressed to a fasting servant.¹⁴² When the people were assembled in Mizpeh, Samuel proclaimed a fast, and so strengthened them, and thus made them prevail against the enemy.¹⁴³ The attack of the Assyrians was repulsed, and the might of Sennacherib utterly crushed, by the tears and sackcloth of King Hezekiah, and by his humbling himself with fasting. So also the city of Nineveh by fasting excited compassion and turned aside the threatening wrath of the Lord. And¹⁴⁴ Sodom and Gomorrah might have appeased it, had they been willing to repent, and through the aid of fasting gain for themselves tears of repentance.¹⁴⁵ Ahab, the most impious of kings, by fasting and wearing sackcloth, succeeded in escaping the sentence of God, and in deferring the overthrow of his house to the days of his posterity.¹⁴⁶ Hannah, the wife of Elkanah, by fasting won the gift of a son.¹⁴⁷ At Babylon the magicians came into peril, every interpreter of dreams, soothsayer, and diviner was slain. Daniel and the three youths gained a good report by fasting, and although they were fed on pulse, they were fairer and wiser than they who ate the flesh from the king's table. Then it is written that Daniel fasted for three weeks; he ate no pleasant bread; flesh and wine entered not his mouth; he was not anointed with oil; and the angel came to him saying,¹⁴⁸ "Daniel, thou art worthy of compassion." He who in the eyes of God was worthy of compassion, afterwards was an object of terror to the lions in their den. How fair a thing is that which propitiates God, tames lions, terrifies demons! Habakkuk (although we do not find this in the Hebrew Scriptures¹⁴⁹) was sent to him with the reaper's meal, for by a week's abstinence he had merited so distinguished a server. David, when his son was in danger after his adultery, made confession in ashes and with fasting.¹⁵⁰ He tells us that he ate ashes like bread, and mingled his drink with weeping.¹⁵¹ And that his knees became weak through fasting. Yet he had certainly heard from Nathan the words,¹⁵² "The Lord also hath put away thy sin." Samson and Samuel drank neither wine nor strong drink, for they were children of promise, and conceived in abstinence and fasting.¹⁵³ Aaron and the other priests when about to enter the temple, refrained from all intoxicating drink for fear they should die. Whence we learn that they die who minister in the Church without sobriety. And hence it is a reproach against Israel:¹⁵⁴ "Ye gave my Nazarites wine to drink." Jonadab, the son of Rechab, commanded his sons to drink no wine for ever. And when Jeremiah offered them wine to drink, and they of their own accord refused it, the Lord spake by the prophet, saying:¹⁵⁵ "Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever." On the¹⁵⁶ threshold of the Gospel appears Anna, the daughter of Phanuel, the wife of one husband, and a woman who was always fasting.

Long-continued chastity and persistent fasting welcomed a Virgin Lord. His forerunner and herald, John, fed on locusts and wild honey, not on flesh; and the hermits of the desert and the monks in their cells, at first used the same sustenance. But the Lord Himself consecrated His baptism by a forty days' fast, and He taught us that the more violent devils¹⁵⁷ cannot be overcome, except by prayer and fasting.¹⁵⁸ Cornelius the centurion was found worthy through alms-giving and frequent fasts to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit before baptism.¹⁵⁹ The Apostle Paul, after speaking of hunger and thirst, and his other labours, perils from robbers, shipwrecks, loneliness, enumerates frequent fasts. And he¹⁶⁰ advises his disciple Timothy, who had a weak stomach, and was subject to many infirmities, to drink wine in moderation: "Drink no longer water," he says. The fact that he bids him no longer drink water shows that he had previously drunk water. The apostle would not have allowed this had not frequent infirmities and bodily pain demanded the concession.

16. The Apostle does indeed¹⁶¹ blame those who forbade marriage, and commanded to abstain from food, which God created for use with thanksgiving. But he has in view Marcion, and Tatian, and other heretics, who inculcate perpetual abstinence, to destroy, and express their hatred and contempt for, the works of the Creator. But we praise every creature of God, and yet prefer leanness to corpulence, abstinence to luxury, fasting to fulness.¹⁶² "He that laboreth laboreth for himself, and he is eager to his own destruction." And,¹⁶³ "From the days of John the Baptist (who fasted and was a virgin) until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and men of violence take it by force." For we are afraid lest at the coming of the eternal judge we be caught, as in the days of the flood, and at the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrha, eating and drinking, and marrying, and giving in marriage. For both the flood and the fire from heaven found fulness as well as marriage ready for destruction. Nor need we wonder if the Apostle commands that everything sold in the market be bought and eaten, since with idolaters, and with those who still ate in the temples of the idols meats offered to idols as such, it passed for the highest abstinence to abstain only from food eaten by the Gentiles. And if he says to the Romans:¹⁶⁴ "Let not him that eateth set at nought him that eateth not: and let not him that eateth not judge him that eateth," he does not make fasting and fulness of equal merit, but he is speaking against those believers in Christ who were still judaizing: and he warns Gentile believers, not to offend those by their food who were still too weak in faith. In brief this is clear enough in the sequel:¹⁶⁵ "I know and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus, that nothing is unclean of itself: save that to him who accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean. For if because of meat thy brother is grieved, thou walkest no longer in love. Destroy not with thy meat him for whom Christ died. Let not then your good be evil spoken of: for the Kingdom of God is not eating and drinking." And that no one may suppose he is referring to fasting and not to Jewish superstition, he immediately explains,¹⁶⁶ "One man hath faith to eat all things: but he that is weak eateth herbs." And again,¹⁶⁷ "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let each man be fully assured in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord: and he that eateth, eateth unto the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, unto the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks." For they who were still weak in faith and thought some meats clean, some unclean: and supposed there was a difference between one day and another, for example, that the Sabbath, and the New Moons, and the Feast of Tabernacles were holier than other days, were commanded to eat herbs which are indifferently partaken of by all. But such as were of stronger faith believed all meats and all days to be alike.

17. My opponent has dared to maintain that our Lord was called by the Pharisees a wine-bibber and a glutton: and from the fact of His going to marriage feasts and from His not despising the banquets of sinners, I am to infer His wishes respecting ourselves. That Lord, so you suppose, is a glutton who fasted forty days to hallow Christian fasting;¹⁶⁸ who calls them blessed that hunger and thirst;¹⁶⁹ who says that He has food, not that which the disciples surmised, but such as would not perish for ever;¹⁷⁰ who forbids us to think of the morrow; who, though He is said to have hungered and thirsted, and to have gone frequently to various meals, except in celebrating the mystery whereby He represented His passion, or¹⁷¹ in proving the reality of His body is nowhere described as ministering to His appetite;¹⁷² who tells of purple-clad Dives in hell for his feasting, and says that poor Lazarus for his abstinence was in Abraham's bosom; who, when we fast,¹⁷³ bids us anoint our head and wash our face, that we fast not to gain glory from men, but praise from the Lord; who did indeed¹⁷⁴ after His resurrection eat part of a broiled fish and of a honey-comb, not to allay hunger and to gratify His palate, but to show the reality of a His own body. For whenever He raised anyone from the dead He¹⁷⁵ ordered that food should be given him to eat, lest the resurrection should be thought a delusion. And this is why Lazarus after his resurrection is¹⁷⁶ described as being at the feast with our Lord. We do not deny that fish and other kinds of flesh, if we choose, may be taken as food; but as we prefer virginity to marriage, so do we esteem fasting and spirituality above meats and full-bloodedness. And if Peter¹⁷⁷ before dinner went to the supper chamber at the sixth hour, a chance fit of hunger does not prejudice fasting. For, if this were so, because our Lord¹⁷⁸ at the sixth hour sat weary on the well of Samaria and wished to drink, all must of necessity, whether they so desire or not, drink at that time. Possibly it was the Sabbath, or the Lord's day, and he hungered at the sixth hour after two or three days' fasting; for I could never believe that the Apostle, if he had eaten a dinner only one day previous and had been blown out with a great meal, would have been hungry by noon next day. But if he did dine the day previous, and was hungry next day before luncheon, I do not think that a man who was so soon hungry ate until he was satisfied. Again, God by the mouth of Isaiah says what fast He did not choose:¹⁷⁹ "In the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and afflict the lowly: ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness. it is not such a fast that I have chosen, saith the Lord." What kind He has chosen He thus teaches: "Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the houseless poor into thy house. When thou seest the naked cover him, and hide not thyself from thine own flesh." He did not therefore reject fasting, but showed what He would have it to be: for that bodily hunger is not pleasing to God which is made null and void by strife, and plunder, and lust. If God does not desire fasting, how is it that in¹⁸⁰ Leviticus He commands the whole people in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, to fast until the evening, and threatens that he who does not afflict his soul shall die and be cut off from his people? How is it that the¹⁸¹ graves of lust where the people fell in their devotion to flesh remain even to this day in the wilderness? Do we not read that the stupid people gorged themselves with quails until the wrath of God came upon them? Why was the man of God at whose prophecy the hand of King Jeroboam withered, and who ate contrary to the command of God,¹⁸² immediately smitten? Strange that the lion which left the ass safe and sound should not spare the prophet just risen from his meal! He who, while he was fasting, had wrought miracles, no sooner ate a meal than he paid the penalty for the gratification. Joel also cries aloud:¹⁸³ "Sanctify a fast, proclaim a time of healing," that it might appear that a fast is sanctified by other works, and that a holy fast avails for the cure of sin. Moreover, just as true virginity is not prejudiced by the counterfeit professions of the virgins of the devil, so neither is true fasting by the periodic fast and perpetual abstinence from certain kinds of food on the part of the worshippers of Isis and Cybele, particularly when a fast from bread is made up for by feasting on flesh. And just as the signs of Moses were imitated by the signs of the Egyptians which were in reality no signs at all, for the rod of Moses swallowed up the rods of the magicians: so when the devil tries to be the rival of God this does not prove that our religion is superstitious, but that we are negligent, since we refuse to do what even men of the world see clearly to be good.

18. His fourth and last contention is that there are two classes, the sheep and the goats, the just and the unjust: that the just stand on the right hand, the other on the left: and that to the just the words are spoken:¹⁸⁴ "Come, ye blessed of my Father, and inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." But that sinners are thus addressed:¹⁸⁵ "Depart from me, ye cursed, into the eternal fire which is prepared for the devil and his angels." That a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, nor an evil tree good fruit. Hence it is that the Saviour says to the Jews:¹⁸⁶ "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father it is your will to do." He quotes the parable of the ten virgins, the wise and the foolish, and shows that the five who had no oil remained outside, but that the other five who had gotten for themselves the light of good works went into the marriage with the bridegroom. He goes back to the flood, and tells us that they who were righteous like Noah were saved, but that the sinners perished all together. We are informed that among the men of Sodom and Gomorrha no difference is made except between the two classes of the good and the bad. The righteous are delivered, the sinners are consumed by the same fire. There is one salvation for those who are released, one destruction for those who stay behind. Lot's wife is a clear warning that we must not deviate a hair's breadth from right. If, however, he says, you object and ask me why the righteous toils in time of peace, or in the midst of persecution, if he is to gain nothing nor have a greater reward, I would assert that he does this, not that he may gain a further reward but that he may not lose what he has already received. In Egypt also the ten plagues fell with equal violence upon all that sinned, and the same darkness hung over master and slave, noble and ignoble, the king and the people. Again at the Red Sea the righteous all passed over, the sinners were all overwhelmed. Six hundred thousand men, besides those who were unfit for war through age or sex, all alike fell in the desert, and two who were alike in righteousness are alike delivered. For forty years all Israel toiled and died alike. As regards food, an homer of manna was the measure for all ages: the clothes of all alike did not wear out: the hair of all alike did not grow, nor the beard increase: the shoes of all lasted the same time. Their feet grew not hard: the food in the mouths of all had the same taste. They went on their way to one resting place with equal toil and equal reward. All Hebrews had the same Passover, the same Feast of Tabernacles, the same Sabbath, the same New Moons. In the seventh, the Sabbatical Year, all prisoners were released without distinction of persons, and in the year of Jubilee all debts were forgiven to all debtors, and he who had sold land returned to the inheritance of his fathers.

19. Then, again, as regards the parable of the sower? the Gospel, we read that the good ground brought forth fruit, some a hundred fold, some sixty fold, and some thirty fold; and, on the other hand, that the bad ground admitted of three degrees of sterility: but Jovinianus makes only two classes, the good soil and the bad.¹⁸⁷ And as in one Gospel our Lord promises the Apostles a hundred fold, in another seven fold, for leaving children and wives, and in the world to come life eternal; and the seven and the hundred mean the same thing: so, too, in the passage before us, the numbers describing the fertility of the soil need not create any difficulty, particularly when the Evangelist Mark gives the inverse order, thirty, sixty, and a hundred. The Lord says,¹⁸⁸ "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me, and I in him." As, then, there are not varying degrees of Christ's presence in us, so neither are there degrees of our abiding in Christ.¹⁸⁹ "Every one that loveth me will keep my word: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." He that is righteous, loves Christ: and if a man thus loves, the Father and the Son come to him, and make their abode with him. Now I suppose that when the guest is such as this the host cannot possibly lack anything. And if our Lord says,¹⁹⁰ "In my Father's house are many mansions," His meaning is not that there are different mansions in the kingdom of heaven, but He indicates the number of Churches in the whole world, for though the Church be seven-fold she is but one "I go," He says, "to prepare a place for you," not places. If this promise is peculiar to the twelve apostles, then Paul is shut out from that place, and the chosen vessel will be thought superfluous and unworthy. John and James, because they asked more than the others, did not obtain it; and yet their dignity is not diminished, because they were equal to the rest of the apostles.¹⁹¹ "Know ye not that your bodies are a temple of the Holy Ghost?" A temple, He says, not temples, in order to show that God dwells in all alike.¹⁹² "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; as thou, Father, in me, and I in thee, are one, so they may be all one in us. And the glory which thou hast given me I have given unto them. I have loved them, as thou hast loved me. And as we are Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one God, so may they be one people in themselves, that is, like dear children, partakers of the divine nature." Call the Church what you will, bride, sister, mother, her assembly is but one and never lacks husband, brother, or son. Her faith is one, and she is not defiled by variety of doctrine, nor divided by heresies. She continues a virgin. Whithersoever the Lamb goeth, she follows Him: she alone knows the Song of Christ.

20. "If you tell me," says he, "that one star differeth from another star in glory, I reply, that one star does differ from another star; that is, spiritual persons differ from carnal. We love all the members alike, and do not prefer the eye to the finger, nor the finger to the ear: but the loss of any one is attended by the sorrow of all the rest. We all alike come into this world, and we all alike depart from it. There is one Adam of the earth, and another from heaven. The earthly Adam is on the left hand, and will perish: the heavenly Adam is on the right hand, and will be saved. He who says to his brother, 'thou fool,' and 'raca,' will be in danger of Gehenna. And the murderer and the adulterer will likewise be sent into Gehenna. In times of persecution some are burnt, some strangled, some beheaded, some flee, or die within the walls of a prison: the struggle varies in kind, but the victors' crown is one. No difference was made between the son who had never left his father, and his brother who was welcomed as a returning penitent. To the labourers of the first hour, the third, the sixth, the ninth, and the eleventh, the same reward of a penny was given, and what may perhaps seem still more strange to you, the first to receive the reward were they who had toiled least in the vineyard."

21. Who is there even of God's elect that would not be disturbed at these and similar passages of Holy Scripture which our crafty opponent, with a perverse ingenuity, twists to the support of his own views? The Apostle John says that many Antichrists had come, and to make no difference between John himself and the lowest penitent is the preaching of a real Antichrist. At the same time, I am amazed at the portentous forms which Jovinianus, as slippery as a snake and like another Proteus, so rapidly assumes. In sexual intercourse and full feeding he is an Epicurean; in the distribution of rewards and punishments he all at once becomes a Stoic. He exchanges Jerusalem for¹⁹³ Cithium, Judaea for Cyprus, Christ for Zeno. If we may not depart a hair's breadth from virtue, and all sins are equal, and a man who in a fit of hunger steals a piece of bread is no less guilty than he who slays a man: you must, in your turn, be held guilty of the greatest crimes. The case is different if you say that you have no sin, not even the least, and if, although all apostles and prophets and all the saints (as I have maintained in dealing with¹⁹⁴ his second proposition) bewail their sinfulness, you alone boast of your righteousness. But a minute ago you were barefooted: now you not only wear shoes, but decorated ones. Just now you wore a rough coat and a dirty shirt, you were grimy, and haggard, and your hand was horny with toil: now you are clad in linen and silks, and strut like an exquisite in the fashions of the Atrebatians and the Laodiceans. Your cheeks are ruddy, your skin sleek, your hair smoothed down in front and behind, your belly protrudes, your shoulders are little mountains, your neck full and so loaded with fat that the half-smothered words can scarce make their escape. Surely in such extremes of dress and mode of life there must be sin on the one side or the other. I will not assert that the sin lies in the food or clothing, but that such fickleness and changing for the worse is almost censurable in itself. And what we censure, is far removed from virtue; and what is far from virtue becomes the property of vice; and what is proved to be vicious is one with sin. Now sin, according to you, is placed on the left hand, and corresponds to the goats. You must, therefore, return to your old habits if you are to be a sheep on the right hand; or, if you perversely repent of your former views and change them for others, whether you like it or not, and although you shave off your beard, you will be reckoned among the goats.

22. But what is the good of calling a¹⁹⁵ one-eyed man Old One-eye, and of showing the inconsistency of an assailant, when we have to refute a whole series of statements? That the sheep and the goats on the right hand and on the left are the two classes of the righteous and the wicked, I do not deny. That a good tree does not bring forth evil fruit, nor an evil one good fruit, no one doubts. The ten virgins also, wise and foolish, we divide into good and bad. We are not ignorant that at the deluge the righteous were delivered, and sinners overwhelmed with the waters. That at Sodom and Gomorrah the just man was rescued, while the sinners were consumed by fire, is clear to everyone. We are also aware that Egypt was stricken with the ten plagues, and that Israel was saved. Even little children in our schools sing how the righteous passed through the Red Sea, and Pharaoh with his host was drowned. That six hundred thousand fell in the desert because they were unbelieving, and that two only entered the land of promise, is taught by Scripture; and so is the rest of your description of the two classes, good and bad, down to the labourers in the vineyard. But what are we to think of your assertion, that because there is a division into good and bad, the good, or the bad it may be, are not distinguished one from another, and that it makes no difference whether one is a ram in the flock or a poor little sheep? whether the sheep have the first or the second fleece? whether the flock is diseased and covered with the scab, or full of life and vigour?¹⁹⁶ especially when by the authoritative utterances of His own prophet Ezekiel God clearly points out the difference between flock and flock of His rational sheep, saying, "Behold I judge between cattle and cattle, and between the rams and the he-goats, and between the fat cattle and the lean. Because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, until they were scattered abroad." And that we might know what the cattle were, He immediately added:¹⁹⁷ "Ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men." Will Paul and that penitent who had lain with his father's wife be on an equality, because the latter repented and was received into the Church: and shall the offender because he is with him on the right hand shine with the same glory as the Apostle? How is it then that tares and wheat grow side by side in the same field until the harvest, that is the end of the world? What is the significance of good and bad fish being contained in the Gospel net? Why, in Noah's ark, the type of the Church, are there different animals with different abodes according to their rank? Why standeth the queen upon the Lord's right hand, in raiment of wrought gold, in a vesture of gold? Why had Joseph, representing Christ, a coat of many colours? Why does the Apostle say to the Romans:¹⁹⁸ "According as God had dealt to each man a measure of faith. For even as we have many members in one body, and all the members have not the same office: so we, who are many, are one body in Christ, and severally members one of another. And having gifts differing according to the grace that was given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of our faith; or ministry, let us give ourselves to our ministry; or he that teacheth, to his teaching; or he that exhorteth, to his exhorting: he that giveth, let him do it with liberality; he that ruleth, with diligence," and so on. And elsewhere:¹⁹⁹ "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." To the Corinthians he says:²⁰⁰ "I have planted, Apollos watered: but God gave the increase. So then, neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth: but God that giveth the increase. Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour. For we are labourers together with God, ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." And again elsewhere:²⁰¹ "According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder I laid a foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let each man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ. But if any man buildeth on the foundation, gold, silver, costly stones, wood, hay, stubble: each man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall reveal it, because it is revealed in fire: and the fire itself shall prove each man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work shall abide which he built thereon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as through fire." If the man whose work is burnt and is to suffer the loss of his labour, while he himself is saved, yet not without proof of fire: it follows that if a man's work remains which he has built upon the foundation, he will be saved without probation by fire, and consequently a difference is established between one degree of salvation and another. Again in another place he says:²⁰² "Let a man so account of us, as of ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Here, moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." Would you be assured that between one steward and another there is a great difference (I am not speaking of bad and good, but of the good themselves who stand on the right hand)? then listen to the sequel:²⁰³ "Know ye not that they which minister about the sacrifices, eat of the sacrifices, and they which wait upon the altar have their portion with the altar? Even so did the Lord ordain that they which proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel. But I have used none of these things: and I wrote not these things that it may be so done in my case: for it were good for me rather to die, than that any man should make my glorying void. For if I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of; for necessity is laid upon me; for woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel. For if I do this of mine own will, I have a reward: but if not of mine own will, I have a stewardship intrusted to me. What then is my reward? That, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel without charge, so as not to use to the full my right in the gospel.

For though I was free from all men, I brought myself under bondage to all, that [I might gain the more." You surely cannot say that men commit sin by living by the Gospel, and partaking of the sacrifices. Of course not. The Lord himself made the rule that they who preach the Gospel, should live by the Gospel. But an Apostle who does not abuse this freedom, but labours with his hands that he may not be a burden to anyone, and toils night and day and ministers to his companions of course does this, that for his greater toil he may receive a greater reward.

23. Let us hasten to what remains.²⁰⁴ "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are diversities of ministrations, and the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but the same God who worketh all things in all. But to each one is given the manifestation of the Spirit to profit withal." And again:²⁰⁵ "As the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of the body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ." But he precludes you from saying that the different members of the one body have the same rank; for he immediately describes the orders of the Church, and says:²⁰⁶ "And God hath set some in the Church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; then miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all gifts of healings? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? But desire earnestly the greater gifts. And a still more excellent way shew I unto you." And after discoursing more in detail of the graces of charity, he added:²⁰⁷ "Whether there be prophecies, they shall be done away; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall be done away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part: but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." And afterwards we read:²⁰⁸ "But now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love. Follow after love; yet desire earnestly spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." And again:²⁰⁹ "I would have you all speak with tongues, but rather that ye should prophesy: and greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues." And again:²¹⁰ "I thank God, I speak with tongues more than you all." Where there are different gifts, and one man is greater, another less, and all are called spiritual, they are all certainly sheep, and they stand on the right hand; but there is a difference between one sheep and another. It is humility that leads the Apostle Paul to say:²¹¹ "I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not found vain: but I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me." But the very fact of his thus humbling himself shows the possibility of there being apostles of higher or lower rank, and God is not unjust that he will forget the work of him who is called the chosen vessel of election, and who laboured more abundantly than they all, or assign equal rewards to unequal deserts. Afterwards we read,²¹² "As in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be now alive. But each in his own order." If each is to rise in his own order, it follows that those who rise are of different degrees of merit.²¹³ "All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one flesh of men, and another flesh of beasts, and another flesh of birds, and another of fishes. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." Like a learned commentator, you have explained this passage by saying that the spiritual differ from the carnal. It follows that in heaven there will be both spiritual and carnal persons, and not only will the sheep climb thither, but your goats also. "One star," he says, "differeth from another star in glory": this is not the distinction of sheep and goat, but of sheep and sheep, star and star. Lastly, he says, "there is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon." But for this, you might maintain that the phrase one star from another star covers the whole human race; but he introduces the sun and moon, and you cannot possibly reckon them among the goats. "So," says he, "is also the resurrection of the dead"-the just will shine with the brightness of the sun, and those of the next rank will glow with the splendour of the moon, so that one will be a Lucifer, another an Arcturus, a third an Orion, another Mazzaroth, or some other of the stars whose names are hollowed in the book of Job.^{214 215} "For we all," he says, "must be made manifest before the judgment-seat of Christ; that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad." And you cannot say that the mode of our manifestation before the judgment-seat of Christ is such that the good receive good things, the bad evil things; for he²¹⁶ teaches us in the same epistle that he who soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Surely he who sows more and he who sows less are both on the right side. And although they belong to the same class, that of the sower, yet they differ in respect of measure and number. The same Paul, writing to the Ephesians, says:²¹⁷ "to the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of God." You observe that it is a varied and manifold wisdom of God which is spoken of as existing in the different ranks of the church. And in the same epistle we read,²¹⁸ "Unto each one of us was the grace given according to the measure of the grace of Christ": not that Christ's measure varies, but only that so much of His grace is poured out as we can receive.

24. In vain, therefore, do you multiply instances of sheep and goats, of the five wise and five foolish virgins, of Egyptians and Israelites, and so forth, because retribution is not in the present, but will be in the future. Hence we find that the day of judgment is promised at the end of all things, because the judgment is not now. For it would be absurd to call the last day the day of judgment, if God were judging at the present time. Now we sail the ship, wrestle, and fight, that at last we may reach the haven, be crowned, and triumph. But you, with no less adroitness than perversity, make the life of this world illustrate that of the world to come, although we know full well that here unrighteousness prevails, there, righteousness:²¹⁹ "until we go into the sanctuary of God, and understand the end of those men." The saint does not die one way, the sinner another. Those who sail the same sea have the same calm and storm. A violent death is not one thing to the robber, another to the martyr. Children are not born one way of adultery and prostitution, in another of pure marriage. Certainly our Lord and the robbers incurred the same penalty of crucifixion. If the judgment of this world and of that which is to come be the same, it follows that they who were here crucified side by side, will also be esteemed of equal rank hereafter. Paul and they who bound him, sailed together, endured the same storm, escaped together to the shore when the ship was broken with the waves. You cannot deny that the prisoner and the keepers were of unequal merit. And what were the circumstances of that same shipwreck of the Apostle and the soldiers? The Apostle Paul afterwards²²⁰ related a vision, and said that they who were with him in the ship had been given to him by the Lord. Are we to suppose that he to whom they were given, and they who were given to him, were of one degree of merit? Ten righteous men can save a sinful city. Lot together with his daughters was delivered from the fire: his sons-in-law would also have been saved, had they been willing to leave the city. Now there was surely a great difference between Lot and his sons-in-law. One city out of the five,²²¹ Zoar, was saved, and a place which lay under the same sentence as Sodom, Gomorrha, Admah, and Zeboiim, was preserved by the prayers of a holy man. Lot and Zoar were of different merit, but both of them escaped the fire.²²² The robbers who in the absence of David had laid waste Ziklag, and made a prey of the wives and children of the inhabitants were slain on the third day in the plain, but forty men mounted on camels fled. Will you maintain that there was some difference between those who were slain and those who made good their escape? We read in the ²²³ Gospel that the tower of Siloam fell upon eighteen men who perished in the ruins. Certainly our Saviour did not regard them as the only sinners: but they were punished to terrify the rest: it was like scourging a pestilent fellow to teach fools wisdom. If all sinners are punished alike, it is unjust for one to be slain while another is admonished by his comrade's death.

25. You raise the objection that all Israelites had the same measure of manna, an homer, and were alike in respect of dress, and hair, and beard, and shoes; as though we did not all alike partake of the body of Christ. In the Christian mysteries there is one means of sanctification for the master and the servant, the noble and the low-born, for the king and his soldiers, and yet, that which is one varies according to the merits of those who receive it.²²⁴ "Whosoever shall eat or drink unworthily shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord." Does it follow that because Judas drank of the same cup as the rest of the apostles, that he and they are of equal merit? But suppose that we do not choose to receive the sacrament, at all events we all have the same life, breathe the same air, have the same blood in our veins, are fed on the same food. Moreover, if our viands are improved by culinary skill and are made more palatable for the consumer, food of this kind does not satisfy nature, but tickles the appetite. We are all alike subject to hunger, all alike suffer with cold: we alike are shrivelled with the frost, or melted with the broiling heat. The sun and the moon, and all the company of the stars, the showers, the whole world run their course for us all alike, and, as the Gospel tells us, the same refreshing rain falls upon all, good and bad, just and unjust. If the present is a picture of the future, then the Sun of Righteousness will rise upon sinners as well as upon the righteous, upon the wicked and the holy, upon the heathen as well as upon Jews and Christians, though the Scripture says,²²⁵ "Unto you that fear the Lord shall the Sun of Righteousness arise." If He will rise to those that fear, He will set to the despisers and the false prophets. The sheep which stand on the right hand will be brought into the kingdom of heaven, the goats will be thrust down to hell. The parable does not contrast the sheep one with another, or on the other hand the goats, but merely makes a difference between sheep and goats. The whole truth is not taught in a single passage: we must always bear in mind the exact point of an illustration. For instance, the ten virgins are not examples of the whole human race, but of the careful and the slothful: the former are ever anticipating the advent of our Lord, the latter abandon themselves to idle slumber without a thought of future judgment. And so at the end of the parable it is said,²²⁶ "Watch, for ye know not the day, nor the hour." If at the deluge Noah was delivered, and the whole world perished, all men were flesh, and therefore were destroyed. You must either say that the sons of Noah and Noah for whose sake they were delivered were of unequal merit, or you must place the accursed Ham in the same rank as his father because he was delivered with him from the flood. At the passion of Christ all wavered, all were unprofitable together: there was none that did good, no not one. Will you therefore dare to say that Peter and the rest of the Apostles who fled denied the Saviour in the same sense as Caiaphas and the Pharisees and the people who cried out,²²⁷ "Crucify him, crucify him"? And, to say no more about the Apostles, do you think Annas add Caiaphas, and Judas the traitor guilty of no greater crime than Pilate who was compelled against his will to give sentence against our Lord? The guilt of Judas is proportioned to his former merit, and the greater the guilt, the greater the penalty too.²²⁸ "For the mighty shall mightily suffer torment." An evil tree does not bear good fruit, nor a good tree evil fruit. If this be so, tell me how it was that Paul though he was an evil tree and persecuted the Church of Christ, afterwards bore good fruit? And Judas, though he was a good tree and wrought miracles like the other Apostles, afterwards turned traitor and brought forth evil fruit? The truth is that a good tree does not bear evil fruit, nor an evil tree good fruit, so long as they continue in their goodness, or badness. And if we read that every Hebrew keeps the same Passover, and that in²²⁹ the seventh year every prisoner is set free, and that at Jubilee, that is the fiftieth year,²³⁰ every possession returns to its owner, all this refers not to the present, but to the future; for being in bondage during the six days of this world, on the seventh day, the true and eternal Sabbath, we shall be free, at any rate if we wish to be free while still in bondage in the world. If, however, we do not desire it, our ear will be bored in token of our disobedience, and together with our wives and children, whom we preferred to liberty, that is, with the flesh and its works, we shall be in perpetual slavery.

26. As for the parable of the sower which makes both good and bad ground bear a triple crop, and the passage from the apostle in which upon Christ as the foundation one man builds gold, silver, costly stones, another wood, hay, stubble, the meaning is perfectly clear. We know that in a great house there are different vessels, and to wish to contradict so plain a truth would be sheer impudence. Yet that Jovinianus may not triumph in a lie and quote the instance of the apostles by way of discrediting the hundred fold, sixty fold, and thirty fold, let me inform him that in²³¹ Matthew and Mark a hundred fold is promised to the apostles who had left all. And I would tell him further, that in the Gospel of Luke we find much more, that is polu pleiona, and that there is absolutely no instance in the Gospels of a hundred standing for seven; and that he is convicted either of forgery, or of ignorance; and that our cause is not prejudiced by the fact that in one Gospel the enumeration begins at a hundred, in another at thirty, since it is a rule with all Scripture, and especially with the older writings, to put the lowest number first and so ascend by degrees to the higher. For instance, suppose one to say that so-and-so lived five and seventy and a hundred years, it does not follow that five and seventy are more than a hundred because they were first mentioned. If you do not on the side of good admit the difference between a hundred, sixty, and thirty, neither will you do so on the side of evil, and the seed which fell by the wayside, upon the rock, and among thorns, will be equally faulty. But if the former three, or the latter three, on the side of good, or on the side of evil respectively, are one and the same, it was foolish instead of speaking of two things to enumerate six kinds, and all the more because according to the account of the parable in Matthew, Mark, and Luke, the Saviour always added: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Where there is no deep inner meaning, it is useless to draw our attention to the mystic sense.

27. You give it as your opinion that, since the Father and the Son make their abode with the faithful, and since Christ is their guest, nothing is lacking. I suppose, however, that Christ's abiding with the Corinthians was one thing, with the Ephesians another: it was one thing, I say, for Him to abide with those whom Paul blamed for many sins, another for Him to dwell with those to whom the apostle revealed mysteries hidden from the beginning of the world; one thing for Him to be in Titus and Timothy, another in Paul. Certainly amongst them that have been born of women, there has not arisen a greater than John the Baptist. But the term greater implies others who are less. And²³² "he who is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he." You see then that in heaven one is greatest and another is least, and that among the angels and the invisible creation there is a manifold and infinite diversity. Why do the apostles say:²³³ "Lord, increase our faith," if there is one measure for all? And why did our Lord rebuke His disciple, saying:²³⁴ "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" In Jeremiah also we read concerning the future kingdom:²³⁵ "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers." And soon after:²³⁶ "I will put my law in their inward parts, and in their heart will I write it; and I will be their God and they shall be my people: and they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them." The context of this passage clearly shows that the prophet is describing the future kingdom, and how can there possibly be in it a least or greatest, if all are to be equal? The secret is disclosed in the Gospel:²³⁷ "Whosoever shall do and teach, he shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall teach, and not do, shall be least."²³⁸ The Saviour taught us at a feast to take the lowest place, lest, when one greater than us came, we should be thrust with disgrace from the higher place. If we cannot fall, but only raise ourselves by penitence, what is the meaning of the ladder at Bethel, on which the angels come from heaven to earth and descend as well as ascend? Surely while on that ladder they are reckoned among the sheep and stand on the right hand. There are angels who descend from heaven; but Jovinianus is sure that they retain their inheritance.

28. But when Jovinianus supposes that the many mansions in our Father's house are churches scattered throughout the world, who can refrain from laughing; since Scripture plainly teaches in John's Gospel that our Lord was discoursing not of the number of the churches, but of the heavenly mansions, and the eternal tabernacles for which the prophet longed?²³⁹ "In my Father's house," He says, "are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again, and will receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." The place and the mansions which Christ says He would prepare for the apostles are of course in the Father's house, that is, in the kingdom of heaven, not on earth, where for the present He was leading the apostles. And at the same time regard must be had to the sense of Scripture: "I might tell you," He says, "that I go to prepare a place for you, if there were not many mansions in my Father's house, that is to say, if each individual did not prepare for himself a mansion through his own works rather than receive it through the bounty of God. The preparation is therefore not mine, but yours." This view is supported by the fact that it profited Judas nothing to have a place prepared, since he lost it by his own fault. And we must interpret in the same way what our Lord says to the sons of Zebedee, one of whom wished to sit on His left hand, the other on His right:²⁴⁰ "My cup indeed ye shall drink: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left hand, is not mine to give, but it is for them for whom it hath been prepared of my Father." It is not the Son's to give; how then is it the Father's to prepare? There are, He says, prepared in heaven, many different mansions, destined for many different virtues, and they will be awarded not to persons, but to persons' works. In vain therefore do you ask of me what rests with yourselves, a reward which my Father has prepared for those whose virtues will entitle them to rise to such dignity. Again when He says:²⁴¹ "I will come again, and will receive you unto myself: that where I am, there ye may be also," He is speaking especially to the apostles, concerning whom it is elsewhere written, "That as I and thou, Father, are one, so they also may be one in us," inasmuch as they have believed, have been perfected, and can say,²⁴² "the Lord is my portion." If, however, there are not many mansions, how is it taught in the Old Testament correspondingly with the New, that the chief priest has one rank, the priests another, the Levites another, the door-keepers another, the sacristans another? How is it that in the²⁴³ book of Ezekiel, where a description is given of the future Church and of the heavenly Jerusalem. the priests who have sinned are degraded to the rank of sacristans and doorkeepers, and although they are in the temple of God, that is on the right hand, they are not among the rams, but among the poorest of the sheep? How again is it that in the river which flows from the temple. and replenishes the salt sea, and gives new life to everything, we read there are many kinds of fish? Why do we read that in the kingdom of heaven there are Archangels, Angels, Thrones, Dominions, Powers, Cherubim and Seraphim, and every name which is named, not only in this present world, but also that which is to come? A difference of name is meaningless where there is not a difference of rank. An Archangel is of course an Archangel to other inferior angels, and Powers, and Dominions have other spheres over which they exercise authority. This is what we find in heaven and in the administration of God. You must not therefore smile and sneer at us, as is your wont, for making a graduated series of emperors, praefects and counts, tribunes and centurions, companies, and all the other steps in the service.

29. It is mere trifling to quote the passage:²⁴⁴ "Know ye not that your bodies are a temple of the Holy Ghost," for it is customary in Holy Scripture to speak of a single object as though it were many, and of many as though they were one. And Jovinianus himself should know that even in a temple there are many divisions-the outer and the inner courts, the vestibules, the holy place, and the Holy of Holies. There are also in a temple kitchens, pantries, oil-cellars, and cupboards for the vessels. And so in the temple of our body there are different degrees of merit. God does not dwell in all alike, nor does He impart Himself to all in the same degree. A portion of the spirit of Moses was taken and given to the seventy elders. I suppose there is a difference between the abundance of the river, and that of the rivulets.²⁴⁵ Elijah's spirit was given in double measure to Elisha, and thus double grace wrought greater miracles. Elijah while living restored a dead man to life; Elisha after death did the same. Elijah invoked famine on the people; Elisha in a single day put the enemy's forces in the power of the city which they besieged. No doubt the words, "Know ye not that your bodies are a temple of the Holy Ghost," refer to the whole assembly of the faithful, who, joined together, make up the one body of Christ. But the question now is, who in the body is worthy to be the feet of Christ, and who the head? who is His eye, and who His hand? -a distinction indicated by the²⁴⁶ two women in the Gospel, the penitent and the holy woman, one of whom held His feet, the other His head. Some authorities. however, think there was only one woman, and that she who began at His feet gradually advanced to His head. Jovinianus further urges against us our Lord's words,²⁴⁷ "I pray not for these only, but also for those who shall believe on me through their word: that as I, Father, in thee and thou in me are one, so they all may be one in us," and reminds us that the whole Christian people is one in God, and, as His well-beloved sons, are²⁴⁸ "partakers of the divine nature." We have already said, and the truth must now be inculcated more in detail, that we are not one in the Father and the Son according to nature, but according to grace. For the essence of the human soul and the essence of God are not the same, as the Manichaeans constantly assert. But, says our Lord:²⁴⁹ "Thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me." You see, then, that we are privileged to partake of His essence, not in the realm of nature, but of grace, and the reason why we are beloved of the Father is that He has loved the Son; and the members are loved, those namely of the body.²⁵⁰ "For as many as received Christ, to them gave He power to become sons of God, even to them that believe on His name: which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." The Word was made flesh that we might pass from the flesh into the Word. The Word did not cease to be what He had been; nor did the human nature lose that which it was by birth. The glory was increased, the nature was not changed. Do you ask how we are made one body with Christ? Your creator shall be your instructor:²⁵¹ "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me, and I in him. As the living Father sent me, and I live because of the Father, so he that eateth me, he also shall live because of me. This is the bread which came down out of heaven." But the Evangelist John, who had drunk in wisdom from the breast of Christ, agrees herewith, and says:²⁵² "Hereby know we that we abide in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God abideth in him, and he in God." If you believe in Christ, as the apostles believed, you shall be made one body with them in Christ. But, if it is rash for you to claim for yourself a faith and works like theirs when you have not the same faith and works, you cannot have the same place.

30. You repeat the words bride, sister, mother, and affirm that all these are titles of the one Church and names applied to all believers. The fact goes against you. For if the Church admits but one rank, and has not many members in one body, what necessity is there for calling her bride, sister, mother? It must be that she is the bride of some, the sister of others, the mother of others. All indeed stand on the right hand, but one stands as a bridegroom, another as a brother, a third as a son.²⁵³ "My little children" says the Apostle, "of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you." Do you think that the children who are being born and the apostle who is in travail are of equal rank? And the folly of your contention that we love all the members alike, and do not prefer the eye to the finger, nor the hand to the ear, but that if one be lost all mourn, is proved by the lesson which the apostle teaches the Corinthians:²⁵⁴ "Some members are more honourable, others excite the sense of shame: and those parts to which shame attaches are clothed with more abundant honour; whereas our comely parts have no need of our care." Do you think that the mouth and the belly, the eyes and the outlets of the body are to be classed together as of equal merit?²⁵⁵ "The lamp of thy body," he says, "is thine eye. If thine eye be blinded, thy whole body is in darkness." If you cut off a finger, or the tip of the ear, there is indeed pain, but the loss is not so great, nor is the disfigurement attended by so much pain as it would be were you to take out the eyes, mutilate the nose, or saw through a bone. Some members we can dispense with and yet live: without others life is an impossibility. Some offences are light, some heavy. It is one thing to owe ten thousand talents, another to owe a farthing. We shall have to give account of the idle word no less than of adultery; but it is not the same thing to be put to the blush, and to be put upon the rack, to grow red in the face and to ensure lasting torment. Do you think I am merely expressing my own views? Hear what the Apostle John says:²⁵⁶ "He who knows that his brother sinneth a sin not unto death, let him ask, and he shall give him life, even to him that sinneth not unto death. But he that hath sinned unto death, who shall pray for him?" You observe that if we entreat for smaller offences, we obtain pardon: if for greater ones, it is difficult to obtain our request: and that there is a great difference between sins. And so with respect to the people of Israel who had sinned a sin unto death, it is said to Jeremiah:²⁵⁷ "Pray not thou for this people, neither entreat for them, and do not withstand me, for I will not hear thee." Moreover, if it be true that we all alike enter the world and all alike leave it, and this is a precedent for the world to come, it follows that whether righteous or sinners we shall all be equally esteemed by God, because the conditions of our birth and death are now the same. And if you contend that there are two Adams, the one of the earth, the other from heaven; and that they who were in the earthly Adam stand on the left hand, those who were in the heavenly are on the right hand, before we go further, let me ask you a question concerning two brothers: Was Esau in the earthly Adam, or in the heavenly? No one doubts that you will reply, he was in the earthly. In which was Jacob? Without hesitation you will say, in the heavenly. How then was he in the heavenly when Christ had not yet come in the flesh—Christ who is called the second Adam from heaven? You must either reckon all before the incarnation of Christ in the old Adam, and even the just in the man from the earth, and then they will be on the left among your goats; or, if it be impious to give Isaac the same place as Ishmael, Jacob as Esau, the saints as sinners, the last Adam will date from the time when Christ was born of a Virgin, and your argument from the two Adams will not benefit your sheep and goats, because we have proved that in the first Adam there were both sheep and goats, and that of those who were in one and the same man, some stood on the right hand of God, others on the left:²⁵⁸ "For from Adam even until Moses death reigned over all, even over them that had not sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression."

31. As regards your attempt to show that railing and murder, the use of the expression raca and adultery, the idle word and godlessness, are rewarded with the same punishment, I have already given you my reply, and will now briefly repeat it. You must either deny that you are a sinner if you are not to be in danger of Gehenna: or, if you are a sinner you will be sent to hell for even a light offence:²⁵⁹ "The mouth that lieth," says one, "kills the soul." I suspect that you, like other men, have occasionally told a lie:²⁶⁰ for all men are liars, that God alone may be true,²⁶¹ and that He may be justified in His words, and may prevail when He judges. It follows either that you will not be a man lest you be found a liar: or if you are a man and are consequently a liar, you will be punished with parricides and adulterers. For you admit no difference between sins, and the gratitude of those whom you raise from the mire and set on high will not equal the rage against you of those whom for the trifling offences of daily life you have thrust into utter darkness. And if it be so that in a persecution one is stifled, another beheaded, another flogged, or the fourth dies within the walls of a prison, and one crown of victory awaits various kinds of struggle, the fact tells in our favour. For in martyrdom it is the will, which gives occasion to the death, that is crowned. My duty is to resist the frenzy of the heathen, and not deny the Lord. It rests with them either to behead, or to burn, or to shut up in prison, or enforce various other penalties. But if I escape, and die in solitude, there will not at my death be the same crown for me as for them, because the confession of Christ will not have been to me as to them the cause of death. As for your remark that absolutely no difference was made between the brother who had always been with his father, and him who was afterwards welcomed as a penitent, I am willing to add, if you like, that the one drachma which was lost and was found was put with the others, and that the one sheep which the good shepherd, leaving the ninety and nine, sought and brought back, made up the full tale of a hundred. But it is one thing to be a penitent, and with tears sue for pardon, another to be always with the father. And so both the shepherd and the father say by the mouth of Ezekiel to the sheep that was carried back, and to the son that was lost,²⁶² "And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: that thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth ever more, because of thy shame, when I have forgiven thee all that thou hast done." That penitents may have their due it is enough for them to feel shame instead of all other punishment. Hence in another place it is said to them,²⁶³ "Then shall ye remember your evil ways, and all the crimes wherewith ye were defiled, and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all the wickedness that ye have done; and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall have done you good for my name's sake, and not according to your evil ways, nor according to your evil doings." The son, moreover, was reprov'd by his father for envying his brother's deliverance, and for being tormented by jealousy while the angels in heaven were rejoicing. The parallel, however, is not to be drawn between the merits of the two sons (one of whom was temperate, the other a prodigal) and those of the whole human race, but the characters depicted are either Jews and Christians, or saints and penitents. In the lifetime of Bishop Damasus I dedicated to him a small treatise upon this parable.²⁶⁴

32. And if a penny was given to all the labourers, those of the first, the third, the sixth, the ninth, and the eleventh hours, and they came first for the reward who were the last to work in the vineyard, even here the persons described do not belong to one time or one age, but from the beginning of the world to the end of it there are different calls and a special meaning attaches to each. Abel and Seth were called at the first hour: Enoch and Noah at the third: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob at the sixth: Moses and the prophets at the ninth: at the eleventh the Gentiles, to whom the recompense was first given because they believed on the crucified Lord, and inasmuch as it was hard for them to believe they earned a great reward. Many kings and prophets have desired to see the things that we see, and have not seen them. But the one penny does not represent one reward, but one life, and one deliverance from Gehenna. And as by the favour of the sovereign those guilty of various crimes are released from prison, and each one, according to his toil and exertions, is in this or that condition of life, so too the penny, as it were by the favour of our Sovereign, is the discharge from prison of us all by baptism. Now our work is, according to our different virtues, to prepare for ourselves a different future.

33. So far I have replied to the separate portions of his argument; I shall now address myself to the general question. Our Lord says to his disciples,²⁶⁵ "Whosoever would become great among you, let him be least of all." If we are all to be equal in heaven, in vain do we humble ourselves here that we may be greater there. Of the two debtors who owed, one five hundred pence, the other fifty, he to whom most was forgiven loved most. And so the Saviour says,²⁶⁶ "I say to you, her sins which are many are forgiven her, for she hath loved much. But to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little." He who loves little, and has little forgiven, he will of course be of inferior rank.²⁶⁷ The householder when he set out delivered to his servants his goods, to one five talents, to another two, to another one, to each according to his ability. Just as in another Gospel it is written that a nobleman setting out for a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and return, called the servants, and gave them each a sum of money, with which one gained ten pounds, another five, and they, each according to his ability and the gain he had made, received ten or five cities. But one who had received a talent, or a pound, buried it in the ground, or tied it up in a napkin, and kept it until his master's return. Our first thought is that if, according to the modern Zeno, the righteous do not toil in hope of reward, but to avoid the loss of what they already have. he who buried his pound or talent that he might not lose it, did no wrong, and the caution of him who kept his money is worthy of more praise than the fruitless toil of those who wore themselves out and yet received no reward for their labour. Then observe that the very talent which was taken from the timid or negligent servant, was not given to him who had the smaller profit, but to him who had gained the most, that is, to him who had been placed over ten cities. If difference of rank is not constituted by the difference in number, why did our Lord say, "He gave to everyone according to his ability"? If the gain of five talents and ten talents is the same, why were not ten cities given to him who gained the least, and five to him who gained the most? But that our Lord is not satisfied with what we have, but always desires more, He himself shows by saying, "Wherefore didst thou not give my money to the money-changers, that so when I came I might have received it with usury?" The Apostle Paul understood this, and forgetting those things which were behind, reached forward to those things which were in front, that is, he made daily progress, and did not keep the grace given to him carefully wrapped up in a napkin, but his spirit, like the capital of a keen man of business, was renewed from day to day, and if he were not always growing larger, he thought himself growing less. Six cities of refuge are mentioned in the law, provided for fugitives who were involuntary homicides, and the cities themselves belonged to the priests. I should like to ask whether you would put those fugitives among your goats, or among our sheep. If they were goats, they would be slain like other homicides, and would not enter the cities of God's ministers. If you say they were sheep, they will not possibly be such sheep as can enjoy full liberty and feed without fear of wolves. And it will be plain to you that sheep indeed they are, but wandering sheep: that they are on the right hand, but do not stand there: they flee until the High Priest dies and descending into hell liberates their souls. The Gibeonites met the children of Israel, and although other nations were slaughtered, they were kept for hewers of wood and drawers of water. And of such value were they in God's eyes, that the family of Saul was destroyed for the wrong done to them. Where would you put them? Among the goats? But they were not slain, and they were avenged by the determination of God. Among the sheep? But Idly Scripture says they were not of the same merit as the Israelites. You see then that they do indeed stand on the right hand, but are of a far inferior grade. Jonathan came between David, the holy man, and Saul, the worst of kings, and we can neither place him among the kids because he was worthy of a prophet's love, nor amongst the rams test we make him equal to David, and particularly when we know that he was slain. He will, therefore, be among the sheep, but low down. And just as in the case of David and Jonathan, you will be bound to recognize differences between sheep and sheep.²⁷¹ "That servant, which knew his lord's will, and made not ready, nor did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. And to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required: and to whom they commit much, of him will they ask the more." Lo! more or less is committed to different servants, and according to the nature of the trust, as well as of the sin, is the number of stripes inflicted.

34. The whole account of the land of Judah and of the tribes is typical of the church in heaven. Let us read Joshua. the son of Nun, or the concluding portions of Ezekiel, and we shall see that the historical division of the land as related by the one finds a counterpart in the spiritual and heavenly promises of the other. What is the meaning of the seven and eight steps in the description of the temple? or again, what significance attaches to the fact that in the Psalter, after being taught the mystic alphabet by the²⁷² one hundred and eighteenth psalm we arrive by fifteen steps at the point where we can sing:²⁷³ "Behold, now bless the Lord, all ye servants of the Lord: ye who stand in the house of the Lord, in the courts of the house of our God." Why did²⁷⁴ two tribes and a half dwell on the other side of Jordan, a district abounding in cattle, while the remaining nine tribes and a half either drove out the old inhabitants from their possessions, or dwelt with them? Why did the tribe of Levi²⁷⁵ receive no portion in the land, but have the Lord for their portion? And how is it that of the priests and Levites, themselves, the²⁷⁶ high priest alone entered the Holy of Holies where were the cherubim and the mercy-seat? Why did the other priests wear²⁷⁷ linen raiment only, and not have their clothing of wrought gold, blue, scarlet, purple, and fine cloth? The priests and²⁷⁸ Levites of the lower order took care of the oxen and wains: those of the higher order carried the ark of the Lord on their shoulders. If you do away with the gradations of the tabernacle, the temple, the Church, if, to use a common military phrase, all upon the right hand are to be "up to the same standard," bishops are to no purpose, priests in vain, deacons useless. Why do virgins persevere? widows toil? Why do married women practise continence? Let us all sin, and when once we have repented, we shall be on the same footing as the apostles.

35. But now we have just sighted land: the foaming billows have been rolling mountain-high: our ship has been borne aloft, or has rushed headlong into the depths beneath: little by little the haven opens to the view of the weary and exhausted sailors. We have discussed the married, widows, and virgins. We have preferred virginity to widowhood, widow-hood to marriage. The passage of the apostle, in which he treats questions of this kind, has been expounded, and particular objections have been met. We also took a survey of secular literature, and inquired what was thought of virgins, and what of those who had one husband; and by way of contrast we pointed out the cares which sometimes attend wedlock. Then we passed to the second division, in which our opponent denies the possibility of sinning to those who have been baptized with complete faith. And we showed that God alone is faultless, and every creature is at fault, not because all have sinned, but because all may sin, and those who stand have cause to fear when they see the fall of men like themselves. In the third place we came to fasting, and inasmuch as our opponent's argument fell under two heads, and he appealed either to philosophy, or to Holy Scripture, we also furnished a several reply. In the fourth, that is the last section, the sheep and goats on the right hand and the left, the righteous and the wicked, were distributed into two classes, the intention being to show that there is no difference between one just man and another, or between one sinner and another. To prove the point Jovinianus had accumulated countless instances from Scripture which apparently favoured his view, and on this contention we rebutted both by arguments and illustrations from Scripture, and completely pulverized Zeno's old opinion no less with common sense than with the words of inspiration.

36. I must in conclusion say a few words to our modern Epicurus wantoning in his gardens with his favourites of both sexes. On your side are the fat and the sleek in their festal attire. If I may mock like Socrates, add if you please, all swine and dogs, and, since you like flesh so well, vultures too, eagles, hawks, and owls. We shall never be afraid of the host of²⁷⁹ Aristippus. If ever I see a fine fellow, or a man who is no stranger to the curling-irons, with his hair nicely done and his cheeks all aglow, he belongs to your herd, or rather grunts in concert with your pigs. To our flock belong the sad, the pale, the meanly clad, who, like strangers in this world, though their tongues are silent, yet speak by their dress and bearing.²⁸⁰ "Woe is me," say they, "that my so-journing is prolonged! that I dwell among the tents of Kedar!" that is to say, in the darkness of this world, for the light shineth in the darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. Boast not of having many disciples. The Son of God taught in Judaea, and only twelve apostles followed Him.²⁸¹ "I have trodden the wine-press alone," He says, "and of the peoples there was no man with me." At the passion He was left alone, and even Peter's fidelity to Him wavered: on the other hand all the people applauded the doctrine of the Pharisees, saying,²⁸² "Crucify him, crucify him. We have no king but Caesar," that is in effect, we follow vice, not virtue; Epicurns, not Christ; Jovinianus, not the Apostle Paul. If many assent to your views, that only indicates voluptuousness; for they do not so much approve your utterances, as favour their own vices. in our crowded thoroughfares a false prophet may be seen any day stick in hand belabouring the fools about him, and knocking out the teeth of those who offend him, and yet he never lacks constant followers. And do you regard it as a mark of great wisdom if you have a following of many pigs, whom you are feeding to make pork for hell? Since you published your views, and set the mark of your approval on baths in which the sexes bathe together, the impatience which once threw over burning lust the semblance of a robe of modesty has been laid bare and exposed. What was once hidden is now open to the gaze of all. You have revealed your disciples, such as they are, not made them. One result of your teaching is that sin is no longer even repented Of. Your virgins whom, with a depth of wisdom never found before in speech or writing, you have taught the apostle's maxim that it is better to marry than to burn, have turned secret adulterers into acknowledged husbands.²⁸³ It was not the apostle, the chosen vessel, who gave this advice; it was Virgil's widow:

284 "She calls it wedlock; thus she veils her fault."

37. About four hundred years have passed since the preaching of Christ flashed upon the world, and during that time in which His robe has been torn by countless heresies, almost the whole body of error has been derived from the Chaldaean, Syriac, and Greek languages. Basilides, the master of licentiousness and the grossest sensuality, after the lapse of so many years, and like a second²⁸⁵ Euphorbus, was changed by transmigration into Jovinian, so that the Latin tongue might have a heresy of its own. Was there no other province in the whole world to receive the gospel of pleasure, and into which the serpent might insinuate itself, except that which was founded by the teaching of Peter, upon the rock Christ? Idol temples had fallen before the standard of the Cross and the severity of the Gospel: now on the contrary lust and gluttony endeavour to overthrow the solid structure of the Cross. And so God says by Isaiah,²⁸⁶ "O my people, they which bless you cause you to err, and trouble the paths of your feet." Also by Jeremiah,²⁸⁷ "Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and save every man his life, and believe not the false prophets which say, Peace, peace, and there is no peace;" who are always repeating,²⁸⁸ "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord." "Thy prophets have seen for thee false and foolish things; they have not laid bare thine iniquity that they might call thee to repentance: who devour God's people like bread: they have not called upon God." Jeremiah announced the captivity and was stoned by the people.²⁸⁹ Hananiah, the son of Azzur, broke the bars of wood for the present, but was preparing bars of iron for the future. False prophets always promise pleasant things, and please for a thee. Truth is bitter, and they who preach it are filled with bitterness. For with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth the Lord's passover is kept, and it is eaten with bitter herbs. Admirable are your utterances and worthy of the ears of the bride of Christ standing in the midst of her virgins, and widows, and celibates! (their very name is²⁹⁰ derived from the fact that they who abstain from intercourse are fit for heaven). This is what you say: "Fast seldom, marry often. You cannot do the work of marriage unless you take mead, and flesh, and solid food. For lust strength is required. Flesh is soon spent and enervated. You need not be afraid of fornication. He who has been once baptized into Christ cannot fall, for he has the consolation of marriage to slake his lust. And if you do fall, repentance will restore you, and you who were hypocrites at baptism may have a firm faith in your repentance. Be not disturbed by the thought of a difference between the righteous and the penitent, and do not imagine that pardon even gives a lower place; rather believe that it takes away your crown. For there is one reward: he who stands on the right hand shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." Through counsels such as these your swine-herds are richer than our shepherds, and the he-goats draw after them many of the other sex:²⁹¹ "They were as fed horses: they were mad after women": they no sooner see a woman than they neigh after her, and, shame to say! find scriptural authority for the consolation of their incontinence. But the very women, unhappy creatures! though they deserve no pity, who chant the words of their instructor (for what does God require of them but to become mothers?), have lost not only their chastity, but all sense of shame, and defend their licentious practices with an access of impudence. You have, moreover, in your army many subalterns, you have your guardsmen and your skirmishers at the outposts, the round-bellied, the well-dressed, the exquisites, and noisy orators, to defend you with tooth and nail. The noble make way for you, the wealthy print kisses on your face. For unless you had come, the drunkard and the glutton could not have entered paradise. All honor to your virtue, or rather to your vices! You have in your camp, even amazons with uncovered breasts, bare arms and knees, who challenge the men who come against them to a battle of lust. Your household is a large one, and so in your aviaries not only turtle-doves, but hoopoes are fed, which may wing their flight over the whole field of rank debauchery. Pull me to pieces and scatter me to the winds: tax me with what offences you please: accuse me of luxurious and delicate living: you would like me better if I were guilty, for I should belong to your herd.

38. But I will now address myself to you, great Rome, who with the confession of Christ have blotted out the blasphemy written on your forehead. Mighty city, mistress-city of the world, city of the Apostle's praises, shew the meaning of your name. Rome is either strength in Greek, or height in Hebrew. Lose not the excellence your name implies: let virtue lift you up on high, let not voluptuousness bring you low. By repentance. as the history of Nineveh proves, you may escape the curse wherewith the Saviour threatened you in the Apocalypse. Beware of the name of Jovinianus. It is derived from that of an idol.²⁹² The Capitol is in ruins: the temples of Jove with their ceremonies have perished. Why should his name and vices flourish now in the midst of you, when even in the time of Numa Pompilius, even under the sway of kings, your ancestors gave a heartier welcome to the self-restraint of Pythagoras than they did under the consuls to the debauchery of Epicurus?

1: This, according to i. 3, is "cannot be overthrown."

2: 1 John iii. 9, 1 John iii. 10.

3: 1 John v. 18.

4: 1 John v. 21.

5: 1 John i. 8 sq.

6: Is. lxxv. 5. Quoted from memory. The LXX and Vulg. have like A. V. and Rev., "Come not near me."

7: 1 John ii. 1.

8: 2 Cor. vi. 14, 2 Cor. vi. 15.

9: Ps. li. 12.

10: 1 John ii. 4.

11: 1 John xiv. 6.

12: James ii. 26.

13: Jerome is perhaps hinting at the opinions of Jovinianus, that there was no other distinction between men than the grand division into righteous and wicked, and drawing from this the inference that whoever had been truly baptized had nothing further to gain by progress in the Christian life.

14: 1 Peter ii. 22.

15: James iii. 2.

16: Job xiv. 4, Job xiv. 5, Sept.

17: Prov. xx. 9.

18: Ps. li. 5.

19: Job ix. 20, Job ix. 30. Sept.

20: 1 John ii. 1, 1 John ii. 2.

21: S. John xiii. 10.

22: S. Matt. xvi. 18.

23: S. Luke xxi. 31.

24: S. Matt. vi. 12.

25: 1 Cor. ix. 27.

26: 2 Cor. xii. 7.

27: 2 Cor. xi. 3.

28: 2 Cor. ii. 10, 2 Cor. ii. 11.

29: 1 Cor. x. 13.

30: 1 Cor. x. 12.

31: Gal. v. 7.

32: 1 Thess. ii. 18.

33: 1 Cor. vii. 5.

34: Gal. v. 16, Gal. v. 17.

35: Eph. vi. 12.

36: Heb. vi. 4 sq.

37: Various dates, ranging between a.d. 126 and a.d. 173, are assigned to the origin of Montanism. In addition to the tenet, that the church has no power to remit sin after baptism (though the power was claimed for the Montanistic prophets) and that some sins exclude for ever from the communion of the saints on earth, although the mercy of God may be extended to them hereafter, Montanus held second marriages to be no better than adultery, proscribed military service and secular life in general, denounced profane learning and amusements of every kind, advocated extreme simplicity of female dress, practised frequent and severe fasting, and inculcated the most rigorous asceticism. The sect produced a great effect on the church and lasted until the sixth century. As is well known, Tertullian in middle life lapsed into Montanism, and he was the most distinguished of its champions. Montanism has been described as an anticipation of the mediaeval system of Rome.

38: The founder of the schism which afterwards bore the name of Novatian was Novatus, a presbyter of Carthage who went to Rome (about a.d. 250) and there co-operated with Novatianus, one of the most distinguished of the clergy of that city. The Novatianists, whose doctrines were near akin in many respects to those of Montanists, assumed the name of Cathari, or Puritans.

39: Heb. vi. 9.

40: James i. 12 sq.

41: Ecclus. xxvii. 5.

42: Ecclus. ii. 1.

43: James i. 22 sq.

44: James ii. 10.

45: Rom. xi. 32.

46: 2 Pet. ii. 9.

47: 2 Pet. ii. 17, 2 Pet. ii. 18.

48: Prov. xvi. 5. Sept.

49: Apoc. ii. 2 sq.

50: Matt. xi. 13.

51: 1 Cor. x. ix.

52: Ps. xxvi. 1, Ps. xxvi. 2.

53: Ps. li. 1.

54: 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 13.

55: 2 Kings xxiii. 29 sq. 2 Chron. xxxv. 20 sq.

56: Zech. iii. 1 sq.

57: Numb. xx. 13. Ps. cvi. 32.

58: Job v. 17.

59: Job vii. 1.

60: Jerome blends two passages, Is. xiv. 12 (in which the Sept. reading is "that sendest to;" R. V. "didst lay low") and Ezek. xxviii. 13 sq. In the passage from Isaiah the king of Babylon is compared to Lucifer, i.e. the shining one, the morning star, whose movements the Babylonians had been the first to record. See Sayce, Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments, p. 178, and Cheyne's Isaiah. The subject of Ezekiel's prophecy is the Prince of Tyre.

61: Luke x. 18.

62: Job xl. 16, Job xl. 21. R. V. "He lieth under the lotus trees, in the covert of the reed and the fen."

63: Job xli. 34. Sept. R. V. "King over the sons of pride."

64: Job xli. 13 sq. R. V. for the latter part of the verse has "Round about his teeth is terror, his strong scales are his pride." Jerome's words are not found in the existing Septuagint.

65: The Septuagint omits much in this portion of the Book of Job.

66: xli. 27.

67: That is, deriving jumenta from juvo. The derivation, however, is from jungo.

68: Ps. viii. 5 sq.

69: The Italian beccafico.

70: 1 Rom. xiv. 20: 1 Tim. iv. 5.

71: 1 Tim. iv. 3.

72: Castum. Another reading is Cossum i.e. wood-worms, which were considered a delicacy in Pontus and Phrygia. The reading Castum is supported by Tert., De Iejun. cap. 16: In nostris xerophagiis blasphemias ingerens. Casto Isidis et Cybeles eos adaequas. Compare Arnob. Bk. V., and Jerome's Letter cvii. ad Laetam c. 10, and below c. 7.

73: See note on p. 383.

74: That is, of Side in Pamphylia. He lived in the reigns of Hadrian and Antoninus Plus, a.d. 117-161. Only two fragments remain of his Greek poem in forty-two books.

75: He appears to be Flavius the Grammarian to whom reference is made in the Book on Illustrious Men, chap. 80: -Firmianus, quiet Lactantius, Arnobii discipulus, sub Diocletiano principe accitus cure Flavio grammatico, cujus de Medicinalibus versu compositi exstant libri, etc.

76: Born a.d. 23. His Historia Naturalis embraces astronomy, meteorology, geography, mineralogy, zoölogy, and botany and comprises according to the author's own account 20,000 matters of importance drawn from 2,000 volumes.

77: A native of Cilicia, who probably lived in the second century of the Christian era. He was a Greek physician and wrote a treatise on Materia Medica, in 5 books, which is still extant.

78: 2 Cor. xii. 14.

79: 2 Cor. iv. 16.

80: Phil. i. 23.

81: Rom. xiii. 14.

82: Matt. x. 9, Matt. xix. 21: Mark vi. 8.

83: Matt. xix. 21.

84: Cor. xv. 85.

85: 1 Cor. vi. 13.

86: That is, the wood-worm just referred to.

87: Pannonia, of which Valens also was a native.

88: This name, which signifies dwellers in caves, was applied by Greek geographers to various peoples, but especially to the uncivilized inhabitants of the west coast of the Red Sea, along the shores of Upper Egypt and Aethiopia. The whole coast was called Troglodytice.

89: In 376 the Goths were driven out of their country by the Huns. They were allowed by Valens to cross the Danube, but war soon broke out and the emperor was defeated with great slaughter on Aug. 9, 378.

90: The Sarmatians dwelt on the N. E. of the Sea of Azov, E. of the river Don.

91: They were located in the S. E. of Germany.

92: The name given to the great confederacy of German peoples who in a.d. 409 traversed Germany and Gaul, and invaded Spain. In 429 they conquered all the Roman dominions in Africa, and in 455 they plundered Rome. Their kingdom was destroyed by Belisarius in 535.

93: A people of Central Asia. Cyrus the Great was slain in an expedition against them.

94: On the Oxus near its entrance into the Caspian Sea.

95: An agricultural people on the W. coast of Pontus.

96: Hyrcania was a province of the Persian Empire, on the S. and S. E. shores of the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Jerome draws many of these details from the treatise of Porphyry Peri apoxhj emyuxiwn.

97: Antinous was drowned in the Nile. a.d. 122. The emperor's grief was so great that he enrolled his favourite amongst the gods, caused a temple to be erected to his honour at Mantines, and founded the city of Antinoopolis.

98: Ter. Eunuch. iv. 5, 6.

99: Jer. ix. 21.

100: An Egyptian perfuming powder.

101: Probably an ointment made from the grape of the wild vine.

102: The celebrated Cynic philosopher. He died at Corinth, at the age of nearly 90, b.c. 323.

103: Academia was a piece of land on the Cephissus about three-quarters of a mile from Athens, originally belonging to the hero Academus. Here was a Gymnasium with plane and olive plantations, etc. Plato had a piece of land in the neighbourhood; here he taught, and after him his followers, who were hence called Academici. Cicero called his villa Academia.

104: Flourished about b.c. 320. Though heir to a large fortune he renounced it all, and lived and died as a true Cynic. He was called the "door-opener," because it was his practice to visit every house at Athens and rebuke its inmates.

105: A common form of Gnostic error revived many centuries afterwards by the Anabaptists.

106: 1 Tim. v. 6.

107: See Cicero, Repub. Bk. III.

108: Sallust. In Cat. ch. 1.

109: Prov. xx. 1.

110: The most celebrated physician of antiquity. Born about b.c. 460, died about 357.

111: Born at Pergamum a.d. 130, died probably in the year 200. His writings are considered to have had a more extensive influence on medical science than even those of Hippocrates.

112: Fabricius was censor in b.c. 275, and devoted himself to repressing the prevalent taste for luxury. The story of his expelling from the Senate P. Cornelius Rufinus because he possessed ten pounds' weight of silver-plate is well-known.

113: Curius Dentatus, Consul b.c. 200 with P. Cornelius Rufinus to whom allusion has just been made, was no less distinguished for simplicity of life than was Fabricius. He was censor b.c. 272.

114: Ep. Lib. I. ep. 2.

115: Or, "an ante-room to the closet"- Meditatorium. Comp. Tertullian, Treatise on Fasting, ch. 6.

116: The Peripatetic philosopher, geographer, and historian, a disciple of Aristotle and the friend of Theophrastus.

117: Chaeremon was chief librarian of the Alexandrian library. He afterwards became one of Nero's tutors.

118: Wars, Book II., ch. viii. 2 sq.; Antiquities, Bk. xviii I. 2 sq. Josephus nowhere says that the Essenes abstained from flesh and wine, or fasted daily. Philo commends them for so doing. Jerome here, as above, borrows from Porphyry. The "Wars of the Jews or History of the Destruction of Jerusalem," are here called the "History of the Jewish Captivity."

119: Philo the Jew. His exact date cannot be given; but he was advanced in years when he went to Rome (a.d. 40) on his famous embassy in behalf of his countrymen.

120: Neanthes lived about b.c. 241. He was a voluminous writer, chiefly on historical subjects.

121: There were many physicians of this name.

122: The sun-god of the Persians.

123: Supposed to be the same as the Bardesanes born at Edessa in Mesopotamia, who flourished in the latter half of the second century. Jerome again refers to him in the book on Illustrious Men, c. 33.

124: Xenocrates was born b.c. 396, died b.c. 314.

125: Triptolemus was the legendary inventor of the plough and of agriculture.

126: Poems ascribed to the mythical Orpheus are quoted by Plato. The extant poems which bear his name are forgeries of Christian grammarians and philosophers of the Alexandrine school; but some fragments of the old Orphic poetry are said to be remaining.

127: Antisthenes was the founder of the Cynic philosophy. He was a devoted disciple of Socrates and flourished about b.c. 366.

128: The distinguished Peripatetic philosopher and historian. He lived, probably, about the time of Ptolemy Philopator (b.c. 222-205).

129: Gen. vi. 3, Gen. vi. 5.

130: Gen. viii. 21: Gen. ix. 3.

131: Ex. xvi. 3.

132: Numb. xi. 4-6.

133: Deut. xxxii. 15. "Beloved" (dilectus). Correctly Jeshurun, that is, the Upright, a name of Israel.

134: Deut. viii. 12-14.

135: The curious custom of representing Moses with horns arose from a mistake in the Vulgate rendering. The Hebrew verb lwq@ 136: Luc. ix. 31.

137: Ex. xvii. 8.

138: Josh. x. 13.

139: 1 Sam. xiv. 24. Heb. "entered into the wood." The English version follows the Hebrew. The Sept. hrista (Jerome's prandebat) is perhaps only a repetition of the preceding thought. Another rendering inserts the negative, ouk hrista .

140: 1 Sam. xiv. 24.

141: 1 Kings xix. 8-11.

- 142: 1 Sam. vii. 7.
- 143: 2 Kings xviii.
- 144: Gen. xviii. 23 sq.
- 145: 1 Kings xxi. 27-29.
- 146: 1 Sam. i. 15, 1 Sam. i. 17.
- 147: Dan. i and Dan. ii.
- 148: Dan. ix. 23. Heb. A man of desires. A. V. greatly beloved.
- 149: The story is in the apocryphal part of the book of Daniel.
- 150: Ps. cii. 9.
- 151: Ps. cix. 24.
- 152: 2 Sam. xii. 13.
- 153: Lev. x. 9.
- 154: Amos ii. 12.
- 155: Jer. xxxv. 18.
- 156: S. Luke ii. 36.
- 157: S. Jerome is in accord with the Vulgate, Peshito, and certain manuscripts, but the R. V. omits S. Matt. xvii. 21 (Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting) and in S. Mark ix. 29 omits the words respecting fasting. S. Luke does not refer to our Lord's supposed remark.
- 158: Acts x. 4.
- 159: 2 Cor. xi. 27.
- 160: 1 Tim. v. 23.
- 161: 1 Tim. iv. 3.
- 162: Prov. xvi. 26. Sept.
- 163: S. Matt. xi. 12.
- 164: Rom. xiv. 3.
- 165: 1 Rom. xiv. 14 sq.
- 166: Rom. xiv. 2.
- 167: Rom. xiv. 5 sq.
- 168: S. Matt. v. 6.
- 169: S. John iv. 32.

170: S. Matt. v. 34. (Rather, not to be anxious about it.) 171: S. Luke xxiv. 42: S. John xxi. 13.

172: S. Luke xv. 19-31.

173: S. Matt. xvi. 17, Matt. xvi. 18.

174: See above.

175: S. Mark v. 43: S. Luke viii. 55. Our Lord is not related to have given the command in the case of the son of the widow of Nain, or in that of Lazarus.

176: S. John xii. 2.

177: Acts x. 10. In our version "the housetop."

178: S. John iv. 6.

179: Isa. lviii. 5 sq.

180: xvi. 29.

181: Numb. xi. 34. Tertullian also speaks of the graves remaining.

182: 1 Kings xiii. 24.

183: Joel i. 14: Joel ii. 15. Jerome agrees with the Sept. Qerapeia Qerapeia 184: S. Matt. xxv. 34.

185: S. Matt. xxv. 41.

186: S. John viii. 44.

187: S. Matt. xix. 29: S. Mark x. 29, Mark x. 30: S. Luke xviii. 29, Luke xviii. 30.

188: S. John vi. 56.

189: S. John xiv. 23.

190: S. John xiv. 2.

191: 1 Cor. iii. 16: 1 Cor. vi. 19.

192: S. John xvii. 20-23.

193: In Cyprus, where Zeno the founder of the Stoic school was born.

194: i.e., Jovinianus. Jerome for the moment addresses the reader.

195: Persius I. 128, Conington's translation.

196: Ezek. xxxiv. 17, Ezek. xxxiv. 20, Ezek. xxxiv. 21.

197: Ezek. xxxiv. 31.

198: Rom. xii. 3 sq.

199: Rom. xiv. 5.

200: 1 Cor. iii. 6 sq.
201: 1 Cor. iii. 10 sq.
202: 1 Cor. iv. 1, 1 Cor. iv. 2.
203: 1 Cor. ix. 13 sq.
204: 1 Cor. xii. 4.
205: 1 Cor. xii. 12.
206: 1 Cor. xii. 28 sq.
207: 1 Cor. xiii. 8, 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 1 Cor. xiii. 10.
208: 1 Cor. xiii. 18: 1 Cor. xiv. 1.
209: 1 Cor. xiv. 5.
210: 1 Cor. xiv. 18.
211: 1 Cor. xv. 9, 1 Cor. xv. 10.
212: 1 Cor. xv. 22.
213: 1 Cor. xv. 39.
214: Job ix. 9: Job xxxviii. 32.
215: 2 Cor. v. 10.
216: 2 Cor. ix. 6.
217: Eph. iii. 10.
218: Eph. iv. 7.
219: Ps. lxxiii. 17.
220: See Acts xxvii. 23 and the context.
221: Gen. xix. 18-21.
222: 1 Sam. xxx. 1 sq.
223: S. Luke xiii. 4.
224: 1 Cor. xi. 27.
225: Mal. iv. 2.
226: S. Matt. xxv. 13.
227: S. John xix. 6.
228: Wisd. vi. 7.

229: Ex. xxi. 2.

230: Lev. xxv. 13.

231: S. Matt. xix. 29: S. Mark x. 30: S. Luke xviii. 30. In S. Matthew some authorities agree with S. Luke in reading " manifold. "

232: Matt. xi. 11.

233: S. Luke xvii. 5.

234: Matt. xiv. 31.

235: Jer. xxxi. 31.

236: Jer. xxxi. 33, Jer. xxxi. 34.

237: S. Matt. v. 19.

238: S. Luke xiv. 9.

239: S. John xiv. 2, John xiv. 3.

240: S. Matt. xx. 23.

241: S. John xiv. 3.

242: Ps. lxxiii. 26.

243: Ez. xliv. 10.

244: 1 Cor. vi. 19.

245: Correctly, a portion of two, i.e., the portion of a first-born. Deut. xxi. 17.

246: S. Luke vii., S. Matt. xxvi., S. Mark xiv., S. John xii.

247: S. John xvii. 20, John xvii. 21.

248: 2 Pet. i. 4.

249: S. John xvii. 23.

250: S. John i. 12, John i. 13.

251: S. John vi. 57 sq.

252: 1 John iv. 13, 1 John iv. 15.

253: Gal. iv. 19.

254: 1 Cor. xii. 22-24.

255: S. Luke xi. 34.

256: 1 John v. 16.

257: Jer. vii. 16.

258: Rom. v. 14.

259: Wisd. i. 11.

260: Ps. cxvi. 11. Rom. iii. 4.

261: Ps. li. 4.

262: Ezek. xvi. 62, Ezek. xvi. 63.

263: Ezek. xxxvi. 31, Ezek. xxxvi. 32.

264: Letter XXI.

265: S. Matt. xx. 26.

266: S. Luke vii. 47.

267: S. Matt. xxv. 15 sq.

268: Phil. iii. 13.

269: Josh. ix. 27.

270: 2 Sam. xxi. 1.

271: S. Luke xii. 47, Luke xii. 48.

272: Ps. cxix. in our arrangement of the Psalter. The psalm is divided into twenty-two portions, which begin with the successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet. The following fifteen psalms are called in our Authorized Version, Songs of Degrees (Vulgate, graduum, steps). For the origin of the title, Wordsworth, or Neal and Littledale on Ps. cxx. may be consulted.

273: Ps. cxxxiv. 1.

274: Numb. xxxiv. 15; Josh. xiv. 3.

275: Numb. xviii. 20.

276: Lev. xvi. 2; Heb. ix. 7.

277: Ex. xxviii. etc.

278: Numb. vii. 5.

279: Aristippus though the disciple of Socrates, taught that pleasure was the highest good.

280: Ps. cxx. 5.

281: Is. lxiii. 3.

282: S. John xix. 6, John xix. 15.

283: Jovinianus's doctrine is said to have influenced some who had taken a vow of virginity, to marry.

284: Virgil Aen. iv. 172.

285: Pythagoras asserted that he had once been the Trojan Euphorbus.

286: Is. iii. 16.

287: Jer. li. 6; Jer. vi. 14.

288: Jer. vii. 4; Ps. xiv. 4, Ps. liii. 4.

289: Jer. xxviii. 13.

290: That is, coelebs from coelum.

291: Jer. v. 8.

292: That is, Jove.

Against Vigilantius

Against Vigilantius

Introduction.

Against Vigilantius

Introduction.

Full details respecting Vigilantius, against whom this treatise, the result of a single night's labour, is directed, may be found in a work on "Vigilantius and His Times," published in 1844 by Dr. Gilly, canon of Durham. It will perhaps, however, assist the reader if we briefly remark that he was born about 370, at Calagurris, near Convenae (Comminges), which was a station on the Roman road from Aquitaine to Spain. His father was probably the keeper of the inn, and Vigilantius appears to have been brought up to his father's business. He was of a studious character, and Sulpicius Severus, the ecclesiastical historian, who had estates in those parts, took him into his service, and, possibly, made him manager of his estates. Having been ordained he was introduced to Jerome (then living at Bethlehem, in 395) through Paulinus of Nola, who was the friend of Sulpicius Severus. After staying with Jerome for a considerable time he begged to be dismissed, and left in great haste without giving any reason. Returning to Gaul, he settled in his native country. Jerome hearing that he was spreading reports of him as favouring the views of Origen, and in other ways defaming him and his friends, wrote him a sharp letter of rebuke (Letter LXI.). The work of Vigilantius which drew from Jerome the following treatise was written in the year a.d. 406; not "hastily, under provocation such as he may have felt in leaving Bethlehem," but after the lapse of six or seven years. The points against which he argued as being superstitious are: (1) the reverence paid to the relics of holy men by carrying them round the church in costly vessels or silken wrappings to be kissed, and the prayers offered to the dead; (2) the late watchings at the basilicas of the martyrs, with their attendant scandals, the burning of numerous tapers, alleged miracles, etc.; (3) the sending of alms to Jerusalem, which, Vigilantius urged, had better be spent among the poor in each separate diocese, and the monkish vow of poverty; (4) the exaggerated estimate of virginity. The bishop of the diocese, Exsuperius of Toulouse, was strongly in favour of the views of Vigilantius, and they began to spread widely. Complaints having reached Jerome through the presbyter Riparius, he at once expressed his indignation, and offered to answer in detail if the work of Vigilantius were sent to him. In 406 he received it through Sisinnius, who was bearing alms to the East. It has been truly said that this treatise has less of reason and more of abuse than any other which Jerome wrote. But in spite of this the author was followed by the chief ecclesiastics of the day, and the practices impugned by Vigilantius prevailed almost unchecked till the sixteenth century.

1. The world has given birth to many monsters; in1 Isaiah we read of centaurs and sirens, screech-owls and pelicans. Job, in mystic language, describes Leviathan and Behemoth; Cerberus and the birds of Stympalus, the Erymanthian boar and the Nemean lion, the Chimaera and the many-headed Hydra, are told of in poetic fables. Virgil describes Cacus. Spain has produced Geryon, with his three bodies. Gaul alone has had no monsters, but has ever been rich in men of courage and great eloquence. All at once Vigilantius, or, more correctly, Dormitantius, has arisen, animated by an unclean spirit, to fight against the Spirit of Christ. and to deny that religious reverence is to be paid to the tombs of the martyrs. Vigils, he says, are to be condemned; Alleluia must never be sung except at Easter; continence is a heresy; chastity a hot-bed of lust. And as Euphorbus is said to have been born again in the person of Pythagoras, so in this fellow the corrupt mind of Jovinianus has arisen; so that in him, no less than in his predecessor, we are bound to meet the snares of the devil. The words may be justly applied to him:² "Seed of evil-doers, prepare thy children for the slaughter because of the sins of thy father." Jovinianus, condemned by the authority of the Church of Rome, amidst pheasants and swine's flesh, breathed out, or rather belched out his spirit. And now this tavern-keeper of Calagurris, who, according to the name of his³ native village is a Quintilian, only dumb instead of eloquent, is⁴ mixing water with the wine. According to the trick which he knows of old, he is trying to blend his perfidious poison with the Catholic faith; he assails virginity and hates chastity; he revels with worldlings and declaims against the fasts of the saints; he plays the philosopher over his cups, and soothes himself with the sweet strains of psalmody, while he smacks his lips over his cheese-cakes; nor could he deign to listen to the songs of David and Jeduthun, and Asaph and the sons of Core, except at the banqueting table. This I have poured forth with more grief than amusement, for I cannot restrain myself and turn a deaf ear to the wrongs inflicted on apostles and martyrs.

2. Shameful to relate, there are bishops who are said to be associated with him in his wickedness-if at least they are to be called bishops-who ordain no deacons but such as have been previously married; who credit no celibate with chastity-nay, rather, who show clearly what measure of holiness of life they can claim by indulging in evil suspicions of all men, and, unless the candidates for ordination appear before them with pregnant wives, and infants wailing in the arms of their mothers, will not administer to them Christ's ordinance. What are the Churches of the East to do? What is to become of the Egyptian Churches and those belonging to the Apostolic Seat, which accept for the ministry only men who are virgins, or those who practice continency, or, if married, abandon their conjugal rights? Such is the teaching of Dormitantius, who throws the reins upon the neck of lust, and by his encouragement doubles the natural heat of the flesh, which in youth is mostly at boiling point, or rather slakes it by intercourse with women; so that there is nothing to separate us from swine, nothing wherein we differ from the brute creation, or from horses, respecting which it is written:⁵ "They were toward women like raging horses; everyone neighed after his neighbour's wife." This is that which the Holy Spirit says by the mouth of David:⁶ "Be ye not like horse and mule which have no understanding." And again respecting Dormitantius and his friends:⁷ "Bind the jaws of them who draw not near unto thee with bit and bridle."

3. But it is now thee for us to adduce his own words and answer him in detail. For, possibly, in his malice, he may choose once more to misrepresent me, and say that I have trumped up a case for the sake of showing off my rhetorical and declamatory powers in combating it, like the letter⁸ which I wrote to Gaul, relating to a mother and daughter who were at variance. This little treatise, which I now dictate, is due to the reverend presbyters Riparius and Desiderius, who write that their parishes have been defiled by being in his neighbourhood, and have sent me, by our brother Sisinnius, the books which he vomited forth in a drunken fit. They also declare that some persons are found who, from their inclination to his vices, assent to his blasphemies. He is a barbarian both in speech and knowledge. His style is rude. He cannot defend even the truth; but, for the sake of laymen, and poor women, laden with sins, ever learning and never coming to a knowledge of the truth, I will spend upon his melancholy trifles a single night's labour, otherwise I shall seem to have treated with contempt the letters of the reverend persons who have entreated me to undertake the task.

4. He certainly well represents his race. Sprung from a set of brigands and persons collected together from all quarters (I mean those whom Cn. Pompey, after the conquest of Spain, when he was hastening to return for his triumph, brought down from the Pyrenees and gathered together into one town, whence the name of the city Convenae⁹), he has carried on their brigand practices by his attack upon the Church of God. Like his ancestors the Vectones, the Arrabaci, and the Celtiberians, he makes his raids upon the churches of Gaul, not carrying the standard of the cross, but, on the contrary, the ensign of the devil. Pompey did just the same in the East. After overcoming the Cilician and Isaurian pirates and brigands, he founded a city, bearing his own name, between Cilicia and Isauria. That city, however, to this day, observes the ordinances of its ancestors, and no Dormitanti¹⁰ has arisen in it; but Gaul supports a native foe, and sees seated in the Church a man who has lost his head and who ought to be put in the strait-jacket which Hippocrates recommended. Among other blasphemies, he may be heard to say, "What need is there for you not only to pay such honour, not to say adoration, to the thing, whatever it may be, which you carry about in a little vessel and worship?" And again, in the same book, "Why do you kiss and adore a bit of powder wrapped up in a cloth?" And again, in the same book, "Under the cloak of religion we see what is all but a heathen ceremony introduced into the churches: while the sun is still shining, heaps of tapers are lighted, and everywhere a paltry bit of powder, wrapped up in a costly cloth, is kissed and worshipped. Great honour do men of this sort pay to the blessed martyrs, who, they think, are to be made glorious by tumpety tapers, when the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne, with all the brightness of His majesty, gives them light?"

5. Madman, who in the world ever adored the martyrs? who ever thought man was God? Did not¹⁰ Paul and Barnabas, when the people of Lycaonia thought them to be Jupiter and Mercury, and would have offered sacrifices to them, rend their clothes and declare they were men? Not that they were not better than Jupiter and Mercury, who were but men long ago dead, but because, under the mistaken ideas of the Gentiles, the honour due to God was being paid to them. And we read the same respecting Peter, who, when Cornelius wished to adore him, raised him by the hand, and said,¹¹ "Stand up, for I also am a man." And have you the audacity to speak of "the mysterious something or other which you carry about in a little vessel and worship?" I want to know what it is that you call "something or other." Tell us more clearly (that there may be no restraint on your blasphemy) what you mean by the phrase "a bit of powder wrapped up in a costly cloth in a tiny vessel." It is nothing less than the relics of the martyrs which he is vexed to see covered with a costly veil, and not bound up with rags or hair-cloth, or thrown on the midden, so that Vigilanti¹² alone in his drunken slumber may be worshipped. Are we, therefore guilty of sacrilege when we enter the basilicas of the Apostles? Was the Emperor Constantius I. guilty of sacrilege when he transferred the sacred relics of Andrew, Luke, and Timothy to Constantinople? In their presence the demons cry out, and the devils who dwell in Vigilanti¹² confess that they feel the influence of the saints. And at the present day is the Emperor Arcadius guilty of sacrilege, who after so long a time has conveyed the bones of the blessed Samuel from Judea to Thrace? Are all the bishops to be considered not only sacrilegious, but silly into the bargain, because they carried that most worthless thing, dust and ashes, wrapped in silk in golden vessel? Are the people of all the Churches fools, because they went to meet the sacred relics, and welcomed them with as much joy as if they beheld a living prophet in the midst of them, so that there was one great swarm of people from Palestine to Chalcedon with one voice re-echoing the praises of Christ? They were forsooth, adoring Samuel and not Christ, whose Levite and prophet Samuel was. You show mistrust because you think only of the dead body, and therefore blaspheme. Read the Gospel-12 "The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob: He is not the God of the dead, but of the living." If then they are alive, they are not, to use your expression, kept in honourable confinement.

6. For you say that the souls of Apostles and martyrs have their abode either in the bosom of Abraham, or in the place of refreshment, or under the altar of God, and that they cannot leave their own tombs, and be present there they will. They are, it seems, of senatorial rank. and are not subjected to the worst kind of prison and the society of murderers, but are kept apart in liberal and honourable custody in the isles of the blessed and the Elysian fields. Will you lay down the law for God? Will you put the Apostles into chains? So that to the day of judgment they are to be kept in confinement, and are not with their Lord, although it is written concerning them,¹³ "They follow the Lamb, whithersoever he goeth." If the Lamb is present everywhere, the same must be believed respecting those who are with the Lamb. And while the devil and the demons wander through the whole world, and with only too great speed present themselves everywhere; are martyrs, after the shedding of their blood, to be kept out of sight shut up in a¹⁴ coffin, from whence they cannot escape? You say, in your pamphlet, that so long as we are alive we can pray for one another; but once we die, the prayer of no person for another can be heard, and all the more because the martyrs, though they¹⁵ cry for the avenging of their blood, have never been able to obtain their request. If Apostles and martyrs while still in the body can pray for others, when they ought still to be anxious for themselves, how much more must they do so when once they have won their crowns, overcome, and triumphed? A single man, Moses, oft¹⁶ wins pardon from God for six hundred thousand armed men; and¹⁷ Stephen, the follower of his Lord and the first Christian martyr, entreates pardon for his persecutors; and when once they have entered on their life with Christ, shall they have less power than before? The Apostle Paul¹⁸ says that two hundred and seventy-six souls were given to him in the ship; and when, after his dissolution, he has begun to be with Christ, must he shut his mouth, and be unable to say a word for those who throughout the whole world have believed in his Gospel? Shall Vigilantius the live dog be better than Paul the dead lion? I should be right in saying so after¹⁹ Ecclesiastes, if I admitted that Paul is dead in spirit. The truth is that the saints are not called dead, but are said to be asleep. Wherefore²⁰ Lazarus, who was about to rise again, is said to have slept. And the Apostle²¹ forbids the Thessalonians to be sorry for those who were asleep. As for you, when wide awake you are asleep, and asleep when you write, and you bring before me an apocryphal book which, under the name of Esdras, is read by you and those of your feather, and in this book it is²² written that after death no one dares pray for others. I have never read the book: for what need is there to take up what the Church does not receive? It can hardly be your intention to confront me with Balsamus, and Barbelus, and the Thesaurus of Manichaeus, and the ludicrous name of Leusiboras; though possibly because you live at the foot of the Pyrenees, and border on Iberia, you follow the incredible marvels of the ancient heretic²³ Basilides and his so-called knowledge, which is mere ignorance, and set forth what is condemned by the authority of the whole world. I say this because in your short treatise you quote Solomon as if he were on your side, though Solomon never wrote the words in question at all; so that, as you have a second Esdras you may have a second Solomon. And, if you like, you may read the imaginary revelations of all the patriarchs and prophets, and, when you have learned them, you may sing them among the women in their weaving-shops, or rattler order them to be read in your taverns, the more easily by these melancholy ditties to stimulate the ignorant mob to replenish their cups.

7. As to the question of tapers, however, we do not, as you in vain misrepresent us, light them in the daytime, but by their solace we would cheer the darkness of the night, and watch for the dawn, lest we should be blind like you and sleep in darkness. And if some persons, being ignorant and simple minded laymen, or, at all events, religious women-of whom we can truly sa,²⁴ "I allow that they hive a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge"-adopt the practice in honour of the martyrs, what harm is thereby done to you? Once upon a thee even the Apostles²⁵ pleaded that the ointment was wasted, but they were rebuked by the voice of the Lord. Christ did not need the ointment, nor do martyrs need the light of tapers; and yet that woman poured out the ointment in honour of Christ, and her heart's devotion was accepted. All those who light these tapers have their reward according to their faith, as the Apostle says:²⁶ "Let every one abound in his own meaning." Do you call men of this sort idolaters? I do not deny, that all of us who believe in Christ have passed from the error of idolatry. For we are not born Christians, but become Christians by being born again. And because we formerly worshipped idols, does it follow that we ought not now to worship God lest we seem to pay like honour to Him and to idols? In the one case respect was paid to idols, and therefore the ceremony is to be abhorred; in the other the martyrs are venerated, and the same ceremony is therefore to be allowed. Throughout the whole Eastern Church, even when there are no relics of the martyrs, whenever the Gospel is to be read the candles are lighted, although the dawn may be reddening the sky, not of course to scatter the darkness, but by way of evidencing our joy.²⁷ And accordingly the virgins in the Gospel always have their lamps lighted. And the Apostles are²⁸ told to have their loins girded, and their lamps burning in their hands. And of John Baptist we read,²⁹ "He was the lamp that burneth and shineth"; so that, under the figure of corporeal light, that light is represented of which we read in the Psalter,³⁰ "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, O Lord, and a light unto my paths."

8. Does the bishop of Rome do wrong when he offers sacrifices to the Lord over the venerable bones of the dead men Peter and Paul, as we should say, but according to you, over a worthless bit of dust, and judges their tombs worthy to be Christ's altars? And not only is the bishop of one city in error, but the bishops of the whole world, who, despite the tavern-keeper Vigilantius, enter the basilicas of the dead, in which "a worthless bit of dust and ashes lies wrapped up in a cloth," defiled and defiling all else. Thus, according to you, the sacred buildings are like the sepulchres of the Pharisees, whitened without, while within they have filthy remains, and are full of foul smells and uncleanness. And then he dares to expectorate his filth upon the subject and to say: "Is it the case that the souls of the martyrs love their ashes, and hover round them, and are always present, lest haply if any one come to pray and they were absent, they could not hear?" Oh, monster, who ought to be banished to the ends of the earth! do you laugh at the relics of the martyrs, and in company with Eunomius, the father of this heresy, slander the Churches of Christ? Are you not afraid of being in such company, and of speaking against us the same things which he utters against the Church? For all his followers refuse to enter the basilicas of Apostles and martyrs, so that, forsooth, they may worship the dead Eunomius, whose books they consider are of more authority than the Gospels; and they believe that the light of truth was in him just as other heretics maintain that the Paraclete came into Montanus, and say that Manichaeus himself was the Paraclete. You cannot find an occasion of boasting even in supposing that you are the inventor of a new kind of wickedness, for your heresy long ago broke out against the Church. It found, however, an opponent in Tertullian, a very learned man, who wrote a famous treatise which he called most correctly Scorpiacum,³¹ because, as the scorpion bends itself like a bow to inflict its wound. so what was formerly called the heresy of Cain pours poison into the body of the Church; it has slept or rather been buried for a long time, but has been now awakened by Dormitanti. I am surprised you do not tell us that there must upon no account be martyrdoms, inasmuch as God, who does not ask for the blood of goats and bulls, much less requires the blood of men. This is what you say, or rather, even if you do not say it, you are taken as meaning to assert it. For in maintaining that the relics of the martyrs are to be trodden under foot, you forbid the shedding of their blood as being worthy of no honour.

9. Respecting vigils and the frequent keeping of night-watches in the basilicas of the martyrs, I have given a brief reply in another letter³² which, about two years ago, I wrote to the reverend presbyter Riparius. You argue that they ought to be abjured, lest we seem to be often keeping Easter, and appear not to observe the customary yearly vigils. If so, then sacrifices should not be offered to Christ on the Lord's day lest we frequently keep the Easter of our Lord's Resurrection, and introduce the custom of having many Easters instead of one. We must not, however, impute to pious men the faults and errors of youths and worthless women such as are often detected at night. It is true that, even at the Easter vigils, something of the kind usually comes to light; but the faults of a few form no argument against religion in general, and such persons, without keeping vigil, can go wrong either in their own houses or in those of other people. The treachery of Judas did not annul the loyalty of the Apostles. And if others keep vigil badly, our vigils are not thereby to be stopped; nay, rather let those who sleep to gratify their lust be compelled to watch that they may preserve their chastity. For if a thing once done be good, it cannot be bad if often done; and if there is some fault to be avoided, the blame lies not in its being done often, but in its being done at all. And so we should not watch at Easter-tide for fear that adulterers may satisfy their long pent-up desires, or that the wife may find an opportunity for sinning without having the key turned against her by her husband. The occasions which seldom recur are those which are most eagerly longed for.

10. I cannot traverse all the topics embraced in the letters of the reverend presbyters; I will adduce a few points from the tracts of Vigilantius. He argues against the signs and miracles which are wrought in the basilicas of the martyrs, and says that they are of service to the unbelieving, not to believers, as though the question now were for whose advantage they occur, not by what power. Granted that signs belong to the faithless, who, because they would not obey the word and doctrine, are brought to believe by means of signs. Even our Lord wrought signs for the unbelieving, and yet our Lord's signs are not on that account to be impugned, because those people were faithless, but must be worthy of greater admiration because they were so powerful that they subdued even the hardest hearts, and compelled men to believe. And so I will not have you tell me that signs are for the unbelieving; but answer my question-how is it that poor worthless dust and ashes are associated with this wondrous power of signs and miracles? I see, I see, most unfortunate of mortals, why you are so sad and what causes your fear. That unclean spirit who forces you to write these things has often been tortured by this worthless dust, aye, and is being tortured at this moment, and though in your case he conceals his wounds, in others he makes confession. You will hardly follow the heathen and impious Porphyry and Eunomius, and pretend that these are the tricks of the demons, and that they do not really cry out, but feign their torments. Let me give you my advice go to the basilicas of the martyrs, and some day you will be cleansed; you will find there many in like case with yourself, and will be set on fire, not by the martyrs' tapers which offend you, but by invisible flames; and you will then confess what you now deny, and will freely proclaim your name-that you who speak in the person of Vigilantius are really either Mercury, for greedy of gain was he; or Nocturnus, who, according to Plautus's "Amphitryon," slept while Jupiter, two nights together, had his adulterous connection with Alcmena, and thus begat the mighty Hercules; or at all events Father Bacchus, of drunken fame, with the tankard hanging from his shoulder, with his ever ruby face, foaming lips, and unbridled brawling.

11. Once, when a sudden earthquake in this province in the middle of the night awoke us all out of our sleep, you, the most prudent and the wisest of men, began to pray without putting your clothes on, and recalled to our minds the story of Adam and Eve in Paradise; they, indeed, when their eyes were opened were ashamed, for they saw that they were naked, and covered their shame with the leaves of trees; but you, who were stripped Mike of your shirt and of your faith, in the sudden terror which overwhelmed you, and with the fumes of your last night's booze still hanging about you, showed your wisdom by exposing your nakedness in only too evident a manner to the eyes of the brethren. Such are the adversaries of the Church; these are the leaders who fight against the blood of the martyrs; here is a specimen of the orators who thunder against the Apostles, or, rather, such are the mad dogs which bark at the disciples of Christ.

12. I confess my own fear, for possibly it may be thought to spring from superstition. When I have been angry, or have had evil thoughts in my mind, or some phantom of the night has beguiled me, I do not dare to enter the basilicas of the martyrs, I shudder all over in body and soul. You may smile, perhaps, and deride this as on a level with the wild fancies of weak women. If it be so, I am not ashamed of having a faith like that of those who were the first to see the risen Lord; who were sent to the Apostles; who, in the person of the mother of our Lord and Saviour, were commended to the holy Apostles. Belch out your shame, if you will, with men of the world, I will fast with women; yea, with religious men whose looks witness to their chastity, and who, with the cheek pale from prolonged abstinence, show forth the chastity of Christ.

13. Something, also, appears to be troubling you. You are afraid that, if continence, sobriety, and fasting strike root among the people of Gaul, your taverns will not pay, and you will be unable to keep up through the night your diabolical vigils and drunken revels. Moreover, I have learnt from those same letters that, in defiance of the authority of Paul, nay, rather of Peter, John, and James, who gave the right hand of fellowship to Paul and Barnabas, and commanded them to remember the poor, you forbid any pecuniary relief to be sent to Jerusalem for the benefit of the saints. Now, if I reply to this, you will immediately give tongue and cry out that I am pleading my own cause. You, forsooth, were so generous to the whole community that if you had not come to Jerusalem, and lavished your own money or that of your patrons, we should all be on the verge of starvation. I say what the blessed Apostle Paul says in nearly all his Epistles; and he makes it a rule for the Churches of the Gentiles that, on the first day of the week, that is, on the Lord's day, contributions should be made by every one which should be sent up to Jerusalem for the relief of the saints, and that either by his own disciples, or by those whom they should themselves approve; and if it were thought fit, he would himself either send, or take what was collected. Also in the Acts of the Apostles, when speaking to the governor Felix, he says,³³ "After many years I went up to Jerusalem to bring alms to my nation and offerings, and to perform my vows, amidst which they found me purified in the temple." Might he not have distributed in some other part of the world, and in the infant Churches which he was training in his own faith, the gifts he had received from others? But he longed to give to the poor of the holy places who, abandoning their own little possessions for the sake of Christ, turned with their whole heart to the service of the Lord. It would take too long now if I purposed to repeat all the passages from the whole range of his Epistles in which he advocates and urges with all his heart that money be sent to Jerusalem and to the holy places for the faithful; not to gratify avarice, but to give relief; not to accumulate wealth, but to support the weakness of the poor body, and to stave off cold and hunger. And this custom continues in Judea to the present day, not only among us, but also among the Hebrews, so that they who³⁴ meditate in the law of the Lord, day and night, and have³⁵ no father upon earth except the Lord alone, may be cherished by the aid of the synagogues and of the whole world; that there may be³⁶ equality-not that some may be refreshed while others are in distress, but that the abundance of some may support the need of others.

14. You will reply that every one can do this in his own country, and that there will never be wanting poor who ought to be supported with the resources of the Church. And we do not deny that doles should be distributed to all poor people, even to Jews and Samaritans, if the means will allow. But the Apostle teaches that alms should be given to all, indeed,³⁷ especially, however, to those who are of the household of faith. And respecting these the Saviour said in the Gospel,³⁸ "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, who may receive you into everlasting habitations." What! Can those poor creatures, with their rags and filth, lorded over, as they are, by raging lust, can they who own nothing, now or hereafter, have eternal habitations? No doubt it is not the poor simply, but the poor in spirit, who are called blessed; those of whom it is written,³⁹ "Blessed is he who gives his mind to the poor and needy; the Lord shall deliver him in the evil day." But the fact is, in supporting the poor of the common people, what is needed is not mind, but money. In the case of the saintly poor the mind has blessed exercises, since you give to one who receives with a blush, and when he has received is grieved, that while sowing spiritual things he must reap your carnal things. As for his argument that they who keep what they have, and distribute among the poor, little by little, the increase of their property, act more wisely than they who sell their possessions, and once for all give all away, not I but the Lord shall make answer:⁴⁰ "If thou wilt be perfect, go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor, and come, follow Me." He speaks to him who wishes to be perfect, who, with the Apostles, leaves father, ship, and net. The man whom you approve stands in the second or third rank; yet we welcome him provided it be understood that the first is to be preferred to the second, and the second to the third.

15. Let me add that our monks are not to be deterred from their resolution by you with your viper's tongue and savage bite. Your argument respecting them runs thus: If all men were to seclude themselves and live in solitude, who is there to frequent the churches? Who will remain to win those engaged in secular pursuits? Who will be able to urge sinners to virtuous conduct? Similarly, if all were as silly as you, who could be wise? And, to follow out your argument, virginity would not deserve our approbation. For if all were virgins, we should have no marriages; the race would perish; infants would not cry in their cradles; midwives would lose their pay and turn beggars; and Dormitanti^{us}, all alone and shrivelled up with cold, would lie awake in his bed. The truth is, virtue is a rare thing and not eagerly sought after by the many. Would that all were as the few of whom it is said:⁴¹ "Many are called, few are chosen." The prison would be empty. But, indeed, a monk's function is not to teach, but to lament; to mourn either for himself or for the world, and with terror to anticipate our Lord's advent. Knowing his own weakness and the frailty of the vessel which he carries, he is afraid of stumbling, lest he strike against something, and it fall and be broken. Hence he shuns the sight of women, and particularly of young women, and so far chastens himself as to dread even what is safe.

16. Why, you will say, go to the desert? The reason is plain: That I may not hear or see you; that I may not be disturbed by your madness; that I may not be engaged in conflict with you; that the eye of the harlot may not lead me captive: that beauty may not lead me to unlawful embraces. You will reply: "This is not to fight, but to run away. Stand in line of battle, put on your armour and resist your foes, so that, having overcome, you may wear the crown." I confess my weakness. I would not fight in the hope of victory, lest some thee or other I lose the victory. If I flee, I avoid the sword; if I stand, I must either overcome or fall. But what need is there for me to let go certainties and follow after uncertainties? Either with my shield or with my feet I must shun death. You who fight may either be overcome or may overcome. I who fly do not overcome, inasmuch as I fly; but I fly to make sure that I may not be overcome. There is no safety in sleep with a serpent beside you. Possibly he will not bite me, yet it is possible that after a thee he may bite me. We call women mothers who are no older than sisters and daughters,⁴² and we do not blush to cloak our vices with the names of piety. What business has a monk in the women's cells? What is the meaning of secret conversation and looks which shun the presence of witnesses? Holy love has no restless desire. Moreover, what we have said respecting lust we must apply to avarice, and to all vices which are avoided by solitude. We therefore keep clear of the crowded cities, that we may not be compelled to do what we are urged to do, not so much by nature as by choice.

17. At the request of the reverend presbyters, as I have said, I have devoted to the dictation of these remarks the labour of a single night, for my brother Sisinnius is hastening his departure for Egypt, where he has relief to give to the saints, and is impatient to be gone. If it were not so, however, the subject itself was so openly blasphemous as to call for the indignation of a writer rather than a multitude of proofs. But if Dormitanti^{us} wakes up that he may again abuse me, and if he thinks fit to disparage me with that same blasphemous mouth with which he pulls to pieces Apostles and martyrs, I will spend upon him something more than this short lucubration. I will keep vigil for a whole night in his behalf and in behalf of his companions, whether they be disciples or masters, who think no man to be worthy of Christ's ministry unless he is married and his wife is seen to be with child.

1: Is. xiii. 21, Is. xiii. 22, and Is. xxxiv. 14-16.

2: Is. xix. 21. Sept.

3: Quintilian, the rhetorician, was born at Calagurris, in Spain, but not the same as the birthplace of Vigilantius.

4: Combining the cheating tavern-keeper with the heretic.

5: Jerem. v. 8.

6: Ps. xxxii. 9.

7: Ibid.

8: Letter CXVII.

9: From convenio, to come together.

10: Acts xiv. 11.

11: Acts x. 26.

12: Matt. xxii. 32.

13: Apoc. xiv. 4.

14: Another reading is, "Shut up in the altar."

15: Apoc. vi. 10.

16: Ex. xxxii. 30 sqq.

17: Acts vii. 59, Acts vii. 60.

18: Acts xxvii. 37.

19: ix. 4.

20: John xi. 11.

21: 1 Thess. iv. 13.

22: vii. 35 sq. The passage occurs in the Ethiopic and Arabic versions, not in the Latin. It was probably rejected in later times for dogmatic reasons.

23: The chief of the Egyptian Gnostics.

24: Rom. x. 2.

25: Matt. xxvi. 8; Mark xiv. 4.

26: Rom. xiv. 5. Let each man be fully assured in his own mind. R. V.

27: Matt. xxv. 1.

28: Luke xii. 35.

29: John v. 35.

30: Ps. cxix. 105.

31: i.e. antidote to the scorpion's bite.

32: Letter CIX.

33: Acts xxiv. 17, Acts xxiv. 18.

34: Ps. i. 2.

35: Deut. xviii. 2 sq.

36: 2 Cor. viii. 14.

37: Gal. vi. 10.

38: Luke xvi. 9.

39: Ps. xli. 9.

40: Matt. xix. 21.

41: Matt. xx. 16: Matt. xxii. 14.

42: He seems to mean that monks spoke of young ladies as Mothers of the Convents, so as to be able to frequent their society without reproach.

Against the Pelagians - Book 1

Book I.

Book I.

1. Atticus. I hear, Critobulus, that you have written that man can be without sin, if he chooses; and that the commandments of God are easy. Tell me, is it true?

Critobulus. It is true, Atticus; but our rivals do not take the words in the sense I attached to them.

A. Are they then so ambiguous as to give rise to a difference as to their meaning? I do not ask for an answer to two questions at once. You laid down two propositions; the one, that¹ man can be without sin, if he chooses: the other, that God's commandments are easy. Although, therefore, they were uttered together, let them be discussed separately, so that, while our faith appears to be one, no strife may arise through our misunderstanding each other.

C. I said, Atticus, that man can be without sin, if he chooses; not, as some maliciously make us say, without the grace of God (the very thought is impiety), but simply that he can, if he chooses; the aid of the grace of God being presupposed.

A. Is God, then, the author of your evil works?

C. By no means. But if there is any good in me, it is brought to perfection through His impulse and assistance.

A. My question does not refer to natural constitution, but to action. For who doubts that God is the Creator of all things? I wish you would tell me this: the good you do, is it your's or God's?

C. It is mine and God's: I work and He assists.

A. How is it then that everybody thinks you do away with the grace of God, and maintain that all our actions proceed from our own will?

C. I am surprised, Atticus, at your asking me for the why and wherefore of other people's mistakes, and wanting to know what I did not write, when what I did write is perfectly clear. I said that man can be without sin, if he chooses. Did I add, without the grace of God?

A. No; but the fact that you added nothing implies your denial of the need of grace.

C. Nay, rather, the fact that I have not denied grace should be regarded as tantamount to an assertion of it. It is unjust to suppose we deny whatever we do not assert.

A. You admit then that man can be sinless, if he chooses, but with the grace of God.

C. I not only admit it, but freely proclaim it.

A. So then he who does away with the grace of God is in error.

C. Just so. Or rather, he ought to be thought impious, seeing that all things are governed by the pleasure of God, and that we owe our existence and the faculty of individual choice and desire to the goodness of God, the Creator. For that we have free will, and according to our own choice incline to good or evil, is part of His grace who made us what we are, in His own image and likeness.

2. A. No one doubts, Critobulus, that all things depend on the judgment of Him Who is Creator of all, and that whatever we have ought to be attributed to His goodness. But I should like to know respecting this faculty, which you attribute to the grace of God, whether you reckon it as part of the gift bestowed in our creation, or suppose it energetic in our separate actions, so that we avail ourselves of its assistance continually; or is it the case that, having been once for all created and endowed with free will, we do what we choose by our own choice or strength? For I know that very many of your party refer all things to the grace of God in such a sense that they understand the power of the will to be a gift not of a particular, but of a general character, that is to say, one which is bestowed not at each separate moment, but once for all at creation.

C. It is not as you affirm; but I maintain both positions, that it is by the grace of God we were created such as we are, and also that in our several actions we are supported by His aid.

A. We are agreed, then, that in good works, besides our own power of choice, we lean on the help of God; in evil works we are prompted by the devil.

C. Quite so; there is no difference of opinion on that point.

A. They are wrong, then, who strip us of the help of God in our separate actions. The Psalmist sings:² "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain who build it. Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain;" and there are similar passages. But these men endeavour by perverse, or rather ridiculous interpretations, to twist his words to a different meaning.

3. C. Am I bound to contradict others when you have my own answer?

A. Your answer to what effect? That they are right, or wrong?

C. What necessity compels me to set my opinion against other men's?

A. You are bound by the rules of discussion, and by respect for truth. Do you not know that every assertion either affirms, or denies, and that what is affirmed or denied ought to be reckoned among good or bad things? You must, therefore, admit, and no thanks to you, that the statement to which my question relates is either a good thing or a bad.

C. If in particular actions we must have the help of God, does it follow that we are unable to make a pen,³ or mend it when it is made? Can we not fashion the letters, be silent or speak, sit, stand, walk or run, eat or fast, weep or laugh, and so on, without God's assistance?

A. From my point of view it is clearly impossible.

C. How then have we free will, and how can we guard the grace of God towards us, if we cannot do even these things without God?

4. A. The bestowal of the grace of free will is not such as to do away with the support of God in particular actions.

C. The help of God is not made of no account; inasmuch as creatures are preserved through the grace of free will once for all given to them. For if without God, and except He assist me in every action, I can do nothing. He can neither with justice crown me for my good deeds, nor punish me for my evil ones, but in each case He will either receive His own or will condemn the assistants He gave.

A. Tell me, then, plainly, why you do away with the grace of God. For whatever you destroy in the parts you must of necessity deny in the whole.

C. I do not deny grace when I assert that I was so created by God, that by the grace of God it was put within the power of my choice either to do a thing or not to do it.

A. So God falls asleep over our good actions, when once the faculty of free will has been given; and we need not pray to Him to assist us in our separate actions, since it depends upon our own choice and will either to do a thing if we choose, or not to do it if we do not choose.

5. C. As in the case of other creatures, the conditions of elicited creation are observed; so, when once the power of free will was granted, everything was left to our own choice.

A. It follows, as I said, that I ought not to beg the assistance of God in the details of conduct, because I consider it was given once for all.

C. If He co-operates with me in everything the result is no longer mine, but His Who assists, or rather works in and with me; and all the more because I can do nothing without Him.

A. Have you not read, pray,⁴ "that it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy!" From this we understand that to will and to run is ours, but the carrying into effect our willing and running pertains to the mercy of God, and is so effected that on the one hand in willing and running free will is preserved; and on the other, in consummating our willing and running, everything is left to the power of God. Of course, I ought now to adduce the frequent testimony of Scripture to show that in the details of conduct the saints intreat the help of God, and in their several actions desire to have Him for their helper and protector. Read through the Psalter, and all the utterances of the saints, and you will find their actions never unaccompanied by prayer to God. And this is a clear proof that you either deny the grace which you banish from the parts of life; or if you concede its presence in the parts, a concession plainly much against your will, you must have come over to the views of us who preserve free will for man, but so limit it that we do not deny the assistance of God in each action.

6. C. That is a sophistical conclusion and a mere display of logical skill. No one can strip me of the power of free will; otherwise, if God were really my helper in what I do, the reward would not be due to me, but to Him who wrought in me.

A. Make the most of your free will; arm your tongue against God, and therein prove yourself free, if you will, to blaspheme. But to go a step farther, there is no doubt as to your sentiments, and the delusions of your profession have become as clear as day. Now, let us turn back to the starting-point of our discussion. You said just now that, granted God's assistance, man may be sinless if he chooses. Tell me, please, for how long? For ever, or only for a short time?

C. Your question is unnecessary. If I say for a short time, for ever will none the less be implied. For whatever you allow for a short time, you will admit may last for ever.

A. I do not quite understand your meaning.

C. Are you so senseless that you do not recognize plain facts?

7. A. I am not ashamed of my ignorance. And both sides ought to be well agreed on a definition of the subject of dispute.

C. I maintain this: he who can keep himself from sin one day, may do so another day: if he can on two, he may on three; if on three, on thirty: and so on for three hundred, or three thousand, or as long as ever he chooses to do so.

A. Say then at once that a man may be without sin for ever, if he chooses. Can we do anything we like?

C. Certainly not, for I cannot do all I should like; but all I say is this, that a man can be without sin, if he chooses.

A. Be so good as to tell me this: do you think I am a man or a beast?

C. If I had any doubt as to whether you were a man, or a beast, I should confess myself to be the latter.

A. If then, as you say, I am a man, how is it that when I wish and earnestly desire not to sin, I do transgress?

C. Because your choice is imperfect. If you really wished not to sin, you really would not.

A. Well then, you who accuse me of not having a real desire, are you free from sin because you have a real desire?

C. As though I were talking of myself whom I admit to be a sinner, and not of the few exceptional ones, if any, who have resolved not to sin.

8. A. Still, I who question, and you who answer, both consider ourselves sinners.

C. But we are capable of not being so, if we please.

A. I said I did not wish to sin, and no doubt your feeling is the same. How is it then that what we both wish we can neither do?

C. Because we do not wish perfectly.

A. Show me any of our ancestors who had a perfect will and the power in perfection.

C. That is not easy. And when I say that a man may be without sin if he chooses, I do not contend that there ever have been such; I only maintain the abstract possibility-if he chooses. For possibility of being is one thing, and is expressed in Greek by th dunamei (possibility); being is another, the equivalent for which is th energeia (actuality). I can be a physician; but meanwhile I am not. I can be an artisan; but I have not yet learnt a trade. So, whatever I am able to be, though I am not that yet, I shall be if I choose.

9. A. Art is one thing, that which is⁵ above art is another. Medical skill, craftsmanship, and so on, are found in many persons; but to be always without sin is a characteristic of the Divine power only. Therefore, either give me an instance of those who were for ever without sin; or, if you cannot find one, confess your impotence, lay aside bombast, and do not mock the ears of fools with this being and possibility of being of yours. For who will grant that a man can do what no man was ever able to do? You have not learnt even the rudiments of logic. For if a man is able, he is no longer unable. Either grant that some one was able to do what you maintain was possible to be done; or if no one has had this power, you must, though against your will, be held to this position, that no one is able to effect what yet you profess to be possible. That was the point at issue between the powerful logicians,⁶ Diodorus and⁷ Chrysippus, in their discussion of possibility. Diodorus says that alone can possibly happen which is either true or will be true. And whatever will be, that, he says, must of necessity happen. But whatever will not be, that cannot possibly happen. Chrysippus, however, says that things which will not be might happen; for instance, this pearl might be broken, even though it never will. They, therefore, who say that a man can be without sin if he chooses, will not be able to prove the truth of the assertion, unless they show that it will come to pass. But whereas the whole future is uncertain, and especially such things as have never occurred, it is clear that they say something will be which will not be. And Ecclesiastes supports this decision: "All that shall be, has already been in former ages."

10. C. Pray answer this question: has God given possible or impossible commands?

A. I see your drift. But I must discuss it later on, that we may not, by confusing different questions, leave our audience in a fog. I admit that God has given possible commands, for otherwise He would Himself be the author of injustice, were He to demand the doing of what cannot possibly be done. Reserving this until later, finish your argument that a man can be without sin, if he chooses. You will either give instances of such ability, or, if no one has had the power, you will clearly confess that a man cannot avoid sin always.

C. Since you press me to give what I am not bound to give, consider what our Lord says,⁸ "That it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven." And yet he said a thing might possibly happen, which never has happened. For no camel has ever gone through a needle's eye.

A. I am surprised at a prudent man submitting evidence which goes against himself. For the passage in question does not speak of a possibility, but one impossibility is compared with another. As a camel cannot go through a needle's eye, so neither will a rich man enter the kingdom of heaven. Or, if you should be able to show that a rich man does enter the kingdom of heaven, it follows, also, that a camel goes through a needle's eye. You must not instance Abraham and other rich men, about whom we read in the Old Testament, who, although they were rich, entered the kingdom of heaven; for, by spending their riches on good works, they ceased to be rich; nay, rather, inasmuch as they were rich, not for themselves, but for others, they ought to be called God's stewards rather than rich men. But we must seek evangelical perfection, according to which there is the command,⁹ "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and come, follow Me."

11. C. You are caught unawares in your own snare.

A. How so?

C. You quote our Lord's utterance to the effect that a man can be perfect. For when He says, "If thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and come, follow Me," He shows that a man, if he chooses, and if he does what is commanded, can be perfect?

A. You have given me such a terrible blow that I am almost dazed. But yet the very words you quote, "If thou wilt be perfect," were spoken to one who could not, or rather would not, and, therefore, could not; show me now, as you promised, some one who would and could.

C. Why am I compelled to produce instances of perfection, when it is clear from what the Saviour said to one, and through one to all, "If thou wilt be perfect" that it is possible for men to be perfect?

A. That is a mere shuffle. You still stick fast in the mire. For, either, if a thing is possible, it has occurred at some time or other; or, if it never has happened, grant that it is impossible.

12. C. Why do I any longer delay? You must be vanquished by the authority of Scripture. To pass over other passages, you must be silenced by the two in which we read the praises of Job, and of Zacharias and Elizabeth. For, unless I am deceived, it is thus written in the book of Job:10 "There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, a true worshipper of God, and one who kept himself from every evil thing." And again:11 "Who is he that reproveth one that is righteous and free from sin, and speaketh words without knowledge?" Also, in the Gospel according to Luke, we read:12 "There was in the days of Herod, king of Judaea, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abijah: and he had a wife of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth. And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." If a true worshipper of God is also without spot and without offence, and if those who walked in all the ordinances of the Lord are righteous before God, I suppose they are free from sin, and lack nothing that pertains to righteousness.

A. You have cited passages which have been detached not only from the rest of Scripture, but from the books in which they occur. For even Job, after he was stricken with the plague, is convicted of having spoken many things against the ruling of God, and to have summoned Him to the bar:13 "Would that a man stood with God in the judgment as a son of man stands with his fellow." And again:14 "Oh that I had one to hear me! that the Almighty might hear my desire, and that the judge would himself write a book!" And again:15 "Though I be righteous, mine own mouth shall condemn me: though I be perfect, it shall prove me perverse. If I wash myself with snow-water, and make my bands never so clean, Thou hast dyed me again and again with filth. Mine own clothes have abhorred me." And of Zacharias it is written, that when the angel promised the birth of a son, he said:16 "Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years." For which answer he was at once condemned to silence:17 "Thou shalt be silent, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall come to pass, because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season." From this it is clear that men are called righteous, and said to be without fault; but that, if negligence comes over them, they may fall; and that a man always occupies a middle place, so that he may slip from the height of virtue into vice, or may rise from vice to virtue; and that he is never safe, but must dread shipwreck even in fair weather; and, therefore, that a man cannot be without sin. Solomon says,18 "There is not a righteous man upon earth that doeth good and sinneth not"; and likewise in the book of Kings:19 "There is no man that sinneth not." So, also, the blessed David says:20 "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse Thou me from hidden faults, and keep back Thy servant from presumptuous sins." And again:21 "Enter not into judgment with Thy servant, for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified." Holy Scripture is full of passages to the same effect.

13. C. But what answer will you give to the famous declaration of John the Evangelist:22 "We know that whosoever is begotten of God sinneth not; but the begetting of God keepeth him, and the evil one toucheth him not. We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in the evil one?"

A. I will requite like with like, and will show that, according to you, the little epistle of the Evangelist contradicts itself. For, if whosoever is begotten of God sinneth not because His seed abideth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God, how is it that the writer says in the same place:23 "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us?" You cannot explain. You hesitate and are confused. Listen to the same Evangelist telling us that24 "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." We are then righteous when we confess that we are sinners, and our righteousness depends not upon our own merits, but on the mercy of God, as the Holy Scripture says,25 "The righteous man accuseth himself when he beginneth to speak," and elsewhere,26 "Tell thy sins that thou mayest be justified."27 "God hath shut up all under sin, that He may have mercy upon all." And the highest righteousness of man is this-whatever virtue he may be able to acquire, not to think it his own, but the gift of God. He then who is born of God does not sin, so long as the seed of God remains in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. But seeing that, while the householder slept, an enemy sowed tares, and that when we know not, a sower by night scatters in the Lord's field dandelion and wild oats among the good corn, this parable of the householder in the Gospel should excite our fears. He cleanses his floor, and gathers the wheat into his garner, but leaves the chaff to be scattered by the winds, or burned by the fire. And so we read in Jeremiah,28 "What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." The chaff, moreover, is separated from the wheat at the end of the world, a proof that, while we are in the mortal body, chaff is mixed with the wheat. But if you object, and ask why did the Apostle say "and he cannot sin, because he is born of God," I reply by asking you what becomes of the reward of his choice? For if a man does not sin because he cannot sin, free will is destroyed, and goodness cannot possibly be due to his efforts, but must be part of a nature unreceptive of evil.

14. C. The task I set you just now was an easy one by way of practice for something more difficult. What have you to say to my next argument? Clever as you are, all your skill will not avail to overthrow it. I shall first quote from the Old Testament, then from the New. Moses is the chief figure in the Old Testament, our Lord and Saviour in the New. Moses says to the people,29 "Be perfect in the sight of the Lord your God." And the Saviour bids the Apostles30 "Be perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect." Now it was either possible for the hearers to do what Moses and the Lord commanded, or, if it be impossible, the fault does not lie with them who cannot obey, but with Him who gave impossible commands.

A. This passage to the ignorant, and to those who are unaccustomed to meditate on Holy Scripture, and who neither know nor use it, does appear at first sight to favour your opinion. But when you look into it, the difficulty soon disappears. And when you compare passages of Scripture with others, that the Holy Spirit may not seem to contradict Himself with changing place and time, according to what is written,³¹ "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water spouts," the truth will show itself, that is, that Christ did give a possible command when He said: "Be ye perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect," and yet that the Apostles were not perfect.

C. I am not talking of what the Apostles did, but of what Christ commanded. And the fault does not lie with the giver of the command, but with the hearers of it, because we cannot admit the justice of him who commands without conceding the possibility of doing what is commanded.

A. Good! Don't tell me then that a man can be without sin if he chooses, but that a man can be what the Apostles were not.

C. Do you think me fool enough to dare say such a thing?

A. Although you do not say it in so many words, however reluctant you may be to admit the fact, it follows by natural sequence from your proposition. For if a man can be without sin, and it is clear the Apostles were not without sin, a man can be higher than the Apostles: to say nothing of patriarchs and prophets whose righteousness under the law was not perfect, as the Apostle says,³² "For all have sinned, and fall short of the glory of God: being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God set forth to be a propitiator."

14a. C. This way of arguing is intricate and brings the simplicity which becomes the Church into the tangled thickets of philosophy. What has Paul to do with Aristotle? or Peter with Plato? For as the latter was the prince of philosophers, so was the former chief of the Apostles: on him the Lord's Church was firmly founded, and neither rushing flood nor storm can shake it.

A. Now you are rhetorical, and while you taunt me with philosophy, you yourself cross over to the camp of the orators. But listen to what your same favourite orator says:³³ "Let us have no more commonplaces: we get them at home."

C. There is no eloquence in this, no bombast like that of the orators, who might be defined as persons whose object is to persuade, and who frame their language accordingly. We are seeking unadulterated truth, and use unsophisticated language. Either the Lord did not give impossible commands, so that they are to blame who did not do what was possible; or, if what is commanded cannot be done, then not they who do not things impossible are convicted of unrighteousness, but He Who commanded things impossible, and that is an impious statement.

A. I see you are much more disturbed than is your wont; so I will not ply you with arguments. But let me briefly ask what you think of the well-known passage of the Apostle when he wrote to the Philippians:³⁴ "Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect: but I press on, if so be that I may apprehend that for which also I was apprehended by Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself to have yet apprehended: but one thing I do; forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on towards the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in anything ye are otherwise minded, even this shall God reveal unto you," and so on; no doubt you know the rest, which, in my desire to be brief, I omit. He says that he had not yet apprehended, and was by no means perfect; but, like an archer, aimed his arrows at the mark set up (more expressively called ³⁵ skopoj in Greek), lest the shaft, turning to one side or the other, might show the unskilfulness of the archer. He further declares that he always forgot the past, and ever stretched forward to the things in front, thus teaching that no heed should be paid to the past, but the future earnestly desired; so that what to-day he thought perfect, while he was stretching forward to better things and things in front, to-morrow proves to have been imperfect. And thus at every step, never standing still, but always running, he shows that to be imperfect which we men thought perfect, and teaches that our only perfection and true righteousness is that which is measured by the excellence of God. "I press on towards the goal," he says, "unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Oh, blessed Apostle Paul, pardon me, a poor creature who confess my faults, if I venture to ask a question. You say that you had not yet obtained, nor yet apprehended, nor were yet perfect, and that you always forgot the things behind, and stretched forward to the things in front, if by any means you might have part in the resurrection of the dead, and win the prize of your high calling. How, then, is it that you immediately add, "As many therefore as are perfect are thus minded"? (or, let us be thus minded, for the copies vary). And what mind is it that we have, or are to have? that we are perfect? that we have apprehended that which we have not apprehended, received what we have not received, are perfect who are not yet perfect? What mind then have we, or rather what mind ought we to have who are not perfect? To confess that we are imperfect, and have not yet apprehended, nor yet obtained, this is true wisdom in man: know thyself to be imperfect; and, if I may so speak, the perfection of all who are righteous, so long as they are in the flesh, is imperfect. Hence we read in Proverbs:³⁶ "To understand true righteousness." For if there were not also a false righteousness, the righteousness of God would never be called true. The Apostle continues: "and if ye are otherwise minded, God will also reveal that to you." This sounds strange to my ears. He who but just now said, "Not that I have already obtained, or am already perfect "; the chosen vessel, who was so confident of Christ's dwelling in him that he dared to say "Do ye seek a proof of Christ that speaketh in me? "and yet plainly confessed that he was not perfect; he now gives to the multitude what he denied to himself in particular, he unites himself with the rest and says, "As many of us as are perfect, let us be thus minded." But why he said this, he explains presently. Let us, he means, who wish to be perfect according to the poor measure of human frailty, think this, that we have not yet obtained, nor yet apprehended, nor are yet perfect, and inasmuch as we are not yet perfect, and, perhaps, think otherwise than true and perfect perfection requires, if we are minded otherwise than is dictated by the full knowledge of God, God will also reveal this to us, so that we may pray with David and say,³⁷ "Open Thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law."

15. All this makes it clear that in Holy Scripture there are two sorts of perfection, two of righteousness, and two of fear. The first is that perfection, and incomparable truth, and perfect righteousness³⁸ and fear, which is the beginning of wisdom, and which we must measure by the excellence of God; the second, which is within the range not only of men, but of every creature, and is not inconsistent with our frailty, as we read in the Psalms:³⁹ "In Thy sight shall no man living be justified," is that righteousness which is said to be perfect, not in comparison with God, but as recognized by God. Job, and Zacharias, and Elizabeth, were called righteous, in respect of that righteousness which might some day turn to unrighteousness, and not in respect of that which is incapable of change, concerning which it is said,⁴⁰ "I am God, and change not." And this is that which the Apostle elsewhere writes:⁴¹ "That which hath been made glorious hath not been made glorious in this respect, by reason of the glory that surpasseth"; because, that is, the righteousness of the law, in comparison of the grace of the Gospel, does not seem to be righteousness at all.⁴² "For if," he says, that which passeth away was with glory, much more that which remaineth is in glory.⁴³ And again, "We know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away." And,⁴⁴ "For now we see in a mirror, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I have been known." And in the Psalms,⁴⁵ "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it." And again,⁴⁶ "When I thought how I might know this, it was too painful for me; until I went into the sanctuary of God, and considered their latter end." And in the same place,⁴⁷ "I was as a beast before thee: nevertheless I am continually with thee." And Jeremiah says,⁴⁸ "Every man is become brutish and without knowledge." And to return to the Apostle Paul,⁴⁹ "The foolishness of God is wiser than men." And much besides, which I omit for brevity's sake.

16. C. My dear Atticus, your speech is really a clever feat of memory. But the labour you have spent in mustering this host of authorities is to my advantage. For I do not any more than you compare man with God. but with other men, in comparison with whom he who takes the trouble can be perfect. And so, when we say that man, if he chooses, can be without sin, the standard is the measure of man, not the majesty of God, in comparison with Whom no creature can be perfect.

A. Critobulus, I am obliged to you for reminding me of the fact. For it is just my own view that no creature can be perfect in respect of true and finished righteousness. But that one differs from another, and that one man's righteousness is not the same as another's, no one doubts; nor again that one may be greater or less than another, and yet that, relatively to their own status and capacity, men may be called righteous who are not righteous when compared with others. For instance, the Apostle Paul, the chosen vessel who laboured more than all the Apostles, was, I suppose, righteous when he wrote to Timothy,⁵⁰ "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day: and not only to me, but also to all them that love His appearing." Timothy, his disciple and imitator, whom he taught the rules of action and the limits of virtue, was also righteous. Are we to think there was one and the same righteousness in them both, and that he had not more merit who laboured more than all? "In my Father's house are many mansions." I suppose there are also different degrees of merit. "One star differeth from another star in glory," and in the one body of the Church there are different members. The sun has its own splendour, the moon tempers the darkness of the night; and the five heavenly bodies which are called planets traverse the sky in different tracks and with different degrees of luminousness. There are countless other stars whose movements we trace in the firmament. Each has its own brightness, and though each in respect of its own is perfect, yet, in comparison with one of greater magnitude, it lacks perfection. In the body also with its different members, the eye has one function, the hand another, the foot another. Whence the Apostle says,⁵¹ "The eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee: or again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Are all Apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? But desire earnestly the greater gifts. But all these worketh the one and the same Spirit, dividing to each one severally even as He will." And here mark carefully that he does not say, as each member desires, but as the Spirit Himself will. For the vessel cannot say to him that makes it,⁵² "Why dost thou make me thus or thus? Hath not the potter a right over the clay, from the same lump to make one part a vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?" And so in close sequence he added, "Desire earnestly the greater gifts," so that, by the exercise of faith and diligence, we may win something in addition to other gifts, and may be superior to those who, compared with us, are in the second or third class. In a great house there are different vessels, some of gold, some of silver, brass, iron, wood. And yet while in its kind a vessel of brass is perfect, in comparison with one of silver it is called imperfect, and again one of silver, compared with one of gold, is inferior. And thus, when compared with one another, all things are imperfect and perfect. In a field of good soil, and from one sowing, there springs a crop thirty-fold, sixty-fold, or a hundred-fold. The very numbers show that there is disparity in the parts of the produce, and yet in its own kind each is perfect. Elizabeth and Zacharias, whom you adduce and with whom you cover yourself as with an impenetrable shield, may teach us how far they are beneath the holiness of blessed Mary, the Lord's Mother, who, conscious that God was dwelling in her, proclaims without reserve,⁵³ "Behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. For He that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is His name. And His mercy is unto generations and generations of them that fear Him: He hath showed strength with His arm." Where, observe, she says she is blessed not by her own merit and virtue, but by the mercy of God dwelling in her. And John himself, a greater than whom has not arisen among the sons of men, is better than his parents. For not only does our Lord compare him with men, but with angels also. And yet he, who was greater on earth than all other men, is said to be less than the least in the kingdom of heaven.

17. Need we be surprised that, when saints are compared, some are better, some worse, since the same holds good in the comparison of sins? To Jerusalem, pieced and wounded with many sins, it is said,⁵⁴ "Sodom is justified by thee." It is not because Sodom, which has sunk for ever into ashes, is just in herself, that it is said by Ezekiel,⁵⁵ "Sodom shall be restored to her former estate"; but that, in comparison with the more accursed Jerusalem, she appears just. For Jerusalem killed the Son of God; Sodom through fulness of bread and excessive luxury carried her lust beyond all bounds. The publican in the Gospel who smote upon his breast as though it were a magazine of the worst thoughts, and, conscious of his offences, dared not lift up his eyes, is justified rather than the proud Pharisee. And Tamar in the guise of a harlot deceived Judah, and in the estimation of this man himself who was deceived, was worthy of the words,⁵⁶ "Tamar is more righteous than I." All this goes to prove that not only in comparison with Divine majesty are men far from perfection, but also when compared with angels, and other men who have climbed the heights of virtue. You may be superior to some one whom you have shown to be imperfect, and yet be outstripped by another; and consequently may not have true perfection, which, if it be perfect, is absolute.

18. C. How is it then, Atticus, that the Divine Word urges us to perfection?

A. I have already explained that in proportion to our strength each one, with all his power, must stretch forward, if by any means he may attain to, and apprehend the reward of his high calling. In short Almighty God, to whom, as the Apostle teaches, the Son must in accordance with the dispensation of the Incarnation be subjected, that⁵⁷ "God may be all in all," clearly shows that all things are by no means subject to Himself. Hence the prophet anticipates his own final subjection, saying,⁵⁸ "Shall not my soul be subject to God alone? for of Him cometh my salvation." And because in the body of the Church Christ is the head, and some of the members still resist, the body does not appear to be subject even to the head. For if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, and the whole body is tortured by the pain in one member. My meaning may be more clearly expressed thus. So long as we have the treasure in earthen vessels, and are clothed with frail flesh, or rather with mortal and corruptible flesh, we think ourselves fortunate if, in single virtues and separate portions of virtue, we are subject to God. But when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and death shall be swallowed up in the victory of Christ, then will God be all in all: and so there will not be merely wisdom in Solomon, sweetness in David, zeal in Elias and Phinees, faith in Abraham, perfect love in Peter, to whom it was said,⁵⁹ "Simon, son of John, lovest thou me?" zeal for preaching in the chosen vessel, and two or three virtues each in others, but God will be wholly in all, and the company of the saints will rejoice in the whole band of virtues, and God will be all in all.

19. C. Do I understand you to say that no saint, so long as he is in this poor body, can have all virtues?

A. Just so, because now we prophesy in part, and know in part. It is impossible for all things to be in all men, for no son of man is immortal.

C. How is it, then, that we read that he who has one virtue appears to have all?

A. By partaking of them, not possessing them, for individuals must excel in particular virtues. But I confess I don't know where to find what you say you have read.

C. Are you not aware that the philosophers take that view?

A. The philosophers may, but the Apostles do not. I heed not what Aristotle, but what Paul, teaches.

C. Pray does not James the Apostle⁶⁰ write that he who stumbles in one point is guilty of all?

A. The passage is its own interpreter. James did not say, as a starting-point for the discussion, he who prefers a rich man to a poor man in honour is guilty of adultery or murder. That is a delusion of the Stoics who maintain the equality of sins. But he proceeds thus: "He who said, Thou shalt not commit adultery, said also, Thou shalt not kill: but although thou dost not kill, yet, if thou commit adultery, thou art become a transgressor of the law." Light offences are compared with light ones, and heavy offences with heavy ones. A fault that deserves the rod must not be avenged with the sword; nor must a crime worthy of the sword, be checked with the rod.

C. Suppose it true that no saint has all the virtues: you will surely grant that within the range of his ability, if a man do what he can, he is perfect.

A. Do you not remember what I said before?

C. What was it?

A. That a man is perfect in respect of what he has done, imperfect in respect of what he could not do.

C. But as he is perfect in respect of what he has done, because he willed to do it, so in respect of that which constitutes him imperfect, because he has not done it, he might have been perfect, had he willed to do it.

A. Who does not wish to do what is perfect? Or who does not long to grow vigorously. in all virtue? If you look for all virtues in each individual, you do away with the distinctions of things, and the difference of graces, and the variety of the work of the Creator, whose prophet cries aloud in the sacred song:⁶¹ "In wisdom hast thou made them all." Lucifer may be indignant because he has not the brightness of the moon. The moon may dispute over her eclipses and ceaseless toil, and ask why she must traverse every month the yearly orbit of the sun. The sun may complain and want to know what he has done that he travels more slowly than the moon. And we poor creatures may demand to know why it is that we were made men and not angels; although your teacher,⁶² the Ancient, the fountain from which these streams flow, asserts that all rational creatures were created equal and started fairly, like charioteers, either to succumb halfway, or to pass on rapidly and reach the wished-for goal. Elephants, with their huge bulk, and griffins, might discuss their ponderous frames and ask why they must go on four feet, while flies, midges, and other creatures like them have six feet under their tiny wings, and there are some creeping things which have such an abundance of feet that the keenest vision cannot follow their countless and simultaneous movements. Marcion and all the heretics who denied the Creator's works might speak thus. Your principle goes so far that while its adherents attack particular points, they are laying hands on God; they are asking why He only is God, why He envies the creatures, and why they are not all endowed with the same power and importance. You would not say so much (for you are not mad enough to openly fight against God), yet this is your meaning in other words, when you give man an attribute of God, and make him to be without sin like God Himself. Hence the Apostle, with his voice of thunder, says, concerning different graces:⁶³ "There are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit; and differences of ministrations, but the same Lord; and there are diversities of workings, but the same God, Who worketh all things in all."

20. C. You push this one particular point too far in seeking to convince me that a man cannot have all excellences at the same time. As though God were guilty of envy, or unable to bestow upon His image and likeness a correspondence in all things to his Creator.

A. Is it I or you who go too far? You revive, questions already settled, and do not understand that likeness is one thing, equality another; that the former is a painting, the latter, reality. A real horse courses over the plains; the painted one with his chariot does not leave the wall. The Arians do not allow to the Son of God what you give to every man. Some do not dare to confess the perfect humanity of Christ, lest they should be compelled to accept the belief that He had the sins of a man as though the Creator were unequal to the act of creating, and the title Son of Man were co-extensive with the title Son of God. So either set me something else to answer, or lay aside pride and give glory to God.

C. You forget a former answer of yours, and have been so busy forging your chain of argument, and careering through the wide fields of Scripture, like a horse that has slipped its bridle, that you have not said a single word about the main point. Your forgetfulness is a pretext for escaping the necessity of a reply. It was foolish in me to concede to you for the nonce what you asked, and to suppose that you would voluntarily give up what you had received, and would not need a reminder to make you pay what you owed.

A. If I mistake not, it was the question of possible commands of which I deferred the answer. Pray proceed as you think best.

21. C. The commands which God has given are either possible or impossible. If possible, it is in our power to do them, if we choose. If impossible, we cannot be held guilty for omitting duties which it is not given us to fulfil. Hence it results that, whether God has given possible or impossible commands, a man can be without sin if he chooses.

A. I beg your patient attention, for what we seek is not victory over an opponent, but the triumph of truth over falsehood. God has put within the power of mankind all arts, for we see that a vast number of men have mastered them. To pass over those which the Greeks call bananusoi, as we may say, the manual arts, I will instance grammar, rhetoric, the three sorts of philosophy-physics, ethics, logic-geometry also, and astronomy, astrology, arithmetic, music, which are also parts of philosophy; medicine, too, in its threefold division-theory, investigation, practice; a knowledge of law in general and of particular enactments. Which of us, however clever he may be, will be able to understand them all, when the most eloquent of orators, discussing rhetoric and jurisprudence, said: "A few may excel in one, in both no one can." You see, then, that God has commanded what is possible, and yet, that no one can by nature attain to what is possible. Similarly he has given different rules and various virtues, all of which we cannot possess at the same time. Hence it happens that a virtue which in one person takes the chief place, or is found in perfection, in another is but partial; and yet, he is not to blame who has not all excellence, nor is he condemned for lacking that which he has not; but he is justified through what he does possess. The Apostle described the character of a bishop when he wrote to Timothy,⁶⁵ "The bishop, therefore, must be without reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, modest, orderly, given to hospitality, apt to teach; no brawler, no striker; but gentle, not contentious, no lover of money; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all modesty." And again, "Not a novice, lest, being puffed up, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover, he must have good testimony from them that are without, lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil." Writing also to his disciple Titus, he briefly points out what sort of bishops he ought to ordain:⁶⁶ "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that were wanting, and appoint elders in every city, as I gave thee charge; if any man is blameless, the husband of one wife, having children that believe, who are not accused of riot or unruly. For the bishop must be blameless (or free from accusation, for so much is conveyed by the original) as God's steward; not self-willed, not soon angry, no brawler, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but given to hospitality, kind, modest, just, holy, temperate; holding to the faithful word which is according to the teaching, that he may be able both to exhort in the sound doctrine, and to convict the gainsayers." I will not now say anything of the various rules relating to different persons, but will confine myself to the commands connected with the bishop.

22. God certainly wishes bishops or priests to be such as the chosen vessel teaches they should be. As to the first qualification it is seldom or never that one is found without reproach; for who is it that has not some fault, like a mole or a wart on a lovely body? If the Apostle himself says of Peter that he did not tread a straight path in the truth of the Gospel, and was so far to blame that even Barnabas was led away into the same dissimulation, who will be indignant if that is denied to him which the chief of the Apostles had not? Then, supposing you find one, "the husband of one wife, sober-minded, orderly, given to hospitality," the next attribute-didaktikon, apt to teach, not merely as the Latin renders the word, apt to be taught-you will hardly find in company with the other virtues. A bishop or priest that is a brawler, or a striker, or a lover of money, the Apostle rejects, and in his stead would have one gentle, not contentious, free from avarice, one that rules well his own house, and what is very hard, one who has his children in subjection with all modesty, whether they be children of the flesh or children of the faith. "With all modesty," he says. It is not enough for him to have his own modesty unless it be enhanced by the modesty of his children, companions, and servants, as David says,⁶⁷ "He that walketh in a perfect way, he shall minister unto me." Let us consider, also, the emphasis laid on modesty by the addition of the words "having his children in subjection with all modesty." Not only in deed but in word and gesture must he hold aloof from immodesty, lest perchance the experience of Eli be his. Eli certainly rebuked his sons, saying,⁶⁸ "Nay, my sons, nay; it is not a good report which I hear of you." He chided them, and yet was punished, because he should not have chided, but cast them off. What will he do who rejoices at vice or lacks the courage to correct it? Who fears his own conscience, and therefore pretends to be ignorant of what is in everybody's mouth? The next point is that the bishop must be free from accusation, that he have a good report from them who are without, that no reproaches of opponents be levelled at him, and that they who dislike his doctrine may be pleased with his life. I suppose it would not be easy to find all this, and particularly one "able to resist the gain-sayers," to check and overcome erroneous opinions. He wishes no novice to be ordained bishop, and yet in our time we see the youthful novice sought after as though he represented the highest righteousness. If baptism immediately made a man righteous, and full of all righteousness, it was of course idle for the Apostle to repel a novice; but baptism annuls old sins, does not bestow new virtues; it looses from prison, and promises rewards to the released if he will work. Seldom or never, I say, is there a man who has all the virtues which a bishop should have. And yet if a bishop lacked one or two of the virtues in the list, it does not follow that he can no longer be called righteous, nor will he be condemned for his deficiencies, but will be crowned for what he has. For to have all and lack nothing is the virtue of Him⁶⁹ "Who did no sin; neither was guile found in His mouth; Who, when He was reviled, reviled not again;" Who, confident in the consciousness of virtue, said,⁷⁰ "Behold the prince of this world cometh, and findeth nothing in me;"⁷¹ "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be on an equality with God, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God gave Him the name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth." If, then, in the person of a single bishop you will either not find at all, or with difficulty, even a few of the things commanded, how will you deal with the mass of men in general who are bound to fulfil all the commandments?

23. Let us reason from things bodily to things spiritual. One man is swift-fooled, but not strong-handed. That man's movements are slow, but he stands firm in battle. This man has a fine face, but a harsh voice: another is repulsive to look at, but sings sweetly and melodiously. There we see a man of great ability, but equally poor memory; here is another whose memory serves him, but whose wits are slow. In the very discussions with which when we were boys we amused ourselves, all the disputants are not on a level, either in introducing a subject, or in narrative, or in digressions, or wealth of illustration, and charm of peroration, but their various oratorical efforts exhibit different degrees of merit. Of churchmen I will say more. Many discourse well upon the Gospels, but in explaining an Apostle's meaning are unequal to themselves. Others, although most acute in the New Testament are dumb in the Psalms and the Old Testament. I quite agree with Virgil-Non omnia possumus omnes; and seldom or never is the rich man found who in the abundance of his wealth has everything in equal proportions. That God has given possible commands, I admit no less than you. But it is not for each one of us to make all these possible virtues our own, not because our nature is weak, for that is a slander upon God, but because our hearts and minds grow weary and cannot keep all virtues simultaneously and perpetually. And if you blame the Creator for having made you subject to weariness and failure, I shall reply, your censure would be still more severe if you thought proper to accuse Him of not having made you God. But you will say, if I have not the power, no sin attaches to me. You have sinned because you have not done what another could do. And again, he in comparison with whom you are inferior will be a sinner in respect of some other virtue, relatively to you or to another person; and thus it happens that whoever is thought to be first, is inferior to him who is his superior in some other particular.

24. C. If it is impossible for man to be without sin, what does the Apostle Jude mean by writing,⁷² "Now unto Him that is able to keep you without sin, and to set you before the presence of His glory without blemish"? This is clear proof that it is possible to keep a man without sin and without blemish.

A. You do not understand the passage. We are not told that a man can be without sin, which is your view, but that God, if He chooses, can keep a man free from sin, and of His mercy guard him so that he may be without blemish. And I say that all things are possible with God; but that everything which a man desires is not possible to him, and especially, an attribute which belongs to no created thing you ever read of.

C. I do not say that a man is without sin, which, perhaps, appears to you to be possible; but that he may be, if he chooses. For actuality is one thing, possibility another. In the actual we look for an instance; possibility implies that our power to act is real.

A. You are trifling, and forget the proverb, "Don't do what is done." You keep turning in the same mire,⁷³ and only make more dirt. I shall, therefore, tell you, what is clear to all, that you are trying to establish a thing that is not, never was, and, perhaps, never will be. To employ your own words, and show the folly and inconsistency of your argument, I say that you are maintaining an impossible possibility. For your proposition, that a man can be without sin if he chooses, is either true or false. If it be true, show me who the man is; if it be false, whatever is false can never happen. But let us have no more of these notions. Hissed off the stage, and no longer daring to appear in public, they should stay on the book shelves, and not let themselves be heard.

25. Let us proceed to other matters. And here I must speak uninterruptedly, so far, at least, as is consistent with giving you an opportunity of refuting me, or asking any question you think fit.

C. I will listen patiently, though I cannot say gladly. The ability of your reasoning will strike me all the more, while I am amazed at its falsity.

A. Whether what I am going to say is true or false, you will be able to judge when you have heard it.

C. Follow your own method. I am resolved, if I am unable to answer, to hold my tongue rather than assent to a lie.

A. What difference does it make whether I defeat you speaking or silent, and, as it is in the⁷⁴ story of Proteus, catch you asleep or awake?

C. When you have said what you like, you shall hear what you will certainly not like. For though truth may be put to hard shifts it cannot be subdued.

A. I want to sift your opinions a little, that your followers may know what an inspired genius you are. You say, "It is impossible for any but those who have the knowledge of the law to be without sin"; and you, consequently, shut out from righteousness a large number of Christians, and, preacher of sinlessness though you are, declare nearly all to be sinners. For how many Christians have that knowledge of the law which you can find but seldom, or hardly at all, in many doctors of the Church? But your liberality is so great that, in order to stand well with your Amazons, you have elsewhere written, "Even women ought to have a knowledge of the law," although the Apostle preaches that women ought to keep silence in the churches, and if they want to know anything consult their husbands at home. And you are not content with having given your cohort a knowledge of Scripture, but you must delight yourself with their songs and canticles, for you have a heading to the effect that "Women also should sing unto God." Who does not know that women should sing in the privacy of their own rooms, away from the company of men and the crowded congregation? But you allow what is not lawful, and the consequence is, that, with the support of their master, they make an open show of that which should be done with modesty, and with no eye to witness.

26. You go on to say, "The servant of God should utter from his lips no bitterness, but ever that which is sweet and pleasant"; and as though a servant of God were one thing, a doctor and priest of the Church another, forgetting what was previously laid down, you say in another heading, "A priest or doctor ought to watch the actions of all, and confidently rebuke sinners, lest he be responsible for them and their blood be required at his hands." And, not satisfied with saying it once, you repeat it, and inculcate that, "A priest or doctor should flatter no one, but boldly rebuke all, lest he destroy both himself and those who hear him." Is there so little harmony in one and the same work that you do not know what you have previously said? For if the servant of God ought to utter no bitterness from his mouth, but always that which is sweet and pleasant, it follows either that a priest and doctor will not be servants of God who ought to confidently rebuke sinners, and flatter no one, but boldly reprove all: or, if a priest and a doctor are not only servants of God, but have the chief place among His servants, it is idle to reserve smooth and pleasant speeches for the servants of God, for these are characteristic of heretics and of them who wish to deceive; as the Apostle says,⁷⁵ "They that are such serve not our Lord Christ but their own belly, and by their smooth and fair speech they beguile the hearts of the innocent." Flattery is always insidious, crafty, and smooth. And the flatterer is well described by the philosophers as "a pleasant enemy." Truth is bitter, of gloomy visage and wrinkled brow, and distasteful to those who are rebuked. Hence the Apostle says,⁷⁶ "Am I become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?" And the comic poet tells us that "Obsequiousness is the mother of friendship, truth of enmity." Wherefore we also eat the Passover with bitter herbs, and the chosen vessel teaches that the Passover should be kept with truth and sincerity. Let truth in our case be plain speaking, and bitterness will instantly follow.

27. In another place you maintain that "All are governed by their own free choice." What Christian can bear to hear this? For if not one, nor a few, nor many, but all of us are governed by our own free choice, what becomes of the help of God? And how do you explain the text,⁷⁷ "A man's goings are ordered by the Lord"? And⁷⁸ "A man's way is not in himself"; and⁷⁹ "No one can receive anything, unless it be given him from above"; and elsewhere,⁸⁰ "What hast thou which thou didst not receive? But if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" Our Lord and Saviour says:⁸¹ "I am come down from heaven not to do Mine own will, but the will of the Father who sent Me." And in another place,⁸² "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless not My will, but Thine be done." And in the Lord's prayer,⁸³ "Thy will be done as in heaven, so on earth." How is it that you are so rash as to do away with all God's help? Elsewhere, you make a vain attempt to append the words "not without the grace of God"; but in what sense you would have them understood is clear from this passage, for you do not admit His grace in separate actions, but connect it with our creation, the gift of the law, and the power of free will.

28. The argument of the next section is, "In the day of judgment, no mercy will be shown to the unjust and to sinners, but they must be consumed in eternal fire." Who can bear this, and suffer you to prohibit the mercy of God, and to sit in judgment on the sentence of the Judge before the day of judgment, so that, if He wished to show mercy to the unjust and the sinners, He must not, because you have given your veto? For you say it is written in the one hundred and fourth Psalm,⁸⁴ "Let sinners cease to be in the earth, and the wicked be no more." And in Isaiah,⁸⁵ "The wicked and sinners shall be burned up together, and they who forsake God shall be consumed." Do you not know that mercy is sometimes blended with the threatenings of God? He does not say that they must be burnt with eternal fires, but let them cease to be in the earth, and the wicked be no more. For it is one thing for them to desist from sin and wickedness, another for them to perish for ever and be burnt in eternal fire. And as for the passage which you quote from Isaiah, "Sinners and the wicked shall be burned up together," he does not add for ever. "And they who forsake God shall be consumed." This properly refers to heretics, who leave the straight path of the faith, and shall be consumed if they will not return to the Lord whom they have forsaken. And the same sentence is ready for you if you neglect to turn to better things. Again, is it not marvellous temerity to couple the wicked and sinners with the impious, for the distinction between them is great? Every impious person is wicked and a sinner; but we cannot conversely say every sinner and wicked person is also impious, for impiety properly belongs to those who have not the knowledge of God, or, if they have once had it, lose it by transgression. But the wounds of sin and wickedness, like faults in general, admit of healing. Hence, it is written,⁸⁶ "Many are the scourges of the sinner"; it is not said that he is eternally destroyed. And through all the scourging and torture the faults of Israel are corrected,⁸⁷ "For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." It is one thing to smite with the affection of a teacher and a parent; another to be madly cruel towards adversaries. Wherefore, we sing in the first Psalm,⁸⁸ "The impious do not rise in the judgment," for they are already sentenced to destruction; "nor sinners in the counsel of the just." To lose the glory of the resurrection is a different thing from perishing for ever. "The hour cometh," he says,⁸⁹ "In which all that are in the tombs shall hear His voice, and shall come forth: they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done ill unto the resurrection of judgment." And so the Apostle, in the same sense, because in the same Spirit, says to the Romans,⁹⁰ "As many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned under law, shall be judged by law." The man without law is the unbeliever who will perish for ever. Under the law is the sinner who believes in God, and who will be judged by the law, and will not perish. If the wicked and sinners are to be burned with everlasting fire, are you not afraid of the sentence you pass on yourself, seeing that you admit you are wicked and a sinner, while still you argue that a man is not without sin, but that he may be. It follows that the only person who can be saved is an individual who never existed, does not exist, and perhaps never will, and that all our predecessors of whom we read must perish. Take your own case. You are puffed up with all the pride of Cato, and have⁹¹ Milo's giant shoulders; but is it not amazing temerity for you, who are a sinner, to take the name of a teacher? If you are righteous, and, with a false humility, say you are a sinner, we may be surprised, but we shall rejoice at having so unique a treasure, and at reckoning amongst our friends a personage unknown to patriarch, prophet, and Apostle. And if Origen does maintain that no rational creatures ought to be lost, and allows repentance to the devil, what is that to us, who say that the devil and his attendants, and all impious persons and transgressors, perish eternally, and that⁹² Christians, if they be overtaken by sin, must be saved after they have been punished?

29.⁹³ Besides all this you add two chapters which contradict one another, and which, if true, would effectually close your mouth. "Except a man have learned, he cannot be acquainted with wisdom and understand the Scriptures." And again, "He that has not been taught, ought not to assume that he knows the law." You must, then, either produce the master from whom you learned, if you are lawfully to claim the knowledge of the law; or, if your master is a person who never learned from any one else, and taught you what he did not know himself, it follows that you are not acting rightly in claiming a knowledge of Scripture, when you have not been taught, and in starting as a master before you have been a disciple. And yet, perhaps, with your customary humility, you make your boast that the Lord Himself, Who teaches all knowledge, was your master, and that, like Moses in the cloud and darkness, face to face, you hear the words of God, and so, with the⁹⁴ halo round your head, take the lead of us. And even this is not enough, but all at once you turn Stoic, and thunder in our ears Zeno's proud maxims. "A Christian ought to be so patient that if any one wished to take his property he would let it go with joy." Is it not enough for us patiently to lose what we have, without returning thanks to him who ill-treats and plunders us, and sending after him all blessings? The Gospel teaches that to him who would go to law with us, and by strife and litigation take away our coat, we must give our cloak also. It does not enjoin the giving of thanks and joy at the loss of our property. What I say is this, not that there is any enormity in your view, but that everywhere you are prone to exaggeration, and indulge in ambitious flights. This is why you add that "The bravery of dress and ornament is an enemy of God." What enmity, I should like to know, is there towards God if my tunic is cleaner than usual, or if the bishop, priest, or deacon, or any other ecclesiastics, at the offering of the sacrifices walk in white? Beware, ye clergy; beware, ye monks; widows and virgins, you are? peril unless the people see you begrimed with dirt, and clad in rags. I say nothing of lay-men, who proclaim open war and enmity against God if they wear costly and elegant apparel.

30. Let us hear the rest. "We must love our enemies as we do our neighbours"; and immediately, falling into a deep slumber, you lay down this proposition: "We must never believe an enemy." Not a word is needed from me to show the contradiction here. You will say that both propositions are found in Scripture, but you do not observe the particular connection in which the passages occur. I am told to love my enemies and pray for my persecutors. Am I bidden to love them as though they were my neighbours, kindred, and friends, and to make no difference between a rival and a relative? If I love my enemies as my neighbours, what more affection can I show to my friends? If you had maintained this position, you ought to have taken care not to contradict yourself by saying that we must never believe an enemy. But even the law teaches us how an enemy should be loved.⁹⁵ If an enemy's beast be fallen, we must raise it up. And the Apostle tells us,⁹⁶ "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink. For by so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head," not by way of curse and condemnation, as most people think, but to chasten and bring him to repentance, so that, overcome by kindness, and melted by the warmth of love, he may no longer be an enemy.

31. Your next point is that "the kingdom of heaven is promised even in the Old Testament," and you adduce evidence from the Apocrypha, although it is clear that the kingdom of heaven was first preached under the Gospel by John the Baptist, and our Lord and Saviour, and the Apostles. Read the Gospels. John the Baptist cries in the desert,⁹⁷ "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand"; and concerning the Saviour it is written,⁹⁸ "From that time He began to preach and to say, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." And again,⁹⁹ "Jesus went round about the towns and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the kingdom of God." And He commanded His Apostles to¹⁰⁰ "go and preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." But you call us Manichaeans because we prefer the Gospel to the law, and say that in the latter we have the shadow, in the former, the substance, and you do not see that your foolishness goes hand in hand with impudence. It is one thing to condemn the law, as Manichaeus did; it is another to prefer the Gospel to the law, for this is in accordance with apostolic teaching. In the law the servants of the Lord speak, in the Gospel the Lord Himself; in the former are the promises, in the latter their fulfilment; there are the beginnings, here is perfection; in the law the foundations of works are laid; in the Gospel the edifice is crowned with the top-stone of faith and grace. I have mentioned this to show the character of the teaching given by our distinguished professor.

32. The hundredth heading runs thus: "A man can be without sin, and easily keep the commandments of God if he chooses," as to which enough has already been said. And although he professes to imitate, or rather complete the work of the blessed martyr Cyprian in the treatise which the latter wrote to¹⁰¹ Quirinus, he does not perceive that he has said just the opposite in the work under discussion. Cyprian, in the fifty-fourth heading of the third book, lays it down that no one is free from stain and without sin, and he immediately gives proofs, among them the passage in Job,¹⁰² "Who is cleansed from uncleanness? Not he who has lived but one day upon the earth."¹⁰³ And in the fifty-first Psalm, "Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." And in the Epistle of John,¹⁰⁴ "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." You, on the other hand, maintain that "A man can be without sin," and that you may give your words the semblance of truth, you immediately add, "And easily keep the commandments of God, if he chooses," and yet they have been seldom or never kept by any one. Now, if they were easy, they ought to have been kept by all. But if, to concede you a point, at rare intervals some one may be found able to keep them, it is clear that what is rare is difficult. And by way of supplementing this and displaying the greatness of your own virtues (we are to believe, forsooth, that you bring forth the sentiment out of the treasure of a good conscience), you have a heading to the effect that: "We ought not to commit even light offences." And for fear some one might think you had not explained in the work the meaning of light, you add that, "We must not even think an evil thought," forgetting the words,¹⁰⁵ "Who understands his offences? Clear thou me from hidden faults, and keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins, O Lord." You should have known that the Church admits even failures through ignorance and sins of mere thought to be offences; so much so that she bids sacrifices be offered for errors, and the high priest who makes intercession for the whole people previously offers victims for himself. Now, if he were not himself righteous, he would never be commanded to offer for others. Nor, again, would he offer for himself if he were free from sins of ignorance. If I were to attempt to show that error and ignorance is sin, I must roam at large over the wide fields of Scripture.

33. C. Pray have you not read that¹⁰⁶ "He who looks upon a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart?" It seems that not only are the look and the allurements to vice reckoned as sin, but whatever it be to which we give assent. For either we can avoid an evil thought, and consequently may be free from sin; or, if we cannot avoid it, that is not reckoned as sin which cannot be avoided.

A. Your argument is ingenious, but you do not see that it goes against Holy Scripture, which declares that even ignorance is not without sin. Hence it was that Job offered sacrifices for his sons, lest, perchance, they had unwittingly sinned in thought. And if, when one is cutting wood, the axe-head flies from the handle and kills a man, the owner is¹⁰⁷ commanded to go to one of the cities of refuge and stay there until the high priest dies; that is to say, until he is redeemed by the Saviour's blood, either in the baptistery, or in penitence which is a copy of the grace of baptism, through the ineffable mercy of the Saviour, who¹⁰⁸ would not have any one perish, nor delights in the death of sinners, but would rather that they should be converted and live.

C. It is surely strange justice to hold me guilty of a sin of error of which my conscience does not accuse itself. I am not aware that I have sinned, and am I to pay the penalty for an offence of which I am ignorant? What more can I do, if I sin voluntarily?

A. Do you expect me to explain the purposes and plans of God? The Book of Wisdom gives an answer to your foolish question:¹⁰⁹ "Look not into things above thee, and search not things too mighty for thee." And elsewhere,¹¹⁰ "Make not thyself overwise, and argue not more than is fitting." And in the same place, "In wisdom and simplicity of heart seek God." You will perhaps deny the authority of this book; listen then to the Apostle blowing the Gospel trumpet:¹¹¹ "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past tracing out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been His counsellor?" Your questions are such as he elsewhere describes:¹¹² "But foolish and ignorant questioning avoid, knowing that they gender strifes." And in Ecclesiastes (a book concerning which there can be no doubt) we read,¹¹³ "I said, I will be wise, but it was far from me. That which is exceeding deep, who can find it out?" You ask me to tell you why the potter makes one vessel to honour, another to dishonour, and will not be satisfied with Paul, who replies on behalf of his Lord,¹¹⁴ "O man, who art thou that repliest against God?" The remainder of this book is occupied by a series of quotations from the Old Testament, designed to show that it is not only the outer and conscious act which is reckoned sinful, but the opposition to the Divine will, which is often implicit and half-conscious. Occasionally, also, the speaker shows how the texts quoted enforce the argument which he has before used, that men may be spoken of as righteous in a general sense, yet by no means free from sins of thought or desire, if not of act. The passages quoted are: Gen. viii. 21. I will not curse the ground *131 for the mind of man is set on evil from his youth. xvii. 17, xviii. 12. Abraham and Sarah laughing at the promise. xxxvii. 35. Jacob's excessive grief. Exod. xxi. 12, 13. The guilt of one who slays another unawares. Lev. iv. 2, 27. Offerings for sins of ignorance. v. 3. Offerings for ceremonial uncleanness. ix. 1. Offerings for Aaron at his consecration. xii. 6. Offerings for women after childbirth. xiv. 1, 6, xvi. 6, xii. 7. Offerings for the leper. xv. 31, xvi. 2, xvi. 5. Offerings for the people on the day of atonement. xxii. 14. Eating the hallowed things ignorantly; compared with 1 Cor. xi. 27, 28, of careless participation in Sacrament. Numbers vi. 1. Offerings for the Nazarite. xiv. 7, vii. 28, 29. Offerings for imploring God's Mercy. xxviii. 15, 22, xxix. 5, v. 11, 17. Offerings at the feast.

Numbers xxxv. 13. The cities of refuge provided for manslaughterers. Deut. ix. 6, xviii. 13. Israel warned not to boast of righteousness. xviii. 9-12, v. 14, 15. Perfection used only of avoiding idolatry. xxii. 8. The housetop without a parapet makes a man guilty. xxiii. 2. Defilement from unconscious personal acts. Josh. vii. 12. The people made guilty by the sin of Achan. xi. 19, 20. The racial guilt of the Canaanites. 1 Sam. xiv. 27. Jonathan made guilty by tasting the honey. xvi. 6. The lord sees the heart, not the outward appearance. 2 Sam. iv. 11. Ishbosheth spoken of as righteous. vi. 7, 8. Uzzah smitten for carelessness.

2 Sam. xxiv. 10. David's numbering the people.

1 Kings viii. 46. Solomon's Prayer-There is none that sinneth not. xiv. 5. The prophet detecting the motive Jeroboam's wife.

2 Kings iv. 27. Elijah seeing the Shunamite's heart. 1 Chron. ii. 32. Sept. Half-prophets. Habakkuk iii. 1. Vulgate. A prayer "for sins of ignorance" ("upon Shigionoth"), supposed to be in recognition of over-boldness in i. 2-4. Ezek. xlvi. 20. The sacrifice of Ezekiel's restored temple. Jer. x. 23. The way of man not in himself. xvii. 9. The heart deceitful. Prov. xiv. 12. A way that seemeth right to a man. xix. 21. Many devices in a man's heart? xx. 9. Who can say, I have a clean heart?

17. Who will boast that he is clean?

Eccl. vii. 16. The heart of a man is full of wickedness.

1: See S. Aug. De Sp. et Lit., c. i.

2: Ps. cxxvii. 1.

3: Pumice terere.

4: Rom. ix. 16.

5: Reading quod super artes est.

6: That is, Diodorous, surnamed Cronus who lived at Alexandria in the reign of Ptolemy Soter (b.c. 323-285). He was the teacher of Philo. For his discussions On the Possible, Zeller's "Socrates and the Socratic Schools," Reiche's translation, pp. 272, 273, and authorities there cited, may be consulted.

7: Died b.c. 207, aged 73. He was the first to base the Stoic doctrine on something like systematic reasoning.

8: S. Matt. xix. 24.

9: S. Matt. xix. 21.

10: Job i. 1.

11: This appears to be an inaccurate quotation made from memory.

12: S. Luke i. 5 sqq.

13: Job xvi. 21. Vulg. R. V. Margin-"That one might plead for a man with God as a son of man pleadeth for his neighbour."

14: Job xxxi. 35.

15: Job ix. 20, Job ix. 30, Job ix. 31.

16: S. Luke i. 18.

17: Ib. 20.

18: Eccles. vii. 21.

19: 2 Chron vi. 36.

20: Ps. xix. 12, Ps. xix. 13.

21: Ps. cxliii. 2.

22: 1 John v. 18, 1 John v. 19.

23: 1 John i. 8.

24: 1 John i. 9.

25: Prov. xviii. 17, Vulg. nearly.

26: Is. xliii. 26, Sept.

27: Rom. xi. 32.

28: Jer. xxiii. 28.

29: Deut xviii. 13.

30: S. Matt. v. 48.

31: Ps. xli. 7.

32: Rom. iii. 23, Rom. iii. 24. So R. V. Margin-"To be propitiatory."

33: Cic. Lib. iv. Acad. Quaest.

34: Phil. iii. 12-16.

35: From szeptomai , to keep watch.

36: Prov. i. 3, Sept.* 37: Ps. cxix. 18.

38: The reading is much disputed.

39: Ps. cxliii. 2.

40: Malach. iii. 6.

41: 2 Cor. iii. 10.

42: Ib. 11.

43: 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 1 Cor. xiii. 10.

44: 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

45: cxxxix. 6.

46: Ps. lxxiii. 16, Ps. lxxiii. 17.

47: Ibid. 22, 23.

48: Jer. x. 14.

49: 1 Cor. i. 25.

50: 2 Tim. iv. 7, 2 Tim. iv. 8.

51: 1 Cor. xii. 21, 1 Cor. xii. 29, 1 Cor. xii. 11.

52: Rom. ix. 21.

53: S. Luke i. 48 sq.

54: Lam. iv. 6.

55: Ezek xvi. 55.

56: Gen. xxxviii. 26.

57: 1 Cor. xv. 28.

58: Ps. lxii. 2.

59: S. John xxi. 15-17.

60: James ii. 10.

61: Ps. civ. 24.

62: According to some, Plato: more probably, Origen, the word arxaioj being an allusion to the title of his chief work, Peri 'Arxwn .

63: 1 Cor. xii. 4, 1 Cor. xii. 5.

64: That is, mean.

65: 1 Tim. iii. 2 sq.

66: Titus i. 5 sq.

67: Ps. ci. 6.

68: 1 Sam. ii. 24.

69: 1 Pet. ii. 22.

70: S. John xiv. 30.

71: Phil. ii. 6 sq.

72: Verse 24.

73: Literally, wash a brick (that has not been burnt). Hence (1) labour in vain, or (2) make bad worse. The latter appears to be the meaning here.

74: Virg. Georg., iv.

75: Rom. xvi. 18.

76: Gal. iv. 16.

77: Prov. xx. 24.

78: Jer. x. 23.

79: S. John xx. 11.

80: 1 Cor. iv. 7.

81: S. John vi. 38.

82: S. Luke xxii. 42.

83: S. Matt. vi. 10.

84: Ps. civ. 35.

85: Is. i. 28.

86: Ps. xxxii. 10.

87: Heb. xii. 6.

88: Verse 5. Sept.

89: S. John v. 28, John v. 29.

90: Rom. ii. 12.

91: The reference is to the stature of Pelagius.

92: The sense of this passage is much disputed. St. Jerome was, possibly, speaking of persons who upon the whole are sincere and not merely covenanted Christians.

93: Jerome seems here to speak in his own person and to address Pelagius directly.

94: Cornuta fronte. Literally, "with horned brow." The allusion is to the rays of light which beamed from the face of Moses, the Hebrew word bearing both meanings, ray and horn. Hence the portraiture of him with horns.

95: Deut. xxii. 4.

96: Rom. xii. 20.

97: S. Matt. iii. 2.

98: iv. 17.

99: iv. 23.

100: x. 7.

101: A Christian of Carthage who, together with Cyprian, sent relief to the bishops and martyrs in the Mines of Sigus, in Numidia, and elsewhere (a.d. 257).

102: Job xiv. 4.

103: Ps. li. 5.

104: 1 John i. 8.

105: Ps. xix. 12, Ps. xix. 13.

106: S. Matt. v. 28.

107: Numb. xxxv. 6.

108: Ezek. xviii. 23.

109: iii. 21.

110: Eccles. vii. 16.

111: Rom. xi. 33, Rom. xi. 34.

112: 2 Tim. ii. 23.

113: Eccles. vii. 24, Eccles. vii. 25.

114: Rom. ix. 20.

Against the Pelagians - Book 2

Book II.

Book II. This book can hardly be said to form part of a dialogue. It is rather an argument from Scripture to prove the point of the Augustinian arguer, Atticus. From the fourth chapter onwards it consists, like the last five chapters of Book I., of a chain of Scripture texts, taken from the New Testament and the Prophets, to show the universality of sin, and thus to refute the Pelagian assertion that a man can be without sin if he wills. We shall, therefore, give, as in the previous case, a list of the texts and the first words of them, only giving Jerome's words where he introduces some original remark of his own, or some noteworthy comment. The Pelagian begins by reiterating the dilemma: If the commandments are given to be obeyed, then man can be without sin; if he is, by his creation, such that he must be a sinner, then God, not he, is the author of sin. To the argument that sacrifices are enjoined for sins of ignorance, he replies by appealing from the Old Testament to the New, which leads to a discussion (2, 3) on St. Paul's description of the conflict with sin, in Romans vii. Paul, it is argued, speaks not as a sinner, but as a man, and thus confesses the sinfulness of humanity. That men may be without ingrained vice is possible; that they can be without sin is not. This leads the Augustinian, Atticus, resuming his list of testimonies, to the fact that, though men are found who are righteous as avoiding wickedness (kaki/a), yet none is without sin (aOnama/rthtoj). In Psalm xxxii. 5. One who speaks of himself as "holy," yet confesses his transgression.

Prov. xxiv. 16. Explains this, "The righteous falls, but sins again." xviii. 17, LXX. and xviii. 17 Vulgate. A righteous man accuses himself when he begins to speak.

Ps. lviii. 3. Sinners are estranged from the womb; that is, either, as St. Paul says (Rom. v. 14), they sin "after the similitude of Adam"; or, "when Christ, as the firstborn, opened the virgin's womb" (Exod. xiii. 2). The heretics refused to acknowledge the mystery, which was prefigured by the Eastern door of the Temple (Ezek. xlv. 2), which closed again when once the High Priest had gone through it. 1 Job iv. 17-21. Shall mortal man be just with God? vii. 1. The life of man is temptation.

20, 21. If I have sinned, what can I do? ix. 15, ix. 16. If I were righteous, he would not hear me.

29-31. If I wash myself with snow water, etc. x. 15. If I be righteous, etc. xiv. 4, Job xiv. 5. Who will be free from uncleanness? Not one.

Prov. xvi. 26, LXX. Man toileth in sorrow.

Job xl. 4. Wha shall I answer thee?

Prov. xx. 9. "Who will boast that he has a clean heart?" which shows at least that the commandments are not easy, as Pelagius says they are.

1 John v. 3. "His commandments are not grievous," and Matt. xi. 30. "My yoke is easy," are true only in comparison with Judaism, and should be compared with Acts xv. 10. A yoke ...which neither our fathers nor we are able to bear.

James iv. 11. "Thou judgest the law." that is, if you say that the condemnation of sins of ignorance is unreasonable. That we all sin in such ways is evident from James i. 20. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." But anger is constantly condemned as in Prov. xv. 1, LXX. "Wrath destroys even wise men."

Eph. iv. 26. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath.

Matt. v. 22. He who is angry ...shall be in danger of council.

Eccles. xi. 19. "I am the most foolish of all men." This is said by Christ in the person of humanity. So Ps. lxxix. 5. "God, Thou knowest my foolishness." But 1 Cor. i. 25. The foolishness of God is wiser than men.

Ecclus. i. 18. "In much wisdom is much grief," shows the wise man's sense of imperfection. So viii. 7. "I hated my life," and

14. "There be righteous men unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked;" that is, God sees evil where we do not.

17. "However much a man may labor, yet he shall not find it;" and ix. 2, 3. There is one event to all. The heart ...is full of evil. x. 1. "Dead flies cause the ointment to stink;" That is, almost everyone is defiled by heresy or other faults.

1 Pet. ii. 17, 18. Judgement must begin at the house of God.

6. There are four emotions which agitate mankind, two relating to the present, two to the future; two to good, and two to evil. There is sorrow, called in Greek lu/ph, and joy, in Greek xara/ or h9donh/, although many translate the latter word by voluptas, pleasure; the one of which is referred to evil, the other to good. And we go too far if we rejoice over such things as we ought not, as, for example, riches, power, distinctions, the bad fortune of enemies, or their death; or, on the other hand, if we are tortured with grief on account of present evils, adversity, exile, poverty, weakness, and the death of kindred, all of which is forbidden by the Apostle. And again, if we covet those things which we consider good, inheritance, distinctions, unvaried prosperity, bodily health, and the like, in the possession of which we rejoice and find enjoyment; or if we fear those things which we deem adverse. Now, according to the Stoics, Zeno that is to say and Chrysippus, it is possible for a perfect man to be free from these emotions; according to the Peripatetics, it is difficult and even impossible, an opinion which has the constant support of all Scripture. Hence Josephus, the historian of the Maccabees, said that the emotions can be subdued and governed, not extirpated, and Cicero's five books of "Tusculan Disputations" are full of these discussions.² Accord to the Apostle, the weakness of the body and spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places fight against us. And the same writer³ tells us that the works of the flesh and the works of the spirit are manifest, and these are contrary the one to the other, so that we do not the things that we would. If we do not what we would, but what we would not, how can you say that a man can be without sin if he chooses? You see that neither an Apostle, nor any believer can perform what he wishes.⁴ "Love covereth a multitude of sins," not so much sins of the past as sins of the present, that we may not sin any more while the love of God abideth in us. Wherefore it is said concerning the woman that was a sinner,⁵ "Her sins which are many are forgiven her, for she loved much." And this shows us that the doing what we wish does not depend merely upon our own power, but upon the assistance which God in His mercy gives to our will.

7. The quotations from Scripture are now continued: In 1 John i. 5, John i. 7, John i. 8, Matt. v. 14, Christ and the Apostles are called the Light of the world. The world therefore is darkness.

1 Tim. vi. 16. God only hath immortality and is "only wise"; yet others, like the Prince of Tyre (Ezek. xxviii. 3), are wise derivatively. So we are pure, but only by grace. Thus 1 John i. 7. The blood of Christ cleanses us.

Job xxv. 5, Job xxv. 6. The stars are not pure in his sight.

Gal. ii. 16. "By the law no flesh shall be justified;" but Rom. iii. 1, 24, 28, 30. Being justified freely through His grace, etc. vi. 14. Not under the law, but under grace. ix. 16. Not of him that willeth, but of God which showeth mercy. ix. 30-32. The Gentiles ...attained to the righteousness by faith. x. 2. Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth.

8. The Apostle confesses his need of this grace for his work.

1 Cor. i. 1-3. Grace to you from God.

7, 8. That ye come behind in no gift-that no flesh may glory in His sight.

1 Cor. iii. 6-10. Paul planted ...but God gave the increase.

18, 19. If any man thinketh himself to be wise, let him become a fool. iv. 4. I know nothing against myself, yet I am not hereby justified.

7. What have ye that ye did not receive?

19. I will come to you, if the Lord will.

9. The Apostle shows also his need of grace himself.

1 Cor. xv. 9, 10. By the grace of God I am what I am, etc.

2 Cor. iii. 4-6. Our sufficiency is of God.

Gal. ii. 16. We have believed, that we might, be justified by faith. ii. 21. If righteousness come by the law, Christ is dead for nought. iii. 10, 13. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law.

24. The law our teacher to bring us to Christ. v. 4. Ye are severed from Christ, ye that would be justified by the law.

10.

Phil. ii. 13. It is God that worketh in you.

2 Thess. iii. 3. The Lord is faithful, He shall establish you.

1 Tim. vi. 20, 21. O Timothy, guard that which is committed unto thee.

Tit. iii. 4-7. The kindness and mercy of God our Saviour saved us.

11. We now turn to the Gospels "and supplement the flickering flame of the Apostolic light with the brightness of the lamp of Christ."

Matt. v. 22. "Every man who is angry ...shall be in danger of the council." Which of us is not here condemned?

23, 24. "First be reconciled to thy brother." Who is there that finds this command easy?

37. "Let your speech be Yea, yea, Nay, nay." Who has ever kept this commandment? The Psalmist says Ps. cxvi. 11. All men are liars.

12.

Matt. vi. 34. "Be not anxious for to-morrow." Do you fulfil this? vii. 14. "Narrow is the gate which leadeth to life." How can you say that the commandments are easy?

Luke ix. 58. "The Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." This is interpreted by Is. xxviii. 12. "Receive him that is weary, and this is my rest;" and

Is. lxvi. 1, 2. "On whom shall I rest but on him that is humble?" Christ finds few on whom to rest. How then can His commands be said to be easy?

Matt. ix. 12, 13. "I came not to call the righteous." "They that are whole need not the physician." Had the world not been full of sin, Christ would not have come. So Ps. xii. 1. Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth. xiv. 1, 3. They are corrupt ...none doeth good.

Matt. x. 9. "Get you no gold ...nor shoes." Who has fulfilled this? Not even the Apostles, for Acts xii. 8. The angel bids Peter to bind on his sandals.

13.

Matt. x. 22-34. Describes the persecutions of Christ's followers, and gives the command to take up the cross. Are these easy? xiv. 31. Even Peter's faith fails, and he begins to sink. xv. 19, 20. Out of the heart came evil thoughts, etc. xvi. 25. Whosoever will lose his life will find it. xviii. 7. "Woe to the man through whom stumbling cometh." But James iii. 2. In many things we all stumble or err.

Phil. ii. 21. All seek their own.

Matt. xix. 21. The young lawyer had kept all the law, yet failed. xxiii. 26-28. The woes on the Pharisees fall in their measure upon all.

14.

Matt. xxvi. 39. "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Yet Critobulus says, by his own will he can do right.

Mark xiv. 37. "Could ye not watch with me one hour?" They could not. vi. 5. He could do no mighty works because of their unbelief. vii. 24. "He went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon." If Christ could not do as he wished, how can we? ix. 5. Peter's request at the Transfiguration shows his ignorance. xiii. 32. Even the Son knows not all things; how then can we? xiv. 35. If it be possible. How can you say it is possible every hour to avoid sin?

15.

Mark xvi. 14. Even the Apostles showed unbelief and hardness of heart.

1 John v. 19. The world lieth in the evil one.

Luke i. 20. Even Zacharias disbelieved God's message.

Matt. xvii. 15. The disciples could not relieve the lunatic, because of unbelief.

Mark iv. 34. The disciple's dispute about precedence.

Luke ix. 54. James and John show a vindictive spirit. xiv. 26, 27. The commands to forsake all and take up the cross are not easy. xvi. 15. That which is exalted among men is abomination in the sight of God. xvii. 1. It is impossible but that occasions of stumbling should come. xvii. 6. The Apostles' faith was not even like a grain of mustard seed.

James iii. 2.

Matt. xvii. 19.

16.

Luke xviii. 1. We are always to pray. This shows our weakness.

27. Who, then, can be saved? It is possible, but to God only. xxii. 24. The contest for precedence at the last supper.

31, 32. Peter's faith almost overcome by Satan.

Luke xxii. 43. Even Christ in his agony needs an angel to strengthen Him.

46. Pray that ye enter not into temptation.

17.

John v. 30. Even Christ says, "I cannot do anything by myself"; and vii. 10. Was irresolute about going up to the Feast of Tabernacles.

19. None of you doeth the law. viii. 3. None of the accusers of the woman taken in adultery were without sin. Christ wrote their names in the earth (Jerem. xvii. 13). x. 8. All who came (not who were sent; Jerem. xiv. 15) before Christ were robbers. xvii. 12. I kept them-they did not keep themselves.

Acts xv. 39. Paul and Barnabas quarrelled. xvi. 6, 7. They were forbidden to preach where they chose.

18. Even the Apostles, with their full light, show their dependence on grace.

Acts xvii. 30. The times before Christ were times of ignorance.

1 Cor. iv. 19. I will come if the Lord will.

James ii. 10. To stumble in one point is to be guilty of all. iii. 2. In many things we all stumble.

8. The tongue is a deadly poison.

19.

James iv. 1. Wars arise from our lust. David indeed said, Ps. xxvi. 2. "Examine me and prove me," etc. This self-confidence led to his fall. li. 1. Have mercy on me, O God. lxxx. 5. "Thou feedest us with the bread of tears." Similarly Ps. xxx. 6, 7. I said I shall never be moved ...Thou didst hide Thy face. xxxii. 5. I said I will confess my sin, xxxvii. 5, 6. He shall make thy righteousness as the light.

39. The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord. xxxviii. 7. There is no soundness in my flesh.

Rom. vii. 18. In my flesh dwelleth no good thing.

Ps. xxxviii. 8. Vulgate. My loins are filled with deceits. xxxix. 5. He hath made our days as handbreadths. lxi. 5. My sins are not hid from thee. lxxvii. 2. My soul refused to be comforted.

10. This is the changing of the right hand of the Most High. 6 20.

Ps. lxxxix. 2. Mercy shall be built up forever. xci. 6. From "the thing⁷ that walketh in darkness" who can be free? For xi. 2. "The wicked bend their bow"-an image of the heretics. xcii. 14. Those that are planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish. ciii. 8, 10. The Lord is full of compassion.

2 Sam. viii. 13, 14. David receives the promises with the humble confession of his weakness. "Is this the law of man, O God?" xvi. 10. He humbles himself under Abishai's violence and Shimei's curse. xvii. 14. And is delivered only by God's confounding the counsel of Ahithophel.

1 Kings xiv. 8. It was God who gave Jeroboam the kingdom.

21.

1 Kings xv. 11. Asa, though a good man, was faulty. xix. 4. Elijah fled from Jezebel.

Ps. cxviii. 6. The Lord is my keeper.

2 Chron. xvii. 3. Jehoshaphat prospers because the Lord is with him. Yet xix. 2. He is rebuked for joining with Ahab.

2 Chron. xxii. 9. Ahaziah received burial among kings because descended from righteous Jehoshaphat.

2 Kings xviii. 3, 4, 7. Hezekiah did great things, but only through the Lord's help.

14. He gave the consecrated gold to the king of Assyria.

22. Even the best kings of Judah were imperfect.

2 Kings xx. 1, 5. Hezekiah wept when death was at hand, and recovered through special mercy.

13, 17. But he sinned in receiving the Babylonian envoys.

2 Chron. xxxii. 26. He fell by the lifting up of his heart. xxxiv. 2. Josiah was a righteous man; yet 22, 23. He needed the aid of Huldah; and xxxv. 22. He was slain through not heeding God's warning; and 23. The prophets also are weak and sinful.

Lam. iv. 20. Jeremiah⁸ lamented his fall.

Numb. xx. 10, 12. Moses is punished for his sin at Meribah. This is the meaning of Ps. cxli. 6. Vulgate. Their judges were swallowed up, joined to the Rock, etc.

Hosea ii. 19. God in mercy forgives Israel's unfaithfulness. xi. 9. "I will not enter into the city." Only the Holy One is not joined to the mass of ungodliness.

Amos vi. 13. We turn righteousness into wormwood.

Jonah i. 14. The sailors confess that God is just in raising the storm.

Micah vii. 2. The godly man is perished from the earth, etc. vi. 8. The command of justice, mercy, and a humble walk with God is only possible to humble faith, for Ps. cxl. 6. "The wicked walk on every side," and James iv. 6. God giveth grace to the humble.

24.

Habakkuk iii. 16. Let rottenness enter into my bones, if only I may rest, etc.

Zech. iii. 1. Joshua is represented as clothed in filthy garments, and is freed through God's mercy. But Jovinian's heir says "I am quite free from sin, I have no filthy garments, I am governed by my own will, I am greater than an Apostle. The Apostle does what he would not, and what he would he does not; but I do what I will, and what I would not I do not: the kingdom of heaven has been prepared for me, or rather I have by my virtuous life prepared it for myself. Adam was subject to punishment, and so are others who think themselves guilty after the similitude of Adam's transgressions; I and my crew alone have nothing to fear. Other men shut up in their cells and who never see women, because, poor creatures! they do not listen to my words, are tormented with desire: crowds of women may surround me, I feel no stirring of concupiscence. For to me may be applied the⁹ words, 'Holy stones are rolled upon the ground,' and the reason why I am insensible to the attraction of sin is that in the power of free will I carry Christ's trophy about with me." But let us listen to God¹⁰ proclaiming by the mouth of Isaiah: "O my people, they which call thee happy cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths." Who is the greatest subverter of the people of God—he who, relying on the power of free choice, despises the help of the Creator, and is satisfied with following his own will, or he who dreads to be judged by the details of the Lord's commandments? To men of this sort, God¹¹ says, "Woe unto you that are wise in your own eyes, and prudent in your own sight." Isaiah, if we follow the Hebrew, laments¹² and says, "Woe is me because I have been silent, because I am a man of unclean lips: and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the Lord of Hosts." He for his meritorious and virtuous life enjoyed the sight of God, and conscious of his sins confessed that he had unclean lips. Not that he had said anything repugnant to the will of God, but because, either from fear, or from a deep sense of shame, he had been¹³ silent, and had not reproofed the errors of the people so freely as a prophet should. When do we sinners rebuke offenders, we who flatter wealth and accept the persons of sinners for the sake of filthy lucre? for we shall hardly say that we speak with perfect frankness to men of whose assistance we stand in need. Suppose that we do not such things as they, suppose we keep ourselves from every form of sin; to refrain from speaking the truth is certainly sin. In the Septuagint, however, we do not find the words "because I have been silent," but "because I was pricked," that is with the consciousness of sin; and thus the words of the¹⁴ prophet are fulfilled. "My life was turned into misery while I was pierced by the thorn." He was pricked by the thorn of sin: you are decked with the flowers of virtue.¹⁵ "The moon shall be ashamed, and the sun confounded, when the Lord shall punish the host of heaven on high." This is explained by another passage.¹⁶ "Even the stars are unclean in His sight," and again,¹⁷ "He chargeth His angels with folly." The moon is ashamed, the sun is confounded, and the sky covered with sackcloth, and shall we fearlessly and joyously, as though we were free from all sin, face the majesty of the Judge, when the mountains shall melt away, that is, all who are lifted up by pride, and all the host of the heavens, whether they be stars, or angelic powers, when the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fade away like leaves? The argument is now carried on mostly by the quotation of passages from the prophets:

25. Is xxxiv. 5. "My sword hath drunk its fill in the heavens. It will come down in Edom." How much more is there wrath against sin on earth! Edom means blood, which cannot inherit the kingdom (1 Cor. xv. 50). xlv. 9. Woe unto him who striveth with his Maker. liii. 6. We have all gone astray like sheep.

Ezek. xvi. 14. Jerusalem is perfect in beauty; yet Ezek. xvi. 60, 61. Her salvation is not of merit but of mercy.

Nahum i. 3. Though he cleanse,¹⁸ yet will he not make thee innocent.

1 Cor. xv. 9. I am not worthy-because I persecuted.

Ezek. xx. 43, 44. When pardoned, Jerusalem will still remember her sin.

Let us confess with shame that these are the utterances of men who have already won their reward; sinners upon earth, and still in our frail and mortal bodies let us adopt the language of the saints in heaven who have even been endowed with incorruption and immortality.¹⁹ "And ye say the way of the Lord is not equal, when your ways are not equal." It is Pharisaic pride to attribute to the injustice of the Creator sins which are due to our own will, and to slander His righteousness. The sons of Zadok, the priests of the spiritual temple, that is the Church,²⁰ go not out to the people in their ministerial robes, lest by human intercourse they may lose their holiness and be defiled. And do you suppose that you, in the thick of the throng, and an ordinary individual, are pure?

26. Let us hastily run through the prophet Jeremiah:

Jerem. v. 1, 2. Is there any that doeth justly, etc. vii. 21, 22. God rejects the sacrifices, because of the worshippers' evil lives. xiii. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin?

27.

Jerem. xvii. 14. "Heal me, O Lord," Otherwise Jeremiah could only say, as in the text next quoted, xx. 14, 17, 18. Cursed be the day wherein I was born, etc. xxiii. 23. Am I a God at hand, etc. So conscious is he of God's power. xxiv. 6, 7. God, not they themselves, will plant them, etc. xxvi. 21-24. Jeremiah needed the help of Ahikam. How much more do we need that of God.

28.

Jerem. xxxi. 34. The promise of the new covenant. xxxii. 30. The children of Israel have perpetually done evil. xxxvii. 18, 19. Yet Jeremiah himself trembled before Zedekiah.

Jerem. xxx. 10, 11. Fear not, O Jacob, for I am with thee.

29.

Amos vi. 14. "We have taken us horns by our own strength." These are the boasts of heretics. But Is. xvi. 6. His strength (Moab's) is by no means according to his arrogance.²¹

Jerem. i. 7, 20. Men's sin will only be abolished because God is gracious to them. If you will abandon your assertions of natural ability, I will concede that your whole contention stands good, but only by the gift of God.

Lam. iii. 26-42. It is good that a man should quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord.

30.

Dan. iv. 17. The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men.

Ps. cxiii. 7, 8. He raiseth up the poor out of the dust.

Is. xl. 17. He doeth what He will in heaven and in earth. The words of 2 Maccabees v. 17, which say that Antiochus Epiphanes had power to overthrow the Temple, "because of the multitude of sins," are quoted in connection with the confessions of Daniel.

Dan. ix. 5. "We have sinned and dealt perversely," which is shown by 20. "While I was yet praying," etc., to be a personal, not only a national confession.

24. The prophecy of the seventy weeks shows that the prophet looked to God alone for the establishment of righteousness. So then, until that end shall come, and this corruptible and mortal shall put on incorruption and immortality, we must be liable to sin; not, as you falsely say, owing to the fault of our nature and creation, but through the frailty and fickleness of human will, which varies from moment to moment; because God alone changeth not. You ask in what respects Abel, Enoch, Joshua the son of Nun, or Elisha, and the rest of the saints have sinned. There is no need to look for a knot in a bulrush; I freely confess I do not know; and I only wish that, when sins are manifest, I might still be silent.²² "I know nothing against myself," says St. Paul, "yet am I not hereby justified."²³ "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Before Him no man is justified. And so Paul says confidently,²⁴ "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God"; and²⁵ "God hath shut up all under sin that He may have mercy upon all"; and similarly in other passages which we have repeated again and again.

1: There was an early and widespread belief, afterwards confirmed by a decree of the Council of Ephesus, that the birth of Christ was by miracle, not by a true and proper parturition.

2: Eph. vi. 12.

3: Gal. v. 19 4: 1 Pet. iv. 8.

5: Luke vii. 47.

6: Vulgate, Rev. V. I will remember the years, etc. Marg.-The right hand of the Most High doth change.

7: LXX. A.V. Pestilence.

8: The words of the Lamentations refer to Zedekiah.

9: Zech. ix. 16, Sept. Correctly, they (God's people) shall be as the stones of a crown lifting themselves up (or glittering) upon His land.

10: Is. iii. 12.

11: v. 21.

12: vi. 5.

13: That is, according to Jerome's rendering of the Hebrew. R. V. has "I am undone." For the Sept. rendering see below.

14: Ps. xxxii. 4.

15: Is. xxiv. 21.

16: Job xxv. 5.

17: Job iv. 18.

18: Mundans: not in the Vulgate nor in A. V.

19: Ezek. xxxii. 17.

20: Ibid. xlv. 15, 16.

21: This is the sense of the Vulgate, but not the exact words.

22: 1 Cor. iv. 4.

23: 1 Sam. xvi. 7.

24: Rom. iii. 23.

25: Gal. iii. 22.

Against the Pelagians - Book 3

Book III.

Book III.

1. Critob. I am charmed with the exuberance of your eloquence, but at the same time I would remind you that,¹ "In the multitude of words there wanteth not transgression." And how does it bear upon the question before us? You will surely admit that those who have received Christian baptism are without sin. And that being free from sin they are righteous. And that once they are righteous, they can, if they take care, preserve their righteousness, and so through life avoid all sin.

Attic. Do you not blush to follow the opinion of Jovinian, which has been exploded and condemned? For he relies upon just the same proofs and arguments as you do; nay, rather, you are all eagerness for his inventions, and desire to preach in the East what was formerly² condemned at Rome, and not long ago in³ Africa. Read then the reply which was given to him, and you will there find the answer to yourself. For in the discussion of doctrines and disputed points, we must have regard not to persons but to things. And yet let me tell you that baptism condones past offences, and does not preserve righteousness in the time to come; the keeping of that is dependent on toil and industry, as well as earnestness, and above all on the mercy of God. It is ours to ask, to Him it belongs to bestow what we ask; ours to begin, His it is to finish; ours to offer what we can, His to fulfil what we cannot perform.⁴ "For except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it. Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." Wherefore the Apostle⁵ bids us so run that we may attain. All indeed run, but one receiveth the crown. And in the⁶ Psalm it is written, "O Lord, thou hast crowned us with thy favour as with a shield." For our victory is won and the crown of our victory is gained by His protection and through His shield; and here we run that hereafter we may attain; there he shall receive the crown who in this world has proved the conqueror. And when we have been baptized we are told,⁷ "Behold thou art made whole; sin no more lest a worse thing happen unto thee." And again,⁸ "Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man profane the temple of God, him shall God destroy." And in another place,⁹ "The Lord is with you so long as ye are with Him: if ye forsake Him, He will also forsake you." Where is the man, do you suppose, in whom as in a shrine and sanctuary the purity of Christ is permanent, and in whose case the serenity of the temple is saddened by no cloud of sin? We cannot always have the same countenance, though the philosophers falsely boast that this was the experience of Socrates; how much less can our minds be always the same! As men have many expressions of countenance, so also do the feelings of their hearts vary. If it were possible for us to be always immersed in the waters of baptism, sins would fly over our heads and leave us untouched. The Holy Spirit would protect us. But the enemy assails us, and when conquered does not depart, but is ever lying in ambush, that he may secretly shoot the upright in heart.

2. In the Gospel according to the Hebrews, which is written in the Chaldee and Syrian language, but in Hebrew characters, and is used by the Nazarenes to this day (I mean the Gospel according to the Apostles, or, as is generally maintained, the Gospel according to Matthew, a copy of which is in the library at Caesarea), we find, "Behold, the mother of our Lord and His brethren said to Him, John Baptist baptizes for the remission of sins; let us go and be baptized by him. But He said to them, what sin have I committed that I should go and be baptized by him? Unless, haply, the very words which I have said are only ignorance." And in the same volume, "If thy brother sin against thee in word, and make amends to thee, receive him seven times in a day." Simon, His disciple, said to Him, "Seven times in a day?" The Lord answered and said to him, "I say unto thee until seventy times seven." Even the prophets, after they were anointed with the Holy Spirit, were guilty of sinful words. Ignatius, an apostolic man and a martyr, boldly writes,¹⁰ "The Lord chose Apostles who were sinners above all men." It is of their speedy conversion that the Psalmist sings,¹¹ "Their infirmities were multiplied; afterwards they made haste." If you do not allow the authority of this evidence, at least admit its antiquity, and see what has been the opinion of all good churchmen. Suppose a person who has been baptized to have been carried off by death either immediately, or on the very day of his baptism, and I will generously concede that he neither thought nor said anything whereby, through error and ignorance, he fell into sin. Does it follow that he will, therefore, be without sin, because he appears not to have overcome, but to have avoided sin? Is not the true reason rather that by the mercy of God he was released from the prison of sins and departed to the Lord? We also say this, that God can do what He wills; and that man of himself and by his own will cannot, as you maintain, be without sin. If he can, it is idle for you now to add the word grace, for, with such a power, he has no need of it. If, however, he cannot avoid sin without the grace of God, it is folly for you to attribute to him an ability which he does not possess. For whatever depends upon another's will, is not in the power of him whose ability you assert, but of him whose aid is clearly indispensable.

3. C. What do you mean by this perversity, or, rather, senseless contention? Will you not grant me even so much-that when a man leaves the waters of baptism he is free from sin?

A. Either I fail to express my meaning clearly, or you are slow of apprehension.

C. How so?

A. Remember both what you maintained and also what I say. You argued that a man can be free from sin if he chooses. I reply that it is an impossibility; not that we are to think that a man is not free from sin immediately after baptism, but that that time of sinlessness is by no means to be referred to human ability, but to the grace of God. Do not, therefore, claim the power for man, and I will admit the fact. For how can a man be able who is not able of himself? Or what is that sinlessness which is conditioned by the immediate death of the body? Should the man's life be prolonged, he will certainly be liable to sins and to ignorance.

C. Your logic stops my mouth. You do not speak with Christian simplicity, but entangle me in some fine distinctions between being and ability to be.

A. Is it I who play these tricks with words? The article came from your own workshop. For you say, not that a man is free from sin, but that he is able to be; I, on the other hand, will grant what you deny, that a man is free from sin by the grace of God, and yet will maintain that he is not able of himself.

C. It is useless to give commandments if we cannot keep them.

A. No one doubts that God commanded things possible. But because men do not what they might, therefore the whole world is subject to the judgment of God, and needs His mercy. On the other hand, if you can produce a man who has fulfilled the whole law, you will certainly be able to show that there is a man who does not need the mercy of God. For everything which can happen must either take place in the past, the present, or the future. As to your assertion that a man can be without sin if he chooses, show that it has happened in the past, or at all events that it does happen at the present day; the future will reveal itself. If, however, you can point to no one who either is, or has been, altogether free from sin, it remains for us to confine our discussion to the future. Meanwhile, you are vanquished and a captive as regards two out of three periods of time, the past and the present. If anyone hereafter shall be greater than patriarchs, prophets, apostles, inasmuch as he is without sin, then you may perhaps be able to convince future generations as to their time.

4. C. Talk as you like, argue as you please, you will never wrest from me free will, which God bestowed once for all, nor will you be able to deprive me of what God has given, the ability if I have the will.

A. By way of example let us take one proof:¹² "I have found David, the Son of Jesse, a man after Mine own heart, who shall do all My will." There is no doubt that David was a holy man, and yet he who was chosen that he might do all God's will is blamed for certain actions. Of course it was possible for him who was chosen for the purpose to do all God's will. Nor is God to blame Who beforehand spoke of his doing all His will as commanded, but blame does attach to him who did not what was foretold. For God did not say that He had found a man who would unfailingly do His bidding and fulfil His will, but only one who would do all His will. And we, too, say that a man can avoid sinning, if he chooses, according to his local and temporal circumstances and physical weakness, so long as his mind is set upon righteousness and the string is well stretched upon the lyre. But if a man grow a little remiss it is with him as with the boatman pulling against the stream, who finds that, if he slackens but for a moment, the craft glides back and he is carried by the flowing waters whither he would not. Such is the state of man; if we are a little careless we learn our weakness, and find that our power is limited. Do you suppose that the Apostle Paul, when he wrote¹³ "the coat (or cloak) that I left at Troas with Carpus, bring when thou comest, and the books, especially the parchments," was thinking of heavenly mysteries, and not of those things which are required for daily life and to satisfy our bodily necessities? Find me a man who is never hungry, thirsty, or cold, who knows nothing of pain, or fever, or the torture of strangury, and I will grant you that a man can think of nothing but virtue. When the Apostle was¹⁴ struck by the servant, he delivered himself thus against the High Priest who commanded the blow to be given: "God shall strike thee, thou whited wall." We miss the patience of the Saviour Who was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and opened not His mouth, but mercifully said to the smiter,¹⁵ "If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou Me?" We do not disparage the Apostle, but declare the glory of God Who suffered in the flesh and overcame the evil inflicted on the flesh and the weakness of the flesh-to say nothing of what the Apostle says elsewhere:¹⁶ "Alexander, the coppersmith, did me much evil; the Lord, the righteous Judge, will recompense him in that day."

5. C. I have been longing to say something, but have checked the words as they were bursting from my lips. You compelmme to say it.

A. Who hinders you from saying what you think? Either what you are going to say is good-and you ought not to deprive us of what is good-or it is bad, and, therefore, it is not regard for us, but shame that keeps you silent.

C. I will say, I will say after all, what I think. Your whole argument tends to this: You accuse nature, and blame God for creating man such as he is.

A. Is this what you wished, and yet did not wish, to say? Pray speak out, so that all may have the benefit of your wisdom. Are you censuring God because he made man to be man? Let the angels also complain because they are angels. Let every creature discuss the question, Why it is as it was created? and not what the Creator could have made it. I must now amuse myself with the rhetorical exercises of childhood, and passing from the gnat and the ant to cherubim and seraphim, inquire why each was not created with a happier lot. And when I reach the exalted powers, I will argue the point: Why God alone is only God, and did not make all things gods? For, according to you, He will either be unable to do so, or will be guilty of envy. Censure Him, and demand why He allows the devil to be in this world, and carry off the crown when you have won the victory.

C. I am not so senseless as to complain of the existence of the devil, through whose malice death entered into the world; but what grieves me is this: that dignitaries of the Church, and those who usurp the title of master, destroy free will; and once that is destroyed, the way is open for the Manichaeans.

A. Am I the destroyer of free will because, throughout the discussion, my single aim has been to maintain the omnipotence of God as well as free will?

C. How can you have free will, and yet say that man can do nothing without God's assistance?

A. If he is to be blamed who couples free will and God's help, it follows that we ought to praise him who does away with God's help.

C. I am not making God's help unnecessary, for to His grace we owe all our ability; but I and those who think with me keep both within their own bounds. To God's grace we assign the gift of the power of free choice; to our own will, the doing, or the not doing, of a thing; and thus rewards and punishments for doing or not doing can be maintained.

6. A. You seem to me to be lost in forgetfulness, and to be going over the lines of argument already traversed as though not a word had been previously said. For, by this long discussion, it has been established float the Lord, by the same grace wherewith He bestowed upon us free choice, assists and supports us in our individual actions.

C. Why, then, does He crown and praise what He has Himself wrought in us?

A. That is to say, our will which offered all it could, the toil which strove in action, and the humility which ever looked to the help of God.

C. So, then, if we have not done what He commanded, either God was willing to assist us, or He was not. If He was willing and did assist us, and yet we have not done what we wished, then He, and not we, has been overcome. But if He would not help, the man is not to be blamed who wished to do His will, but God, who was able to help, but would not.

A. Do you not see that your dilemma has landed you in a deep abyss of blasphemy? Whichever way you take it, God is either weak or malevolent, and He is not so much praised because He is the author of good and gives His help, as abused for not restraining evil. Blame Him, then, because He allows the existence of the devil, and has suffered, and still suffers, evil to be done in the world. This is what Marcion asks, and the whole pack of heretics who mutilate the Old Testament, and have mostly spun an argument something like this: Either God knew that man, placed in Paradise, would transgress His command, or He did not know. If He knew, man is not to blame, who could not avoid God's foreknowledge, but He Who created him such that he could not escape the knowledge of God. If He did not know, in stripping Him of foreknowledge you also take away His divinity. Upon the same showing God will be deserving of blame for choosing Saul, who was to prove one of the worst of kings. And the Saviour must be convicted either of ignorance, or of unrighteousness, inasmuch as He said in the Gospel,¹⁷ "Did I not choose you the twelve, and one of you is a devil?" Ask Him why He chose Judas, a traitor? Why He entrusted to him the bag when He knew that he was a thief? Shall I tell you the reason? God judges the present, not the future. He does not make use of His foreknowledge to condemn a man though He knows that he will hereafter displease Him; but such is His goodness and unspeakable mercy that He chooses a man who, He perceives, will meanwhile be good, and who, He knows, will turn out badly, thus giving him the opportunity of being converted and of repenting. This is the Apostle's meaning when he says,¹⁸ "Dost thou not know that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance? but after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up for thyself wrath in the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, Who will render to every man according to his works." For Adam did not sin because God knew that he would do so; but God inasmuch as He is God, foreknew what Adam would do of his own free choice. You may as well accuse God of falsehood because He said by the mouth of Jonah:¹⁹ "Yet three days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." But God will reply by the mouth of Jeremiah,²⁰ "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to break down, and to destroy it; if that nation, concerning which I have spoken, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it; if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them." Jonah, on a certain occasion, was indignant because, at God's command, he had spoken falsely; but his sorrow was proved to be ill founded, since he would rather speak truth and have a countless multitude perish, than speak falsely and have them saved. His position was thus illustrated:²¹ "Thou grieveest over the ivy (or gourd), for the which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow, which came up in a night, and perished in a night; and should not I have pity on Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than six score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand?" If there was so vast a number of children and simple folk, whom you will never be able to prove sinners, what shall we say of those inhabitants of both sexes who were at different periods of life? According to Philo, and the wisest of philosophers, Plato (so the "Timaeus" tells us), in passing from infancy to decrepit old age, we go through seven stages, which so gradually and so gently follow one another that we are quite insensible of the change.

C. The drift of your whole argument is this-what the Greeks call autecousion, and we free will, you admit in terms, but in effect destroy. For you make God the author of sin, in asserting that man can of himself do nothing, but that he must have the help of God to Whom is imputed all we do. But we say that, whether a man does good or evil, it is imputed to him on account of the faculty of free choice, inasmuch as he did what he chose, and not to Him Who once for all gave him free choice.

A. Your shuffling is to no purpose; you are caught in the snares of truth. For upon this showing, even if He does not Himself assist, according to you He will be the author of evil, because He might have prevented it and did not. It is an old maxim that if a man can deliver another from death and does not, he is a homicide.

C. I withdraw and yield the point; you have won; provided, however, that victory is the subverting of the truth by specious words, that is to say, not by truth, but by falsehood. For I might make answer to you in the Apostle's words,²² "Though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge." When you speak, your rhetorical tricks are too much for me, and I seem to agree with you; but when you stop speaking, it all goes out of my head, and I see quite clearly that your argument does not flow from the fountains of truth and Christian simplicity, but rests on the laboured subtleties of the philosophers.

A. Do you wish me, then, once more to resort to the evidence of Scripture? If so, what becomes of the boast of your disciples that no one can answer your arguments or solve the questions you raise?

C. I not only wish, but am eager that you should do so. Show me any place in Holy Scripture where we find that, the power of free choice being lost, a man does what of himself he either would not, or could not do.

8. A. We must use the words of Scripture not as you propose, but as truth and reason demand. Jacob says in his prayer,²³ "If the Lord God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God, and this stone, which I have set up for a token, shall be God's house; and of all that Thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto Thee." He did not say, If thou preserve my free choice, and I gain by my toil food and raiment, and return to my father's house. He refers everything to the will of God, that he may be found worthy to receive that for which he prays. On Jacob's return from Mesopotamia²⁴ an army of angels met him, who are called God's camp. He afterwards contended with an angel in the form of a man, and was strengthened by God; whereupon, instead of Jacob, the supplanter, he received the name, the most upright of God. For he would not have dared to return to his cruel brother unless he had been strengthened and secured by the Lord's, help. In the sequel we read,²⁵ "The sun rose upon him after he passed over Phauliel," which is, being interpreted, the face of God. Hence²⁶ Moses also says, "I have seen the Lord face to face, and my life is preserved," not by any natural quality-but by the condescension of God, Who had mercy. So then the Sun of Righteousness rises upon us when God makes His face to shine upon us and gives us strength. Joseph in Egypt was shut up in prison, and we next hear that the keeper of the prison, believing in his fidelity, committed everything to his hand. And the reason is given:²⁷ "Because the Lord was with him: and whatsoever he did, the Lord made it to prosper." Wherefore, also, dreams were suggested to Pharaoh's attendants, and Pharaoh had one which none could interpret, that so Joseph might be released, and his father and brethren fed, and Egypt saved in the time of famine. Moreover, God²⁸ said to Israel, in a vision of the night, "I am the God of thy fathers; fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will make of thee there a great nation, and I will go down with thee into Egypt; and I will also surely bring thee up again, and Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes." Where in this passage do we find the power of free choice? Is not the whole circumstance that he ventured to go to his son, and entrust himself to a nation that knew not the Lord, due to the help of the God of his fathers? The people was released from Egypt with a strong hand and an outstretched arm; not the hand of Moses and Aaron, but of Him who set the people free by signs and wonders, and at last smote the firstborn of Egypt, so that they who at²⁹ first were persistent in keeping the people, eagerly urged them to depart. Solomon³⁰ says, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not upon thine own understanding: in all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." Understand what He says-that we must not trust in our wisdom, but in the Lord alone, by Whom the steps of a man are directed. Lastly, we are bidden to show Him our ways, and make them known, for they are not made straight by our own labour, but by His assistance and mercy. And so it is written,³¹ "Make my way right before Thy face," so that what is right to Thee may seem also right to me. Solomon says the same-³² "Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established." Our thoughts are then established when we commit all we do to the Lord our helper, resting it, as it were, upon the firm and solid rock, and attribute everything to Him.

9. The Apostle Paul, rapidly recounting the benefits of God, ended with the words,³³ "And who is sufficient for these things?" Wherefore, also, in another place he³⁴ says, "Such confidence have we through Christ to Godward; not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is from God; Who also made us sufficient as ministers of a new covenant; not of the letter but of the spirit; for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Do we still dare to pride ourselves on free will, and to abuse the benefits of God to the dishonour of the giver? Whereas the same chosen vessel openly³⁵ writes, "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the exceeding greatness of the power may be of God, and not from ourselves." Therefore, also, in another place, checking the impudence of the heretics, he³⁶ says, "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth." And again,³⁷ "In nothing was I behind the very chiefest Apostles, though I be nothing." Peter, disturbed by the greatness of the miracles he witnessed, said to the Lord,³⁸ "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man." And the Lord said to His disciples,³⁹ "I am the vine and ye are the branches: He that abideth in Me and I in him, the same beareth much fruit, for apart from Me ye can do nothing." Just as the vine branches and shoots immediately decay when they are severed from the parent stem, so all the strength of men fades and perishes, if it be bereft of the help of God. "No one,"⁴⁰ He says, "can come unto Me except the Father Who sent Me draw him." When He says, "No one can come unto Me," He shatters the pride of free will; because, even if a man will to go to Christ, except that be realized which follows-"unless My heavenly Father draw him"-desire is to no purpose, and effort is in vain. At the same time it is to be noted that he who is drawn does not run freely, but is led along either because he holds back and is sluggish, or because he is reluctant to go.

10. Now, how can a man who cannot by his own strength and labour come to Jesus, at the same time avoid all sins? and avoid them perpetually, and claim for himself a name which belongs to the might of God? For if He and I are both without sin, what difference is there between me and God? One more proof only I will adduce, that I may not weary you and my hearers.⁴¹ Sleep was removed from the eyes of Ahasuerus, whom the Seventy call Artaxerxes, that he might turn over the memoirs of his faithful ministers and come upon Mordecai, by whose evidence he was delivered from a conspiracy; and that thus Esther might be more acceptable, and the whole people of the Jews escape imminent death. There is no doubt that the mighty sovereign to whom belonged the whole East, from India to the North and to Ethiopia, after feasting sumptuously on delicacies gathered from every part of the world would have desired to sleep, and to take his rest, and to gratify his free choice of sleep, had not the Lord, the provider of all good things, hindered the course of nature, so that in defiance of nature the tyrant's cruelty might be overcome. If I were to attempt to produce all the instances in Holy Writ, I should be tedious. All that the saints say is a prayer to God; their whole prayer and supplication a strong wrestling for the pity of God, so that we, who by our own strength and zeal cannot be saved, may be preserved by His mercy. But when we are concerned with grace and mercy, free will is in part void; in part, I say, for so much as this depends upon it, that we wish and desire, and give assent to the course we choose. But it depends on God whether we have the power in His strength and with His help to perform what we desire, and to bring to effect our toil and effort.

11. C. I simply said that we find the help of God not in our several actions, but in the grace of creation and of the law, that free will might not be destroyed. But there are many of us who maintain that all we do is done with the help of God.

A. Whoever says that must leave your party. Either, then, say the same yourself and join our side, or, if you refuse, you will be just as much our enemy as those who do not hold our views.

C. I shall be on your side if you speak my sentiments, or rather you will be on mine if you do not contradict them. You admit health of body, and deny health of the soul, which is stronger than the body. For sin is to the soul what disease or a wound is to the body. If then you admit that a man may be healthy so far as he is flesh, why do you not say he may be healthy so far as he is spirit?

A. I will follow in the line you point out,

"and you to-day Shall ne'er escape; where'r you call, I come."

C. I am ready to listen.

A. And I to speak to deaf ears. I will therefore reply to your argument. Made up of soul and body, we have the nature of both substances. As the body is said to be healthy if it is troubled with no weakness, so the soul is free from fault if it is unshaken and undisturbed. And yet, although the body may be healthy, sound, and active, with all the faculties in their full vigour, yet it suffers much from infirmities at more or less frequent intervals, and, however strong it may be, is sometimes distressed by various humours; so the soul, bearing the onset of thoughts and agitations, even though it escape shipwreck, does not sail without danger, and remembering its weakness, is always anxious about death, according as it is written,⁴² "What man is he that shall live and not see death?"-death, which threatens all mortal men, not through the decay of nature, but through the death of sin, according to the prophet's words,⁴³ "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Besides, we know that Enoch and Elias have not yet seen this death which is common to man and the brutes. Show me a body which is never sick, or which after sickness is ever safe and sound, and I will show you a soul which never sinned, and after acquiring virtues will never again sin. The thing is impossible, and all the more when we remember that vice borders on virtue, and that, if you deviate ever so little, you will either go astray or fall over a precipice. How small is the interval between obstinacy and perseverance, miserliness and frugality, liberality and extravagance, wisdom and craft, intrepidity and rashness, caution and timidity! some of which are classed as good, others as bad. And the same applies to bodies. If you take precautions against biliousness, the phlegm increases. If you dry up the humours too quickly, the blood becomes heated and vitiated with bile, and a sallow hue spreads over the countenance. Without question, however much we may exercise all the care of the physician, and regulate our diet, and be free from indigestion and whatever fosters disease, the causes of which are in some cases hidden from us and known to God alone, we shiver with cold, or burn with fever, or howl with colic, and implore the help of the true physician, our Saviour, and⁴⁴ say with the Apostles, "Master, save us, we perish"

12. C. Granted that no one could avoid all sin in boyhood, youth, and early manhood; can you deny that very many righteous and holy men, after falling into vice, have heartily devoted themselves to the acquisition of virtue and through these have escaped sin?

A. This is what I told you at the beginning-that it rests with ourselves either to sin or not to sin, and to put the hand either to good or evil; and thus free will is preserved, but according to circumstances, time, and the state of human frailty; we maintain, however, that perpetual freedom from sin is reserved for God only, and for Him Who being the Word was made flesh without incurring the defects and the sins of the flesh. And, because I am able to avoid sin for a short time, you cannot logically infer that I am able to do so continually. Can I fast, watch, walk, sing, sit, sleep perpetually?

C. Why then in Holy Scripture are we stimulated to aim at perfect righteousness? For example:⁴⁵ "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," and⁴⁶ "Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord." And God says to Abraham,⁴⁷ "I am thy God, be thou pleasing in My sight, and be thou without spot, or blame, and I will make My covenant between Me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly." If that is impossible which Scripture testifies, it was useless to command it to be done.

A. You play upon Scripture until you wear a question threadbare, and remind me of the platform tricks of a conjurer who assumes a variety of characters, and is now Mars, next moment Venus; so that he who was at first all sternness and ferocity is dissolved into feminine softness. For the objection you now raise with an air of novelty-"Blessed are the pure in heart," "Blessed are the undefiled in the way," and "Be without spot," and so forth-is refuted when the Apostle replies,⁴⁸ "We know in part, and we prophesy in part," and, "Now we see through a mirror darkly, but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away." And therefore we have but the shadow and likeness of the pure heart, which hereafter is destined to see God, and, free from spot or stain, to live with Abraham. However great the patriarch, prophet, or Apostle may be, it is⁴⁹ said to them, in the words of our Lord and Saviour, "If ye being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father Which is in heaven give good things to them which ask Him?" Then again even Abraham, to whom it was said,⁵⁰ "Be thou without spot and blame," in the consciousness of his frailty fell upon his face to the earth. And when God had spoken to Him, saying, "Thy wife Sarai shall no longer be called Sarai, but Sara shall her name be, and I will give thee a son by her, and I will bless him and he shall become a great nation, and kings of nations shall spring from him," the narrative at once proceeds to say, "Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?" And Abraham said unto God, "Oh, that Ishmael might live before thee!" And God said, "Nay, but Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son, and thou shall call his name Isaac," and so on. He certainly had heard the words of God, "I am thy God, be thou pleasing in My sight, and without spot"; why then did he not believe what God promised, and why did he laugh in his heart, thinking that he escaped the notice of God, and not daring to laugh openly? Moreover he gives the reasons for his unbelief, and says, "How is it possible for a man that is an hundred years old to beget a son of a wife that is ninety years old?" "Oh, that Ishmael might live before thee," he says. "Ishmael whom thou once gavest me. I do not ask a hard thing, I am content with the blessing I have received." God convinced him by a mysterious reply. He said, "Yea." The meaning is, that shall come to pass which you think shall not be. Your wife Sara shall bear you a son, and before she conceives, before he is born, I will give the boy a name. For, from your error in secretly laughing, your son shall be called Isaac, that is laughter. But if you think that God is seen by those who are pure in heart in this world, why did Moses, who had previously said, "I have seen the Lord face to face, and my life is preserved," afterwards entreat that he might see him distinctly? And because he said that he had seen God, the Lord told him,⁵¹ "Thou canst not see My face. For man shall not see My face, and live." Wherefore also the Apostle⁵² calls Him the only invisible God, Who dwells in light unapproachable, and Whom no man hath seen, nor can see. And the Evangelist John in holy accents testifies, saying,⁵³ "No man hath at any time seen God. The only begotten Son Who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." He Who sees, also declares, not how great He is Who is seen, nor how much He knows Who declares; but as much as the capacity of mortals can receive.

13. And whereas you think he is blessed who is undefiled in the way, and walks in His law, you must interpret the former clause by the latter. From the many proofs I have adduced you have learnt that no one has been able to fulfil the law. And if the Apostle, in comparison with the grace of Christ, reckoned those things as filth which formerly, under the law, he counted gain, so that he might win Christ, how much more certain ought we to be that the reason why the grace of Christ and of the Gospel has been added is that, under the law, no one could be justified? Now if, under the law, no one is justified, how is he perfectly undefiled in the way who is still walking and hastening to reach the goal? Surely, he who is in the course, and who is advancing on the road, is inferior to him who has reached his journey's end. If, then, he is undefiled and perfect who is still walking in the way and advancing in the law, what more shall he have who has arrived at the end of life and of the law? Hence the Apostle, speaking of our Lord, says that, at the end of the world, when all virtues shall receive their consummation, He will present His holy Church to Himself without spot or wrinkle, and yet you think that Church perfect, while yet in the flesh, which is subject to death and decay. You deserve to be told, with the Corinthians,⁵⁴ "Ye are already perfect, ye are already made rich: ye reign without us, and I would that ye did reign, that we might also reign with you"-since true and stainless perfection belongs to the inhabitants of heaven, and is reserved for that day when the bridegroom shall say to the bride,⁵⁵ "Thou art all fair, my love; and there is no spot in thee." And in this sense we must understand the words:⁵⁶ "That ye may be blameless and harmless, as children of God, without blemish"; for He did not say ye are, but may be. He is contemplating the future, not stating a case pertaining to the present; so that here is toil and effort, in that other world the rewards of labour and of virtue. Lastly, John writes:⁵⁷ "Beloved, we are sons of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. We know that when He shall be manifested, we shall be like Him: for we shall see Him even as He is." Although, then, we are sons of God, yet likeness to God, and the true contemplation of God, is promised us then, when He shall appear in His majesty.

14. From this swelling pride springs the audacity in prayer which marks the directions in your letter to a⁵⁸ certain widow as to how the saints ought to pray. "He," you say,⁵⁹ "rightly lifts up his hands to God; he pours out supplications with a good conscience who can say, 'Thou knowest, Lord, how holy, how innocent, how pure from all deceit, wrong, and robbery are the hands which I spread out unto Thee; how righteous, how spotless, and free from all falsehood are the lips with which I pour forth my prayers unto Thee, that Thou mayest pity me.'" Is this the prayer of a Christian, or of a proud Pharisee like him who⁶⁰ says in the Gospel, "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are, robbers, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican: I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess." Yet he merely thanks God because, by His mercy, he is not as other men: he execrates sin, and does not claim his righteousness as his own. But you say, "Now Thou knowest how holy, how innocent, how pure from all deceit, wrong, and robbery are the hands which I spread out before Thee." He says that he fasts twice in the week, that he may afflict his vicious and wanton flesh, and he gives tithes of all his substance. For⁶¹ "the ransom of a man's life is his riches." You join the devil in boasting,⁶² "I will ascend above the stars, I will place my throne in heaven, and I will be like the Most High." David says,⁶³ "My loins are filled with illusions"; and⁶⁴ "My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness"; and⁶⁵ "Enter not into judgment with Thy servant"; and⁶⁶ "In Thy sight no man living shall be justified." You boast that you are holy, innocent, and pure, and spread out clean hands unto God. And you are not satisfied with glorying in all your works, unless you say that you are pure from all sins of speech; and you tell us how righteous, how spotless, how free from all falsehood your lips are. The Psalmist sings,⁶⁷ "Every man is a liar"; and this is supported by apostolical authority: "That God may be true," says St. Paul,⁶⁸ "and every man a liar"; and yet you have lips righteous, spotless, and free from all falsehood. Isaiah laments, saying,⁶⁹ "Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips"; and afterwards one of the seraphim brings a hot coal, taken with the tongs, to purify the prophet's lips, for he was not, according to the tenor of your words, arrogant, but he confessed his own faults. Just as we read in the Psalms,⁷⁰ "What shall be due unto thee, and what shall be done more unto thee in respect of a deceitful tongue? Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals that make desolate." And after all this swelling with pride, and boastfulness in prayer, and confidence in your holiness, like one fool trying to persuade another, you finish with the words "These lips with which I pour out my supplication that Thou mayest have pity on me." If you are holy, if you are innocent, if you are cleansed from all defilement, if you have sinned neither in word nor deed-although James says,⁷¹ "He who offends not in word is a perfect man," and "No one can curb his tongue"-how is it that you sue for mercy? so that, forsooth, you bewail yourself, and pour out prayers because you are holy, pure, and innocent, a man of stainless lips, free from all falsehood, and endowed with a power like that of God. Christ prayed thus on the cross:⁷² "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me? Why art Thou so far from helping Me?" And, again,⁷³ "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit," and⁷⁴ "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." And this is He, who, returning thanks for us, had said,⁷⁵ "I confess to Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth."

15. Our Lord so instructed His Apostles that, daily at the sacrifice of His body, believers make bold to say, "Our Father, Which art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name"; they earnestly desire the name of God, which in itself is holy, to be hallowed in themselves; you say, "Thou knowest, Lord, how holy, how innocent, and how pure are my hands." Then they say: "Thy Kingdom come," anticipating the hope of the future kingdom, so that, when Christ reigns, sin may by no means reign in their mortal body, and to this they couple the words, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven"; so that human weakness may imitate the angels, and the will of our Lord may be fulfilled on earth; you say, "A man can, if he chooses, be free from all sin." The Apostles prayed for the daily bread, or the bread better than all food, which was to come, so that they might be worthy to receive the body of Christ; and you are led by your excess of holiness and well established righteousness to boldly claim the heavenly gifts. Next comes, "Forgive us our debts, as we also forgive our debtors." No sooner do they rise from the baptismal font, and by being born again and incorporated into our Lord and Saviour thus fulfil what is written of them,⁷⁶ "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven and whose sins are covered," than at the first communion of the body of Christ they say, "Forgive us our debts," though these debts had been forgiven them at their confession of Christ; but you in your arrogant pride boast of the cleanness of your holy hands and of the purity of your speech. However thorough the conversion of a man may be, and however perfect his possession of virtue after a time of sins and failings, can such persons be as free from fault as they who are just leaving the font of Christ? And yet these latter are commanded to say, "Forgive us our debts, as we also forgive our debtors"; not in the spirit of a false humility, but because they are afraid of human frailty and dread their own conscience. They say, "Lead us not into temptation"; you and Jovinian unite in saying that those who with a full faith have been baptized cannot be further tempted or sin. Lastly, they add. "But deliver us from the evil one." Why do they beg from the Lord what they have already by the power of free will? Oh, man, now thou hast been made clean in the laver, and of thee it is said, "Who is this that cometh up all white, leaning upon her beloved?" The bride, therefore, is washed, yet she cannot keep her purity, unless she be supported by the Lord. How is it that you long to be set free by the mercy of God, you who but a little while ago were released from your sins? The only explanation is the principle by which we maintain that, when we have done all, we must confess we are unprofitable.

16. So then your prayer outdoes the pride of the Pharisee, and you are condemned when compared with the Publican. He, standing afar off, did not dare to lift up his eyes unto Heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying,⁷⁷ "God be merciful unto me a sinner." And on this is based our Lord's declaration, "I say unto you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other. For every one that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." The Apostles are humbled that they may be exalted. Your disciples are lifted up that they may fall. In your flattery of the widow previously mentioned you are not ashamed to say that piety such as is found on earth, and truth which is everywhere a stranger, had made their home with her in preference to all others. You do not recollect the familiar words,⁷⁸ "O my people, they which call thee blessed cause thee to err, and destroy the paths of thy feet"; and you expressly praise her and say, "Happy beyond all thought are you! how blessed! if righteousness, which is believed to be now nowhere but in Heaven, is found with you alone on earth." Is this teaching or slaying? Is it raising from earth, or casting down from heaven, to attribute that to a poor creature of a woman, which angels would not dare arrogate to themselves? If piety, truth, and righteousness are found on earth nowhere but in one woman, where shall we find your righteous followers, who, you boast, are sinless on earth? These two chapters on prayer and praise you and your disciples are wont to swear are none of yours, and yet your brilliant style is so clearly seen in them, and the elegance of your Ciceronian diction is so marked that, although you strut about with the slow pace of a tortoise, you have not the courage to acknowledge what you teach in private and expose for sale. Happy man! whose books no one writes out but your own disciples, so that whatever appears to be unacceptable, you may contend is not your own but some one else's work. And where is the man with ability enough to imitate the charm of your language?

17. C. I can put it off no longer; my patience is completely overcome by your iniquitous words. Tell me, pray, what sin have little infants committed. Neither the consciousness of wrong nor ignorance can be imputed to those who, according to the prophet Jonah, know not their right hand from their left. They cannot sin, and they can perish; their knees are too weak to walk, they utter inarticulate cries; we laugh at their attempts to speak; and, all the while, poor unfortunates! the torments of eternal misery are prepared for them.

A. Ah! now that your disciples have turned masters you begin to be fluent, not to say eloquent. Antony,⁷⁹ an excellent orator, whose praises Tully loudly proclaims, says that he had seen many fluent men, but so far never an eloquent speaker; so don't amuse me with flowers of oratory which have not grown in your own garden, and with which the ears of inexperience and of boyhood are wont to be tickled, but plainly tell me what you think.

C. What I say is this—you must at least allow that they have no sin who cannot sin.

A. I will allow it, if they have been baptized into Christ; and if you will not then immediately bind me to agree with your opinion that a man can be without sin if he chooses; for they neither have the power nor the will; but they are free from all sin through the grace of God, which they received in their baptism.

C. You force me to make an invidious remark and ask, Why, what sin have they committed? that you may immediately have me stoned in some popular tumult. You have not the power to kill me, but you certainly have the will.

A. He slays a heretic who allows him to be a heretic. But when we rebuke him we give him life; you may die to your heresy, and live to the Catholic faith.

C. If you know us to be heretics, why do you not accuse us?

A. Because the⁸⁰ Apostle teaches me to avoid a heretic after the first and second admonition, not to accuse him. The Apostle knew that such an one is perverse and self-condemned. Besides, it would be the height of folly to make my faith depend on another man's judgment. For supposing some one were to call you a Catholic, am I to immediately give assent? Whoever defends you, and says that you rightly hold your perverse opinions, does not succeed in rescuing you from infamy, but charges himself with perfidy. Your numerous supporters will never prove you to be a Catholic, but will show that you are a heretic. But I would have such opinions as these suppressed by ecclesiastical authority; otherwise we shall be in the case of those who show some dreadful picture to a crying child. May the fear of God grant us this-to despise all other fears. Therefore, either defend your opinions, or abandon what you are unable to defend. Whoever may be called in to defend you must be enrolled as a partisan, not as a patron.

18. C. Tell me, pray, and rid me of all doubts, why little children are baptized.

A. That their sins may be forgiven them in baptism.

C. What sin are they guilty of? How can any one be set free who is not bound?

A. You ask me! The Gospel trumpet will reply, the teacher of the Gentiles, the golden vessel shining throughout the world:⁸¹ "Death reigned from Adam even unto Moses: even over those who did not sin after the likeness of the transgression of Adam, who is a figure of Him that was to come." And if you object that some are spoken of who did not sin, you must understand that they did not sin in the same way as Adam did by transgressing God's command in Paradise. But all men are held liable either on account of their ancient forefather Adam, or on their own account. He that is an infant is released in baptism from the chain which bound his father. He who is old enough to have discernment is set free from the chain of his own or another's sin by the blood of Christ. You must not think me a heretic because I take this view, for the blessed martyr Cyprian, whose rival you boast of being in the classification of Scripture proofs, in the⁸² epistle addressed to Bishop Fidus on the Baptism of Infants speaks thus: "Moreover, if even the worst offenders, and those who previous to baptism sin much against God, once they believe have the gift of remission of sins, and no one is kept from baptism and from grace, how much more ought not an infant to be kept from baptism seeing that, being only just born, he has committed no sin? He has only, being born according to the flesh among Adam's sons, incurred the taint of ancient death by his first birth. And he is the more easily admitted to remission of sins because of the very fact that not his own sins but those of another are remitted to him. And so, dearest brother, it was our decision in council that no one ought to be kept by us from baptism and from the grace of God, Who is merciful to all, and kind, and good And whereas this rule ought to be observed and kept with reference to all, bear in mind that it ought so much the more to be observed with regard to infants themselves and those just born, for they have the greater claims on our assistance in order to obtain Divine mercy, because their cries and tears from the very birth are one perpetual prayer."

19. That holy man and eloquent bishop Augustin not long ago wrote to⁸³ Marcellinus (the same that was afterwards, though innocent, put to death by heretics on the pretext of his taking part in the tyranny of Heraclian⁸⁴) two treatises on infant baptism, in opposition to your heresy which maintains that infants are baptized not for remission of sins, but for admission to the kingdom of heaven, according as it is written in the Gospel,⁸⁵ "Except a man be born again of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." He addressed a⁸⁶ third, moreover, to the same Marcellinus, against those who say as do you, that a man can be free from sin, if he chooses, without the help of God. And, recently, a⁸⁷ fourth to Hilary against this doctrine of yours, which is full of perversity. And he is said to have others on the anvil with special regard to you, which have not yet come to hand. Wherefore, I think I must abandon my task, for fear Horace's words may be thrown at me,⁸⁸ "Don't carry firewood into a forest." For we must either say the same as he does, and that would be superfluous; or, if we wished to say something fresh, we should⁸⁹ find our best points anticipated by that splendid genius. One thing I will say and so end my discourse, that you ought either to give us a new creed, so that, after baptizing children into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, you may baptize them into the kingdom of heaven; or, if you have one baptism both for infants and for persons of mature age, it follows that infants also should be baptized for the remission of sins after the likeness of the transgression of Adam. But if you think the remission of another's sins implies injustice, and that he has no need of it who could not sin, cross over to Origen, your special favourite, who says that ancient offences⁹⁰ committed long before in the heavens are loosed in baptism. You will then be not only led by his authority in other matters, but will be following his error in this also.

1: Prov. x. 19.

2: By a Synod under Siricius in a.d. 390.

3: The allusion is to the African Synod, held a.d. 412, at which Celestius was condemned and excommunicated.

4: Ps. cxxvii. 1.

5: 1 Cor. ix. 24.

6: v. 12.

7: John v. 14.

8: 1 Cor. iii. 16, 1 Cor. iii. 17.

9: 2 Chron. xv. 2.

10: The words are those of S. Barnabas. Possibly in Jerome's copy the passage may have been attributed to Ignatius.

11: Ps. xvi. 4. Sept. and Ps. xvi. 4. Vulgate.

12: Acts xiii. 32; Ps. lxxxviii. 21.

13: 2 Tim. iv. 13.

14: Acts xxiii. 2 sq.

15: S. John xviii. 23.

16: 2 Tim. iv. 14.

17: S. John vi. 70.

18: Rom. ii. 4, Rom. ii. 5.

19: iii. 4.

20: Jerem. xviii. 7, Jerem. xviii. 8.

21: Jonah iv. 10, Jonah iv. 11.

22: 1 Cor. xi. 6.

23: Gen. xxviii. 20 sq.

24: Gen. xxxii. 2.

25: Gen. xxxii. 31. L. R. V. Penuei. Comp. Mt. xix. 4.

26: Ib. 30. The words are Jacob's, but they are attributed to Moses as author.

27: Gen. xxxix. 23.

28: Gen. xlvi. 3, Gen. xlvi. 4.

29: Ex. xi. and Ex. xii.

30: Prov. iii. 5, Prov. iii. 6.

31: Ps. v. 8.

32: Prov. xvi. 3.

33: 2 Cor. ii. 16.

34: 2 Cor. iii. 4-6.

35: 2 Cor. iv. 7.

36: 2 Cor. x. 17, 2 Cor. x. 18.

37: 2 Cor. xii. 11.

38: S. Luke v. 8.

39: S. John xv. 5.

40: S. John vi. 44.

41: Esther vi. i.

42: Ps. lxxxix. 48.

43: Ezek. xviii. 4.

44: S. Matt. viii. 25.

45: S. Matt. v. 8.

46: Ps. cxix. 1.

47: Gen. xvii. 1, Gen. xvii. 2.

48: 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 1 Cor. xiii. 10.

49: S. Matt. vii. 11.

50: Gen. xvii. 1 sq.

51: Ex. xxxiii. 20.

52: 1 Tim. i. 17, 1 Tim. vi. 16.

53: i. 18.

54: 1 Cor. iv. 8.

55: Cant. iv. 7.

56: Phil. ii. 15.

57: 1 John iii. 2.

58: See S. Aug. De Gest. Pelag. §16. The widow was Juliana, mother to Demetrias (to whom Jerome addressed his Letter CXXX. "On the keeping of Virginité"). Pelagius' letter to Demetrias is found in Jerome's works (Ed. Vall.), vol. xi. col. 15.

59: The whole passage, as quoted by Augustin, runs as follows: "May piety find with thee a place which it has never found elsewhere. May truth, which no one now knows, be thy household friend; and the law of God, which is despised by almost all men, be honoured by thee alone." "How happy, how blessed art thou, if that justice which we are to believe exists only in heaven is found with thee alone upon earth." Then follow the words quoted above.

60: S. Luke xviii. 11.

61: Prov. xiii. 8.

62: Is. xiv. 13, Is. xiv. 14. Spoken of the King of Babylon.

63: Ps. xxxviii. 7. Vulg.

64: Ibid. 5.

65: Ps. cxliii. 2.

66: Ibid. 4.

67: Ps. cxvi. 11.

68: Rom. iii. 4.

69: Is. vi. 5.

70: Ps. cxx. 3. Vulg.

71: James iii. 2.

72: Ps. xxii. 2; Sept. and Ps. xxii. 2 Vulgate. S. Matt xxvii. 46, R. V., "and from the words of my roaring."

73: S. Luke xxiii. 46.

74: S. Luke xxiii, 34.

75: S. Matt. xi. 25.

76: Ps. xxi. 1.

77: S. Luke xviii. 13.

78: Is. iii. 12.

79: The grandfather of the Triumvir, born b.c. 142, died in the civil conflict excited by Marius, b.c. 87.

80: Tit. iii. 10.

81: Rom. v 14.

82: Cyp. Ep. 64 (al. 59). S. Augustine preaching at Carthage on June 27, 413, quoted the same letter, which was a Synodical letter of a.d. 253. See Bright's Anti-Pelagian Treatises, Introduction, p. xxi.

83: Marcellinus was the lay imperial commissioner appointed to superintend the discussion between the Catholics and Donatists at the Council of Carthage, a.d. 411. In 413 Heraclian, governor of Africa, revolted against Honorius, the Emperor, and invaded Italy. The enterprise failed, and on his return to Africa the promoter of it was put to death. The Donatists, called by Jerome "heretics," are supposed to have accused Marcellinus of taking part in the rebellion. He was executed in 414.

84: "On the Deserts and Remission of Sins, and the Baptism of Infants," in three books, the earliest of S. Augustin's Anti-Pelagian treatises. It was composed in reply to a letter from his friend Marcellinus, who was harassed by Pelagianising disputants. See S. Aug. "De Gest. Pel." §25.

85: S. John iii. 3.

86: The "De Spiritu et Littera." Marcellinus found a difficulty in Augustin's view of the question of sinlessness. See Bright's Anti-Pelagian Treatises, Introduction, p. xix.

87: Whether he who was made Bishop of Arles, in 429, is disputed. The treatise was the "De Natura et Gratia," written early in 415.

88: Sat. i. 10.

89: Or, better positions have been occupied.

90: Origen held the pre-existence of souls, endowed with free will, and supposed their condition in this world to be the result of their conduct in their previous state of probation.

Against the Pelagians - Prologue

Against the Pelagians Dialogue Between Atticus, a Catholic, and Critobulus, a Heretic.

Prologue.

Against the Pelagians Dialogue Between Atticus, a Catholic, and Critobulus, a Heretic. The anti-Pelagian Dialogue is the last of Jerome's controversial works, having been written in the year 417, within three years of his death. It shows no lack of his old vigour, though perhaps something of the prolixity induced by old age. He looks at the subject more calmly than those of the previous treatises, mainly because it lay somewhat outside the track of his own thoughts. He was induced to interest himself in it by his increasing regard for Augustin, and by the coming of the young Spaniard, Orosius, in 414, from Augustin to sit at his feet. Pelagius also had come to Palestine, and, after an investigation of his tenets, at a small council at Jerusalem, in 415, presided over by Bishop John, and a second, at Diospolis in 416, had been admitted to communion. Jerome appears to have taken no part in these proceedings, and having been at peace with Bishop John for nearly twenty years, was no doubt unwilling to act against him. But he had come to look upon Pelagius as infected with the heretical "impiety," which he looked upon (i. 28) as far worse than moral evil; and connected him, as we see from his letter to Ctesiphon (CXXXIII.), with Origenism and Rufinus; and he brings his great knowledge of Scripture to bear upon the controversy. He quotes a work of Pelagius, though giving only the headings, and the numbers of the chapters, up to 100 (i. 26-32); and, though at times his conviction appears weak, and there are passages (i. 5, ii. 6-30, iii. 1) which give occasion to the observation that he really, if unconsciously, inclined to the views of Pelagius, and that he is a "Synergist," not, like Augustin, a thorough predestinarian, the Dialogue, as a whole, is clear and forms a substantial contribution to our knowledge. Although its tone is less violent than that of his ascetic treatises, it appears to have stirred up the strongest animosity against him. The adherents of Pelagius attacked and burned the monasteries of Bethlehem, and Jerome himself only escaped by taking refuge in a tower. His sufferings, and the interference of Pope Innocentius in his behalf, may be seen by referring to Letters CXXXV.-CXXXVII., with the introductory notes prefixed to them. The following is a summary of the argument: Atticus, the Augustinian, at once (c. 1) introduces the question: Do you affirm that, as Pelagius affirms, men can live without sin? Yes, says the Pelagian Critobulus, but I do not add, as is imputed to us, "without the grace of God." Indeed, the fact that we have a free will is from grace. Yes, replies Atticus, but what is this grace? Is it only our original nature, or is it needed in every act. In every act, is the reply (2); yet one would hardly say that we cannot mend a pen without grace (3), for, if so, where is our free will? But, says Atticus (5), the Scriptures speak of our need of God's aid in everything. In that case, says Critobulus, the promised reward must be given not to us but to God, Who works in us. Reverting then to the first point stated, Atticus asks, does the possibility of sinlessness extend to single acts, or to the whole life? Certainly to the whole as well as the part, is the answer. But we wish, or will to be sinless; why then are we not actually sinless? Because (8) we do not exert our will to the full. But (9) no one has ever lived without sin. Still, says the Pelagian, God commands us to be perfect, and he does not command impossibilities. Job, Zacharias, and Elizabeth are represented as perfectly righteous. No, it is answered (12), faults are attributed to each of them. John says, "He that is born of God sinneth not" (13); yet, "If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves." The Apostles, though told to be perfect (14) were not perfect: and St. Paul says (14a), "I count not myself to have apprehended." Men are called just and perfect only in comparison of others (16), or because of general subjection to the will of God (18), or according to their special characteristics (19), as we may speak of a bishop as excellent in his office, though he may not fulfil the ideal of the pastoral epistles (22). The discussion now turns to the words of Pelagius' book. "All are ruled by their own will" (27). No; for Christ says, "I came not to do My own will." "The wicked shall not be spared in the judgment." But we must distinguish between the impious or heretics who will be destroyed (28) and Christian sinners who will be forgiven. Some of his sayings contradict each other or are trifling (29, 30). "The kingdom of heaven is promised in the Old Testament." Yes, but more fully in the New. Returning to the first thesis, "That a man can be without sin if he wills it," the Pelagian says, If things, like desires which arise spontaneously and have no issue, are reckoned blamable, we charge the sin on our Maker; to which it is only answered that, though we cannot understand God's ways, we must not arraign His justice. In the rest of the book, Atticus alone speaks, going through the Old Testament, and showing that each of the saints falls into some sin, which, though done in ignorance or half-consciousness, yet brings condemnation with it.

Prologue.

1. After writing the 1 letter to Ctesiphon, in which I replied to the questions propounded, I received frequent expostulations from the brethren, who wanted to know why I any longer delayed the promised work in which I undertook to answer all the subtleties of the preachers of Impassibility.² For every one knows what was the contention of the Stoics and Peripatetics, that is, the old Academy, some of them asserted that the paqh, which we may call emotions, such as sorrow, joy, hope, fear, can be thoroughly eradicated from the minds of men; others that their power can be broken, that they can be governed and restrained, as unmanageable horses are held in check by peculiar kinds of bits. Their views have been explained by Tully in the "Tusculan Disputations," and Origen in his "Stromata" endeavours to blend them with ecclesiastical truth. I pass over Manichaeus,³ Priscillianus,⁴ Evagrius of Iborra, Jovinianus, and the heretics found throughout almost the whole of Syria, who, by a perversion of the import of their name, are commonly called⁵ Massalians, in Greek, Euchites, all of whom hold that it is possible for human virtue and human knowledge to attain perfection, and arrive, I will not say merely at a likeness to, but an equality with God; and who go the length of asserting that, when once they have reached the height of perfection, even sins of thought and ignorance are impossible for them. And although in my former letter addressed to Ctesiphon and aimed at their errors, so far as time permitted, I touched upon a few points in the book which I am now endeavouring to hammer out, I shall adhere to the method of Socrates. What can be said on both sides shall be stated; and the truth will thus be clear when both sides express their opinions. Origen is peculiar in maintaining on the one hand that it is impossible for human nature to pass through life without sin, and on the other, that it is possible for a man, when he turns to better things, to become so strong that he sins no more.

2. I shall add a few words in answer to those who say that I am writing this work because I am inflamed with envy. I have never spared heretics, and I have done my best to make the enemies of the Church my own.⁶ Helvidius wrote against the perpetual virginity of Saint Mary. Was it envy that led me to answer him, whom I had never seen in the flesh?⁷ Jovinianus, whose heresy is now being fanned into flame, and who disturbed the faith of Rome in my absence, was so devoid of gifts of utterance, and had such a pestilent style that he was a fitter object for pity than for envy. So far as I could, I answered him also.⁸ Rufinus did all in his power to circulate the blasphemies of Origen and the treatise "On First Principles" (Peri 'Arxwn), not in one city, but throughout the whole world. He even published the first book of⁹ Eusebius' "Apology for Origen" under the name of¹⁰ Pamphilus the martyr, and, as though Origen had not said enough,¹¹ vomited forth a fresh volume on his behalf. Am I to be accused of envy because I answered him? and was his eloquence such a rushing torrent as to deter me through fear from writing or dictating anything in reply?¹² Palladius, no better than a villainous slave, tried to impart energy to the same heresy, and to excite against me fresh prejudice on account of my translation of the Hebrew. Was I¹³ envious of such distinguished ability and nobility? Even now the¹⁴ mystery of iniquity worketh, and every one chatters about his views: yet I, it seems, am the only one who is filled with envy at the glory of all the rest; I am so poor a creature that I envy even those who do not deserve envy. And so, to prove to all that I do not hate the men but their errors, and that I do not wish to vilify any one, but rather lament the misfortune of men who are deceived by knowledge falsely so-called, I have made use of the names of Atticus and Critobulus in order to express our own views and those of our opponents. The truth is that all we who hold the Catholic faith, wish and long that, while the heresy is condemned, the men may be reformed. At all events, if they will continue in error, the blame does not attach to us who have written, but to them, since they have preferred a lie to the truth. And one short answer to our calumniators, whose curses fall upon their own heads, is this, that the Manichaeian doctrine condemns the nature of man, destroys free will, and does away with I the help of God. And again, that it is manifest madness for man to speak of himself as being what God alone is. Let us so walk along the royal road that we turn neither to the right hand nor to the left; and let us always believe that the eagerness of our wills is governed by the help of God. Should any one cry out that he is slandered and boast that he thinks with us; he will then show that he assents to the true faith, when he openly and sincerely condemns the opposite views. Otherwise his case will be that described by the prophet:¹⁵ "And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not returned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly." It is a smaller sin to follow evil which you think is good, than not to venture to defend what you know for certain is good. If we cannot endure threats, injustice, poverty, how shall we overcome the flames of Babylon? Let us not lose by hollow peace what we have preserved by war. I should be sorry to allow my fears to teach me faithlessness, when Christ has put the true faith in the power of my choice.

1: Letter CXXXIII.

2: Apa^qeia .

3: Priscillian was Spaniard, who began to propagate his views, which were a various heresies, about the year mixture of 370. See Robertson, p. 295 sq., and Note on Jerome, Letter CXXXIII.

4: Evagrius Iberita. The name is taken either from a town named Ibera or Ibora in Pontus, or from the province of Iberia. Jerome, in the letter to which he refers, styles Evagrius Hyperborita, but this is thought to be an error for Hyborita. It has been suggested that Jerome was playing on the word Iberita. He was born in 345. He wrote, amongst many other works, a treatise Peri apa^qei^aj (On Impassibility), and no doubt Jerome refers to this a few lines above. He was a zealous champion of Origen. See also Jerome, Letter CXXXIII. and note.

5: The Massalians or Euchites derived their name from their habit of continual prayer. The words are etymological equivalents (Massalians, from)l@c 6: He was a Roman lawyer. His treatise was written about a.d. See Jerome's treatise against him in this volume.

7: See introduction to Jerome's treatise against Jovinianus in this volume.

8: See Rufinus' works, especially the Prolegomena, and Jerome's controversy with him in vol. iii. of this series.

9: That is, Eusebius of Caesarea (a.d. 267-338), who was called Pamphilus from his friendship with Pamphilus the martyr.

10: Suffered martyrdom a.d. 309. He erected a library at Caesarea of 30,000 volumes. See Rufinus' Preface to his Apology in this series, vol. iii., with introductory note.

11: See Rufinus on the adulteration of the works of Origen, in this series, vol. iii. p. 421.

12: Palladius, bishop of Hellenopolis, the biographer and trusted friend of Chrysostom, was born about 367. He visited Bethlehem about 387 and formed a very unfavourable opinion of Jerome. He highly commended Rufinus. According to Epiphanius, as well as Jerome, he was tainted with Origenism. Tillemont, however, thinks that another Palladius may be referred to in these passages. His accounts of Jerome and Rufinus are given in his "Historia Lausiaca," c. 78 and 118.

13: Jerome was accused of envy or ill-will by Palladius. "Tanta fuit ejus invidia ut ab ea obrueretur virtus doctrinae. Cum ergo multis diebus cum eo versatus esset sanctus Posidonius, dicit mihi in aurem, "Ingenua quidem Paula, quae ejus curam gerit, praemoriatur, liberata ab ejus invidia. Ut autem arbitror, propter hunc virum non habitabit vir sanctus in his locis, sed ejus pervadet invidia usque ad proprium fratrem."-Pallad. Hist. Laus., §78, cf. §82.

14: 2 Thess. ii. 7.

15: Jer. iii. 10.

Biblical Prefaces - Chronicles

Jerome, Prologue to Chronicles (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF SAINT JEROME TO THE BOOK OF PARALIPOMENON

If the version of the Seventy translators is pure and has remained as it was rendered by them into Greek, you have urged me on superfluously, my Cromatius, most holy and most learned of bishops, that I translated the Hebrew scrolls into Latin words. For what has formerly won the ears of men and strengthened the faith of those being born to the Church was indeed proper to be approved by our silence. Now, in fact, when different versions are held by a variety of regions, and this genuine and ancient translation is corrupted and violated, you have considered our opinion, either to judge which of the many is the true one, or to put together new work with old work, and shutting off to the Jews, as it is said, "a horn to pierce the eyes." The region of Alexandria and Egypt praises in their Seventy the authority of Hesychius; the region from Constantinople to Antioch approves the version of Lucian the Martyr; in the middle, between these provinces, the people of Palestine read the books which, having been labored over by Origen, Eusebius and Pamphilius published. And all the world contends among them with this threefold variety. And Origen certainly not only put together the texts of four editions, writing the words in a single row so that one regularly differing may be compared to others agreeing among themselves, but what is more audacious, into the edition of the Seventy he mixed the edition of Theodotion, marking with asterisks those things which were missing, and placing virgules by those things which are seen to be superfluous. If, therefore, it was allowed to others not to hold what they once accepted, and after the seventy chambers, which are considered without a single author, individual chambers were opened, and thus is read in the churches what the Seventy did not know, why do my (fellow) Latins not accept me, who thus put together the new with the inviolable old edition so that I might make my work acceptable to the Hebrews and, what is greater than these, to the authors, the Apostles? I have recently written a book, "On the best kind of translating," showing these things in the Gospel, and others similar to these, to be found in the books of the Hebrews: "Out of Egypt I called my son," and "For he will be called a Nazarene," and "They will look on him whom they have pierced," and that of the Apostle, "Things which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, and had not arisen in the heart of man, which God has prepared for those loving Him." The Apostles and Evangelists were certainly acquainted with (the version of) the Seventy interpreters, but from where (were) they (supposed) to say these things which are not in the Seventy? Christ our God, author of both Testaments, says in the Gospel according to John, "He who believes in me, as Scripture has said, Rivers of living water will flow from his belly." Certainly, whatever is witnessed by the Savior to be written, is written. Where is it written? The Seventy don't have it; the Church ignores the apocrypha; thus the turning back to the Hebrew (books), from which the Lord spoke and the disciples took forth texts. In peace I will say these things of the ancients, and I respond only to my detractors, who bite me with dogs' teeth, slandering me in public, speaking at corners, the same (being) both accusers and defenders, when approving for others what they reprove me for, as though virtue and error were not in conflict, but change with the author. I have recalled another edition of the Seventy translators corrected from the Greek to have been distributed by us, and me not to need to be considered their enemy, which things I always explain in the gatherings of the brothers. And what is now Dabreiamin, that is, Words of the Days, I have translated. I have therefore made the foreignness of the meanings clearer, and have separated lines into members, so that the inextricable spaces and forest of names, which are confused through the error of the scribes, are, as Hismenius says, "themselves singing to me and mine," even if the ears of others are deaf.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduced the text as follows: This prologue gives us an interesting view into the history of St Jerome's translation work, and some very important information about the Septuagint in the world of his day. It appears that in addition to Origen's Hexaplaric text, and the other well-known Septuagintal texts, he had done a corrected Latin version of the Septuagint, which unfortunately is entirely lost to us. One of the interesting things in this prologue is the mention of Jerome separating "lines into members" (per versuum cola). That is, he has separated the members, the individual words, with spaces, which was then rarely done, but so common now that we don't even notice it. The name "Paralipomenon" means, "things left over." The book was called this because it included things not mentioned in Kings. I can remember being fascinated as a child by the exotic mystery of that name, Paralipomenon, like incense, silk, and the Faith itself, being something from the ancient world, in contrast to the much more prosaic Chronicles, a boring, uninteresting name to be found at the top of the local paper, and more redolent of the supermarket and gas station. But enough about me! Enjoy the continuing saga of the feisty St Jerome!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Daniel

Jerome, Prologue to Daniel (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF JEROME TO THE BOOK OF DANIEL The churches of the Lord Savior do not read the Prophet Daniel according to the Seventy interpreters, using (instead) the edition of Theodotion, and I don't know why this happened. For whether because the language is Chaldean and differs in certain properties from our speech, (or) the Seventy interpreters were not willing to keep the same lines in the translation, or the book was edited under their name by some unknown other who did not sufficiently know the Chaldean language, or not knowing anything else which was the cause, I can affirm this one thing, that it often differs from the truth and with proper judgment is repudiated. Indeed, it is known most of Daniel and some of Ezra were written in Hebrew letters but the Chaldean language, and one pericope of Jeremiah, and also Job to have much in common with the Arabic language. When I was a very young man, after the reading and flowery rhetoric of Quintilian and Cicero, when I had opened myself to the drudgery of this language and with much effort and much time I with difficulty had begun to pronounce the breathy and buzzing words, as though walking in a crypt to see a little light from above, I finally dashed myself against Daniel, and I was affected by such weariness that, sunken in desperation, I wanted to despise all (my) old work. Indeed, a Hebrew was encouraging me, and he was often repeating to me by his language "Persistent work conquers all," as in me (?) I saw an amateur among them, I began again to be a student of Chaldean. And so I might confess the truth, to the present day I am better able to read and understand than to pronounce the Chaldean language.

Therefore, I have shown these things to you as a difficulty of Daniel, which among the Hebrews has neither the history of Susanna, nor the hymn of the three young men, nor the fables of Bel and the dragon, which we, because they are spread throughout the whole world, have appended by banishing and placing them after the spit (or "obelus"), so we will not be seen among the unlearned to have cut off a large part of the scroll. I heard a certain one of the teachers of the Jews, when he derided the history of Susanna and said it to have been forged by an unknown Greek, to propose that which Africanus also proposed to Origen, these etymologies to come down from the Greek language: "to split" from "mastich" and "to saw" from "oak" (απο του σχινου σχισαι και απο του πρινου πρισαι). On which subject we are able to give this understanding to those of our own (language), as we might, for example say it to have said of the oak tree (ilice), "you will perish there (illico)" or of the mastic tree (lentisco), "May the angel crush you like a lentil bean (lentem)" or "You will not perish slowly (lente)" or "Pliant (lentus), that is, flexible, you are led to death" or anything which fits the name of the tree. Then he jested for there to have been so much leisure time for the three young men, that in the furnace of raging fires they played with (poetic) meter, and called in order all the elements to the praise of God. Or what miracle or Divine inspiration is it, either a dragon having been killed by a lump of tar or the tricks of the priests of Bel having been discovered, which things are better accomplished by the wisdom of a clever man rather than by the prophetic Spirit? When indeed he came to Habakkuk and had read (of him) having been carried off from Judea to Chaldea carrying a dish, he requested an example where we might have read in all the Old Testament any one of the saints to have flown with a heavy body and in a short time to have passed over so great a space of lands. To which, when one of us rather a little too quick to speaking had brought Ezekiel into the discussion (lit. "middle") and said him to have been moved from Chaldea to Judea, he derided the man and from the same scroll proved Ezekiel to have seen himself moved in the Spirit. Finally also our Apostle, namely as an erudite man and one who had learned the Law from the Hebrews, was also not daring to affirm himself taken away in the body, but was to have said "Whether in the body or out of the body, I do not know, God knows." By these and arguments of such kinds he exposed (or "accused") the apocryphal fables in the book of the Church.

Concerning which subject, leaving the judgment to the decision of the reader, I warn him Daniel is not to be found in the Prophets among the Hebrews, but among those which they titled the Hagiographa. Since indeed all of Scripture is divided by them into three parts, into the Law, into the Prophets, (and) into the Hagiographa, that is, into five and eight and eleven books, which is not (necessary) to explain at this time. And to those things of this prophet, or rather against this book, which Porphyry accused, the witnesses are Methodius, Eusebius, (and) Apollinaris, who, responding to his madness with many thousands of verses, I do not know whether they are satisfying to the interested reader. For which reason I entreat you, O Paula and Eustochium, pour out prayers for me to the Lord, so that as long as I am in this little body, I might write something pleasing to you, useful to the Church, (and) worthy to posterity. I am indeed not greatly moved by the judgments of the present, which on either side are in error either by love or by hate.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows: This prologue by St Jerome is a little odd to translate, as it's dealing in part with some wordplay in both Greek and Latin. I've placed the original words in parentheses, as I've done in others of the prologue translations, but they're especially necessary here. I get the distinct impression that St Jerome is actually showing us a sense of humor, or is at the very least recalling some funny sayings from a past teacher. There is also the fascinating and rather bittersweet retrospective on his learning Chaldean, which we call Aramaic these days. Another interesting part is his mention of the Hebrew Scriptures being divided into three parts: the Law with five books, the Prophets with eight books, and the Hagiographa with eleven books, for a total of twenty-four books. And though he doesn't name the books included in those numbers here, the scheme is close enough to that which he presented in his "Helmeted Introduction" to Kings (22 books there, as opposed to 24 here), to determine these are the books for each category: Law: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy; Prophets: Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, The Twelve; Hagiographa: Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, Chronicles, Ezra/Nehemiah, Esther, and somewhere in there Ruth and Lamentations, which in the "Helmeted Introduction" are attached to Judges and Jeremiah respectively, presumably to make the total number of books fit the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet: twenty-two. So, we have at least that evidence of what was the canon of at least some Jews in Palestine in the late fourth and early fifth centuries A.D. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Esther

Jerome, Prologue to Esther (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE TO ESTHER The Book of Esther stands corrupted by various translators. Which (book) I, lifting up from the archives of the Hebrews, have translated more accurately word for word. The common edition drags the book by knotted ropes of words hither and yon, adding to it things which may have been said or heard at any time. This is as is usual with instruction by schools, when a subject has been taken up, to figure out from the words which someone could have used, which one either suffered injury, or which one caused injury (to the text). And you, O Paula and Eustochium, since you have both studied to enter the libraries of the Hebrews and also have approved of the battles of the interpreters, holding the Hebrew Book of Esther, look through each word of our translation, so you may be able to understand me also to augmented nothing by adding, but rather with faithful witness to have translated, just as it is found in the Hebrew, the Hebrew history into the Latin language. We are not affected by the praises of men, nor are we afraid of (their) slanders. For to be pleasing to God we do not inwardly fear those caring for the minas of men, "for God has scattered the bones of those desiring to be pleasing to men" (Ps 52.6), and according to the Apostle, those like this are "not able to be servants of Christ" (Gal 1.10).

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows: St

Jerome has little to say in this prologue about his actual work, except that the "common edition," presumably the or an Old Latin version, of the Book of Esther was a mess, and he resorted to the Hebrew text of his day. In this respect, his translation is a valuable version representing a literal translation of a Hebrew text found in Palestine in the late fourth century. He unfortunately doesn't describe in this letter the messy situation of the additions to Esther found in the Septuagint version, which he included en masse at the end of his version, with short notes indicating where they belonged in his translation. These additions can be found in various editions of the apocrypha, but they're best read in the version in the NRSV, which is a full translation of the Septuagint text, not just of the additions, and includes them all in their places, not in a bunch at the end. Anyhow, enjoy! UPDATE: Thanks once again to the very much appreciated help of Michael Gilleland of Laudator

Temporis Acti, I've fixed a sentence (now the second one in the first paragraph) that gave me trouble.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Ezekiel

Jerome, Prologue to Ezekiel (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE TO THE PROPHET EZEKIEL The Prophet Ezekiel was led captive with Joachin king of Judah to Babylon, and he prophesied there to those who were captives with him, to those repenting that they had willingly handed over the prophecy of Jeremiah to enemies, and yet saw the city Jerusalem to stand, which he had predicted would fall. And in his thirtieth year of age, and in the fifth year of the captivity, he began to speak to his fellow captives. And at the same time, though later, this one in Chaldea and Jeremiah in Judea prophesied. His style is neither greatly eloquent nor excessively rustic, but properly proportioned between both. And he was a priest, as also was Jeremiah, the beginning and ending of the book being wrapped in great obscurities. But also the common edition of him does not differ much from the Hebrew one. Because of that I greatly wonder what was the cause, that when we have the same translators in all the books, in some they translated the same things, in others, different things. Therefore, read this also according to our translation because, by being written in words with spaces, it gives a clearer meaning to readers. And if my friends also mock this, say to them that no one restrains them from writing. But I do not respect him who follows them, which is more clearly said in Greek, as they are called insult-swallowers (φαγολοιδοροι).

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows:

There's not much to say about this prologue, as it's pretty straightforward.

Near the end, St Jerome sarcastically calls his detractors "friends." And there's Greek in this one, too! Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Ezra v2

St. Jerome, The Prologue on the Book of Ezra: English translation [Translated by Mark DelCogliano] The Prologue of Eusebius Hieronymus on the Book of Ezra 1

Whether it is more difficult to do what you ask or to say no, I have still not decided.² For, on the one hand, it is impossible to refuse you when you are requesting something of significance. But, on the other hand, the weight of the burden imposed presses down upon my neck so hard that it would be necessary to lighten it before rushing into it thus encumbered. In addition to this, there is the hostility of my detractors. They think everything I write³ ought to be refuted and rip apart in public what they read in private, even though their conscience accuses them. They do this to such an extent that I am compelled to cry out and say, "Lord, free my soul from wicked lips and from the deceitful tongue!"⁴ For three years now you have been continually writing and rewriting to me, asking that I translate the book of Ezra for you from Hebrew, making your request as if you did not already have Greek and Latin editions, or as if everyone would not immediately spit upon whatever I translate.⁵ As someone said, "To strive in vain and not to seek anything in your weariness except hatred is the pinnacle of insanity."⁶ And so, I beseech you, my most dear Domnio and Rogatianus: do not make the book known to the public and be content to read it privately. Do not toss food to those who disdain it and thus avoid the snobbery of those who know only how to judge others but not how to do anything themselves. But if there are some of the brothers who are not displeased with my work, you may give them the master-copy. Advise them to copy the Hebrew names, of which there is a great abundance in this book, with distinct spaces between them. For it will be of no benefit to have corrected the book unless the corrections are diligently preserved by the copyists. No one ought to be bothered by the fact that my edition⁷ consists of only one book, nor ought anyone take delight in the dreams found in the apocryphal third and fourth books. For among the Hebrews the texts of Ezra and Nehemiah comprise a single book, and those texts which are not used by them and are not concerned with the twenty-four elders ought to be rejected outright.⁸ But if anyone should oppose you on the basis of the Septuagint translation (whose very variety of texts indicates that its copies are corrupt and damaged, nor can it by any means be claimed that what is diverse is true), have him take a look at the gospels.⁹ There are many passages in them which are said to be from the Old Testament but which are not found in the Septuagint translation. Examples include: "He shall be called a Nazarene,"¹⁰ "Out of Egypt I have called my son,"¹¹ "They shall look upon him whom they have pierced,"¹² and many others that I shall reserve¹³ for a more extensive work. And so, have him attempt to locate where these passages are written in the Septuagint. When he cannot locate them, you should read aloud from the editions I recently did,¹⁴ which are continually denigrated by the tongues of those who have nothing good to say.

Though I intend to keep things brief, what I am about to say by way of introduction certainly makes the most sense.¹⁵

In my version I translated whatever was not contained in the Greek version or was there in a variant form.¹⁶

What translator do they butcher with their criticism? Let them ask the Hebrews and judge the fidelity of my translation on the basis of their authority. It is quite a different matter, if with eyes shut (as the saying goes), they want to speak ill of me and not follow the example of the Greeks in their application to study and goodwill. When the Gospel of Christ was already shining brightly, after they had read the Septuagint translators, the Greeks attentively read the Jewish and Ebonite translators of the old Law, that is, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion. Through the labors of Origen in his Hexapla, the Greeks caused these three to be used for ecclesiastical purposes. How much more ought speakers of Latin be grateful for having discovered that Greece in her exultation borrows something from herself!¹⁷

First of all, it is very expensive and infinitely difficult to procure possession of all the versions.¹⁸ Secondly, even those who own them but are ignorant of the Hebrew language will make all the more mistakes, being unable to determine which reading out of the many is more correct. In fact this is what happened recently among the Greeks to a certain one of their wisest men. The result was that in some instances he disregarded the sense of Scripture and followed the mistake of some translator. However, as I have¹⁹ at least a little bit of knowledge about the Hebrew language and am not at all without facility in Latin, I am better able²⁰ than others to make decisions²¹ and render things as I myself understand²² them in our language. And so, even though the serpent hisses "and victorious Sinon is scattering firebrands,"²³ with the help of Christ my voice shall never be silenced; even with a severed tongue I shall manage to stammer out something. Those who want to read my edition should do so; those who do not should put it aside. If they pick apart the writing, if they find fault with the letters, by your charity I shall be more provoked to apply myself to study than be discouraged by their detraction and hatred.

1

Translated by Mark DelCogliano from B. Fischer, et al., eds., Biblia Sacra iuxta vulgatam versionem, 4th ed. (Stuttgart: Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft, 1994), 638-639. Jerome's preface to his translation of Ezra was written c. 394 to Domnio, a Roman presbyter (see Jerome, Eps. 47.3 and 50), and Rogatianus, of whom nothing is known.

2

Jerome generally speaks in the first person singular ("I, me"). He exceptionally uses the first person plural ("we, us"), which instances are nevertheless rendered in the first person singular for the sake of consistency.

These exceptions are, however, footnoted.

3

Lit. "we write."

4

Psalms 119:2.

5

Lit. "whatever is translated by us."

6

Sallust, Iug. 3.

7

Lit. "the book edited by us."

8

There were several different books which circulated in antiquity under the name of Ezra (or Esdras). The books which the RSV calls Ezra and Nehemiah were originally one book in Hebrew, called Ezra. The division of the original Ezra into two books was a later development. The Latin and Greek traditions, however, each have four Ezra books, called Esdras A-D (Greek) and I-IV Esdras (Latin). The RSV Ezra corresponds to Esdras B and I Esdras, while RSV Nehemiah to Esdras C and II Esdras. Jerome's Ezra contained both I and II Esdras in a single book, in imitation of the Hebrew. Esdras A and III Esdras corresponds to what the RSV calls 1 Esdras; it sequentially consists of (1) 2 Chronicles 35:1-36:23 (summarized), (2) Ezra 1:1-4:24, (3), additions, (4) Ezra 5:1-10:44, and (5) Nehemiah 7:38-9:12. The RSV's 2 Esdras, which is an apocryphal apocalypse from the Christian period, corresponds to Esdras D and IV Esdras. Jerome here explicitly denies canonicity to III and IV Esdras.

9

Jerome's project of translating the scriptures from the Hebrew was continually challenged by those who appealed to the authority of the Septuagint as the basis for deciding questions of canonicity. Jerome is here attempting to convince his readers to follow the Hebrew tradition by undercutting the reliability of the Septuagint text in two ways: (1) its variety, and (2) its lack of Old Testament passages quoted as such in the New Testament.

10

Mt 2:23; cf. Jg 13:5.

11

Mt 2:15; cf. Hosea 11:1.

12

Jn 19:37; cf. Zechariah 12:10.

13

Lit. "we shall reserve."

14

Lit. "the editions we recently did."

15

N.b. Jerome is about to defend his methodology.

16

I.e. whatever in the Greek text varied from the Hebrew text.

17

I.e. the Greeks were not content with the older Septuagint translation, but produced newer translations from the Hebrew original in the manner of the Septuagint translators. Latin speakers should be inspired by their scholarly example.

18

I.e. the Greek versions which differ from each other.

19

Lit. "as we have."

20

Lit. "we are better able."

21

I.e. about the correct reading from among the variants.

22

Lit. "as we ourselves understand."

23 Vergil, Aen. 2.329 This text was translated and placed in the public domain by Mark DelCogliano, 2004. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Ezra

Jerome, Prologue to Ezra (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF EUSEBIUS HIERONYMUS TO THE BOOK OF EZRA

Whether it may be more difficult to do or not to do what you have requested, I have not yet established. For it is also not my desire to refuse your commands, and the greatness of weight imposed thus press upon the neck, so that before a falling under the bundle, there might rather be a lightening (of the load). The efforts of the envious agree with this, who consider all that I write reproof, with conscience occasionally fighting against them, publicly tearing apart what they read secretly, to such a degree that I am compelled to cry out and to say: "O Lord, free my soul from crooked lips and a false tongue" (Ps 119.2). It is the third year that you always write and write again, that I might translate the book of Ezra for you from Hebrew, as though you do not have the Greek and Latin scrolls, or whatever it is which is translated by us might not be something immediately spat upon by all. As a certain person says, "For to strive without effort, and not to seek anything by wearying except hatred, is extreme insanity" (Sallust, Jugurtha 3). Therefore, I implore you, my dearest Domnius and Rogatian, that, keeping the reading private, you will not bring the book forth into the public, nor throw food to the fastidious, and you will avoid the pride of them who know only (how) to judge others, and themselves (know how) to do nothing. And if there are any of the brothers whom we do not displease, give the text to them, admonishing that they transcribe the Hebrew names, of which there is a great abundance in this book, separately and with intermediate spaces. For it will profit nothing to correct the book, without diligence being preserved in the correction of the copiers.

Neither should it disturb anyone that the book edited by us is one, nor should they be delighted by the dreams of the third and fourth books (which are) of the apocrypha, both because among the Hebrews the discourses of Ezra and Nehemiah are confined to one scroll, and those things which are not found among them, nor are of the twenty-four elders, are for throwing away. And if anyone sets the (version of the) Seventy interpreters before you, the variety of the texts of which shows them torn and perverted, nor indeed can it be asserted truth is diverse, send him to the Gospels, in which are set down many things as though from the Old Testament, things which are not found among the Seventy interpreters, like this: "He will be called a Nazarene," and "From Egypt I have called my son," and "They will look on him whom they have pierced" and many other things which we are saving for a more extensive work, and ask of him where they might be written, and when he has not been able to reveal (where), you must read from these texts which recently were edited by us, daily pierced by the tongues of the slanderous. But so that I might come to a shortcut, certainly what I will introduce is the most reasonable. I have given, in what is translated by me, anything that is not found in the Greek or is found otherwise (than there). Which interpreter do they mangle? They may ask the Hebrews and their authors, whether they accept or reject the sense of my translation. Furthermore, it is another thing if, as is said, with eyes closed they want to slander me and not imitate the study and goodwill of the Greeks, who, after the Seventy translators, with the Gospel of Christ now shining, they both attentively read the Jewish and Ebionite interpreters of the Old Law, namely Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, and have also dedicated (them) to the churches, through the labor of Origen in the Hexapla. How much more should Latins be grateful, having understood that the joy of Greece is to borrow anything from itself (?). For firstly, it is of great expense and of infinite difficulty to be able to have all of the texts; then also, those who have (them) and are ignorant of the Hebrew words will err more, not knowing which ones of the many will have said the truth. Which thing also happened recently to a certain very wise man among the Greeks, so that occasionally leaving the sense of the Scriptures, the error of some particular translator was followed. And we, who at least have a little knowledge of the Hebrew tongue, and our Latin does not lack style in any way, are both better able than others to judge, and to express those things of them which we understand in our language. Therefore, even if a serpent hisses, "and the victor Sinon throws burning torches," with Christ helping, my speech will never be silenced, for (even my) severed tongue will stutter (something). Those who will, may read; those who won't, may throw away. They may scatter (?) the writings; they may slander the letters. Much more by your love will I be provoked toward study, rather than be deterred by their detraction and hatred.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Genesis

Jerome, Prologue to Genesis (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF SAINT JEROME THE PRESBYTER ON THE PENTATEUCH

I have received the desired letters of my Desiderius, who in a foretelling of things to happen has obtained with Daniel a certain name [see Vulgate Daniel 9.23: quia vir desideriorum es tu, "for you are a man of desires"], beseeching that I might hand over to our hearers a translation of the Pentateuch in the Latin tongue from the Hebrew words. Certainly a dangerous work, open to the barkings of detractors, who accuse me of insult to the Seventy to prepare a new interpretation from the old ones, thus approving ability (or "genius") like wine. As has very often been testified by me, I, for my part, am able to offer a portion in the Tabernacle of God, without the riches (or "abilities") of one being damaged by the poverties of others. But that I may have dared, the effort of Origen provoked me, who mixed the translation of Theodotion to the ancient edition, with asterisk and obelus, that is, star and spit, a work distinguishing everything, while he either makes to shine those things which were previously lacking, or he slays and pierces through everything superfluous. And especially by the authority of the Evangelists and the Apostles, in which we read many things from the Old Testament which are not found in our books, as it is (with): "Out of Egypt I have called My Son," and "For He shall be called a Nazarene," and "They will look on Him Whom they have pierced," and "Rivers of living waters shall flow from his belly," and "Things which no eye has seen, nor ear heard, nor has arisen in the heart of man, which God has prepared for those loving Him," and many others which are desiring a proper context (or "book" [Jerome uses a Greek word here: συνταγμα]).

Therefore let us ask them where these are written, and when they are unable to say, we may produce them from the Hebrew books. The first witness is in Hosea, the second in Isaiah, the third in Zechariah, the fourth in Proverbs, the fifth is also in Isaiah, of which many are ignorant, the follies of apocrypha being followed, preferring Iberian dirges to authentic books. The cause of the error is not for me to explain. The Jews say it was done wisely in deliberation, so Ptolemy, the worshipper of one god, might not yet discover a double divinity with the Hebrews; he made them (do so) chiefly for this reason, because he was seen to fall into the dogma of Plato. Accordingly, wherever anything sacred in Scripture is witnessed of the Father and Son and Holy Spirit, they are either translated otherwise, or they have passed over all in silence, so they might both satisfy the king, and might not divulge the secret of the Faith. And I don't know who was the first author to construct with his lying the seventy cells in Alexandria, into which were divided those who wrote, with Aristeas the champion [another Greek word: υπερασπιστης] of the same Ptolemy, and many after the time of Josephus having reported no such thing, but rather (for them) to have gathered in groups, writing in one basilica, (and) not to have prophesied. For it is one thing to be a seer, another to be an interpreter. In that one the Spirit predicts things to come; in this one by his learning and abundance of words he translates those things he has understood. Unless Tullius (Cicero) is understood to have translated, by inspiration of the spirit of rhetoric, the Economics of Xenophon, the Protagoras of Plato, and the For Ctesiphon by Demosthenes. Or the Holy Spirit wove together the witnesses of these books one way through the Seventy interpreters and another way through the Apostles, so that what they passed over in silence, what was written by these was invented [? - obscure].

Therefore, what? We condemn the ancients? By no means! But after those earlier in the House of God, we work at what we can. They are interpreted before the coming of Christ and what they didn't know, they translated in ambiguous (or "uncertain") sentences. We write after His Passion and Resurrection, not so much prophecy as history. For in the one are told what things were heard, in the other what were seen. What we understand better, we also translate better.

Hear, therefore, O rival; listen, O detractor! I do not condemn, I do not censure the Seventy, but I confidently prefer the Apostles to all of them.

Christ speaks to me through their mouth, who I read were placed before the prophets among the Spiritual gifts, among which interpreters hold almost the last place. Why are you tortured by spite? Why do you incite ignorant souls against me? If anywhere in the translation I have been seen by you to err, ask the Hebrews. Consult the teachers of the many different cities. What theirs have of Christ, yours do not have. It is another matter if they have afterward removed the testimonies used by the Apostles against them, and the Latin copies are more correct than the Greek, (and) the Greek than the Hebrew! Truth is against these enviers.

Now I pray you, dearest Desiderius, so that in such a great work which you have made me undertake and take up a beginning from Genesis, you might help in (your) prayers, how I might, by the same Spirit by Whom the books were written, be able to translate them into Latin words.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published online and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduced the text as follows: I've decided to translate next all the prologues contained in the Vulgate, which were written by Jerome except for the Prologue to Paul's Letters, apparently. I have previously translated Jerome's Prologue to the Gospels, which included a discussion of the Eusebian canon table system used in the Gospels, in the earliest of my web pages. This translation of the Prologue to the Pentateuch is just a first draft, of course. Once I've finished all the prologues, I'll probably have a better grasp on some of the peculiarities of Jerome's language and be able to fix some of these renderings which I wasn't so sure of here. So, this isn't written in stone, obviously, but I also beg the reader's indulgence, now and in the future, for any peculiarities, particularly if you're familiar with the Latin versions.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Gospels

Jerome, Letter to Pope Damasus: Preface to the Gospels PREFACE TO THE GOSPELS 1
BEGINNING OF THE PREFACE FOR THE GOSPELS OF SAINT JEROME THE PRESBYTER
To the blessed Pope Damasus, from Jerome,

You urge me to make a new work from the old, and that I might sit as a kind of judge over the versions of Scripture dispersed throughout the whole world, and that I might resolve which among such vary, and which of these they may be which truly agree with the Greek. Pious work, yet perilous presumption, to change the old and aging language of the world, to carry it back to infancy, for to judge others is to invite judging by all of them. Is there indeed any learned or unlearned man, who when he picks up the volume in his hand, and takes a single taste of it, and sees what he will have read to differ, might not instantly raise his voice, calling me a forger, proclaiming me now to be a sacrilegious man, that I might dare to add, to change, or to correct anything in the old books? Against such infamy I am consoled by two causes: that it is you, who are the highest priest, who so orders, and truth is not to be what might vary, as even now I am vindicated by the witness of slanderers. If indeed faith is administered by the Latin version, they might respond by which, for they are nearly as many as the books! If, however, truth is to be a seeking among many, why do we not now return to the Greek originals to correct those mistakes which either through faulty translators were set forth, or through confident but unskilled were wrongly revised, or through sleeping scribes either were added or were changed? Certainly, I do not discuss the Old Testament, which came from the Seventy Elders in the Greek language, changing in three steps until it arrived with us 2. Nor do I seek what Aquila, or what Symmachus may think, or why Theodotion may walk the middle of the road between old and new. This may be the true translation which the Apostles have approved. I now speak of the New Testament, which is undoubtedly Greek, except the Apostle Matthew, who had first set forth the Gospel of Christ in Hebrew letters in Judea. This (Testament) certainly differs in our language, and is led in the way of different streams; it is necessary to seek the single fountainhead. I pass over those books which are called by the name of Lucian and Hesychius, for which a few men wrongly claim authority, who anyway were not allowed to revise either in the Old Instrument after the Seventy Translators, or to pour out revisions in the New; with the Scriptures previously translated into the languages of many nations, the additions may now be shown to be false.

Therefore, this present little preface promises only the four Gospels, the order of which is Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, revised in comparison with only old Greek books. They do not disagree with many familiar Latin readings, as we have kept our pen in control, but only those in which the sense will have been seen to have changed (from the Greek) are corrected; the rest remain as they have been.

We have also copied the lists which Eusebius the bishop of Caesarea, following Ammonius of Alexandria, set out in ten numbers, as they are had in the Greek, so that if any may then wish through diligence to make known what in the Gospels may be either the same, or similar, or singular, he may learn their differences. This is great, since indeed error has sunk into our books; while concerning the same thing, one Evangelist has said more, into another they have added because they thought it inferior; or while another has differently expressed the same sense, whichever one of the four he had read first, he will revise the other to the version he values most. Whence it happened how in our time that all have been mixed; in Mark are many things of Luke, and even of Matthew; turned backwards in Matthew are many things of John and of Mark, yet in the remaining others, they are found to be correct. When, therefore, you will have read the lists which are attached below, the confusion of errors is removed, and you will know all the similar passages, and the singular ones, wherever you may turn to. In the first list, the four agree, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John; in the second, three, Matthew, Mark, John; in the third, three, Matthew, Luke, John; in the fourth, three, Matthew, Mark, John; in the fifth, two, Matthew, Luke; in the sixth, two, Matthew, Mark; in the seventh, two, Matthew, John; in the eighth, two, Luke, Mark; in the ninth, two, Luke, John; in the tenth some peculiar ones are given which the others don't have. Separately in the Gospels are numbered sections of unequal length, beginning with one and increasing to the end of the books. This is written before the passage in black, and it has under it a red number, which shows to which of the ten (lists) to proceed, with the first number to be sought in the list. Therefore, when the book is open, for example, if you will wish to know of this or that chapter in which list they may be, you will immediately be shown by the lower number. Returning to the beginning (of the book) in which the different lists are brought together, and immediately finding the same lists by the title in front, by that same number which you had sought in the Evangelist, which you will find marked in the inscription, you may also view other similar passages, the numbers of which you may note there. And when you know them, you will return to the single volumes, and immediately finding the number which you will have noted before, you will learn the places in which either the same things or similar things were said.

I wish that in Christ you may be well, and that you will remember me, most blessed Pope.

END OF THE PREFACE FOR THE GOSPELS OF SAINT JEROME THE PRESBYTER

1. Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, 27 July 1999, Berkeley, California. As far as I am able to find, this is the first translation of the full letter into English, modern or otherwise.
2. Hebrew > Greek > Latin. This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 27th July 1999, and released by him into the public domain.

All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely.

Biblical Prefaces - Isaiah

Jerome, Prologue to Isaiah (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF JEROME TO THE PROPHET ISAIAH No one, when he will have seen the Prophets to be written in verses, would think them to be bound in meter among the Hebrews, and to have anything in common with the Psalms or the works of Solomon. But what is customary to be used in Demosthenes and Cicero, as they are written in words with divisions, who certainly wrote prose and not in verses, we also, providing ease of reading, have divided a new translation with a new kind of writing. And first, knowing of Isaiah what is presented in his speech, certainly as a man noble and of urbane elegance he does not have anything of rusticity mixed into (his) speech. For this reason it happens that in comparison with others the translation was not able to preserve the flower of his speech. And then adding this, that it is being spoken not only by a prophet, but by an evangelist. For thus all the mysteries of Christ and the Church are pursued to clarity, so that you would not think them to be prophesied of the future, but they covered the history of things past. For this reason I suppose the Seventy interpreters to have been unwilling at that that time to set forth clearly for the gentiles the sacraments of their faith, not throwing holy things to dogs or pearls to swine, which things, when you will have read this edition, you will note were hidden by them. Nor am I unaware of how much work it is to understand the Prophets, or for anyone not to be easily able to judge from the translation, unless he will have before understood those things which he will have read, and we to suffer from the bites of many, who, being goaded by jealousy, what they are not able to follow, they despise. Therefore, knowing and being wise, I place my hand in the fire, and nevertheless I pray this for the scornful readers: that just as the Greeks after the Seventy translators read Aquila and Symmachus and Theodotion, either for study of their doctrines or so that they better understand the Seventy through their collation, that these are deemed worthy to have at least one translator after the earlier ones. Reading first and afterward despising, they are seen not to condemn by judgment, but rather by the ignorant presumption of hatred. And Isaiah prophesied in Jerusalem and Judea when the ten tribes had not yet been led into captivity, and the oracle covered both kingdoms, now together, now separately. And while he sometimes looks at present history, and indicated the return of the people to Judea after the Babylonian captivity, yet is all his concern for the calling of the nations and for the coming of Christ. Who, how much the more you love, O Paula and Eustochium, the more strive for him, so that for the present disparagement, by which the envious incessantly tear me into pieces, the same One may restore a reward to me in the future, Who knows me to have exerted myself in the learning of foreign languages: the Jews might not jump all day on the errors of the Scriptures in His Church.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows:

St Jerome's preface here to Isaiah is very interesting for its mention of the way in which he wrote it out: with spaces between the words. While this is natural for us, it was not the way writing was done in those days. The addition of the spaces was also mentioned in his prologue to Chronicles, where it was especially necessary to keep separate all the many Hebrew names in transliteration, which Latins and Greeks were always mixing up, not knowing Hebrew. His mention of the prophecies of Isaiah covering "all the mysteries of Christ and the Church" is entirely intriguing, and it would be nice to have had more on that subject, but here we are. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Jeremiah

Jerome, Prologue to Jeremiah (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF JEROME TO THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET JEREMIAH The Prophet Jeremiah, for whom this prologue is written, was seen among the Hebrews to be certainly more rustic in style than Isaiah and Hosea and certain other prophets, but equal in meanings, which the same Spirit obviously prophesied. Furthermore, his simplicity of speech happened from the place in which he was born. For he was from Anathoth, which is up to today a village three miles distant from Jerusalem, a priest from priests and sanctified in his mother's womb, dedicating with her virginity a man of the Gospel to the Church of Christ. This boy began to prophesy the captivity of the city and Judea both not only by the Spirit, but also with eyes of flesh. The Assyrians had already transferred the ten tribes of Israel, and now colonies of gentiles had taken possession of their lands. For this reason he prophesied only in Judah and Benjamin, and he lamented the ruins of his city in a fourfold alphabet, which we have presented in the measure of the meter and in verses. Besides this, the order of visions, which is entirely confused among the Greeks and Latins, we have corrected to the original truth. And the Book of Baruch, his scribe, which is neither read nor found among the Hebrews, we have omitted, standing ready, because of these things, for all the curses from the jealous, to whom it is necessary for me to respond through a separate short work. And I suffer because you think this. Otherwise, for the benefit of the wicked, it was more proper to set a limit for their rage by my silence, rather than any new things written to provoke daily the insanity of the envious.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows: A couple of notes on this prologue by St Jerome to Jeremiah are in order. He mentions that Jeremiah "lamented the ruins of his city in fourfold alphabet," civitatis suae ruinas quadruplici plaxit alfabeto. This is a reference to the acrostic first four chapters of Lamentations, in which each verse begins with the successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet, thus "in a fourfold alphabet." Another perhaps puzzling reference just after that is to his presenting the book "in the measure of the meter and in verses." This refers to his breaking the verses into separate lines based upon metrical measurements, probably according to the Hebrew, and written with separation of verses and words. Basically think of the way that poetry is printed today, in short lines that take no notice of the width of the page, and that's what he's describing. If I find a picture of one of the early Vulgate manuscripts reflecting this, I'll post it. St Jerome also mentions a confusion of the order of the visions in Jeremiah as known among the Greeks and Latins. This refers to the very different (and probably original) arrangement of the prophecies as found in the Septuagint and is supported by a Dead Sea Scroll fragment, so we know that there were Hebrew manuscripts with this order, which Jerome did not. Anyhow, in the meantime, enjoy yet another prologue. There aren't many left now! Once I've done all of them, I'll go back through to edit them and then post them all on a single page, with notes and such.

Biblical Prefaces - Jerome's notes to the additions to Esther

Jerome, Notes on the Additions to Esther (2006) [by Kevin P. Edgecomb]

I mentioned the Additions to the Book of Esther in the post Jerome's Prologue to Esther, above (well, below, actually). These additions are usually found in translations of the Apocrypha/Deuterocanonicals, and are designated as follows, with citations for the the Hebrew text of Esther interspersed where it occurs in italics:

Addition A: Vulgate 11.2-12.6

Hebrew 1.1-2.18 Addition B: Vulgate 13.1-7 Hebrew 3.14-4.17 Addition C: Vulgate 13.8-18; 14.1-19

Addition D: Vulgate 15.4-19 (often renumbered in other versions as 15.1-16; Vulgate 15.1-3 is not generally translated in such collections)

Hebrew 5.3-8.12 Addition E: Vulgate 16.1-24 Hebrew 8.13-10.3 Addition F: Vulgate 10.4-13; 11.1 In the Septuagint, the text is essentially as described above, with the additions interspersed with the rest of the book (see the NRSV Apocrypha Esther for this in translation). But St Jerome, in his new Latin edition of Esther, moved all the additions to the end of the book. And since it was the Vulgate Bible which was the first one to have both chapter and verse numbers, we're stuck with the peculiar numbering due to that dislocation. One of the interesting things I noticed in looking at these is that there are a few notes that St Jerome had written in these Addition chapters. I'm translating them and posting them here just for fun. I use the Addition A-F convention noted above to show the placement of the notes.

Before Addition A: This was also the beginning in the common edition, which is found neither in the Hebrew nor among any other translations.

After Addition A: Up to here is the proem.

Before Addition B: These which follow are set in the place where it is written in the scroll "and they plundered their goods" or "their substance," which we find only in the common edition.

After Addition B: Up to here is the text of the letter.

Before C: These which follow I have found written after the place where it is read "and hurrying, Mordechai did everything which Esther had commanded him," yet they are not found in the Hebrew and are not found inside any other translations.

Before 15.1: These also I found added to the common edition.

Before D: And also these too, which are below.

Before E: The text of the letter of King Artaxerxes, which he sent on behalf of the Jews to all the provinces of his kingdom, which also is not itself found in the Hebrew scroll.

Before F: Those things which are found in the Hebrew I have expressed with complete accuracy. And these things which follow I have found written in the common edition in which are contained the language and letters of the Greeks, and sometimes after the end of the book this chapter is found, which, according to our custom, we annotate with an obelus, that is, a spit.

Something that might not be immediately obvious is that the section "Before F" just above is actually a tripartite note. First, it comprises a conclusion to St Jerome's translation of the Hebrew Book of Esther: "Those things which are found in the Hebrew I have expressed with complete accuracy." Second is an introduction to all the additions, which by his arrangement follow just after this point: "And these things which follow I have found written in the common edition in which are contained the language and letters of the Greeks." And third comes the introduction to the immediately following chapter, which is the conclusion of the book in the Septuagint: "and sometimes after the end of the book this chapter is found, which, according to our custom, we annotate with an obelus, that is, a spit." This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Job

Jerome, Prologue to Job (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF SAINT JEROME TO THE BOOK OF JOB

I am forced, through each of the books of Divine Scripture, to respond to the slander of adversaries who accuse my translation of rebuking the Seventy translators, not as though among the Greeks Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion had also translated either word for word, or meaning for meaning, or by mixing both together, also a kind of translation of equal proportion, and also Origen had divided all the scrolls of the Old Instrument with obeli and asterisks which, either added by him or taken from Theodotion, he added to the ancient translation, proving what was added to have been lacking. Therefore my detractors should learn to accept in full what they have accepted in part, or to erase my translation along with their asterisks. For it should not be, that those who they accepted to have omitted many things may not be acknowledged to have certainly erred in some things, especially in Job, in which if you will have removed those things which are added under the asterisks, the greater part will be cut off. And this is only among the Greeks. Otherwise, among the Latins, before their translation which we recently edited under asterisks and obeli, almost seven hundred or eight hundred verses are (missing), so that the book, shortened and cut up and eaten away, shows its deformity publicly to readers. And this translation follows no translator of the ancients, but will rather convey from the speech itself (which is) Hebrew and Arabic and sometimes Syrian, now words, now meanings, now both together. For even among the Hebrews the whole book is considered oblique and slippery and what the Greek rhetors call figuratively arranged (εσχηματισμενος), and while one thing is said, it does another, as if you would hold tightly an eel or a little murena fish, when you press harder, then the sooner it escapes. I remember I paid not a little money toward understanding of this scroll, for an instructor from Lydda who among the Hebrews was thought to have first rank, with whose teaching I know not whether I accomplished anything; this one thing I know: for me not to have been able to translate anything that I didn't know before.

Therefore, from the beginning to the words of Job, among the Hebrews the speech is prose. Next, from the words of Job in which he says, "May the day perish in which I was born, and the night in which it was said: A man is conceived," to that place, where it is written before the end of the scroll: "Therefore I accuse myself and make repentance in dust and ashes," the verses are in hexameter, running in dactyl and spondee and, according to the idiom of the language, also accepting numerous other (poetic) feet not of the same (number of) syllables, but of the same intervals. Sometimes also, by breaking the law of (poetic metrical) numbers, the rhythm itself is found sweet and ringing, which is understood better by prosodists than by a simple reader. And from the verse mentioned above to the end of the book, the small section that remains continues with prose speech. If that seems unbelievable to anyone, namely that among the Hebrews there are meters, and either the Psalter or the Lamentation of Jeremiah or almost all the songs of the Scriptures are to be understood in the manner of our Flaccus and the Greek Pindar and Alkaios and Sappho, let him read Philo, Josephus, Origen, and Eusebius of Caesarea, and by their testimony he will prove me to speak the truth. For which reason, let my dogs therefore hear me to have labored at this scroll, not as rebuking the ancient translation, but rather so those things in it which are either obscure or missing or certainly corrupted by the error of scribes may be made more clear by our translation, who have both learned Hebrew speech in part, and also in Latin, almost from our cradle we were worn out (?) among grammarians and rhetors and philosophers. But if among the Greeks, after the edition of the Seventy, with the Gospel of Christ shining, the Jew Aquila, and Symmachus and Theodotion, judaizing heretics, are accepted, who have hidden many mysteries of the Savior by sly translation, and yet are found in the Hexapla among the churches and are explained by men of the Church, how much more should I, a Christian of Christian parents and bearing the standard of the cross on my forehead, whose study was to recover the missing, to correct the corrupted, and to open the sacraments of the Church with pure and faithful speech, not be rejected by either disdainful or by malicious readers? Let whoever will to keep the old books, either written on purple skins with gold and silver, or in uncial letters, as they commonly say, loads of writing rather than books, while they leave to me and mine to have poor little leaves and not such beautiful books as correct ones. Each edition, the Seventy according to the Greeks and mine according to the Hebrews, was translated into Latin by my labor. May each one choose what he will, and prove himself studious rather than malevolent.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin adds: The third paragraph includes some information on metric poetry which is probably pretty obscure to most readers, as the language of metric poetry, indeed the composition of such poetry itself, is no longer so common. If anyone is puzzled by the language of "dactyl" and "spondee" and "feet," see the very helpful article on Dactylic Hexameter on Wikipedia.

Also, in the beginning of the last paragraph, St

Jerome refers to "my dogs." He is not describing pets, but referring rather insultingly to his detractors, who he elsewhere describes as "barking" and so on.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Joshua

Jerome, Prologue to Joshua (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PREFACE OF SAINT JEROME TO THE BOOK OF JOSHUA

Having finally finished with the Pentateuch of Moses, as though freed for a great advantage, we set (our) hand to Jesus son of Nave, who the Hebrews call Joshua ben Nun, that is, Joshua son of Nun, and to the book of Judges, which they call Sopthim, to Ruth also and Esther, which they extol by the same names. And I admonish the reader, that he, being careful with Scripture, might preserve the forest of Hebrew names and (their) separations divided into parts, so that our work and his effort might not be wasted. And that in the first place, which I often testify, let him know me not to coin the new in rebuke of the old, as though my friends are accused, but rather to offer, for my part, to men of my language, those things of ours which still delight, like the copies of the Hexapla for the Greeks, which require great expense and work, so they might have our edition, and anywhere the readings of the ancient scrolls are doubtful, comparing this to them, they might find what they seek, especially when among the Latins there are as many versions as there are books, and everyone has, according to his own judgment, either added or subtracted whatever seemed right to him, and he indeed may not have been able to be certain what differed. From which may scorpion cease to rise against me with bow-like wound, and poisoned tongue desist from slandering a holy work, either accepting, if it has pleased, or condemning, if it has displeased, and remember these verses: "Your mouth has abounded in malice, and your tongue constructed deceits; sitting, you have spoken against your brother, and against the son of your mother imposed a scandal. These things you have done and I was quiet; you wrongly thought that I might be like you: I will accuse you and stand before your face" [Psalm 49.19-21]. For what advantage is it to the listener for us to sweat at work and to work at criticizing others, for Jews to lament that the opportunity has been taken away from them for falsely accusing and insulting Christians, and for men of the Church to despise, indeed to tear apart, that from which enemies are tortured. If only what is old in the interpretation pleases them, which things are also not displeasing to me, and they think of receiving nothing further, why are they reading or not reading those things which are either added or cut out by the asterisks and obeli? For what reason have the churches accepted the translation of Daniel by Theodotion? Why are Origen and Eusebius Pamphilou admired for having treated entire editions similarly? Or what foolishness was it, after they had spoken true things, to set forth things which are false? And from where in the New Testament are they able to prove the received testimonies, which are not supported in the books of the Old (Testament)? Thus, we say, I may be seen to be not altogether quiet to accusers.

Otherwise, after the falling asleep of Paula, whose life is an example of virtue, and these books, which I was not able to deny to Eustochium the virgin of Christ, we have decided "while spirit yet rules these limbs" to incline to the explanation of the Prophets, and to resume, in a kind of return home, a work long unfinished, especially when the admirable and holy man Pammachius demands the same in letters, and we, hurrying on to the homeland, need to pass by the deadly songs of the sirens with deaf ear.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduced the text as follows: This one was tough because of some quite peculiar sentences, which I think I've pretty much figured out now. I don't think there's any English translation of this one around, certainly not one in my possession, so I didn't have one as a "cheat sheet" when I got stuck, which is good for my Latin, but not for my schedule....

Many thanks especially to Michael Gilleland (of Laudator Temporis Acti fame!) for puzzling over a certain ambiguous scriptura with me! UPDATE: I've changed a couple of sentences with Michael Gilleland's input. Several formerly questionable renderings are now resolved. Huzzah!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Judith v2

St. Jerome, The Preface on the Book of Judith: English translation¹ [Translated by Andrew S. Jacobs] THE PREFACE OF JEROME ON THE BOOK OF JUDITH

Among the Jews, the book of Judith is considered ²

among the apocrypha; its warrant for affirming those [apocryphal texts] ³ which have come into dispute is deemed less than sufficient. Moreover, since it was written in the Chaldean

⁴ language, it is counted among the historical books. But since the Nicene Council is considered to have counted this book among the number of sacred Scriptures, I have acquiesced to your ⁵ request (or should I say demand!): and, my other work set aside, from which I was forcibly restrained, I have given a single night's work ⁶, translating according to sense rather than verbatim.

I have hacked away at the excessively error-ridden panoply of the many codices; I conveyed in Latin only what I could find expressed coherently in the Chaldean words. Receive the widow Judith, example of chastity, and with triumphant praise acclaim her with eternal public celebration. For not only for women, but even for men, she has been given as a model by the one who rewards her chastity, who has ascribed to her such virtue that she conquered the unconquered among humanity, and surmounted the insurmountable.

Footnotes

1. This was translated and released to the public domain by Andrew S. Jacobs, University of California Riverside, to whom many thanks. The text used was the Patrologia Latina text which reads:

PRAEFATIO HIERONYMI IN LIBRUM JUDITH.

[Col. 0037D] Apud Hebraeos liber Judith inter apocrypha legitur: [Col. 0038D] cujus auctoritas ad roboranda illa quae in [Col. 0039A] contentionem veniunt, minus idonea judicatur. Chaldaeo tamen sermone conscriptus, inter historias computatur. Sed quia hunc librum Synodus Nicaena in numero sanctarum Scripturarum legitur computasse, acquievi postulationi vestrae, immo exactioni: et sepositis occupationibus, quibus vehementer arctabar, huic unam lucubrationculam dedi, magis sensum e sensu, quam ex verbo verbum transferens. Multorum codicum varietatem vitiosissimam [Col. 0040A] amputavi: sola ea, quae intelligentia integra in verbis Chaldaeis invenire potui, Latinis expressi. Accipite Judith viduam, castitatis exemplum, et triumphali laude, perpetuis eam praeconiis declarate. Hanc enim non solum feminis, sed et viris imitabilem dedit, qui castitatis ejus remunerator, virtutem ei talem tribuit, ut invictum omnibus hominibus vinceret, et insuperabilem superaret. (PL 29:37-39) 2. legitur = counted/considered.

3. illa, i.e. the apocryphal texts.

4. By 'Chaldean' he means Old Aramaic.

5. Your-Plural, vestrae. According to Migne, the translation was probably requested by Jerome's friends and fellow ascetics Chromatius and Heliodorus: "From this it seems to us to correctly conclude that this preface was written to men, and not to women [the assumption being that most of the translations were done either for men abroad or for Paula and/or Eustochium, his companions in Bethlehem-ASJ], and this very translation of Judith was offered forth by Jerome. To be sure, although there is no mention of the persons to whom it was dedicated in the editions or book manuscripts, Tillemont (and others subsequently) deduced from this, as they say, suitability of the work to have been given to his beloved fellow-toilers [πηιλοπονωταταις, in Greek] Paula and her daughter Eustochium. It seems more fitting to us that he was compelled to this work as well by those brother bishops, Chromatius and Heliodorus, in whose names he had dedicated earlier the neighboring books of Tobit..." etc. [Footnote - g] [Col. 0040C] (The footnote is to the part where Jerome talks about how Judith provides an example "even for men") 6. "Night's work" = lucubrationcula. This text was translated and placed in the public domain by Andrew S. Jacobs, 2004. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Judith

Jerome, Prologue to Judith (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE TO JUDITH

Among the Hebrews the Book of Judith is found among the Hagiographa, the authority of which toward confirming those which have come into contention is judged less appropriate. Yet having been written in Chaldean words, it is counted among the histories. But because this book is found by the Nicene Council to have been counted among the number of the Sacred Scriptures, I have acquiesced to your request, indeed a demand, and works having been set aside from which I was forcibly curtailed, I have given to this (book) one short night's work translating more sense from sense than word from word. I have removed the extremely faulty variety of the many books; only those which I was able to find in the Chaldean words with understanding intact did I express in Latin ones.

Receive the widow Judith, an example of chastity, and declare triumphal honor with perpetual praises for her. For this one, imitable not only for women, but also for men, has the Rewarder of her chastity given, Who has granted such strength, that she conquered the one unconquered by all men, she surpassed the insurpassable.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows: In this preface, too, St Jerome makes mention of the authority of the Church, in this case literally the famous First Ecumenical Council of Nicea, as declaring Judith among the books of Holy Scripture. In fact, he also mentions that "among the Hebrews" the book was considered as among the "Hagiographa," some would say a somewhat flexible term, which in the previous prologue (to Tobias), he certainly seems to have equated with the Scriptures. If this is the case, then at one point in history, in the late 4th century, Judith was considered by at least some Jews in Palestine to have been Scripture. He does, however, in that very first sentence note that even though it is considered an "accepted" book, this is considered to have no bearing on the status of other books. Interesting. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Psalms (70)

Jerome, Prologue to Psalms (LXX) (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PREFACE OF EUSEBIUS HIERONYMUS TO THE BOOK OF PSALMS Not long ago while located in Rome, I emended the Psalter, and had corrected it, though cursorily, for the most part according to the (version of the) Seventy interpreters. Because you see it again, O Paula and Eustochium, corrupted by the error of the scribes, and the more ancient error to prevail rather than the new emendation, you urge that I work the land like some kind of field already ploughed, and uproot with sideways furrows the thorns being reborn, saying it is proper that what so frequently sprouts badly is just as frequently cut down. For this reason I remind by my usual preface, both you for whom this mighty work exerts itself, and those who would have copies of such, that those things to have been diligently emended might be transcribed with care and diligence. Each may himself note either a horizontal line or a radiant sign, that is, either an obelus or an asterisk, and wherever he sees a preceding virgule, from there to the two points which we have marked in, he knows more is to be found in the (version of the) Seventy interpreters; and where he has looked at the image of a star, he will have recognized an addition from the Hebrew scrolls, likewise up to the two points, only according to the edition of Theodotion who did not differ from the Seventy interpreters in simplicity of speech. I, knowing me to have done this for you and for each studious person, do not doubt there will be many who, either envious or arrogant, "prefer to be seen to condemn the brilliant rather than to learn," and to drink from a turbulent river much rather than from an entirely pure spring.

END OF THE PREFACE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows:

St Jerome did two separate translations of the Psalms. One was simply a revision of the popular Old Latin psalms (which are still used in some older rites, most notably the Ambrosian, I recall), with reference to the Greek Psalms version in the Hexapla. This is the prologue to that edition of the Psalms. The other version, based directly on the Hebrew Psalms, will follow separately.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Psalms (Hebrew)

Jerome, Prologue to Psalms (Hebrew) (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF ANOTHER PREFACE OF THE SAME Eusebius Hieronymus to his Sophronius, health!

I know some to think the Psalter to be divided into five books, as though wherever among the (version of the) Seventy interpreters is written γενοιτο γενοιτο, that is, "may it be, may it be," for which in Hebrew is said "amen amen," is the end of the books. And we, the authority of the Hebrews being followed, and especially of the Apostles, who always in the New Testament name the Book of Psalms, have asserted one volume.

We also testify of all the authors who are set down in the titles of their psalms, namely of David, and of Asaph, and of Jeduthun, of the Sons of Korah, of Heman the Ezraite, of Moses, and of Solomon, and of the rest, which Ezra compiled into one volume. For if amen, for which Aquila translated "trustworthy" (πεπιστωμενος), is only placed at the end of books and not sometimes wither at the beginning or at the end of either words or sentences, then both the Savior never said in the Gospel, "Amen, amen, I say to you," and the letters of Paul (never) contained it in the middle work, also Moses, and Jeremiah, and others in this way had many books, who in the middle of their books frequently interposed amen, as also the number of twenty-two Hebrew books and the mystery of the same number will be changed. For also its Hebrew title, Sephar Thallim, which is interpreted "Scroll of Hymns," agreeing with the Apostolic authority, shows not many books, but one volume.

Therefore, because recently, when disputing with a Hebrew, you produced certain testimonies about the Lord Savior from the Psalms, and he, wishing to outmaneuver you, asserted throughout nearly every one of the words that it is not found thus in Hebrew, so that you were opposed to the (version of the) Seventy interpreters, you most zealously demanded that, after Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion, I translated a new edition in Latin speech. For you said yourself to be greatly confused by the variety of interpreters, so that you are inclined by love to be content with either my translation or my judgment. For this reason, having been compelled by you, to whom I am unable to deny even those things I cannot do, I again handed myself over to the barkings of detractors, and I preferred you to question my strengths rather than my willingness in friendship. Certainly I will speak confidently and I will cite many witnesses of this work, knowing me in this matter to have changed nothing of the truth of the Hebrew. Therefore, wherever my edition has differed from the old ones, ask any of the Hebrews, and you will clearly see me to be torn in pieces by those striving after error, who "prefer to be seen to condemn the brilliant rather than to learn," most perverse men. For when they always desire new delicacies, and their gullets, like the seas, do not suffice, why in only study of the Scriptures are they content with an old flavor? I do not say this so that I might bite my predecessors, nor have I considered slandering any translation of those which I very diligently corrected, (and) formerly gave to men of my language; but that it is one thing to read the Psalms in the churches of those believing in Christ, another thing to answer the Jews who accuse every word. But if, as you proffer, you will have translated by little work into Greek, Opposing the Ridiculers (αντιφιλονεικων τοις διασυρουσιν), and you will have made the most learned men witnesses to my ignorance, I will say to you that (saying) of Horace, "You do not carry wood into a forest." Except that I have this solace, if in the common work I know both praise and slander to be common to me and you.

I desire you to be well in the Lord Jesus, and to remember me.

END OF THE PREFACE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows: This is the preface St Jerome wrote to accompany his translation of the Psalms from the Hebrew. He apparently wasn't too entirely sure of his success in this, as seems to be implied at a couple of points in this letter, which shows St Jerome to have had both a humble and a humorous streak which hasn't been entirely evident in the other prefaces. I think it helps to put those into a better light, as well. Most interesting is what he says about this translation's origins, as specifically designed to reflect the Hebrew for the sake of apologetics, while other translations have their place in being read in the churches. Of course, it's the other version of the Psalms, based on the LXX, which were so popular and so ubiquitous before the modern craze of translating from Hebrew came along. St Jerome is explicit in that he wouldn't have had a problem with that. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - The "Helmeted" introduction to Kings

Jerome, "Helmeted" introduction to Kings (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF SAINT JEROME TO THE BOOK OF KINGS

There are twenty-two letters among the Hebrews, as is also witnessed by the language of the Syrians and Chaldeans, which is for the most part similar to the Hebrew; for these twenty-two elements also have the same sound, but different characters. The Samaritans still write the Pentateuch of Moses in the same number of letters, only they differ in shapes and points (or "endings" apicibus). And Ezra, the scribe and doctor of the Law, after the capture of Jerusalem and the rebuilding of the Temple under Zerubbabel, is certain to have found (or "invented" repperisse) other letters, which we now use, when up to that time the characters of the Samaritans and the Hebrews were the same. In the book of Numbers this same total is also mystically shown by the census of the Levites and the priests. And we find in certain Greek scrolls to this day the four-lettered Name of God written in the ancient letters. But also the thirty-sixth Psalm, and the one hundred tenth, and the one hundred eleventh, and the one hundred eighteenth, and the one hundred forty-fourth, although written in different meter, are nevertheless woven with an alphabet of the same number. And in the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and his prayer, also at the end of the Proverbs of Solomon from that place in which he says "Who can find a strong woman?" are counted the same alphabet or sections. Furthermore, five of the letters among them are double: chaph, mem, nun, phe, sade. For they write with these one way at the beginning and in the middle of words, another at the end. From which also five are considered double books by most: Samuel, Malachim, Dabreiamin, Ezra, Jeremiah with Cinoth, that is, his Lamentation. Therefore, just as there are twenty-two elements, by which we write in Hebrew all that we say, and the human voice is understood by their beginnings (or "parts" initiis), thus twenty-two scrolls are counted, by which letters and writings a just man is instructed in the doctrine of God, as though in tender infancy and still nursing. The first book is called among them Bresith, which we call Genesis; the second, Hellesmoth, which is named Exodus; the third, Vaiecria, that is Leviticus; the fourth Vaiedabber, which we call Numbers; the fifth, Addebarim, which is designated Deuteronomy. These are the five books of Moses, which they appropriately call Thorat, that is, the Law. The second order is made of the Prophets, and begins with Jesus son of Nave, which is called among them Joshua benNum. Then they append Sopthim, that is the book of Judges; and they attach Ruth to the same, because the history narrated happened in the days of the Judges. Samuel follows third, which we call First and Second Kingdoms. Fourth is Malachim, that is Kings, which book contains Third and Fourth Kingdoms; and it is much better to say Malachim, that is Kings, rather than Malachoth, that is Kingdoms, for it does not describe the kingdoms of many nations, but only that of the Israelite people which contains twelve tribes. Fifth is Isaiah, sixth Jeremiah, seventh Ezekiel, eighth the book of the Twelve Prophets, which is called Thareasra among them. The third order holds the Hagiographa, and begins with Job, the first book, the second by David, which is also one book of Psalms comprising five sections. The third is Solomon, having three books: Proverbs, which they call Parables, that is Masaloth, and Ecclesiastes, that is Accoeleth, and The Song of Songs, which they denote with the title Sirassirim. Sixth is Daniel, seventh Dabreiamin, that is Words of the Days, which we may call more clearly a chronicle (Gk here: χρονικον) of all of Divine history, which book is written among us as First and Second Paralipomenon; eighth is Ezra, which is also in the same manner among Greeks and Latins divided into two books; ninth is Esther. And thus there are likewise twenty-two books in the Old (Testament), that is five of Moses, eight of the Prophets, nine of the Hagiographa. Although some may write Ruth and Cinoth among the Hagiographa, and think of counting these books among their number, and then by this to have twenty-four books of the Old Law, which the Apocalypse of John introduces with the number of twenty-four elders worshipping the Lamb and offering their crowns, prostrated on their faces, and crying out with unwearying voice: "Holy, holy, holy Lord God almighty, Who was and Who is, and Who will be." This prologue to the Scriptures may be appropriate as a helmeted introduction to all the books which we turn from Hebrew into Latin, so we may be able to know whatever is outside of these is set aside among the apocrypha. Therefore, Wisdom, which is commonly ascribed to Solomon, and the book of Jesus son of Sirach, and Judith and Tobias, and The Shepherd are not in the canon. I have found the First Book of the Maccabees (is) Hebrew, the Second is Greek, which may also be proven by their styles.

While these things may be so, I implore you, reader, that you might not consider my work a rebuke of the ancients. Each one offers to the Tabernacle of God what he is able. Some offer gold and silver and precious stones; others, linen and purple, scarlet and blue. It will go well with us, if we offer the skins and hair of goats. For the Apostle still judges our more contemptible parts more necessary. From which both the whole of the beauty of the Tabernacle and each individual kind, a distinction of the present and future Church, is covered with skins and goat-hair coverings, and the heat of the sun and the harmful rain are kept off by those things which are of lesser value. Therefore, first read my Samuel and Kings; mine, I say, mine. For whatever we have learned and know by often translating and carefully correcting is ours. And when you come to understand what you did not know before, either consider me a translator, if you are grateful, or a paraphraser, if ungrateful, although I am truly not at all aware of anything of the Hebrew to have been changed by me. Certainly, if you are incredulous, read the Greek and Latin books and compare (them) with these little works, and wherever you will see among them to differ, ask any one of the Hebrews, in whom you might place better faith, and if he confirms us, I think that you will not consider him a diviner, as he has similarly divined in the very same place with me. But I also ask you, handmaidens of Christ, who have anointed the head of your reclining Lord with the most precious myrrh of faith, who have in no way sought the Savior in the tomb, for whom Christ has now ascended to the Father, that you might oppose the shields of your prayers against the barking dogs which rage against me with rabid mouth and go around the city, and in it they are considered educated if slandering others. I, knowing my humility, will always remember these sentences: "I will guard my ways, so I will not offend with my tongue; I have placed a guard on my mouth, while the sinner stands against me; I was mute, and humiliated, and silent because of good things."

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduced the text as follows: This is a translation of Jerome's well-known "helmeted introduction" (galeatum principium) to Kings (that is 1-2 Samuel and 1-2 Kings) which is usually considered the most useful of his Old Testament introductions. It's certainly the longest. Along with the usual defense against critics, Jerome includes an interesting arrangement of what he considers the canonical books of the Old Testament, which are 22 in number, just like the Hebrew alphabet. He mentions the tripartite arrangement of books in the Hebrew Bible as current among the Jews of his day, the earliest unambiguous description of this arrangement, including the actual names of the books in each category.

I'll revisit this one later and include some notes on the Hebrew words mentioned here and how the pronunciation, preserved perhaps imperfectly through the Latin manuscript tradition, differs from today's typical Hebrew pronunciation. For now, though, I'm focusing on just getting all the prefaces translated in at least a first draft.

Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - The books of Solomon

Jerome, Prologue to the Books of Solomon (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb]
BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF JEROME TO THE BOOKS OF SOLOMON Jerome to Bishops Cromatius and Heliodorus. May the letter join those joined in priesthood. Indeed, a sheet may not divide those who the love of Christ has connected. You request commentaries on Hosea, Amos, Zechariah, and Malachi. I wrote, even if it cost through ill-health. You have sent the solace of expenses, by our scribes and copyist having been sustained, so that our genius exerts itself most strongly for you. And behold, from every side a diverse crowd of those demanding, as though it is equal for me either to work for you with others hungering, or I might be subject to anyone besides you in matters of giving and receiving. And so, with a long sickness broken, I have not kept inwardly silent this year and been mute with you. I have dedicated to your names the work of three days, namely the translation of the three scrolls of Solomon: Masloth, which are Parables in Hebrew, called in the common edition Proverbs; Coeleth, which in Greek is Ecclesiastes, in Latin we could say Preacher; (and) Sirassirim, which is translated into our language Song of Songs.

Also included is the book of the model of virtue (παναρετος)

Jesus son of Sirach, and another falsely ascribed work (ψευδεπιγραφος) which is titled Wisdom of Solomon. The former of these I have also found in Hebrew, titled not Ecclesiasticus as among the Latins, but Parables, to which were joined Ecclesiastes and Song of Songs, as though it made of equal worth the likeness not only of the number of the books of Solomon, but also the kind of subjects. The second was never among the Hebrews, the very style of which reeks of Greek eloquence. And some of the ancient scribes affirm this one is of Philo Judaeus.

Therefore, just as the Church also reads the books of Judith, Tobias, and the Maccabees, but does not receive them among the canonical Scriptures, so also one may read these two scrolls for the strengthening of the people,

(but) not for confirming the authority of ecclesiastical dogmas.

If anyone is truly more pleased by the edition of the Seventy interpreters, he has it already corrected by us. For it is not as though we build the new so that we destroy the old. And yes, when one will have read most carefully, he will know our things to be more understood, which haven't soured by having been poured into a third vessel, but have rather preserved their flavor by having been entrusted to a new container immediately from the press.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows:

Here St Jerome gives us not only more information about his work habits (he translated Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Songs in three days), but also a bit more on his understanding of the apocrypha. He implicitly defines the canon of Scriptures as those books used "for confirming the authority of ecclesiastical dogmas," and excludes the apocrypha from that category. Granted, the majority of the apocrypha are not useful for this, but then neither, admittedly, are a number of canonical works. It's an argument or position against the apocrypha that we have yet to find the origins of. And although St Jerome here states that the apocrypha that he names are not "canonical Scriptures," we know that he recognized the authority of the Council of Nicea in advancing Judith as canonical. So, St Jerome's equivocation on the matter reveals a more subtle understanding, in which he considers the apocrypha good "for the strengthening of the people." Anyhow, perhaps St Jerome will have more to say on the subject in some of the upcoming prologues. We'll see. One fun thing he mentions in this prologue is the marginal tradition that Philo Judaeus of Alexandria was the author of Wisdom of Solomon, something also found in the Canon Muratorianus, and various other places, though not often. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Tobit

Jerome, Prologue to Tobit (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE TO TOBIAS Jerome to the Bishops in the Lord Cromatius and Heliodorus, health!

I do not cease to wonder at the constancy of your demanding. For you demand that I bring a book written in Chaldean words into Latin writing, indeed the book of Tobias, which the Hebrews exclude from the catalogue of Divine Scriptures, being mindful of those things which they have titled Hagiographa. I have done enough for your desire, yet not by my study. For the studies of the Hebrews rebuke us and find fault with us, to translate this for the ears of Latins contrary to their canon. But it is better to be judging the opinion of the Pharisees to displease and to be subject to the commands of bishops. I have persisted as I have been able, and because the language of the Chaldeans is close to Hebrew speech, finding a speaker very skilled in both languages, I took to the work of one day, and whatever he expressed to me in Hebrew words, this, with a summoned scribe, I have set forth in Latin words. I will be paid the price of this work by your prayers, when, by your grace, I will have learned what you request to have been completed by me was worthy.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows: This is the first of St Jerome's Vulgate prologues for one of the apocrypha that I've done. It's very interesting, if one pays attention to his reasoning in this prologue, it being actually a letter which accompanied his translation of Tobias to the Bishops Cromatius and Heliodorus. St Jerome is often considered or claimed to be vehemently opposed to the apocrypha, especially in antapocryphal Protestant circles. But we find in this letter that this is only half of the picture. While the apocrypha were not included in the Hebrew Bible, and St

Jerome respects the Hebrew studies on this matter, he explicitly states here that the decisions of Christian bishops are more important. Something like this has been the response to critics of the "apocrypha," "deuterocanonicals," or whatever you want to call them, throughout the ages: they are included in the canon because that has been, is, and always will be the practice of the Church. It's good to see this from St Jerome, and we'll see a similar thing in his Prologue to Judith, coming up next. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Twelve minor prophets

Jerome, Prologue to the Twelve Prophets (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb] BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE OF THE TWELVE PROPHETS The order of the Twelve Prophets is not the same among the Hebrews as it is among us. For which reason, according to how it is read there, they are also arranged here. Hosea is composed of short clauses and speaking as though by aphorisms. Joel is clear in the beginning, more obscure at the end. And they each have their individual properties up to Malachi, who the Hebrews name Ezra the scribe and teacher of the Law. And because it is too long to speak of all these things now, I would only you were warned this, O Paula and Eustochium: the book of the Twelve Prophets to be one; and Hosea a contemporary (συνχρονος) of Isaiah; (and) Malachi in fact to have been of the times of Haggai and Zechariah. And those (books) in which the time is not set down in the title, under those kings which they were to have prophesied under, they also prophesied after those which have titles.

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows: This is St Jerome's prologue to the Twelve Prophets, or Twelve Minor Prophets as they're often called, because these books are shorter relative to the books of the Prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. It's a very short prologue, but there are two items of interest in it. One is that St Jerome mentions that "the Hebrews" of his day considered Malachi to be Ezra. I don't think I'd ever read that before, so it was a pleasant surprise. The other interesting thing is that St Jerome considered the Twelve Prophets to be chronologically arranged (which I do too, great, somewhat curmudgeonly minds thinking alike), and that the books which don't include dating indications can be dated after those who do. And now, I think my introduction to the prologue has now come to more words than are actually in it, so with no further ado, here it is. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Biblical Prefaces - Vulgate preface to Paul's letters

(Jerome), The Vulgate Preface to Paul's Letters (2006) [Translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb]
BEGINNING OF THE PROLOGUE TO THE LETTERS OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

First is asked, for what reason after the Gospels, which are a supplement of the Law and in which are collected for us examples and precepts of living abundantly, the Apostle wanted to send these letters to individual churches. And it was seen to have been for this reason, that, as is known, he strengthened the firstborn of the Church from new arising heresies, so that he cut off present and arising errors and also afterward excluded future questions by the example of the Prophets, who after the publishing of the Law of Moses, in which were collected all the commandments of God, nevertheless still by its revived teaching the people always restrained (their) sins, and because of the example in the books they indeed also left a memorial for us.

Then is asked, for what reason did he not write more than ten letters to churches. For there are ten with that one which is called "To the Hebrews," for the remaining four are sent particularly to disciples. So that he showed the New not to differ from the Old Testament, and himself not to do (anything) against the Law of Moses, he arranged his letters (according) to the number of the first Ten Words (decalogi) of the commandments, as many precepts as that one ordered those freed from Pharaoh, the same number this one taught those purchased from servitude of the devil and idolatry. And also the most learned men have handed down (the tradition of) the two stone tablets to have been a figure of the two Testaments.

Truly, some have contended the letter which is written to the Hebrews not to be of Paul because it is not titled with his name, and because of the distance of language and style, but rather either of Barnabas according to Tertullian, or of Luke according to some others, or in fact of Clement the disciple of the Apostles and ordained Bishop of the Roman Church after the apostles. To which one should respond: if, accordingly, it cannot be of Paul because it does not have his name, therefore it cannot be of anyone because it is titled with no name. But if that is absurd, it is better to be believing it of him who shines with such eloquence of his teaching. But because among the churches of the Hebrews he was considered, with a false suspicion, as a destroyer of the Law, he was willing, with name unspoken, to render account of the figures of the Law and the truth of Christ, so hatred of (his) boldly displayed name would not exclude the usefulness of the reading. It is truly not a wonder, if he is seen more eloquent in his own (language), that is in Hebrew, rather than in a foreign one, that is in Greek, in which language the other letters are written.

It certainly disturbs some that for some reason the letter to the Romans is placed first, when reason reveals it not written first. For this is shown by him to have written travelling to Jerusalem, when he was exhorting the Corinthians and others before now by letters, as they collected the ministry which was carried with him. For which reason some want all the epistles to be understood arranged thus: that the first is set down which was sent later, (and) that through each letter by steps he came to the more perfect. For the majority of the Romans were so ignorant, that they did not understand themselves to be saved by the grace of God and not by their merits, and on account of this duo, the people struggled among themselves. Therefore, he asserted them to need to be strengthened, recalling the former vices of the gentiles (lit. "of gentileness"; gentilitatis). And now he says the gift of knowledge to be granted to the Corinthians, for he does not so much rebuke all, as he censures how they did not rebuke the sinners, as he says, "It is heard that there is fornication among you," and again, "You are gathered together with my spirit to deliver such a one to Satan." In the second (letter) they are truly praised and are admonished to advance more and more. Now the Galatians show no other crimes except they had most fervently believed in false apostles. The Ephesians are truly worthy of no rebuke but much praise, because they kept the Apostolic Faith. And the Philippians are much more greatly praised, who were not willing even to hear false apostles. And the Colossians were of such a kind that, when they had not been bodily seen by the Apostle, they were considered worthy of this praise: "And if in the body I am absent, I am with you in the Spirit, rejoicing and seeing your order." The Thessalonians were yet honored with all praise, to the extent that not only did they keep the unshaken faith of the Truth, but were indeed found standing together in the persecution of members. Truly something must be said of the Hebrews, of whom the Thessalonians, who are so highly praised, are said to have been imitators, as he says: "And you, brothers, have become imitators of the churches of God which are in Judea, for you have also suffered the same from your own countrymen as they have from the Judeans." Among them he also recalls the same Hebrews, saying, "For you both had compassion for the prisoners and you also received with joy the plundering of your goods, knowing yourselves to have a greater and lasting substance."

END OF THE PROLOGUE This text was translated by Kevin P. Edgecomb, Berkeley, California, 2006, published here and released by him into the public domain. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely. Greek text is rendered using unicode.

Kevin introduces his translation as follows:

I have a few articles to look up regarding the authorship of this letter, so I'll end up posting more on that at a later date. Essentially, there are three contenders: St Jerome, the British heretic Pelagius, and some unknown author. Since patristic scholarship in the early part of the twentieth century had an unfortunate tendency to pin the names of heretics to many various works not otherwise demonstrably theirs or even heretical, I don't, at this point, consider Pelagius a likely candidate, but rather a faddish suggestion given rather too much attention. These days some idiot would likely suggest St Mary Magdalene. Also, having just worked through seventeen authentic prologues of St Jerome, it is definite that this prologue to Paul's letters are from someone else, judging by the style and even the vocabulary. It's not as rambling as St Jerome's own letters, which are constructed in a much more oral manner (likely because he was actually simply dictating to a scribe most of the time), and certain words of the vocabulary require meanings that are later than the more classical, antiquarian usage of St Jerome. So I opt for an unknown author. Nevertheless, it is a very interesting preface, especially his description of why the letters of Paul are arranged as they are: they are addressed to progressively more accomplished Christians, and apparently in reverse chronological order. How interesting!

I hope everyone has enjoyed my translation of these Vulgate prefaces. I certainly enjoyed the discovery involved in learning what they say, having not read most of them before, and the definite education in Latin they provide. I hope they're found to be useful. This is the last preface included in Weber's Biblia Sacra Vulgata, Fourth Edition, which means this first stage of my translation of the Vulgate Prefaces is done with this. Now that I have them all finished in a first draft, I'll be editing them for consistency, style, etc, and post them all on a single web page. So if anyone wants to use them in a convenient form, with notes and such things, just wait about a week or so. In the meantime, I'll post links to the blog posts with all the prefaces, which I'm rather surprised to have finished in only three weeks, even with some breaks. Enjoy!

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Chronicle - Latin text of pages 188-332

Jerome, Chronicle (2005) pp.188-332

[188/189] Persarum Initium Consulum Romanorum Macedonum BC

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC

2 a Armodius et Aristogiton Hipparchum tyrannum interfecerunt, et Leaena meretrix amica eorum, cum tormentis cogeretur, ut socios proderet linguam suam mordicus amputavit. 28

34

520 LXVIII Olympias a XVII mare obtinuerunt Aeginetae, annis XX, usque ad transitum Xerxis.

3

29

35

519

14

46

508

1510

15

47

507

16 b Valerius Bruti consulis collega adeo pauper mortuus est, ut sumptu publico sepeliretur. *

48

506

4 30

36

518

17

49

505

1500

5

31

37

517

LXIX

Olympias

LXVI

Olympias

18 c Censu Romae agitato, inventa sunt hominum CXX millia.

50

504

6 b Templum Jerosolymis consummatur, prophetantibus apud Judaeos Aggaeo et Zacharia. 32

38

516 Macedonum X, ALEXANDER, annis XLIII

7 33

39

515 d Nono anno post exactos reges nova dignitas est creata, dictatura scilicet, et magister equitum, qui dictatori obsequeretur. Dictator primus Largius, magister equitum Spurius Cassius fuit. (*)

8

34

40

514

9 35

41

513

LXVII

Olympias

~~~~~

19

1

503

10 c Pulsis ab Urbe regibus, vix usque ad XV lapidem Roma tenebat imperium. Romanorum reges VII a Romulo usque ad Tarquinium Superbum imperaverunt annis CCXL, sive, ut quibusdam placet, CCXLIII. (*)

42

512

20

2

502

21

3

501 11

43

511

LXX

Olympias

e Hellanicus historiographus, et Democritus philosophus, et Heraclitus cognomento Tenebrosus, et Anaxagoras physicus clari habentur.

22

4

500

23

5

499

24

6

498

12

44

510

1520

25 f Pythagoras philosophus moritur.

7

497

d Romae post exactos Reges primum consules duo a Bruto esse coeperunt; deinde tribuni plebis ac dictatores, et rursum consules rempublicam obtinuerunt per annos ferme CDLXIV usque ad Iulium Caesarem, qui primus singulare arripuit imperium olympiade CLXXXIII.

LXXI

Olympias

g Volsci Coriolos perdiderunt. *

26 h Aeschylus tragoediarum scriptor agnoscitur.

8

496

13

45

509

27 i Latini contra Romanos rebellarunt.

9

495

28 l Romae populus a patribus facta seditione discessit.

10

494

[190/191]

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC

29 a Marcius, qui Coriolos ceperat, interventu matris Veturiae et uxoris Volumniae ab oppugnatione Urbis removit exercitum. *

11

493

3 a Choerilus et Phrynicus illustres habentur.

21

483 b Diagoras agnoscitur, et sectatores ejus physici philosophi.

4

22

482

LXXII

Olympias

5 c Xerxes cum Athenas venisset, incendit urbem sub principe Callia.

23

481

30 b Bellum quod in Marathone gestum est, et ea quae de Miltiade scribuntur et Aristide, qui cognominabatur Justus.

12

492

31

13

491

LXXV

Olympias

32

14

490

6 d Bellum quod in Thermopylis gestum est. Apud Salaminam navale certamen.

24

480

33 c Panyasis poeta habetur illustris.

15

489 d Trecenti nobiles Fabiae familiae a Veientibus caesi. *

7 e Athenienses Piraeum muro vallant.

25

479 e Cum in Algido monte Romani milites obsiderentur, a dictatore Quintio Cincinnato liberati sunt. *

8 f Hieron Syracusis regnat.

26

478

1540

9 g Aeschylus tragoediarum scriptor agnoscitur.

27

477

LXXVI

Olympias

10 h Bellum quod in Plateis, et in Mycale.

28

476

LXXIII

Olympias

11 i Hieron post Gelonem Syracusis tyrannidem exercet.

29

475

34 f Aegyptus recessit a Dario.

16

488

12

30

474

1530

35 g Gelo obtinuit Syracusas.

17

487

13 k Pindarus [musicus] clarus habetur.

31

473

36 h Pindarus et Simonides lyrici poetae insignes habentur.

486

LXXVII

Olympias

14 l Themistocles in Persas fugit.

32 n Principium LXXI Jubilaei secundum Hebraeos. 472 i Romae virgo Vestalis Pompilia deprehensa in stupro, viva defossa est.

18

15 m Sophocles tragoediarum scriptor primum ingenii sui opera publicavit.

33 471 Persarum V, XERXES, filius Darii, annis XX.

1

19

485

16 o Romae virgo Vestalis Sunia deprehensa in stupro, viva defossa est.

34 470 LXXIV Olympias k Xerxes Aegyptum capit.

2 l Aristides cum ignominia ejicitur.

20

484

17 p Sophocles et Euripides clari habentur. 35

469

[192/193]

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC LXXVIII Olympias et ea deinceps consecuta, quae ab his gesta referuntur. a Herodotus historiarum scriptor agnoscitur.

3 a Sicilia a populo regebatur.

42

462

18 b Bacchylides et Diagoras Athenis plurimo sermone celebrantur.

36

468

4 b Cimon juxta Eurimedontem Persas navali pedestrique certamine superrat: et Medicum bellum conquiescit.

43

461

1550

19 c Zeuxis pictor agnoscitur, ex cujus alii imaginibus, quas plurimas invitatus fecerat, 'Lavacrum Byzantinorum' appellatum arbitrantur. *

37

467 Of the Macedonum, Perdiccas, for 28 years. c Solis facta defectio.

LXXX Olympias d Themistocles, hausto tauri sanguine, moritur.

5 d Anaxagoras moritur.

1

460 e Heraclitus clarus habetur.

20 e Socrates nascitur.

38

466 f Evenus poeta clarus habetur. important. f Lapis in Aegon fluvium de coelo ruit. g Ezras sacerdos apud Hebraeos insignis agnoscitur, cujus aetate Pontifex Maximus habitus est Heliasib, filius Joachim, filii Jesu, filii Josedech. Fuit autem Ezras eruditissimus Legis divinae, et clarus omnium Judaeorum magister, qui de Captivitate regressi fuerant in Judaeam..

Persarum VI, ARTABANUS, menses VII, [qui menses in ordine annus reputantur]. Post quem ARTAXERXES VII, qui Longimanus cognominabatur, annis XL.

6

2

459

39

465

7

3

458

1560

8

4

457 LXXXI Olympias h Empedocles et Parmenides physici philosophi notissimi habentur.

LXXIX

Olympias

g Ea quae de Hester, et Mardochoaeo scripta sunt: quidam affirmant sub hoc rege gesta, quod ego non puto; numquam enim Ezras de Hester siluisset, qui scribit hoc tempore Ezram et Neemiam reversos ex Babylone,

9

5

456

1

40

464 i Zeno et Heraclitus Tenebrosus agnoscitur.

10 k Pherecydes secundus historiarum scriptor agnoscitur.

6

455

2

41

463

11 l Cratinus et Plato comoediarum scriptores 7

454

[194/195]

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC clari habentur.

1570

18 sibi domino suo, XX ejus anno de Babylone venit in Judaeam, et XXXII anno muros, urbemque restituit. Scribit Ezras opus fuisse completum sub pontifice Joade filio Joasib, cui successit Joannes filius suus, qui temporibus Alexandri Macedonis fuit, opus fuisse completum.

14

447 a Aristarchus tragoediographus agnoscitur. b Romae clarior Agon centenarius primus actus.

12 c CCCII anno ab Urbe condita Decemviri creati, et post annum ejecti sunt propter Appium Claudium, qui Virginii cujusdam filiam contra Latinos in Algido militantis voluit abducere. *

8

453

19 a Huc usque Hebraeorum divinae Scripturae annales temporum continent: ea vero quae post haec apud eos gesta sunt, exhibemus de libro Machabaeorum, et Josephi, et Africani scriptis, qui deinceps universam historiam usque ad Romana tempora persecuti sunt.

15

446

LXXXII

Olympias

13 d Romani per legatos ab Atheniensibus jura petierunt, ex quibus duodecim tabulae conscriptae.

9

452

20 b Athenienses et Lacedaemonii foedus XXX annorum ineunt.

16

445

14 e Crates Comicus, et Telesilla ac Bacchylides Lyricus, clari habentur: Praxilla quoque et Cleobulina sunt celebres.

10

451 c Herodotus cum Athenis libros suos in concilio legisset, honoratus est.

LXXXIV

Olympias

15 f Templum Junonis, quod Argis fuerat, incensum.

11

450

21 d Melissus physicus agnoscitur.

17

444

22 e Euripides tragoediarum scriptor clarus habetur, et Protagoras sophista, cujus libros decreto publico Athenienses combusserunt.

18

443

16 g Abaris Hyperboreanus Ariolus agnoscitur.

12

449

23

19

442 LXXXIII Olympias h Tribuni plebis et Aediles Romae facti, Consulibus ejectis.

24

20

441

LXXXV

Olympias

17 i Neemias Hebraeus, minister vinarius Artaxerxis regis, concedente

13

448

25 f Romae rursus Consules creati.

21

440

26 g Phidias eburneam Minervam facit.

22

439

[196/197]

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC a Fidennates contra Romanos rebellant. *

35 a Athenienses pestilentia laborant.

3

430

27 b Theaetetus mathematicus agnoscitur. Aristophanes clarus habetur, et Sophocles poeta tragicus.

23

438 bThucydides agnoscitur.

1580

28

24

437

36 c Pericles moritur.

4

429

LXXXVI Olympias LXXXVIII Olympias c Gens Campanorum in Italia constituta.

37 d Eupolis et Aristophanes scriptores comoediarum agnoscuntur.

5

428

29 d Democritus Abderites, et Empedocles, et Hippocrates medicus, Gorgias, Hippiasque, et Prodicus, et Zeno, et Parmenides philosophi insignes habentur.

25

436

30

26

435

1590

38

6

427

31

27

434

39 e Ex Aetna monte ignis erupit.

7

426

32

28

433 e Socrates, qui scholam congregavit, plurimo sermone celebratur. f Terraemotu apud Locros, scissa Atalante, civitas facta est insula. f Neemiam, qui muros Jerusalem construxit, consummasse opus XXXII anno Artaxerxis regis Persarum, Ezras memorat. Si quis ab hoc tempore LXX hebdomadas a Daniele scriptas numeret, quae faciunt annos CDXC, reperiet eas in regno Neronis expletas, sub quo obsideri Jerusalem coepta, secundo postea Vespasiani anno capitur.

40 g Plato nascitur.

8

425

LXXXIX

Olympias

Persarum VIII, secundus XERXES, menses II. Post quem IX SOGDIANUS, menses VII. Cui succedit X DARIUS, cognomento Nothus, annis XIX.

Macedonum XII, ARCHELAUS annis XXIV.

1 h Lacedaemonii et Athenienses foedus percutiunt.

9

424 LXXXVII Olympias

2 i Eudoxus Cnidius clarus habetur.

10

423

33 g Initium belli Peloponnesiaci.

1

432

3 k Lacedaemonii ver sacrum Heracleam destinantes urbem condunt. (*)

11

422 h Bacchylides carminum scriptor agnoscitur.

4

12

421

34

2

431

XC

Olympias

[198/199]

Persarum

Consulum Macedonum Aegyptiorum BC

Persarum

Consulum Macedonum Aegyptiorum

BC

5

13

1

420

Darii et Parysatidis filius, annis XL.

a Sub hoc rege mihi videtur historia, quae in Hester libro continetur, expleta: ipse quippe est, qui ab Hebraeis Assuerus, et a LXX Interpretibus Artaxerxes vocatur.

6

14

419

7

15

418

1

1

3

405

1600

8

16

417

XCIV

Olympias

XCI Olympias Aegyptus a Persis recessit, et regnavit AMARTHEUS, Saites annis VI.

9 a Clades quae Atheniensibus accidit in Sicilia. 17 416

2

2

4

404

10

18

415

3

3

5

403

11

19

414

4

4

6

402

12 b Alcibiades profugus abiit ad Tisaphernem. 20

1

413 b Dionysius Syracusis tyrannidem exercet.

Macedonum XIV, AMYNTAS, anno I.

Post quem ACHORIS, annis XII.

XCII

Olympias

13 c Euboea ab Atheniensium societate discedit. 21

2

412 c Athenienses sustinent tyrannidem.

14

22

3

411

15

23

4

410

5 d Isocrates rhetor agnoscitur. 1

1

401

16

24

5

409 Post quem PAUSANIAS, anno I.

XCIII Olympias Macedonum, ORESTES annis III. 2 e XXIX dynastia Aegypti Mendesiorum.

17 d Euripides apud Archelaum, et Sophocles Athenis moritur. 1

6

408 f Democritus moritur.

XXVIII Aegypti dynastia. NEPHERITES, annis VI. g Alcibiadem Pharnabazus interficit.

1610

18

2

1

407 h Cyri regis ascensus, de quo scribit Xenophon.

19

3

2

406

XCV Olympias Persarum XI, ARTAXERXES, qui cognominatus est Mnemon, e Dionysius in Sicilia tyrannidem exercet.

1Macedonum XIII, ARCHELAUS, annis IV.

6 i Tyranni Athenis oppressi. 1

2

400 k Athenienses XXIV litteris uti coeperunt, cum antea XVI tantum litteras haberent.

1. At this point, in mid-page in 'O', the column of Macedonian regnal years which is black up to this point suddenly turns red. This is clear evidence that the scribe copied the colours from his exemplar, and did not amend them. It also shows that the exemplar did indeed have 26 lines, because the colour change occurs at the page-break (as here) in such an exemplar, rather than in mid-page, as in 'O'.

2. This entry should be red, but is in fact black in 'O'.

[200/201]

Persarum

Consulum Macedonum Aegyptiorum BC

Persarum

Consulum Macedonum Aegyptiorum

BC a Xenophon filius Grylli, et Ctesias clari habentur.

Post quem, AMYNTAS, annis VI.

NECTANEBUS, annis XVIII.

7 b Socrates venenum bibit.

1

3

399

1630

19 a Evagoras in furorem versus cum regnaret Cypri. 1 5

1

387

8 c Templum rursus Ephesi incensum. 2

4

398

20

6

2

386

1620

9 d Socratici clari habentur. 3

5

397

21

7

3

385

XCVI

Olympias

XCIX

Olympias

10 e Diogenes Cynicus agnoscitur. 4

6

396

22 b XXX dynastia Aegypti, Sebennytarum. 8

4

384

11 f Speusippus insignis habetur. 5

7

395

23

9

5

383

12

6

8

394

24

10

6

382 g Dionysius in tyrannide perseverat. Post quem, ARGEUS, annis II.

25

11

7

381

C

Olympias

13 h Carthaginensium bellum famosum. 1

9

393

26 c Magno terrae motu Helice et Bura Peloponnesi urbes absorptae sunt. 12

8

380

XCVII

Olympias

27

13

9

379

14 i Eudoxus astrologus agnoscitur. 2

10

392

28

14

10

378 Post quem rursum AMYNTAS, annis XVIII.

1                      11

1640

29 d Praenestini a Romanis victi apud flumen Alliam per Quinctium Cincinnatum. (*) 15

11

377

15 k Galli Senones Romam invaserunt, excepto Capitolio. (*)

391

16

2 12

390 Aegypti PSAMUTHES, anno I. e Athenienses principes Graeciae facti.

CI

Olympias

17

3

1

389

30 f Isocrates rhetor agnoscitur. 16

12

376 XCVIII Olympias I Plato philosophus agnoscitur.

Post quem NEPHERITES, menses IV.

31

17

13

375

32 g Plato et Xenophon, necnon et alii Socratici clari habentur. 18

14

374

18 m Tribuni militares pro consulibus esse coeperunt. * 4

1

388 Macedonum ALEXANDER, anno I.

Post quem,

33

1 15

373 (1) Diodorus 14.110.5.

[202/203]

Persarum

Consulum Macedonum Aegyptiorum BC

Persarum

Consulum Macedonum Aegyptiorum regnum destructum est.

BC

CII Olympias Post quem PTOLEMAEUS ALORITES, annis IV.

Post quem Macedonum, PHILIPPUS, annis XXVII.

4

1

6

362

34

1 16

372

5

2

7

361

35

2

17

371

CV

Olympias

36

3

18

370

6 a Demosthenes orator agnoscitur. 3

8

360 Aegypti THEO, annis II.

7 b Ochus Apodasmo Judaeorum capta, in Hyrcaniam accolas translato juxta mare Caspium collocavit. 4

9

359 a Theo rex Aegypti fugit in Arabiam.

8

5

10

358

37

4

1

369

1660

9

6

11

357

CIII Olympias Post quem PERDICCA, annis VI.

CVI

Olympias

10 c Dionysius Sicilia pellitur. 7

12

356

38 b Dionysius rex Siciliae 19 anno moritur, post quem junior Dionysius regnum invadit. 1

2

368

11 d Alexander Philippi et Olympiadis filius nascitur. 8

13

355 XXX dynastia Aegyptiorum, NECTANEBO, annis XVIII.

12 e Dion Syracusis interimitur. 9

14

354

13 f Hipparinus Dionysii filius Syracusis tyrannidem exercet. 10

15

353

CVII

Olympias

1650

39 c Aristoteles XVIII aetatis gerens annum, Platonis auditor est. 2

1

367

14 g Erinna poetria agnoscitur. 11

16

352

40

3

2

366

15 h Ochus Aegyptum tenuit, Nectanebo in Aethiopiam pulso, in quo Aegyptiorum regnum destructum est. 12

17

351 Persarum XII, ARTAXERXES, qui et OCHUS, annis XXVI

16

13

18

350

17

14

@@@@@

349

1

4

3

365

CVIII Olympias CIV Olympias d Alexander Pheraeus agnoscitur.

18 i huc usque Manethos: Ochus Sidonem subvertit, et Aegyptum suo junxit imperio. 15

2

5

4

364

1670

19

16

3 e Camillus Gallos, qui bellum Romanis intulerant, superat. 6

5

363 k Demosthenes Orator

[204/205]

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC

Persarum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC omnium rumore [fama] celebratur.

Post quem DARIUS, XIV, Arsami filius, annis VI. a Manasses frater Jaddi pontificis Judaeorum templum in montem Garizin construit.

20 a Romani Gallos superant.

17

346

21 b Dionysius Corinthum sub foedere navigavit.

18

345

1 b Alexander adversus Illyricos et Thracas feliciter dimicans, subversis Thebis, in Persas arma corripuit, et apud Granicum flumen, regiis ducibus oppressis, urbem Sardeis capit.

2

335 c Plato moritur, post quem Academiam Speusippus tenuit.

2

3

334

3

4

333

CIX

Olympias

d Romani cum Samnites duobus proeliis cecidissent, universos confines, quia a sua societate discesserant, in ditionem propriam redigunt.

22

19

344

23

20

343 c Romanorum consul Manlius Torquatus filium suum, quod contra imperium in hostem pugnaverat, virgis caesum securi percussit. (*)

24

21

342

25 e Dionysius Corintho expulsus.

22

341 CX Olympias f Descriptione Romae facta, inventa sunt civium CLX millia.

26

23

340

CXII Olympias Persarum XIII, ARSES , Ochi filius, annis IV. g Judaeorum pontifex maximus Jaddus clarus habetur.

4 d Alexander, capta Tyro, Judaeam invadit, a qua favorabiliter exceptus, Deo victimas immolat, et pontificem templi honoribus plurimis prosequitur, Andromacho locorum custode dimisso, quem postea Samaritani interficiunt: ob quae ab Aegypto reversus Alexander Magnus magnis eos suppliciis adfecit, et urbem eorum captam Macedonibus ad inhabitandum tradit. (*)

5

332

1 h Speusippus moritur, cui successit Xenocrates.

24

339

2

25

338

1680

3

26

337

5

6

331

CXI Olympias Macedon. XXIV, ALEXANDER, Philippi filius, annis XII, menses VI.

6 e Alexandria in Aegypto condita, septimo anno regni Alexandri: quo tempore etiam Latini a Romanis perdomiti sunt.

7

330

4

1

336

[206/207] Regnum Persarum destructum est

Consulum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum

Macedonum

BC a Alexander obtinuit Babylonem, interfecto Dario, in quo Persarum regnum destructum est.

Aegypto primus regnavit PTOLEMAEUS, Lagi filius, annis XL.

Macedonibus regnavit PHILIPPUS, qui et Aridaeus, frater Alexandri, annis VII.

Alexander regnum Asiae anno regni sui VII occupat, et tenet omnia annis XII. a Appius Claudius Caecus Romae clarus habetur, qui aquam Claudiam induxit, et viam Appiam stravit. * Of Alexander

1 b Lydiam, et Thraciam, et Hellespontum Lysimachus tenuit.

1

324

8 b Anaximenes, et Epicurus clari habentur.

329 c Macedonum duces in seditionem versi. c Alexander Hyrcanos et Mardos capit, revertensque in Ammone condidit Paraetonium.

2 d Agathocles Syracusis tyrannidem exercet.

2

323

CXIII Olympias e Lamiacum bellum motum.

9 d Alexander Aornim petram capit, et Indum amnem transgreditur.

328 f Perdicca adversus Aegyptios dimicat.

3 g Ptolemaeus Lagi filius Jerosolymis et Judaea in dicionem suam dolo redactis, plurimos captivorum in Aegyptum transtulit.

3

322

1690

10 e Bellum Alexandri in India adversum Porum, et Taxillen.

327

11 f Harpalus fugit in Atticam. h Judaeorum pontifex maximus Onias Jaddi filius clarus habetur.

12 g Romani Samnites subigunt, et colonias deducunt.

326

4 i Menander primam fabulam cognomento Οργην 1 docens, superat.

4

321

CXIV Olympias h Alexander XXXII aetatis suae anno moritur in Babylone, post quem translato in multos imperio. k Theophrastus philosophus agnoscitur, qui a divinitate loquendi, ut ait Cicero, nomen accepit. (*) (1) ΟΡΓΗΝ = 'anger'.

[208/209]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae Macedonum Primus Asiae BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae Macedonum Asiae

BC

CXV

Olympias

16 a Theodorus Atheus agnoscitur.

4

9

10

309

5 a Demetrius Phalereus habetur illustris.

5

320

CXVIII

Olympias

17 b Demetrius Phalereus ad Ptolemaeum veniens impetravit, ut Atheniensibus democratia redderetur.

5

10

11

308 b Romani Samnites diutissime contra proeliantes, ad extremum in servitutem redigunt.

Asiae regnat ANTIGONUS, annis XVIII.

1710

18

6

11

12

307

6

6

319

19

7 12

13

306

7

7

1

318

20

8

13

14

305 Macedonum CASSANDER, annis XIX.

CXIX

Olympias

21 c Seleucus Antiochiam, Laodiciam, Seleucim, Apamiam, Edessam, Beroeam, et Pellam urbes condidit, quarum Antiochiam XII anno regni sui extruxit. .

9

14

15

304

1700

8

1

2

317

CXVI

Olympias

22

10

15

16

303

9 c Menedemus et Speusippus philosophi insignes habentur.

2

3

316

10

3

4

315

23

11

16

17

302

11

4

5

314

24 12

17

18

301

12

5

6

313 d Seleucus Babyloniam obtinuit.

CXVII

Olympias

CXX Olympias Asiae DEMETRIUS, qui et Poliorcetes, annis XVII d Machabaeorum Hebraea historia hinc Graecorum supputat regnum. Verum hi libri inter divinas Scripturas non recipiuntur.

Syriae et Babyloniae, et superiorum locorum, regnavit SELEUCUS NICANOR, annis XXXII. e Judaeorum pontifex maximus Simon Oniae filius clarus habetur, cui cognomentum Justo fuit propter sollicitam in Deum religionem, et in cives suos pronam clementiam.

25

13

18

1

302

26

14

19

2

303 Macedonum filii Cassandri, annis IV, ANTIGONUS et ALEXANDER.

13 e Romani Marsos, a Umbros, et Pelignos superant.

1

6

7

312

27

15

1

3

302 Ab hoc loco Edesseni sua tempora computant. 14 f Romani colonias deducunt.

2

7

8

311

1720

28

16

2

4

301 g Lysimachia in Thracia condita.

CXXI

Olympias

15 h Cyprum Ptolemaeus invasit.

3

8

9

310

29 f Demetrius rex Asiae,

17

3

5

300

[210/211]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae Macedonum Asiae BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae Macedonum Asiae

BC

30 cognomento Poliorcetes, Samaritanorum urbem vastat, quam Perdicca construxerat.

18

4

6

295 Syriae et Asiae pariter imperavit.

DEMETRIUS, annis VI.

39 a Serapis ingressus est Alexandriam.

27

2

15

286 a Censu Romae agitato, inventa sunt civium Romanorum CCLXX millia.

31

19

1

7

294

40 b Conditae a Romanis Ariminum et Beneventum. *

28

3

16

285

CXXIV

Olympias

32 b Legati Alexandrini a Ptolemaeo primum Romam missi amicitias impetraverunt. *

20

2

8

293 Aegypti II, PTOLEMAEUS Philadelphus, annis XXXVIII

1 c Sostratus Gnidius Pharum in Alexandria construxit.

29

4

17

284

CXXII

Olympias

Demetrius

semetipsum Seleuco tradidit.

33 c Menander comicus moritur. 21

3

9

292 d Antigonus cognomento Gonatas Lacedaemonem obtinuit. d TRomani Gallos, Tyrrhenosque superant: et Sabinorum terra sorte dividitur. e Romani Crotonem capiunt.

34

22

4

10

291

2 f Ptolemaeus Philadelphus Judaeos, qui in Aegypto erant, liberos esse permisit: et, vasa Eleazaro Pontifici Jerosolymarum votiva transmittens, divinas Scripturas in Graecam vocem ex Hebraea lingua per LXX Interpretes transferri curavit, quas in Alexandrina bibliotheca habuit, quam sibi ex omni genere litteraturae comparaverat.

30

5

283 e Seleucus in eas urbes, quas exstruxerat, Judaeos transfert, jus eis civium et municipalem ordinem cum Graecis aequali honore concedens.

Macedonum PTOLEMAEUS, cognomento ΚΕΡΑΥΝΟΣ.

1

35

23

5

11

3

31

1

282

36

24

6

12 MELEAGRUS, menses II. ANTIPATER, dies XLV. Post quem SOSTHENES annis II.

CXXIII Olympias Macedonum PYRRHUS, menses VII f Judaeorum pontifex Eleazarus frater Simonis suscepit templi ministerium, filio Simonis Onia parvo admodum derelicto.

37

25

13 Post quem, LYSIMACHUS, annis V. g Seleucus in Cilicia, capto Demetrio

1720

38

26

1

14 1. In 'O' this reads 'Ceraunos' in Roman letters.

[212/213]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Macedonum BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Macedonum

BC

4

22

1

281

1750

18 multaeque urbes in Sicilia eis junctae. 14

13

267 Syriae et Asiae post Seleucum regnavit ANTIOCHUS SOTER, annis XIX.

19 a Romae virgo Vestalis in stupro detecta, laqueo vitam explet. * 15

14

266

CXXV

Olympias

20 16

15

265

5

1

2

280

CXXIX

Olympias

ANTIGONUS GONATAS, annis XXXVI.

21 b Zeno Stoicus moritur, post quem Cleanthes. 17

16

264

6

2

1

279

22 c Romani Syracusas capiunt. 18

17

263

7

3

2

278 d Nicomedes rex Bithyniae urbem ampliandam, Nicomediam nuncupavit.

1740

8

4

3

277

23

19 18

262

CXXVI Olympias Syriae ANTIOCHUS, qui vocabatur Theos, annis XV.

9 a Una virginum Romanarum in corruptione deprehensa percutitur. 5

4

276

24

1

19

261

10 b Milo Romanis Tarentum tradidit. 6

5

275

CXXX

Olympias

11 c Romani Calabriam, Messanamque tenuerunt. 7

6

274

25 e Romani Carthaginenses navali certamine superant, et centum Libyae urbes capiunt. 2

20

260

12

8

7

273

26

3

21

259

CXXVII

Olympias

27

4

22

258

13 d Aratus agnoscitur.

9

8

272

1760

28 f Erasistratus medicus agnoscitur. 5

23

257

14 e Argenteus nummus primum in Urbe figuratus. 10

9

271

CXXXI

Olympias

29 g Antigonus Atheniensibus reddit libertatem. 6

24

256

15 f Polemon philosophus moritur, post quem Arcesilas et Crates clari habentur. 11

10

270

16

12

11

269

30 h Judaeorum pontificatum post Eleazarum avunculus ejus Manasses accepit. 7

25

255

31

8

26

254

32

9

27

253 CXXVIII Olympias g Epicurus moritur.

CXXXII

Olympias

17 h Romani colonias deduxerunt, 13

12

268s

33 i Carthaginenses XC Romanorum naves 10

28

252

[214/215]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syria and Asia Macedonum BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syria and Asia Macedonum

BC

34 in Sicilia capiunt, Metello consule in fugam verso. 11

29

251

6

6

3

241

35

12

30

250

CXXXV

Olympias

36

13

31

249

7 a Quintus Ennius poeta Tarenti nascitur, qui a Catone quaestore Romam translatus, habitavit in monte Aventino, parco admodum sumptu contentus, et unius ancillae ministerio. * 7

4

240 CXXXIII Olympias

37 a Parthis a Macedonum imperio recedentibus, primus regnavit ARSACES, unde Arsacidae dicti. 14

32

248

8

8

5

239

9

9

6

238

1770

38

15

33

247

1780

10

10

7

237 Aegypti III, PTOLEMAEUS EVERGETES, annis XXVI Syriae SELEUCUS CALLINICUS, annis XX.

CXXXVI

Olympias

11 b Virgo Vestalis Romae a servo corrupta, propria manu se interemit. 11

8

236

12 12

9

235

1 b Judaeorum pontifex Onias, Simonis Justi filius, clarus habetur, qui consueta regi Ptolemaeo tributa non reddens, ad iram eum compulit. Verum Josephus, vir inter suos nobilis, legatus a Judaeis ad Ptolemaeum missus, cum familiaritatem regis ob plurima in eum meruisset obsequia, dux Judaeae et regionum finitimarum constituitur. 1

34

246

13

13

10

234 Macedonum ANTIGONUS, annis 15.

14

14

1

233 CXXXVII Olympias

15 c Judaeorum pontifex Simon, Oniae filius, clarus habetur, sub quo Jesus filius Sirach Sapientiae librum componens, quem vocant Panareton, etiam Simonis in eo fecit mentionem.

15

2

232

2

2 35

245

16

16

3

231

CXXXIV

Olympias

17

17

4

230

3

3

36

244

18

18

5

229 CXXXVIII Olympias

Macedonum DEMETRIUS, annis X.

19

19

6

228

1790

20 d XL ferme millia Gallorum a Romanis caesa. 20

7

227 c Censu Romae agitato, inventa sunt hominum CCLX millia.

Syriae, SELEUCUS CERAUNUS, annis III.

4

4

1

243

5 d Romae templum Vestae incensum. 5

2

242

21

1

8

226

[216/217]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syria and Asia Macedonum BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syria and Asia Macedonum

BC

22

2

9

225 CXLII Olympias Syracusas capiunt.

CXXXIX

Olympias

9 a Romani subjugant Capuam et Siciliam. 12

7

212

23

3 10

224

ANTIOCHUS MAGNUS, annis XXXVI

10 b Antiochus rex Syriae, victo Philopatore Ptolemaeo, Judaeam sibi sociat.

13

8

211

11

14

9

210

24 a Caria et Rhodos ita terraemotu concussae sunt, ut Colossus magnus rueret. 1 11

223

12 c Levinus cum rege Asiae Attalo amicitiam facit. * 15

10

209

25

2 12

222

CXLIII

Olympias

26

3

13

221

13 d Judaeorum pontifex maximus Onias, filius Simonis, insignis habetur, ad quem Lacedaemoniorum rex Arrius legatos mittit. 16

11

208

CXL

Olympias

1810

14

17

12

207 Aegypti PTOLEMAEUS PHILOPATOR, annis XVII

15

18

13

206

16

19

14

205

CXLIV

Olympias

1 b Ea quae in tertio Machabaeorum libro scripta sunt, sub hoc Ptolemaeo gesta referuntur.

4

14

220

17 e Scipio Hiberiae multas urbes recipit. 20 15

204

2

5

15

219 Aegypti V, PTOLEMAEUS EPIPHANES, annis XXIV Macedonum PHILIPPUS, annis XLII

3

6

1

218

1 f Ptolemaeus Epiphanes, Scopa principe militiae destinato, Judaeam capit, et plurimas Syriae civitates. 21

16

203

1800

4

7

2

217

CXLI

Olympias

2

22

17

202

5 c Victi Judaei , et LX millia armatorum ex numero eorum caesa sunt. 8

3

216

3 g Naevius comicus Uticae moritur, pulsus Roma, factione nobilium, ac praecipue Metelli. * 23

18

201 d Romae virgines Vestae ob stupri reatum terra obrutae.

6

9

4

215

7

10

5

214

CXLV

Olympias

h Plautus ex Umbria Sarsinas Romae moritur, qui propter annonae difficultatem ad molas manuarias pistori se locaverat;

8 e Eratosthenes philosophus agnoscitur. 11

6

213

4

24

19

200 f Romani, Marcello consule,

[218/219]

Alexandrinorum

Romans Syria and Asia Macedonum BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syria and Asia Macedonum

BC ibi quotiens ab opere vacaret, scribere fabulas, et solitus vendere. * 'dotis' nomine Syriam, Phoenicen, Samariam, Judaeamque concedit.

15

35

30

189 CXLVIII Olympias

5 a Juxta Theram apparuit insula, quae vocatur Hiera. 25

20

199 a Eumenes, frater regis Attali, qui Eumeniam in Phrygia condidit, clarus habetur. *

6

26

21

198

1820

7 b Antiochus, Scopa superato, Syriae urbes recepit, et Judaea ei voluntate conjungitur. 27

22

197

16 b Secundus liber Machabaeorum apud Judaeos hujus temporis gesta continet. 36

31

188 Syriae et Asiae, SELEUCUS qui et PHILOPATOR, annis XII

CXLVI

Olympias

8 c Romani Graecos liberos esse jusserunt: et universa Hiberia imperata fecit. 1 28

23

196 c Titus Livius tragoediarum scriptor clarus habetur, qui ob ingenii meritum a Livio Salinatore, cujus liberos erudiebat, libertate donatus est. 2 *

1830

17

1 32

187

9 d Antiochus Judaeorum erga se cognita voluntate, magnis eos muneribus donat, et per epistolas crebris laudibus prosequitur. 29

24

195

10

30

25

194 d Cum ab Antiocho per legatos Hannibal reposceretur, cui se a Scipione victus sociaverat, ad Prusiam regem Bithyniae transfugit; quem cum rursus per Flaminium etiam ab eo Senatus repeteret, et tradendus esset, venenum bibit, et apud Libyssan Bithyniae sepultus est. *

11

31

26

193

CXLVII

Olympias

18

2

33

186 e Post proelium, quo in Thermopylis est victus Antiochus, hoc inter Romanos et eum convenit, ut mille talenta per annos singulos 'vectigalis' nomine solveret.

12

32

27

192

19

3

34

185

13

33

28

191

XCLIX Olympias f Romani multas colonias deduxerunt.

20 e Simon praepositus templi Jerosolymorum, ad Apollonium Phoenicis ducem confugiens, multis ei muneribus repromissis, sacerdotium sibi vindicare coepit: 4

35

184 g Antiochus in amicitiam Ptolemaei regressus pacem cum eo fecit, et Cleopatra filia sua uxore ei tradita,

14

34

29

190 (1) Hiberia: Only the Roman province of Hispania, as the remainder was still not under Roman control until 29 BC.

(2) cf. The Concise Oxford Companion to Classical Literature entry for "Livius Andronicus" who is here intended; the facts are disputed, see the Loeb Remains of Old Latin II p.viii ff. Titus is the name of Livius historicus not of the Lucius Livius Andronicus, writer of tragedy and epic here referred to.

[220/221]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Macedonum BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Macedonum

BC

21 quo Seleucus audito, Heliodorum mittit ad negotium providendum: qui cum Judaeam venisset, inique judicans, et multa perperam gerens, divinis adversus se signis deterretur, et ad Seleucum revertitur. Onias autem sacerdos curaverat, ut Simon profugus fieret. 5

36

183

CLI

Olympias

4 a Aristobulus, natione Judaeus, Peripateticus philosophus agnoscitur, qui ad Philometorem Ptolemaeum explanationum in Mosen Commentarios scribit.

12

1

176 Syriae et Asiae, ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES, annis XI.

22

6

37

182

5

1

2

175

6

2

3

174

23 a Hyrcanus Josephi ducis Judaeae filius, cum ad Ptolemaeum perrexisset, honorifice ab eo susceptus est. Verum fratres ejus seditione contra eum mota, magnarum calamitatum Judaeae genti causa exstiterunt. 7

38

181

7

3

4

173

CLII

Olympias

8 b Antiochus Epiphanes cum de regione Ptolemaeorum, quam subito invaserat, Senatus praecepto recessisset, [in] Judaeam venit, ibique Jesu, cui et Jason, fratri Oniae pontificatum tradidit; quo deinde expulso, Oniam cognomento Menelaum successorem ei dedit. Itaque ob sacerdotii dignitatem orta seditione inter principes, ingentium miseriarum semina pullulaverunt. 4

5

172

9

5

6

171

CL

Olympias

24

8

39

180

10

6

7

170 Aegypti VI, PTOLEMAEUS PHILOMETOR, annis XXXV

11

7

8

169

1 b Statius Caecilius comoediarum scriptor clarus habetur: natione Insuber Gallus et Ennii primum contubernalis: quidam Mediolanensem ferunt. Mortuus est anno post mortem Ennii, et juxta Janiculum sepultus. * 9

40

179

CLIII

Olympias

2

10

41

178 c Antiochus Judaeorum legem impugnat, primum quidem omnem eorum provinciam ad idololatriam compellens, qui parere noluerunt, eneca.

1840

3

11

42

177 Macedonum PERSES, annis X.

[222/223]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Macedonum BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judae-orum

BC postea vero Jerosolymam ascendens, templum et vasa Dei quae ministerio fuerant consecrata, vastat: in templo, Jovis Olympii simulacrum ponit, in Samaria super verticem montis Garizi Jovis Peregrini delubrum aedificat, ipsis Samaritanis ut id faceret precantibus. Verum hoc in tempore Matthathias quidam ex sacerdotibus, filius Asamonaei, vico Modeim, adversum Antiochi duces arma corripiens, fultus etiam auxilio filiorum, leges patrias vindicavit olympiade CLIII.

CLIV Olympias Syriae et Asiae, ANTIOCHUS EUPATOR, annis II. a Judaeorum dux Judas, qui et Machabaeus, filius Matthathiae, Antiochi duces de Judaea expellens, et templum ab idolorum imaginibus emundans, patrias leges post triennium suis civibus reddidit olympiade CLIV.

16

1

164

17

2

163 DEMETRIUS SOTER, annis XII.

18

1

162

19

2

161

CLV Olympias Judaeorum dux, JUDAS [MACHABAEUS], annis III. b Menelao pontifice Judaeorum a juniore Antiocho occiso, qui prius Judaeam Epiphani Antiocho prodiderat, Alcimus alienus a genere sacerdotali, ambitione pontificatum invadit. Ob quod Onias filius pontificis Oniae Aegyptum transmigrans, in Heliopolitano pago civitatem nominis sui condidit, templo ad similitudinem templi patrii constructo. Alcimus vero adversus Judam Machabaeum inimicitias gerens, post non multum temporis, Dei ira percussus interiit; ac sic cum omnium Judaeorum favore, Judae Machabaeo sacerdotium decernitur, qui dignitate suscepta, legatos Romam dirigit; decrevitque senatus Judaeos amicos et auxilio Romanorum habendos.

12 a Ennius poeta septuagenario major articulari morbo perit, sepultusque est in Scipionis monumento via Appia intra primum ab Urbe milliarium. Quidam ossa ejus Rudiam ex Janiculo translata adfirmant. * 8

9

168

20

3

1

160

1850

13

9

10

167

14

10

11

166

15 b Romani, interfecto Perse, Macedonas, Illyricos, et Galatas liberos esse jusserunt. 11

12

165

21

4

2

159 Macedonum regnum defecit.

~~~~~

[224/225]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judae-orum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judae-orum

BC

CLVII

Olympias

28 a Pseudophilippus regnat in Macedonia anno l. 11

6

152

22 a Publius Terentius Carthaginensis comoediarum scriptor, ob ingenium et formam libertate donatus, in Arcadia moritur, qui primam Andriam, antequam aedilibus venderet, Caecilio multum se mirari legit. * 5

3

158

29 b Alexander Antiochi, qui Epiphanes cognominatus est, filius, Syriae et Asiae imperans, Jonathan corona et multis insignibus donis prosequitur. 12

7

151 Judaeorum dux, JONATHAS, annis XIX Syriae et Asiae, ALEXANDER, annis IX, menses X
1860

23 b Judas adversum Demetrii duces inito proelio occiditur, tribus annis pontificatu gesto. 6

1

157

30 c Romani, interfecto Pseudophilippo, Macedonas tributarios faciunt. 1

8

150

31

2

9

149

CLVI

Olympias

CLVIII

Olympias

24 c Aristarchus grammaticus agnoscitur. 7

2

156

32 d Samaritani et Judaei Alexandriae Ptolemaeo judicante contendunt de honoribus ex utraque parte templo suo deferendis, et superant Judaei. 3

10

148

25 d Dux Judaeorum Jonathas frater Judae, Bacchide duce Demetrii Judaea expulso, pontificatum suscepit. * 8

3

155 e Lucilius poeta nascitur. *

26 e Pacuvius Brundusinus tragoediarum scriptor clarus habetur, Ennii poetae ex filia nepos, vixitque Romae quoad picturam exercuit, ac fabulas venditavit: deinde Tarentum transgressus, prope nonagenarius diem obiit.1 9

4

154

1870

33 f Descriptione Romae facta, inventa sunt hominum CCCXXII millia. 4

11

147

34 g Oppius Gallos capit: et Carthago in ditionem Romanorum per Scipionem redigitur, habens a conditione sui annos DCLXVIII; ut vero alii affirmant, DCCXLVIII 5

12

146

27

10

5

153

35

6

13

145

(1) The "Remains of Old Latin," vol. II (Loeb Library, 1982), says that Pacuvius was

"[p. xvii] a son of the sister of the poet | [p. xviii] Ennius," with footnote e, attached to the word "sister," saying "So Pliny, XXXV, 19; son of Ennius's daughter, says Jerome wrongly" (p. xvii). Later, the text says:

"His year of fame is stated by Jerome to have been 154 B.C." with footnote d, "Jerome, ad ann. 600 = 154" (p. xviii).

[226/227]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judae-orum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judaeorum

BC a quo fundus Accianus juxta Pisaurum dicitur: quia illuc inter Colonos fuerat ex Urbe deductus.
*

CLIX Olympias Aegypti VII, PTOLEMAEUS EUERGETES, annis XXIX.

7 a Trypho Syriae regnum conatus invadere, Antiocho filio Alexandri interfecto ad extremum et ipse super moritur. 3

1

138 Post quem ANTIOCHUS SIDETES, annis IX.

1 a Jonathas dux Judaeorum pariter et pontifex cum Romanis et Spartiatibus amicitias facit. 7

14

144

1880

8 b Post Demetrium regnavit universae Syriae frater ejus Antiochus, qui cognominatus est Sidetes. 1

2

137

2 b Alexandro filio Balae, regi Syriae, Ptolemaeus filiam suam tradidit uxorem. 8

15

143

3 c Scipio Numantinos subvertit. 9

16

142

CLXI Olympias d Brutus Hiberiam usque ad Oceanum subigit.

9 c Simoni, Judaeorum pontifici pariter et principi, Romani et Spartiatae --legatione ejus libenter excepta--, amicalia misere rescripta. 2

3

136

4 e Trypho Jonatham pontificem Judaeorum interficit, et in sacerdotium fratris Jonathae Simon assumitur. 10

17

141 Syriae et Asiae, DEMETRIUS, annis III.

10

3

4

135

CLX Olympias d Bellum Servile ortum in Sicilia.

5 f Trypho Antiochum occidit Alexandri filium. 1

18

140

11 e Simon Judaeorum pontifex interficitur , cui succedit filius suus Joannes. 4

5

134 g Ptolemaeus filiam suam Demetrio tradit uxorem cum regno quod abstulerat Alexandro.

12 f Primus liber Machabaeorum hujus temporis historiam continet. 5

6

133

CLXII

Olympias

g Antiochus Sidetes rex Syriae adversus Judaeam arma corripiens, et Jerosolymam vallo circumdans, cum ad conditiones pontificem Simonem compulisset, recedit CLXII olympiade.

6 hLucius Accius tragoediarum scriptor clarus habetur, natus Mancino et Serrano consulibus parentibus libertinis, et seni jam Pacuvio Tarenti sua scripta recitavit: 2

19

139

13

6

7

132 Judaeorum dux, SIMON, annis VIII.

14

7

8

131 Judaeorum, HYRCANUS, qui et Joannes, annis XXVI. h Attalus moriens regni sui

[228/229]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judae-orum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judae-orum

BC

15 populum Romanum instituit haeredem. 8

1

130

27 quam postea Herodes instaurans Sebasten in honorem Augusti appellari voluit. 7

13

118

16 a Ptolemaeus expulsus Aegypto. 9

2

129

CLXIII Olympias Post quem DEMETRIUS iterum, annis IV

1900

28

8

14

117 b Arsaces Parthus Antiochum interfecit.

CLXVI

Olympias

29 a Marcus Terentius Varro philosophus et poeta nascitur. * 9

15

116

17 c Servi, qui in Sicilia rebellabant, obsidionis necessitate compulsi, ad sua invicem cadavera devoranda conversi sunt. 1

3

128 Aegypti VIII, PTOLEMAEUS PHYSCON, qui et Soter, annis XVII.

1890

18

2

4

127 d Arverni nobilissima Galliarum urbs capta, et rex Vituitus. *

1

10

16

115

2

11

17

114

19 e Juxta Aeoliae insulas, igne ex flatu suscitato, apparuit insula, quae nunc Hiera vocatur. 3

5

126

3 12

18

113 Post quem ANTIOCHUS CYZICENUS, annis XVIII

20

4

6

125

CLXVII

Olympias

CLXIV Olympias Syriae et Asiae, ANTIOCHUS GRYPUS, annis XII b Antiochus Cyzicenus, Grypo ejecto, Syriam obtinuit: ac rursum Grypus, superato Cyziceno, eandem recepit. Ita ex successione regnabant adversum se in vicem dimicantes. f Joannes dux Judaeorum et pontifex adversus Hyrcanos bellum gerens, Hyrcani nomen accepit, et a Romanis jus amicitiae postulans, decreto senatus inter amicos relatus est.

4

1

19

112

5

2 20

111

21

5

7

124

6

3

21

110

7

4

22

109

22

6

8

123 CLXVIII Olympias

23

7

9

122

8 c Jugurtha contra Romanos dimicans capitur. 5

23

108

24 g Narbonam coloniae deductae. 8

10

121

CLXV

Olympias

1910

9 d Rhodo terraemotu concussa, Colossus ruit. 6

24

107

25 h Hyrcanus pontifex Judaeorum Samariam, et nostro tempore Sebaste vocatur, obsidione captam solo coaequavit, 9

11

120

e Jonathas gloriose apud Judaeos principatum gerit.

26

10

12

119

[230/231]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judaeorum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum Syriae et Asiae Judaeorum

BC

10 a Cicero Arpini nascitur, matre Helvia, patre equestris ordinis ex regio Volscorum genere. * 7

25

106 CLXX Olympias et post de his cum Catulo triumphat. (*)

16 a Thraces a Romanis victi. 13

4

100 b Rursum in Sicilia bellum Servile consurgit.

11 b Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus oritur. * 8

26

105

17

14

5

99

CLXIX Olympias Judaeorum ARISTOBOLUS, anno I.

Aegypti IX, PTOLEMAEUS, qui et Alexander, annis X. c Aristobolus filius Jonathae rex pariter et pontifex, primus apud Judaeos diadematis sumpsit insigne, post CDLXXXIV annos Babylonicae captivitatis Post quem regnavit Jannaeus cognomento Alexander, qui pontificatum quoque administrans, crudelissime civibus praefuit.

12

9

1

104 Post quem JANNAEUS, qui et ALEXANDER, annis XXVII.

1 c Expulso de regno Ptolemaeo Physcone per matrem Cleopatram, et in Cyprum secedente.

15

6

98

1920

2

16

7

97

CLXXI

Olympias

3 d Aquilius in Sicilia bellum Servile compescuit. 17

8

96 d Turpilius comicus, senex admodum, Sinuessae moritur. * e Ptolemaeus rex Cyrenaeorum moriens Romanos testamento reliquit haeredes.

13 e Gaius Lucilius satirarum scriptor Neapoli moritur, ac publico funere effertur, anno aetatis XLVI. * 10

1

103

4 f Seleucus ab Antiocho filio Cyziceni vivus exurit. 18

9

95 Syriae PHILIPPUS, annis II f Marcus Furius poeta, cognomento Bibaculus Cremonae nascitur.
*

5 g Titus Lucretius poeta nascitur, qui postea amatorio poculo in furorem versus, cum aliquot libros per intervalla insaniae conscripsisset, quos postea Cicero emendavit, propria se manu interfecit, anno aetatis XLIV. * 1

10

94

14 g CC millia Cimbrorum caesa, et LXXX millia capta per Marium cum duce Teutomodo. * 11

2

102

6

2

11

93 Syriae reges defecerunt.

~~~~~

15 h Gaius Marius quinquies consul, juxta Heridanum Cimbros superat, 12

3

101

[232/233]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum

Judaeo-rum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum

Judaeo-rum

BC

CLXXII Olympias a Antiochus in Parthos fugiens, Pompeio se deinceps tradidit, post quem Philippus captus est a Gabinio.

3 a Sallustius Crispus, scriptor historicus, in Sabinis Amiterni nascitur. *

18

86

7

12

92 b Sylla Athenienses vastat.

4 c Descriptione Romae facta, inventa sunt hominum CDLXIII millia. *

19

85

8 b Huc usque Syria possessa per reges, in Romanam ditionem cessit.

13

91

CLXXIV

Olympias

9 c Bellum adversum Romanos, Picentes, Marsi, Pelignique moverunt. *

14

90

5 d Templum tertio apud Delphos a Thracibus incensum, et Romae Capitolium.

20

84

10

15

89 d Lucius Pomponius Bononiensis, Atellanarum scriptor, clarus habetur. *

6 e Jannaeus plurimas civitates capit.

21

83 f XXVI anno aetatis suae Cicero Quintium defendit. *

CLXIII

Olympias

7 g Publius Terentius Varro, vico Atace, in provincia Narbonensi nascitur, qui postea XXXV annum agens, Graecas litteras cum summo studio didicitl. *

22

82 Aegypti X, PTOLEMAEUS, qui a matre fuerat ejectus, annis VIII e Regressus de fuga regnum obtinuit, quia Alexandrum, qui ante eum fuerat, ob interfectionem matris cives pepulerant.

1

16

88

8 h Vultacilius Plotus Latinus rhetor, Gnaei Pompeii libertus et doctor scholam Romae aperuit. *

23

81 f Plotius Gallus primus Romae latinam rhetoricam docuit, de quo Cicero sic refert: "Memoria teneo, pueris nobis, primum Latine docere coepisse Plotium quemdam". *

CLXXV Olympias Aegypti XI, PTOLEMAEUS DIONYSUS, annis XXX

1930 2 g Gaius Valerius Catullus, scriptor lyricus, Veronae nascitur.

17

87

1 i Sylla Romam obtinuit, et post biennium moritur.

24

80

[234/235]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum

Judaeorum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum

Judaeorum

BC

2 a Roscio contra Chrysogonum defenso, Cicero Athenas secedit, et inde post triennium Romam regreditur. *

25

79 a Virgilius Maro in pago, qui 'Andes' dicitur, haud procul a Mantua nascitur, Pompeio et Crasso consulibus. *

12

8

69

3 b Pompeius gloriosissime triumphavit. 26

78 c Jannaeus multas vastat civitates. b Marcus Porcius Cato stoicus philosophus agnoscitur. * d Lepidus publicus hostis judicatus.

1940 4 e T. Quintius Atta, scriptor togatarum 1, Romae moritur, sepultusque via Praenestina ad miliarium II. *

27

77 CLXXVIII Olympias Judaeorum regnavit ALEXANDRA, annis IX.

13 c Antiochia Syriae capta a Romanis.

9

68 d Creticum bellum ortum, unde Metellus Creticus. Judaei Romanorum vectigales per Pompeium facti, et pontificatum apud eos suscepit HYRCANUS, annis XXXIV.

CLXXVI

Olympias

5 f Alexandra, quae et Salina 2, uxor Alexandri, Jerosolymis regnavit, ex cujus aetate Judaeos rerum confusio et variae clades oppresserunt.

1

76 e Lucus Daphnensium juxta Antiochiam a Pompeio Apollini consecratur. *

1950 14 f Aristobulus et Hyrcanus filii Alexandrae, contra se de imperio dimicantes, occasionem praebuere Romanis, ut Judaeam invaderent. Itaque Pompeius Jerosolymam veniens, capta urbe, et templo reserato, usque ad sancta sanctorum accedit, Aristobulum vinctum secum adducit, pontificatum confirmat Hyrcano, deinde Antipatrum Herodis Ascalonitae filium procuratorem Palaestinae facit.

1

67

6

2

75

7 g Bellum gladiatorium in Campania. 3 *

3

74 h Lucius Lucullus primus imperator appellatus est, victa Armenia, Mesopotamia, et Nisibi cum fratre regis capta. (*)

15

2

66

8

4

73 CLXXVII Olympias

9 i Pompeius universam Hiberiam subjugavit. 4 *

5

72

10 k M. Lucullus de Bessis triumphavit, capta Cabyle, et Tomis, et caeteris vicinis urbibus. *

6

71

16 g Libya per testamentum Appionis regis Romanis relicta. *

3

65

11 l Crassus triumphavit. *

7

70 h Horatius Flaccus, (1) 'togatae' i.e the plot of the play was settled in a Roman environment instead of the usual Greek one.

(2) Salome.

(3) The Third Servile War (Gladiators' War), instigated in 73 B.C. by Spartacus, an escaped slave and gladiator; the war ended in 71 B.C.

(4) Not the peninsula as a whole, but the entire Roman province. This had been in revolt under Sertorius.

[236/237]

Alexandrinorum

Consulum

Judaeo-rum

BC

Alexandrinorum

Consulum

Judaeo-rum

BC satiricus et lyricus poeta, libertino patre Venusii 1 nascitur. * Placentiae obiit. *

25 a Caesar Rhenum transiens, Germanos vastat.

12

56

CLXXIX

Olympias

17 a Apollodorus Pergamenus, Graecus orator, praeceptor Callidii et Augusti, clarus habetur. *

4

64 b Crassus consul cum filio suo apud Carras captus. *

26 c Ventidius, primus Romanorum, Parthos superat. *

13

55

18 b Pompeius, captis Jerosolymis, tributarios Judaeos facit.

5

63 d Curio promptus et popularis orator Romae habetur insignis; qui deinceps in Africa, pudore amissi exercitus, mori maluit quam evadere. *

19 c Ea quae de Catilina, Cethego, Lentulo, et consule Cicerone, Sallustius scribit et Livius, hoc gesta sunt tempore. (*)

6

62

27

14

54

28

15

53

20 d Cicero in exilio annum facit, honorifice susceptus a Plancio. 2 *

7

61 e Virgilius, sumpta toga, Mediolanum transgreditur, et post breve tempus Romam pergit. * e Pompeius imperator appellatus.

CLXXX

Olympias

21 f Caesar Lusitaniam, et quasdam insulas in Oceano capit.

8

60 CLXXXII Olympias

29 f Simulacrum Olympiaci Jovis tactum fulmine.

16

52

22 g Messalla Corvinus orator nascitur, et Titus Livius Patavinus scriptor historicus. *

9

59

30 g Caesar Germanos et Gallos capit.

17

51 Aegypti XII, CLEOPATRA, annis XXII h Virgilius Cremonae studiis eruditur. *

23 i Catullus XXX aetatis suae anno Romae moritur. *

10

58

1 h Principium belli civilis Caesaris et Pompeii.

18

50

1960 24 k M. Callidius orator clarus habetur, qui bello postea civili Caesareanas partes secutus, cum togatam Galliam regeret,

11

57

2 i Diodorus Siculus Graecae scriptor historiae, clarus habetur. *?

19

49

CLXXXI Olympias CLXXXIII Olympias (1) Venusia was on the borders of Apulia and Lucania; the date was 8 December 65 B.C.

(2) 58BC, in Macedonia. Gnaeus Plancius was quaestor of Macedonia.

[238/239]

Romanorum 3 Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC

Romanorum Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC a Gaius Julius Caesar primus apud Romanos singulare obtinuit imperium, a quo 'Caesares' Romanorum principes appellati.

CLXXXIV

Olympias

a Antonius decernit Quintilem mensem, Julium debere dici: quia in eo fuisset natus Julius.

5 b Cassius, Judaea capta, templum spoliat. 7

23

44 First Romanorum primus, C. JULIUS CAESAR, annis IV, menses VII c Idibus Martiis, G. Julius Caesar in Curia occiditur, et fasces statim suscepit Publius Dolabella. 1 * b Ab hoc loco Antiocheni sua tempora computant. 1 c Pompeius praelio victus, et fugiens, a spadonibus Alexandrini regis occiditur. 3 d Gaii Caesaris corpus in rostris, ob honorem, concrematum. *

20

48

d Marcus Caelius praetor, et T. Annius Milo exsul, oppressi, res novas in Thuriano, Brutioque agro simul molientes. *

e Servius Sulpitius juris consultus, et Publius Servilius Isauricus, publico funere elati. *

f Romae tres simul exorti soles paulatim in eundem orbem coierunt. *

1970 2 e Ptolemaei cadaver cum lorica aurea in Nilo inventum. * 4

21

47

g Inter caetera portenta, quae toto orbe facta sunt, bos in suburbano Romae ad arantem locutus est: " frustra se urgeri: non enim frumenta, sed homines brevi defuturos."

2 *

f Caesar in Aegypto regnum Cleopatrae confirmat ob stupri gratiam.

3 g Romae Basilica Julia dedicata. * 5

22

46 h Decretum senatus, et Atheniensium ad Judaeos mittitur, qui per legationem amicitiam postularant.

Romanorum II, regnavit OCTAVIANUS CAESAR Augustus, annis LVI, menses VI (A quo 'Augusti' Romanorum reges appellati) i Cleopatra regio comitatu Urbem ingressa. *

1 h Antonius adversum Caesarem Augustum bellum movet. *? 9

25

43 k Prohibitae lecticis, margaritisque uti, quae nec viros, nec liberos haberent, et minores essent annis XLIV. * i Laberius, mimorum scriptor, decimo mense post Caesaris interitum, Puteolis moritur.

4 l Nigidius Figulus pythagoricus et magus in exilio moritur. *? 6

23

45 k Publius mimographus, natione Syrus, Romae scenam tenet. * (1) Literally "received the fasces."

(2) Cf. Livy 28.11.4 (for 206 BC, not this 41 BC) "et bos in agro Romano locutus."

(3) Prior to this page in 'O' the heading always reads 'Consulum'. Thereafter it is 'Romans'.

[240/241]

Romanorum Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC

Romanorum Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC a Cicero in Formiano suo ab Herennio et Popilio occiditur, 64 aetatis suae anno. * in amicitiam cum eo regreditur. a Cornificius poeta a militibus desertus interiit, quos saepe fugientes 'galeatos lepores' appellat. Hujus soror Cornificia, cujus insignia exstant epigrammata. * c Cicero ut quibusdam placet interficitur in Caietis. b Ciceronis caput cum manu dextra pro Rostris positum, juxtaque coronata imago Popilii militis, qui eum occiderat. * b Templum Rhodiorum depopulatus est Cassius. * c Secunda secessio Augusti et Antonii. d Ovidius Naso nascitur in Pelignis. 1 *

CLXXXV

Olympias

4 d Cornelius Nepos scriptor historicus clarus habetur. * 11

28

40

2 e Caius Falcidius tribunus plebis legem tulit 2, ne quis plus testamento legaret, quam ut quarta pars haeredibus superesset, si quatuor, aut minus essent. * 9

26

42 e Antigonus contra Judaeos dimicans, tandem occiditur, a quo usque in praesens tempus Jerosolymitarum regnum destructum est. Siquidem Herodes post eum a Romanis constitutus est princeps alienigena, et nihil omnino pertinens ad Judaeam

5 12

29

39 f Curtius Salassus in insula Arada, cum quatuor cohortibus vivus combustus est, quod tributa gravius exigeret. *

6

13

30

38

3 g Vibium Maximum designatum quaestorem agnovit dominus suus, et abduxit. * 10

27

41 f Fornii pater et filius clari oratores habentur, quorum filius consularis ante patrem moritur. *

1980

7

14

31

37 h E taberna meritoria 3 trans Tiberim, oleum terra erupit, fluxitque toto die sine intermissione, significans Christi gratiam ex gentibus. * CLXXXVI Olympias

8 g Sallustius diem obiit, quadriennio ante Actiacum bellum. * 15

32

36

9 h Marcus Vavius poeta, quem Virgilius in Bucolicis notat, in Cappadocia moritur. 16

33

35 i Antonium superat Augustus, et interveniente senatu, (1) Literally "among the Peligni."

(2) The Falcidian Law, (Justinian, Digest of Roman Law, 35.2) by its first Article, conferred the power of disposing of an estate up to and including three-fourths of the same. English translation.

It is followed in some manuscripts by a long and confused gloss, which adds the words "... if four or less." And then goes on, "Si autem plus quatuor, medietas eo tenore, ut sive liberis, sive propinquis idem exteris pater sua legaret, illa pars quam Falcidius constituit, nisi pater interdixerit, et legatis fruentibus, et eisdem carentibus aequanimiter partiretur."

(3) Cassius

Dio 48.43.4, giving the date as 38 BC. Here one day, in 38 BC, oil suddenly started to gush out from the ground. This mysterious event was given the Latin name fons olei ("oil source", or "oil fountain"). This is the legend of S. Maria in Trastevere. A taberna meritoria was an upmarket tavern and lodging house.

[242/243]

†

Romanorum Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC

Romanorum Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC

10 a Herodes Antipatri Ascalonitae, et matris Cypridis Arabicae filius, a Romanis Judaeorum suscepit principatum: cujus tempore, Christi nativitate vicina, regnum, et sacerdotium Judaeae, quod prius per successiones minorum tenebatur, destructum est, completa prophetia, quae ita per Mosen loquitur: 17

34

34

Quae LXIX hebdomades

1 faciunt annos CDLXXXIII, in quibus Christi, id est, sacerdotes per unctionem consecrati regnaverunt usque ad Hyrcanum. Quo extremo omnium a Parthis capto, Herodes Antipatri filius nihil ad se pertinentem Judaeam ab Augusto et senatu accepit. Filii quoque ejus post eum regnaverunt usque ad novissimam Jerosolymitarum captivitatem, nequaquam ex successione sacerdotalis generis pontificibus constitutis, perpetuitate vitae secundum legem Moysi servientibus Deo. Ignobiles vero quidam, et alio tempore alii, et nonnulli unius anni, sive modico amplius, a Romanis imperatoribus sacerdotium emebant. Quae omnia etiam Daniel Propheta vaticinatur, dicens:

Judaeis regnavit HERODES alienigena, Deficiente Pontificum principatu, annis XXXVII.

"Non deficiet princeps ex Juda, neque dux de femoribus ejus, donec veniat, cui repositum est. Et ipse erit exspectatio gentium." 2 In hoc etiam loco, Christus, quem Danielis scriptura praefatur, accepit finem. Nam usque ad Herodem, Christi, id est, sacerdotes erant reges Judaeorum, qui imperare coeperunt a LXV olympiade, et ab instauratione templi sub Dario usque ad Hyrcanum, et ad 186 olympiadem, annis CDXLIII in medio transactis: quos Daniel quoque significat, dicens:

" Et post hebdomadas VII et LXII interibit chrisma, et judicium non erit in eo, et templum et sanctum corrumpet populus duce veniente: et caedentur in cataclysmo belli. " Et in sequentibus: "Et super templum, inquit, abominatio desolationum: et usque ad consummationem temporis, consummatio dabitur super desolationem." a Herodes Ananelum quemdam de Babylone accitum, pontificem Judaeorum constituit, et post exiguum temporis Aristobulum fratrem uxoris suae, n Et scies et intelliges ab initio sermonis respondendi, et aedificandi Jerusalem usque ad Christi principatum, hebdomades VII et hebdomades LXII.

1

(1) 'Hebdomades' is properly a 'group of seven' years rather than a week. The word 'weeks' is intended to be quaint or mystical, as note where it is initially explained by Leviticus 25:8 'numerabis quoque tibi septem ebdomades annorum id est septem septies quae simul faciunt quadraginta novem' -- 'And you shall count seven weeks of years, seven times seven years, so that the time of the seven weeks of years shall be to you forty-nine years.' Jerome's 'id est' is not in the Heb (or RSV) but the phrase SHBX SHBTT SHNYM 'seven sabbaths of years' is clearly meant to be pointed in some way, and not just a way of saying something numerical like 'group of seven'. Even the Gk word E(BDOMAS is somewhat obscure [cf. Chantraine s.v. e(pta at end]. Finally, it is already traditional language in Jerome's time and remains so: NJB, Lev. 25:8 'You will count seven weeks of years--seven...' [note their long dash = Jerome's id est] and then Daniel 9:24 'Seventy weeks are decreed...'.
 (2) The quotation marks represent a line of vertical squiggles against this paragraph in the left-hand margin in 'O'.

[244/245]

Romanorum Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC

Romanorum Alexandrinorum Judaeorum

BC nepotem Hyrcani successorem ei dedit, quo post annum interfecto, rursum Ananelo reddidit sacerdotium. .

12 a Usque ad Cleopatram Ptolemaei, qui vocabantur Lagidae, in Aegypto regnaverunt annis CCXCV. 19

2

32 a Lunae, secundum Romanos, cursus inventus. * b Artorius medicus Augusti, post Actiacam victoriam naufragio perit. *

11 b Antonii et Augusti foedus. 18

1

23 c Colonias deduxere Romani.

13 c Quidam ab hoc loco primum annum Augusti monarchiae supputant. 20

3

31 d Augustus triumphavit pedestris certaminis triumpho. e Antonius Cleopatrae Arabiam tradidit. d Caesar Augustus appellatus, a quo Sextilis mensis Augusti nomen accepit. f Augusti et Antonii tertiae dissensionis exordium, quod repudiata sorore Caesaris, Cleopatram induxisset uxorem. (*)

14 e Cum ingenti triumphorum pompa Augustus Romam ingressus, et Cleopatrae liberi, Sol et Luna ante currum ejus ducti. 1 21

4

30 g Nicetes, et Hibreas, et Theodorus, et Plution nobilissimi artis rhetoricae Graeci praeceptores habentur. *

15 f Nicopolis juxta Actium condita et agon Actiacus constitutus. 22

5

29 Aegypti regnum, quod fuit in Alexandria, destructum est..

~~~~~ g Augustus Romanis plurimas leges statuit.

CLXXXVII Olympias h Cleopatra et Antonius semet interficiunt, et Aegyptus fit Romana provincia, quam primus tenuit Caius Cornelius Gallus, de quo Virgilius scribit in Bucolicis. (*) CLXXXVIII Olympias h Censu Romae agitato, inventa sunt civium Romanorum XLI centena et LXIV millia.

2

16 i Coloniae deductae.

23

2

6

3

28 k Anaxilaus Larisseus Pythagoricus (1) Dio Cassius 51.21.8. The reference is to Alexander Helios (the 'sun') and Cleopatra Selene (the 'moon').

(2) This number is missing in 'O'.

(3) This number is coloured red in 'O'.

[246/247]

Romanorum

Judaeo-rum

BC

Romanorum

Judaeo-rum

BC et Magus ab Augusto Urbe Italiaque pellitur. * renuit.

21 a Quintilius Cremonensis Virgilii et Horatii familiaris moritur. *

11

23 a M. Terentius Varro philosophus prope nonagenarius moritur. * b Augustus Cyzicenos libertate privavit.

1990 17 b Thebae Aegypti usque ad solum erutae.

7

27

22 c Pylades Cilix pantomimus, cum veteres ipsi canerent atque saltarent, primus Romae chorum et fistulam sibi praecinere fecit. *

12

22 c Cornelius Gallus Forojuliensis poeta, a quo primum Aegyptum rectam, supradiximus, XLIII aetatis suae anno propria se manu interfecit. *

23 d Tiberius ab Augusto missus occupavit Armeniam.

13

21 d Trallis terraemotu consederunt.

18 e Indi ab Augusto per legatum amicitiam postularunt. *

8

26 e Atratinus, qui septem decem natus annis Caelium accuraverat, clarus inter oratores habetur: ad extremum morborum taedio in balneo, voluntate exanimatus, haeredem reliquit Augustum. * f Messala Corvinus primus praefectus Urbis factus, sexto die magistratu se abdicavit, incivilem potestatem esse contestans. *

CXC

Olympias

19 g Augustus Calabriam et Gallos vectigales facit.

9

25

24 f Cantabri res novas molientes opprimuntur.

14

20 h Munatius Plancus, Ciceronis discipulus, orator habetur insignis, qui cum Galliam Comatam regeret, Lugdunum condidit. *

25 g Herodes apud Jerosolymam multas et magnas aedes construxit.

15

19

26 h Virgilius Brundusii moritur, Sentio Saturnino et Lucretio Cinna consulibus. Ossa ejus Neapolim translata in secundo ab urbe milliaro sepeliuntur, titulo istiusmodi supra scripto, quem moriens ipse dictaverat:

16

18 CLXXXIX Olympias

20 i Marcus Lollius Galatiam provinciam facit. k Augustus, cum ei monarchia deferretur

[248/249]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

BC

Romanorum

Judaeorum

BC "Mantua me genuit, Calabri rapuere, tenet nunc Parthenope, cecini pascua, rura, duces." * a Bosphorum Agrippa capit.

31 b Cestius Smyrnaeus rhetor Latine Romae docuit. *

21

13 a Herodes Samariam olim jam in cineribus sedentem, a fundamentis suscitans, in honorem Augusti Augustam, id est, Sebastiam appellavit, et in Paneade id quod Panion vocatur, exstruxit.

CXCII Olympias c Augustus a senatu pontifex maximus appellatur.

32

22

12 d Herodes Caesaream in nomine Caesaris condidit, quae prius Turris Stratonis vocabatur.

2000 27 b Augustus Samiis libertatem dedit. 17

17 c In Cypro plurimae civitatum partes terraemotu conciderunt. e Herodes Anthidonam condidit, et Antipatridam: atque Herodionem in honorem patris Antipatri et suum exstruxit: innumerabilia quoque opera in singulis Syriarum urbibus, quas regebat, solertissime aedificavit.

33

23

11 d Germanos in arma versos Marcus Lollius superat. e Varius et Tucca, Virgilii et Horatii contubernales, poetae habentur illustres, qui Aeneidum libros postea emendaverunt sub lege ea, ut nihil adderent. *

34 f Tiberius Caesar de captivis Pannoniis triumphat.

24

10

CXCI

Olympias

35 g Horatius LVII aetatis suae anno Romae moritur. *

25

9

28 f Augustus Gaium Agrippam adoptavit in filium.

18

16

36 h Passienus Pater, declamator insignis, diem obiit. *

26

8 g Aemilius Macer Veronensis poeta in Asia moritur. * i C. Julius Hyginus cognomento Polyhistor, grammaticus habetur illustris. *

29 h Tiberius Vindelicos, et eos qui Thraciarum confines erant, Romanas provincias facit.

19

15

193rd Olympias k Tiberius, vastata Germania, imperator appellatur.

30 i Coloniae Berytum et Patras deductae.

20

14

[250/251]

Romanorum

Judaeo-rum

BC

Romanorum

Judaeo-rum

BC/AD

36 a Herodes Hyrcanum, qui olim sacerdos Judaeorum fuerat, de captivitate Parthica regressum, et filium ejus, qui sacerdotio patris successerat, interfecit : sororem quoque ejus uxorem suam, cum duobus propriis filiis jam adolescentibus, et matrem uxoris occisae, socrum suam, crudelissime necat.

26

8 taedio duplicis quartanae semet interfecit.

41 a Herodes ad ea quae supra crudeliter gesserat, etiam hoc addidit: virum sororis suae Salomae interfecit, et cum eam alii tradidisset uxorem, etiam hunc necat: scribas quoque et interpretes divinae legis simili scelere occidit.

31

3 b Tertullianus in eo libro, quem contra Judaeos scripsit, affirmat Christum XLI anno Augusti natum, et XV Tiberii esse passum. *

2010

37

27

7

42

32

2

38 b Tiberius de Rhetis, Vindelicis, Armenis, ac Pannoniis triumphavit.

28

6 c JESUS CHRISTUS filius Dei in Bethелеem Judae nascitur

43

33

1 BC c Albutius Silo Novariensis clarus rhetor agnoscitur. * d Quirinus ex consilio senatus Judaeam missus, census hominum, possessionumque describit.

39 dIn insula Coe terraemotu plurima conciderunt.

29

5 e Colliguntur omnes anni ab Abraham usque ad nativitatem Christi, anni MMXV. e Augustus Juliam filiam suam in adulterio deprehensam damnat exsilio.

CXCV

Olympias

CXCIV Olympias f C. Caesar amicitiam cum Parthis fecit. f M. Tullius Tiro Ciceronis libertus, qui primus notas commentus est, in Puteolano praedio usque ad centesimum annum consenescit. *

44 g Sextus Pythagoricus philosophus agnoscitur.

34

1 AD h Augustus Tiberium et Agrippam in filios adoptat.

40

30

4 g Augustus gladiatorium ludum, et navale certamen exhibuit.

45 i Judas Galilaeus ad rebellandum Judaeos cohortatur.

35

2 h Melissus Spoletinus grammaticus agnoscitur. * k Herodes, cum Christi nativitatem, Magorum indicio, cognovisset, universos in Bethleem parvulos jussit interfici. i M. Porcius Latro, Latinus declamator,

[252/253]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

46 a Herodes morbo intercutis aquae, et scatentibus toto corpore vermibus, miserabiliter et digne moritur.

36

3 ita memoriam ac sensum amisit, ut vix pauca verba conjungeret, et ad extremum ulcere sibi circa sacram spinam nato, inedia se confecit, annos aetatis LXXII. *

2020 47 b Asinius Pollio orator et consularis, qui de Dalmatis triumpharat, LXX aetatis suae anno in villa Tusculana moritur. *

37

4 Judaeorum dux, ARCHELAUS, annis IX CXCVIII Olympias a Augustus cum Tiberio filio suo censem Romae agitans, invenit hominum nonagies tercentena et septuaginta millia.

CXCVI Olympias c In Herodis locum Archelaus, ab Augusto substituitur, et Tetrarchae fiunt quatuor fratres ejus, Herodes, Antipater, Lysias, et Philippus.

56 b Sotio philosophus Alexandrinus, praeceptor Senecae clarus habetur. (*)

9

13

48

1

5 c Archelaus nono anno regni sui, in Viennam urbem Galliae relegatur. Judaeorum principatum tenet HERODES Tetrarcha annis XXIV d Fames Romae ita ingens facta, ut quinque modii venderentur denariis XXVII semis. d Defectio solis facta , et Augustus LXXVI aetatis suae anno, Atellae in Campania moritur, sepeliturque Romae in campo Martio. (*)

49 e Philisthion mimographus, natione Magnesianus, Romae clarus habetur. *

2

6

50 f Tiberius Caesar Dalmatas, Sarmatasque in Romanam redigit potestatem.

3

7 Romanorum III, TIBERIUS regnavit annis XXIII

2030 1 e Gaius Asinius Gallus orator, Asinii Pollionis filius, cujus etiam Virgilius meminit, diris a Tiberio suppliciis enecatur. *

1

14

51 g Athenodorus Tarsensis Stoicus philosophus, et M. Verrius Flaccus grammaticus, insignes habentur. (*)

4

8

2

2 15

3

3

16

CXCVII

Olympias

CXCIX

Olympias

52 h Athenienses res novas contra Romanos molientes opprimuntur, auctoribus seditionis occisis.

5

9

4 f T. Livius historiographus Patavii moritur.

4

17

53

6

10 g Ovidius poeta in exilio diem obiit, et juxta oppidum Tomos sepelitur. *

54

7

11

55 i Messala Corvinus orator ante biennium quam moreretur,

8

12 h Germanicus Caesar de Parthis triumphat.

[254/255]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

5 a Tredecim urbes terraemotu corruerunt, Ephesus, Magnesia, Sardis, Mosthene, Aegae, Hierocaesarea, Philadelphia, Tmolus, Temnus, Cymae, Myrhina, Apollonia Dia, Hyrcania.

5

18 in qua plurimas aedes construxerat, Caesaream Philippi vocavit, et Juliadem aliam civitatem.

13 a Pontius Pilatus procurator Judaeae a Tiberio mittitur. *

13

26

6 b Fenestella, historiarum scriptor et carminum, septuagenarius moritur, sepeliturque Cumis. *

6

19

14 b Votienus Montanus Narbonensis orator in Balearibus insulis moritur, illuc a Tiberio relegatus.

14

27

7 c Tiberius multos reges ad se per blanditias evocatos numquam remisit: in quibus Archelaum Cappadocem, cujus regno in provinciam verso, Mazacam nobilissimam civitatem, Caesaream appellare jussit. *

7

20

15 c Herodes Tiberiadem condidit, et Libiadem.

15

28 d Joannes filius Zachariae in deserto juxta Jordanem fluvium praedicans, Christum filium Dei in medio eorum adesse testatur. Ipse quoque Dominus Jesus Christus hinc in populos salutarem viam annuntiat, signis atque virtutibus vera comprobans esse, quae diceret.

CC

Olympias

8 d Pompeii theatrum incensum.

8

21

9 e Tiberius Drusum consortem regni facit.

9

22 f Computantur in praesentem annum, id est XV Tiberii Caesaris, a secundo anno instaurationis Templi, quae facta est sub altero anno Darii regis Persarum, anni DXLVIII

10 f Drusus Caesar veneno periit.

10

23

2040 11 g Quintus Haterius, promptus et popularis orator, usque ad XC prope annum summo honore consenescit. *

11

24 h Servius Plautus corrupti filii reus semet in iudicio interficit. * fa Salomone autem et prima aedificatione templi, anni MLX

CCI Olympias a Moyse, et egressu Israhelis ex Aegypto, anni MDXXXIX

12 i Philippus tetrarcha Paneadem, 12

25

[256/258]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD ab Abraham et regno Nini et Semiramidis, anni MMXLIV

"Quarto autem anno CCII olympiadis, magna et excellens inter omnes, quae ante eam acciderant, defectio solis est facta; dies hora sexta in tenebrosam noctem versus, ut stellae in caelo visae sint, terraeque motus in Bithynia Nicaenae urbis multas aedes subvertit."

Haec supradictus vir.

Argumentum autem huius rei, quod Salvator isto anno passus sit, Evangelium praebet Johannis, in quo scribitur, post decimum quintum annum Tiberii Caesaris, tribus annis Dominum praedicasse. Josephus etiam vernaculus Judaeorum scriptor, circa haec tempora die Pentecostes sacerdotes primum commotionem locorum, et quosdam sonitus sensisse testatur. Deinde ex adyto Templi repentina subito erupisse vocem dicentium: "Transmigremus ex his sedibus." Scribit autem supra dictus vir, quod eodem anno Pilatus praeses secreto noctis imagines Caesaris in templo statuerit. Et haec prima seditionis et turbarum Judaeis causa exstiterit. a diluvio usque ad Abraham, anni CMXLII ab Adam usque ad diluvium, anni MMCCXLII

CCII Olympias a Principium LXXXI jubilai secundum Hebraeos 16 b Jesus Christus filius Dei salutarem cunctis praedicans viam, miracula quae in Evangeliiis scripta sunt, facit. 16

29

17 c Jesus Christus filius Dei, discipulos suos divinis imbuens sacramentis, ut universis gentibus conversionem ad Deum nuntient, imperat. 17

30

18 d Jesus Christus, secundum prophetias, quae de eo fuerant praelocutae, ad passionem venit anno Tiberii 18, quo tempore etiam in aliis ethnicorum commentariis haec ad verbum scripta reperimus: Solis facta defectio 1, Bithynia terraemotu concussa, et in urbe Nicaena aedes plurimae corruerunt: quae omnia his congruunt, quae in passione Salvatoris acciderunt. Scribit vero super his et Phlegon, qui olympiadarum egregius supputator est, in XIII libro ita dicens: 18

31

19

19

32 a Ecclesiae Jerosolymorum primus episcopus ab Apostolis ordinatur Jacobus frater Domini.

(1) November 24, 29 AD. Note that paras b,c and d are merged in the Merton Ms.

[258/259]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD a Ex hoc loco considerandum, quanta deinceps calamitates Judaeorum gentem oppresserint. ut inter caetera sacra reciperetur. 4 Verum cum ex consulto patrum, Christianos eliminari Urbe placuisset, Tiberius per edictum accusatoribus Christianorum comminatus est mortem: scribit Tertullianus in Apologetico. 5

23

23

36 b Cassius Severus orator egregius, qui Quintianum illud Proverbium luserat, XXV exsilio sui anno summa inopia moritur, vix panno verenda contextus. 1 * a Multi senatorum et equitum Romanorum interfecti.

CCIII Olympias c Pilatus post supradictam seditionem, quae ob Caesaris imagines fuerat concitata, sacrum thesaurum, quem Corbonan Judaei vocant, in aquaeductum Jerosolymorum expendens, secundae seditionis praebuit semina. b Tiberius in Campania moritur. 6 (*)

CCIV

Olympias

20 20

33 Romanorum IV, GAIUS CALIGULA, regnavit annis III, menses X.

1 c Gaius Caesar cognomento Caligula, Agrippam vinculis liberatum, regem Judaeae facit.

24

37 Judaeorum princeps, AGRIPPA, annis VII

2050 21 d Sejanus praefectus Tiberii, qui apud eum plurimum poterat, instantissime cohortatur, ut gentem Judaeorum delectat: Philo meminit in libro Legationis II. 2

21

34 d Gaius semetipsum inter deos refert. e Flaccus Avilius praefectus Aegypti, multis Judaeos calamitatibus premit, consentiente Alexandriae populo, et crebris adversus eos clamoribus personante: synagogas quoque eorum imaginibus, statuis, aris et victimis polluit. Refert Philo in eo libro, qui Flaccus inscribitur, haec omnia se praesente gesta, ob quae etiam legationem ad Gaium ipse suscepit e Persius Flaccus Satiricus poeta Volaterris nascitur.

22 f Agrippa filius Aristobuli, filii Herodis regis, accusator Herodis tetrarchae, Romam profectus a Tiberio in vincula conjicitur. 3

22

35 g Pilato de Christianorum dogmate ad Tiberium referente, Tiberius retulit ad senatum,

(1) After this in the PL is the following entry, where the Merton ms. has a blank: 'Stephanus lapidatur: Saulus ad Christum convertitur'.

(2) Another blank in the manuscript is filled in the PL with these two entries:

'Jacobus frater Joannis Apostoli, jubente Herode rege, capite truncatus occiditur.

-- Petrus Apostolus ab Herode in carcerem trusus, et vinctus catenis duabus, mirabiliter ab angelo liberatur'.

(3) In the PL, but not in the Ms. this entry continues: 'eo quod publice Deum precatus fuisset, ut, mortuo statim Tiberio, Caium cunctorum dominum videret'.

(4) 'Sacra' rendered as 'recognised religions'.

(5) In the PL, not in the Ms. there follows: 'Petrus Apostolus Antiochenam Ecclesiam fundavit, ibique cathedram adeptus, sedit annis XXV'.

(6) The PL adds: 'in Lucullana villa'.

[260/261]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD Romanorum V, CLAUDIUS, regnavit annis XIII, mensibus VIII, diebus XXVIII.

CCV Olympias a Passienus filius fraude haeredis suae necatus. 1 *

1 a Iste est Claudius patruus Drusi, qui apud Moguntiacum monumentum habet: Alibi legi, avunculus, quia frater matris Gaii fuit. *

4

41

3 b Gaius cognomento Caligula, Memmii Reguli duxit uxorem, impellens eum, ut uxoris suae patrem esse se scriberet.

2

39

2 b PETRUS Apostolus, natione Galilaeus, Christianorum Pontifex primus, cum primum Antiochenam Ecclesiam fundasset, Romam proficiscitur, ubi Evangelium praedicans XXV annis ejusdem urbis episcopus perseverat.

5

42 c Pontius Pilatus in multas incidens calamitates, propria se manu interfecit: scribunt Romanorum historici.

3 c Marcus Evangelista interpres Petri, Aegypto et Alexandriae Christum annuntiat.

6

43 d Gaius Petronio praefecto Syriae praecepit, ut Jerosolymis statuam suam sub nomine Jovis Optimi Maximi poneret: quod Judaei maxima negaverunt obstinatione.

2060 4 d Primus Antiochiae episcopus ordinatur Evodius.

7

44 e Agrippa rex Judaeorum annos VII imperans moritur. Post quem filius ejus Agrippa, a Claudio substituitur in regnum. e Toto orbe Romano, sicut Philo scribit, et Josephus, in Synagogis Judaeorum statuae, et imagines, et arae G. Caesaris consecratae.

Judaeorum rex, AGRIPPA, annis XXVI f Prophetia Agabi, quae in Actibus Apostolorum famem in toto orbe futuram dixerat sub Claudio expletur.

4 f Plurimi nobilium a Gaio interfecti.

3

40 g Gaius sorores suas, quibus stuprum intulerat, insulari exilio condemnavit. () g Claudius de Britannis triumphavit, et Orchadas insulas Romano adjecit imperio, In cujus gloriae memoriam filium suum Britannicum appellavit. () h Gaius omnes exsules jussit interfici. i Gaius a protectoribus suis occiditur in palatio, anno aetatis suae XXIX. h Domitius Afer Nemausensis clarus orator habetur,

(1) In the Merton manuscript there is a space following. In the Patrologia Latina, there follows this entry: 'Matthaeus in Judaea Evangelium primus scribit'.

[262/263]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD qui postea, Nerone regnante, ex cibi redundantia in coena moritur. *

CCVII

Olympias

9 a Fame facta in Graecia, modius sex drachmis venundatus est. 4

5

49 a Claudus Quirinalis Rhetor Arelatensis Romae insignissime docet. *

10 b Magna fames Romae. 5

6

50 c Claudius Felicem procuratorem Judaeae mittit, apud quem Paulus apostolus accusatus in defensionem sui perorat.

6

CCVI

Olympias

11

7

51

5 b Inter Theram et Therasiam exorta est insula habens stadia 30.

1

45

12

8

52 c Descriptione Romae facta sub Claudio inventa sunt civium Romanorum LXVIII centena et XLIV millia.

1

CCVIII

Olympias

d Sub Felice procuratore Judaeae exstiterunt multi, qui populum sua persuasione deciperent, in quibus et Aegyptius quidam pseudopropheta fuit, qui plurimos sibi associans, in ipso magnarum rerum conatu per exercitum Felicis opprimitur. Scribit Josephus consentanea apostolorum Actibus, in quibus Paulo dicitur a Tribuno: 'Nonne tu es Aegyptius, qui ante hos dies concitasti, et eduxisti in desertum quatuor millia virorum?'

7

6

2

46

d Thracia hucusque regnata, in Romanorum provinciam redigitur.

2

13

9

53

7 e Sub procuratore Judaeae Cumano in diebus azymorum 3 tanta est Jerosolymis orta seditio, ut in portarum exitu, populo corruente, 30 millia Judaeorum perierint.

3

47

8 f Palaemon Vicetinus insignis grammaticus Romae habetur, qui quondam interrogatus, quid inter stillam et guttam interesset: "Gutta, inquit, stat, et stilla cadit". *

4

48

2070 14 e Claudius moritur in Palatio, anno aetatis suae LXIV. (*)

10

54 g Marcus Antonius Liberalis Latinus rhetor gravissimas inimicitias cum Palaemone exercet. *
Romanorum VI, NERO regnavit annis XIII, mensibus VII, diebus XXVIII.

1 f Hujus avunculus fuit Gaius Caligula. *

11

55

(1) The Patrologia Latina text has two extra entries at this point, which are not found in the 9th century Merton College manuscript

No. 315, although there seems to be a space in the text at this point:

-- Claudius circa haec tempora Fucinum lacum exsiccavit, XI annos triginta hominum millibus sine intermissione operantibus.

-- Portum Ostiae Claudius exstruxit, dextra laevaue duobus quasi brachiis objectis.

(2) Another entry from the PL, not in the Merton Ms. follows, where there is a space in the page: 'Maria virgo Jesu Christi mater ad Filium in coelum assumitur, ut quidam fuisse sibi revelatum scribunt'.

(3) The passover.

(4) Another entry from the PL, not in the Merton Ms. follows, where there is a space in the page: 'Tres simul soles apparuerunt, statimque simul in eundem orbem coierunt'.

(5) Another PL entry, but no space in the Ms.: Dionysius the Areopagite, once a distinguished philosopher, is famous.

(6) Another PL entry follows, again with no space in the Ms.: 'Philippus apostolus Christi apud Hierapolim Asiae civitatem, dum Evangelium populo nuntiaret, cruci affixus, lapidibus opprimitur'.

(7) The reference is to Acts 21:38, and the citation is slightly altered from:

'Nonne tu es Aegyptius qui ante hos dies tumultum concitasti, et eduxisti in deseertum quattuor milia virorum sicariorum?'

[264/265]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD a Felice regente Judaeam, seditio in Caesarea Palaestinae orta magnam Judaeorum multitudinem perdidit. a Judaeis lapidibus opprimitur: in cuius thronum Simeon, qui et Simon secundus assumitur.

2 b Festus in gubernatione succedit Felici, apud quem, praesente Agrippa rege, Paulus apostolus religionis suae rationem exponens, vinctus Romam mittitur.

12

56

8 a Ante mensam Neronis fulmen cecidit. 18

62 b Post Marcum Evangelistam primus Alexandrinae ecclesiae ordinatur episcopus Annianus, qui praefuit annis XXII. c Probus Berytius eruditissimus grammaticorum, Romae agnoscitur. * c Persius 1 moritur anno aetatis suae XXIX. *

CCIX

Olympias

9 d Thermae a Nerone aedificatae, quas Neronianas appellavit.

19

63 d Statius Surculus Tholosanus in Gallia, celeberrime rhetoricam docuit. * e Nero Romae in citharistarum agone contendens omnes superat.

3 e Terraemotus Romae, et solis defectio.

13

57 f Marcus Annaeus Lucanus, Cordubensis poeta, in Pisoniana conjuratione deprehensus, brachium ad secandas venas medico praebuit. *

4 f Nero Agrippinam matrem suam et sororem patris interficit.

14

58

5 g Nero tantae luxuriae fuit, ut frigidis et calidis lavaretur unguentis, retibusque aureis piscaretur, quae purpureis funibus extrahebat. *

15

59 2080 10 g Nero, ut similitudinem ardentis Trojae inspiceret, plurimam partem Romanae urbis incendit. (*)

20

64

6

16

60 h In Asia tres urbes terraemotu conciderunt, Laodicia, Hierapolis, Colossae.

CCX Olympias h Nero Romae cithara contendens superat. i Albino procuratori Judaeae Cestius Florus succedit, sub quo Judaei contra Romanos rebellaverunt. i Festo in magistratu Judaeae succedit Albinus.

7 k Jacobus, frater Domini, quem omnes Justum appellabant,

17

61 k Junius Annaeus Gallio frater Senecae egregius declamator propria se manu interfecit. * (1)
Late manuscripts insert after the word Persius "Volaterranus, Satiricus poeta,".

[266/267]

Romanorum

Judaeo-rum

AD

Romanorum

Judaeo-rum

AD

14 a Musonius et Plutarchus philosophi insignes habentur.

24

68 a CCXI Olympias. Non est, Nerone in suam praesentiam differente. b L. Annaeus Mella, Senecae frater et Gallionis, bona Lucani poetae filii sui a Nerone promeretur. *

11 b Duae tantum provinciae sub Nerone factae, Pontus Polemoniacus, et Alpes Cottiae, Cottio rege defuncto. 1 *

21

65 c 1 Prima persecutio sub Nerone c Primus Nero super omnia scelera sua, etiam persecutionem in Christianos facit, in qua Petrus et Paulus gloriose Romae occubuerunt. c Multi nobilium Romae a Nerone interfecti. d Nero in olympiade coronatur, cerycas, citharistas, tragoedos, aurigas vario certamine superans. d Contra Judaeos, qui Cestii Flori avaritiam non ferentes, rebellabant, Vespasianus magister militiae a Nerone transmittitur.

12 e Lucius Annaeus Seneca Cordubensis, praeceptor Neronis, et patruus Lucani poetae, incisione venarum, et veneni haustu periit. *

22

66 e Vespasianus plurimas urbes Judaeae capit. f Flavius Josephus scriptor historicus, dux belli Judaeorum, cum a Romanis interficiendus esset, Vespasiano praenuntiat de morte Neronis, et ejus imperio: cujus rei causa vitam dono accepit. f Rursum Nero isthmia, pythia, actia celebrans, inter cerycas, tragoedos, et citharistas coronatur.

13 g Neroni in expensas centies centena millia decreto senatus annua subministrantur.

23

67 g Post Petrum primus Romanam Ecclesiam tenuit LINUS annis XI. h Nero cum caeteris viris insignibus et Octaviam uxorem suam interfecit, Cornutumque philosophum praeceptorem Persii in exsilium fugat. h Nero cum a Senatu quaereretur ad poenam, e palatio fugiens ad quartum Urbis miliarium, in suburbano liberti sui inter Salariam et Nomentanam viam semet interfecit, (1) Pontus Polemoniacus was added in 64 AD. M. Julius Cottius ruled the Cottian Alps as praefectus civitatum.

[268/269]

Romanorum

Judaeorum

AD

Romanorum Judaeorum regnum finitus est

AD anno aetatis suae XXXII, atque in eo omnis Augusti familia consummata est. (*)

2 a Titus, Judaea capta, et Jerosolymis subversis, sexcenta millia virorum interfecit. Josephus vero scribit, undecies centena millia fame et gladio periisse, et alia centum millia captivorum publice venundata. Ut autem tanta multitudo Jerosolymis reperiretur, causam azymorum fuisse refert, ob quam ex omni gente Judaeae ad Templum confluentes, urbe quasi carcere sunt reclusi: oportuit enim iisdem diebus Paschae eos interfici, in quibus Salvatorem crucifixerant. .

26

70 a Post Neronem GALBA in Hiberia, VITELLIUS in Germania, OTHO Romae imperium arripuerunt.

3

71 b Marcus Fabius Quintilianus Romam a Galba perducitur. *

CCXII

Olympias

4

72 c Galba septimo mense imperii sui, in medio Romanae urbis foro, capite truncatur. d Vespasianus duobus praeliis superatos Judaeos ad muros compulit. e Otho tertio regni sui mense, apud Bebriacum propria manu occubuit. () b Colligitur omne tempus in secundum annum Vespasiani, et novissimam eversionem Jerosolymarum: f Antiochiae secundus episcopus ordinatur Ignatius. a quinto decimo Tiberii Caesaris anno, et ab exordio Evangelicae praedicationis, XII [Olympiades]. g Vitellius octavo imperii sui mense a Vespasiani ducibus occisus, in Tiberim projicitur. () Romanorum VII, VESPASIANUS regnavit annis IX, mensibus XI, diebus XXII. a captivitate autem, quam ab Antiocho perpassi sunt, anni CCXXXIX

1 h Vespasianus apud Judaeam imperator ab exercitu appellatus, et bellum Tito filio commendans, Romam per Alexandriam proficiscitur.

25

69 porro a Darii secundo anno, sub quo rursum Templum aedificatum est, anni, DXC a prima autem aedificatione Templi sub Salomone usque ad novissimam ejus ruinam, quae sub Vespasiano facta est, anni MCII . i Capitolium Romae incensum.

[270/271]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

CCXIII Olympias circa Sabinos, anno aetatis LXIX. (*)

5 a Vespasianus Capitolium aedificare orsus.

73 Romanorum VIII, TITUS, regnavit annis II, mensibus II. b In Alexandria facta seditio.

1 a Titus filius Vespasiani in utraque lingua disertissimus fuit, et tantae bonitatis, ut cum quadam die recordatus fuisset in coena, nihil se illo die cuiquam praestitisse, dixit: 'Amici, hodie diem perdidit.'

79

2090 6 c Achaia, Lycia, Rhodus, Byzantium, Samus, Thracia, Cilicia, Comagene, quae liberae antea et sub regibus amicis erant, in provincias redactae. *

74

7 d Colossus erectus habens altitudinis pedes CVII.

75 b Mons Vesuvius ruptus in vertice tantum ex se jecit incendii, ut regiones vicinas et urbes cum hominibus exureret. e Q. Asconius Pedianus scriptor historicus clarus habetur, qui LXXIII aetatis suae anno captus luminibus, XII postea annis in summo honore consenescit. * c Titus Musonium Rufum philosophum de exilio revocat. *

8

76 d Titus amphitheatrum Romae aedificat et in dedicatione ejus quinque millia ferarum occidit. * f Gabinianus celeberrimi nominis rhetor in Gallia docuit. *

2 e Romanae Ecclesiae II constituitur Episcopus, CLETUS, annis XII.

80

CCXIV

Olympias

9 g Tres civitates Cypri terraemotu corruerunt.

77 f Romae plurimae aedes incendio concremantur. h Lues ingens Romae facta, ita ut per multos dies in ephemeriden decem millia ferme mortuorum hominum referrentur. g Titus morbo periit in ea villa, qua pater. pridie Idus Septembres, anno aetatis XLII. 1 (*)

CCXV

Olympias

10 i Vespasianus Colonias deduxit, et mortuus est profluvio ventris in villa propria

78 Romanorum IX, DOMITIANUS, regnavit annis XV, mensibus V. h Domitianus Titi frater junior. *

(1) Titus died on September 13, 81 AD at Aquae Cutiliae, where his father Vespasian had died two years earlier.

The ides of September are the 12th.

[272/273]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD a Domitiani uxor Augusta appellatur.

9 a Multa opera Romae facta, in quibus Capitolium, Forum transitorium, divorum Porticus, Isium ac Serapium, Stadium, Horrea piperataria, Vespasiani templum, Minerva Chalcidica, Odeum, Forum Trajani, Thermae Trajanae et Titianae, Senatus, Ludus matutinus, Mica aurea, Meta sudans, et Pantheon. 1 *

89

2 b Decreto senatus Titus inter deos refertur. 82 c Domitianus eunuchos fieri prohibuit.

3 d Tres virgines Vestae ob stuprum damnatae.

83 e Plurimos senatorum Domitianus in exsilium mittit.

10

90

2100 4 f Secundus Alexandrinae Ecclesiae constituitur episcopus, Abilius, qui praefuit annis XIII.

84 b Domitianus de Dacis et Germanis triumphat.

CCXVI

Olympias

5 g Domitianus templum sine admixtione lignorum construit.

85

11 c Domitianus tantae superbiae fuit, ut aureas et argenteas statuas sibi in Capitolio poni iusserit: Haecque et caetera omnia suo tantum titulo, sine ulla prisci auctoris memoria, signaret. *

91

6 h Primus Domitianus dominum se et deum appellare iussit. *

86 d Maxima virginum Vestalium Cornelia convicta stupri, juxta legem viva defossa est. i Nasamones et Daci dimicantes contra Romanos victi.

7 k Duo menses aliter appellati, September Germanicus, et October Domitianus.

87

12 e Domitianus prohibuit vites in urbibus seri.

92

8 l Quinctilianus ex Hispania Calaguritanus, qui primus Romae publicam scholam et salarium e fisco accepit, claruit. *

88 f Romanae Ecclesiae episcopus III praefuit, CLEMENS, annis IX.

CCXVIII

Olympias

CCXVII

Olympias

13 g Flavius Josephus vicesimum librum Antiquitatum his temporibus scribit.

93 m Domitianus plurimos nobilium in exsilium mittit, et occidit. n Domitianus mathematicos et philosophos Romana urbe pellit. h Domitianus multos nobilium perdidit, quosdam vero in exsilium misit.

(1) The Ludus Matutinus was a school for the training of bestiarii, "beast fighters." The Meta Sudans was a fountain built next to the Colosseum in the second half of the 1st century A.D.

"The Mica Aurea was a little palace which the Emperor Domitian had built on Monte Caelio's west side across from his large imperial palace on the Palatin hill. It was located by the Via Triumphalis of ancient times, nowadays

Via di San Gregorio, between the ancient roads, the Clivus Pulveratus (which does not exist today), and the Clivus Scauri, which today is called Clivio di Scauro. The latin name means "the little gold-beaming (house)", as "mica" means "a crumb, or a piece" or "a little room" and "aurea" means "golden"

or "beaming like gold" and the little palace which was built as a private residence as opposed to the large official palace did have a golden roof."

[274/275]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

2110

14 a Secundus post Neronem Domitianus Christianos persequitur, et sub eo apostolus Joannes in Patmon insulam relegatus, Apocalypsim vidit, quam Irenaeus interpretatur.

94 a Alexandrinae ecclesiae III episcopus praefuit Cerdo, annis XI. b Persecutio a Domitiano b Senatus decrevit, ut omnia quae Domitianus statuerat, in irritum deducerentur. Itaque multi, quos injuste ejecerat, de exilio reversi: nonnulli bona propria receperunt. Aiunt et apostolum Joannem hoc tempore exilio solutum, Ephesum secessisse, in qua urbe et hospitium, et amicos amantissimos sui habebat.

15 c Domitianus rursum philosophos et mathematicos Roma per edictum extrudit.

95

16 d Apollonius Tyaneus, et Euphrates insignes philosophi habentur.

96

1

97 e Domitianus eos, qui de genere David erant, interfici praecipit, ut nullus Judaeorum regni reliquus foret. Scribit Brutius, plurimos Christianorum sub Domitiano fecisse martyrium, inter quos et Flaviam Domitillam Flavii Clementis consulis ex sorore neptem in insulam Pontiam relegatam, quia se Christianam esse testata sit. c Justus a Tiberiade Judaeorum scriptor agnoscitur. d Nerva morbo periit in hortis Sallustianis anno aetatis LXXII cum jam Trajanum adoptasset in filium. (*) e Trajanus Agrippinae in Galliis imperator factus, natus Italicae in Hispania. * Romanorum XI, TRAJANUS, regnavit annis XIX, mensibus VI. f Multa signa atque portenta Romae et toto orbi facta.

1 f Decreto senatus Nerva inter deos relatus est. 98

2 g Romanae Ecclesiae episcopatum IV suscepit, EVARISTUS, annis IX.

99 g Domitianus occisus in Palatio, et per vespillones ignobiliter exportatus anno aetatis XLV. (*)

3 h JOANNEM APOSTOLUM usque ad Trajani tempora Irenaeus episcopus permansisse scribit: post quem auditores ejus insignes fuerunt

100

CCXIX Olympias Romanorum X, NERVA, regnavit anno uno, mensibus IV.

[276/277]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD Papias Hieropolitanus episcopus et Polycarpus Smyrnaeus, et Ignatius Antiochenus. post quem tertius episcopus constituitur Eron. (*) a Plinius Secundus, cum quamdam provinciam regeret, et in magistratu suo plurimos Christianorum interfecisset, multitudine eorum perterritus, quaesivit a Trajano, quid facto opus esset, nuntians ei, Praeter obstinationem non sacrificandi, et antelucanos coetus ad canendum cuidam Christo ut Deo, nihil apud eos reperiri. Praeterea ad confoederandam disciplinam, vetari ab his homicidia, furta, adulteria, latrocinia, et his similia. Ad quae commotus Trajanus rescribit: "Hoc genus quidem inquirendum non esse, oblatos vero puniri oportere." Tertullianus refert in Apologetico.

CCXX

Olympias

4 a Trajanus de Dacis et Scythis triumphat. 101

5 b Trajanus, victo rege Decebalo, Daciam fecit provinciam: Iberos, Sauromatas, Orsoenos, Arabes, Bosphoranos, Colchos in fidem accepit: Seleuciam, Ctesiphontem, Babylonem occupavit, et tenuit: in mari Rubro classem instituit, ut per eam Indiae fines vastaret. *

102

6

103

2120 7 c Romae aurea domus incendio conflagravit.

104

CCXXI

Olympias

8 d Terraemotu quatuor urbes Asiae subversae, Elaea, Myrrhina, Pytanae, Cymae: et Graeciae duae, Opuntiorum, et Oritorum.

105

9 e Alexandrinae ecclesiae IV episcopus ordinatur nomine Primus, annis XII.

106

CCXXII

Olympias

10 f Trajano adversus Christianos persecutionem movente, Simon filius Cleophae, qui Jerosolymis episcopatum tenebat, crucifigitur: cui succedit Justus.

107 b Romanae ecclesiae episcopatum V tenet, ALEXANDER, annis X. g Item persecutio a Trajano

12 c Plinius Secundus Novocomensis orator et historicus insignis habetur, cujus plurima ingenii opera exstant. *

109 g Ignatius quoque Antiochenae ecclesiae episcopus Romam perductus, bestiis traditur:

13 d Tres Galatiae civitates terraemotu erutae.

110

11

108 e Pantheon Romae fulmine concrematum.

[278/279]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

14 a Post Justum Ecclesiae Jerosolymitanae episcopatum IV suscepit Zachaeus, post quem V Tobias, cui succedit VI Benjamin, ac deinde VII Joannes, et VIII Matthias, in cujus locum IX constituitur Philippus.

111 a Trajanus morbo in Selinunte perit, sive, ut alibi scriptum reperimus, apud Seleuciam Isauriae profluvio ventris extinctus est, anno aetatis LXIII, mense IX, die IV. Ossa ejus in urnam auream collata, et in foro sub columna posita: solusque omnium intra Urbem sepultus est 1. (*)

15

112 CCXXIII Olympias

16 b Trajanus Armeniam, Assyriam, Mesopotamiam fecit provincias. *

113

CCXXIV Olympias Romanorum XII, HADRIANUS, regnavit annis XXI c Terraemotus Antiochiam pene totam subruit civitatem.

1 b Hadrianus Italicae in Hispania natus, consobrinae Trajani filius fuit. *

117

2130 17 d Judaei, qui in Libya erant, adversum cohabitatores suos alienigenas dimicant. Similiter in Aegypto, et in Alexandria, apud Cyrenem quoque, et Thebaidem magna seditione contendunt; verum gentilium pars superat in Alexandria.

114 c Hadrianus Alexandriam a Romanis subversam publicis instauravit expensis. d Hadrianus Trajani invidens gloriae, de Assyria, Mesopotamia, Armenia, quas ille provincias fecerat, revocavit exercitus. *

18 e Judaeis Mesopotamiae rebellantibus praecepit imperator Trajanus Lysiae Quieto, ut eos provincia exterminaret: adversus quos Quietus aciem instruens infinita millia eorum interfecit, et ob hoc procurator Judaeae ab imperatore decernitur.

115 e Hadrianus Judaeos capit secundo contra Romanos rebellantes.

2 f Senatus Trajanum in deos refert.

118 g Hadrianus eruditissimus fuit in utraque lingua, sed in puerorum amore parum continens fuit.
*

19 f Salaminam urbem Cypri, interfectis in ea gentilibus, subvertere Judaei. h Hadrianus reliqua tributorum urbibus relaxavit, chartis publice incensis: plurimos etiam ipsis tributis liberos praestitit.

(1) I.e. within the pomerium.

[280/281]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

3 aPlutarchus Cheronaeus, et Sextus 1 , et Agathobolus, et Oenomaus 2 philosophi insignes habentur.

119 ad eversionem, quam ab Hadriano perpressa est Jerusalem, ex circumcissione episcopi praefuerunt. b Romanae Ecclesiae episcopatum VI tenet SIXTUS, annis X.

CCXXVI

Olympias

9 a Hadrianus sacris Eleusinae initiatus, multa Atheniensibus dona largitus est.

125 c Alexandrinae Ecclesiae V constituitur episcopus Justus, annis XI. b Quadratus discipulus apostolorum, et Aristides Atheniensis noster philosophus, libros pro Christiana religione Hadriano dedere compositos. Et Serenus Granius legatus, vir apprime nobilis, litteras ad imperatorem mittit, iniquum esse dicens, clamoribus vulgi innocentium hominum sanguinem concedi, et ullo crimine, nominis tantum et sectae reos fieri. Quibus commotus Hadrianus Minutio Fundano proconsuli Asiae scripsit, sine objectu criminum Christianos non condemnandos. Cujus epistolae usque ad nostram memoriam durat exemplum.

4 d Bellum contra Sauromatas gestum.

120 e Terraemotu facto Nicomedia ruit, et Nicaenae urbis plurima eversa sunt: ad quarum instaurationem Hadrianus de publico est largitus impensas.

10

126

CCXXV

Olympias

5 f Euphrates Stoicus philosophus moritur.

121 g Hadrianus in Libyam, quae a Judaeis vastata fuerat, Colonias deducit.

11

127

6 h Hadrianus Atheniensibus leges petentibus 3, ex Draconis et Solonis, reliquorumque libris jura composuit 4.

122

7 i Cephisus fluvijs Eleusinam inundavit, quem Hadrianus ponte conjungens, Athenis hiemem exegit.

123

12 c Imperator Hadrianus Pater Patriae appellatur, et uxor ejus Augusta.

128 k Jerosolymis X post Philippum constituitur episcopus Seneca, post quem XI Justius, cui successit XII Levi, post quem XIII Ephres, XIV Joses, XV Judas. Hi omnes usque d Romanae ecclesiae episcopatum VII suscepit TELESOPHORUS, annis XI.

2140

8

124 e Antiochiae constituitur IV episcopus, Cornelius.

(1) Sextus Empiricus.

(2) Oenomaus of Gadara.

(3) I.e. for a constitution.

(4) The other legislators.

[282/283]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD CCXXVII Olympias CCXXVIII Olympias a Nicopolis et Caesarea terraemotu conciderunt. a Basilides haeresiarches in Alexandria commoratur, a quo Gnostici.

13 b Antinous puer egregius eximiae pulchritudinis, in Aegypto moritur, quem Hadrianus diligenter sepeliens, --nam in deliciis habuerat-- in deos refert, ex cuius nomine etiam urbs appellata est.

129

17 b Barcochebas, dux factionis Iudaeorum, nolentes sibi Christianos adversum Romanum militem ferre subsidium, omnimodis cruciatibus necat.

133

2150 18 c Bellum Iudaicum, quod in Palaestina gerebatur, finem accepit, rebus Iudaeorum penitus oppressis. Ex quo tempore etiam introeundi eis Ierosolymam licentia ablata, primum Dei nutu, sicut prophetae vaticinati sunt, deinde Romanis interdictionibus.

134

14 c Alexandrinae ecclesiae VI episcopus praefuit Eumenes, annis XIII.

130

15 d Templum Veneris ab Hadriano Romae factum. *

131

19

135 e Salvius Julianus perpetuum composuit edictum. * f Hadrianus Athenis hiemem exigens, Eleusinam invisit. d Ierosolymis primus ex gentibus constituitur episcopus Marcus, cessantibus his, qui fuerant ex Iudaeis.

16 g Hadrianus, cum insignes et plurimas aedes Athenis fecisset, agonem edidit, bibliothecamque miri operis exstruxit.

132

20 e Aelia ab Aelio Hadriano condita, et in fronte ejus portae, qua Bethleem egredimur, Sus sculptus in marmore, significans Romanae potestati subjacere Iudaeos. Nonnulli a Tito Aelio filio Vespasiani exstructam arbitrantur.

136 h Iudaei in arma versi Palaestinam depopulati sunt, tenente provinciam Tynio Rufo, cui ad opprimendos rebelles Hadrianus misit exercitum.

CCXXIX Olympias i Favorinus et Polemon rhetores insignes habentur.

21 f Hadrianus morbo intercutis aquae apud Baias moritur major sexagenario. (*)

137

[284/285]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD Romanorum XIII, T. ANTONINUS, cognomento Pius, cum liberis suis Aurelio et Lucio regnavit, annis XXII, mensibus III.

10

147

11

148 CCXXXII Olympias

1 a Romanae ecclesiae episcopatum VIII, suscipit HYGINUS, annis IV.

138

12 a Arrianus Philosophus Nicomediensis agnoscitur, et Maximus Tyrius.

149

2 b Antoninus Pater Patriae appellatur.

139

13 b Apollonius Stoicus natione Chalcidicus, et Basilides Scythopolitanus philosophi illustres habentur: qui Verissimi quoque Caesaris praeceptores fuerunt.

150

3 c Sub Hygino Romanae urbis episcopo Valentinus haeresiarches, et Cerdo magister Marcionis, Romam venerunt.

140

14

151

15

152

CCXXX Olympias CCXXXIII Olympias

4 d Justinus philosophus librum pro nostra religione conscriptum Antonino tradidit.

141

16 c Alexandrinae ecclesiae VIII episcopus praefuit, Celadion, annis XIV.

153

2170 17 d Crescens Cynicus agnoscitur, qui Justino nostri dogmatis philosopho, quia se gulosum et praevaricatorem philosophiae coarguebat, persecutionem suscitavit, in qua ille gloriose pro Christo sanguinem fudit.

154

5 e Romae IX episcopus ordinatur PIUS, annis XV.

142

18

155 f Antiochiae V constituitur episcopus Heros.

19

156

6 g Alexandriae VII episcopatum suscipit Marcus, annis X.

143 CCXXXIV Olympias h Valentinus haereticus agnoscitur, et permanet usque ad Anicetum.

20 e Romanae ecclesiae episcopatum X tenet ANICETUS, annis X, sub quo Polycarpus Romam veniens multos ab haeretico errore correxit.

157

21

158

2160 7 i Mesomedes Cretensis citharoedorum carminum musicus poeta agnoscitur.

144

22

159

23

160

CCXXXI

Olympias

CCXXXV

Olympias

8 k Taurus Berytius Platonicae sectae philosophus clarus habetur. f Jerosolymae episcopatum post Marcum XVII suscepit Cassianus, post quem XVIII Publius,

9

[286/287]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD cui succedit XIX Maximus, XX Julianus, XXI Gaianus, XXII Symmachus, XXIII Caius, XXIV Julianus, XXV Capito. a Lucius Caesar de Parthis cum fratre 1 triumphavit.

6 b Alexandrinae ecclesiae IX episcopus praefuit Agrippinus, annis XII.

166 a Antoninus Pius apud Lorium villam suam, XII ab Urbe milliario, moritur anno vitae suae LXXVII. (*) d Perse-cutio c Persecutione orta in Asia, Polycarpus et Pionius fecere martyrium, quorum scriptae quoque passionες feruntur.

167

7 Romanorum XIV, MARCUS ANTONINUS, qui et VERUS, regnavit; et L. AURELIUS COMMODUS, annis XIX, mense uno.

e Plurimi in Gallia gloriose ob Christi nomen interfecti, quorum usque in praesentem diem condita libris certamina perseverant.

1 b Hi primum aequo jure imperium administraverunt, cum usque ad hoc tempus, singuli Augusti fuerint. *

161

2 c Lucio Caesari Athenis sacrificanti ignis in coelo ab oriente in occidentem referri visus.

162

8 f Lues multas provincias occupavit, Roma ex parte vexata. .

168 g Romani contra Germanos, Marcomannos, Quados, Sarmatas, et Dacos dimicant. .

3 d Vologaesus rex Parthorum, vicinas sibi Romanas provincias depopulatus est.

163 CCXXXVII Olympias

2180 4 e Fronto orator insignis habetur, qui Marcum Antoninum Verum Latinis litteris erudit. *

164 h Romanae ecclesiae episcopatum XI suscepit SOTER, annis VIII.

9 i Antiochiae VI episcopus ordinatur Theophilus, cujus plurima ingenii opera exstant.

169 f Seleucia Assyriae urbs cum CCC millibus hominum a Romanis capta. *

CCXXXVI Olympias k Lucius imperator anno regni sui IX, sive, ut quidam putant, XI inter Concordiam et Altinum apoplexi exstinctus est, sedens cum fratre in vehiculo. (*)

5 g Apud Pisas Peregrinus philosophus rogo, quem ex lignis composuerat, incenso, semet superjecit.

165 (1) His 'brother' is Marcus Aurelius.

[288/289]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

10 a Antonino imperatori Melito Asianus Sardensis episcopus Apologeticum pro Christianis tradidit.

2190 14 semel Pertinaci et exercitui, qui cum eo in Quadorum regione pugnabat, siti oppresso, pluvia divinitus missa est; cum econtrario Germanos et Sarmatas fulmina persequerentur, et plurimos eorum interficerent. Exstant litterae Marci Aurelii gravissimi imperatoris, quibus illam Germanicam sitim, Christianorum forte militum precationibus, impetrato imbre, discussam contestatur.

174 b Apollinaris Asianus Hierapolitanus episcopus insignis habetur.

15

175

11 c Dionysius episcopus Corinthiorum clarus habetur, et Pinytus Cretensis vir eloquentissimus. d Pseudoprophetia, quae Cataphrygas nominatur, accepit exordium, auctore Montano, Priscilla, Maximillaque insanis vatibus.

16

176 a Atticus Platonicae sectae philosophus agnoscitur.

12 e Tatianus haereticus agnoscitur, a quo Encratitae.

CCXXXIX

Olympias

17 b Romanae Ecclesiae XII episcopatum suscipit ELEUTHERIUS, annis XV.

177 f Bardesanes alterius haereseos princeps notus efficitur. c Antiochiae VII episcopus constituitur Maximinus. g Oppianus Cilix poeta cognoscitur, qui Halieutica miro splendore conscribit. d Antoninus Commodum filium suum consortem regni facit. h Tanta per totum orbem pestilentia fuit, ut pene usque ad internecionem Romanus exercitus deletus fuerit. * e Antoninus cum filio de hostibus triumphavit, quos, per triennium apud Carnuntum habens stativa castra, vastaverat. (*) CCXXVIII Olympias

13 i Imperator Antoninus multis adversum se nascentibus bellis saepe ipse intererat, saepe duces nobilissimos destinabat, in quibus

18 f Imperatores multis multa largiti sunt, et pecuniam, quae fisco debebatur, provinciis concedentes, tabulas debitorum in medio Romanae urbis foro incendi praeceperunt,

178

[290/291]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD ac ne quid bonitati deesset, severiores quasque leges novis Constitutionibus temperaverunt.

Post quem XXVII Antoninus, XXVIII Valens, XXIX Dulichianus, XXX Narcissus, XXXI Dius, XXXII Germanio, XXXIII Gordius, XXXIV rursum Narcissus. Tantis apud Jerosolymam episcopis constitutis, non potuimus discernere tempora singulorum, eo quod usque in praesentem diem eorum episcopatum anni minime salvarentur.

7

186

19

179 a Antoninus post victoriam, adeo in editione munerum magnificus fuit, ut centum simul leones exhibuerit.

8

187 b Commodus a senatu Augustus appellatur. c Smyrna urbs Asiae terraemotu ruit, ad cujus instaurationem decennalis tributorum immunitas data est.

9 a In Capitolium fulmen ruit, et magna inflammatione facta, bibliotheca, et vicinae quoque aedes concrematae.

188 d Antoninus in Pannonia morbo periit. e Alexandrinae ecclesiae X episcopatum sortitur Julianus, annis X.

CCXLII

Olympias

10 b Alexandriae XI constituitur episcopus Demetrius, annis XLIII.

189 Romanorum XV, COMMODUS, regnavit annis XIII. c Commodus imperator colossi capite sublato, suae imagini caput imposuit.

1 f Commodus de Germanis triumphavit. 180

CCXL

Olympias

2 g Templum Serapidis Alexandriae incensum. 181

11 d Serapion, VIII Antiochiaepiscopus ordinatur.

190

3 h Irenaeus episcopus Lugdunensis insignis habetur.

182 e Commodus multos nobilium interficit, et spectacula populo Romano praebet insignia.

4 i Thermae Commodianae Romae factae. 183

2200 5 k Commodus Septembrem mensem nomine suo appellavit. *

184

12 f Incendio Romae facto palatium et aedes Vestae, plurimaeque urbis pars solo coaequatur.

191

CCXLI

Olympias

6 l Jerosolymis XXVI ordinatur episcopus Maximus,

185

[292/293]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

13 a Commodus strangulatur in domo Vestiliani.

192 a Clemens Alexandrinae ecclesiae presbyter, et Pantaenus Stoicus philosophus, in disputatione dogmatis nostri disertissimi habentur.

CCXLIII Olympias Romanorum XVI, AELIUS PERTINAX, regnavit mensibus VI.

3 b Narcissus Jerosolymitarum episcopus, et Theophilus Caesariensis, Polycrates quoque, et Bacchylus Asanae provinciae episcopi insignes habentur.

195

1 b Pertinax septuagenario major, cum praefecturam Urbis ageret, ex senatusconsulto imperare iussus est.

193 c Romae episcopatum suscipit XIII, VICTOR, annis X, cujus mediocria de religione exstant volumina.

4 c Quaestione orta in Asia inter episcopos, an secundum legem Mosi, 14 mensis Pascha observandum esset, Victor Romanae urbis episcopus, et Narcissus Jerosolymarum, Polycrates quoque, et Irenaeus, et Bacchylus, plurimique ecclesiarum pastores, quid eis probabile visum fuerat, litteris ediderunt, quarum memoria ad nos usque perdurat.

196 d Pertinax, obsecrante senatu, ut uxorem suam Augustam, et filium suum Caesarem appellaret, contradixit: sufficere testatus, quod ipse regnaret invitus. e Pertinax occiditur in palatio, Juliani jurisperiti scelere: quem postea Severus apud Milvium pontem interfecit. (*)

CCXLIV

Olympias

5 d Judaicum et Samariticum bellum motum.

197 Romanorum XVII, SEVERUS, regnavit annis XVIII.

6 e Severus Parthos, et Adiabenos superavit, Arabesque interiores ita cecidit, ut regionem eorum Romanam provinciam faceret, ob quae Parthicus, Arabicus, et Adiabenicus cognominatus est. (*)

198

2210 2 f Severus provincia Tripolitana oppido Lepti, solus ex Africa usque in praesentem diem, Romanis imperator fuit, et in honorem Pertinacis, quem Julianus occiderat, Pertinacem se cognominari jussit. *

194 g Eo quod superioris anni sex mensibus regnavit Severus.

7

199

8

200

[294/295]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD a Severo imperante, thermae Severianae apud Antiochiam, et Romae factae, et Septizonium exstructum. * CCXLVII Olympias

17 a Severus moritur Eboraci in Britannia.

209

18

210

CCXLV Olympias Romanorum XVIII, ANTONINUS cognomento CARACALLA, Severi filius, regnavit annis VII.

9 b Romae XIV ecclesiae episcopatum suscepit ZEPHYRINUS, annis XVII.

201

1 b Antiochiae IX episcopus constituitur Asclepiades.

211 10 d V Persecutio c Persecutione in Christianos facta, Leonides Origenis pater gloriosa martyrii morte transfertur.

202

2 c Alexander XXXV Jerosolymorum episcopus ordinatur, adhuc vivente Narcisso, et cum eo pariter Ecclesiam regit.

212

11

203

2220 12 e Alexander ob confessionem Dominici nominis insignis habetur.

204 h In hoc anno Jubeleum a majoribus invenimus observatum, id est XII anno Severi et CCLI Antiochiae urbis.

CCXLVIII Olympias f Clemens multa et varia conscribit.

3 d Antoninus Caracalla cognominatus propter genus vestis, quod Romae erogaverat, et e contrario Caracallae ex ejus nomine Antoninianae dictae. *

213 g Musanus nostrae philosophiae scriptor agnoscitur.

2230

4

214

CCXLVI

Olympias

13 i Clodio Albino, qui se in Gallia Caesarem fecerat, apud Lugdunum interfecto, Severus in Britannos bellum transfert: ubi ut receptas provincias ab incursione barbarica faceret securiores, vallum per CXXXII millia passuum a mari ad mare duxit. (*)

205

5 e Antoninus Romae thermas sui nominis aedificavit. *

215

6 f Antoninus tam impatiens libidinis fuit, ut novercam suam Juliam uxorem duxerit. *

216

14

206

CCXLIX

Olympias

7 g Antoninus interficitur inter Edessam et Carras anno aetatis XLIII. (*)

217

15

207

16 k Tertullianus Afer centurionis proconsularis filius omnium Ecclesiarum sermone celebratur. 1 *

208 Romanorum XIX, MACRINUS, regnavit anno uno.

1 h Macrinus praefecturam praetorio gerens, imperator factus. *

218 l Origenes Alexandriae studiis eruditur.

(1) A scholion in 'O' reads: "Tertullian was under the rule of Severus the African, 180 years after the Lord."

It is not in the same hand as the main text.

[296/297]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD a Antiochiae X episcopus constituitur Philetus.

Romanorum XXI, ALEXANDER, Mamaeae filius, regnavit annis XIII. b Circensibus Vulcanaliorum Romae amphitheatrum incensum.

1 a Alexander Xerxem regem Persarum gloriosissime vicit, et disciplinae militaris tam severus corrector fuit, ut quasdam tumultuantes legiones integras exauctoraverit. *

223 c Abgarus 1, vir sanctus, regnavit Edessae, ut vult Africanus. d Macrinus occiditur in Archelaide.

2240

2

224 Romanorum XX, MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS, regnavit annis IV.

CCLI

Olympias

3 b Romanae ecclesiae XVI ordinatur episcopus URBANUS, annis IX.

225

1 e Marcus Aurelius Antonini Caracallae, ut putabatur, filius, et sacerdos Eliogabali templi, adeo impudice in imperio suo vixit, ut nullum genus obscenitatis omiserit. *

219

4 c Ulpianus jurisconsultus, assessor Alexandri insignissimus habetur. *

226

5 d Thermae Alexandrinae Romae aedificatae. *

227

2 f Romanae Ecclesiae episcopatum suscepit XV, CALLISTUS, annis V.

220

6 e Geminus presbyter Antiochenus, et Hippolytus, et Beryllus episcopus Arabiae Bostrenus, clari scriptores habentur.

228 g Eliogabalum templum Romae aedificatum. *

CCL

Olympias

CCLII

Olympias

3 h In Palaestina Nicopolis, quae prius Emmaus vocabatur, urbs condita est, legationis industriam pro ea suscipiente Julio Africano scriptore Temporum.

221

7 f Antiochiae XI constituitur episcopus Zebennus.

229

8 g Origenes Alexandriae clarus habetur.

230

9 h Alexandrinae ecclesiae XII ordinatur episcopus Heraclas, annis XVI.

231

4 i Antoninus Romae occiditur tumultu militari, cum matre Symiasera. (*)

222

10 i Alexander in matrem Mamaeam unice pius fuit, et ob id omnibus amabilis. *

232

(1) Abgar VIII.

[298/299]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

CCLIII

Olympias

3 a Gordianus admodum adolescens, Parthorum natione superata, cum victor reverteretur ad patriam, fraude Philippi praefecti praetorio haud longe a Romano solo interfectus est. (*)

241

11 a Origenes de Alexandria ad Caesaream Palaestinae transit.

233

4

242

2250 12 b Romanae ecclesiae XVII episcopatum suscepit PONTIANUS, annis V.

234

5

243

13 c Alexander occiditur Moguntiacy tumultu militari.

235 2260 6 b Gordiano milites tumulum aedificant, qui Euphrati imminet, ossibus ejus Romam revectis. *

244 Romanorum XXII, MAXIMINUS, regnavit annis III.

Romanorum XXIV, PHILIPPUS, regnavit annis VII.

1 d Maximinus primus ex corpore militari, sine senatus auctoritate, ab exercitu imperator electus est. *

236

CCLVI

Olympias

1 c Philippus Philippum filium consortem regni facit, primusque omnium ex Romanis Imperatoribus Christianus fuit. (*)

245

CCLIV Olympias 2 f VI Persecutio. e Maximinus adversum Ecclesiarum sacerdotes persecutionem facit.

237

2 d Regnantibus Philippis millesimus annus Romanae urbis expletus est, ob quam solemnitatem innumerabiles bestiae in circo magno interfectae ludique in campo Martio theatrales, tribus diebus ac noctibus populo pervigilante, celebrati.

246

3 g Maximinus Aquileiae a Pupieno occiditur. (*)

238 Romanorum XXIII, GORDIANUS 1, regnavit annis 6.

1 h Romae XVIII episcopus ordinatur ANTHERUS mense uno, post quem XIX, FABIANUS, annis XIII.

239

3 e Theatrum Pompeii incensum, et Hecatonstylon.

247

2 i Gordiano Romam ingresso, Pupienus et Albinus, qui imperium arripuerant, in palatio occisi. *

240 f Athlamos natali Romanae urbis cucurrit, et agon mille annorum actus. 1

CCLV

Olympias

4 g Philippus urbem

248 (1) There were three Gordians, not one.

(2) The manuscripts contain either 'athlamos' or '600'. The reason is clear: the Greek contained the numeral for 600, and Jerome initially misread it as a proper name, 'Athlamos'. Later he realised the mistake, and corrected it, but some manuscripts derive from uncorrected copies of the text

[300/301]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD nominis sui in Thracia construit. ipse martyrio coronatus est. Exstant ad eum Cypriani octo epistolae. (*)

CCLVII

Olympias

5 a Alexandrinam Ecclesiam XXIII episcopus tenuit Dionysius, annis XVII.

249 CCLVIII Olympias

6

250

1 a Pestilens morbus multas totius orbis provincias occupavit, maximeque Alexandriam et Aegyptum, ut scribit Dionysius, et Cypriani de Mortalitate testis est liber. (*)

253

7 b Philippus senior Veronae, Romae junior occiditur. (*)

251 Romanorum XXV, DECIUS, regnavit anno uno, mensibus III. c Decius e Pannonia inferiore Budaliae natus fuit. * b Novatus presbyter Cypriani, Romam veniens, Novatianum, et caeteros confessores sibi sociat, eo quod Cornelius paenitentes apostatas recepisset. (*)

1 d VII persecutio

d Decius cum Philippos, patrem et filium, interfecisset, ob odium eorum, in Christianos persecutionem movet.

232 c Antiochiae XIII constituitur episcopus Demetrianus. e Antonius monachus in Aegypto nascitur. f Romae amphitheatrum incensum.

2270 2 d Romanae Ecclesiae episcopatum tenet XXI LUCIUS, menses VIII. Post quem XXII STEPHANUS, annis III. Exstant ad utrumque Cypriani epistolae. (*)

254 g Alexandro Jerosolymorum episcopo apud Caesaream Palaestinae ob martyrium interfecto, et Antiochiae Babyla, Mazabanus, et Fabius episcopi constituuntur. e Jubileus juxta maiores nostros. f Gallus et Volusianus, cum adversum Aemilianum, qui in Moesia res novas moliebatur, ex Urbe profecti essent, in foro Flaminii, sive, ut alii putant, Interamnae interfecti sunt. (*) h Decius cum filio in Abritto occiditur.

Romanorum XXVI, GALLUS et VOLUSIANUS Galli filius, regnaverunt annis II, mensibus IV. i Romanae ecclesiae episcopatum, post Fabiani gloriosam mortem, XX suscepit CORNELIUS, annis II, qui et g Aemilianus tertio mense invasae tyrannidis exstinctus est. *

[302/303]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD Romanorum XXVII, VALERIANUS et GALLIENUS, regnaverunt annis XV.

Pannonias occupaverunt. *

2280 10 a Germanis Hispanias obtinentibus, Tarracon expugnata est. Parthi Mesopotamiam tenentes, Syriam incursaverunt. *

264

1 a Valerianus in Rhetia ab exercitu Augustus; Gallienus Romae a senatu Caesar appellatus est. *

255

2

256

CCLXI

Olympias

CCLIX

Olympias

11 b Alexandrinae ecclesiae XIV episcopus ordinatur Maximus, annis XVIII.

265 b Romanae ecclesiae episcopatum tenet XXIII, XYSTUS, annis VIII.

12 c Romae XXIV episcopus constituitur DIONYSIUS, annis XII.

266

3 c Cyprianus primum Rhetor, deinde presbyter, ad extremum Carthaginensis episcopus martyrio coronatur. (*)

257 d Odenatus decurio Palmyrenus collecta agrestium manu ita Persas cecidit, ut ad Ctesiphontem castra poneret. (*)

4 d Valerianus, in Christianos persecutione commota, statim a Sapore Persarum rege capitur, ibique servitute miserabili consenescit. (*)

258 eVIII persecutio

13 e Hierosolymarum episcopatum tenet Hymenaeus.

267

5 f Paulus Samosatenus a cunctorum praedicatione desciscens, Artemonis haeresim suscitavit: in cujus locum Antiochenae Ecclesiae XVI ordinatur episcopus Domnus. f Sapor, rex Persarum, Syriam, Ciliciam et Cappadociam depopulatur.

14

268

6 g Valeriano in Persas ducto, Gallienus pacem nostris reddidit.

259 g Galliae per Postumum, et Victorinum, et Tetricum receptae. *

CCLX

Olympias

7 h Antiochiae XV constituitur episcopus Paulus Samosatenus.

260

CCLXII

Olympias

15 h Gallienus Mediolani occiditur.

269

8 i Gallieno in omnem lasciviam dissoluto, Germani Ravennam usque venerunt. *

261 Romanorum XXVIII, CLAUDIUS, regnavit anno uno, mensibus IX.

9 k Alamanni vastatis Galliis, in Italiam transiere. * I Graecia, Macedonia, Pontus, Asia, depopulata per Gothos. Quadi et Sarmatae

262 i In Alexandria Bruchium, quod per multos annos fuerat obsessum, tandem destruitur. k
Claudius Gothos, Illyricum et Macedoniam vastantes,

[304/305]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD superat, ob quae in Curia clipeus ei aureus, et in Capitolio statua aurea collocata est. postea Lucaniae fuit, et Zenobia in Urbe summo honore consenuit, a qua hodieque Romae 'Zenobia familia' nuncupatur.

2 a Claudius Sirmii moritur.

271

4 a Aurelianus templum Soli aedificat, et Romam firmioribus muris vallat.

275 b Quintilius Claudii frater a senatu Augustus appellatus, decimo septimo imperii sui die Aquileiae occiditur. * b Primus agón Solis ab Aureliano constitutus. d IX persecutio c Aurelianus cum adversum nos persecutionem movisset, fulmen juxta eum comitesque ejus ruit, ac non multo post, inter Constantinopolim et Heracleam, in Caeno Frurio viae veteris occiditur. (*) Romanorum XXIX, AURELIANUS, regnavit annis V, mensibus VI.

5

276

1 c Antiochenae ecclesiae XVII ordinatur episcopus Timaeus.

272 CCLXIII Olympias CCLXIV Olympias. Romanorum XXX, TACITUS, regnavit menses VI . d Aurelianus, Tetrico apud Catalaunos prodente exercitum suum, Gallias recepit. (*) eQuo apud Pontum occiso, obtinuit FLORIANUS imperium diebus LXXXVIII. Hoc quoque apud Tarsum interfecto.

2

273

1

277 e Zenobia apud Immas, haud longe ab Antiochia vincitur; quae, occiso Odenato marito, Orientis tenebat imperium. In qua pugna strenuissime adversum eam dimicavit Pompeianus dux cognomento Francus, cujus familia hodieque apud Antiochiam perseverat, et ex cujus Evagrius carissimus nobis stirpe descendit. (*) Romanorum XXXI, PROBUS, regnavit annis VI, menses IV.

1 f Romanae Ecclesiae episcopatum XXV suscepit FELIX, annis V.

278 g Probus Gallias a Barbaris occupatas, ingenti virtute restituit. * h Initium LXXXVI Jubelei secundum Hebreos 2 i Anatolius Laodiceus episcopus, philosophorum disciplinis eruditus, plurimo sermone celebratur.

279

2290 3 f Eusebius Laodiceus episcopus insignis habetur.

274 k Secundo anno Probi juxta Antiochenos CCCXXV annus fuit: juxta Tyrios CDII: juxta Laodiceos CCCXXIV: juxta Edessenos DLXXXVIII, juxta Ascalonitas CCCLXXX. g Aurelianus Romae triumphantem Tetricus et Zenobia currum praecesserunt; e quibus Tetricus Corrector

3 l Insana Manichaeorum haeresis in commune humani generis malum exorta.

280

[306/307]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD a Probus Gallos et Pannonios vineas habere permisit, Almamque et aureum montem militari manu consitos provincialibus colendos dedit. 1 * super Tigridem castra ponens, fulmine ictus interiit. (*)

2 a Numerianus cum ob oculorum dolorem lecticula veheretur, insidiis Apri soceri sui occisus est, vix fetore cadaveris, post aliquot dies scelere comperto. (*)

285

CCLXV

Olympias

4 b Antiochiae XVIII constituitur episcopus Cyrillus.

281 b Carinus praelio victus apud Margum occiditur. (*) Romanorum XXXIII, DIOCLETIANUS, regnavit annis XX. c Saturninus Magister exercitus novam civitatem Antiochiae orsus est condere: qui postea imperium molitus invadere Apamiae, occiditur.

1 c Diocletianus Dalmata, scribae filius, imperator electus statim Aprum in militum concione percussit, iurans sine suo scelere Numerianum interfectum.

286

5 d Romanae Ecclesiae episcopatum suscepit XXVI EUTYCHIANUS, mensibus VIII; post quem XXVII GAIUS, annis XV.

282

2 d Diocletianus in consortium regni Herculium Maximianum assumpsit, qui rusticorum multitudine oppressa, quae factioni suae Bacaudarum nomen indiderat, pacem Galliis reddit. (*)

287

6 e Probus tumultu militari apud Sirmium in turre, quae vocatur Ferrata, occiditur. (*)

283

3

288 f Alexandrinae Ecclesiae XV episcopus praefuit Theonas, annis XIX.

CCLXVII

Olympias

4 e Carausius, sumpta purpura, Britannias occupavit, Narsaeus Orienti bellum intulit. *

289 Romanorum XXXII, CARUS cum filiis CARINO et NUMERIANO, annis II. f Quinquegentiani 2 Africam infestaverunt. *

2300

1

284 g Aegyptum Achilleus obtinuit, ob quae Constantius et Galerius Maximianus Caesares adsumuntur in regnum: quorum Constantius Claudii ex filia nepos fuit, Galerius in Dacia haud longe a Serdica natus. Atque ut eos Diocletianus etiam affinitate conjungeret, Constantius

CCLXVI

Olympias

5

290 g Carus Narbonensis, cum omni Parthorum regione vastata Cochem et Ctesiphontem nobilissimas hostium urbes cepisset,

6

291

(1) Eutropii Breviarium Liber Nonus 17: Vineas Gallos et Pannonios

habere permisit, opere militari Almam montem apud Sirmium et Aureum apud Moesiam superiorem vineis conseruit et provincialibus colendos dedit.

(2) The Five Tribes.

[308/309]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD privignam Herculii Theodoram accepit, ex qua postea sex liberos Constantini fratres habuit; Galerius filiam Diocletiani Valeriam duxit, ambo uxores, quas habuerant, repudiare compulsi. (*) episcopus Zabdas.

7

292 a Post decem annos per Asclepiodotum praefectum praetorii Britanniae receptae. *

CCLXX Olympias CCLXVIII Olympias b Juxta Lingonas a Constantio Caesare LX millia Alamannorum caesa. *

8 a Busiris et Coptus contra Romanos rebellantes, ad solum usque subversae sunt.

293

2310

9

294

16 c Galerius Maximianus victus a Narseo ante carpentum Diocletiani purpuratus cucurrit. *

301

10 b Carporum et Basternarum gentes in Romanum solum translatae sunt. *

295 d Veturius magister militiae Christianos milites persequitur, paulatim ex illo jam tempore persecutione adversus nos incipiente.

11 c Primus Diocletianus adorari se ut deum jussit, et gemmas vestibus calceamentisque inseri, cum ante eum omnes imperatores in modum judicum salutarentur, et chlamydem tantum purpuream a privato habitu plus haberent. *

296 e X persecutio

17 fGalerius Maximianus, superato Narseo, et uxoribus, ac liberis, sororibusque ejus captis, a Diocletiano ingenti honore suscipitur. *

302 g Thermae Diocletianae Romae factae, et Maximianae Carthagini. *

CCLXIX

Olympias

12 d Romanae Ecclesiae XXVIII episcopatum suscepit MARCELIANUS, annis IX.

297

18 h Ecclesiae Jerosolymorum XXXVIII praefuit Hermon.

303

13 e Alexandria cum omni Aegypto per Achilleum ducem a Romana potestate desciscens, octavo obsidionis mense a Diocletiano capta est. Itaque plurimi per totam Aegyptum gravibus proscriptionibus exsiliisque vexati, interfectis his qui perduellionis causa exstiterant. 1 (*)

298 i Antiochiae XIX constituitur episcopus Tyrannus.

2320 19 k Alexandrinae Ecclesiae XXI post Theonam, ordinatur episcopus Petrus, qui postea IX persecutionis anno gloriose martyrium perpetravit.

304 l Jubileum secundum maiores

14

299 m Diocletianus et Maximianus Augusti, insigni pompa Romae triumpharunt, antecedentibus curram eorum

15 f Ecclesiae Jerosolymorum XXVII ordinatur

300

(1) This revolt is that of Domitius Domitianus. Several problems arise regarding this event. First, it is Achilleus who alone receives mention for the revolt; Contemporary papyrological evidence shows Achilleus with the title of corrector. Some scholars have suggested two revolts in Egypt. Domitianus, however, had coinage struck in his name, a logical first step in any rebellion; Achilleus has no coin struck in his name. Connected with this first problem, another suggestion has been made that Domitianus and Achilleus are one and the same. More likely is that Achilleus was a sub-commander for Domitianus, though any certain answer is still unclear. A similar problem involves the dating of the revolt, though Jerome places it in 297 or after, a date supported by the papyrological and numismatic evidence. A third problem is the reason for the revolt. Renewed trouble between the eastern provinces and Sasanian Persia, may have put extra pressure on Egypt; quite possibly some of Diocletian's reforms did not sit well with the upper-class Egyptians.

[310/311]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD Narsei conjuge, sororibus, liberis, et omni praeda, qua Parthos spoliaverant. annis XXX, mensibus X. Persecutionis IV *

307 1 a Maxentius Herculii Maximiani filius a praetorianis militibus Romae Augustus appellatur. (*)

2330 a Terraemotu horribili apud Tyrum et Sidonem multa opera conciderunt, et populus innumerabilis oppressus est. b Severus Caesar a Galerio Maximiano contra Maxentium missus, Ravennae secundo imperii sui anno interficitur. b Decimo nono anno Diocletiani, mense Martio, in diebus Paschae, ecclesiae subversae sunt. IV autem persecutionis anno Constantinus regnare ortus.

2 c Licinius a Galerio Carnunti imperator factus.

5

308 d Herculius Maximianus a filia Fausta detectus, quod dolum Constantino viro suo pararet, Massiliae fugiens occiditur. c Secundum Antiochenos annus CCCLI. Persecutionis I e Quirinus episcopus Siscianus gloriose pro Christo interficitur: nam, manuali mola ad collum ligata, e ponte praecipitatus in flumen, diutissime supernatavit et cum spectantibus collocutus, ne sui terrentur exemplo, vix orans ut mergeretur, obtinuit.

271st Olympias 2 20 d Secundo anno persecutionis Diocletianus Nicomediae, Maximianus Mediolani purpuram deposuerunt. (*)

305 e Romae XXIX episcopus constituitur EUSEBIUS, mensibus VII; post quem XXX Ecclesiam tenet MILTIADES, annis IV.

272nd Olympias 3 f Galerius Maximianus moritur. 6

309

3 f Maximinus 1 et Severus a Galerio Maximiano Caesares facti.

306 4 g Romanae Ecclesiae XXXI ordinatur episcopus SILVESTER, annis XXII. 7

310 g Constantius XVI imperii anno 2 diem obiit in Britannia Eboraci, post quem filius ejus Constantinus ex concubina Helena procreatus, regnum invadit. () 5 h Maximinus, persecutione in Christianos facta, cum jam a Licinio puniendus esset, apud Tarsum moritur. () 8

311 i Alexandrinae ecclesiae XVII ordinatur episcopus Achillas.

6 k Maxentius juxta pontem Milvium a Constantino superatus occiditur.

9

312 Romanorum XXXIV, CONSTANTINUS, regnavit (1) Maximinus Daia.

(2) Constantius I Chlorus.

[312/313]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

273rd Olympias Homousii oppositione delevit.

7 a Bellum Cibalense adversum Licinium. 10

313

17 a Constantius filius Constantini Caesar factus. 323

2330 8 b Jerosolymarum XXXIX episcopus constituitur Macarius. c Pax nostris a Constantino reddita. 314 b Licinius Thessalonicae contra jus sacramenti, privatus occiditur. *

9

315

10 d Diocletianus haud procul a Salonis in villa sua Spalato moritur, et solus omnium inter deos privatus refertur. (*) 316 2340 18 c Nazarius rhetor insignis habetur. *

324

276th

Olympias

19 d Crispus filius Constantini, et Licinius junior Constantiae Constantini sororis et Licinii filius, crudelissime interficiuntur.

325

274th

Olympias

11 e Crispus et Constantinus, filii Constantini, et Licinius adolescens Licinii Augusti filius, Constantini ex sorore nepos, Caesares appellantur. Quorum Crispum Lactantius Latinis litteris erudit, vir omnium suo tempore eloquentissimus; sed adeo in hac vita pauper, ut plerumque etiam necessariis indiguerit.

317

20 e Vicennalia Constantini Nicomediae acta, et sequenti anno Romae edita.

326

12

318 f Huc usque historiam scribit Eusebius Pamphili martyris contubernalis, cui nos ista subiecimus. *

13

319

21 g Arnobius rhetor in Africa clarus habetur, qui cum Siccae ad declamandum iuvenes erudiret et adhuc ethnicus ad credulitatem somniis compelleretur, neque ab episcopo impetraret fidem quam semper inpugnaverat, elucubravit adversum pristinam religionem luculentissimos libros et tandem veluti quibusdam obsidibus pietatis foedus impetravit.

327

14

320

275th Olympias f Licinius Christianos de palatio suo pellit. g Basileus Amasiae Ponti episcopus sub Licinio martyrio coronatur.

15 h Alexandrinae ecclesiae XVIII ordinatur episcopus Alexander: a quo Arius presbyter de Ecclesia ejectus, multos suae impietati sociat; ad quorum perfidiam coarguendam synodus 318 episcoporum, in Nicaeam urbem Bithyniae congregata, omnes haereticorum machinas 321 h Drepanam Bithyniae civitatem in honorem martyris Luciani ibi conditi Constantinus instaurans ex vocabulo matris suae Helenopolim nuncupavit.

16

322 i In Antiochia dominicum quod

[314/315]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

vocatur aureum aedificari coeptum.

25 a Romae XXXII episcopus ecclesiam tenuit MARCUS, mensibus VIII; post quem XXXIII ordinatus est JULIUS, annis XVI, mensibus IV.

331

22 a Constantinus uxorem suam Faustam interficit.

328 b Donatus agnoscitur, a quo per Africam Donatiani. b Edicto Constantini gentilium templa subversa sunt.

277th

Olympias

26 c Romani Gothos in Sarmatarum regione vicerunt.

332 c Antiochiae post Tyrannum XX ordinatur episcopus Vitalis, post quem XXI Filogonius, cui successit XXII Paulinus, post quem XXIII Eustathius, quo in exilium ob fidem truso usque in praesentem diem Arianorum ecclesiam obtinuerunt, id est Eulalius Eusebius Euphronius Placillus Stefanus Leontius Eudoxius Meletius Euzoius Dorotheus rursum Meletius, quorum idcirco tempora non digessi quod eos hostes potius Christi quam episcopos iudicem.

278th

Olympias

27 d Constans filius Constantini provehitur ad regnum.

333 e Pestilentia et fame innumerabilis multitudo in Syria Ciliciaque perit.

2350 28 f Sarmatae Limigantes dominos suos qui nunc Argaragantes vocantur facta manu in Roraanum solum expulerunt.

334

23

329 g Calocerus in Cypro res novas molitus opprimitur.

29 h Constantinus cum liberis suis honorificas ad Antonium litteras mittit.

335 d Juvencus presbyter natione Hispanus evangelia heroicis versibus explicat. i Tricennalibus Constantini Dalmatius Caesar appellatur. e Porphyrius misso ad Constantinum insigni volumine exilio liberatur.

30 k Pater rhetor Romae gloriosissime docet.

336

24 f Alexandriae XIX ordinatur episcopus Athanasius.

330 l Nazarii rhetoris filia in eloquentia patri coaequatur. m Tiberianus vir disertus praefectus praetorio Gallias regit. g Dedicatur Constantinopolis omnium paene urbium nuditate. n Eustathius Constantinopolitanus presbyter agnoscitur, cuius industria in Hierosolymis h Metrodorus philosophus agnoscitur.

[316/317]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD martyrium constructum est. praesidio exiliis carceribus et variis adflictionum modis primum Athanasium deinde omnes non suae partis episcopos persecuta est.

279th

Olympias

31 a Constantinus extremo vitae suae tempore ab Eusebio Nicomedensi episcopo baptizatus in Arianum dogma declinat, a quo usque in praesens tempus ecclesiarum rapinae et totius orbis est secuta discordia.

337

3 a Constantinus bellum fratri inferens juxta Aquileiam Alsae occiditur.

340

280th Olympias b Constantinus, cum bellum pararet in Persas, in Acyrone villa publica iuxta Nicomediam moritur anno aetatis lxvi, post quem tres liberi eius ex Caesaribus Augusti appellantur.

4 b Vario eventu adversum Francos a Constante pugnatur.

341 c Multae orientis urbes terrae motu horribili consederunt. d Audeus in Syria Coele clarus habetur, a quo haeresis Audiana.

Romanorum XXXV regnavit CONSTANTINUS, CONSTANTIUS et CONSTANS, annis XXIV, mensibus V, diebus XIII.

5 e Franci a Constante perdomiti et pax cum eis facta.

342

1 c Ablabius praefectus praetorio et multi nobilium occisi.

338 f Hermogenes magister militiae Constantinopoli tractus a populo ob episcopum Paulum quem regis imperio et Arnanorum factione pellebat. d Sapor rex Persarum Mesopotamia vastata duobus ferme mensibus Nisibin obsedit. e Dalmatius Caesar, quem patruus Constantinus consortem regni filiis dereliquerat, factione Constantii patruelis et tumultu militari interimitur. g Antiochiae dominicum aureum dedicatur. h Macedonius artis plumariae in locum Pauli ab Arianis episcopus subrogatur, a quo nunc haeresis Macedoniana. f Jacobus Nisibenus episcopus agnoscitur, ad cuius preces saepe urbs discrimine liberata est. i Paulus crudelitate praefecti Philippi, nam fautor Macedonii partium erat, et Arianorum insidiis strangulatur.

2 g Ex hoc loco impictas Ariana Constantii regis fulta

339

[318/319]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

6 a Maximinus Treverorum episcopus clarus habetur, a quo Athanasius Alexandriae episcopus, cum a Constantio quaereretur ad poenam 1, honorifice susceptus est.

343 gravius bellum fuit, nam, ut alia omittam, Nisibis obsessa, Bizabde et Amida captae sunt. a XL Maximus post Macarium Hierosolymarum episcopus moritur, post quem ecclesiam Ariani invadunt. Id est Cyrillus, Eutychius, rursum Cyrillus, Hireneus, tertio Cyrillus, Hilarius, quarto Cyrillus. Quorum Cyrillus, cum a Maximo fuisset presbyter ordinatus et post mortem eius ita ei ab Acacio episcopo Caesariensi et ceteris Arianis episcopatus promitteretur si ordinationem Maximi repudiasset. Diaconus in ecclesia ministravit. Ob quam impietatem sacerdotii mercede pensatus Heraclium, quem moriens Maximus in suum locum substituerat, varia fraude sollicitans de episcopo in presbyterum regradavit.

2360

7

344 b Sapor Persarum rex Christianos persequitur. c Neocaesaria in Ponto subversa excepta ecclesia et episcopo ceterisque qui ibidem reperti sunt.

281th

Olympias

8 d Titianus vir eloquens praefecturam praetorio apud Gallias administrat.

345

9 e Athanasius ad Constantis litteras Alexandriam regreditur.

346 f Dyrrachium terrae motu corrui et tribus diebus ac noctibus Roma nutavit plurimaeque Campaniae urbes vexatae.

282nd Olympias g Magnis rei publicae expensis in Seleucia Syriae portus effectus.

12 b Romanae ecclesiae XXXIV ordinatur episcopus LIBERIUS, quo in exilium ob fidem truso omnes clerici iuraverunt ut nullum alium susciperent. Verum, cum Felix ab Arianis fuisset in sacerdotium substitutus, plurimi peieraverunt et post annum cum Felice eiecti sunt, quia Liberius taedio victus exilii et in haeretica pravitate subscribens Romam quasi victor intraverat.

349 h Rursum Sapor tribus mensibus obsidet Nisibin.

10 i Eusebius episcopus Emesenus Arianae signifer factionis multa et varia conscribit.

347 k Solis facta defectio. 2

11 l Bellum Persicum nocturnum apud Singaram in quo haut dubiam victoriam militum stoliditate perdidimus neque vero ullum Constantio ex novem gravissimis proeliis contra Persas

348

13 c Magnentio apud Augustodunum arripiente imperium Constans haud longe ab

350

(1) Athanasius.

(2) 346AD, Jun. 6th

[320/321]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD

Hispania in castro cui Helenae nomen est interficitur anno aetatis xxx, quam ob rem turbata re publica Vetrano Mursae Nepotianus Romae imperatores facti. frater eius, quem ad tuendas Gallias Caesarem miserat, apud Senonas laqueo vitam explet. a Gennadius forensis orator Romae insignis habetur. a Romae populus adversum Magnentiacos rebellans ab Heradida senatore proditur. b Minervius Burdigalensis rhetor Romae florentissime docet. b Nepotiani caput pilo per urbem circumlatum multaeque proscriptiones nobilium et caedes factae.

2370 17 c Gallus Caesar sollicitatus a Constantio patrueli, cui in suspicionem ob egregiam indolem venerat, Histriae occiditur.

354

14 c Vetraniioni apud Naisum a Constantio regium insigne detractum.

351 d Silvanus in Gallia res novas molitus XXVIII die extinctus est. d Magnentius Mursae victus in quo proelio Romanae vires conciderunt. e Victorinus rhetor et Donatus grammaticus praeceptor meus Romae insignes habentur, e quibus Victorinus etiam statuam in foro Traiani meruit. e Gallus Constantii patruelis Caesar factus.

15 f Gallus Iudaeos qui interfectis per noctem militibus arma ad rebellandum invaserant oppressit caesis multis hominum milibus usque ad innoxiam aetatem et civitates eorum Diocaesariam Tiberiadem et Diospolim plurimaque oppida igni tradidit.

352 f Paulinus et Rodanius Galliarum episcopi in exilium ob fidem trusi.

18 g Alchimus et Delfidius rhetores in Aquitania florentissime docent.

355 h Donatus a quo supra Donatianos in Africa dici memorauimus Carthagine pellitur: quidam sectatores eius etiam montenses uocant eo quod ecclesiam Romae primum in monte habere coeperint. g Non nulli nobilium Antiochiae a Gallo interfecti.

CCLXXXIII Olympias 16 i Jubileus secundum hebraeos h Magnentius Lugduni in palatio propria se manu interficit et Decentius

353 i Eusebius Vercellensis episcopus et Lucifer ac Dionysius Caralitanae et Mediolanensis ecclesiae episcopi, Pancratius

[322/323]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD quoque Romanus presbyter et Hilarus diaconus distantibus inter se ab Arianis et Constantio damnantur exiliis.

Andreae apostoli et Lucae evangelistae a Constantinopolitanis miro favore suscepta.

21 a Nicomedia terrae motu funditus eversa vicinis urbibus ex parte vexatis.

358 a Julianus frater Galli Mediolanii Caesar appellatur. b Paulinus Triverorum episcopus in Phrygia exulans moritur.

19 b Antonius monachus CV aetatis anno in heremo moritur. Solitus multis ad se venientibus de Paulo quodam Thebaeo mirae beatitudinis viro referre, cuius nos exitum brevi libello explicuimus.

356 c Evantius eruditissimus grammaticorum Constantinopolim diem obiit, in cuius locum ex Africa Chrestus adducitur.

22 d Synodus apud Ariminum et Seleuciam Isauriae facta, in qua antiqua patrum fides decem primum legatorum, dehinc omnium prodicione damnata est.

359

10 c Hilarius episcopus Pictavensis, factione Saturnini Arelatensis episcopi reliquorumque qui cum eo erant Arianorum ante triennium in Phrygiam pulsus, libros de nostra religione componit. e Honoratus ex praefecto praetorio Galliarum primus Constantinopoli praefectus urbi factus. d Reliquiae apostoli Timothei Constantinopolim invectae. f Gratianus qui nunc imperator est nascitur. e Sarmata, Amatas et Macarius discipuli Antonii insignes habentur. g Hilarius, cum apud Constantinopolim librum pro se Constantio porrexisset, ad Gallias redit. f Liberius episcopus Romanus in exilium mittitur. 1 g Magnae Alamannorum copiae apud Argentoratum oppidum Galliarum a Caesare Juliano oppressae. h Macedonius Constantinopoli pellitur. i Omnes paene toto orbe ecclesiae sub nomine pacis et regis Arianorum consortio polluuntur.

CCLXXXIV

Olympias

23 k Constantinopoli ecclesiarum maxima dedicatur.

20 h Saraceni in monasterium beati Antonii inruentes Sarmatam interficiunt.

357 l Meletius Sebastiae Armeniorum episcopus ab Acacio et Georgio episcopis Arianis Antiochiam transfertur et post i Constantio Romam ingresso ossa (1) Cf. Ammianus Marcellinus 15.7.6-10.

[324/325]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD non grande temporis interuallum, cum presbyteros qui ab Eudoxio antecessore suo depositi fuerant suscepisset, exilii justissimam causam subita fidei mutatione delusit. concederet ut Christianus doceret, scholam sponte deservit. a Aemilianus ob ararum subversionem Dorostori a vicario incenditur. b Ecclesia Antiochiae clausa et grauissima imminentis persecutionis procella Dei voluntate sopita est. Nam Iulianus in Persas profectus nostrum post victoriam dis sanguinem voverat, ubi a quodam simulato perfuga ad deserta perductus, cum fame et siti apostatam perdidisset exercitum et inconsultius a suorum erraret agminibus, ab obuiio forte hostium equite conto ilia perfossus interiit anno aetatis XXXII. Post quem sequenti die Jovianus ex primicerio domesticorum imperator factus est. a Gallia per Hilarium Ariminensis perfidiae dolos damnat.

CCLXXXV

Olympias

23 b Constantius Mopsocrenis inter Ciliciam Cappadociamque moritur anno aetatis XLV.

361 Romanorum XXXVI regnavit JULIANUS, annis I, mensibus VIII

1 c Juliano ad idolorum cultum converso blanda persecutio fuit iniciens magis quam impellens ad sacrificandum, in qua multi ex nostris voluntate propria corruerunt.

362 d Georgio per seditionem populi incenso, qui in locum Athanasii ab Arianis fuerat ordinatus, Athanasius Alexandriam revertitur.

Romanorum XXXVII regnavit Jovianus, mensibus VIII

2380 1 c Jovianus rerum necessitate compulsus Nisibin et magnam Mesopotamiae partem Saporis Persarum regi tradidit.

364 e Eusebius et Lucifer de exilio regrediuntur, e quibus Lucifer adscitis duobus aliis confessoribus Paulinum Eustathii episcopi presbyterura qui se numquam hereticorum communione polluerat, in parte catholica Antiochiae episcopum facit. d Synodus Antiochiae a Melitio et suis facta, in qua omousio anomoeoque reiecto medium inter haec omoeousion Macedonianum dogma vindicaverunt.

2 f Proheresius sophista Atheniensis lege data ne Christiani liberalium artium doctores essent, cum sibi specialiter Julianus 363 e Jovianus cruditate sive odore prunarum, quas nimias adoleri iusserat, Dadastanae moritur 1 (1) On the border between Bithynia and Galatia.

[326/327]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD anno aetatis xxxiii, post quem Valentinianus tribunus scutariorum e Pannonia Civalensis 1 apud Niceam Augustus appellatus fratrem Valentem Constantinopoli in communionem regni adsumit. quo Damasiana partis populo confluyente crudelissimae interfectiones diversi sexus perpetratae. a Valens ab Eudoxio Arianorum episcopo baptizatus nostros persequitur.

CCLXXXVI

Olympias

3 b Gratianus, Valentiniani filius Ambianis imperator factus.

367 Romanorum XXXVIII, regnavit VALENTINIANUS et VALENS, annis XIV, mensibus V c Tanta Constantinopoli est orta tempestas ut mirae magnitudinis decidens grando non nullos hominum interfecerit.

1 a Valentinianus egregius alias imperator et Aureliano moribus similis, nisi quod severitatem eius nimiam et parcitatem quidam crudelitatem et avaritiam interpretaebantur.

365 d Apud Atrabatas lana caelo pluviae mixta defluxit. e Hilarius episcopus Pictavis moritur. b Apollinaris Laodicensis episcopus multimoda nostrae religionis scripta coraponit.

4 f Nicea, quae saepe ante corruerat, terrae motu funditus eversa.

368

2 c Terrae motu per totum orbem facto mare litus egreditur et Siciliae multarumque insularum urbes innumerabiles populos oppressere.

366 g Libanius Antiochenus rhetor insignis habetur.

CCLXXXVII

Olympias

5 h Agon Constantinopoli a Valente redditus.

369 d Procopius, qui apud Constantinopolim tyrannidem invaserat, apud Phrygiam Salutarem extinctus et plurimi Procopianae partis caesi atque proscripti. i Haitanaricus rex Gothorum in Christianos persecutione commota plurimos interficit et de propriis sedibus in Romanum solum expellit. k Eusebius Vercellensis episcopus moritur. e Romanae ecclesiae XXXV, ordinatur episcopus DAMASUS, et post non multum temporis intervallum Ursinus a quibusdam episcopus constitutus Sicininum cum suis inuadit, 6 l Constantinopoli apostolorum martyrium dedicatur.

370 m Magna fames in Phrygia.

(1) Cibale.

[328/329]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD a Lucifer Caralitanus episcopus moritur, qui cum Gregorio episcopo Hispaniarum et Philone Libyae numquam se Arianae miscuit pravitati. a Burgundionum LXXX ferme milia, quod numquam antea, ad Renum descenderunt. b Clearchus praefectus urbi Constantinopoli agnoscitur, a quo necessaria et diu expectata votis aqua civitati inducitur.

7 b Maximinus praefectus annonae

1 maleficos ab imperatore inuestigare iussus plurimos Romae nobilium occidit.

371 c Alexandriae XX ordinatur episcopus Petrus, qui post Valentis interitum tam facilis in recipiendis haereticis fuit ut non nullis suspicionem acceptae pecuniae intulerit. c Valentinus in Britannia ante quam tyrannidem invaderet oppressus. d Presbyter Sirmi iniquissime decollatur quod Octavianum ex pro consule apud se latitantem prodere nolisset.

2390

10 d Melanius nobilissima mulierum Romanarum et Marcellini quondam consulis filia, unico praetore tunc urbano filio derelicto, Hierosolymam navigavit, ubi tanto virtutum praecipueque humilitatis miraculo fuit ut Theclae nomen acceperit.

2

374

8

e Didymus Alexandrinus multa de nostro dogmate per notarios commentatur, qui post quintum nativitatis suae annum luminibus orbatus elementorum quoque ignarus fuit.

372 e Post Auxenti seram mortem Mediolanii Ambrosio episcopo constituto omnis ad fidem rectam Italia convertitur. f Probus praefectus Illyrici iniquissimis tributorum exactionibus ante provincias quas regebat quam a barbaris vastarentur erasit. f Aquileienses clerici quasi chorus beatorum habentur.

11 g Quia superiori anno Sarmatae Pannonias vastaverant, idem consules permansere.

375 CCLXXXVIII Olympias 9 g Eunomius discipulus Aeti Constantinopoli agnoscitur, a quo haeresis Eunomiana.

373 h Valentinianus subita sanguinis eruptione quod Graece 'apoplexis' vocatur Brigitione moritur, post quem Gratianus adsumpto in imperium Valentiniano fratre cum patruo Valente regnat. h Saxones caesi Deusone in regione Francorum.

(1) The grain supply.

(2) Rufinus accused Jerome of deleting this entry from his own copy of the Chronicle after falling out with Melania (the Elder).

[330/331]

Romanorum

AD

Romanorum

AD a Multi monachorum Nitriae per tribunos et milites caesi. a Superatis in congressione Romanis Gothi funduntur in Thracia. b Valens lege data ut monachi militarent nolentes fustibus iussit interfici.

14 b Valens de Antiochia exire compulsus sera paenitentia nostros de exiliis revocat.

378

12 c Theodosius Theodosii postea imperatoris pater et plurimi nobilium occisi.

376

[15] c Lacrimabile bellum in Thracia, in quo deserente equitum praesidio Romanae legiones a Gothis cinctae usque ad internecionem caesae sunt: ipse imperator Valens, cum sagitta saucius fugeret et ob dolorem nimium saepe equo laberetur, ad cuiusdam villulae casam deportatus est, quo persequentibus barbaris et incensa domo sepultura quoque caruit. d Ab urbe condita usque ad extremum huius operis annum fiunt anni MCXXXI. Hoc modo: sub regibus, anni CCXL sub consulibus, anni CDLXIV sub augustis cesaribus, anni CDXXVII [379] d Photinus in Galatia moritur, a quo Photinianorum dogma Judaicum. 1 e Basilius Caesariensis episcopus Cappadociae clarus habetur, qui multa continentiae et ingenii bona uno superbiae malo perdidit..

CCLXXXIX

Olympias

13 f Alamannorum XXX circiter milia apud Argentariam oppidum Galliarum ab exercitu Gratiani strata..

377 g Florentinus, Bonosus, et Rufinus insignes monachi habentur, e quibus Florentinus tam misericors in egentes fuit ut vulgo "pater pauperum" nominatus sit. h Gens Hunorum Gothos vastat, qui a Romanis sine armorum depositione suscepti per avaritiam Maximi ducis fame ad rebellandum coacti sunt. 2

(1) Jerome, like many heresiologists, always associates Photinus with Sabellius, Paul of Samosata and Judaism. He wants to show, by this association, that they're all heretics, but does not particularise each of them. Jerome usually explains that the common heresy of Photinus and Judaism is to think that Jesus was just a man who had been adopted by God as his son. Jerome knows that Photinus is not exactly a Monarchianist, but an Adoptianist. Benoît Jeanjean shows how Jerome presents Photinus, Paulus of Samosate and Sabellius in his book :

Benoît Jeanjean, "Saint Jérôme et l'hérésie",

Paris, Etudes Augustiniennes, 1999, p. 168-177.

(2) The original manuscript of 'O' ends at this point. A single leaf (f.145) with a brief summary of events follows, in the same hand as the Tertullian scholion noted earlier. After this, the manuscript contains the Chronicle of Marcellinus.

[332] Colliguntur omnes anni usque in consulatum Valentis VI et Valentiniani junioris iterum Augustorum: a XV Tiberii anno et praedicatione domini nostri Jesu Christi anni

CCCLI a secundo anno Darii regis Persarum quo tempore templum Hierosolymis instauratum est anni

DCCCXCIX ab olympiade prima qua aetate apud Hebraeos Isaias prophetabat anni

MCLV a Solomone et prima aedificatione templi anni

MCDXI a captivitate Troiae quo tempore Sampson apud Hebraeos erat anni

MDLXI a Moyse et Cecrope primo rege Atticae anni

MDCCCXC ab Abraham et regno Nini et Semiramidis anni

MMCCCXCV Continet omnis canon ab Abraham usque ad tempus supra scriptum annos

MMCCCXCV a diluvio autem usque ad Abraham supputantur anni

CMXLII et ab Adam usque ad diluvium anni

MMCCXLII Id est usque ad consulatum eius 6 et Valentiniani iterum omnes anni

V milia DLXXIX This text was transcribed by JMB. All material on this page is in the public domain
- copy freely.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Chronicle - Latin text of prefaces

Sancti Hieronymi Chronicon. Hieronymi Praefatio; Eusebii praefatio Eusebius Hieronymus Vincentio et Gallieno suis salutem.

Vetus iste disertorum mos fuit, ut exercendi ingenii causa Graecos libros Latino sermone absolverent, et, quod plus in se difficultatis habet, poemata illustrium virorum, addita metri necessitate, transferrent. unde et noster Tullius Platonis integros libros ad verbum interpretatus est: et cum Aratum jam Romanum hexametris versibus edidisset, in Xenophontis Oeconomico lusit. in quo opere ita saepe aureum illud flumen eloquentiae scabris quibusdam et turbulentis obicibus retardatur, ut qui interpretata nesciunt, a Cicerone dicta non credant. difficile est enim, alienas lineas insequentem non alicubi excidere; arduum, ut quae in alia lingua bene dicta sunt, eundem decorem in translatione conservent. Significatum est aliquid unius verbi proprietate: non habeo meum quod id efferam, et dum quaero implere sententiam, longo ambitu vix brevis viae spatia consumo. Accedunt hyperbatorum ¹ anfractus, dissimilitudines casuum, varietates figurarum; ipsum postremo suum, et, ut ita dicam, vernaculum linguae genus. Si ad verbum interpretor, absurde resonat; si ob necessitatem aliquid in ordine, [vel] in sermone mutavero, ab interpretis videbor officio recessisse.

Itaque, mi Vincenti charissime, et tu Galliene, pars animae meae, obsecro, ut quicquid hoc tumultuarii operis est, amicorum, non iudicum animo relegatis: praesertim cum et notario, ut scitis, volocissime dictaverim, et difficultatem rei etiam divinorum voluminum instrumenta ² testentur, quae a LXX Interpretibus edita, non eundem saporem in Graeco sermone custodiunt. Quam ob rem Aquila et Symmachus et Theodotion incitati, diversum paene opus in eodem opere prodiderunt: alio nitente verbum de verbo exprimere, alio sensum potius sequi, tertio non multum a veteribus discrepante. Quinta autem et sexta et septima editio³, licet quibus censeantur auctoribus, ignoretur: tamen ita probabilem sui diversitatem tenent, ut auctoritatem sine nominibus meruerint.

Inde adeo venit, ut sacrae litterae minus comptae, et dure sonantes videantur, quod diserti homines interpretatas eas de Hebraeo nescientes, dum superficiem, non medullam inspiciunt, ante quasi vestem orationis sordidam perhorrescant, quam pulchrum intrinsecus rerum corpus inveniant.

Denique quid Psalterio canorius, quod in morem nostri Flacci⁴, et Graeci Pindari, nunc iambo currit, nunc alcaico personat, nunc Sapphico tumet, nunc semipede ingreditur? Quid Deuteronomii et Isaiae Cantico pulchrius? quid Salomone gravius? quid perfectius Job? Quae omnia hexametris et pentametris versibus, ut Josephus et Origenes scribunt, apud suos composita decurrunt. Haec cum Graeca legimus, aliud quiddam sonant; cum Latine, penitus non [co]haerent.

Quod si cui non videtur linguae gratiam interpretatione mutari, Homerum ad verbum exponat Latinum, -- plus aliquid dicam -- eundem in sua lingua prosae verbis interpretetur, videbit ordinem ridiculum et poetam eloquentissimum vix loquentem.

Quorsum ista? Videlicet ut non vobis mirum videatur, si alicubi offendimus, si tarda oratio aut consonantibus asperatur, aut vocalibus hiulca vel divisa sit, aut rerum ipsarum brevitate constringitur, cum eruditissimi homines in eodem opere sudaverint: et ad communem difficultatem, quam in omni interpretatione causati sumus, hoc nobis proprium accedat, quod historia multiplex est, habens barbara nomina, res incognitas Latinis, numeros inexplicabiles, virgulas rebus pariter ac numeris intertextas, ut paene difficilius sit legendi ordinem discere, quam ad lectionis notitiam pervenire.

[5 Ut autem manifesto cognoscatur indicio, ad quem numerum historia quaeque pertineat, has distinctiones positas lector advertat, ut, si ad primum numerum regni primitus enotati historia referenda est, primam litteram in explanatione historiae contempletur: et, si quidem eam ex minio viderit, illi tempori applicandam, vel anno sciat, quem suggesserit numerus similiter id est minio figuratus: si vero numerum non puro minio, sed mixto nigro notatum esse perviderit, secundae lineae numero debetur historia: si autem tertio numerorum ordini applicandum est, quod fuerit ascriptum, medium puro minio numerum, et partem reliquam ex solo nigro expressam conspicabitur. quarta numeri linea nihil habebit ex minio, sed indicio erit, quod ipsi historia debeatur, cum minio facta littera in principio enotatione historiae, quae etiam superioribus signis subdenda est, nihilominus apparebit, nullo superius memoratorum signorum in numeris respondere:.. sin vero non minio, sed mixtim nigro rubroque littera fuerit expressa, refulgens ex rubro numerus in quintam numerorum lineam poterit adverti; et ita sexta linea numeri et secunda, septima ut tertia designabitur, octava quoque ut quarta apparenti littera bicolori: cum vero nec in numeris, nec in explanatione historiae ullum illorum, quae praediximus, signorum fuerit, nona linea quod annotatum fuerit, vindicavit: non tamen omnes hi modi requirendi sunt necessaria, cum minor est numerus linearum]

Unde praemonendum puto ut, prout quaeque scripta sunt, etiam colorum diversitates servantur, ne quis irrationabili aestimet voluptate oculis tantum rem esse quaesitam et, dum scribendi taedium fugit, labyrinthum erroris intexat. Id enim elucubratum est, ut regnorum tramites, qui per vicinitatem nimiam paene mixti erant, distinctione minii separarentur, et eundem coloris locum quem prior membrana signaverat, etiam posterior servaret.

Nec ignoro multos fore, qui solita libidine omnibus detrahendi, huic volumini genuinum infigant, quod vitare non potest, nisi qui omnino nil scribit: calumniabuntur tempora, convertent ordinem, res arguent, syllabas eventilabunt, et, quod accidere plerumque solet, negligentiam librariorum ad auctores referent.

Quos cum possem meo jure repercutere, ut si displicet, non legant, malo breviter placatos dimittere, ut et Graecorum fidem, suo auctori assignent, et quae nova inseruimus, de aliis probatissimis viris libata cognoscant. Sciendum etenim est, me et interpretis et scriptoris ex parte officio usum, quia et Graeca fidelissime expressi, et nonnulla quae mihi intermissa videbantur, adjeci in Romana maxime historia, quam Eusebius, huius conditor libri, non tam ignorasse, ut erudit[issim]us, sed ut Graece scribens, parum suis necessariam perstrinxisse, mihi videtur.

Itaque a Nino et ab Abraham usque ad Troiae captivitatem pura Graeca translatio est: a Troia usque ad vicesimum Constantini annum nunc addita, nunc mixta sunt plurima, quae de Tranquillo⁶, et caeteris illustribus historicis curiosissime excerpsi[mus]: a Constantini autem supra dicto anno usque ad consulatum Augustorum Valentis VI et Valentiniani iterum, totum meum est.

Quo fine contentus, reliquum tempus Gratiani et Theodosii latioris historiae stylo reservavi; non quo de viventibus timuerim libera et vere scribere -- timor enim Dei hominum timorem expellit -- sed quoniam, debacchantibus adhuc in terra nostra Barbaris, incerta sunt omnia.

Eusebii interpretata praefatio.⁷

Mosen gentis Hebraeae, qui primus omnium prophetarum ante adventum Domini Salvatoris divinas leges sacris litteris explicavit, Inachi fuisse temporibus, eruditissimi viri tradiderunt: ex nostris, Clemens, et Africanus, et Tatianus; ex Judaeis, Josephus, et Justus, veteris historiae monumenta replicantes. Porro Inachus quingentis annis Troianum bellum antecedit: ex ethnicis vero, impius ille Porphyrius in quarto operis sui libro, quod adversum nos casso labore contexit, post Mosen Semiramim fuisse affirmat, quae apud Assyrios CL ante Inachum regnavit annos. Itaque juxta eum DCCC paene et L annis Troiano bello Moses senior reperitur.

Cum haec ita se habeant, necessarium duxi veritatem diligentius persequi, et ob id in priori libello⁸ quasi quandam materiam futuro operi omnium mihi regum tempora praenotavi, Chaldaeorum, Assyriorum, Medorum, Persarum, Lydorum, Hebraeorum, Aegyptiorum, Atheniensium, Argivorum, Sicyoniorum, Lacedaemoniorum, Corinthiorum, Thessalorum, Macedonum, Latinorum, qui postea Romani nuncupati sunt. In praesenti autem, stylo eadem tempora contra se invicem ponens, et singularum gentium annos dinumerans, ut quid cuique coetaneum fuit, ita curioso ordine coaptavi. Neque me fugit, in Hebraeis codicibus dissonantes aetatum annos inveniri, plusque vel minus, prout interpretibus visum est, lectitari: sequendumque illud potius, quod exemplariorum multitudo in fidem traxit.

Verum utcumque quis volet, computet: reperiet Inachi temporibus, quem primum Argis regnasse aiunt, patriarcham Hebraeorum fuisse Israelem, a quo duodecim Judaeorum tribus Israelis vocabulum sortitae sunt. Semiramin autem et Abraham contemporales fuisse, manifestum est: nam Moses, licet junior supra dictis sit, omnibus tamen, quos Graeci antiquissimos putant, senior deprehenditur, Homero scilicet et Hesiodo, Troianoque bello, ac multo superius, Hercule, Musaeo, Lino, Chirone, Orpheo, Castore, Polluce, Aesculapio, Libero, Mercurio, Apolline, et caeteris diis gentium, sacrisque, vel vatibus, ipsius quoque Jovis gestis, quem Graecia in arce divinitatis collocavit. Hos, inquam, omnes quos enumeravimus, etiam post Cecropem Diphyem primum Atticae regem fuisse convincimus.

Cecropem autem praesens historia Mosi coetaneum ostendit, et antecedere Troianum bellum annis CCC [CCCLXXV]. Quod, ne cui dubium videatur, sequens ratio sic probabit: . quadragesimo secundo anno imperii Augusti CHRISTUS natus [est]; quintodecimo Tiberii anno praedicare orsus est. Si quis igitur, retrorsum annorum supputans numerum, alterum Darii regis Persarum quaerat annum, sub quo templum Jerosolymorum, quod a Babyloniis destructum fuerat, instauratum est, reperiet a Tiberio usque ad Darium annos DXLVIII.

Darii quippe secundus annus LXV olympiadis anno primo fuit, et Tiberii XV in CCI olympiadem incurrit. Fiunt ergo inter Darium et Tiberium olympiades CXXXVII, anni DXLVIII, quadriennio in una olympiade supputato.

Deinde secundo Darii anno LXX desolationis templi annus expletur, a quo usque ad primam olympiadem retrorsum numerantur olympiades LXIV, anni CCLVI; qui similiter supputantur a supradicto desolationis templi anno usque ad L annum Oziae regis Judaeorum, sub quo Isaias et Osee fuerunt.

Itaque prima olympias in Isaias, et reliquorum incurrit aetatem, qui cum eo prophetaverunt.

Rursum, si a prima olympiade ad superiora tempora et usque ad captivitatem Troiae proveharis, invenies annos CDVI quos et nos in priore opusculo digessimus, et curiosissima Graecorum historia conscribit. Item apud Hebraeos a supra dicto Oziae anno et temporibus Esaiae prophetae, usque ad Samson et tertium annum Labdon Judicis, supputabis annos CDVI. Samson autem est, quem in corporis robore Herculi similem ferunt posteri Judaeorum, et mihi videntur non multum inter se distare tempore, si quidem ambo circa Troiae captivitatem fuerunt.

Post haec iterum ad priora convertere, et, cum CCC tibi et XXIX annos pes retro actus impleverit, Graecorum Cecropem Diphyem et Mosem invenies Hebraeorum. Nam a XLV Cecropis anno usque ad captivitatem Troiae, et ab LXXX aetatis Mosi anno, in quo populum Israhel de Aegypto eduxit, usque ad Labdon, et Samson Judices, computantur anni CCCXXIX.

Itaque sine ulla ambiguitate Moses et Cecrops, qui primus Atheniensium rex fuit, iisdem fuere temporibus.

Porro iste est Cecrops Diphyes indigena, sub quo primum in arce Oliva orta est, et Atheniensium urbs ex Minervae appellatione sortita nomen. Hic primus omnium, Jovem appellavit, simulacra reperit, aram statuit, victimas immolavit, nequaquam istius modi rebus in Graecia umquam visis.

Caetera quoque, quae apud Graecos mira jactantur, posteriora Cecropis annis deprehenduntur; si autem Cecropis, consequenter et Mosi, qui cum Cecrope fuit.

Post hunc enim scribitur diluvium sub Deucalione, incendium sub Phaetonte, Erichthonius Vulcani et terrae filius, Dardanus qui Dardaniam condidit: de quo Homerus:

Quem primum genuit caelesti Jupiter arce; 9 Liberae quoque raptus et Europae, sacra Cereris atque Isidis, delubrum in Eleusina, frumenta Triptolemi, regnum Trois;

Cuius dii natum Ganymedem, ad sidera raptum, Vina Jovis magni voluerunt fundere mensis. 10

Quo tempore quoque Tantalus et Tityus fuerunt, et Apollo natus est. Nam Latona, Jovis conjux, per Titya fugit, Latonae autem et Jovis Apollo filius, post quos Cadmus Thebas venit, Qui Semelem genuit, de qua pulcherrima proles, Liber condignam partu tulit edita frugem. 11

Porro Liber et reliqui quos mox inferemus, post CC annum Cecropis fuerunt; Linus scilicet, et Zetus, et Amphion, Musaeus, Orpheus, Minos, Perseus, Aesculapius, gemini Castores, Hercules, cum quo Apollo servivit Admeto, post quos facta est Troianae urbis eversio: quam Homerus longo sequitur intervallol; Homerus autem Solone et Thalete Milesio, caeterisque, qui cum iis septem Sapientes appellati sunt, multo prior reperitur.

Deinde Pythagoras exstitit, qui se non sapientem, ut priores, sed philosophum, id est, amatorem sapientiae, dici voluit; quem secutus Socrates, Platonem erudit: a quo famosa in partes philosophia divisa est. horum singulos juxta ordinem sequentis historiae suis locis inseremus.

Igitur Moses cunctos quos supra memoravimus, antecedit: quia aetate Cecropis fuisse monstratus est.

Ab LXXX autem anno Mosi, et egressu Israhelis ex Aegypto, rursum ad superiora conversus, usque ad primum annum Abrahae, reperies annos DV, quos similiter a XLV anno Cecropis usque ad Ninum et Semiramin Assyriorum principes supputabis. Primus quippe omni Asiae, exceptis Indis, Ninus Beli filius regnavit. Itaque manifestum est, Abraham Nini aetate generatum, juxta eum tamen numerum, quem contractiorem editione Vulgata sermo praebet Hebraeus.

Verum incuriositate ne cesses: et cum divinam Scripturam diligenter evolveris, a nativitate Abrahae usque ad totius orbis diluvium, invenies retrorsum annos CMXLII, item a diluvio usque ad Adam, MMCCXLII, in quibus nulla penitus Graeca, nec Barbara, et, ut loquar in commune, gentilis invenitur historia.

Quam ob rem praesens opusculum ab Abraham et Nino usque ad nostram aetatem inferiora tempora persequetur; et statim in principio sui Hebraeorum Abraham, Assyriorum Ninum et Semiramim proponet, quia neque Athenarum adhuc urbs, neque Argivorum regnum nomen acceperat, solis Sicyoniis in Graecia florentibus: apud quos temporibus Abrahae et Nini Europem secundum regnasse ferunt. quod cur etiam nos putemus, ex sequentibus demonstrabitur.

Si enim diligenter enumeres ab ultima aetate Nini, usque ad Troiae captivitatem, invenies annos DCCCXXXIV: item in Sicyone a XXII anno regis Europis, usque ad supradictum tempus, eosdem annos invenies DCCCXXXIV: item apud Aegyptios ab aetate Nini et Semiramidis, quo tempore sextadecima iam dynastia Thebaei Aegyptis imperabant, usque ad vicesimam dynastiam, et regem Aegypti Thuorin, qui ab Homero Polybus vocatur, sub quo etiam Troia capta est, colliguntur etiam supra dicti anni DCCCXXXIV: igitur consequenter uno eodemque tempore in libelli fronte ponimus Abraham, Ninum, Semiramin, Europem, Aegyptiorum Thebaeos: et haec quidem ita se habere, ut praefati sumus, posterior textus ostendet.

Nunc illud in cura est, ut etiam Hebraeorum annos in quatuor tempora dividamus;

- ab Abraham usque ad Mosen;
- a Mose usque ad primam aedificationem templi;
- a prima aedificatione templi usque ad secundam instaurationem eius;
- ab instauratione eius usque ad adventum Christi Domini. A nativitate quippe Abrahae usque ad Mosen et egressum Israhelis ex Aegypto, computantur anni DV: a Mose usque ad Solomonem et primam aedificationem templi, anni CDLXXIX, secundum minorem tamen numerum quem tertius Regnorum liber continet, -- nam juxta volumen Judicum, supputantur anni DC -- a Solomone vero usque ad instaurationem templi, quae sub Dario Persarum rege facta est, colliguntur anni DXII: porro a Dario usque ad praedicationem Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et usque ad quintum decimum annum Tiberii principis Romanorum, explentur anni DXLVIII.

Itaque simul fiunt ab Abraham usque ad XV Tiberii annum, anni MMXLIV:

- similiter a Nino et Semiramide usque ad Mosen et Cecropem, anni DV;

- a Cecrope usque ad captivitatem Troiae, anni CCCXXIX;
- a captivitate Troiae usque ad primam olympiadem, anni CDVI;
- a prima olympiade usque ad secundum Darii annum, et instaurationem templi, anni CCLVI;
- fa secundo Darii anno et instauratione templi usque ad XV annum Tiberii Caesaris, anni DXLVIII.

Fiunt simul a Nino a Semiramide usque ad XV Tiberii annum, anni MMXLIV, quos et ab Abraham usque ad Tiberium ostendimus supputatos: a Tiberii autem XV anno usque ad decimum quartum annum Valentinianus¹², quo interiit, numerantur anni CCCLI, itaque fiunt omnes anni istius historiae MMCCCXCV.

Et, ne forte longus ordo numerorum aliquid turbationis afferet, omnem annorum congeriem in decadas caecidimus, quas ex singularium gentium historiis congregantes sibi in vicem, fecimus esse contrarias, ut facilis praebeatur inventio, cuius Graeci aetate vel barbari, prophetae, et reges, et sacerdotes fuerint Hebraeorum, item qui diversarum gentium falso crediti dii, qui heroes, quae quando urbs condita, qui de illustribus viris philosophi, poetae, principes, scriptoresque variorum operum exstiterint, et si qua alia digna memoria putavit antiquitas. Quae universa in suis locis summa cum brevitate ponemus.

Footnotes 1. Word-order reversal, for emphasis.

2. instrumenta. Lewis & Short: "II. Trop. A. Of writings... B. Ornament, embellishment: felices ornent haec instrumenta libellos.

Ov. Tr. 1,1,9."

3. Jerome is here referring to the parallel translations from Hebrew into Greek in the columns of Origen's Hexapla. The separate columns circulated separately.

4. Horace.

5. This paragraph is a later interpolation. One family of the manuscripts was reformatted by a later scribe, who wrote this paragraph as an explanation of the new format. His system placed all the columns of numbers on the left, and all the text at the right. Which column of numbers the text related to is controlled by colour coding. This paragraph describes the system, albeit obscurely. Manuscript L is of this family, and this translation is provisional, pending a visit to the British Library.

1. number=bright red; first letter of text=bright red 2. number=? (Probably black); first letter of text=mixed red/black 3. number=? (probably bright red); first letter of text=middle bright red, rest black 4. number=black; first letter of text=bright red 5. number=red; first letter of text=mixed red/black

6. Like #2

7. Like #3 8. Like #4, two colour 9. number=black; first letter of text=black The 'probables' I get by alternating the colour of the numbers.

6. Suetonius.

7. Translated by St. Jerome from Greek into Latin.

The headings in this page are Jerome's.

8. Eusebius' Chronicle is found in Armenian translation in two books. Book 1 is the Chronography and consists of lists of kings and how long they reigned, for various kingdoms. Book 2 is the Chronological Canons, which is the table of dates and events. Jerome only translated book 2, and the two books seem to have circulated separately. Even in the manuscripts of the Armenian version there is evidence of this, since the end of book 1 and the start and end of book 2 are missing. This shows that the 2-book combination is copied from two books which circulated by themselves, since the end of book 1 and start of book 2 should be very well protected in the middle of a volume, if they are together. This preface by Eusebius to book

2 is otherwise lost, being in the missing portion in the Armenian.

9. Homer, Iliad 20.215 10. Homer, Iliad 20.231-235.

11. Homer, Odyssey 11.576-582.

12. Clearly Jerome has altered something here, since Eusebius ended his text in the reign of Constantine. Probably this sentence originally referred to the 20th year of Constantine, and Jerome updated it to the end of his own version, the death of Valens.

All material on this page is in the public domain

- copy freely. Transcribed by JMB from the text of Fotheringham (1905). See introduction for details.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Chronicle - Pages 188-332

Jerome, Chronicle (2005) pp.188-332

[188/189] Persians Beginning of the Consuls of the Romans Macedonians BC

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

2 a Harmodius and Aristogiton killed the tyrant Hipparchus, and the courtesan Leaena their friend, when compelled with torments, lest she betray her companions, she amputated her tongue with her teeth. 28

34

520 68th Olympiad a The Aeginatans controlled the sea 17th for 20 years until the crossing of Xerxes.

3

29

35

519

14

46

508

1510

15

47

507

16 b Valerius, the colleague of the consul Brutus, died so poor that he was interred at public expense. *

48

506

4 30

36

518

17

49

505

1500

5

31

37

517

69th

Olympiad

66th

Olympiad

18 c At Rome, after a census had been taken, there were found to be 120,000 men.

50

504

6 b The temple of Jerusalem is completed, when Haggai and Zechariah are prophesying among the Jews. 32

38

516 Of the Macedonians, Alexander, for 43 years

7 33

39

515 d Nine years after the kings were expelled, a new rank was created, that is, the dictatorship, and the Master of the Horse, who would answer to the dictator. Largius was the first Dictator, and Spurius Cassius the Master of Horse. (*)

8

34

40

514

9

35

41

513

67th

Olympiad

~~~~~

19

1

503

10 c After the kings had been expelled from the City, Rome was holding power barely as far as the 15th milestone. The seven kings of the Romans from Romulus until Tarquinius Superbus reigned for 240 years, or as some prefer, 243. (*)

42

512

20

2

502

21

3

501 11

43

511

70th

Olympiad

e Hellanicus the historian, and Democritus the philosopher, and Heraclitus surnamed 'the Dark', and Anaxagoras the natural scientist are considered important.

22

4

500

23

5

499

24

6

498

12

44

510

1520

25 f Pythagoras the philosopher dies.

7

497 d After the kings had been expelled, first two consuls began to exist at Rome, from Brutus; then tribunes of the plebs and dictators, and then consuls again controlled the Republic for close to 464 years, until Julius Caesar, who was the first to seize sole rule, in the 183rd Olympiad.

71st

Olympiad

g The Volsci destroyed

Corioli. *

26 h Aeschylus the writer of tragedies is well known.

8

496

13

45

509

27 i The Latins rebelled against the Romans.

9

495

28 I After an uprising had happened, the people of Rome, seceded from the fathers.

10

494

[190/191]

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

29 a Marcius, who had captured Corioli, withdrew his army from its seige of the City (Rome) by the intervention of his mother Veturia and his wife Volumnia. *

11

493

3 a Choerilus and Phrynicus are considered illustrious.

21

483 b Diagoras is well known, and the followers of his natural philosophy.

4

22

482

72nd

Olympiad

5 c Xerxes, when he had come to Athens, burned down the city, at the time of the leadership of Callias.

23

481

30 b The war that was waged in Marathon, and those things that are written about Miltiades and Aristides who was surnamed the Just.

12

492

31

13

491

75th

Olympiad

32

14

490

6 d The war that was waged in Thermopylae. and the naval battle off Salamis.

24

480

33 c Panyasis the poet is considered illustrious.

15

489 d 300 nobles of the Fabian family slaughtered by the people of Veii. *

7 e The Athenians fortify Piraeus with a wall.

25

479 e When the Roman soldiers were besieged on mount Algidus, they were freed by the dictator Quintius Cincinnatus. *

8 f Hieron reigns at Syracuse.

26

478

1540

9 g Aeschylus the tragedian is well known.

27

477

76th

Olympiad

10 h War in Plateia and Mycale.

28

476

73rd

Olympiad

11 i After Gelon, Hieron exercises tyranny at Syracuse.

29

475

34 f Egypt was severed from Darius.

16

488

12

30

474

1530

35 g Gelo occupied Syracuse.

17

487

13 k Pindar the musician is considered important.

31

473

36 h Pindar and Simonides the lyrical poets are considered notable.

486

77th

Olympiad

14 I Themistocles flees to the Persians.

32 n Start of the 71st jubilee accord- ing to the Heb- rews. 472 i At Rome, the Vestal Virgin Pompilia, discovered in unchastity, was buried alive.

18

15 m Sophocles, the tragedian, first published the works of his ingenuity.

33 471 5th of the Persians, Xerxes son of Darius, for 20 years.

1

19

485

16 o At Rome, the vestal virgin Sunia, discovered in unchastity, was buried alive.

34 470 74th Olympiad k Xerxes captures Egypt.

2 I Aristides is expelled with ignominy.

20

484

17 p Sophocles and Euripides are considered important. 35

469

[192/193]

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

78th Olympiad subsequent deeds which are reported to have been performed by them, would not have been silent about Esther. a Herodotus the historical writer is well known.

3 a Sicily was ruled by the people.

42

462

18 b Bacchylides and Diagoras are celebrated at Athens for their superlative eloquence.

36

468

4 b Cimon overcomes the Persians in naval and land battle near the Eurymedontis: and halts the Median war.

43

461

1550

19 c Zeuxis the painter is well-known; some people judge that the so-called 'the bath of the Byzantines' is one of his paintings, many of which he made on commission. *

37

467 Of the Macedonians, Perdikkas, for 28 years. c An eclipse of the sun happened.

80th Olympiad d Themistocles dies from a draught of bull's blood.

5 d Anaxagoras dies.

1

460 e Heraclitus is considered important.

20 e Socrates is born.

38

466 f Evenus the poet is important. f A stone fell from the sky into the Aegon River. g Ezra the priest, notable among the Hebrews, is well-known, in whose time the high priesthood was held by Eliashib, son of Joakim, son of Jeshua, son of Jozadak. Moreover Ezra was most well-learned in the Divine Law, and an important teacher of all the Jews who had returned from captivity to Judaea.

6th of the Persians,

Artabanus, for 7 months, after whom, 7th, Artaxerxes, who was surnamed Long-Hand, for 40 years.

6

2

459

39

465

7

3

458

1560

8

4

457 81st Olympiad h Empedocles and Parmenides are considered most notable natural philosophers.

79th

Olympiad

g These things were written about Esther and Mordecai: some affirm that they took place under this king, which I do not think; for Ezra, who writes that in this time Ezra and Nehemiah were returned from Babylon, and the 9

5

456

1

40

464 i Zeno and Heraclitus the Dark are well known.

10 k Pherecydes the second writer of history is well known.

6

455

2

41

463

11 Cratinus and Plato the writers of comedies 7

454

[194/195]

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC are considered important.

1570

18 permission of his master, came to Judaea from Babylon in his 20th year, and in his 32nd year restored the walls and the city. Ezra writes that the task was completed under the high priest Joiada, Joasib, who was succeeded by his own son, Jonathan, who lived in the time of Alexander of Macedon.

14

447 a Aristarchus the tragedian is well known. b The very famous centennial games of Rome first held.

12 c 302 years from the founding of the City, the Decemvirs were created, and after one year they were ejected on account of Appius Claudius, who wished to abduct the daughter of a certain Virginius who was fighting against the Latins in Algidum. *

8

453

19 a Up to this point, the divine Scriptures of the Hebrews contain annals of time: those things which happened among them after these things, we provide from the book of Maccabees, and Josephus, and from the writings of Africanus, which thereafter continued the universal history until the Roman period.

15

446

82nd

Olympiad

13 d The Romans through ambassadors sought out laws from the Athenians, from which the Twelve Tables were inscribed.

9

452

20 b The Athenians and Lacedaemonians initiate a treaty of 30 years.

16

445

14 e Crates the writer of comedies, and Telesilla and Bacchylides the lyric poets, are considered important: likewise, Praxilla and Cleobulina are renowned.

10

451 c Herodotus was honoured for reading his books in the assembly at Athens.

84th

Olympiad

15 f The temple of Juno that had been at Argos burned down.

11

450

21 d Melissus the natural philosopher is well known.

17

444

22 e Euripides the tragedian is considered important, and Protagoras the sophist, whose books the Athenians burned by a public decree.

18

443

16 g Abaris the Hyperborean Seer is well known.

12

449

23

19

442 83rd Olympiad h Tribunes of the plebs and aediles created at Rome, after the consuls had been ejected.

24

20

441

85th

Olympiad

17 i Nehemiah the Hebrew, the attendant of King Artaxerxes, with the 13

448

25 f At Rome consuls again created.

21

440

26 g Phidias makes an ivory Minerva.

22

439

[196/197]

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC a The Fidennates rebel against the Romans. *

35 a The Athenians suffer in the plague.

3

430

27 b Theaetetus the mathematician is well known. Aristophanes is considered important, and Sophocles the tragic poet.

23

438 b Thucydides is well known.

1580

28

24

437

36 c Pericles dies.

4

429

86th

Olympiad

88th Olympiad c The Campanian gens established in Italy.

37 d Eupolis and Aristophanes, writers of comedies, are well-known.

5

428

29 d Democritus of Abdera, and Empedocles, and Hippocrates the doctor, Gorgias, and Hippias, and Prodicus and Zeno and Parmenides the philosophers are considered notable.

25

436

30

26

435

1590

38

6

427

31

27

434

39 e Fire erupted from Mount Etna.

7

426

32

28

433 e Socrates is celebrated for his superlative eloquence. f Among the Locrians, when Atlantis had been split off by an earthquake, the city became an island. f Ezra recalls that Nehemiah, who constructed the walls of Jerusalem, had finished the work in the 32nd year of Artaxerxes, king of the Persians. If someone should count from this point the 70 weeks (of years), written of by Daniel, which come to 490 years, he will find them fulfilled in the reign of Nero, in whose reign Jerusalem, after it had begun to be besieged, is seized in the second year of Vespasian.

40 g Plato is born.

8

425

89th

Olympiad

8th of the Persians,

Xerxes the second, for two months. After which the 9th, Sogdianus, for seven months. To whom succeeds 10th Darius, surnamed Nothus, for 19 years.

11th of the Macedonians,

Archelaus for 24 years.

1 h The Lacedaemonians and Athenians strike a treaty.

9

424

87th

Olympiad

2 i Eudoxus the Cnidian is considered important.

10

423

33 g Beginning of the Peloponnesian war.

1

432

3 k The Lacedaemonians found the city of Heraclea, fulfilling a sacred vow. (*)

11

422 h Bacchylides the song writer is well known.

4

12

421

34

2

431

90th

Olympiad

[198/199]

Persians

Consuls Macedonians Egyptians BC

Persians

Consuls Macedonians Egyptians

BC

5

13

1

420 of Darius and Parysatis, for 40 years. a In the reign of this king, it seems to me, the story which is contained in the book of Esther came to pass: of course he is the one who is called 'Ahasuerus' by the Hebrews, and 'Artaxerxes' by the LXX translators.

6

14

419

7

15

418

1

1

3

405

1600

8

16

417

94th

Olympiad

91st Olympiad Egypt is severed from the Persians and Amyrtaeus the Saite reigned for 6 years.

9 a The calamity which happened to the Athenians in Sicily. 17 416

2

2

4

404

10

18

415

3

3

5

403

11

19

414

4

4

6

402

12 b Alcibiades fled as a fugitive to Tisaphernes. 20

1

413 b Dionysius exercises a tyranny at Syracuse.

14th of the Macedonians,

Amyntas, for 1 year.

After whom Achoris, for 12 years.

92nd

Olympiad

13 c Euboea secedes from the federation of the Athenians. 21

2

412 c The Athenians support tyranny.

14

22

3

411

15

23

4

410

5 d Isocrates the orator is well known. 1

1

401

16

24

5

409 After whom Pausanias, for 1 year.

93rd Olympiad Of the Macedonians, Orestes, for 3 years. 2 e 29th dynasty of Egypt, of the Mendesians.

17 d Euripides dies staying with Archelaus, and Sophocles at Athens. 1

6

408 f Democritus dies.

28th Dynasty of Egypt. Nephertites for 6 years. g Pharnabazus kills Alcibiades.

1610

18

2

1

407 h The Anabasis of King Cyrus, about which Xenophon writes.

19

3

2

406

95th Olympiad 11th of the Persians, Artaxerxes, who was surnamed Mnemon, son e Dionysius exercises tyranny in Sicily.

13th of the Macedonians, Archelaus, for 4 years.

6 i The tyrants overthrown at Athens. 1

2

400 k The Athenians began to use 24 letters, when previously they had only had 16 letters.

1. At this point, in mid-page in 'O', the column of Macedonian regnal years which is black up to this point suddenly turns red. This is clear evidence that the scribe copied the colours from his exemplar, and did not amend them. It also shows that the exemplar did indeed have 26 lines, because the colour change occurs at the page-break (as here) in such an exemplar, rather than in mid-page, as in 'O'.

2. This entry should be red, but is in fact black in 'O'.

[200/201]

Persians

Consuls Macedonians Egyptians BC

Persians

Consuls Macedonians Egyptians

BC a Xenophon the son of Gryllus, and Ctesias are considered important.

After whom Amyntas for 6 years.

Nectanebis for 18 years.

7 b Socrates drinks poison.

1

3

399

1630

19 a Evagoras driven mad when he was reigning in Cyprus. 1 5

1

387

8 c Temple at Ephesus burned down again. 2

4

398

20

6

2

386

1620

9 d The followers of Socrates are considered important. 3

5

397

21

7

3

385

96th

Olympiad

99th

Olympiad

10 e Diogenes the Cynic is well known. 4

6

396

22 b 30th dynasty of Egypt, of the people of Sebennythos. 8

4

384

11 f Speusippus is considered notable. 5

7

395

23

9

5

383

12

6

8

394

24

10

6

382 g Dionysius persists in tyranny. After whom Argaeus for 2 years.

25

11

7

381

100th

Olympiad

13 h The famous Carthaginian War. 1

9

393

26 c The Peloponnesian cities of Helica and Bura were swallowed up in a great earthquake. 12

8

380

97th

Olympiad

27

13

9

379

14 i Eudoxus the astrologer is well known. 2

10

392

28

14

10

378 After whom Amyntas again for 18 years.

1                      11

1640

29 d The Praenesti conquered by the Romans at the River Allia by Quinctius Cincinnatus. (*) 15

11

377

15 k The Senones Gauls occupied Rome, except for the Capitol. (*)

391

16

2 12

390 Of Egypt, Psammuthes, for 1 year. e The Athenians made leaders of Greece.

101st

Olympiad

17

3

1

389

30 f Isocrates the rhetor is well known. 16

12

376 98th Olympiad I Plato the philosopher is well known.

After whom Nepherites for 4 months.

31

17

13

375

32 g Plato and Xenophon, and likewise other followers of Socrates are considered important. 18

14

374

18 m The military tribunes began to be in place of the consuls. * 4

1

388 Of the Macedonians, Alexander, for 1 year.

After whom 33

1 15

373 (1) Diodorus 14.110.5.

[202/203]

Persians

Consuls Macedonians Egyptians BC

Persians

Consuls Macedonians The kingship of the Egyptians was destroyed.

BC

102nd Olympiad After whom Ptolemy Alorites, for 4 years. Of the Macedonians, Philp, for 26 years.

4

1

6

362

34

1 16

372

5

2

7

361

35

2

17

371

105th

Olympiad

36

3 18

370

6 a Demosthenes the orator is well known. 3

8

360 Of Egypt, Teo, for 2 years.

7 b Ochus, having captured Apodasmus of the Jews, settled her deported inhabitants in Hyrcania, by the Caspian sea. 4

9

359 a Teo the king of Egypt flees to Arabia.

8

5

10

358

37

4

1

369

1660

9

6

11

357

103rd Olympiad After whom Perdiccas, for 6 years.

106th

Olympiad

10 c Dionysius is driven from Sicily. 7

12

356

38 b Dionysius the king of Sicily dies in his 19th year, after whom Dionysius the younger takes possession of the kingdom. 1

2

368

11 d Alexander, son of Philip and Olympias, is born. 8

13

355 30th Dynasty of the Egyptians. Nectanebo, for 18 years.

12 e Dion of Syracuse is murdered. 9

14

354

13 f Hipparinus the son of Dionysus exercises tyranny over Syracuse. 10

15

353

107th

Olympiad

1650

39 c Aristotle, during the 18th year of his life, is a hearer of Plato. 2

1

367

14 g Erinna the poetess is well known. 11

16

352

40

3

2

366

15 h Ochus held Egypt, Nectanebo having been expelled into Ethiopia, in whom the kingship of the Egyptians was destroyed. Up to this point, (the narrative is according to) Manetho. 12

17

351 12th of the Persians, Artaxerxes, also called Ochus, for 26 years

16

13

18

350

17

14

@@@@@

349

1

4

3

365

108th Olympiad 104th Olympiad d Alexander of Pherae is well-known.

18 i Ochus overthrew Sidon, and annexed Egypt to his empire. 15

2

5

4

364

1670

19

16

3 e Camillus defeats the Gauls, who had made war on the Romans. 6

5

363 k Demosthenes the Orator

[204/205]

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC

Persians

Consuls

Macedonians

BC is celebrated in the opinion of all.

After whom Darius, 14th, son of Arsamus, for 6 years. a Manasseh, the brother of Jad the high priest of the Jews, constructs a temple on Mount Garizin.

20 a The Romans defeat the Gauls.

17

346

21 b Dionysius sailed to Corinth under a truce.

18

345

1 b Alexander, fighting successfully against the Illyrians and Thracians, having destroyed Thebes, took up arms against the Persians, and at the River Granicus, overpowering the royal generals, captures the city of Sardis.

2

335 c Plato dies, after whom Speusippus headed the Academy.

2

3

334

3

4

333

109th

Olympiad

d The Romans,

since they had defeated the Samnites in two battles, brought all the neighbouring regions back under their own rule because they had withdrawn from her alliance.

22

19

344

23

20

343 c The Roman consul Manlius Torquatus beat his son with rods and executed him with an axe, because he had disobeyed orders by fighting against the enemy. (*)

24

21

342

25 e Dionysus driven away to Corinth.

22

341 110th Olympiad f At Rome, a survey having been carried out, there were found to be 160,000 citizens.

26

23

340

112th Olympiad 13th of the Persians, Arses, son of Ochus, 4 years. g Jad, high priest of the Jews, is considered important.

4 d After the capture of Tyre, Alexander takes possession of Judaea, and being received favourably there, sacrifices victims to God, compliments the high priest of the temple with many honors, and as guardian of the holy places sends forth Andromachus, whom the Samaritans later kill: on account of which things, after returning from Egypt, Alexander put them to death with great torment, and hands over their captured city to the Macedonians to dwell in. (*)

5

332

1 h Speusippus dies, to whom Xenocrates succeeded.

24

339

2

25

338

1680

3

26

337

5

6

331

111th Olympiad Of the Macedonians, Alexander, son of Philip, for 12 years, 6 months.

6 e Alexandria founded in Egypt, in the seventh year of Alexander's reign: at which time also the Latins were subdued by the Romans.

7

330

4

1

336

[206/207] The kingship of the Persians was destroyed

Consuls

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls

Macedo-nians

BC a Alexander occupied Babylon after Darius had been killed, in whom the kingship of the Persians was destroyed. In Egypt Ptolemy son of Lagus was the first to reign, for 40 years.

Over the Macedonians,

Philip, also called Aridaeus, brother of Alexander, reigned for 7 years.

Alexander reigns in Asia in the 7th year of his reign and holds it all for 12 years. a At Rome Appius Claudius Caecus is considered important, who introduced the Claudian water and laid out the Appian Way. * Of Alexander

1 b Lysimachus held Lydia, Thrace and the Hellespont.

1

324

8 b Anaximenes and Epicurus are considered important.

329 c The generals of the Macedonians turned to sedition. c Alexander captures the Hyrcanians and Mardians, and returning, he founded Paraetonium in Ammon.

2 d Agathocles exercises tyranny at Syracuse.

2

323

113th Olympiad e The war against Lamia set in motion.

9 d Alexander captures the Aorn rock and crosses the River Indus.

328 f Perdiccas fights against the Egyptians.

3 g Ptolemy the son of Lagus, after he had gained control of Jerusalem and Judaea by treachery, transferred very many captives into Egypt.

3

322

1690

10 e Alexander's war in India against Porus and Taxila.

327

11 f Harpalus flees to Attica. h Onias the high priest of the Jews, the son of Jad, is considered important.

12 g The Romans subjugate the Samnites, and plant colonies.

326

4 i Menander, showing his first play, named Orgen, 1 wins.

4

321

114th Olympiad h Alexander dies in the 32nd year of his life in Babylon. After him, power was transferred into many hands. k Theophrastus the philosopher is well-known, who, so Cicero says, received this name because of his god-like speech. (*) (1) OPTHN = 'anger'.

[208/209]

Alexandrians

Consuls First in Syria Macedo-nians First inAsia BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria Macedo-nians Asia

BC

115th

Olympiad

16 a Theodorus the Atheist is well known.

4

9

10

309

5 a Demetrius of Phalerum is considered illustrious.

5

320

118th

Olympiad

17 b Demetrius of Phalerum went to Ptolemy, and persuaded him to restore democracy at Athens.

5

10

11

308 b The Romans battling against the Samnites for a long time, finally reduce them to servitude. In Asia, Antigonus reigns for 18 years.

1710

18

6

11 12

307

6

6

319

19

7 12

13

306

7

7

1

318

20

8

13

14

305 Of the Macedonians, Cassander, for 19 years.

119th

Olympiad

21 c Seleucus founded the cities of Antioch, Laodicia, Seleucia, Apamia, Edessa, Beroea, and Pella, of which he constructed Antioch in the 12th year of his kingship.

9

14

15

304

1700

8

1

2

317

116th

Olympiad

22

10

15

16

303

9 c The philosophers Menedemus and Speusippus are considered notable.

2

3

316

10

3

4

315

23

11

16

17

302

11

4

5

314

24 12

17

18

301

12

5

6

313 d Seleucus occupied Babylon.

117th

Olympiad

120th Olympiad In Asia, Demetrius, also called Poliorcetes, for 17 years d The Hebrew history of the Maccabees reckons the kingship of the Greeks from this year. But these books are not accepted as part of divine Scripture. In Syria and Babylon and the upper regions reigned Seleucus Nicator, for 32 years. e The high priest of the Jews, Simon the son of Onias, is considered important, to whom 'the Just' was the sobriquet because of his religious reverence towards God and his clemency towards his fellow-citizens.

25

13

18

1

302

26

14

19

2

303 Of the Macedonians, the sons of Cassander, Antigonus and Alexander, for 4 years.

13 e The Romans defeat the Marsi, Umbri, and Peligni.

1

6

7

312

27

15

1

3

302 From this point the Edessenes calculate their dates. 14 f The Romans plant colonies.

2

7

8

311

1720

28

16

2

4

301 g Lysimachia founded in Thrace.

121st

Olympiad

15 h Ptolemy invaded Cyprus.

3

8

9

310

29 f Demetrius, king of Asia,

17

3

5

300

[210/211]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria Macedo-nians Asia BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria Macedo-nians Asia

BC

30 surnamed Poliorcetes, devastates the city of the Samaritans, which Perdiccas had constructed.

18

4

6

295 both in Syria and Asia.

Demetrius, for 6 years.

39 a Serapis was introduced at Alexandria.

27

2

15

286 a A census of Rome having been taken, there were found to be 270,000 Roman citizens were found.

31

19

1

7

294

40 b Ariminum and Beneventum founded by the Romans. *

28

3

16

285

124th

Olympiad

32 b Ambassadors of the Alexandrians having been sent for the first time to Rome by Ptolemy, they procured friendship. *

20

2

8

293 2nd of Egypt, Ptolemy Philadelphus, for 38 years

1 c Sostratus of Cnidius constructed the Pharos in Alexandria.

29

4

17

284

122nd

Olympiad

Demetrius

handed himself over to Seleucus.

33 c Menander the writer of comedies dies. 21

3

9

292 d Antigonus, surnamed Gonatas, occupied Lacadaemon. d The Romans defeat the Gauls and the Tyrrhenians: and the land of the Sabines is apportioned by lot. e The Romans capture Croton.

34

22

4

10

291

2 f Ptolemy Philadelphus permitted the Jews, who were in Egypt, to be free men: and, transmitting a votive vessel to Eleazar, high priest at Jerusalem, he arranged for the divine scriptures -- which he had in the Alexandrian library that he had collected for himself from every kind of literature -- to be translated into Greek speech from the Hebrew language by LXX translators.

30

5

283 e Seleucus transfers Jews into those cities that he had constructed, granting them the right of citizenship and municipal rank in honour equal to the Greeks. Of the Macedonians, Ptolemy, surnamed KEPAYNOΣ. 1

35

23

5

11

3

31

1

282

36

24

6

12 Meleager for 2 months, Antipater for 45 days, after whom Sosthenes for 2 years.

123rd Olympiad Of the Macedonians, Pyrrhus, for 7 months f Eleazar the brother of Simon took over the supervision of the temple as high priest of the Jews, because Onias the son of Simon was still a young boy.

37

25

13 After whom, Lysimachus, for 5 years. g After capturing Demetrius in Cilicia, Seleucus ruled

1720

38

26

1

14 1. In 'O' this reads 'Ceraunos' in Roman letters.

[212/213]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians

BC

4

22

1

281

1750

18 and many cities in Sicily were joined to them. 14

13

267 In Syria and Asia, after Seleucus reigned Antiochus Soter, for 19 years.

19 a At Rome a vestal virgin detected in unchastity ends her life with a noose. * 15

14

266

125th

Olympiad

20 16

15

265

5

1

2

280

129th

Olympiad

Antigonus Gonatas, for

36 years.

21 b Zeno the Stoic dies, after whom (comes) Cleanthes. 17

16

264

6

2

1

279

22 c The Romans capture Syracuse. 18

17

263

7

3

2

278 d King Nicomedes, enlarging a city of Bithynia, named it Nicomedia.

1740

8

4

3

277

23

19 18

262

126th Olympiad In Syria, Antiochus, who was called Theos, for 15 years.

9 a One of the Roman virgins, caught in an (act of) corruption, is punished. 5

4

276

24

1

19

261

10 b Milo handed over Tarentum to the Romans. 6

5

275

130th

Olympiad

11 c The Romans held Calabria and Messana. 7

6

274

25 e The Romans defeat the Carthaginians in a naval battle, and capture 100 cities of Libya. 2

20

260

12

8

7

273

26

3

21

259

127th

Olympiad

27

4

22

258

13 d Aratus is well known.

9

8

272

1760

28 f Erasistratus the doctor is well known. 5

23

257

14 e The silver nummus minted at Rome for the first time. 10

9

271

131st

Olympiad

29 g Antigonos restores liberty to the Athenians. 6

24

256

15 f Polemon the philosopher dies, after whom Arcesilas and Crates are considered important. 11

10

270

16

12

11

269

30 h After Eleazar, his uncle Manasses accepted the pontificate of the Jews. 7

25

255

31

8

26

254

32

9

27

253 128th Olympiad g Epicurus died.

132nd

Olympiad

17 h The Romans planted colonies, 13

12

268s

33 i The Carthaginians capture 90 10

28

252

[214/215]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians

BC

34 Roman ships in Sicily, the consul Metellus having been put to flight. 11

29

251

6

6

3

241

35

12

30

250

135th

Olympiad

36

13

31

249

7 a The poet Quintus Ennius is born at Tarentum, who having been translated by Cato the quaestor to Rome, lived on the Aventine hill, content with a very meagre income and the help of one servant woman. * 7

4

240

133rd

Olympiad

37 a When the Parthians had rebelled against Macedonian rule, Arsaces was the first to reign; hence they were called Arsacids. 14

32

248

8

8

5

239

9

9

6

238

1770

38

15

33

247

1780

10

10

7

237 3rd of Egypt, Ptolemy Euergetes, for 26 years In Syria, Seleucus Callinicus, for 20 years.

136th

Olympiad

11 b At Rome, a vestal virgin who had been corrupted by a slave, did away with herself by her own hand. 11

8

236

12 12

9

235

1 b Onias the high priest of the Jews, the son of Simon the Just, is considered important, who, failing to render the usual tribute to king Ptolemy, compelled him to anger. In fact, Josephus, a noble man among his own people, having been sent by the Jews as an ambassador to Ptolemy, when he had won the friendship of the king because of his many presents to him, is appointed governor of Judaea and the surrounding region. 1

34

246

13

13

10

234 Of Macedon, Antigonus, for 15 years.

14

14

1

233

137th

Olympiad

15 c The high priest of the Jews Simon, son of Onias, is considered important, in whose time, Jesus the son of Sirach composing the book of wisdom, which they call the Panareton, also made mention of Simon in it.

15

2

232

2

2

35

245

16

16

3

231

134th

Olympiad

17

17

4

230

3

3

36

244

18

18

5

229

138th

Olympiad

Of the Macedonians, Demetrius, for 10 years.

19

19

6

228

1790

20 d Nearly 40,000 Gauls slaughtered by the Romans. 20

7

227 c At Rome a census having been conducted, there were found to be 260,000 men. In Syria, Seleucus Ceraunos, for 3 years.

4

4

1

243

5 d Temple of Vesta burned down at Rome. 5

2

242

21

1

8

226

[216/217]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians

BC

22

2

9

225 142nd Olympiad when Marcellus is consul.

139th

Olympiad

9 a The Romans subjugate Capua and Sicily. 12

7

212

23

3 10

224

Antiochus the Great, for 36 years

10 b Antiochus, King of Syria, having conquered Ptolemy Philopator, unites Judaea with himself.

13

8

211

11

14

9

210

24 a Caria and Rhodes were so struck by an earthquake, that the great colossus collapsed. 1

11

223

12 c Laevinus makes an alliance with Attalus, the king of Asia. * 15

10

209

25

2 12

222

143rd

Olympiad

26

3

13

221

13 d The high priest of the Jews, Onias the son of Simon, is considered notable, to whom Arrius the king of the Lacedaemonians sends legates. 16

11

208

140th

Olympiad

1810

14

17

12

207 Of Egypt, Ptolemy Philopator, for 17 years

15

18

13

206

16

19

14

205

144th

Olympiad

1 b The events which were written in the third book of Maccabees take place in the time of this Ptolemy.

4

14

220

17 e Scipio recaptures many cities of Spain. 20 15

204

2

5

15

219 5th of Egypt, Ptolemy Epiphanes, for 24 years Of the Macedonians, Philip, for 42 years

3

6

1

218

1 f Ptolemy Epiphanes, having appointed Scopas general of his army, captures Judaea and many cities of Syria. 21

16

203

1800

4

7

2

217

141st

Olympiad

2

22

17

202

5 c The Jews were defeated, and 60,000 of their soldiers were slaughtered. 8

3

216

3 g Naevius the writer of comedies dies at Utica, driven from Rome by a party of nobles, but especially of Metellus. * 23

18

201 d Vestal Virgins buried alive at Rome, on account of an accusation of unchastity.

6

9

4

215

7

10

5

214

145th

Olympiad

h Plautus, from Sarsina in Umbria, dies at Rome; who, because of trouble over his income, had hired himself

8 e Eratosthenes is well known. 11

6

213

4

24

19

200 f The Romans capture Syracuse

[218/219]

Alexandrians

Romans Syria and Asia Macedonians BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians

BC out at a baker's handmill; there, as often as he had leisure from work, he was accustomed to write and sell plays. * and conceded Syria, Phoenicia, Samaria, and Judaea under the name of a "dowry."

15

35

30

189

148th

Olympiad

5 a Near Thera, an island appeared which is called Hiera. 25

20

199 a Eumenes, who founded Eumenia in Phrygia, brother of King Attalus, is considered important. *

6

26

21

198

1820

7 b Antiochus, after defeating Scopas, recovered the cities of Syria, and Judaea willingly surrenders to him. 27

22

197

16 b The second book of Maccabees contains things that happened among the Jews of this time. 36

31

188 In Syria and Asia, Seleucus, also called Philopator, for 12 years

146th

Olympiad

8 c The Romans commanded the Greeks to be free and all Spain 1 carried out orders. 28

23

196 c Titus Livius, the tragedian, is considered important; who, as a reward for his ingenuity, was granted his freedom by Livius Salinator, whose children he used to teach. 2 *

1830

17

1

32

187

9 d Antiochus, knowing the goodwill of the Jews towards himself, presents them with great gifts, and through his letters honours them with constant praises. 29

24

195

10

30

25

194 d When Hannibal was demanded from Antiochus, with whom he had associated himself after he had been conquered by Scipio, by means of envoys, he fled to Prusias, the king of Bithyniae. But when through Flaminius the Senate again were demanding him (Hannibal) also from him (Prusias), and when he was going to have to be handed over, he drank poison, and was buried at Libyssa in Bithyniae. *

11

31

26

193

147th

Olympiad

18

2

33

186 e Antiochus, after the battle at Thermopylae in which he was defeated, agreed this between himself and the Romans, that he would pay one thousand talents each year in the name of "compensation."

12

32

27

192

19

3

34

185

13

33

28

191

149th Olympiad f The Romans planted many colonies.

20 e Simon, a dignitary of the temple at Jerusalem, fleeing to Apollonius the governor of Phoenicia; many gifts having been promised to him, he began to claim the priesthood for himself.

4

35

184 g Antiochus, having returned to friendship with Ptolemy, made peace with him; and (Ptolemy) gave him his daughter Cleopatra as wife,

14

34

29

190 (1) Hiberia: Only the Roman province of Hispania, as the remainder was still not under Roman control until 29 BC.

(2) cf. The Concise Oxford Companion to Classical Literature entry for "Livius Andronicus" who is here intended; the facts are disputed, see the Loeb Remains of Old Latin II p.viii ff. Titus is the name of Livius historicus not of the Lucius Livius Andronicus, writer of tragedy and epic here referred to.

[220/221]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians

BC

21 When Seleucus heard about this, he sent Heliodorus to carry out the job, who, when he arrived in Judaea, judging unfairly and carrying out many crimes, is frightened away by divine omens against himself, and returns to Seleucus. However, the priest Onias had taken care that Simon should be made a fugitive. 5

36

183

151st

Olympiad

4 a Aristobolus, by nation a Jew, the peripatetic philosopher, is well known, who writes commentaries (consisting of) explanations on (the books of) Moses for Ptolemy Philometor.

12

1

176 In Syria and Asia, Antiochus Epiphanes, for 11 years.

22

6

37

182

5

1

2

175

6

2

3

174

23 a Hyrcanus, a son of Joseph the leader of Judaea, when he went abroad to visit Ptolemy, was received honorably by him. But his brothers, after a plot had been formed against him, were the cause of great tribulations for the nation of Judaea. 7

38

181

7

3

4

173

152nd

Olympiad

8 b Antiochus Epiphanes, when he had returned by order of the senate from the land of the Ptolemies, which he had unexpectedly invaded, came into Judaea, and there Jesus, who also was called Jason, handed over the pontificate to his brother Onias; later, having been expelled, he appointed Onias named Menelaus his successor to it. And so, strife having been started between the princes over the dignity of the priesthood, the seeds of immense miseries sprouted. 4

5

172

9

5

6

171

150th

Olympiad

24

8

39

180

10

6

7

170 6th of Egypt, Ptolemy Philometor, for 35 years

11

7

8

169

1 b Statius Caecilius, the writer of comedies, is considered important. By nation he was an Insubrian Gaul and at first he was an comrade of Ennius. Some say that he came from Milan. He died in the year after the death of Ennius, and was buried next to the Janiculum. * 9

40

179

153rd

Olympiad

2

10

41

178 c Antiochus attacks the law of the Jews: in fact firstly compelling their whole province to idolatry, those who were unwilling to comply he tortured to death.

1840

3

11

42

177 Of the Macedonians, Perseus, for 10 years.

[222/223]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Macedonians BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC

Afterwards, actually going up into Jerusalem, he devastates the temple and vessels of God which had been consecrated for ministry: he puts an image of Jupiter of Olympus in the temple, he builds a shrine of Jupiter the Foreigner in Samaria on the summit of mount Garizin, the Samaritans themselves having entreated that he should do this. In fact in this time a certain Matthatias from the priesthood, son of Hasmonaeus, in the hamlet of Modeim, taking up arms against the generals of Antiochus, also supported by the help of his sons, vindicated the laws of his country, in the 153rd olympiad.

154th Olympiad In Syria and Asia, Antiochus Eupator, for 2 years. a Judas, also called Maccabeus, son of Mattathias, the general of the Jews, expelling the generals of Antiochus from Judaea, and purifying the Temple from the statues of the Idols, returned the laws of his country to his countrymen after three years in the 154th olympiad.

16

1

164

17

2

163 Demetrius Soter , for 12 years.

18

1

162

19

2

161

155th Olympiad Of the Jews, general Judas, for 3 years b After Menelaus the high priest of the Jews had been slain by the younger Antiochus, who had earlier abandoned Judaea to Antiochus Epiphanes, Alcimus, an outsider to the sacerdotal tribe, through ambition takes possession of the pontificate. On account of this Onias, son of the high priest Onias, moving into Egypt, founded a community with his name in the Heliopolitan district, after a temple in the likeness of the temple of his country had been constructed. Alcimus, indeed, while carrying on hostilities against Judas Maccabaeus, after no great time died, struck down by the wrath of God; and, so, with the approval of all the Jews, it is decided that the priesthood should go to Judas Macabaeus, who, having received that dignity, sends legates to Rome: and the Senate decreed that the Jews

12 a Ennius the poet dies, older than 70, of a joint disease, and was buried in Scipio's Monument on the Appian Way within the first milestone of the City. Some claim that his bones were transferred to Rudiae from the Janiculum. * 8

9

168

20

3

1

160

1850

13

9

10

167

14

10

11

166

15 b After Perseus had been killed, the Romans ordered the Macedonians, Illyrians and Galatians to be free. 11

12

165

21

4

2

159 The kingship of the Macedonians came to an end.

~~~~~

[224/225]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC were to be considered friends and supporters of the Romans.

157th

Olympiad

28 a The false Philip reigns in Macedonia for 1 year. 11

6

152

22 a Publius Terentius of Carthage, a writer of comedies, granted his freedom on account of his genius and his appearance, dies in Arcadia; before he delivered it to the aediles, he first reads the Andria to Caecilius, who was himself greatly admiring. * 5

3

158

29 b Alexander, son of the Antiochus who was named Epiphanes, ruling Syria and Asia, bestows on Jonathan a crown and many notable gifts. 12

7

151 Of the Jews, general Jonathan, for 19 years In Syria and Asia, Alexander, for 9 years and 10 months

1860

23 b The battle against the generals of Demetrius having begun, Judas is killed, having carried on the pontificate for 3 years. 6

1

157

30 c The Romans, after the false Philip had been killed, make the Macedonians tributaries. 1

8

150

31

2

9

149

156th

Olympiad

158th

Olympiad

24 c Aristarchus the grammarian is well known. 7

2

156

32 d At Alexandria, with Ptolemy judging, the Samaritans and Jews contend about the honours that are to be offered by each party to their temple, and the Jews win. 3

10

148

25 d Jonathan, general of the Jews, the brother of Judas, after Bacchides the general of Demetrius had been expelled from Judaea, received the pontificate. * 8

3

155 e The poet Lucilius is born. *

26 e Pacuvius of Brundisium the tragedian, the nephew of the poet Ennius by his daughter, is considered important; and he lived in Rome as long as he busied himself with painting and offered fables for sale; then, having moved to Tarentum, he died almost a nongenarian.¹ 9

4

154

1870

33 f At Rome, a survey having been carried out, there were found to be 322,000 men. 4

11

147

34 g Oppius imprisons the Galli: and Carthago is brought by Scipio under the power of the Romans, 668 years since her foundation; or, as 5

12

146

27

10

5

153

35

6

13

145

(1) The "Remains of Old Latin," vol. II (Loeb Library, 1982), says that Pacuvius was

"[p. xvii] a son of the sister of the poet | [p. xviii] Ennius," with footnote e, attached to the word "sister," saying "So Pliny, XXXV, 19; son of Ennius's daughter, says Jerome wrongly" (p. xvii). Later, the text says:

"His year of fame is stated by Jerome to have been 154 B.C." with footnote d, "Jerome, ad ann. 600 = 154" (p. xviii).

[226/227]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC others affirm, 748. him the estate next to Pisaurum is called Accianus: since he had been brought there from the City among the colonists. *

159th Olympiad 7th of Egypt, Ptolemy Euergetes, for 29 years.

7 a After Antiochus the son of Alexander was at length murdered, Trypho tried to invade the kingdom of Syria but next dies himself. 3

1

138 After whom Antiochus Sidetes for 9 years.

1 a Jonathan, both general and high priest of the Jews, makes a friendship pact with the Romans and the Spartans. 7

14

144

1880

8 b After Demetrius, his brother Antiochus who was surnamed Sidetes reigned over all Syria. 1

2

137

2 b Ptolemy gave his daughter as wife to Alexander, the son of Balas, king of Syria. 8

15

143

3 c Scipio overthrows the Numantines. 9

16

142

161st Olympiad d Brutus subjugates Spain as far as the Ocean.

9 c To Simon, both high priest and leader of the Jews, the Romans and the Spartans -- after his emissaries had been received amicably -- sent friendly greetings in return. 2

3

136

4 e Trypho kills Jonathan, high priest of the Jews, and Simon is received into the priesthood of his brother Jonathan. 10

17

141 In Syria and Asia, Demetrius, for 3 years.

10

3

4

135

160th Olympiad d The Slave War started in Sicily.

5 f Trypho slays Antiochus son of Alexander. 1

18

140

11 e Simon the high priest of the Jews is slain, to whom succeeds his son John. 4

5

134 g Ptolemy marries off his daughter to Demetrius, along with the kingdom which he had taken away from Alexander.

12 f The first book of the Maccabees contains a history of this time. 5

6

133

162nd

Olympiad

g Antiochus Sidetes, king of Syria, taking up arms against Judaea and surrounding Jerusalem with a siege trench, when he had forced the high priest Simon to terms, withdraws, in the 162nd Olympiad.

6 h L. Accius, a tragedian, is considered important. (He was) born to freed parents in the consulship of Mancinus and Serranus, and already recited his own writings to Pacuvius of Tarentus when he [Pacuvius) was an old man: from 2

19

139

13

6

7

132 Of the Jews, Duke Simon, for 8 years.

14

7

8

131 Of the Jews, King Hyrcanus, also called John, for 26 years. h Dying, Attalus made the Roman [228/229]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC

15 people the heirs of his kingdom. 8

1

130

27 siege. Later Herod, restoring it, wanted it to be called Sebaste in honor of Augustus. 7

13

118

16 a Ptolemy expelled from Egypt. 9

2

129

163rd Olympiad After whom Demetrius again for 4 years

1900

28

8

14

117 b Arsaces the Parthian killed Antiochus.

166th

Olympiad

29 a The philosopher and poet Marcus Terentius Varro is born. * 9

15

116

17 c The slaves, who were rebelling in Sicily, compelled by the necessity of the siege, were driven in turn to have to devour their comrades' corpses. 1

3

128 8th of the Egyptians, Ptolemy Physcon also called Soter, for 17 years.

1890

18

2

4

127 d The most renowned city of the Arvernian Gauls, and King Vituitus captured. *

1

10

16

115

2

11

17

114

19 e Close by the islands of Aeolia, cast up in the fire from an eruption, appeared the island that is now called Hiera. 3

5

126

3 12

18

113 After whom Antiochus Cyzicenus for 18 years

20

4

6

125

167th

Olympiad

164th Olympiad In Syria and Asia, Antiochus Grypus, for 12 years b Antiochus Cyzicenus, having cast out Grypus, seized Syria: and then Grypus, having defeated Cyzicenus, took it back again. Thus they were ruling in turn, fighting in turn against each other. f While John, the general and priest of the Jews, was waging war against the Hyrcanians, he received the name of Hyrcanus and, when he asked the Romans for the privilege of friendship, he was by decree of the Senate recorded on the list of friends.

4

1

19

112

5

2 20

111

21

1

7

124

6

3

21

110

7

4

22

109

22

2

8

123

168th

Olympiad

23

3

9

122

8 c Fighting against the Romans, Jugurtha is captured. 5

23

108

24 g Colonies planted at Narbonne. 4

10

121

165th

Olympiad

1910

9 d Rhodes having been struck by an earthquake, the Colossus fell. 6

24

107

25 h The Jews' priest Hyrcanus razed Samaria, which in our day is called Sebaste, which had been captured by 5

11

120 e Among the Jews, Jonathas holds the principate in a glorious way.

26

6 12

119

[230/231]

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls Syria and Asia Jews

BC

10 a Cicero is born at Arpinum, to a mother named Helvia and a father of knightly rank, from the royal stock of the Volsci. * 7

25

106 170th Olympiad celebrates a triumph with Catulus. (*)

16 a The Thracians conquered by the Romans. 13

4

100 b Once more a Slave War flares up in Sicily.

11 b Gn. Pompey the Great is born. * 8

26

105

17

14

5

99

169th Olympiad Of the Jews, Aristobolus, for 1 year.

9th of the Egyptians Ptolemy, also called Alexander, for 10 years. c Aristobolus, the son of Jonathan, both king and high priest, was the first amongst the Jews to wear the insignia of the diadem, 484 years after the Babylonian captivity.

After him reigned Jannaeus surnamed Alexander, who, also controlling the pontificate, presided over the people with great cruelty.

12

9

1

104 after whom Jannaeus, also called Alexander, for 27 years.

1 c Ptolemy Physcon was expelled from the kingdom by his mother Cleopatra, and withdraws to Cyprus.

15

6

98

1920

2

16

7

97

171st

Olympiad

3 d Aquilius suppressed the Slave war in Sicily. 17

8

96 d Turpilius the writer of comedies, exceedingly old, dies at Sinuessa. * e Dying, Ptolemy King of the Cyrenes made the Romans his heirs in his will.

13 e Gaius Lucilius the satirical writer dies at Naples, and is given a public funeral, in the forty sixth year of his life. * 10

1

103

4 f Seleucus is burned alive by Antiochus, the son of Cyzicenus 18

9

95 In Syria, Philip, for 2 years f The poet Marcus Furius, surnamed Bibaculus, is born at Cremona.
*

5 g The poet Titus Lucretius is born, who afterwards, driven mad by a love-potion, although during intervals of his insanity he had composed several books which Cicero later corrected, killed himself with his own hand in his forty-fourth year. * 1

10

94

14 g 200,000 Cimbrians slaughtered, and 80,000 captured along with their leader Teutomodus by Marius. * 11

2

102

6

2

11

93 The kingship of Syria and Asia ends.

~~~~~

15 h Gaius Marius being Consul for the fifth time, defeats the Cimbri by the Eridanus, and afterward for this 12

3

101

[232/233]

Alexandrians

Consuls

Jews

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls

Jews

BC

172nd Olympiad a Antiochus fleeing to the Parthians, he later surrendered himself to Pompey, after which Philip was captured by Gabinius.

3 a Sallustius Crispus, the historical writer, is born among the Sabines, at Amiternum. *

18

86

7

12

92 b Sulla devastates the Athenians.

4 c At Rome, a survey having been carried out, there were found to be 463,000 men. *

19

85

8 b Syria, having been possessed by kings until this point, fell under Roman control.

13

91

174th

Olympiad

9 c The Picentes, Marsians and Pelignians started a war against the Romans. *

14

90

5 d The temple at Delphi burned down for the third time by the Thracians, and at Rome the Capitol.

20

84

10

15

89 d Lucius Pomponius of Bologna, writer of atellans, is considered important. *

6 e Jannaeus captures many towns.

21

83 f In the 26th year of his life, Cicero defends Quintius. *

173rd

Olympiad

7 g P. Terentius Varro, from the hamlet of the Atax, is born in the province of (Gallia) Narbonensis; after living for 35 years, he learned Greek letters with great zeal. *

22

82 10th of Egypt, PTOLEMY, who was ejected by his mother, for 8 years e Returned from exile, he (Ptolemy) obtained the kingdom because the citizens had expelled Alexander, who had been king before him, on account of the murder of his mother.

1

16

88

8 h Vultacilius Plotus, a Latin rhetor, a teacher and freedman of Gnaeus Pompey, opened a school in Rome. *

23

81 f Plotius Gallus first taught Latin rhetoric at Rome, about whom Cicero thus declares: "I retain the memory that, when we were boys, a certain Plotius first began to teach in Latin." *

175th Olympiad 11th of Egypt, Ptolemy Dionysus, for 30 years

1930 2 g Gaius Valerius Catullus, the lyric writer, is born at Verona.

17

87

1 i Sulla occupied Rome, and dies after two years.

24

80

[234/235]

Alexandrians

Consuls

Jews

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls

Jews

BC

2 a Having defended Roscius against Chrysogonus, Cicero withdraws to Athens, and returns from that place to Rome after three years. *

25

79 a Vergil Maro is born in the community that is called "Andes" not far from Mantua, when Pompey and Crassus were consuls. *

12

8

69

3 b Pompey celebrated a triumph most gloriously. 26

78 c Jannaeus devastates many communities. b M. Porcius Cato the Stoic philosopher is well known. * d Lepidus declared a public enemy.

1940 4 e T. Quintius Atta, a writer of national dramas , dies at Rome, and is buried at the second milestone of the Praenestine Way. *

27

77

178th Olympiad Of the Jews, Alexandra reigned for 9 years.

13 c Antioch in Syria captured by the Romans.

9

68 d The Cretan war started, from which Metellus was called Creticus. The Jews made tributaries by Pompey, and Hyrcanus received the pontificate among them, for 34 years.

176th

Olympiad

5 f Alexandra, also called Salina 2, the wife of Alexander, reigned at Jerusalem, in whose time the breakdown of government and various military disasters oppressed the Jews.

1

76 e The grove of Daphne near Antioch is consecrated to Apollo by Pompey. *

1950 14 f Aristobulus and Hyrcanus, sons of Alexandra, fighting against each other for power, exposed an opportunity to the Romans to take possession of Judaea. And so Pompey, coming to Jerusalem after the city had been captured and the Temple had been opened, approaches up to the holy of holies; he brings Aristobolus with him as a captive, and confirms the pontificate to Hyrcanus; then he makes Antipater, the son of Herod of Ascalon, procurator of Palestine.

1

67

6

2

75

7 g The Gladiators' War in Campania. 3 *

3

74 h L. Lucullus was the first to be hailed 'imperator', having defeated Armenia, Mesopotamia, and captured Nisbis with the brother of the king. (*)

15

2

66

8

4

73

177th

Olympiad

9 i Pompey subjugated all Spain. 4 *

5

72

10 k M. Lucullus celebrated a triumph over the Bessi, having captured Cabilonnum, together with Tomis and the other nearby cities. *

6

71

16 g Libya left by the will of king Appion to the Romans. *

3

65

11 l Crassus celebrated a triumph. *

7

70 h The satiric and lyric 5

(1) 'togatae'.

(2) Salome.

(3) The Third Servile War (Gladiators' War), instigated in 73 B.C. by Spartacus, an escaped slave and gladiator; the war ended in 71 B.C.

(4) Not the peninsula as a whole, but the entire Roman province. This had been in revolt under Sertorius.

(5) Venusia was on the borders of Apulia and Lucania; the date was 8 December 65 B.C.

[236/237]

Alexandrians

Consuls

Jews

BC

Alexandrians

Consuls

Jews

BC poet Horace Flaccus is born at Venusia to a freedman father. * he died at Piacenza. *

25 a Caesar, crossing the Rhine, devastates the Germans.

12

56

179th

Olympiad

17 a Apollodorus the Pergamene, a Greek orator, teacher of Callidius and Augustus, is considered important. *

4

64 b The consul Crassus captured with his son at Carrae. *

26 c Ventidius is the first of the Romans to defeat the Parthians. *

13

55

18 b Pompey, after Jerusalem had been captured, makes the Jews tributary.

5

63 d The active Populares orator Curio is considered notable in Rome; who afterwards in Africa, from the shame of losing his Army, chose to die rather than escape. *

19 c Those things which Sallust and Livy write about Catiline, Cethegus, and Lentulus, and the Consul Cicero, happened at this time. (*)

6

62

27

14

54

28

15

53

20 d Cicero spends a year in exile, being received with honour by Plancius. 1 *

7

61 e Virgil, having assumed the toga, goes to Milan, and after a short time goes on to Rome. * e Pompey hailed 'imperator.'

180th

Olympiad

21 f Caesar captures Lusitania and some islands in the ocean.

8

60

182nd

Olympiad

29 f The statue of Jupiter Olympiacus struck by lightning.

16

52

22 g Messalla Corvinus the orator, and Titus Livius of Padua, the writer of history, are born. *

9

59

30 g Caesar captures Germans and Gauls.

17

51 12th of Egypt, Cleopatra for 22 years h Virgil becomes learned by studies at Cremona. *

23 i Catullus dies at Rome in the 30th year of his life. *

10

58

1 h The beginning of the civil war of Caesar and Pompey.

18

50

1960 24 k M. Callidius the orator is considered important; later, having followed the Caesarean factions in the Civil War, when he was in charge of Gallia Togata,

11

57

2 i Diodorus Siculus, a writer of Greek history, is considered important. *?

19

49

181st

Olympiad

183rd Olympiad (1) 58BC, in Macedonia. Gnaeus Plancius was quaestor of Macedonia.

[238/239]

Romans 3 Alexandrians Jews

BC

Romans Alexandrians Jews

BC a Gaius Julius Caesar was the first among the Romans to attain sole power, from whom Romans holding first rank are called 'Caesars'.

184th

Olympiad

a Antony decreed that the month Quintilis should be called July: because Julius (Caesar) had been born in it.

5 b After Judaea had been captured, Cassius despoils the temple. 7

23

44 First of the Romans, C. JULIUS CAESAR, for 4 years and 7 months c On the Ides of March, Gaius Julius Caesar is slain in the Curia, and at once Publius Dolabella took office. 1 * b From this point the Antioch-enes calcul-ate their dates. 1 c Pompey, conquered in battle, and fleeing, is killed by the eunuchs of the king of the Alexandrians. 3 d The body of C. Caesar cremated on the Rostra, as an honour. *

20

48

d M. Caelius the praetor and T. Annius Milo the exile crushed while simultaneously promoting a revolt in the Thurian and Bruttian regions. *

e Servius Sulpicius, a lawyer, and Publius Servilius Isauricus given a state funeral. *

f At Rome, three simultaneously risen suns gradually coalesced into the same disk. *

1970 2 e Ptolemy's carcass found in the Nile wearing a golden breastplate. * 4

21

47

g Among other portents, that occurred all around the world, an ox in the region of Rome at its plowing spoke: "It is useless to goad me on. For soon there will be a shortage not of crops but of men."

2 *

f Caesar confirms the reign of Cleopatra in Egypt on account of the influence of her unchastity.

3 g Julian basilica dedicated at Rome. * 5

22

46 h A decree of the senate and the Athenians is sent to the Jews, who had proposed alliance through emissaries.

2nd of the Romans, Octavianus Caesar Augustus reigned for 56 years and 6 months; from whom the kings of the Romans are called 'Augusti' i Cleopatra entered the City with a royal escort. *

1 h Antonius launches a war against Caesar Augustus. *? 9

25

43 k Women who have neither husbands nor children prohibited from the use of litters or pearls, and remain minors for 44 years. * i Laberius, writer of mimes, dies at Puteoli, in the 10th month after the murder of Caesar.

4 l Nigidius Figulus, a Pythagorean and a magician, dies in exile. *? 6

23

45 k Publius the mime playwright, a Syrian by birth, debuts on the Roman stage. * (1) Literally "received the fasces."

(2) Cf. Livy 28.11.4 (for 206 BC, not this 41 BC) "et bos in agro Romano locutus."

(3) Prior to this page in 'O' the heading always reads 'Consuls'. Thereafter it is 'Romans'.

[240/241]

Romans Alexandrians Jews

BC

Romans Alexandrians Jews

BC a Cicero, in his 64th year, is slain by Herennius and Popilius in his villa at Formiae. * to friendship with him. a The poet Cornificius died, deserted by the soldiers whom on account of their often fleeing, he calls 'helmeted hares'. His sister was Cornificia, whose notable epigrams survive. * c According to some, Cicero is killed in his villa at Caieta. b The head of Cicero, with his right hand, placed in front of the Rostra, and next to it the crowned likeness of the soldier Popilius who had slain him. * b Cassius looted the temple of the Rhodians. * c Second split of Augustus and Antonius. d Ovid Naso is born in Abruzzi. 1 *

185th

Olympiad

4 d Cornelius Nepos the historical writer is considered important. * 11

28

40

2 e Caius Falcidius, a Tribune of the People, brought in a law 2 against anyone making a legacy in his will so great that it did not leave to the heirs a fourth part of the estate. * 9

26

42 e Antigonus while fighting against the Jews is at length killed. From then on down to the present time the kingship of Jerusalem has been destroyed. Accordingly after him Herod, a foreign prince, and in no way relating to Judea, was installed by the Romans.

5

12

29

39 f Curtius Salassus was burned alive with four cohorts in the island of Arada, because he had exacted tributes quite oppressively. *

6

13

30

38

3 g His owner recognized Vibius Maximus that had been designated quaestor, and carried him off.
* 10

27

41 f The Fornii, father and son, are considered important orators, of whom the consular son dies before the father. *

1980

7

14

31

37 h Oil erupts out from the earth from a taberna meritoria 3 on the other side of the Tiber, and flowed all the day without interruption, signifying the Grace of Christ from the nations. *

186th

Olympiad

8 g Sallust died in the quadrennium before the Battle of Actium. * 15

32

36

9 h M. Bavius the poet, whom Vergil mentions in the Eclogues, dies in Cappadocia. 16

33

35 i Augustus defeats Antony, and by the senate intervening, returns (1) Literally "among the Peligni."

(2) The Falcidian Law,(Justinian, Digest of Roman Law, 35.2) by its first Article, conferred the power of disposing of an estate up to and including three-fourths of the same. English translation.

Some paraphrase has been necessary: literally "Caius Falcidius, a Tribune of the People, proposed a law against anyone making a legacy in his Will, greater than would [still] leave a quarter [of the whole estate] to the heirs."

It is followed in some manuscripts by a long and confused gloss, which adds the words "... if four or less." And then goes on, "If however there were more than four, the proportion was in this way: that part that Falcidius ordered (unless the father forbade it) and the other profitable legacies, and similar less-desirable items, were divided up equally in the same way as the same father bequeathed his property either to the children or to more distant relatives."

(3) Cassius

Dio 48.43.4, giving the date as 38 BC. Here one day, in 38 BC, oil suddenly started to gush out from the ground. This mysterious event was given the Latin name fons olei ("oil source", or "oil fountain"). This is the legend of S.Maria in Trastevere. A taberna meritoria was an upmarket tavern and lodging house.

[242/243]

†

Romans Alexandrians Jews

BC

Romans Alexandrians Jews

BC

10 a Herod, the son of Antipater from Ascalon and whose mother was Cypris from Arabia, received the principate of the Jews from the Romans: in whose time, around the time of Christ's birth, the kingship and the priesthood of Judaea, which previously had been held by a succession of lesser men, were destroyed, and the prophecy was fulfilled which speaks thus through Moses:

17

34

34

These 69 weeks

1 come to 483 years, in which the christs (=anointed ones), that is, the high priests reigned through the anointing of oil until Hyrcanus.

The latter having been captured finally by the Parthians, Herod son of Antipater received Judaea, which did not belong to him, from Augustus and the Senate.

And his sons after him reigned until the most recent captivity of Jerusalem, never having been appointed high priests from the succession of the sacerdotal line, serving God according to the Law of Moses for all their lives. Indeed, certain lay persons, and others at another time, and not a few, used to buy the priestly office from Roman Emperors, for a single year or a bit more. All these things Daniel the prophet also foretells, saying:

Herod the foreigner reigned over the Jews, the secular power of the pontificate having ended, for 37 years.

"There will not lack a prince from Judah, nor a leader from his loins, until he shall come in whom it is entrusted. And he himself will be the hope of the nations." 2 And in this very place, Christ, whom the Scripture of Daniel prophesies, received his end. For until Herod, christs (=anointed ones), i.e. the high priests, were the kings of the Jews, who began to rule from the 65th Olympiad and the restoration of the Temple under Darius, until Hyrcanus and the 186th Olympiad, around 433 years having passed: which is what Daniel also signifies, saying:

"And after 7 and 62 weeks the anointing will perish, and there will be no sound judgement there and the people will defile the temple and the sanctuary with the leader who is coming: and they will be struck down in the flood of war." And in what follows: "And upon the Temple, he says, an abomination of desolation: and until the fulfillment of the time, a fulfillment will be given upon the desolation." a Herod installed a certain Ananelus, invited from Babylon, as high priest of the Jews, and after a short while he appointed Aristobulus, the brother of his wife and nephew of Hyrcanus as And may you know and understand that from the beginning of the word of returning to and rebuilding Jerusalem, until the leadership of CHRIST (=the anointed one), 7 weeks 1 and 62 weeks 1.

(1) 'Hebdomades' is properly a 'group of seven' years rather than a week. The word 'weeks' is intended to be quaint or mystical, as note where it is initially explained by Leviticus 25:8 'numerabis quoque tibi septem ebdomades annorum id est septem septies quae simul faciunt quadraginta novem'

-- 'And you shall count seven weeks of years, seven times seven years, so that the time of the seven weeks of years shall be to you forty-nine years.' Jerome's

'id est' is not in the Heb (or RSV) but the phrase SHBX SHBTT SHNYM 'seven sabbaths of years' is clearly meant to be pointed in some way, and not just a way of saying something numerical like 'group of seven'. Even the Gk word E(BDOMAS is somewhat obscure [cf. Chantraine s.v. e(pta at end]. Finally, it is already traditional language in Jerome's time and remains so: NJB, Lev. 25:8 'You will count seven weeks of years--seven...' [note their long dash = Jerome's id est] and then Daniel 9:24 'Seventy weeks are decreed...'.

(2) The quotation marks represent a line of vertical squiggles against this paragraph in the left-hand margin in 'O'.

[244/245]

Romans Alexandrians Jews

BC

Romans Alexandrians Jews

BC the successor to him; when he was murdered after a year, he reappointed Ananelus to the priesthood.

12 a Until Cleopatra, the Ptolemies, who were called Lagids, reigned in Egypt for 295 years. 19

2

32 a The movements of the moon, according to the Romans, discovered. * b Artorius the doctor of Augustus perishes after the victory of Actium in a shipwreck. *

11 b Treaty of Antony and Augustus. 18

1

23 c The Romans planted colonies.

13 c Some compute the first year of the monarchy of Augustus from this point. 20

3

31 d Augustus celebrated a triumph for his land-battle triumph. e Antony handed over Arabia to Cleopatra. d Caesar called Augustus, from whom the month Sextilis received the name of Augustus. f The beginning of the third disagreement of Augustus and Antony, because the sister of Caesar having been repudiated, he had married Cleopatra. (*)

14 e With a huge pomp of triumphs, Augustus entered Rome, and led before his chariot the children of Cleopatra, the Sun and the Moon. 1 21

4

30 g Nicetes, Hybreas, Theodorus and Plution are considered the most noble Greek teachers of the rhetorical art. *

15 f Nicopolis founded near Actium and the Actian games established. 22

5

29 The power of the Alexandrians ends.

~~~~~ g Augustus enacts many laws for the Romans.

187th Olympiad h Cleopatra and Antony kill themselves, and Egypt is made a Roman province, which Caius Cornelius Gallus first headed, about whom Virgil writes in the Eclogues. (*)

188th Olympiad h A census of Rome having been taken, there were found to be 4,164,000 Roman citizens.

2

16 i Colonies planted.

23

2

6

3

28 k Anaxilaus Larisseus, a Pythagorean (1) Dio Cassius 51.21.8. The reference is to Alexander Helios (the 'sun') and Cleopatra Selene (the 'moon').

(2) This number is missing in 'O'.

(3) This number is coloured red in 'O'.

[246/247]

Romans

Jews

BC

Romans

Jews

BC and a magician, is expelled from the City and from Italy by Augustus. * was offered to him, declined.

21 a Quintilius of Cremona, a friend of Vergil and Horace, dies. *

11

23 a M. Terentius Varro the philosopher dies when nearly a nonagenarian. * b Augustus deprived the Cyzicenes of their liberty.

1990 17 b Thebes of Egypt razed to the ground.

7

27

22 c Pylades, the Cilician writer of pantomime, although the ancients themselves had sung and danced, was the first in Rome to make a chorus and pipe make music. *

12

22 c Cornelius Gallus the Frejusian poet, by whom Egypt was first governed, as we said above, killed himself with his own hand in the 43rd year of his life. *

23 d Sent by Augustus, Tiberius took possession of Armenia.

13

21 d Trallis destroyed in an earthquake.

18 e The Indians through a deputation requested friendship with Augustus. *

8

26 e Atratinus, who had prosecuted Caelius at the age of seventeen, is considered important among orators. In the end, due to the weight of his illnesses, having died voluntarily in the bath, he left Augustus his heir. * f Messala Corvinus, when he was first made urban prefect, relinquished his magistracy on the sixth day, claiming that it was an unjust form of authority. *

190th

Olympiad

19 g Augustus makes the Calabri and the Gauls subject to taxation.

9

25

24 f The Cantabri, initiating an insurrection, are crushed.

14

20 h Munatius Plancus, a student of Cicero, is considered notable as an orator; who, when he was in charge of Gallia Comata, founded Lyons. *

25 g Herod in Jerusalem constructed many and great buildings.

15

19

26 h Vergil dies in Brundisium, when Sentius Saturninus and Lucretius Cinna were consuls. His bones, having been taken to Naples, are buried within the second mile-marker of that city, with this very epitaph written above it, which he himself had dictated as he lay dying:

16

18

189th

Olympiad

20 i Marcus Lollius makes Galatia a province. k Augustus, when the monarchy

[248/249]

Romans

Jews

BC

Romans

Jews

BC "Mantua gave birth to me;

Calabria carried me off;

Now Parthenope holds me.

I sang of pastures, the country and leaders." * a Agrippa captures Bosphorus.

31 b Cestius the Smyranean rhetor taught Latin in Rome. *

21

13 a Rebuilding Samaria from the ground up, which for a long time now had been sitting in ashes, Herod renamed it Augusta in honor of Augustus, that is, Sebaste, and constructed the town which is called Panion in Paneas.

192nd Olympiad c Augustus is hailed as pontifex maximus by the Senate.

32

22

12 d Herod founded Caesarea in the name of Caesar, which previously used to be called Strato's Tower.

2000 27 b Augustus granted freedom to the Samians. 17

17 c In Cyprus, many parts of the cities were ruined in an earthquake. e Herod founded Anthonis, and Antipatris: and he constructed Herodion in his own honour and that of his father Antipater: also he constructed most cleverly innumerable works in individual cities of Syria which he was ruling.

33

23

11 d Marcus Lollius defeats the Germans who had taken up arms. e The poets Varius and Tucca, companions of Vergil and Horace, are considered illustrious, who later corrected the books of the Aeneid under this condition: that they added nothing. *

34 f Tiberius Caesar celebrates a triumph over the captured Pannonians.

24

10

191st

Olympiad

35 g Horace dies at Rome in the fifty-seventh year of his life. *

25

9

28 f Augustus adopted Gaius Agrippa as his son.

18

16

36 h Passienus the Father, a notable speech-maker, died. *

26

8 g Aemilius Macer, a poet from Verona, dies in Asia. * i C. Julius Hyginus, surnamed Polyhistor, the grammarian, is considered illustrious. *

29 h Tiberius makes the Vindelici and those who were bordering Thrace, Roman provinces.

19

15

193rd Olympiad k After Germany had been devastated, Tiberius is hailed as emperor.

30 Colonies at Beirut and Patras planted.

20

14

[250/251]

Romans

Jews

BC

Romans

Jews

BC/AD

36 a Herod killed Hyrcanus, who previously had been high priest of the Jews, when he returned from his Parthian captivity, and killed his son, who had succeeded his father in the high priesthood: in addition, he most cruelly puts to death his (Hyrcanus's) sister, his very own wife, with his own two sons already in adolescence, and the mother of his murdered wife, his mother-in-law.

26

8 from the weariness of a double quartan fever.

41 a Herod added to these things, which he accomplished above cruelly, this also: he killed the husband of his sister Salome, and when he handed her over to another, he put him to death, too: moreover he slew the scribes and translators of the divine law in a similar crime.

31

3 b Tertullian, in that book which he wrote against the Jews, affirms that Christ was born in the 41st year of Augustus, and suffered in the 15th of Tiberius. *

2010

37

27

7

42

32

2

38 b Tiberius celebrated a triumph over the Rhetians, Vindelicians, Armenians, and the Pannonians.

28

6 c Jesus Christ, the son of GOD, is born in Bethlehem of Judah

43

33

1 BC c Albutius Silo of Novara, an important rhetor, is well known. * d Quirinius, sent to Judaea by a resolution of the senate, makes a survey of men and property.

39 d Many things were ruined in an earthquake on the island of Cos.

29

5 e All the years taken together from Abraham until the birth of Christ come to 2015 years. e Augustus condemns to exile his daughter Julia, caught in adultery.

195th

Olympiad

194th Olympiad f C. Caesar made a treaty with the Parthians. f M. Tullius Tiro, Cicero's freedman, who is credited with being the first to use shorthand, lives to his 100th year on his estate in Puteoli.
*

44 g Sextus the Pythagorean philosopher is well known.

34

1 AD h Augustus adopts Tiberius and Agrippa as his sons.

40

30

4 g Augustus exhibited gladiatorial games and a naval battle.

45 i Judas the Gallilean urges the Jews to rebel.

35

2 h Melissus of Spoleto, the grammarian, is well known. * k Herod, when he had learned of the nativity of CHRIST from the information of the Magi, ordered all the infants in Bethlehem to be killed. i M. Porcius Latro, the Latin declaimer, killed himself

[252/253]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD

46 a Herod, suffering from the dropsy and with his whole body infested with worms, dies miserably and deservedly.

36

3 lost his memory and intellect that he could scarcely string a few words together, and at the end, when a sore had developed around his lower spine, he ended his life by fasting at 72 years of age. *

2020 47 b Asinius Pollio, orator and consul, who had celebrated a triumph over the Dalmatians, dies at his Tuscan villa in the 70th years of his life. *

37

4 Of the Jews, Duke Archelaus, for 9 years

198th Olympiad a Augustus with his son Tiberius taking the census at Rome, he found 9,370,000 men.

196th Olympiad c Into Herod's place Archelaus is substituted by Augustus, and his four brothers are made Tetrarchs: Herod, Antipater, Lysias, and Philip.

56 b Sotio the Alexandrian philosopher, the tutor of Seneca is considered important. (*)

9

13

48

1

5 c Archelaus, in the 9th year of his reign, is banished to the Gallic city of Vienne. Of the Jews, Herod the Tetrarch holds the principate for 24 years d So great a famine happens at Rome, that five modii are sold for 27½ denarii. d An eclipse of the sun happened, and Augustus dies in his 76th year, in Atella in Campania, and is buried at Rome in the Campus Martius. (*)

49 e Philisthion the mime playwright, a Magnesian by birth, is considered important at Rome. *

2

6

50 f Tiberius Caesar drives back the Dalmatians and Sarmatians into Roman authority.

3

7 3rd of the Romans, Tiberius reigned for 23 years

2030 1 e The orator Gaius Asinius Gallus, son of Asinius Pollio, whom even Vergil mentions, is put to death with fearful tortures by Tiberius. *

1

14

51 g Athenodorus of Tarsus the Stoic philosopher, and M. Verrius Flaccus the grammarian, are considered notable. (*)

4

8

2

2 15

3

3

16

197th

Olympiad

199th

Olympiad

52 h The Athenians, revolting against the Romans, are crushed, the authors of the rebellion slain.

5

9

4 f T. Livius the historian dies in Patavi.

4

17

53

6

10 g Ovid the poet died in exile, and is interred near the town of Tomi. *

54

7

11

55 i Two years before Messala Corvinus the orator died, he had so

8

12 h Germanicus Caesar celebrates a triumph over the Parthians.

[254/255]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD

5 a Thirteen cities were levelled in an earthquake: Ephesus, Magnesia, Sardis, Mosthene, Aegae, Hierocaesarea, Philadelphia, Tmolus, Temnus, Cymae, Myrhina, Apollonia Dia, and Hyrcania.

5

18 Paneas, in which he had constructed many buildings, Caesarea Philippi, and another city Julias.

13 a Pilate is sent as procurator of Judaea by Tiberius. *

13

26

6 b Fenestella, a writer of histories and songs, dies a septuagenarian, and is buried in Cumae. *

6

19

14 b Votienus Montanus of Narbonne the orator dies in the Balearic islands, having been banished there by Tiberius.

14

27

7 c Tiberius, by blandishments, having summoned to himself many kings, never returned them: among these was Archelaus of Cappadocia; after his kingdom had been turned into a province, he (Tiberius) ordered its most noble city Mazaca to be called Caesarea. *

7

20

15 c Herod founded Tiberias, and Livias.

15

28 d John the son of Zechariah, preaching in the desert by the Jordan River, bears witness that Christ, the son of God, is present in their midst. Also the Lord Jesus Christ himself announces the way of salvation to all people, proving by signs and wonders that the things that he said were true.

200th

Olympiad

8 d The theatre of Pompey burned down.

8

21

9 e Tiberius makes Drusus his colleague in power.

9

22 f There are computed to the present year, that is the 15th of Tiberius Caesar, from the year following the restoration of the temple, which was completed under the second year of Darius, king of the Persians, 548 years

10 f Drusus Caesar perished by poison.

10

23

2040 11 g Quintus Haterius, the active Populares orator, lives until almost his 90th year with the highest honours. *

11

24 h Servius Plautus, guilty of corrupting his son, kills himself in punishment. * from Solomon however, and the building of the first temple, 1060 years

201st Olympiad from Moses, and the Exodus of Israel out of Egypt, 1539 years

12 i Philip the Tetrarch called 12

25

[256/258]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD from Abraham and the reign of Ninus and Semiramis, 2044 years

"However in the fourth year of the 202nd olympiad, an eclipse of the sun happened, greater and more excellent than any that had happened before it; at the sixth hour, day turned into dark night, so that the stars were seen in the sky, and an earthquake in Bithynia toppled many buildings of the city of Nicaea." These things the aforementioned man (says). The proof however of this matter, that in this year the Saviour suffered, the gospel of John presents, in which it is written that after the 15th year of Tiberius Caesar, the Lord preached for three years. Also Josephus, a native writer of the Jews, attests that around that time on the day of Pentecost, the priests first perceived an earth tremor and certain (loud) sounds. Then, that an unexpected voice suddenly burst out from the innermost part of the Temple saying: "Let us flee from this abode." However the aforementioned man writes that in the same year Pilate the governor secretly in the night set up images of Caesar in the temple, and from this arose the first cause of the rebellion and turmoil of the Jews. from the flood until Abraham, 942 years from Adam until the flood, 2242 years

202nd Olympiad a Start of the 81st jubilee according to the Hebrews 16 b Jesus Christ the son of God, preaching the way of salvation to all, performs the miracles which were written in the Gospels. 16

29

17 c Jesus Christ the son of God, imparting the divine sacraments to his own disciples, commands that they announce (the opportunity and need for) conversion to God, to all peoples. 17

30

18 d Jesus Christ, according to the prophecies, which had been spoken about him beforehand, came to the Passion in the 18th year of Tiberius, at which time also we find these things written verbatim in other commentaries of the gentiles: an eclipse of the sun happened 1, Bithynia shaken by earthquake, and in the city of Nicaea many buildings collapsed: all of which agree with what occurred in the Passion of the Saviour. Indeed Phlegon, who is an excellent calculator of olympiads, also writes about this, in his 13th book writing thus: 18

31

19

19

32 a The first bishop of the Church of Jerusalem, James the brother of the Lord, is ordained by the Apostles.

(1) November 24, 29 AD. Note that paras b,c and d are merged in the Merton Ms.

[258/259]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD a From this point it must be considered, what a great number of calamities will have then oppressed the nation of the Jews. other recognised religions. 4 Indeed, when by a decree of the fathers, it had pleased them that the Christians be evicted from the City, Tiberius by an edict threatened accusers of the Christians with death: thus writes Tertullian in his Apologeticum. 5

23

23

36 b Cassius Severus the outstanding orator, who had mocked the Quintian Proverb, dies of starvation in the 25th year of his exile, covered with hardly a rag over his privates. 1 * a Many Roman Senators and Knights killed.

203rd Olympiad c Pilate, after the aforementioned uprising which had been incited on account of Caesar's images, laid the seeds for a second uprising when he spent the sacred treasury, which the Jews call the korban, on an aqueduct for Jerusalem. b Tiberius dies in Campania. 6 (*)

204th

Olympiad

20 20

33 4th of the Romans, Gaius Caligula reigned for 3 years and 10 months.

1 c Gaius Caesar, called Caligula, makes Agrippa, who had been freed from his bonds, king of Judaea.

24

37 Prince of the Jews, Agrippa, for 7 years

2050 21 d Sejanus, the prefect of Tiberius, who used to possess the greatest influence over him, urges most insistently that the Jewish nation be destroyed: Philo recalls this in the second book of his Embassy. 2

21

34 d Gaius declares himself to be among the gods. e Flaccus Avilius, prefect of Egypt, oppresses the Jews with many injuries, with the people of Alexandria consenting and resounding with numerous cries against them: he also pollutes their synagogues with images, statues, and altars and sacrificial victims. Philo declares, in the book called Flaccus, that he was present at all e The satirical poet Persius Flaccus is born at Volaterrae.

2

1

38

22 f Agrippa the son of Aristobulus, the son of King Herod, the accuser of Herod the Tetrach, having set out for Rome, is thrown in chains by Tiberius. 3

22

35 g Pilate referring the matter of Christian doctrine to Tiberius, Tiberius referred it on to the Senate, so that it would be accepted among the

(1) After this in the PL is the following entry, where the Merton ms. has a blank: Stephen is stoned: Saul is converted to Christ.

(2) Another blank in the manuscript is filled in the PL with these two entries:

James the brother of John the apostle, by the order of King Herod, is beheaded.

-- The apostle Peter thrown into prison by Herod, and having been bound with two chains, he is miraculously freed by an angel.

(3) In the PL, but not in the Ms. this entry continues: because he had publicly prayed to God, so that, right away upon the death of Tiberius, he would see Gaius the lord of all.

(4) 'Sacra' rendered as 'recognised religions'.

(5) In the PL, not in the Ms. there follows: Peter the Apostle founded the Church at Antioch, and there securing his (episcopal) throne, he sat (reigning as bishop) for 25 years.

(6) The PL adds: in the villa of Lucullus.

[260/261]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD these things, which is why he himself had even undertaken a delegation to Gaius.

5th of the Romans, Claudius reigned 13 years, 8 months, 28 days.

205th Olympiad a Passienus the son killed by the treachery of his own heir. 1 *

1 a This is Claudius the paternal uncle of Drusus, who has a monument at Moguntiacum: elsewhere I have read that he was the maternal uncle, because he was the brother of the mother of Gaius. *

4

41

3 b Gaius took the wife of Memmius Regulus, forcing him to write that he (Memmius) was the father of his wife.

2

39

2 b Peter the Apostle, by nation a Galilean, first high priest of the Christians, after he had been the first to found a church at Antioch, proceeded to Rome, where as bishop of the same city he remains, preaching the gospel for 25 years.

5

42 c Pontius Pilate, falling into many calamities, killed himself by his own hand: so the historians of the Romans write.

3 c Mark the evangelist, Peter's interpreter, preaches Christ in Egypt and Alexandria.

6

43 d Gaius ordered Petronius, prefect of Syria, to place his statue in Jerusalem under the name of Jupiter Optimus Maximus: which the Jews refused to do with the utmost obstinacy.

2060 4 d Evodius is ordained the first bishop of Antioch.

7

44 e Agrippa, king of the Judeans, having ruled 7 years, dies. After him, his son Agrippa is placed in power by Claudius. e In the whole Roman world, as Philo and Josephus write, statues and images and altars of Gaius Caesar consecrated in the synagogues of the Jews. Of the Jews, Agrippa, for 26 years. f The prophecy of Agabus, who had said in the Acts of the Apostles that there would be a famine in the whole world, came true under Claudius.

4 f Many of the nobles killed by Gaius.

3

40 g Gaius condemned his sisters, whom he had brought into unchastity, to exile on islands. () g Claudius celebrated a triumph over the Britons and added the Orkney islands to the Roman empire. In celebration of this glory he named his son Britannicus. () h Gaius ordered all the exiles to be killed. i Gaius is slain by his bodyguards on the Palatine in the 29th year of his life. h Domitius Afer of Nimes is considered a

(1) In the Merton manuscript there is a space following. In the Patrologia Latina, there follows this entry: Matthew in Judaea is the first to write a gospel.

[262/263]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD brilliant orator; afterward, when Nero was emperor, he dies from overeating at a meal. *

207th

Olympiad

9 a A famine having occurred in Greece, a bushel of wheat was sold for six drachmas. 4

5

49

a Claudius Quirinalis, a rhetor from Arles, teaches most notably at Rome. *

10 b Great famine at Rome. 5

6

50 c Claudius sends Felix to Judea as procurator, before whom the apostle Paul, standing accused, delivers a speech in his own defense.

6

206th

Olympiad

11

7

51

5 b Between Thera and Therasia an island rose up that was 30 stades across.

1

45

12

8

52 c At Rome, a survey having been carried out under Claudius, there were found to be 6,844,000

Roman citizens.

1

208th

Olympiad

d When Felix was procurator of Judaea, there were many who were deceiving the people with their opinions.

Among them also was a certain false prophet from Egypt who gathered many to himself but was crushed by the army of Felix in his very attempt to achieve great things. Josephus writes, agreeing with the Acts of the Apostles, in which the tribune says to Paul: 'Are you not the Egyptian who recently caused a stir and led the four thousand men into the desert?'

7

6

2

46 d Hitherto having been under kings, Thrace is reduced to a Roman province.

2

13

9

53

7 e When Cumanus was procurator of Judea, during the days of unleavened bread 3, the unrest in Jerusalem was so serious that 30,000 Jews perished as the people ran together attempting to exit through the gates.

3

47

8 f Palaemon Vicentinus is considered a notable grammarian at Rome, who once, when he was asked what was the difference between a drop and a spot, said, "A spot stays put and a drop falls." *

4

48

2070 14 e Claudius dies in the palace, in the 64th year of his life. (*)

10

54 g Marcus Antonius Liberalis the rhetor pursues a very bitter rivalry with Palaemon. * 6th of the Romans, Nero reigned for 13 years, 7 months and 28 days.

1 f His uncle was Gaius Caligula. *

11

55

(1) The Patrologia Latina text has two extra entries

at this point, which are not found in the 9th century Merton College manuscript

No. 315, although there seems to be a space in the text at this point:

-- Around this time, Claudius drained the Fucine lake, which took 30,000 men working for 11 years without intermission.

-- Claudius constructed the port of Ostia, with two branches, as it were, projecting on the left and the right sides.

(2) Another entry from the PL, not in the Merton Ms. follows, where there is a space in the page: The virgin Mary, mother of Jesus Christ, is taken up to her son in heaven, as some write had been revealed to her.

(3) The passover.

(4) Another entry from the PL, not in the Merton Ms. follows, where there is a space in the page: Three suns appeared at the same time and immediately united in the same circle.

(5) Another PL entry, but no space in the Ms.: Dionysius the Areopagite, once a distinguished philosopher, is famous.

(6) Another PL entry follows, again with no space in the Ms.: Philip, the apostle of Christ to the people in Hierapolis, a city of Asia, while preaching the Gospel, is nailed to a cross and stoned to death.

(7) The reference is to Acts 21:38, and the citation is slightly altered from:

'Are you not the Egyptian who recently stirred up a revolt and led the four thousand men of the assassins into the desert?'

[264/265]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD a While Felix was governing Judaea, a revolt broke out in Caesarea of Palestine which resulted in the deaths of a great multitude of Jews. stoned to death by the Jews. Simeon, also called Simon, is the second to be placed in his throne.

2 b Festus succeeds Felix in the government (of the province), before whom, in the presence of Agrippa the king, Paul the apostle explains the rationale of his religion, and is sent to Rome in chains.

12

56

8 a Lightning struck in front of Nero's table. 18

62 b The first bishop of the church of Alexandria ordained after Mark the Evangelist was Annianus, who presided for twenty two years. c Probus of Berytus, most erudite of grammarians, is well known at Rome. * c Persius dies at the age of 29. 1 *

209th

Olympiad

9 d Baths built by Nero, which he called the Neronian Baths.

19

63 d Statius Surculus Tholosanus celebratedly taught rhetoric in Gaul. * e In Rome, Nero takes part in a competition of cithara-players, and defeats everyone.

3 e Earthquake at Rome and eclipse of the sun.

13

57 f Marcus Annaeus Lucanus, the Cordovan poet, caught in the Pisonian conspiracy, presented the veins of his arms to a physician for cutting. *

4 f Nero kills his mother Agrippina and the sister of his father.

14

58

5 g Nero was given to such excessive luxury that he used to bathe with both hot and cold ointments, and fish with golden nets which he set using purple for the rigging. *

15

59 2080 10 g Nero set the greatest part of Rome on fire, so that he might get a look at something like the burning of Troy. (*)

20

64

6

16

60 h In Asia, three cities were ruined in an earthquake; Laodicea, Hierapolis and Colossae.

210th Olympiad h At Rome Nero competes with the cithara and wins. i Cestius Florus succeeds Albinus as procurator of Judaea, in whose time the Jews rebelled against the Romans. i Albinus succeeds Festus in the magistracy of Judaea.

7 k James, the brother of the Lord, whom everyone used to call the Just, is

17

61 k Junius Annaeus Gallio, the brother of Seneca the outstanding declaimer, killed himself with (1) Late manuscripts insert after the word Persius "Volaterranus, the satirical poet,".

[266/267]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews

AD his own hand. *

14 a The philosophers Musonius and Plutarch are considered distinguished.

24

68 a 211th Olympiad. It was not held, Nero deferring it until he could be present. b L. Annaeus Mella, brother of Seneca and Gallio, was awarded by Nero the property of the poet Lucan, his son. *

11 b Only two provinces added under Nero, Pontus Polemoniaca, and the Cottian Alps after king Cottius had died. 1 *

21

65 c 1 1st persecution, by Nero c Over all his other crimes, Nero also is the first to carry out a persecution against the Christians, in which Peter and Paul gloriously died at Rome. c Many nobles killed by Nero at Rome. d In the Olympics, Nero is crowned, defeating heralds, citharists, tragedians, and various charioteers in competition. d Vespasian is made Master of Soldiers by Nero against the Jews, who were rebelling because they could not bear the avarice of Cestius Florus.

12 e L. Annaeus Seneca of Corduba, teacher of Nero, and uncle of the poet Lucan, perished by an incision of the veins and by a draught of poison. *

22

66 e Vespasian captures many cities of Judaea. f Flavius Josephus the historical writer, a leader of the Jews in the war, when he was about to be killed by the Romans, he predicted the death of Nero to Vespasian, and his own (rise to) power; for which reason he received his life as a reward. f Celebrating the Isthmian, Pythian and Actian games, Nero is again crowned among the heralds, tragedians and citharists.

13 g By decree of the Senate a hundred times one hundred thousand (sesterces) are furnished to Nero as an annual allowance for expenses.

23

67 g After Peter, Linus first held the church of Rome for 11 years. h Nero killed his wife Octavia, along with other notable men, and he drove the philosopher Cornutus, teacher of Persius, into exile. h Nero, when he was being sought out for punishment by the Senate, fleeing from the palace as far as the fourth milestone of the city, kills himself in the garden of his freedman between Salaria and (1) Pontus Polemoniacus was added in 64 AD. M. Julius Cottius ruled the Cottian Alps as praefectus civitatum.

[268/269]

Romans

Jews

AD

Romans

Jews (Ends)

AD Nomentana, in the 32nd year of his life, and in him the whole family of Augustus ended. (*)

2 a After Judaea had been captured and Jerusalem demolished, Titus had six hundred thousand men put to death. But Josephus writes that one million one hundred thousand perished through hunger or by the sword, and that another one hundred thousand of the captives were publicly offered for sale. Now it was because of the feast of unleavened bread that such a great number was to be found in Jerusalem. When the Jews flocked to the temple from every nation on account of this feast, they were shut up in the city as if in a prison. For it was fitting that they should be killed during the same days of Pascha on which they had crucified the Savior.

26

70 a After Nero, Galba seized power in Spain, Vitellius in Germany and Otho in Rome.

3

71 b Marcus Fabius Quintilianus is brought to Rome by Galba. *

212th

Olympiad

4

72 c In the seventh month of his reign, Galba is beheaded, in the middle of the forum of the city of the Romans. d Vespasian drove the Jews, who had been defeated in two battles, to the city walls. e In the third month of his reign, Otho lay dead at Bebriacum by his own hand. () b The entire length of time to the 2nd year of Vespasian and the most recent destruction of Jerusalem, is reckoned to be: f Ignatius is ordained as the second bishop of Antioch. from the 15th year of Tiberius Caesar and from the beginning of the preaching of the Gospel, 42 years; g Vitellius, slain in the eighth month of his reign by Vespasian's generals, is thrown into the Tiber. () 7th of the Romans, Vespasian reigned for 9 years, 11 months, 22 days. however from the captivity which was endured under Antiochus, 239 years;

1 h Vespasian, proclaimed emperor in Judaea by his army, and entrusting the war to his son Titus, sets out for Rome by means of Alexandria.

25

69 again from the 2nd year of Darius, in whose reign the temple was rebuilt, 590 years; however from the first building of the temple under Solomon until its final destruction, which happened under Vespasian, 1102 years. i The temple of Jupiter at Rome burned down.

[270/271]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

213th Olympiad Sabines, aged 69. (*)

5 a Vespasian began to build the Capitol.

73 8th of the Romans, Titus reigned 2 years and 2 months. b In Alexandria a revolt occurred.

1 a Titus, the son of Vespasian, was an expert in both languages and of such goodness that once when he recalled at a meal that he had been of no service to anyone on that day, he said:

'Friends, today I have wasted a day.'

79

2090 6 c Achaia, Lycia, Rhodes, Byzantium, Samos, Thrace, Cilicia, and Comagnene, which were free before and were ruled by friendly kings, turned into Roman provinces. *

74

7 d A colossal statue erected, having a height of 107 feet.

75 b Mount Vesuvius having erupted, it blasted upwards from itself such a great amount of fire that the neighbouring regions and cities were consumed in the fire, together with the people in them. e Q. Asconius Pedianus, the historical writer, is considered important, who having become known in the 73rd year of his life, comes to the end of his life 12 years later in the highest honour. * c Titus recalls Musonius Rufus the philosopher from exile. *

8

76 d Titus builds the amphitheatre in Rome, and at its dedication he sacrifices 5000 wild beasts. * f Gabinianus, a rhetorician of very celebrated name, taught in Gaul. *

2 e Cletus is appointed second bishop of the Roman church for 12 years.

80

214th

Olympiad

9 g Three cities in Cyprus were destroyed all together in an earthquake.

77 f In Rome many buildings are burned to the ground in a fire. h A massive plague happened at Rome, so that for many days about 10,000 men were listed in the daily register of the dead. g Titus died from an illness at the same country-house where his father died, on the day before the Ides of September, at the age of 42. 1 (*)

215th

Olympiad

10 i Vespasian planted colonies, and he died from an issue from his stomach in his own villa among the 78 9th of the Romans, Domitian reigned for 15 years and 5 months. h Domitian was the younger brother of Titus. *

(1) Titus died on September 13, 81 AD at Aquae Cutiliae, where his father Vespasian had died two years earlier.

The ides of September are the 12th.

[272/273]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD a The wife of Domitian is named as Augusta.

9 a Many building works carried out at Rome, among them the Capitol, the Forum transitorium, the Portico of the gods, the temple of Isis, the Serapeum, the Stadium, the pepper granaries, the temple of Vespasian, the temple of Minerva Chalcidica, the Odeum, Trajan's Forum, the Baths of Trajan and Titus, the Senate House, the Ludus Matutinus, the Mica Aurea, the Meta Sudans fountain and the Pantheon. 1 *

89

2 b By a decree of the senate Titus is enrolled among the gods. 82 c Domitian prohibited the making of eunuchs.

3 d 3 vestal virgins condemned for unchastity.

83 e Domitian sends many senators into exile.

10

90

2100 4 f Abilius is appointed the second bishop of the church of Alexandria, and he presided for thirteen years.

84 b Domitian celebrates a triumph over the Dacians and the Germans.

216th

Olympiad

5 g Domitian constructs a temple without any admixture of wood.

85

11 c Domitian had so much arrogance that he commanded golden and silver statues of himself to be placed on the Capitol. He marked those and all the others with his title, without any respect for the original builder. *

91

6 h Domitian was the first to order himself to be called lord and god. *

86 d After the chief of Vestal Virgins, Cornelia, had been convicted of unchastity, she was buried alive in accordance with the law. i The Nasamones and the Dacians who were fighting against Rome were conquered.

7 k Two months renamed, September Germanicus and October Domitian.

87

12 e Domitian prohibited vines to be cultivated in cities.

92

8 l Quintilianus of Calaguris from Spain, who was the first at Rome to (open) a public school and receive a salary from the exchequer, became famous. *

88 f Clement presided as the 3rd bishop of the Church of Rome for nine years.

218th

Olympiad

217th

Olympiad

13 g In these days Flavius Josephus writes the twenty books of the Antiquities.

93 m Domitian sends very many of the nobility into exile and slays them. n Domitian expels astrologers and philosophers from the city of Rome. h Domitian put many of the nobles to death, but some he sent into exile.

(1) The Ludus Matutinus was a school for the training of bestiarii, "beast fighters." The Meta Sudans was a fountain built next to the Colosseum in the second half of the 1st century A.D.

"The Mica Aurea was a little palace which the Emperor Domitian had built on Monte Caelio's west side across from his large imperial palace on the Palatin hill. It was located by the Via Triumphalis of ancient times, nowadays

Via di San Gregorio, between the ancient roads, the Clivus Pulveratus (which does not exist today), and the Clivus Scauri, which today is called Clivio di Scauro. The latin name means "the little gold-beaming (house)", as "mica" means "a crumb, or a piece" or "a little room" and "aurea" means "golden"

or "beaming like gold" and the little palace which was built as a private residence as opposed to the large official palace did have a golden roof."

[274/275]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

2110

14 a Second to do so after Nero, Domitian persecutes the Christians, and under him the apostle John having been exiled to the island of Patmos, saw the Apocalypse, which Irenaeus explains.

94 a Cerdo presided as the 3rd bishop of the Church of Alexandria, for eleven years. b 2nd persecution, by Domitian b The senate decreed that all the things which Domitian had set up should be made void. And so many, whom he had unjustly ejected, returned from exile: some recovered their own goods. It is said also that when the apostle John was released at this time from exile, he withdrew to Ephesus, in which city he found both hospitality and very dear friends.

15 c Domitian again by edict thrusts out the philosophers and astrologers from Rome.

95

16 d Apollonius of Tyana and Euphrates are considered notable as philosophers.

96

1

97 e Domitian orders those who were of the race of David to be killed, so that no-one might remain of the kingship of the Jews. Brutius writes that there were made very many Christian martyrs under Domitian, among whom were Flavia Domitilla, granddaughter of the sister of Flavius Clemens the consul; she was exiled to the island of Pontia, because she bore witness that she was a Christian. c Justus from Tiberias, the writer of the Jews, is well known. d Nerva died from an illness in the gardens of Sallust at the age of 72, after he had already adopted Trajan as his son. (*) e Trajan, made emperor at Agrippina in Gaul, was born in Italica in Hispania. * 11th of the Romans, Trajan, reigned for 19 years and 6 months. f Many signs and portents happened at Rome and in the whole world.

1 f By a decree of the senate Nerva enrolled among the gods. 98

2 g Evaristus received the 4th episcopate of the Roman church.

99 g Domitian murdered in the palace aged 45, and ignobly buried by the pauper-undertakers 1. (*)

3 h Bishop Irenaeus writes that JOHN THE APOSTLE survived all the way to the time of Trajan: after whom his notable disciples were Papias, Bishop of 100

219th Olympiad 10th of the Romans, Nerva, reigned for 1 year and 4 months.

(1) Vespillo, pl. vespillones.

[276/277]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD Hieropolis, Polycarp of Smyrna, and Ignatius of Antioch. appointed as the third bishop. (*) a When Pliny the Younger was ruling a certain province and had put to death many Christians in his capacity as governor, he became frightened by their great numbers and sought from Trajan what he should do, reporting to him that, except for their stubborn refusal to sacrifice and their predawn gatherings to sing to a certain Christ as to a god, there was nothing (unusual) to be found among them. Furthermore, in order to be united in a common way of life, they forbid themselves to commit murder, theft, adultery, robbery, and the like. Disturbed by these things, Trajan wrote back: "This kind of people should not be sought out, but when they are brought before you, it is fitting for them to be punished." Tertullian refers to all this in his Apology.

220th

Olympiad

4 a Trajan celebrates a triumph over the Dacians and Scythians. 101

5 b Trajan defeated King Decebalus and made Dacia a province: he made a treaty with the Iberians, Sauromatians, Orsoenians, Arabs, Bosphorans and Colchians: he occupied and held Seleucia, Ctesiphon and Babylon: he instituted a fleet in the Red Sea so that he could lay waste the outskirts of India. *

102

6

103

2120 7 c At Rome, the Domus Aurea burned down in a fire.

104

221st

Olympiad

8 d Four cities of Asia overthrown in an earthquake: Elaea, Myrrhina, Pytanae, and Cymae: and two in Greece, Opuntis and Oritos.

105

9 e The fourth bishop of the church of Alexandria, by name Primus, is ordained, for twelve years.

106

222nd

Olympiad

10 f A persecution being initiated by Trajan against Christians, Simon, the son of Cleophas, who was holding the episcopate of Jerusalem, is crucified. Justus succeeds him.

107 b Alexander holds the fifth episcopate of the city of Rome for ten years. g 3rd persecution, by Trajan

12 c Pliny the Younger of New Como, of whom many works of ingenuity are extant, is considered a notable orator and historian. *

109 g Ignatius also, bishop of the church of Antioch, sent to Rome, is given to the beasts: after him Hero is 13 d Three cities of Galatia wiped out by an earthquake.

110

11

108 e The Pantheon in Rome burned down by lightning.

[278/279]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

14 a After Justus, Zachaeus received the 4th episcopate of the Church of Jerusalem. After him, 5th is Tobias, to whom succeeds 6th Benjamin, and then 7th John and 8th Matthias, into whose place Philip is appointed 9th.

111 a Trajan perishes in an illness at Selinus, or as I discover in someone else's text, he died at Isaurian Seleucia, the result of dysentery, in the sixty-third year, ninth month, and fourth day of his age. His bones were collected in a golden urn and placed in the Forum at the base of (his) column: and alone of all (the emperors) was he interred within the City 1. (*)

15

112

223rd

Olympiad

16 b Trajan made Armenia, Assyria and Mesopotamia into provinces. *

113

224th Olympiad 12th of the Romans, Hadrian ruled for 21 years c An earthquake at Antioch ruined almost the entire city.

1 b Hadrian, born at Italica in Spain, was the son of Trajan's female cousin. *

117

2130 17 d The Jews, who were in Libya, fight against their foreign-born neighbors. Likewise in Egypt, in Alexandria, and even Cyrene and the Thebaid, they struggle with great rebellion; but a portion of the gentiles defeat (them) in Alexandria.

114 c Hadrian restored Alexandria, which had been sacked by the Romans, from public funds. d Hadrian, envious of Trajan's glory, recalled the army from those provinces created by him, namely, Assyria, Mesopotamia, and Armenia. *

18 e The Emperor Trajan ordered Quietus of Lysia to banish the rebellious Jews of Mesopotamia from the province: Quietus, drawing up an army against them, killed countless thousands of them, and for this he is appointed procurator of Judea by the emperor.

115 e Hadrian makes captives of the Jews, who were rebelling against Rome for a second time.

2 f The senate declares Trajan to be among the gods.

118 g Hadrian was most erudite in both languages, but he was inadequately restrained in his lust for boys. *

19 f After the gentiles there had been killed, the Jews overthrew Salamis, a city of Cyprus. h Hadrian freed the rest of the cities from tribute, having burned the records in public: he also discharged many free-men from these same tributes.

(1) I.e. within the pomerium.

[280/281]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

3 a Plutarch of Chaeronea, Sextus 1 , Agathabulus, and Oenomaus 2 are considered notable philosophers.

119 bishops that presided down to the destruction of Jerusalem, that was carried through by Hadrian, were from the circumcision. b Xystus holds the 6th episcopate of the Roman church for 10 years.

226th

Olympiad

9 a Hadrian was initiated into the Elusinian rites, and generously gave many gifts to the Athenians.

125 c Justus is appointed as 5th bishop of the church of Alexandria for 11 years. b Quadratus the disciple of the apostles, and Aristides of Athens, our philosopher, composed books on behalf of the Christian religion to give to Hadrian. And the legate Serenus Granius, a man most noble, sends letters to the emperor, saying that it is unjust to allow the blood of innocent men guilty of no crime (to be shed) at the clamour of the mob, and to be made guilty of a crime only because of a name and a sect. Having been so moved, Hadrian wrote to Minucius Fundanus, proconsul of Asia, that the Christians should not be condemned without evidence of a crime. An exemplar of these letters has remained until our own time.

4 d War waged against the Sauromatians.

120 e After an earthquake had happened, Nicomedia lay in ruins, and many things were overturned in the city of Nicaea: for the reconstruction of which, Hadrian generously gave funds from the public treasury.

10

126

225th

Olympiad

5 f Euphrates the Stoic philosopher dies.

121 g Hadrian plants colonies in Libya, which had been devastated by the Jews.

11

127

6 h In response to the Athenians who had petitioned him for laws 3, Hadrian composed a legal code drawn from the books of Draco, Solon, and the rest 4.

122

7 i The river Cephissus flooded Eleusis, where Hadrian joined the two banks with a bridge and spent the winter in Athens.

123

12 c The emperor Hadrian is called Father of his Country and his wife Augusta.

128 k After Philip, Seneca is appointed as the 10th bishop of Jerusalem; after whom, Justus as the 11th, to whom succeeded Levi the 12th, after whom Ephres 13th, Joses 14th, Judas 15th. All these d Telesphorus received the seventh episcopate of the Roman church for 11 years.

2140

8

124 e Cornelius is appointed as the fourth bishop of Antioch.

(1) Sextus Empiricus.

(2) Oenomaus of Gadara.

(3) I.e. for a constitution.

(4) The other legislators.

[282/283]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

227th

Olympiad

228th Olympiad a Nicopolis and Caesarea were ruined in an earthquake. a Basilides the heresiarch lingers in Alexandria, from whom come the Gnostics.

13 b Antinous, a boy noted for his exceptional beauty, dies in Egypt. After Hadrian attentively carries out his funeral rites -- for the boy had been a favourite of his --, he declares him to be among the gods; a city was also named after him.

129

17 b Barcocheba, leader of a party of the Jews, because the Christians are not willing to help him against the Roman army, murders them with every sort of torture.

133

2150 18 c The Jewish War, which took place in Palestine, came to an end with the complete suppression of the Jews. From that time permission for them even to enter Jerusalem was revoked, first by the will of God, as the prophets had foretold, then by the prohibitions of the Romans.

134

14 c Eumenes presided as the sixth bishop of the church of Alexandria for 13 years.

130

15 d The temple of Rome and Venus built by Hadrian. *

131

19

135 e Salvius Julianus composed the Perpetual Edict. * f While Hadrian is spending the winter at Athens, he visits Eleusis. d Marcus is appointed as first gentile bishop at Jerusalem, after the ending of those, who were from the Jews.

16 g Hadrian, when he had constructed many notable buildings in Athens, held games and erected a library of wondrous construction.

132

20 e Aelia founded by Aelius Hadrian; on the front of that gate, by which we go out to Bethlehem, a sow was sculpted in marble, denoting that the Jews were subject to the Roman authority. Some think it was constructed by Titus Aelius, the son of Vespasian.

136 h The Jews turned to arms and laid waste Palestine, while Tynius Rufus was in control of the province. Hadrian sent an army to him for the purpose of putting down the rebels.

229th Olympiad i Favorinus and Polemon are considered notable rhetoricians.

21 f Hadrian, more than sixty years old, dies at Baiae because of dropsy. (*)

137

[284/285]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD 13th of the Romans, T. Antoninus, surnamed Pius, reigned with his children Aurelius and Lucius for 22 years, 3 months.

10

147

11

148

232nd

Olympiad

1 a Hyginus receives the 8th episcopate of the Roman church for four years.

138

12 a The philosopher Arrianus of Nicomedia is well known, as is Maximus of Tyre.

149

2 b Antoninus is named Father of his Country.

139

13 b The philosophers Apollonius the Stoic Chalcidian and Basilides the Scythopolitan are considered illustrious: who were also the truest preceptors of the Caesar.

150

3 c When Hyginus was bishop of Rome, Valentinus the arch-heretic and Cerdo, Marcion's teacher, came to Rome.

140

14

151

15

152

230th

Olympiad

233rd

Olympiad

4 d Justin the philosopher gave the book he had written on behalf of our religion to Antoninus.

141

16 c Celadion presided as 8th bishop of Alexandria, for 14 years.

153

2170 17 d Crescens the Cynic is well known, who promoted a prosecution against our Justin the Philosopher, learned in the (Christian) teachings, because he (Justin) was arguing him (Crescens) to be gluttonous and a corrupter of philosophy. By result of which he (Justin) gloriously poured out his blood for Christ.

154

5 e Pius is ordained as the ninth bishop of the Roman church, for 15 years.

142

18

155 f Eros is appointed as 5th bishop of Antioch.

19

156

6 g Marcus receives the 7th episcopate of Alexandria, for 10 years.

143

234th Olympiad h Valentinus the heretic is well known, and he remains down to Anicetus.

20 e Anicetus holds the 10th episcopate of the Roman church for 10 years, in whose time Polycarp coming to Rome corrected many from heretical error.

157

21

158

2160 7 i Mesomedes of Crete, the poet-musician of lyre-ode songs, is well known.

144

22

159

23

160

231st

Olympiad

235th

Olympiad

8 k Taurus Berytius, a distinguished philosopher of the Platonic sect, is considered important. f After Marcus, Cassianus received the 17th episcopate of Jerusalem, after him the 18th was Publius,

9

[286/287]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD whom Maximus, the 19th, succeeded, the 20th was Julianus, the 21st Gaianus, the 22nd Symmachus, the 23rd Caius, the 24th Julianus, and the 25th was Captio. a Lucius Caesar celebrated a triumph with his brother 1 over the Parthians.

6 b Agrippinus presided as the 9th bishop of Alexandria for 12 years.

166 a Antoninus Pius dies aged 77 at his villa at Lorium near the 12th milestone from the City. (*) d 4th pers-ecut-ion c A persecution began in Asia and Polycarp and Pionius suffered martyrdom, of whom also there are written accounts of their martyrdom.

167

7 14th of the Romans, Marcus Antonius, also called Verus, and Lucius Aurelius Commodus, reigned for 19 years and 1 month.

e Many people in Gaul died gloriously for the name of Christ; their contests have survived until the present day preserved in books.

1 b These men were the first to have run the empire jointly by law, since until this time, there had been individual Augusti. *

161

2 c It seems that fires were reported in the sky, from east to west, to Lucius Caesar who was sacrificing at Athens.

162

8 f The plague overtook numerous provinces, Rome having been troubled from there.

168 g The Romans fight against the Germans, Marcomannis, Quadis, Sarmatinis, and Dacians.

3 d Vologaesius, king of the Parthians, laid waste the Roman provinces near to him.

163

237th

Olympiad

2180 4 e The orator Fronto, who instructed Marcus Antoninus Verus in Latin studies, is considered notable. *

164 h Soter received the 11th episcopate of the Roman church for 8 years.

9 i Theophilus is ordained as the 6th bishop of Antioch, of whom many works of ingenuity are still extant.

169 f Seleucia in Assyria captured together with 300,000 men by the Romans. *

236th Olympiad k The emperor Lucius, while sitting with his brother in a carriage, died of apoplexy in the ninth, or, as some think, in the eleventh year of his reign between Concordia and Altinus. (*)

5 g At Pisa, the philosopher Peregrinus, after a funeral pyre that he had built from timber had been lit, threw himself on it.

165 (1) His 'brother' is Marcus Aurelius.

[288/289]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

10 a Melito, bishop of Sardis in Asia, handed over an Apology for the Christians to the emperor Antoninus.

2190 14 of the Divinity once was sent for Pertinax and his army while he was fighting with the emperor in the land of the Quadi and was oppressed with thirst; while on the other hand, thunderbolts fell upon the Germans and Sarmatians, and slew most of them. There is extant a letter of Marcus Aurelius, a most serious emperor, in which it is witnessed that a drought of Germany was finished, perhaps by the prayers of the Christian soldiers, rain having been obtained.

174 b Apollinaris, bishop of Asian Hierapolis, is considered notable.

15

175

11 c Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, is considered important, and Pinytus of Crete, a most eloquent man. d The false prophecy, which is called the Cataphrygian, had its beginning, from its founder Montanus, with Priscilla and Maximilla the insane seers.

16

176 a Atticus, a philosopher of the Platonist school, is well known.

12 e Tatian the heretic is well known, from whom come the Encratites.

239th

Olympiad

17 b Eleutherius receives the 12th episcopate of the Roman Church for 15 years.

177 f Bardaisan, the leader of another heresy, becomes well-known. c Maximinus is appointed as 7th bishop of Antioch. g Oppianus Cilex the poet, who composed the Halieutica with wonderful splendour, is recognised. d Antoninus makes his son Commodus his colleague in power. h So great was the pestilence throughout the entire world, that that the Roman army was slaughtered almost to extinction. * e Antoninus with his son celebrated a triumph over the enemy, whom he had devastated by having a permanent camp at Carnuntum for three years. (*)

238th

Olympiad

13 i The emperor Antoninus sometimes personally participated in many of the wars that arose against him, sometimes he appointed very noble commanders. Among them, a rainstorm

18 f The emperors granted much to many, and when they had forgiven the provinces the money that was owed to the exchequer, they instructed that the titles of the debtors should

178

[290/291]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD be burned in the middle of the forum of Rome, and, lest anything of goodness should be lacking, they tempered some rather severe laws with new regulations. of Jerusalem. After him, the 27th is Antoninus, the 28th Valens, the 29th Dulchianus, the 30th Narcissus, the 31st Dius, the 32nd Germanio, the 33rd Gordius, and the 34th is Narcissus again. So many bishops having been appointed at Jerusalem, we could not discern the dates of each. Because of this these dates were not recorded much from this point until the present day.

7

186

19

179 a Antoninus, after a victory, was so splendid in the presentation of the games that a hundred lions were exhibited at the same time.

8

187 b Commodus is named 'Augustus' by the Senate. c Smyrna, a city of Asia, was destroyed by an earthquake; for the reconstruction of which, a ten-year moratorium on its tribute was granted.

9 a Lightning destroys the Capitol and a great fire having been caused, the library and also nearby buildings were consumed.

188 d Antoninus died in an illness in Pannonia. e Julian is chosen by lot as the tenth bishop of the Alexandrian church for ten years.

242nd

Olympiad

10 b Demetrius is appointed the 11th bishop of Alexandria for 43 years.

189 15th of the Romans, Commodus reigned for 13 years. c The emperor Commodus removed the head of the Colossus, and added a head in his own image.

1 f Commodus celebrated a triumph over the Germans. 180

240th

Olympiad

2 g The Temple of Serapis at Alexandria burned down. 181

11 d Serapion is ordained the eighth bishop of Antioch.

190

3 h Irenaeus, the bishop of Lyons, is considered notable.

182 e Commodus kills many of the nobles, and provides the Roman people with notable games.

4 i The baths of Commodus constructed in Rome. 183

2200 5 k Commodus named the month of September after himself. *

184

12 f After a fire had happened at Rome, the palace and temple of the Vestals, together with the larger part of the City, are levelled to the ground.

191

241st

Olympiad

6 I Maximus is ordained the 26th bishop

185

[292/293]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

13 a Commodus is strangled in the Vectilian House.

192 a Clement, a presbyter in the Church at Alexandria, and Pantaenus, a Stoic philosopher, are considered our most learned in disputes about doctrine.

243rd Olympiad 16th of the Romans, Aelius Pertinax reigned for 6 months.

3 b Narcissus, Bishop of Jerusalem and Theophilus of Caesarea, with Polycrates and Bacchylus, bishops of the Asian Province are considered notable.

195

1 b Though he was more than seventy years old, Pertinax, while he was holding the prefecture of the City, was ordered by a decree of the senate to govern the empire.

193 c Victor receives the 13th episcopate of Rome for 10 years, whose modest volumes On Religion are extant.

4 c A question having arisen among the bishops of Asia whether, according to the Law of Moses, Easter ought to be observed on the 14th of the month, Victor, bishop of the City of Rome and Narcissus of Jerusalem, together with Polycrates and many pastors of the churches, issued a letter stating what seemed likely to them, of which a record survives down to our time.

196 d Pertinax refused the pleas of the Senate to call his wife 'Augusta' and his son Caesar, which suffices to show that he himself reigned unwillingly. e Pertinax is slain in the palace, by the wickedness of Julian the jurist: whom Severus afterwards killed at the Milvian Bridge. (*)

244th

Olympiad

5 d The Jewish and Samaritan war happened.

197 17th of the Romans, Severus reigned for 18 years.

6 e Severus defeated the Parthians and the Adiabeni, and slaughtered the Inner Arabs to such an extent that he could make their land into a Roman province. On that account, he was given the surnames Parthicus, Arabicus, and Adiabenicus. (*)

198

2210 2 f Severus was from the town of Leptis in the Province of Tripolitana, and remains to this day the only Emperor the Romans had from Africa. In honor of Pertinax, whom Julianus had slain, he commanded that he be surnamed Pertinax. *

194 g Severus reigned for 6 months of the preceding year.

7

199

8

200

[294/295]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD a While Severus was reigning, Severian Baths were built at Antioch and Rome, and the Septizonium constructed. *

247th

Olympiad

17 a Severus dies at York in Britain.

209

18

210

245th Olympiad 18th of the Romans, Antoninus, surnamed Caracalla, son of Severus, reigned for 7 years.

9 b Zephyrinus received the 14th episcopate of the Roman Church, for 17 years.

201

1 b Asclepiades is appointed as the 9th Bishop of Antioch.

211

10 d 5th persecution

c While persecution of the Christians was being carried on, Leonides the father of Origen passed on in the glorious death of martyrdom.

202

2 c While Narcissus is still living, Alexander is ordained 35th Bishop of Jerusalem and rules the Church with him on an equal basis.

212

11

203

2220 12 e Alexander is considered notable on account of his confession of the name of the Lord.

204 h In this year we find a jubilee observed by most, i.e. in the 12th year of Severus and 251st of the city of Antioch.

248th Olympiad f Clement composes many and various works.

3 d Antoninus was surnamed 'Caracalla' because of a type of clothing, which he had distributed at Rome; and in turn caracallae were called antoniniana from his name. *

213 g Musanus the writer, of our philosophy, is well known.

2230

4

214

246th

Olympiad

13 i After Clodius Albinus, who had made himself Caesar in Gaul, had been killed at Lyons, Severus carried the war over to the British provinces: where, so as to make the recovered provinces more secure from barbarian invasions, he drew an earthwork along a 132 mile stretch from sea to sea. (*)

205

5 e Antoninus built the bathhouses that bear his name at Rome. *

215

6 f Antoninus was so desperate with lust that he made his stepmother Julia his wife. *

216

14

206

249th

Olympiad

7 g Antoninus is killed between Edessa and Carrae in the 43rd year of his life. (*)

217

15

207

16 k Tertullian the African, son of the proconsular centurion, is celebrated among all the churches for his eloquence. 1 *

208 19th of the Romans, Macrinus reigned for 1 year.

1 h Macrinus, while holding the Praetorian Prefecture, made emperor. *

218 l Origen becomes learned by studies at Alexandria.

(1) A scholion in 'O' reads: "Tertullian was under the rule of Severus the African, 180 years after the Lord."

It is not in the same hand as the main text.

[296/297]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD a Philetus is appointed 10th bishop of Antioch.

21st of the Romans, Alexander, son of Mamaea, reigned for 13 years. b The amphitheatre at Rome burned down during the Vulcanalian Games.

1 a Alexander most gloriously defeated Xerxes, king of the Persians, and he was such a strict reformer of military discipline that he dismissed certain entire legions that were disorderly. *

223 c Abgar 1, a holy man, reigned at Edessa, as Africanus maintains. d Macrinus is slain in Khirbet-El-Arasah.

2240

2

224 20th of the Romans, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus reigned for 4 years.

251st

Olympiad

3 b Urbanus is ordained as 16th bishop of the Roman church, for nine years.

225

1 e Marcus Aurelius, thought to be the son of Antoninus Caracalla, and priest of the temple of Heliogabalus, during his reign lived shamelessly to such a degree, that he overlooked no kind of obscenity. *

219

4 c Ulpian the jurist and counselor of Alexander, is considered most notable. *

226

5 d Alexandrian baths built at Rome. *

227

2 f Callistus received the 15th episcopate of the Roman church for five years.

220

6 e Geminus, priest of Antioch, Hippolytus, and Beryllus, bishop of Arabian Bostra, are considered important writers.

228 g The temple of Heliogabalus built at Rome. *

250th

Olympiad

252nd

Olympiad

3 h In Palestine Nicopolis, which previously used to be called Emmaus, was founded as a city, the labour of the embassy on its behalf being undertaken by Julius Africanus, the writer of the Chronicle.

221

7 f Zebennus is appointed 11th bishop of Antioch.

229

8 g Origen of Alexandria is considered important.

230

9 h Heraclas is ordained as the 12th bishop of the Alexandrian church for 16 years.

231

4 i Antoninus is slain at Rome, along with his mother Symiasera, in a military uprising. (*)

222

10 i Alexander was uniquely pious towards his mother, and because of this was pleasant to everyone. *

232

(1) Abgar VIII.

[298/299]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

253rd

Olympiad

3 a Gordian, while very much a young man, having defeated the Parthian nation, when he was returning home a victor, he was killed by a stratagem of the praetorian prefect Philip not far from Roman soil. (*)

241

11 a Origen moves from Alexandria to Caesarea in Palestine.

233

4

242

2250 12 b Pontianus received the 17th episcopate of the Roman church for five years.

234

5

243

13 c Alexander is slain at Moguntiacum in a military uprising.

235 2260 6 b For Gordian the soldiers build a burial mound, which overlooks the Euphrates River, after his bones had been carried back to Rome. *

244 22nd of the Romans, Maximinus for 3 years.

24th of the Romans, Philip ruled for seven years.

1 d Maximinus was the first emperor chosen by the army from the military, without the authorization of the Senate. *

236

256th

Olympiad

1 c Philip makes his son Philip his colleague in power; and he first of all the Roman emperors was a Christian. (*)

245

254th Olympiad 2 f 6th persecution. e Maximinus carries out a persecution against the priests of the churches.

237

2 d While the Philips were reigning, the millennium of the city of Rome was completed, because of which solemnity innumerable beasts were killed in the great circus and theatrical games celebrated in the Campus Martius, the people staying awake for three days and nights.

246

3 g Maximinus is slain at Aquileia by Pupienus. (*)

238 23rd of the Romans, Gordian 2 reigned for 6 years.

1 h Antherus is ordained as the 18th bishop of Rome, for one month, after whom the 19th, Fabianus for 13 years.

239

3 e The theatre of Pompey and the Hecatonstylon burned down.

247

2 i After Gordian had entered Rome, Pupienus and Albinus who had seized power were slain in the palace. *

240 f 'Athlamos' (600) ran in the contest for the birthday of the city of Rome, and this game has been held for a thousand years. 1

255th

Olympiad

4 g Philip constructs the city in

248

(1) The manuscripts contain either 'athalmos' or '600'. The reason is clear: the Greek contained the numeral for 600, and Jerome initially misread it as a proper name, 'Athalmos'. Later he realised the mistake, and corrected it, but some manuscripts derive from uncorrected copies of the text.

(2) There were three Gordians, not one.

[300/301]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD Thrace that bears his name. himself also crowned with martyrdom. Eight letters of Cyprian to him are extant. (*)

257th

Olympiad

5 a Dionysius held the 23rd episcopacy of the church of Alexandria for 17 years.

249

258th

Olympiad

6

250

1 a A pestilential sickness seized many provinces of the whole world, and especially at Alexandria and in Egypt, as Dionysius writes, and the book On Mortality by Cyprian is a witness. (*)

253

7 b The older Philip is slain at Verona, the younger at Rome. (*)

251 25th of the Romans, Decius reigned for 1 year, 3 months. c Decius, from Pannonia Inferior, was born at Budalia. * b Novatus a presbyter of Cyprian's, coming to Rome, unites Novatian and other confessors to himself, because Cornelius had received penitent apostates. (*)

1 d 7th persecution

d After Decius had killed the Philips, father and son, from hatred of them he launches a persecution against the Christians.

252 c Demetrianus is appointed as the 13th bishop of Antioch. e Anthony the monk is born in Egypt. f At Rome the amphitheatre burned down.

2270 2 d Lucius holds the 21st episcopacy of the Roman Church for 8 months. After which Stephen is the 22nd for 3 years. There are extant some letters of Cyprian to both of them. (*)

254 g After Alexander, bishop of Jerusalem, had been killed as a martyr at Caesarea of Palestine and Babylas at Antioch, Mazabanus and Fabius are appointed bishops. e A jubilee, according to most of our people. f Gallus and Volusianus, when they set out from the City against Aemilianus, who was causing a revolt in Moesia, were killed in Forum Flaminii or, as some believe, at Interamna. (*) h Decius along with his son is murdered in Abritto.

26th of the Romans, Gallus and Volusianus son of Gallus reigned for two years, four months. i Cornelius received the 20th episcopate of the Roman church, after the glorious death of Fabianus, for 2 years and was g Aemilian died in the third month of his usurpation. *

[302/303]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD 27th of the Romans, Valerian and Gallienus reigned for 15 years.

Pannonian provinces. *

2280 10 a After Spanish provinces had been seized by the Germans, Tarracon was attacked. The Parthians were holding Mesopotamia, and invaded Syria. *

264

1 a In Rhetia Valerianus was hailed as Augustus by the army. At Rome Gallienus was named Caesar by the Senate. *

255

2

256

261st

Olympiad

259th

Olympiad

11 b Maximus is ordained as the 14th bishop of the church of Alexandria, for 18 years.

265 b Xystus held the episcopate of the Roman church 23rd for 8 years.

12 c Dionysius is appointed as the 24th bishop of Rome for 12 years.

266

3 c Cyprian, first a rhetorician, then a priest, and finally bishop of Carthage, is crowned with martyrdom. (*)

257 d Odenathus, a decurion of Palmyra, having collected a band of peasants, so slaughtered the Persians that he set up camp at Ctesiphon. (*)

4 d Valerian, after stirring up a persecution against the Christians, is immediately captured by Sapor, the king of the Persians, and there he grows old in miserable slavery. (*)

258 e 8th persecution, of Valerian

13 e Hymenaeus holds the episcopate of Jerusalem.

267

5 f Paul of Samosata deserted the preaching of everyone, and resuscitated the heresy of Artemon; Domnus is ordained 16th bishop of the Antiochene church in his place. f Sapor, king of the Persians, lays waste to Syria, Cilicia, and Cappadocia.

14

268

6 g After Valerian had been led captive into Persia, Gallienus restored peace to us.

259 g The Gallic provinces recovered by Postumus, Victorinus and Tetricus. *

260th

Olympiad

7 h Paul of Samosata is appointed as the 15th bishop of Antioch.

260

262nd

Olympiad

15 h Gallienus is murdered at Milan.

269

8 i While Gallienus was dissipated with every wantonness, the Germans came as far as Ravenna.
*

261 28th of the Romans, Claudius reigned for 1 year, 9 months.

9 k After the Gallic provinces had been devastated, the Alamanni crossed into Italy. * l Greece, Macedonia, Pontus, and Asia laid waste by the Goths. The Quadi and the Sarmatae seized

262 i In Alexandria, Bruchium, which had been blockaded for many years, is at last destroyed. k
Claudius defeats the Goths ravaging

[304/305]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

Illyricum and Macedonia; because of them, in the Curia a gold medallion, and in the Capitol a gold statue, were set up for him. was Corrector of Lucania, and Zenobia grew old in the city with great esteem, and from her today there is a family in Rome that is named 'of Zenobia'.

2 a Claudius dies at Sirmium.

271

4 a Aurelian builds a temple to the Sun and surrounds Rome with stronger walls.

275 b Quintilius the brother of Claudius named Augustus by the Senate; on the 17th day of his reign he is slain at Aquileia. * b The first games of the sun established by Aurelian. d 9th persecution c After Aurelian had initiated a persecution against us, a thunderbolt falls next to him and his companions; and not long after, he is slain at Caenophrurium on the old road between Constantinople and Heraclea. (*) 29th of the Romans, Aurelian reigned for 5 years, 6 months.

5

276

1 c Timaeus is ordained as the 17th bishop of the church of Antioch.

272

263rd Olympiad 264th Olympiad. 30th of the Romans, Tacitus reigned for 6 months. d Tetricus abandoning his army among the Catalauni, Aurelian recovered the Gallic provinces. (*) e After he had been slain at Pontus, Florian obtained power for 88 days. After he too had been killed at Tarsus,

2

273

1

277 e Zenobia is conquered at Immae, not far distant from Antioch. After her husband had been slain, she was holding the rule of the East. In this struggle, the general Pompeianus -- whose cognomen was 'the Frank' -- fought very vigorously against her. Even today his family persists at Antioch, and Evagrius, very dear to us, is descended from his line. (*) 31st of the Romans, Probus reigned for 6 years, 4 months.

1 f Felix received the 25th episcopate of the Roman church for 5 years.

278 g Probus with great energy restored the Gallic provinces occupied by the barbarians. * h Start of the 86th jubilee according to the Hebrews

2

i Anatolius, bishop of Laodicea, learned in the teachings of the philosophers, is celebrated for his superlative eloquence.

279

2290 3 f Eusebius, bishop of Laodicaea, is considered notable.

274 k The second year of Probus was year 325 according to the people of Antioch; 402 according to the Tyrians; 324 according to the Laodiceans; 588 according to the Edessans; 380 according to the Ascalonians. g Tetricus and Zenobia preceded the chariot of Aurelian in a triumph at Rome; after which Tetricus

3 l The insane heresy of the Manichaeans appeared, to the general harm of the human race. 1

280 (1) Latin: Insana Manichaeorum haeresis in commune humani generis malum exorta.

[306/307]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD a Probus permitted the Gauls and Pannonians to have vines, and he gave the Alma and Aureus hills, planted by the army, to be harvested by the provincials. 1 * Tigris, died by a flash of lightning. (*)

2 a Numerian, as he was being carried along in a litter due to a pain in his eye, was slain by a plot of his father-in-law Aper. The wickedness was only discovered several days later due to the stench of the corpse. (*)

285

265th

Olympiad

4 b Cyrillus is appointed 18th bishop of Antioch.

281 b Carinus, defeated in battle at the Margus, is slain. (*) 33rd of the Romans, Diocletian reigned for 20 years. c Saturninus, the master of the army, began to refound a new city at Antioch: who afterwards is slain at Apamea attempting to take possession of the empire.

1 c Diocletian from Dalmatia, the son of a scribe, after being elected emperor immediately struck Aper in the assembly of the soldiers, swearing that Numerian had been killed without his being involved.

286

5 d Eutychianus received the 26th episcopate of the Church of Rome for 8 months, after which Gaius was 27th for 15 years.

282

2 d Diocletian adopted as co-ruler Maximianus Herculus who, after suppressing a multitude of peasants, to whose faction he gave the name of Bacaudae, restored peace to the Gallic provinces. (*)

287

6 e Probus is murdered in an uprising of the military in a tower, which is called Ferrata, near Sirmium. (*)

283

3

288 f Theonas presided as the 15th bishop of the Alexandrian church for 19 years.

267th

Olympiad

4 e After assuming the purple, Carausius occupied Britain. Narsaeus made war in the East. *

289 32nd of the Romans, Carus with his sons Carinus and Numerian, for two years. f The Quinquegentani 2 infested Africa. *

2300

1

284 g Achilleus seized Egypt. For these reasons Constantius and Galerius Maximianus were adopted into the royal power as Caesars. Constantius was the nephew of Claudius through his daughter, and Galerius was born in Dacia not far from Serdica. And so that Diocletian might be connected to them by marriage, Constantius

266th

Olympiad

5

290 g Carus, from Narbonne, when he had taken Cochis and Ctesiphon, the most important cities of the enemy, after all the region of the Parthians had been devastated, while setting up camp besides the

6

291

(1) Eutropii Breviarium Liber Nonus 17: Vineas Gallos et Pannonios

habere permisit, opere militari Almam montem apud Sirmium et Aureum apud Moesiam superiorem vineis conseruit et provincialibus colendos dedit.

(2) The Five Tribes.

[308/309]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD married Theodora the stepdaughter of Herculus, from whom afterwards he had six children, the brothers of Constantine; Galerius married Valeria the daughter of Diocletian, after both being obliged to divorce the wives they had. (*) the church of Jerusalem.

7

292 a After ten years Britain recovered by Asclepiodotus, the praetorian prefect. *

270th

Olympiad

268th Olympiad b Near Langres, 60,000 Alamanni slaughtered by Constantius Caesar. *

8 a Busiris and Coptos rebelling against the Romans, they were razed down to the ground.

293

2310

9

294

16 c Galerius Maximian, defeated by Narses, ran before Diocletian's carriage wearing his purple robes. *

301

10 b The nations of the Carpi and Basternae were resettled on Roman soil. *

295 d Veturius, Master of the Soldiers, persecutes the Christian soldiers, the persecution against us beginning little by little from just that time.

11 c While all the emperors before him were hailed in the manner of a magistrate, and they had nothing more than a purple mantle in addition to a normal dress, Diocletian was the first to order that he should be hailed as a god, and gems to be sewn into his robes and shoes. *

296 e 10th persecution

17 f Galerius Maximian, after he had defeated Narses, and captured his wives, children and sisters, is received by Diocletian with great honour. *

302 g The Baths of Diocletian at Rome and the Baths of Maximian at Carthage made. *

269th

Olympiad

12 d Marcellianus received the 28th episcopate of the Roman church.

297

18 h Hermon presided as the 38th bishop of the church of Jerusalem.

303

13 e Alexandria, with the rest of Egypt, cut itself off from Roman authority through the leadership of Achilleus; after a siege of eight months, it was retaken by Diocletian. Therefore, many throughout the whole of Egypt were troubled with heavy proscriptions and exile after those who had emerged as the cause of the revolt had been killed. 1 (*)

298 i Tyrannus is appointed as the 19th bishop of Antioch.

2320 19 k After Theonus, Peter is ordained the 21st bishop of the Church of Alexandria, who later in the ninth year of the persecution accomplished a glorious martyrdom.

304 l A jubilee according to most 14

299 m Diocletian and Maximian Augusti celebrated a triumph at Rome with notable pomp. Before their chariot went the 15 f Zabdas is ordained 37th bishop of 300

(1) This revolt is that of Domitius Domitianus. Several problems arise regarding this event. First, it is Achilleus who alone receives mention for the revolt; Contemporary papyrological evidence shows Achilleus with the title of corrector. Some scholars have suggested two revolts in Egypt. Domitianus, however, had coinage struck in his name, a logical first step in any rebellion;

Achilleus has no coin struck in his name. Connected with this first problem, another suggestion has been made that Domitianus and Achilleus are one and the same. More likely is that Achilleus was a sub-commander for Domitianus, though any certain answer is still unclear. A similar problem involves the dating of the revolt, though Jerome places it in 297 or after, a date supported by the papyrological and numismatic evidence. A third problem is the reason for the revolt. Renewed trouble between the eastern provinces and Sasanian Persia, may have put extra pressure on Egypt; quite possibly some of Diocletian's reforms did not sit well with the upper-class Egyptians.

[310/311]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD wife, sisters and children of Narses, and all the booty, which they had looted from the Parthians. for 30 years, 10 months. Year of the persecution: 4 *

307 1 a Maxentius, the son of Maximianus Herculus, is named Augustus at Rome by the Praetorian Guard. (*)

2330 a In a horrible earthquake at Tyre and Sidon, many edifices were ruined and an immense number of people were crushed. b Severus Caesar, sent against Maxentius by Galerius Maximianus, is killed at Ravenna in the second year of his reign. b In the nineteenth year of Diocletian, during the month of March, in the days of Easter, the churches were destroyed. However in the 4th year of the persecution, Constantine began to reign.

2 c Licinius made emperor at Carnuntum by Galerius.

5

308 d Maximianus Herculus, detected by his daughter Fausta, because he was preparing a swindle against his son-in-law Constantine, in flight is slain at Marseilles. c According to the Antiochenes, year 350. 1st year of the persecution e Quirinus, bishop of Siscia, is gloriously killed for Christ: for the top of a household quern fastened to his neck, and thrown headlong into a river, he floated for a very long time and while he was being remarked upon by the spectators, lest by his example they should be frightened, hardly praying that he should sink, he obtained it.

271st

Olympiad

2 20 d In the second year of the persecution, Diocletian at Nicomedia, and Maximianus at Milan, laid down the purple. (*)

305 e Eusebius is appointed as the 29th bishop at Rome for a period of seven months, after him Miltiades as the 30th bishop holds the church for four years.

272nd Olympiad 3 f Galerius Maximianus dies. 6

309

3 f Maximinus 1 and Severus made Caesars by Galerius Maximian.

306 4 g Silvester is ordained as the 31st bishop of the Church of Rome for 22 years. 7

310 g In the 16th year of his reign Constantius 2 died in Britain at York; after him his son Constantine, born from the concubine Helena, takes possession of the empire. (*)

5 h Maximinus, after a persecution had been carried out against the Christians, when now about to be punished by Licinius, dies at Tarsus. (*)

8

311 i Achillas is ordained as the 17th bishop of the Church of Alexandria.

6 k Maxentius, defeated by Constantine near the Milvian Bridge, dies.

9

312 34th of the Romans, Constantine reigned (1) Maximinus Daia.

(2) Constantius I Chlorus.

[312/313]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

273rd Olympiad homousion.

7 a The war against Licinius at Cibalae. 10

313

17 a Constantius, the son of Constantine, appointed Caesar. 323

2330 8 b Macarius is appointed as the 39th bishop of Jerusalem. c Peace restored to us by Constantine. 314 b Licinius, contrary to a solemn pledge, is slain as a private citizen at Thessalonica. *

9

315

10 d Diocletian dies in his villa at Split, not far from Salonae, and, alone of all (the emperors), is declared to be among the gods as a private citizen. (*) 316 2340 18 c Nazarius the rhetor is considered notable. *

324

276th

Olympiad

19 d Crispus, the son of Constantine, and Licinius junior, the son of Constantia, the sister of Constantine, and of Licinius, are very cruelly killed.

325

274th

Olympiad

11 e Crispus and Constantine, sons of Constantine, and Licinius, the adolescent son of Licinius Augustus, the offspring of Constantine's sister, are appointed Caesars; of these, Lactantius, the most eloquent man of his time, educated Crispus in Latin literature; but he (Lactantius) was in fact a pauper in this life, as he generally lacked even the necessities.

317

20 e The Vicennalia of Constantine held in Nicomedia, and proclaimed at Rome in the following year.

326

12

318 f Until this point Eusebius Pamphili, companion to the martyrs, writes this history, to which we ourselves have appended these things following. *

13

319

21 g In Africa, Arnobius the rhetor is considered important, who when he was in Sicca teaching the youths to declaim, and, being still a pagan, was compelled by dreams to believe, although he had not obtained from the bishop by asking the faith that he had always attacked, he composed the most splendid books against the former religion, and finally, as if with these as offerings, he requested and obtained the covenant of faith.

327

14

320

275th Olympiad f Licinius expells the Christians from his palace. g Basileus bishop of Amasia of Pontus is crowned with martyrdom under Licinius.

15 h Alexander is ordained the 18th bishop of the Alexandrian church: it was he who excommunicated Arius the priest from the Church. Arius unites many people to his impiety; a synod of 318 bishops having gathered in the city of Nicaea to refute their perfidy, put and end to all the machinations of the heretics in opposition to the 321 h Constantine, restoring the city of Drepana in Bithynia in honor of the martyr Lucian, who was buried there, named it Helenopolis, from the name of his mother.

16

322 i In Antioch the construction of the Dominicum which [314/315]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

is called Aureum begun.

25 a Marcus held the 32nd episcopacy of the Church of Rome for 8 months, after whom, Julius was ordained 33rd, for 16 years, 4 months.

331

22 a Constantine kills his wife Fausta.

328 b Donatus is well known, from whom come the Donatists throughout Africa. b By an edict of Constantine the temples of the gentiles were overthrown.

277th

Olympiad

26 c The Romans defeated the Goths in the land of the Sarmatians.

332 c At Antioch following Tyrannum, Vitalis is ordained as the 20th bishop, after whom as 21st Philogonius, to whom succeeded as 22nd Paulinus, after whom as 23rd Eustathius, from whom, when he was forced into exile for the Faith, the Arians got the church (and hold it) until the present day, that is, Eulalius, Eusebius, Euphronius, Placillus, Stephanus, Leontius, Eudoxius, Meletius, Euzoius, Dorotheus, and Meletius again. But I have not sorted out their dates, insofar as I would judge them enemies of Christ rather than bishops.

278th

Olympiad

27 d Constans, the son of Constantine, is promoted to the royal power.

333 e An innumerable multitude perish from pestilence and famine in Syria and Cilicia.

2350 28 f The Limigantes Sarmatians, having gathered a force, expelled their masters, who are now called the Argaragantes, onto Roman soil.

334

23

329 g Calocerus revolts in Cyprus and is suppressed.

29 h Constantine and his children sent an honorific letter to Antonius.

335 d Juvenius the presbyter, by nation Spanish, sets forth the Gospels in heroic verse. i On the Tricennalia of Constantine, Dalmatius is named a Caesar. e Porphyrius, having sent a notable book to Constantine is released from exile.

30 k The rhetor Pater teaches at Rome with great success.

336

24 f Athanasius is ordained as 19th bishop of Alexandria.

330 l The daughter of the rhetor Nazarius equals her father in eloquence. m The praetorian prefect Tiberian, an eloquent man, rules the Gallic provinces. g Constantinople is dedicated by denuding nearly every other city. n The presbyter Eustathius of Constantinople is well known; by whose industry in Jerusalem, a church h Metrodorus the philosopher is well known.

[316/317]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD dedicated to the martyrs was constructed. support of the ruler, Constantius, with exiles and imprisonments and various types of affliction first persecuted Athanasius and then all bishops not of their party.

279th

Olympiad

31 a Constantine, baptized by Eusebius of Nicomedia at the very end of his life, falls into the dogma of Arius, and from that time until now seizures of churches and discord of the whole world have followed.

337

3 a Constantine, waging war against his brother near Aquileia, is slain at Als.

340

280th Olympiad b While preparing for war against the Persians, Constantine dies at Ancyra in a public villa near Nicomedia at the age of 66; after him his three sons are hailed Augusti from being Ceasars.

4 b Constans fights against the Franks with mixed fortune.

341 c Many cities of the east collapsed in a horrible earthquake. d Audeus is considered important in Coele-Syria, from whom comes the Audian heresy.

35th of the Romans, Constantine, Constantius, and Constans reigned for 24 years, 5 months, and 13 days.

5 e The Franks subdued by Constans and peace made with them.

342

1 c Ablabius the Praetorian Prefect and many of the nobles slaughtered.

338 f Hermogenes the master of soldiers lynched by the people of Constantinople on account of bishop Paul whom he was banishing by the power of the emperor and the faction of the Arians. d Sapor, king of Persia, after Mesopotamia had been devastated, besieged Nisibis for almost two months. e Dalmatius Caesar, whom his uncle Constantine had left as a colleague in the power of his sons, is murdered by a plot of his cousin Constantius and in a military disturbance. g The Dominicum Aureum is dedicated in Antioch. h Macedonius 'the featherer' in place of Paul is substituted as bishop of the Arians; from whom now is the Macedonian heresy. f James, bishop of Nisibis, is well known, by whose prayers his city was often saved from crisis. i Because of the cruelty of the prefect Philip, for he was a supporter of Macedonius' party, and due to the plotting of the Arians, Paul is strangled.

2 g From this point the Arian impiety, propped up by the 339

[318/319]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

6 a Maximinus, bishop of the Treveris, is considered important; by whom Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, was received honourably, when he 1 obtained punishment from Constantius.

343 instance, as I shall omit others, Nisibis was beseiged and Bizabde and Amida were captured. a Maximus the 40th bishop of Jerusalem after Macarius dies, after whom the Arians take possession of the church, that is Cyril, Eutychius, Cyril again, Irenaeus, Cyril a third time, Hilarius, Cyril a fourth time. Of these, Cyril had been ordained presbyter by Maximus and thus after his death the episcopate was promised to him by Acacius bishop of Caesarea and other Arians if he would repudiate the ordination of Maximus. He ministered as a deacon in the church. On account of this impiety of priesthood he was compensated by a bribe. He degraded Heraclius, whom the dying Maximus had appointed in his place, from bishop to presbyter, harassing him by various deceits.

2360

7

344 b Sapor, king of the Persians, persecutes the Christians. c Neocaesaria in Pontus destroyed, except for the church, the bishop and the other people that were found in that very place.

281th

Olympiad

8 d Titian, an eloquent man, administers the praetorian prefecture, in the Gallic provinces.

345

9 e Athanasius is returned to Alexandria by a letter of Constans.

346 f Dyrrachium collapsed in an earthquake, and for three days and nights Rome tottered and many cities of Campania were shaken.

282nd Olympiad g A sea-port constructed in Seleucia of Syria at great expense to the state.

12 b Liberius is ordained 34th bishop of the Roman church, to whom, when he had been driven into exile on account of the faith, all the clergy swore that they would receive no-one else. However when Felix was substituted by the Arians, most perjured themselves and after a year they were ejected with Felix because Liberius, having been conquered by the tedium of exile and subscribing to the heretical depravity, had entered Rome as if a conqueror.

349 h Sapor for three months again besieges Nisibis.

10 i The bishop Eusebius of Emesa, standard-bearer of the Arian faction, composes many and various works.

347 k An eclipse of the sun happened. 2

11 I Nocturnal Persian battle at Singara in which we lost a certain victory by the stupidity of the soldiers. Nor indeed was there any more serious battle out of nine most serious conflicts against the Persians, for

348

13 c After Magnentius had seized the emperorship at Augustodunum, Constans is killed in the thirtieth year of his life not far from

350

(1) Athanasius.

(2) 346AD, Jun. 6th

[320/321]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

Spain in a camp which is named Helena; on account of this, since the state was thrown into turmoil, Vetranio, at Mursa, and Nepotian, at Rome, became emperors. whom he had sent to look after the Gallic provinces, ends his life among the Senones with a noose. a Gennadius the forensic orator, is considered notable at Rome. a At Rome, the people rebelling against the followers of Magnentius are betrayed by Heraclides the senator. b The rhetor Minervius of Bordeaux teaches at Rome with great success. b The head of Nepotian paraded through the city on a pike, and many proscriptions and slaughters of noblemen carried out.

2370 17 c Gallus Caesar, deceived by his cousin Constantius, under whose suspicion he had come because of his outstanding inborn ability, is executed at Histria.

354

14 c The insignia of imperial power taken away from Vetranio by Constantius at Naissus.

351 d Silvanus, having revolted in Gaul, died on the twenty-eighth day. d Magnentius conquered at Mursa, in which battle the Roman forces were ruined. e The rhetor Victorinus and my teacher Donatus the grammarian are considered notable at Rome, of whom Victorinus even merited a statue in the forum of Trajan. e Gallus, cousin of Constantius, made Caesar.

15 f Gallus crushed the Jews, who after killing the soldiers by night had taken possession of arms in order to rebel, with the slaughter of many thousands of men, even up to those of innocent years, and turned over to fire their cities, Diocaesaria, Tiberias and Diospolis, and very many towns.

352 f Paulinus and Rodianus, bishops of the Gallic provinces, driven into exile on account of the faith.

18 g The rhetors Alcimus and Delphidius teach with great success in Aquitania.

355 h Donatus, from whom we have mentioned above that the Donatists took their name, is expelled from Carthage: certain followers of his they also call Montensians from those that first began to have a church at Rome on a hill. g Some of the nobles of Antioch killed by Gallus.

283rd

Olympiad

16 i Jubilee according to the Hebrews

h Magnentius of Lugdunum kills himself in the palace by his own hand; and his brother Decentius, 353 i Eusebius bishop of Vercellae, and Lucifer and Dionysius, bishops of the churches of Cagliari and Milan, also [322/323]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD

Pancratius a Roman presbyter and Hilarius a deacon are condemned to exile with distance between them by the Arians and Constantius. apostle Andrew and evangelist Luke were received from the people of Constantinople with marvellous goodwill.

21 a Nicomedia utterly destroyed by an earthquake; the neighbouring cities partially damaged.

358 a Julian, brother of Gallus, is named Caesar at Milan. b Paulinus bishop of Treves dies in exile in Phrygia.

19 b Anthony the monk dies in his 150th year in the desert. He was accustomed to recount to many who came to him about a certain man Paul the Theban of wonderful blessings, whose death we have ourselves explained in a brief book.

356 c Evantius, most learned of grammarians, died at Constantinople, in whose place Chrestus is brought from Africa.

22 d Synods held at Ariminum and Seleucia in Isauria, in which the ancient faith of the fathers was condemned, first by the treachery of ten delegates, then by all.

359

10 c Hilary, bishop of Poitiers, by the plotting of Saturninus bishop of Arles and the rest who with him were Arians, having been expelled to Phrygia for three years, composes books about our religion. e Honoratus, from being Pretorian Prefect of the Gallic provinces, made the first Prefect of the city of Constantinople. d The relics of the apostle Timothy brought to Constantinople. f Gratian, who is now emperor, is born. e Sarmata, Amatas and Macarius, disciples of Anthony, are considered notable. g Hilarius, when he had offered a book in his own defence to Constantius at Constantinople, returns to the Gallic provinces. f Liberius, the Roman bishop, is sent into exile. 1 g Large numbers of the forces of the Alamanni crushed by Julian Caesar at Argentoratum, a city of the Gallic provinces. h Macedonius is banished from Constantinople. i Almost every church in the whole world is polluted in the name of 'peace' and by the connivance of the ruler of the Arians.

284th

Olympiad

23 k The greatest of churches is dedicated in Constantinople.

20 h Saracens, rushing into the monastery of Blessed Anthony, kill Sarmata.

357 l Meletius of Sebastia, bishop of the Armenians, is transferred to Antioch by Acacius and George the Arian bishops, and after no i After Constantius had entered Rome, the bones of the (1) Cf. Ammianus Marcellinus 15.7.6-10.

[324/325]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD great interval of time, when he received the presbyters which had been unfrocked by his predecessor Eudoxius, a most just cause of exile having been endured, he played false by changing faith. conceded that he might teach despite being a Christian. a Aemilianus is burned by the vicarius because he had overturned the altars at Dorostorum. b The church of Antioch was shut and a most serious storm of imminent persecution was quieted by the will of God. For Julian had proceeded into Persia and vowed our blood after a victory to the gods. There he was led into the desert by a certain pretended deserter, when he had lost his apostate army by hunger and thirst and had unadvisedly strayed from the ranks of his own men, he was by chance stabbed in the groin with a lance by a hostile horseman of the enemy and perished in the 32nd year of his life. After which, the following day, Jovian the primicerius of the household troops was made emperor. a Because of Hilary, Gaul condemns the treacherous trickeries of Ariminum.

285th

Olympiad

23 b Constantius II dies at Mopsocrene, between Cilicia and Cappadocia, in the forty-fifth year of his life.

361 36th of the Romans, Julian reigned for 1 year and 8 months

1 c As Julian had been converted to the worship of idols, there was a mild persecution, more swaying than compelling people to have to sacrifice, in which many of our people fell by their own will.

362 d After George, who had been ordained bishop in place of Athanasius by the Arians, had been burned to death because of a revolt of the people, Athanasius is returned to Alexandria.

37th

of the Romans, Jovian reigned for 8 months

2380 1 c Jovian, compelled by necessity, handed over Nisibis and a great part of Mesopotamia to Sapor, king of the Persians.

364 e Eusebius and Lucifer are returned from exile, from where Lucifer, having adopted two other confessors, makes Paulinus, the presbyter of bishop Eustathius and who had never polluted himself in the communion of the heretics, bishop in the Catholic part of Antioch. d The synod of Antioch convened by Melitius and his group, at which, after the homoousian and anomoian theories were rejected, they proclaimed the Macedonian dogma of the homoiousion, midway between them.

2 f When the law had been given that Christians could not be teachers of the liberal arts, Proheresius the Athenian sophist spontaneously gave up his school, although Julian had specially 363 e From indigestion, or the smell of coals, of which he had ordered too many to be burned, Jovian dies at Dadastana 1 (1) On the border between Bithynia and Galatia.

[326/327]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD aged 33. After him Valentinian, tribune of the scutarii, from Pannonia Cibalensis 1, is hailed as Augustus at Nicaea, and takes his brother Valens as co-ruler at Constantinople. coming together with some people from the supporters of Damasus, very cruel slaughters were committed by both sexes. a Valens, baptised by Eudoxius, bishop of the Arians, persecutes us.

286th

Olympiad

3 b Gratian, the son of Valentinian, made emperor at Amiens.

367 38th of the Romans, Valentinian and Valens reigned for 14 years and 5 months c Such a great tempest arose at Constantinople that, hail of a wonderful size falling, it killed some men.

1 a Valentinian in another time would have been an exceptional emperor and was similar to Aurelian in his behaviour, except that his undue strictness and a certain frugality were interpreted as cruelty and greed.

365 d Among the Atrabates wool mixed with rain descended from the sky. e Hilary, bishop of Poitiers, dies. b Apollinaris, bishop of Laodicea, composes manifold writings of our religion.

4 f Nicea, which had often before been shaken, was utterly destroyed by an earthquake.

368

2 c An earthquake having occurred throughout the whole world, the shore is invaded by the sea, and falling debris in innumerable cities of Sicily and of many islands, crushed the people.

366 g The rhetor Libanius of Antioch is considered notable.

287th

Olympiad

5 h The games restored at Constantinople by Valens.

369 d Procopius, who had usurped power at Constantinople, died nearby in Phrygia and most of the Procopian party was slaughtered and proscribed. i Athanaric, king of the Goths, after a persecution had been stirred up against the Christians, kills or expels very many from their own homes in to Roman soil. k Eusebius, bishop of Vercelli, dies. e Damasus is ordained 35th bishop of the Roman Church, and after a not very long interval Ursinus, is appointed bishop by some people, and with his partisans invaded (the church of) Sicinimum, in which,

6 l The Church of the Holy Apostles is dedicated in Constantinople.

370 m Great famine in Phrygia.

(1) Cibale.

[328/329]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD a Lucifer Bishop of Cagliari dies, who like Gregory, bishop of the Spanish provinces, and Philo of Libya never involved himself with the Arian depravity. a Almost eighty thousand Burgundians marched down to the Rhine, which had never occurred before. b Clearchus, prefect of the city of Constantinople, is well known, by whom the necessary water which was daily awaited with vows is brought to the community.

7 b Maximinus the prefect of the Annona

1, having been ordered by the emperor to investigate wrongdoers, slew many of the nobles of Rome.

371 c Peter is ordained 20th bishop of Alexandria, who after the death of Valens was so easy receiving back the heretics that some people brought in the suspicion that he was accepting bribes. c Valentinus crushed in Britain, of which he had before taken possession as a usurper. d A presbyter of Sirmium is very unjustly beheaded because he refused to betray Octavianus that was hiding at his house from the proconsul.

2390

10

d Melania, noblest of Roman women, and daughter of the sometime consul Marcellinus, at that time having left behind her only son, the urban praetor, sailed to Jerusalem, where she was such a miracle of virtue and especially of humility, that she received the name of Thecla.

2

374

8 e Didymus the Alexandrian writes many commentaries about our dogma using secretaries. He had been deprived of his sight after the 5th year of his life and was actually ignorant of first principles of writing.

372 e After the tardy death of Auxentius, Ambrosius of Milan is appointed bishop, and everybody in Italy is converted to the right faith. f Probus, Prefect of the Illyrians, destroyed the provinces that he was ruling by the most iniquitous extractions of tributes, even before they were devastated by the barbarians. f The priests of Aquileia are considered almost as a chorus of the blessed.

11 g Because in the previous year the Sarmatians had devastated the Pannonian provinces, the same Consuls remained in office.

375

288th Olympiad 9 g Eunomius the disciple of Aetius of Constantinople is well known, from whom comes the Eunomian heresy.

373 h Valentinian dies suddenly at Brigetio from an eruption of blood which is called an 'apoplexy' in Greek. After him Gratian is taken up into power with his brother Valentinian and reigns with his uncle Valens. h The Saxons slaughtered at Deuso in the land of the Franks.

(1) The grain supply.

(2) Rufinus accused Jerome of deleting this entry from his own copy of the Chronicle after falling out with Melania (the Elder).

[330/331]

Romans

AD

Romans

AD a Many of the monks at Nitria slaughtered by the tribunes and the soldiers. a After the Romans had been defeated in combat, the Goths are spread out in Thrace. b Valens made a law that monks must do military service, and ordered that any who did not want to should be beaten to death with their staves.

14 b Valens, forced to leave Antioch, in tardy penitence recalls our people from exile.

378

12 c Theodosius, father of the Theodosius who was later Emperor, and many nobles slain.

376

[15] c Lamentable war in Thrace, in which the Roman legions, lacking the protection of horse, were surrounded by the Goths and slaughtered to extinction: the emperor Valens himself, when wounded by an arrow, fled and because of the severe pain often almost fell from his horse, was carried off to a certain farm cottage, and after being pursued there by the barbarians and the house set on fire, he did not even obtain burial. d From the founding of the City until the end of this work there are 1131 years, in this manner: under kings,

240 years under consuls,

464 years under Augusti and Caesars,

427 years [379] d Photinus dies in Galatia, from whom comes the Judaizing teaching of the Photinians. 1 e Basil of Caesarea, Bishop of Cappadocia, is considered important, who ruined many good qualities of continence and ingenuity by the one failing of pride.

289th

Olympiad

13 f About 30,000 Alamanni laid low by Gratian's army at Argentaria, a town of the Gauls.

377 g The monks Florentinus, Bonosus, and Rufinus are considered notable, of whom Florentinus was so merciful to the needy that he was called by the crowd "Father of the Poor". h The nation of the Huns devastate the Goths, who, having been received by the Romans without surrender of arms, were driven by hunger to have to rebel because of the greed of general Maximus. 2

(1) Jerome, like many heresiologists, always associates Photinus with Sabellius, Paul of Samosata and Judaism. He wants to show, by this association, that they're all heretics, but does not particularise each of them. Jerome usually explains that the common heresy of Photinus and Judaism is to think that Jesus was just a man who had been adopted by God as his son. Jerome knows that Photinus is not exactly a Monarchianist, but an Adoptianist. Benoît Jeanjean shows how Jerome presents Photinus, Paulus of Samosate and Sabellius in his book :

Benoît Jeanjean, "Saint Jérôme et l'hérésie",

Paris, Etudes Augustiniennes, 1999, p. 168-177.

(2) The original manuscript of 'O' ends at this point. A single leaf (f.145) with a brief summary of events follows, in the same hand as the Tertullian scholion noted earlier. After this, the manuscript contains the Chronicle of Marcellinus.

[332]

All the years are added up until the 6th consulate of the Emperor Valens and the second of the Emperor Valentinian the younger: from the 15th year of Tiberius and the preaching of our Lord Jesus Christ:

351 years from the second year of Darius, King of the Persians, in which period the temple at Jerusalem was restored

899 years from the first Olympiad, in which time Isaiah was prophesying among the Hebrews

1,155 years from Solomon and the first building of the Temple

1,411 years from the capture of Troy, at which time Sampson was among the Hebrews

1,561 years from Moses and Cecrops, first King of Attica

1,890 years from Abraham and the reign of Ninus and Semiramis

2,395 years The whole list from Abraham until the time written above

2,395 years but from the flood until Abraham there are counted

942 years and from Adam until the flood

2,242 years

There are altogether from Adam until the 14th year of Valens, that is, until his 6th consulate and the second of Valentinian

5,579 years This text was translated and edited by Roger Pearse and friends, 2005. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Chronicle - Preface to the online edition

Jerome, Chronicle (2005). Preface to the Online Edition The Chronicle of St. Jerome

Introduction The Chronicle of St. Jerome was composed around 380AD and became the primary available source of information on dates and events from the time of its composition until the end of the middle ages. Jerome's work itself was a translation into Latin of the Chronicle of Eusebius of Caesarea, brought up to date, but it was through Jerome that it came to be so influential.

It is the first text in which we see an attempt to accurately date all the events of times previous. Every event is assigned to a date, the kings and the dates are drawn up in columns, and brief notes made against each. The revolutionary tabular format forces the chronologist to be precise in whatever data is entered and highlights any errors involved in synchronising lists from different kingdoms of kings and the number of years they reigned. The Chronicle of Eusebius of Caesarea

Eusebius of Caesarea wrote his chronicle ca. 311 AD, and is responsible for the revolutionary format which transformed the study of history.

Prior to Eusebius, a chronography would consist of lists of kings, and how long they reigned. An occasional note might be attached to the name of a king, stating that in the 3rd year of his reign such-and-such event occurred. Each kingdom would be treated separately, and its rulers or magistrates listed. Eusebius himself compiled a chronography of this kind, which is today known as book one of his Chronicle, and has the title The Chronography. But the problem for the reader was how to link information about rulers and events in one kingdom to events in other kingdoms. Eusebius wanted to write a history of the church, and needed to link together information from Jewish sources with the chronographical information that he obtained from numerous Greek predecessors, such as Porphyry, Castor, and Erastothenes, and also from Christian predecessors such as Julius Africanus. His own contribution was to draw up the existing mass of chronological information in a tabular format that enforced a perpetual synchronism between the various parallel strands of data. This innovation may rightly be described as a moment of genius. The second book of his Chronicle was drawn up in this way and entitled The Chronological Canons. This was the portion that Jerome translated and its format can be seen below. Jerome's translation is the most accurate version of this book that has reached us. To do this, Eusebius took the then new medium of the codex (the modern book format, as opposed to the roll) and exploited the concept of a page. He divided up the page using a tabular format.

He drew vertical columns on the page. The lefthandmost he headed as 'Kings of the Persians' (or whichever other empire was current at the time). The righthandmost he headed 'Kings of the Egyptians', so long as there were any. When new kingdoms came along, he added an extra column for them; when kingdoms disappeared, the column vanished with them. When a king came to the throne, he placed his name on a separate line by itself, for any events of that king which had no specified year. Beneath it he then enumerated the years of his reign on succeeding lines; 1, 2, 3, 4 and so on. Thus for each year there was a line on which information could be entered. Also, by running along the line, it could be seen precisely who ruled where at any given time. The new format was an act of genius, which ensured that the problems of Greek chronography would not continue to bedevil history.

Eusebius also decided to start his Chronicle, not with the date of Creation, but with the earliest date that he felt he could reasonably calculate, which was the birth of Abraham. Since his new format placed each year on a separate line, he marked every ten years how many years it had been from the birth of Abraham. This universal dating foreshadowed the invention of the standard Anno Domini dating by Dionysius Exiguus. That a standard dating system would come into being was ensured by the popularity of Jerome's version of the Chronicle, and the obvious need for it once that work existed.

Eusebius did not collect the materials himself for his work, but relied on whatever works he could find which gave brief lists of events and rulers. Once he started work, the problems of Greek chronography must have become exceedingly evident. The problems of Greek chronography By the time of Eusebius, Greek chronography was a mess. There were a number of reasons for this.

There was no agreement in the ancient world on which date the year should begin. Each city would have its own calendar and reckoning. There were several different systems of months in use. There were also systems like 'Ab Urbe Condita' (AUC - from the founding of the City, Rome). But there were so many of these, and they enjoyed such limited use, that these did not advance things. The Romans, rather than using AUC, tended to date a year by the names of the annual consuls then in office. Greek cities often did likewise. The most common system of dating was by the regnal year of a reigning monarch, and inscriptions often record that they were erected in the nth year of king xyz. Lists of kings and the number of years they reigned circulated, and exist still, carved on the walls of Egyptian temples. But kings do not always come to the throne on the 1st of January, and some rule for less than a year, and some are obliterated from the lists for political reasons. In consequence any reckoning based upon regnal years was bound to be in error, sometimes substantially as errors in a dynasty accumulated.

Once the Olympic games had begun, with a group of four years between games known as an Olympiad, some of the Greeks began to refer to those four-year groups by the name of the victor in the games. Later yet, a number was assigned to the olympiad. Chronicles based on the four-year cycle began to come into existence, since this dating was more universal for Greek affairs than lists of annual officials in each city.

Anyone trying to write a history had to struggle with these obstacles.

Frequently the best that could be done was to say that a certain man flourished in the reign of such a king. Yet even here problems occurred, since the Greek word used for 'flourished' was extremely similar to that for 'was born.' The result of such errors can be seen in the Chronicle in the dates assigned to Lycurgus, who appears 3 times over a period of more than a century. The first is in fact when he was born; the second his hey-day, and the third refers to someone of the same name! But each can be traced back to impeccable sources in the Greek tradition that Eusebius used.

Eusebius' approach to the chronological problems

Eusebius was powerless to solve most of these problems. His innovative format however forced him to deal with some of them. In many cases he simply recorded what he had, and left others to deal with the problem. In others he presumed an error and adjusted the count of years assigned to a given ruler in order to make the lines tally and 'correct' the 'error'.

Starting with a mess of loosely connected regnal years, he linked them together through synchronisms. These were points at which he had information that tied together events in two different kingdoms. For instance he was able to determine that Darius of Persia and Alexander the Great of Macedon lived at the same time, since the latter overthrew the former. This linked the Greek lists with the Persian ones. The Greek lists could be linked together through the Olympiads, which were often recorded for Greek events. He was able to link Jewish events with Persian ones because it was recorded that the second temple was built in the Second Year of Darius. This last date is one of his crucial synchronisms. The date of the Trojan War was present in many of his lists, and forms another such link.

Some events, particularly in Olympiad Chronicles, were not given a precise year, but merely dated to the period of the Olympiad, or of a given ruler. He handled this by placing each Olympiad and each ruler's name on a fresh line, separate from the normal list of years. This gave him space to record such information. The Chronicle is inevitably riddled with errors. Eusebius himself records at one point that all dates prior to then are conjectural and disputed. Responsibility for these errors must be assigned largely to his predecessors. Even then, it is difficult to condemn inaccurate dates assigned to times when no-one had any conception of such a thing as a numerical date. Rather the Chronicle draws a line under the period of confusion, and provides a framework in which errors can be identified and resolved.

Eusebius' own Chronicle is no longer extant in the original Greek. An Armenian translation exists in two manuscripts, although the end of book one and start and end of book two are lost in both. The entries in book two have also been augmented, and the format rearranged, but numerous errors crept in during this process.

Jerome and Eusebius

St. Jerome as a young man spent time in the East and became familiar with a great deal of the scholarship of the school of Origen and Eusebius. He came across a copy of the Chronological Canons and recognised its importance. As with other works by Eusebius, such as the Onomasticon, he arranged to translate it. He had a skilled scribe draw up a volume with the numerals in Latin rather than Greek - no trivial task -, and then dictated a translation of the contents.

He also added his own comments where he felt that Roman history had been neglected. Finally he composed a continuation down to his own times, ending with the disastrous defeat and death of the emperor Valens at the hands of the Goths at Adrianople in 378 AD. This continuation was of the utmost importance for the future. The esteem in which Jerome was held was great in the succeeding decades and centuries, and the monastic scribes did not hesitate to follow his example and write further continuations to the text. This practice undoubtedly contributed to the preservation of the work and its centrality to all future historical work.

Jerome made revisions to the text as time went on. He made an error in transcribing 'Alcamenes' in one entry, mistaking the numeral theta that preceded it as part of the name. The text 'Thalcamenes' appears in numerous manuscripts, including 'O'; but is corrected in others. It shows clearly the manner in which the Greek practise of using letters as numerals facilitated corruption of both the numbers and the text.

Families of manuscripts

It was Joseph Justus Scaliger (1540-1609) who first worked on the chronology of antiquity and so came up against the primary witness, Jerome's version of Eusebius. In his work De emendatione temporum (1583) he split the mss into two families.

- Priores. 10 mostly late manuscripts known to him shared a format with all the numbers on the left-hand side of the page, in columns, and at the right the text of any historical event. This could wrap around, thereby giving a long space for all the text. Scaliger referred to this space for text as the spatium historicum and so it has been known since.

But Scaliger called it the prioeres

-- earliest -- since he thought they were.

- Posteriores. Three early manuscripts (B, F, P) Scaliger designated posteriores -- later -- since they did not agree with each other in format, nor with the prioeres group.

Also present in the manuscripts of Jerome are a set of king-lists (the Series Regum) and an Exordium. In 1750 the Veronese scholar Girolamo Da Prato published a treatise, De Chronicis libris duo ab Eusebio scriptis et editis. In this he established the late date of these two items.

These are published in Schoene (below).

- O, B, F, P, A and S are all old and agree in format. B is not a child of S, unlike A and P. O and S are independent, so must go back to two exemplars written in Jerome's lifetime.

One MS of the 5th century survives almost complete; of another, enough fragments survive to identify two apographs which enable it to be reconstructed in its entirety. There are several MSS of the 7th and 8th centuries. These early witnesses attest securely not only the text of Jerome's version, but equally important, its arrangement of the columns of numbers and of the entries on each page of the original (T.D.Barnes, p.112). So old are the manuscripts, that we can see some of Jerome's working practises. S and its descendants reflect Jerome's final version. O was based on a somewhat earlier copy which had a few readings which Jerome corrected against his copy of Eusebius, but has the same format. However the copyist of O has chosen to save parchment by condensing the text into 30 lines per page, rather than the original 26. B also derives from a pre-revision copy. Schoene referred to the revised edition as the Editio Romana of the Chronicle, on the theory that Jerome made it to present to the Roman synod of 382. (RP: I have been unable to find any actual evidence in any of the works listed below for this).

There is no uniformity in the manuscripts in the division of lines and pages in the prefaces. All the older manuscripts have a single column format for the preface; some later ones have two columns.

Manuscripts

Siglum

Location Shelfmark & Notes

Date /

Century

O

Oxford, Bodleian Library

Codex Oxoniensis Bodleianus Lat. auct. T II 26. Uncial. 30 lines a page. It contains the Chronicle of Jerome

(to f. 144), followed by a chronological summary on 1 leaf, followed by the Chronicle of Marcellinus. A posteriores Ms. (Online here)

Ff. 1-32 years, are in a late (s.XV?) hand in the priores (long-lines) format. The remainder (A. Abr. 555-2394) is in a fifth century hand, the last leaf is missing, and the one-leaf summary replacing it is either by the same or a contemporary hand. There are marginalia dating from around 1400. The manuscript was acquired from an unknown source by Jean de Tillet, Bishop of Meaux, who died in 1570. Du Tillet had obtained authority from Francis I to collect Mss from French libraries; there are reasons to suppose that the Ms. was in the South of France ca. 1400. Pontacus borrowed it from him and cites it by the name of the Meldensis (M). Sirmond, in his edition of Marcellinus (1619, 1696) refers to it as being in Tillet's library. It then passed to the Jesuit College of Clermont at Paris. This library was sold in 1764, when it was acquired by Meerman. On the sale of his library in 1824, it was bought by Gaisford for the Bodleian. There are full details in Fotheringham's facsimile.

MADAN,

Summary Catalogue..., IV (1897), p.441.

5

S Leiden, Paris & Vatican Codex Floriacensis fragm. Dismembered pages of this MS. Paris. Lat. 6400 B (14 pages: the 7th quaternion of the Ms plus the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 7th and 8th gatherings of the 8th quaternion); Leiden, Voss. Lat. Q. 110 A (6 pages at the end of P); Vatican Reginensis 1709 (2 pages). Uncial. The Paris fragment has a note in a 9th century hand "Codex beati Benedicti Floriac.", indicating it belonged to the abbey at Fleury at that date. This was sacked by the Huguenots in 1562. Written in Italy. 26 lines per page. The division of the pages is the same as in A,N,P. N and P must have been copied from S, so similar are they in form and text. A posteriores Ms. The Ms must have devoted one more leaf to the title and prefaces than M N and P and must have originally contained 167 leaves. A photographic facsimile was published as Supplement I in the Leiden series of Codices Graeci et Latini.

5

B

Berne, Stadtbibliothek.

Codex Bernensis 219 (once Bongarsianus, in Scaliger; Aurelianensis or A in Pontacus). Written in uncial, probably at the Abbey of St. Benedict at Fleury, to which it belonged according to a notice in the Ms. Later belonged to Peter Daniel Aurelianensis (d. 1603), then to Jacques Bongars, when Scaliger mentions it by that name. A manuscript not related to S. A posteriores Ms.

Contains only the Chronicle of Jerome. From dates given in the Ms it would appear to have been written between 627 and 699 AD, as there is a large notice on fol. 1 referring to the 5th year of Childebert king of the Franks and given various dates of this (697 AD), and on the last page another notice referring to 17th year of Heraclius as the 627th Dionysian year of Christ (i.e. A.D., after Dionysius Exiguus who devised it). There are 76 leaves.

The pages are much larger than AOS and the number of lines per page varies from 34 to 40. This manuscript generally compresses the two-page spread into one, making a division down the middle of the page instead. It is a very careless piece of work and the scribe has not troubled to keep the columns in line. However the right years correspond at the start of each page, so it seems that the scribe retained the division of pages in his archetype. The constant misplacement of olympiads is a sign of the carelessness of the scribe. Unfortunately Schoene used this as the basis of his edition.

7 A Valenciennes, Bibliothèque de la Ville. Codex Valentianus 495 (once Amandinus). From St. Amand, now in the public library in Valenciennes. Uncial, 26 lines per page. Transcribed from S. Contains only the Chronicle of Jerome. The foliation suggests that the manuscript should contain 167 leaves; one is devoted to the title, while two leaves are missing after f.125, and one leaf has been accidentally omitted in the foliation after f. 105 (the error may be counteracted elsewhere). The pages are the same size as NOPS. It corresponds very nearly page for page and line for line with NPS and the first part of M, but devoted more space to the preface than MNP do. There are frequent blank lines, suggesting that some notices took up fewer lines in this Ms. than in the archetype, and that the scribe has resorted to this device to keep the layout the same. A posteriores Ms. 7

P

Leiden

Codex Leidensis Lat. Voss. Q 110 (once Petavianus). In the 9th century, according to a statement in the Ms itself, it was written in the Abbey of St. Mesmin in Orleans by a monk Elias in the time of Abbot Peter (ca. 840 AD). Transcribed from S. Contains only Jerome's Chronicle.

Close correspondance with N, and almost as close to S. 166 leaves, including 2 devoted to the title.

A posteriores

Ms.

ca. 840 AD.

N

Berlin, Staatsbibliothek

Codex Turonensis Berolin. Phillips. 1872. From the collection of Sir Thomas Phillips at Middlehill. The manuscript came originally from Tours. It contains only Jerome's Chronicle, on 166 leaves. Minuscules are used for all entries in black ink and uncials for everything in red. There are 26 lines per page and the division of pages corresponds to that in APS. It seems to be a copy of

S. It has interesting marginalia derived from the other families. A posteriores

Ms.

9 or 10

M Berlin Codex Middlehillensis Berolin. Phillips. 1829. Written at Trier in the time of Charlemagne. Minuscule all through. 26 lines per page. A descendant of either S or O. A posteriores Ms. This Ms. came originally from Treves (see Mommsen, Chronica Minora I, p.78). It contains the Chronicle of Jerome, the Liber Generationis and Hydatius. Jerome occupies ff.1-153 and the first line of f.154. In the first part of the chronicle the page division corresponds exactly to ANPST; in the latter part the division is different to any other Ms. The hand changes at the start of f.73a. A full collation appears in Schoene, but is not reliable.

8/9

F

Leiden, Bibliotheek der Universiteit

Codex Leidensis Scaliger 14 (once Freherianus in Scaliger and Pontacus; although the latter sometimes confused this Ms (Fre.) with the Codex Fabritianus (Fab.)). Written in red, green, black and purple ink, and belongs to the early part of the 9th century. It descends from the manuscript of Bonifatius. It is written on 190 leaves and contains Jerome, the Exordium, the Chronicon consulare of Prosper, and a dedicatory epistle and Carmen votivum of Bonifatius. Jerome occupies ff. 2a-176a; f58b and f59a are blank, however, so the total is 174 leaves. The pages contain 25 lines each, and do not exactly correspond to any other manuscript. A posteriores Ms.

9

L London, British Library Ms. Additional 16974. Related to T. Contains the title 'Liber monasterii sancti Trudonis', so belong to the monastery of St. Tron in Belgium. It contains Jerome's Commentary on Matthew, the Chronicon of Jerome, the Chronicon Imperiale of Prosper, and the Chronicle of Marius of Aventicum. Jerome's Chronicle is ff. 57a-190a. The pages are much larger than most mss, containing 42 (sometimes 40 or 41) lines. This is the oldest of the priores. The scribe was careless. A displacement of a portion of the preface shows that the archetype had around 31 lines per page. 9/10 Lucca, Chapter library Codex Lucensis bibl. capit. 490. Written in a small minuscule. AD 787 Lem. 1 Limoges Codex Lemovicensis bibl. publ. 1 12 D Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale Française. Codex Parisinus Latinus 4860 (once Colbertinus). Written in Mainz. 10

T

Oxford, Merton College

Codex Oxon. Merton 315. Related to SAPN. Written in red, green and black ink. It is written on 156 leaves, and contains Jerome's Chronicle. However it inserts after the preface of Eusebius two short treatises, Interpretatio sancti Hieronymi de nominibus gentium and De mensuratio provinciarum. After the Chronicle come four chronological summaries. There are some German verses in a late, perhaps 14th century hand, on ff.9a, 156a/b, so the Ms perhaps was in Germany some time. The division of pages is almost identical with that in AMNPS for the first part (to A.Abr. 1496) but with occasional deviations. The latter portion is divided up differently to any other manuscript. There are 26 lines per page, except in the prefaces and summaries at the end, where there are 28.

In the omission of headings in the Chronicle, the Ms. agrees with B.

9 C Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale Française. Codex Parisinus Latinus 4859 (Colbertinus). Related to T. 9/10 L London, British Library Ms. Additional 16974. Related to T. A member of the long-lines family. 9/10 Q Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale Française. Codex Parisinus Latinus 4858. Uncial and minuscule. 9

U

Udine, Biblioteca Arcivescovile

Biblioteca Arcivescovile ot° 14. These partially supply the lost pages at the start of O. Images in Fotheringam, Bodleian.

W

Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale Française.

Codex Parisinus Latinus 4870. These partially supply the lost pages at the start of O. Images in Fotheringam, Bodleian.

Contains the words common to other Mss descended from O: "A Valente

VI et Valentiniano iuniore usque in consulatum Eudoxii colliguntur LXVIII, ac per hoc a XV Tiberi anno, quo dominus predicare incepit, in consulatum Eudoxii et Dioscori fuint anni CCCCXI." (442 AD).

V

Oxford, Bodleian Library

Canonici script. eccl. 96.

R Montpellier, Bibliothèque Universitaire, Section de Médecine Codex Montepessulanus H. 32. This is not a complete list: there are said to be a hundred or so.

About this translation This translation is the first translation of the whole work into a modern language. The portion written by Jerome himself, from 326-378, has been translated before. Malcolm Drew Donaldson translated it into English with a commentary in 1996; Benoît Jeanjean published an excellent French translation and commentary in 2004, to which he added a translation of the two prefaces of Jerome and Eusebius. Most but not all of the preface of Jerome had been translated into English as part of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers series in the 19th century. The translation came about as a result of some experiments in online collaborative translation by Roger Pearse. Andrew Smith of attalus.org had translated portions of the text of the Chronicle covering the Hellenistic era, down to the death of Tiberius, and formatted them as text keyed on Olympiad, year, and text. This provided a model for placing the text of the Chronicle online so that it could be translated, without the need to worry about the king-lists and numbers and the detailed format of the final product. This was the approach taken.

After a discussion with Steven Van Impe, in September 2004, a web page was placed online which contained on the left hand side some 160 text entries in Latin from Jerome's Chronicle, one after another, and on the right a box in which anyone might enter a translation. The text was broken down into very short sections of no more than a short sentence. The electronic Patrologia Latina Database text was used as a basis, and corrected against the edition of J. K. Fotheringham. The PL text contained a great many medieval additions which were mostly ignored, and the remainder placed in brackets. The text was made available in weekly 'chunks' of no more than 160 sections, each being edited, uploaded and announced on a Saturday. Each chunk took around a week. The website then allowed anyone visiting the site to enter a translation or comments there and then, without the need for registration. The emphasis was on each section being so short that anyone with any knowledge of Latin would be able to do something, and thereby people of all levels of Latin would be encouraged to participate. Quality was assured by keeping the length of the chunk short, so that when a chunk was done people could then review what had been done in the remainder of the week. The existence of each new chunk was publicised in a variety of online fora, including humanities.classics, soc.history.ancient and the LT-ANTIQ mailing list. The process took 14 weeks from September 2004 until Christmas 2004, starting with Gaius (Caligula) and proceeding to the end, then restarting with Abraham and continuing down to Tiberius; finally doing the praefationes in the same way.

After the bulk of the translation work was done, the translation had to be harmonised to try to ensure that the same words were translated the same way.

This was not straightforward. The text was too large to edit in Microsoft Word or Frontpage. In the end, each sentence was placed online in a separate text file, numbered 1-2574, and a PHP script written so that the sentences could be browsed by number range (1-10, etc) or by searching for words in the text file. Using the latter approach, it was easier to display only those sections which contained a specific word to be harmonised. This process took a month.

Then the result had to be laid out in the format of the original, which took some three months until April 2004 and was very arduous. The format is 26 line pages and follows Helm's edition (1956). This proved extraordinarily difficult, involving some unusual HTML. The layout was done from the rear of the volume, and only once around 70% of the text had been formatted was a template that would work for every page successfully evolved. This process took until the end of April 2005, and around 20% had to be done again once the modus operandi had been established. However many features of the Chronicle only become clear once you actually try to lay out a copy on a page, electronic or otherwise. The layout was done a page at a time in Dreamweaver 6. Attempts to edit larger files proved impractical. It quickly became clear that the HTML tables could not be allowed to resize as normally happens. Instead the tables were specified as fixed size and the properties of each cell specified in CSS. This ensured compatibility across browsers, such as Internet Explorer 6, Netscape 6 and Firefox.

Finally a question arose about colours in the text. Jerome's original text had the columns of kings coloured alternately red and black, in order to avoid confusion. This has been followed in the online text. There are no indications in either Helm or Fotheringham of the colour system. The Merton College manuscript is online, but since this has additional colours it could not be used without reservation. A colour strip of 27 pictures of the Bodleian manuscript was bought and used as a guide, but this mainly contained items from the latter portion of the Chronicle. The Assistant Librarian of the Bodleian, Dr. Bruce Barker-Benfield, kindly agreed to allow access to this treasure. A visit during May 2005 allowed the production of a marked up print-out of the translation which indicated which portions of the text were in which colour. In the process he found that the facsimile really was an extraordinarily accurate reproduction of the look and feel of the codex, colour aside. However the first original page was page 69. The colour on the pages before this point is therefore a reconstruction. The last page of the codex was also lost in late antiquity; again a guess has been made on the correct colours. One problem that was encountered in the translation was a portion in Jerome's introduction. The original text was laid out in a specific tabular format by Eusebius, and following him, by Jerome. However at some time during the Dark Ages, a scribe chose to reformat the document by placing all of the columns of kings on the left, and all the text on the right. The first letter of the text was colour-coded to indicate to which column of numbers - up to nine - it related. To explain this, the scribe interpolated a short passage into Jerome's introduction. Unfortunately this passage is extremely terse and difficult to understand in the absence of a manuscript formatted and coded in this way. A manuscript of this family does exist in the British Library. Permission to view this manuscript has been granted but the opportunity to view it has not yet arrived. Until this can be checked, the translation of the interpolated passage must be considered provisional.

Translators and helpers

Around 25 people participated at various points during the 14 weeks of the experiment, and I would like to thank everyone who did so. In no particular order, the main translators and problem-solvers were: Roger Pearse (RP), Andrew S. Jacobs (ASJ), José Miguel Blasco Ibáñez (JMB), Jacob Wainwright Love (JWL), and an anonymous contributor known as '...'; together with contributions large and small by Argyros George Argyrou (AGA), Steven Van Impe (SVI), Benôit Jeanjean (BJ: whose splendid French translation of the last portion of the Chronicle appeared as our project was drawing to a close), Frank Gay (FG), Frank Van Heden (FVH), Mark DeCagliano (MD), Andrew Smith (AS), Michael Kuettner (MK), James Hannam (JH), DSV, TV, GAC, MDM, M. Guy, Kevin O'Donnell, Ayse Tuzlak (AT), FM, RAK, JWS, tks, EL, SJJ, DH, KS, Pe, AC, RIP and others who chose to remain entirely anonymous. (If anyone for whom I only have initials would like to contact me, I'd be glad to add your names). Many, many thanks to you all!

All errors of translation, revision and layout are solely the responsibility of Roger Pearse, of course. The translation does not pretend to be what it is not, and doubtless contains errata and corrigenda. All such will be gratefully received. The object of the translation was to explore the possibilities and limitations of online translation of works never before translated by a mixture of professionals and people not professionally involved in such activity, and in the process to make this fascinating work available to the general public, and thereby to encourage interest in ancient chronography. It is hoped that this will now occur.

Thanks are due to Dr. Bruce Barker-Benfield of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, who made it possible for the manuscript 'O' -- one of the treasures of that library -- to be consulted.

Key to codes used in the translation The double-page openings of Jerome's copy are represented on-screen by the white rectangles. Areas in yellow indicate material not part of Jerome's text. The spine of the book is represented by a yellow column down the middle. Page numbers (a later addition) are indicated in square brackets at the top -- [220/221] is pages 220 and 221. These page numbers appear in Helm and Fotheringham. A few things in the text may be obscure. These have been transcribed from the edition of Helm (1956). g An entry -- The italic letter is not present in Jerome's text, but is a code devised by Rudolf Helm. All the text entries can be referenced by page number and letter, e.g. 303a.

* -- When an entry is marked with an asterisk in Helm's edition, it is supposedly not present in the Armenian translation of the original work by Eusebius. This means that it must be an entry added by Jerome.

However Burgess states (p.24) that these are not very accurate. After some hesitation, I have transcribed them.

(*) -- Helm's code for an entry which is present in the Armenian, but in a somewhat shorter or different form.

*? -- Helm's code for another possible modification; I am unclear in what way. The first column of years, underlined, is the years from Abraham, shown every 10 years. The reckoning of years AD and BC is shown for guidance, but did not form part of the original text.

Note that the text has been formatted for display under Internet Explorer

6. I have been unable to discover why it behaves erratically under Firefox. The task of converting the Chronicle to HTML for the first time has not been a trivial one, and the only way to find out how to do it was to learn by doing. There are certain irregularities of page width in the second portion of the Chronicle. I hope I may be forgiven for not redoing this portion entirely, using the page size and format of the pages in the first part. Such an enterprise would be useful, but it would take months, for purely cosmetic gain. At the moment I do not have the resources to redo it.

If it causes deep pain, let me know.

It is possible to print off the tabular portion of the Chronicle, in landscape mode, resizing to paper width. An inkjet can give quite satisfactory results.

Latin text

After this was all done, there was very little energy left for anything else, and certainly not to create an online Latin text. The text used for the translation project consisted of the 'lemmas' of text only. But during the summer of 2005, JMB very heroically volunteered to incorporate this into the format of the translation, so that a Latin text would be available. This he did, and it now appears here with the English. The numerals have not been converted back to Roman numbers. If someone would care to volunteer for that task, it would be nice to complete the job.

Bibliography The materials available to the editor were limited to whatever could be bought or photocopied by someone living in a rural town. These were:

Richard W. BURGESS, Studies in Eusebian and post-Eusebian Chronography, Stuttgart (1999). (Photocopy of portions).

Malcolm Drew DONALSON, A Translation of Jerome's Chronicon With Historical Commentary, Mellen University Press (1996). ISBN: 0773422587 (Photocopy of translation).

J. K. FOTHERINGHAM, The Bodleian Manuscript of Jerome's Version of the Chronicle of Eusebius Reproduced in Collotype. Oxford: Clarendon (1905) (Photocopy) J. K. FOTHERINGHAM, Eusebii Pamphili Chronici canones. London: Humphrey Milford (1923). (Photocopy)

R. HELM, Eusebius Werke 7: Die Chronik des Hieronymus, Griechischen Christlichen Schriftsteller 47 (1956). (Photocopy of text only)

Benoît JEANJEAN & Bertrand LANÇON, Saint-Jérôme, Chronique : Continuation de la Chronique d'Eusèbe, années 326-378 suivie de quatre études sur les Chroniques et chronographies dans l'An ... e ronde du GESTIAT, Brest, 22 et 23 mars 2002, PU Rennes (1 octobre 2004), ISBN : 2753500185. (Purchased copy).

Josef KARST, Eusebius Werke, 5te Band : Die Chronik

aus dem Armenischen übersetzt. Die Griechischen Christlichen Schriftsteeler der Ersten Jahrhunderte 20. (1911). (Photocopy of portions).

Alden A. MOSSHAMMER, The Chronicle of Eusebius and the Greek Chronographic Tradition, Lewisburg/London (1979), ISBN

0-8387-1939-2. (Photocopy)

Alfred SCHOENE, Eusebi Chronicorum Libri. 2 vols. Berlin: Weidmann (1875) (Purchased copy, but not extensively used after reading Mosshammer's comments). The other item available to the editor and translators, and used with wonder and delight for every chunk of translation, was the 9th century Merton College Oxford manuscript 315, available online from the Bodleian Library website.

Roger PEARSE

2005. This text was written by Roger Pearse, 2005. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely.

Greek text is rendered using the Scholars Press SPlonic font, free from here.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Chronicle - Prefaces of Jerome and Eusebius

St. Jerome, Chronicle (2004-5). Preface of Jerome; preface of Eusebius Eusebius Hieronymus to his friends Vincentius and Gallienus, greetings.

There was an old custom of the scholars, that they would reduce Greek books to Latin speech for the purpose of exercising their wits, and, what has even more difficulty in it, they would translate poems of illustrious men, with the added necessity of correctly rendering the metre. For the same reason our Cicero translated complete books of Plato word-for-word: and after he had published Aratus in Roman dress, in hexameter verses, he amused himself with Xenophon's Economics. In this work that golden stream of eloquence is so frequently obstructed by certain rough and turbulent obstacles, so that whoever does not know that they are translations does not believe they were said by Cicero. For it is difficult for someone who is following another's lines not to stray outside them from time to time; when things were said well in another language, it is hard to preserve the same elegance in translation. An idea was captured appropriately by a single word: I do not have my own word to convey it, and while I seek to complete the sentence, in a long detour I hardly advance a brief distance along the road. The twists of hyperbaton 1, the dissimilarities of cases, finally the varieties of figures of speech are added to the sense itself and, so to speak, the native idiom of the language. If I translate word for word, it sounds absurd; if perforce I alter something in sequence or style, I shall seem to have failed in the duty of a translator.

Therefore, my dearest Vincentius, and you, Gallienus, part of my soul, I beg that you reread whatever in this work is hasty, not with the spirit of judges, but as friends: especially since I dictated as quickly as possible to a secretary, as you know; and also the style 2 of the divine books testifies to the difficulty of the task, which, when published by the LXX translators, did not retain the same flavour in the Greek language. For this reason Aquila and Symmachus and Theodotion were roused up to produce almost different works from the same work: with the first expressing it word-for-word, and the next preferring to follow the sense, and the third not differing much from the ancients. However the fifth, sixth and seventh versions 3, although it is unknown from which authors they originate, yet they contain intrinsic variants that are so probably correct, that they have earned authority without having names.
That's how it comes about that Sacred Literature seems unpolished and harsh sounding, for while scholarly men -- not understanding that they were translated from Hebrew -- look at the outside but not into the kernel, they tend rather to be thoroughly horrified at the mean clothing, so to speak, before they find the fair body of the things within.

Indeed what is more melodious than the psalter, which like the works of our own Flaccus 4 or the Greek Pindar, now runs along in iambics, now rings out in alcaics, now swells in sapphics, and now walks in semifoot? What is more beautiful than the Song of Deuteronomy or Isaiah? What is more serious than Solomon? What is more perfect than Job? All of which compositions circulate among their own people in hexameter and pentameter verses, as Josephus and Origen write. When we read these in Greek, they sound like something else; when we read them in Latin, they are scarcely coherent. For if it seems to someone that the grace of a language does not change in translation, let him present Homer word-for-word in Latin, -- let me say something more -- let it be translated into his own language in words of prose; he will see that the word-order has become ridiculous and a most eloquent poet barely readable.

What is the point of all this? Obviously so that it does not seem amazing to you, if we offend occasionally, if sluggish speech is either raspy in consonants or divided and split in its sounds, or constrained by the brevity of these matters, since the most learned men have struggled in this same task: and to the general difficulty that we have pleaded in every translation, this in particular is added to us: that the history is multiplex, possessing barbarian names, matters unknown to the Latin-speaking peoples, inexplicable numbers, and columns equally interwoven with events and numbers, so that it is almost more difficult to discern the order in which things must be read, than to arrive at an understanding of the meaning.

[5 In order that, moreover, it may be understood, with a clear indication of which number any text pertains to, let the reader attend to these inserted distinctions, so that, if the text must be related to the first number of kingdom previously marked out, let him look at the first letter in the explanation of the text: and, if he should see it in bright red, let him know that it must apply to that period or in the year, which the number similarly drawn, that is in bright red, will have suggested: but if he shall perceive that the number (=initial letter?) is not in a pure bright red, but was written after black was mixed in, the text must be related to the number of the second column: if however it must be related to the third column of numbers that has been written down, the middle of the number (initial letter?) will be seen in a pure bright red and the remaining part given solely in black. The fourth column of numbers will have nothing in bright red, but there will be for an indication how the text is bound to it (the column of numbers), when the letter done in bright red at the start of the explanation of the text, that must also be supplied for the signs above, is displayed anyway, (and) they corresponded in category to none of the signs mentioned above. If on the contrary, the (initial) letter was expressed, not actually in bright red but in mixed black and red, he will be able to turn to the number gleaming with red in the fifth column of numbers; and so the sixth column of numbers will be indicated like the second, the seventh like the third, and the eighth also like the fourth with a two-colour-appearing letter. But when there are none of those signs which we mentioned earlier either in the numbers or in the explanation of history, the ninth column which was annotated is referred to. However, not all of these requirements are needed when the number of columns is less.] From this I think that it is necessary to warn in advance that, exactly as they have been written, the variety of colours should also be preserved; lest someone suppose that so great an effort has been attempted for a meaningless pleasure of the eyes, and, when he flees from the tedium of writing, inserts a labyrinth of error. For this has been devised so that the strips of the kingdoms, which had almost been mixed together because of their excessive proximity on the page, might be separated by the distinct indication of bright red, and so that the same hue of colour which earlier parchment pages had used for a kingdom, would also be kept on later ones. And I am not unaware that there will be many people who from their customary desire to detract from all things, will sink their fangs into this volume, which cannot be avoided unless one writes nothing at all: they will misrepresent dates, change the order, dispute events, split syllables, and, because it is generally customary that this should happen, they will ascribe the negligence of copyists to authors.

Although I would be within my right to repel those that it displease, by saying let them not read, in short I prefer to send them away satisfied, so that they can both assign the fidelity of the Greek things to their own author, and what new matters we have inserted, they may recognize that they have been extracted from other very learned men. And indeed it should be known that I have filled the role of both translator and in part writer, because I have both most faithfully expressed the Greek, and I have added some things which seemed to me to have been omitted, in Roman history especially which Eusebius, the originator of this book, seems to me, not to have been thus ignorant, for he was most learned, but since he was writing in Greek, to have skipped over those things less necessary to his countrymen. And so from Ninus and from Abraham down to the captivity of Troy is a simple translation from the Greek: from Troy down to the 20th year of Constantine many things are added or modified, which we have carefully excerpted from Tranquillus 6, and the other illustrious historians: but from the aforementioned year of Constantine down to the 6th consulate of the Emperor Valens and second of the Emperor Valentinian, is totally my own.

Contented with this end-point, I have reserved the rest of the time of Gratian and Theodosius for the pen of a broader history; not that I have been afraid to write freely and truly about living persons -- for the fear of God drives out the fear of men -- but because while the barbarians are still raging here in our land, all things are uncertain. The Translated Preface of Eusebius.⁷ The most learned men -- Clement, and Africanus, and Tatian from among ourselves, and Josephus and Justus from among the Jews, all while compiling books of ancient history -- have related that Moses, of the Hebrew nation, who first of all the prophets before the advent of the Lord Saviour expounded the divine laws in the sacred texts, lived in the time of Inachus. Again, Inachus precedes the Trojan War by 500 years: indeed from among the pagans, that impious man Porphyry in the fourth book of his work which he with pointless labour concocted against us, affirms that Semiramis, who reigned over the Assyrians 150 years before Inachus, lived after Moses. And so, according to him, Moses is discovered to be older than the Trojan War by almost 850 years. When these things are taken into consideration, I have considered that it is necessary to search after the truth more diligently, and on account of this in a prior book 8 I have noted in advance for myself, as a sort of source for a future work, all the dates of kings, of the Chaldaeans, Assyrians, Medes, Persians, Lydians, Hebrews, Egyptians, Athenians, Argives, Sicyonians, Lacedaemonians, Corinthians, Thessalians, Macedonians, and Latins who afterwards were called Romans. In the present book, however, putting each set of dates in turn in a column side by side, and counting the years of each of the nations, in order that this was contemporary with that, I have thus joined them together in careful order. Nor has it escaped me that differing numbers of years are to be found in the Hebrew books, either more or less, depending on how it seemed to the translators; and I would rather follow that which a great number of copies have guaranteed. But let anyone who wishes calculate it: he will find that, in the time of Inachus who they say first ruled at Argos, Israel was patriarch of the Hebrews, from whom the twelve tribes of the Jews drew the name of Israel. Moreover it is clear that Semiramis and Abraham were contemporaries: for Moses, although he might be younger than the aforementioned, nevertheless is understood to be older than all of those whom the Greeks consider most ancient: that is, Homer and Hesiod, and the Trojan War, and much older than Hercules, Musaeus, Linus, Chiron, Orpheus, Castor, Pollux, Aesculapius, Liber, Mercury, Apollo, and all the other gods of the nations, and sacred figures, and oracles, even the deeds of Jupiter, whom Greece placed at the summit of divinity. I say that all of these whom we have enumerated, we prove that they also lived after Cecrops Diphyes, the first king of Attica.

Moreover the present history shows that Cecrops is coeval with Moses and precedes the Trojan War by 350 years. Which, lest it should seem doubtful to someone, the following reasoning will thus prove.

Christ was born in the 42th year of the rule of Augustus. He started to preach in the 15th year of Tiberius. If someone therefore, counting backward through the number of years, seeks the second year of Darius, king of the Persians, in whose reign the Temple in Jerusalem which had been destroyed by the Babylonians was rebuilt, he will find 548 years from Tiberius back to Darius. Of course the second year of Darius was in the first year of the 45th Olympiad, and the 15th year of Tiberius occurred in the 201st Olympiad. Therefore there were 137 Olympiads between Darius and Tiberius, 548 years, counting four years in one Olympiad.

Then in the second year of Darius the 70th year from the destruction of the Temple is completed, from which 64 Olympiads, or 256 years, are counted backwards to the first Olympiad; the years are counted similarly backwards, from the aforementioned year of the destruction of the temple to the 50th year of Uzziah, King of the Jews, in whose reign Isaiah and Hosea lived. And so, the first olympiad occurred in the age of Isaiah and the rest who prophesied with him.

Again, if you proceed from the first Olympiad to earlier times and until the capture of Troy, you will discover 406 years, which we both set out in an earlier little work, and which the most careful history of the Greeks records.

Likewise according to the Hebrews from the aforementioned year of Uzziah and the times of Isaiah the prophet, back until Samson and the third year of the Judge Labdon, you will count 406 years. This however is the Samson, whom the descendants of the Jews report was similar to Hercules in bodily strength, and they seem to me to have not much time separating them, if indeed both lived around the time of the capture of Troy.

After these again go back to earlier things, and, when you have completed 329 years going back, you will find Cecrops Diphyes of the Greeks, and Moses of the Hebrews. For from the 45th year of Cecrops until the capture of Troy, and from the 80th year of the age of Moses, in which he led the people of Israel from Egypt, until Labdon and Samson, the judges, there are counted 329 years. And so, without any ambiguity, Moses, and Cecrops who was the first king of the Athenians, lived at the exact same time.

Again this is that Cecrops Diphyes the indigene, in whose reign the first olive tree grew on the summit, and the city of the Athenians drew its name from the name of Minerva. He first of all of them called upon Jupiter, and discovers idols, set up an altar, burned sacrificial victims; never before had such things been seen in this manner in Greece. And then other miraculous things, which are boasted about among the Greeks, are indicated much later than the years of Cecrops; however if they are later than Cecrops, they are consequently also later than Moses, who existed with Cecrops. For it was after him that it is written that there was the flood in the time of Deucalion, the fire in the time of Phaethon, Erichthonius the son of Hephaestus and Earth, Dardanus who founded Dardania: about whom Homer said: Whom Jupiter first fathered in the heavenly citadel; 9 also the abduction of Libera and Europa, the rites of Ceres and Isis, the sanctuary in Eleusis, the corn of Triptolemus, the kingdom of Tros; Of whom Ganymede was born, who, carried off to the stars, The gods wished to pour out the wines of great Jupiter at their meals. 10 At this time also Tantalus and Tityus lived, and Apollo was born. For Latona, consort of Jupiter, flees because of Tityus; however of Latona and Jupiter Apollo is the son; and after these events Cadmus comes to Thebes, Who fathered Semele, from whom the most beautiful progeny, Liber, emerged and brought a wholly deserving delight by his birth. 11

Again, Liber and the rest whom we will bring in next, lived 200 years after the year of Cecrops; Linus certainly, and Zetus, and Amphion, Musaeus, Orpheus, Minos, Perseus, Aesculapius, the twin Castors, Hercules, with whom Apollo served Admetus, after which the fall of the Trojan city happened: which Homer follows after a long interval; but Homer is found to have lived long before Solon or Thales of Miletus and the others who together with them have been called the Seven Sages.

Then Pythagoras appeared, who wished it to be said that he was not a Sage, as those earlier, but a philosopher, that is, a lover of wisdom; Socrates followed him, who taught Plato; by whom philosophy was divided into its well-known parts. We shall put each of these in their place according to the order of the following history.

Therefore Moses preceded all those whom we have recorded above: for it has been shown that he lived in the age of Cecrops.

However, returning to earlier events, from the 80th year of Moses and the exodus of Israel from Egypt, until the first year of Abraham, you will find 505 years, which you will count similarly from the 45th year of Cecrops back to Ninus and Semiramis, leaders of the Assyrians. Of course Ninus, son of Belus, was the first to reign over all Asia, the Indies excepted. And so it is clear that Abraham was born in the age of Ninus, at least according to the figure the Hebrew account offers, which is shorter than the usual version.

Indeed, if you do not falter in carefulness and when you have diligently pored over the Divine Scripture, from the birth of Abraham back to the Flood of the whole earth, you will find 942 years, and from the flood back to Adam, 2242, in which no completely Greek, or barbarian or, to speak in general terms, gentile history is found. That is why the present little work traces the later years from Abraham and Ninus down to our time; and starts by displaying Abraham of the Jews, Ninus and Semiramis of the Assyrians, because at this time Athens was not a city, nor had the kingdom of the Argives received its name, as the Sicyonians alone were flourishing in Greece: they say that among them, in the days of Abraham and Ninus, Europs was the second to have reigned. Why we too believe this will be demonstrated in the following. For if you diligently count out from the distant age of Ninus until the capture of Troy, you will find 834 years: likewise in Sicyon from the 22nd year of King Europs, until the aforementioned period, you will find those same 834 years: among the Hebrews also from the nativity of Abraham until Labdon and Samson the Judges of the Hebrews, who led the people in the times of the Trojans, you will equally count 834 years: likewise among the Egyptians from the age of Ninus and Semiramis, in which time the 16th dynasty of Thebes was already ruling over the Egyptians, until the 20th dynasty, and King Thuorin of Egypt, who is called Polybus by Homer, in whose reign also Troy was captured, the aforementioned 834 years are also computed: therefore, consequently, we place at the head of our little book, at one and the same date, Abraham, Ninus, Europs, and the Theban Egyptians: and as we said earlier, the text following demonstrates that these things are so.

Now care must be taken to divide the years of the Hebrews into four periods of time;

- from Abraham until Moses;

- from Moses until the first building of the Temple;
- from the first building of the Temple until its second rebuilding;
- and from its rebuilding until the coming of Christ the Lord. Of course, from the nativity of Abraham until Moses and the exodus of Israel from Egypt, there are counted 505 years: from Moses down to Solomon and the first building of the temple, 479 years, according, however, to the smaller number which the third book of Kings contains, -- for according to the volume of Judges 600 years are computed -- from Solomon however down to the restoration of the temple, which happened under Darius, king of the Persians, 512 years are counted: further, from Darius down to the preaching of our Lord Jesus Christ, and down to the 15th year of Tiberius the first citizen of the Romans, 548 years are completed. And so likewise 2044 years happen from Abraham until the 15th year of Tiberius:
- similarly 505 years from Ninus and Semiramis until Moses and Cecrops;
- from Cecrops until the capture of Troy, 329 years;
- from the capture of Troy until the first olympiad, 406 years;
- from the first olympiad until the second year of Darius and the restoration of the temple, 256 years;
- from the second year of Darius and the restoration of the temple until the 15th year of Tiberius Caesar, 548 years.

Likewise there happen from Ninus and Semiramis until the 15th year of Tiberius 2044 years, which we have also shown counted from Abraham until Tiberius: from the 15th year of Tiberius, however, until the fourteenth year of Valens,¹² in which he died, there are numbered 351 years. And so there are in all 2395 years of this history.

And, in case the long series of numbers should perhaps cause some confusion, we have separated the whole mass of years into decades, which, gathering together out of the histories of the individual nations in turn, we have placed opposite each other, so as to provide a simple method of discovering in which era, Greek or barbarian, the prophets, kings, and priests of the Hebrews existed, likewise when falsely-believed gods of various nations existed, when demi-gods, when any city was founded, concerning illustrious men, when philosophers, poets, princes, and writers of various works appeared, and any other ancient event, if it was thought deserving of recording. All of which we shall put in their proper places with the greatest brevity.

Footnotes 1. Word-order reversal, for emphasis.

2. instrumenta. Lewis & Short: "II.Trop. A. Of writings... B.Ornament, embellishment: felices ornament haec instrumenta libellos.

Ov. Tr. 1,1,9."

3. Jerome is here referring to the parallel translations from Hebrew into Greek in the columns of Origen's Hexapla. The separate columns circulated separately.

4. Horace.

5. This paragraph is a later interpolation. One family of the manuscripts was reformatted by a later scribe, who wrote this paragraph as an explanation of the new format. His system placed all the columns of numbers on the left, and all the text at the right. Which column of numbers the text related to is controlled by colour coding. This paragraph describes the system, albeit obscurely. Manuscript L is of this family, and this translation is provisional, pending a visit to the British Library.

1. number=bright red; first letter of text=bright red 2. number=? (Probably black); first letter of text=mixed red/black 3. number=? (probably bright red); first letter of text=middle bright red , rest black 4. number=black; first letter of text=bright red 5. number=red; first letter of text=mixed red/black

6. Like #2

7. Like #3 8. Like #4, two colour 9. number=black; first letter of text=black The 'probables' I get by alternating the colour of the numbers.

6. Suetonius.

7. Translated by St. Jerome from Greek into Latin.

The headings in this page are Jerome's.

8. Eusebius' Chronicle is found in Armenian translation in two books. Book 1 is the Chronography and consists of lists of kings and how long they reigned, for various kingdoms. Book 2 is the Chronological Canons, which is the table of dates and events. Jerome only translated book 2, and the two books seem to have circulated separately. Even in the manuscripts of the Armenian version there is evidence of this, since the end of book 1 and the start and end of book 2 are missing. This shows that the 2-book combination is copied from two books which circulated by themselves, since the end of book 1 and start of book 2 should be very well protected in the middle of a volume, if they are together. This preface by Eusebius to book 2 is otherwise lost, being in the missing portion in the Armenian.

9. Homer, Iliad 20.215 10. Homer, Iliad 20.231-235.

11. Homer, Odyssey 11.576-582.

12. Clearly Jerome has altered something here, since Eusebius ended his text in the reign of Constantine. Probably this sentence originally referred to the 20th year of Constantine, and Jerome updated it to the end of his own version, the death of Valens.

All material on this page is in the public domain

- copy freely. Translated by Roger Pearse and friends from the text of Fotheringham (1905). See introduction for details.

Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts

Commentary on Amos

Three Books of Commentaries on the Prophet Amos by Saint Jerome of Stridon, Priest

Latin Text from public domain Migne Editors, Patrologiae Cursus Completus.

Translated into English using ChatGPT.

Table of Contents

- Prologue
- Book One
- 1:1
- 1:2
- 1:3
- 1:4
- 1:5
- 1:6-8
- 1:9-10
- 1:11-13
- 1:14-15
- 2:1-3
- 2:4-5
- 2:6-8
- 2:9-11
- 2:12
- 2:13-16
- 3:1-2
- 3:3-8
- 3:9-10
- 3:11
- 3:12-13

- 3:14-15
- Book Two
- 4:1-3
- 4:4-6
- 4:7-8
- 4:9
- 4:10
- 4:11
- 4:12-13
- 5:1-2
- 5:3
- 5:4-5
- 5:6
- 5:8-9
- 5:10
- 5:11-13
- 5:14-15
- 5:16-17
- 5:18-20
- 5:21-22
- 5:23
- 5:24
- 5:25-27
- 6:1
- Book Three
- 6:2-6
- 6:7-11
- 6:12-14
- 7:1-3

- 7:4-6
- 7:7-9
- 7:10-13
- 7:14-17
- 8:1-3
- 8:4-6
- 8:7-8
- 8:9-10
- 8:11-12
- 9:1
- 9:2-5
- 9:6
- 9:7-8
- 9:9-10
- 9:11-13
- 9:14-15

Prologue

The prophet Amos, who follows Joel, is the third of the twelve prophets, but he is not the same person as the father of the prophet Isaiah whom we read about. The name Amos is written with the first and last letter of his name, Aleph and Sade, and it means strong and robust. However, the name Isaiah is written with Ain and Samech, and it means a people torn away: the middle letters Mem and Vau are common to both names. But for us, who do not have such a distinction between vowels and the letter s, which has three forms in Hebrew, these and other names seem to be common, which are distinguished among the Hebrews by the diversity of the elements and their properties. Therefore, the prophet whom we now have in our hands was from the town of Thecue, which is six miles to the south from the holy Bethlehem, which gave birth to the Savior of the world; and beyond that, there is no village, not even any rural huts resembling ovens, which the Africans call mapalia. Such is the vastness of the wilderness, which extends as far as the Red Sea and the borders of the Persians, Ethiopians, and Indians. And because nothing at all grows on the dry and sandy ground, the whole area is full of shepherds, in order to compensate for the sterility of the land with a multitude of livestock. From this number of shepherds Amos was a prophet, unskilled in speech but not in knowledge. For the same Spirit of the Holy Ghost spoke through all the prophets. Hence we translate from the Hebrew.

Book One

Book One

1:1 Chapter 1 - Verse 1. The words of Amos, who was among the shepherds of Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel. However, the Septuagint, wanting to add something, interpreted it as: The words of Amos, who was among the vine-dressers of Tekoa, which he saw for Jerusalem. And it should be known that this prophet saw not for Jerusalem, which is not found at all in the Hebrew text, but concerning Israel, that is, In the days of King Uzziah of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, king of the ten tribes called Israel, who were in Samaria, there were prophets. Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion also translated this. Therefore, the first prophet Hosea speaks to the ten tribes called Ephraim, Samaria, the house of Joseph, and Israel. The second prophet Joel, prophesies to Jerusalem and the two tribes called Judah and Jerusalem, with no mention at all of Israel. The third Amos, not at all in Jerusalem, which was ruled by the tribe of Judah, but in Israel in Samaria, preaches. This can be proven from the whole volume of his work, and especially from what is written: Amaziah the priest of Bethel sent to Jeroboam the king of Israel, saying: Amos has rebelled against you in the midst of the house of Israel (Amos VII, 10). And shortly after, Amaziah said to Amos: You see, go, flee to the land of Judah, and eat bread there, and there you shall prophesy, and in Bethel you shall not prophesy anymore, for it is the sanctity of the king and the house of the kingdom. To whom Amos responded: I was not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but a keeper of sycamore trees, gathering their fruit. And the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and said to me: Go, be a prophet to my people Israel; not to Judah and Jerusalem, as is wrongly stated by the Greeks and Latins, but to Israel, that is, the ten tribes, which had retained their original name due to the multitude of the people. And in the place where the Seventy translated, in Accaron, Theodotion placed the Hebrew word itself: in Nokedim (), which Aquila rendered as ἐν ποιμνιοτρῆσιν, that is, in pastures: Symmachus and the fifth edition rendered it ἐν τοῖς ποιμῶσιν, that is, among shepherds. And I think because of the similarity of the letters Daleth and Res, they were also deceived here, for Nocedim, as if it were Nocerim: and from there they placed the word Accarim, although the letter Nun at the beginning of the name leaves no excuse for the error. However, I have not read that Accarim is Hebrew until now. And those who interpret sterilitatem, that is, στερωσιν, express more the city of Accaron, which belongs to the Philistines, than Accarim, which is not found at all. Therefore, the sermons of Amos, who was from the town of Thecue and among the number of shepherds, are contained in this volume, because both the region and the message are pastoral. He saw these sermons concerning Israel, not with physical eyes, but with the vision of the mind, since the prophets were called seers; otherwise, the sermons are not seen according to the letter, but heard. Hence, the people saw the voice of God, and Moses spoke silently to the Lord when he said to him: Why do you cry out to me (Exodus 14:15)? In the New Testament also we read: That which we have seen with our eyes, and have heard with our ears, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life (John 1:1). For the Word of God, which is in itself invisible, is seen and touched by the apostles with their own hands. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (John 1:14). But Jehoiada's son, the king of Israel, saw these words two years before the earthquakes. When Sardanapalus reigned among the Assyrians and the cities of Cilicia, about whom the renowned orator said: More shameful in vices than in name. And among the Latins, Procas Silvius, to whom Amulius succeeded in the kingdom after expelling his brother Numitor. After killing him, Romulus, with the hand of shepherds and outlaws gathered, founded the city of his own name. But this is Ozias, king of Judah, surnamed Azariah, who, attempting to claim the priesthood which was not due to him, was struck with leprosy on his forehead (2 Chronicles 26), when the wrath of the Lord not only punished him for his sacrilege but also manifested an earthquake, which the Hebrews then commemorate. But Jeroboam is not the son of Nabath, who made Israel sin (III Kings XII), but the son of Joas, the son of Joathan (also called Joachaz and Joachan), the grandson of the same Jehu, under whom Hosea, Joel, and Amos prophesied. Therefore, Ozias is interpreted as 'the power of the Lord,' that is, authority or strength of the Lord. Jeroboam is 'the judgment of the people,' that is, the judgment or cause of the people, although some, reading the Greek letter chi, suspect it means 'the division of the people.' Joas' time, that is, the delay of the Lord, or temporal existence. Therefore, the words of Amos, at the time when the people of Israel were separated from the Lord and served golden calves, or when they were separated from the kingdom of the Davidic line, they sang with a clear voice like the sound of a trumpet, which is interpreted as Thecue. And they sang over Israel, who once was most upright before God, that is, most righteous before God. In the days of King Uzziah of Judah, when, due to the temple and the Holy of Holies, the strength of the Lord remained and ruled over a people who confessed. The name Jeroboam, who arose for the division of the people, signifies that Israel remained in idolatrous error for a long time before the captivity completely shook them, which in two years showed the double distress of the ten tribes and the two, so that those who were willing to do penance would no longer feel the shaking of the earth.

These, most beloved Pammachus, I have gathered together in a long discourse as a brief reminder, interpreting the sayings of the prophet Amos, that you, through the interpretation of your name, demonstrate yourself to be a fighter in every art of battling against the devil and opposing powers. I have also promised an explanation of the prophets Hosea and Zechariah to myself and other holy men, but most of all to your holy and venerable mother, Paula, while she was alive. And I will not greatly err in my promise, if I deliver to my son what I have promised to his mother. But now it is time for me to explain in detail, using the words of the prophet himself, what I think.

1:2

(Verse 2.) And he said: The Lord from Zion shall roar, and from Jerusalem he shall give his voice. And the pastures of the shepherds have shone, and the top of Carmel has dried up. LXX: And he said: The Lord from Zion has spoken, and from Jerusalem he has given his voice, and the pastures of the shepherds have shone, and the top of Carmel has dried up. It is natural that all artisans of their craft speak with examples, and each one brings forth the likeness of the one in which he has spent his time: for example, the sailor and the navigator compare their sadness to a storm; they call damage, shipwreck; they call their enemies, adverse winds. Once again, it names prosperity and joy, the most gentle breeze and favorable winds; calm seas and waters, like peaceful fields. From the opposite direction, the soldier signifies whatever he says, shield, sword, armor, helmet, spear, bow, arrow, death, wound, and victory. In the mouths of philosophers, Socrates and Plato are always present, Xenophon and Theophrastus, Zeno and Aristotle, Stoics and Peripatetics. Orators praise Lysias and Hyperides, Pericles and Demosthenes, Gracchi, Catos, Ciceros, and Hortensius in heaven. If they are epic poets, they frequently mention Homer and Virgil; if they are lyric poets, they celebrate Pindar and Flaccus. Why were these things said? To show that even the prophet Amos, who was a shepherd of shepherds, not in cultivated places with planted trees and vineyards, or certainly among green forests and meadows, but in the vastness of the wilderness, where the fierceness of lions and the killing of livestock dwell, made use of his skill in words, in order to mention the terrible and fearful voice of the Lord, the roaring of lions, and the growling of a lion. Comparing the destruction of the Israelite cities to the solitude of shepherds and the dryness of mountains: The Lord, he says, will roar from Zion, and from Jerusalem he will give his voice. In Hebrew, to roar is called Jesag: Beautifully he will roar from Zion, and from Jerusalem he will give his voice, where the temple and the religion of God were, in order to teach that God is not present in the cities of Israel, that is, in Bethel and Dan, where the golden calves were, nor in the capital city of Samaria and Jezreel, but rather in the true religion, which was practiced at that time in Zion and Jerusalem. With the roaring of Zion, and giving his voice from Jerusalem (for the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem), all the shepherds and kings of Israel have mourned, and the peak of Carmel has dried up, which once abounded with joyful pastures. Carmel is called in Greek and Latin, but in Hebrew it is called Chermel: and there are two mountains, which are called by this name. One in which Nabal was, Carmelus, the husband of Abigail to the South. According to Ptolemy, the place formerly called Acho, which is close to the sea, where the prophet Elias obtained rain on bended knees (1 Kings 15). If therefore it refers to Chermel, where Nabal lived, it is more suitable for the flocks of shepherds, because it is close to the wilderness (3 Kings 18). But if it refers to that place which is near the coast, it pertains to the kings and the pride of the kings of Israel, whom he says are to be devastated like the desert mountains when captivity is imminent. Otherwise, when the Lord from Zion and Jerusalem, from the watchtower of the Church, which is situated on the mountain and cannot be hidden, and in which the vision of peace is, has given through the old and new Testament, and through the ecclesiastical teachers his voice, and has sounded as a clear trumpet, then all the beautiful things of the shepherds, that is, the doctrine of the heretics, which seemed composed in beautiful language, and the knowledge of circumcision (for this is interpreted as Chermel, through which they promise themselves the knowledge of the true circumcision), will mourn and wither, and thousands of peoples, who are called flocks because of their simplicity, will wither suddenly with drought.

1:3

(Version 3.) Thus says the Lord: Because of three transgressions of Damascus, and because of four, I will not revoke the punishment; because they have threshed Gilead with threshing sledges of iron. LXX: And the Lord said: Because of three transgressions of Damascus, and because of four, I will not turn away from them; because they have threshed Gilead with threshing sledges of iron. Regarding the tribes, which are called Arsoth in Hebrew (אֲרֹשֹׁתַּיִם), and have been translated by Theodotion as iron wheels, which we have interpreted as iron sledges, the Seventy have translated as threshing sledges of iron. But there is a type of wagon that is propelled by iron and toothed wheels, which, after the grain has been beaten out, crushes the straw in the threshing floor, and grinds the straw into food for animals due to the scarcity of hay. Furthermore, in the Hebrew language, where it is written Benadad (בְּנֵי אֲדָד), and it is one name, the Seventy translated it as the sons of Ader, Res and Daleth by the similarity of false elements. In that place also where we said, concerning the house of pleasure, which is called Mebbeth Eden (מִבֶּטֶת עֵדֶן) in Hebrew, and they all translated it similarly, the Seventy translated it as from the men of Haran, considering Daleth as the middle letter of the name Res, and according to their custom, placing the Greek letter Chi (Χ) before the first Hebrew letter Ain. They also translated Cyrene, which is called Cira in Hebrew (צִירָא), that is, called or named, because of the similarity of the word, because Chares (Χα■ρης) can be called a calling, and they understood it as a proper name, an appellative. We have briefly mentioned the reasons for different translations: now let us move on to the meaning of what has been said. First, the word of God is directed against Damascus, where Azazel was reigning, who at that time when Amos was prophesying, was severely oppressing Israel, that is, the ten tribes: to such an extent that, after King Ahab of Israel was defeated in Ramoth-gilead, he would slaughter and crush all the region that was called Gilead, and had passed into the possession of the half tribe of Manasseh, like the wheat of tribulation in the threshing floors. What the prophet Elisha says more fully in the book of Kings, where we read: And he stood with him, and was troubled even to the reddening of his face, and the man of God wept. To whom Hazael said: Why does my lord weep? And he answered: Because I know the evil that you will do to the children of Israel. You will burn their fortified cities with fire, and you will slay their young men with the sword, and you will dash their little ones against the stones, and you will rip up their pregnant women. And Azazel said, 'For what am I, your servant, but a dog, that I should do this great thing?' And Elisha said, 'The Lord has shown me that you will be king over Syria.' (2 Kings 8:11ff). And what follows in the prophet.

1:4

(Ver. 4.) And I will send fire into the house of Azael, and it shall devour the houses of Benadad. And I will break the bars of Damascus, and I will destroy the inhabitants from the plain of idols. LXX: And I will send fire into the house of Azael, and it shall devour the foundations of the son of Ader, and I will break the bars of Damascus, and I will destroy the inhabitants from the plain, being. Give understanding, that Azael, when Ozia and Jeroboam reigned, was already dead in Syria, and his son Benadad succeeded him in the kingdom, from whom all the later kings of Aram, that is, Syria and Damascus, took the name Benadad. He did not say beautifully, I will send fire into Azazel, but into the house of Azazel, that is, into his royal house, over which Ben-hadad, his son, was ruling at that time. And I will break down, he said, the bars of Damascus, and I will destroy the inhabitants of the idolatrous field. Namely, all the strength (or multitude) of the Syrians, which, like a kind of cart and bars, repelled the attacks of their enemies. Now the idolatrous field, which is called Aven in Hebrew, is interpreted by the Septuagint and Theodotion as meaning "iniquity"; Symmachus and the fifth edition translated it as "useless," in order to show the useless help of idols, since the people of Damascus will be captured when the Assyrians come. For we read that Theglathphalasar, king of Assyria, after killing King Rezin of Damascus, of whom Isaiah speaks, transferred all the people of Syria, who were called Aram, to Cyrene, and for this reason it is said now (2 Kings 16).

1:5

(Verse 5) Holding the scepter from the house of pleasure, and the people of Syria will be transferred to Cyrene, says the Lord. LXX: And I will cut off the tribe from men from Haran, and the captive people of Syria will be led, says the Lord. So that it is understood, I will crush and destroy, and the people of Syria will be transferred to the farthest borders of Egypt. And that which is said at the beginning: Concerning the three sins of Damascus, and concerning the four, shall I not (Alternate: shall I not indeed) turn away from him, and according to the Septuagint, shall I not (Alternate: shall I not indeed) reject him, that is, the people of Damascus, or Aram, that is, Syria, can have this meaning according to the history: If they had persecuted my people once, or even twice, I would have forgiven them. But now, since they have become cruel for a third and fourth time, to the point of driving captive multitudes with iron chariots, should I not punish them with blows? Doesn't the mercy of my mother turn away from him? But according to tropology, we can say this: the first sin is to think of evil things. The second is to find rest in perverse thoughts. The third is to carry out what you have decided in your mind. The fourth is not to repent after the sin and to take pleasure in your own wrongdoing. All heretics do this, who not only think and do evil things, but deceive the innocent with their teachings, and, following the example of the Damascenes, who interpret that they drink blood, they also drink the blood of those they have deceived. The Lord says of such great sins: is it not fitting that I punish them with blows and turn my face away from them? For those who do not see the truth of my teachings, let them be overwhelmed with darkness by the turning away of my countenance. Indeed, they have contrived and dissected in iron chariots the pregnant women of Gilead. These are the pregnant ones of whom the Lord speaks in the Gospel: Woe to the pregnant and nursing women in those days (Luke 21:23). The souls of believers are pregnant, who at the beginning of faith can say: We have conceived and given birth from your fear, O Lord (Is. XXVI, 17, 18); and if they are not equipped with iron and toothed wagons (of which the Psalmist says: The teeth of men are their weapons and arrows (Ps. LVI, 5), cut and ironed, they can also say what follows: We have given birth, we will bring forth the spirit of your salvation upon the earth. At the same time, consider that they cannot cut down men of perfect age; but those who are still in the womb, or who are unable to take solid food and are still being nourished by milk, belong to infancy. Now, these pregnant women are from Gilead, which means translation or transmigration of the testimony. For they have migrated from the Church into heresy, and have transferred the testimonies of God, which they had previously received, to foreign boundaries. But the Lord will send fire into the house of Azel, which they themselves call Azel (), that is, the vision of God: a fire that will consume the wood and straw in them, and devour the foundation of the son of Ader. For we ought to say also according to the Septuagint, lest we seem to have proposed them in vain: Ader is translated as 'elegance', which we can also call 'beauty': because every heretic discourse is well-arranged and composed, and has the beauty of secular eloquence, it deceives the listeners more easily. However, the beams of Damascus, like very strong and firm bolts, are to be understood as those who are trained in the art of dialectic and the arguments of philosophers. For example, the door is called, which conceived and gave birth to false doctrine, like Arius in Alexandria: its bolts and strongest bars, Eutychius and Eunomius, try to strengthen with syllogisms and enthymemes, even with sophisms, and pseudo-reasonings and arguments, which they have poorly invented compared to others. And when the bolts of Damascus are broken and shattered, he will also destroy the inhabitants of the field, which is interpreted as labor or pain. For all heretics have made great effort and endured great pain in seeking some order and consistency in their heresy. And I will destroy the tribe of Charram, which in our language means 'holes.' For they do not have windows, through which the light of truth may enter; but rather they have certain holes and hidden passages, through which harmful and impure creatures may enter. And the captive Aram shall be led away, a proud and lofty people, who have exalted themselves and made promises of heavenly things to themselves, so that they may be captured in their own salvation. And they shall be transferred to Cyrene, according to the Hebrew, where the calling of God is.

1:6-8

(Verse 6 and following) Thus says the Lord: For three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will not revoke its punishment; because they carried into exile a whole people to deliver them up to Edom. So I will send fire upon the wall of Gaza, fire which shall devour its strongholds. I will cut off the inhabitants from Ashdod, and him who holds the scepter from Ashkelon; I will turn my hand against Ekron; and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, says the Lord. LXX: Thus says the Lord: Because of the three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will not turn away from it, because they carried away captive the captivity of Solomon, to shut them up in Idumea, and I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, and it shall devour the foundations thereof, and I will cut off the inhabitant from Azotus, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ascalon, and I will turn my hand against Accaron, and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord. In the third and fourth generation, the Lord threatens to repay the sins of the fathers in the Law to the children: not in the equality of judgment, so that some may sin and others may be punished, but by the magnitude of His mercy, as He always waits for repentance: and what is committed in the first generation, He does not correct and amend until the third and fourth generation comes. The apostle Paul also speaks of this to the Romans: Or do you despise the riches of His kindness and forbearance and patience, not knowing that the kindness of God leads you to repentance? But in accordance with your hardness and unrepentant heart you are treasuring up wrath for yourself on the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will repay each one according to his works (Romans 2:4-6). Therefore, what He says is this: I have waited a long time for them to repent, and for this reason I did not want to punish the sinners, so that they might eventually return to health. But because they keep doing the same things for the third and fourth time, I am forced to change my mind and correct the wrongdoers with punishments. Now let us see what the Philistines and their cities have sinned, whom the Seventy always translate as foreigners; for wherever in the Old Testament we have read ■λλοφ■λους, that is, foreigners, it should not be taken as a general name for all foreign nations, but specifically as the Philistines, who are now called Palestinians. What did Gaza do to provoke the Lord to anger and vengeance? It transferred the complete captivity of the people of Judah and sold them to the Edomites, whom it had captured from the Jews. For the complete captivity, the Seventy interpreted the name of Solomon as the Hebrew word Salma (■), which means complete and perfect. Finally, Aquila translated it as ■πηρτισμ■νην and ■ναπεπληρωμ■νην; Symmachus and Theodotion as τελε■αν, which signifies not Solomon, but complete and perfect, so that no captive remains who has not been handed over to the Edomites. He threatens to send himself against the walls and buildings, or even the foundations of Gaza, in order to devour and swallow everything. And because we read in the book of Kings that there are five cities of the Philistines that were struck with plagues due to the disrespect of the Ark, after Gaza, he goes to Ashdod (1 Samuel 5), which is called Esdod in the Bible, and then to Ashkelon. With a terrifying voice, he threatens to destroy the inhabitants of Ashdod and the ruler of Ashkelon, along with the royal power or tribe of Ashkelon, so that no one remains there, not even the last generation of people who have trembling limbs supported by a ruling staff. And again he moves his hand to strike Accaron. And after enumerating four cities, he includes the remaining Philistine cities in one discourse. And the rest of the Philistines will perish: whom we must either accept as the city of Gath or all the villages that are subordinate to the aforementioned cities. According to tropology, it seems that this should be explained to us: Gaza, which is called Aza in Hebrew, signifies strength or power; Salomon, peace; Idumaeus, bloodshed and earthly; Azotus, that is, Esdod, a fire of abundance or of the father; although some, reading "dod" instead of "dor," mistakenly understand it as a fire of generation; Ascalon signifies a murderous fire or one that is suspended and weighed down; Accaron, στεῖρωσις, that is, sterility, and κρηζωσις ((Al. κρησωσις)), which means eradication. Therefore, Gaza, which boasts of its strength of knowledge and authority, is accused of imprisoning captives from the family of Solomon in Idumea. I believe these are the Jewish teachers and all those who follow the letter, do not want to receive the life-giving spirit; but whatever they interpret and understand, they want to be earthly and do not listen when the Lord speaks in parables to his disciples, saying: 'He who has ears to hear, let him hear' (Matthew 11:15), especially since the Apostle understands the clear history in two testaments (Galatians 4). One over Mount Sinai, which is Agar, and she serves with her sons: the other over Jerusalem, which is our mother. Therefore, she asserts that she will send fire onto the walls of Gaza, and all its defenses, in order to surround and protect her lies. And when she will have sent fire onto the walls, the houses or foundations of it, whatever can have strength (if it can have any), and everything built by dialectic art, will be devoured. Also, from Ashdod, which itself is foreign, she will take away its inhabitant: whose breasts are full not of milk but of fire, because she follows the letter (literal interpretation), and everything that lies about having fire as its father, its whole generation must be attributed to fires. (Hosea 9:14) And they will take the scepter, or tribe, from Ascalon, where the destructive fire is. For just as the fire of the Lord will save those whose hearts it has penetrated, so this fire that descends from heaven, like lightning, which ignites the devil's arrows, will kill whoever it strikes. He will also stretch out his hand over Accaron, where there is barrenness and uprooting. For whoever does not receive spiritual understanding, will hear through Hosea: Give them, O Lord. What will you give them? Give them a barren womb and withered breasts. And to sum up everything in one word, he says that he will destroy all the remaining Philistines, whether in the city of Gath, where the devil's winepress is, or all the other Philistines, who are also called fallen by the cup. For when they are intoxicated, they will fall and roll in their own vomit.

1:9-10

(Verse 9, 10.) Thus says the Lord: Because of three crimes of Tyre, and because of four, I will not revoke my decision, because they delivered up a complete captivity to Edom, and did not remember the covenant of brotherhood, I will send fire upon the wall of Tyre, and it will consume its palaces. LXX: Thus says the Lord: Because of three acts of impiety of Tyre, and because of four, I will not turn away from it, because they delivered up the captivity of Solomon to Edom, and did not remember the covenant of brotherhood. And I will send fire upon the walls of Tyre, and it will devour its foundations. The same three or four acts of impiety or crimes that he had charged to Damascus, Gaza, Ashkelon, and Ashdod, and to the other cities of the Philistines, he also assigns to Tyre and reproaches it for having brought to completion and perfection the captivity in Edom, of which we have spoken above: And they have not (or were not) mindful of the covenant of their brothers. We seek to know how the Tyrian brothers are related to the Jews. These brothers call them friends and connected by a bond, because Hiram, the prince of Tyre, had friendships with David and Solomon, to the extent that Hiram sent cedar wood for the construction of the Temple and palace, all the way from Joppa. And these brothers would provide grain and oil to the Tyrians, and give twenty cities in Bashan as a gift, which he refused to accept because they were full of grass (1 Kings 5, 2 Chronicles 2). He says, therefore, that he will hurl fire onto its walls and devour its buildings or foundations, which the Prophet Ezekiel mentions that King Nebuchadnezzar of the Chaldeans did in a vision of Tyre, where he says: 'He will surround you with siege works and build a siege ramp against you' (Ezek. 29:6). And again: 'King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon made his army labor hard against Tyre. Every head was shaved bald, and every shoulder rubbed bare, yet he and his army got no wages from Tyre for the labor he had spent against it' (ibid., 29:18), because his army built a siege ramp to capture Tyre, which was once an island. The history tells that Alexander the Great did the same thing to make a peninsula out of an island, which the Greeks call a chersonese. Tyrus interprets as tribulation or confinement: and all perverse doctrine tries to grasp the truth and conclude it in earthly senses, and does not remember the covenant of his brothers, which we should ascend from earthly things to heavenly ones: and the commandment is for us to inscribe the sacred Scripture in our heart in a threefold manner. But God will send fire into all the strongholds of Tyre, which will devour not only its walls, but also its foundations. We have already mentioned the captivity of Solomon, for whom it is recorded in Hebrew, as being completed and perfected.

1:11-13

(Ver. 11 and following) Thus says the Lord: For three crimes of Edom, and for four, I will not revoke my judgment; Because he pursued his brother with the sword, and violated all pity, and his anger tore at them constantly, and he kept his wrath to the end. I will send fire into Teman, and it will consume the fortresses of Bozrah. LXX: Thus says the Lord: For three crimes of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away from them, because he pursued his brother with the sword and violated the womb above the earth, and seized his horror as a testimony, and kept his fury forever. And I will send fire into Teman, and it will consume the foundations of its walls. Edom himself is the same as Esau, so named because of the cooking of red lentils, whose birthright he lost with this nourishment: he is also called Seir, hairy and rough. Hence the mountains of the Edomites are called the mountains of Seir, and in Greek language Edom is called Idumea. This one pursued his brother with a sword, namely the sons of Jacob, concerning whom it is written more fully in the blessings of Isaac, to whom Jacob was blessed first, and afterwards Esau: so that the hatred of the brothers might be preserved in their descendants, and the Idumean people would persecute their brothers to such an extent that they would not even grant passage through the holy land to those leaving Egypt; and not only did he persecute his brother with a sword, but he violated mercy, or rather according to Symmachus' interpretation, his own womb: so that he would forget his kinship, and harden the bowels of mercy, and would not know that he was his brother, and would despise the womb of Rebekah, who had given birth to twin infants in one childbirth. And what follows: And he held on to his fury, and kept his indignation until the end, he shows his ancient hatred, which was never reconciled with peace. Therefore, he threatens punishment for sins, and he said: I will send fire into Theman, which is the region of the Edomites, and it extends to the southern part, which is called Theman: this province is called not only Theman, but also Daron and Nageb, because it faces the east, south, and the African wind. And when he says, 'He shall devour the houses of Bozrah,' it does not mean, as some suppose, another city, but Edom, fortified and well-fortified, according to what we read in Isaiah: 'Who is this that comes from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? This one, beautiful in his robe, walking in the greatness of his strength' (Isaiah 63:2)? Whatever we have said about Esau and Jacob, let us apply it to the Jews and the Christian people. For they, who were earthly and bloodthirsty, persecuted the brother Jacob, who supplanted them, and took away their firstborn, and persecuted with the sword, so that they seized the possessions and wealth of believers, which we read about in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 2:4): and they violated mercy and the laws of nature, forgetting their mother Rebecca, who is interpreted as patience, and at the same time they were born in Christ: holding onto their ancient fury and anger, to this day in their synagogues they blaspheme the Christian people under the name of Nazarenes: and as long as they kill us, they want to be burned with fire. But the Lord will send fire into Theman, into the dry and deserted parts of Judaea (that are not irrigated by the rains of the prophets), and it will consume all their fortifications, even the foundations of its walls, so that with the complete collapse of all literal sense, the Church of Christ the Lord may be built upon its foundations. For misericordia, they translated the Septuagint as vulva. And for furore, they used horrorem. And for indignatione, they chose impetum, led by the ambiguity of the words: because Rehem signifies both the womb and mercy; Aphpho signifies his rage and horror; and Ebrath is said to mean both indignation and impulse. Furthermore, Armanoth (), which we have interpreted as houses, Aquila and Symmachus βῆμαις, that is, homes; Theodotius transferred the inhabitants: only seventy and here and above, they called foundations.

1:14-15

(Verse 14, 15) Thus says the Lord: For three transgressions of the Ammonites, and for four, I will not revoke the punishment, because they have ripped open pregnant women in Gilead, that they might enlarge their border. So I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, and it shall devour her strongholds, with shouting on the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind; and their king shall go into exile, he and his princes together, says the Lord. LXX: Thus says the Lord: For three transgressions of the Ammonites, and for four, I will not turn away its punishment, because they ripped open the women with child in Gilead, that they might enlarge their borders. So I will kindle a fire in the walls of Rabbah, and it shall devour its palaces, with shouting in the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind. Their king shall go into captivity, he and his priests and his princes together, says the Lord. The divine message captures the sons of Ammon, who are descendants of Lot, and who dwell in Arabia, where Philadelphia now stands. They question why, during the reign of Saul, the king of Judah, Naash, the prince of the Ammonites, ravaged Jabesh-gilead and mutilated its pregnant women in order to expand his territory and subdue all of Gilead with his empire (1 Samuel 11). Therefore, God threatens to kindle a fire on the walls of Rabbah, the capital city of the Ammonites, so that its houses may be devoured amidst the clamor and wailing of the conquering army. This will happen on a day of turmoil and whirlwind, when its captives are led away as captives by Nebuchadnezzar. The idol of the Ammonites, called Molech or their king, will be carried off to Assyria, and its princes or priests will also be taken captive. Priests are not recognized in Hebrew, but rather princes. So the Seventy priests were added, so that if you want to know who those princes are, you will listen to the priests. However, there is a difference between the cruelty of Damascus and the sons of Ammon, because they shattered the pregnant women of Gilead in iron carts or in iron saws: but these (priests) dismembered the pregnant women of Gilead in order to expand their territory. In Damascus, those who drink blood are deemed heretics, who have not only plundered the people of God from the Church but have also shattered them and chewed them with iron teeth, about whom it is written: Why do they devour my people as if eating bread? (Ps. LII, 5). Among the sons of Ammon, which is interpreted as the people of mourning, or my people, we receive the schismatics, who indeed separate the deceived multitude from the Church of God, and they break and divide the ignorant souls, who have recently conceived the word of Christ: yet they do not do this with cruelty, by which heretics slaughter any deceived individuals, but by remaining in the same rule of faith, they desire to expand their boundaries and send the name of glory to future generations. Therefore the Lord threatens that he will burn the walls of Rabbah, that is, of the multitude, in a day of wailing and of war, of commotion and of swirling, and will lead their king, the author of the schism, captive, and make the leaders of the Church submit their necks to the yoke.

2:1-3

(Chapter 2, Verse 1 and following) Thus says the Lord: Concerning the three sins of Moab, and concerning four, I will not revoke my punishment, because he burned the bones of the king of Edom to ashes. And I will send fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the palaces of Kerioth, and Moab shall die with tumult, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet. And I will cut off the judge from the midst of her, and will slay all her princes with him, says the Lord. LXX: Thus says the Lord: Concerning the three impious acts of Moab, and concerning four, I will not turn away from them, because he burned the bones of the king of Edom to ashes. And I will send fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the foundations of its cities, and Moab shall die with affliction, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet. And I will cut off the judge from her, and will slay all her princes with him, says the Lord. Not only the sons of Ammon, but also Moab, was descended from Lot, who was the son of Abraham's brother. And in order to demonstrate that He is the Lord of all and that all souls belong to Him, who is their creator, He avenges the injustice of the king of Edom, indeed the crime that was perpetrated against him by the Moabites, that they burned his bones to ashes, and their cruelty and rage did not end even in death. The Hebrews tell that the bones of the king of Edom, who had gone up with the king of Israel, Joram, and the king of Judah, Jehoshaphat, against Moab in revenge for a grievance, were later torn apart and burned by the Moabites (2 Kings 3). Therefore, they say, God declares that he will send fire upon Moab, or the capital city of the Moabites, from which the whole province is named, or the entire province, to devour the city of Carioth, which is the name of the city. Although the Seventy translated it as 'the cities of Moab', that is, Moab: and it will perish in the sound and wailing of the conquering army, of which one is called Saon in Hebrew, the other Therua; and in the blast of the trumpet or horn, for this is what Sophar means. And when Moab shall perish, the counsel of the princes and judges shall be in vain, with the cities and leaders being overthrown. However, it is necessary to transfer the perfect captivity, or Solomon's, and conclude it in Edom, so that it may make them humble and earthly from the high and heavenly, as Gaza and Tyre are said to have done. Thus, we should not burn the bones of the king of Edom and dissolve them into ash and dust. The Jews transfer spiritual understanding into Edomite flesh, and weaken and diminish the royal sense, which is found in scripture and is most solid and firm, with certain genealogies and unnecessary traditions, reducing it to dust. And it is not only they who do this, but all heretics who want to sit God on a high and elevated throne in a human likeness, and to place feet on the ground so that they do not hang; to have a nose to smell the fragrance of good scent, eyes to see, hands to work, feet to walk, ears to hear, a mouth to speak, teeth to chew food. He who reads that Judah went in to Tamar the harlot and from her begot two sons (Gen. XXXVIII): if he follows the disgraceful letter and does not ascend to the beauty of spiritual understanding, he will burn the bones of the king of Edom. He who thinks that Hosea took a harlot as a wife (Hosea I), and understands nothing more in the statement than what is contained in simple words, he will burn the bones of the king of Edom. And therefore the Lord will send fire into Moab, which is interpreted 'from the father,' because although he was indeed born from God, yet he has forsaken him. And it shall devour cities, or towns, because it is interpreted as Carioth. Hence Cariathiarim is translated into our language as the village of the woods. And Moab shall not die in any other way except in a clamor, and a noise, and a wailing, and the blast of the trumpet, so that they may be overwhelmed in their high senses, which are compared in holy books to the blasts of the trumpet. Then the judges and princes, and all those who are in charge of earthly works, are destroyed by the divine word, and the Church commands to the teachers: \"Climb up to a high mountain, you who preach Zion, lift up your voice, you who proclaim Jerusalem\" (Isaiah XL, 9).

2:4-5

(Verse 4, 5.) Thus says the Lord: On account of three crimes of Judah, and on account of four, I will not turn them aside, because they have rejected the law of the Lord and have not kept his commandments. They have been deceived by their idols, after which their fathers walked, and I will send fire into Judah, and it will devour the palaces of Jerusalem. LXX: Thus says the Lord: On account of three impieties of the sons of Judah, and on account of four, I will not turn away from them, because they have rejected the law of the Lord and have not kept his precepts, and they have been deceived by their vanities, which their fathers followed, and I will send fire into Judah, and it will devour the foundations of Jerusalem. Regarding the other aforementioned cities and peoples, such as Damascus and Gaza, Ashkelon and Gaza, Ashkelon and Azotus, Tyre and Idumea, and the sons of Ammon and Moab, it does not reproach them for rejecting the law of God and despising His commandments; for they did not have the written law, but the natural law. Hence, it says that they violated their own bowels and the bowels of mercy, and crushed pregnant women in iron chariots, and carried away the captivity of Solomon, whether it was perfect or incomplete, and confined it in Idumea, and did not remember the covenant of their fathers, and pursued their brother with the sword. And they burst forth not only with cruelty, but with fury, to the extent that they burned the bones of the king of Idumea, and did not allow death to be the final evil for everyone. But Judas, at that time, in which these things were being said, had the religion of God and the temple and the ceremonies, who had received the law, and the precepts, and the judgments, and the testimonies, and the commandments (concerning the difference of which is more fully debated in the eighteenth psalm, and in the one hundred and eighteenth), is reproached by the Lord and convicted, and will receive worthy punishments, because he has rejected His law, and has not kept His commandments. Because he rejected and despised them, his idols deceived him in order and way. For he could not be deceived by idols before he rejected the law of the Lord and did not keep His commandments. These are the idols after which their fathers went in Egypt, fabricating the images of the Egyptian bull, and worshiping Beelphegor, and honoring Astaroth and Baalim. Therefore, the Lord threatens even Judah that he will send fire, which will devour the houses and foundations of Jerusalem: not the one in which the vision of peace dwells, but those that have risen under the name Jerusalem in different cities. Whatever we have said about Judah, it pertains to the Church, in which there is true confession, and the peace of the Lord, and the vision of truth. And therefore it is argued against him, that he has despised the law of God and has not kept his commandments, and each one, worshipping his own vices and sins, has begun to have God from whom he has been conquered, as the apostle Peter says: For by whom a person is overcome, to him he is a slave (2 Peter 2:19). The covetous worships gold, the glutton worships his belly, the lustful worships his genitals and Beelphegor: the lascivious woman, although she may live in luxury, is dead, and she worships the pleasures of Venus. Where will the Lord send fire upon Judah, and it will devour the most wicked and sinful houses, which have lost the glory of Jerusalem; at the same time, we learn that the Creator of all things does not only care for the Jews and Israel, but also for all the nations, and according to the Apostle, those who sin without the law will perish without the law, and those who commit sins under the law will be judged by the law of the Lord (Rom. II).

2:6-8

(Vers. 6 seqq.) Thus says the Lord: For three crimes of Israel, and for four, I will not revoke my word: Because they sell the just man for silver, and the poor man for a pair of sandals. They trample the heads of the weak into the dust of the earth, and they force the lowly off the path. Son and father go to the same prostitute, profaning my holy name. Upon garments taken in pledge, they recline beside every altar; and the wine of those who have been fined, they drink in the house of their God. LXX: Thus says the Lord: For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away from them: because they have sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes. They trample on the dust of the earth and crush the heads of the poor. They turn aside the way of the humble, and a man and his father go in to the same maiden to profane my holy name. They tie themselves to altars with cords and drink wine obtained through fraud in the house of their God. Therefore, he places the last of Israel, that is, the ten tribes, because we have foretold in writing nearly everything that follows in order to include the prophetic discourse of the book under one text. Therefore, first of all, their wickedness or impiety is in three or four crimes, namely, that they sold a man for money, and a just man, who is more admirable in this, that he was not overcome by poverty so as to do anything unjust: and indeed, if they had sold a poor just man compelled by the necessity of hunger for a price, there would be some excuse for the crime; but now they have sold the precious soul of a man for a most worthless thing, for shoes with which they trample on dust and dung. These people, according to the Septuagint, strike the head of the poor; according to the Hebrew, they crush the heads of the poor into the dust of the earth, and they are so filled with pride that they refuse to walk with other men. And so, not satisfied with this wicked deed, both the son and the father have violated together a young girl, in order to desecrate the holy name of God. Therefore, whatever is done shamefully is attributed to an injury against God, who says: Through you my name is blasphemed among the Gentiles (2 Peter 2:2). This is what the Apostle writes to the Corinthians: Indeed, fornication is heard among you, and such fornication as is not even among the Gentiles, so that someone may have his father's wife. And you are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he who has done this deed might be taken away from among you (II Cor. V, 1, 2). It often happens that a father defiles his son's wife, the father-in-law defiles his daughter-in-law, which is prohibited in the Law: You shall not uncover the nakedness of your father, and you shall not uncover the nakedness of your daughter-in-law (Leviticus XVIII, 7). Therefore, the letter also has the greatest usefulness if it is preserved. And because every vice, if it exceeds the boundary of shame, punishes crimes with other crimes, and it always proceeds to worse things, even over the pledged garments, ten tribes slept next to every altar, which the Hebrews interpret as follows: On the garments of those who did not want to go to idols, and they reclined on what they had forcibly taken while feasting in the idol. According to the Septuagint, there was such contempt for God that they would stretch out their garments in which they sleep or commit fornication, with ropes next to the altar, and they would make παράπετασμα, that is, veils, so that no one could see the fornicators in the Temple. And they would also serve drunkenness and lust, even buying the wine they drank not with their own labor, but with deceit. And they would do this in their god's temple, so that they would defile those whom they thought were gods with filth and debauchery. They speak these things and thus explain, those who follow a simple history. But we, who taught in Hosea, under the name of the Israelites, and Samaria, and Ephraim, and the sons of Joseph (from which tribe Jeroboam was, who separated the people from the kingdom of David and Jerusalem, and the temple of God), are understood to signify heretics: even now, after Judah and Jerusalem, which is interpreted as the Church, let us understand that the prophetic discourse is directed towards heretics, who sell a holy and righteous man, but poor, for money. A poor and just man, he is an ecclesiastic, who does not have knowledge of the Scriptures, but is content with simplicity, and does the commandments that are given, of whom it is written: The poor man does not endure threats (Prov. XIII, 8). And to the Galatians: Only that we should be mindful of the poor (Gal. II, 10). All heretics do these things for wealth, and for the shoes with which they trample on the dust of the earth: for they cannot stand with bare feet on the holy ground (on which Moses and Joshua the son of Nun stood, Exod. III; Josh. V): therefore the apostles are commanded to walk with bare feet (Luke X), so that they have no possessions or skins, which pertain to the flesh), thus they strike the poor on the head. And the Savior commanded his disciples that, if perchance, because they were still in the world, some mortal thing had clung to their actions, they should shake the dust off their feet (Matt. X, Mark V). But the heretics strike the heads of the poor, although this is not written in Hebrew (Let it be read in Greek), because they have turned away from the path of the humble. That path of the humble is the one that says: I am the way, the truth, and the life (John XIV, 6), which urges us to walk in it, and it says: Come to me, all you who labor and are burdened, and I will give you rest (Matt. XI, 28). But all the leaders of the heretics swell with pride, concerning whom the Apostle also speaks: 'Lest being puffed up he fall into the judgment of the devil' (1 Timothy 3:6), who says: 'I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north' (Isaiah 14). Therefore, God resists the proud heretics, but gives grace to the humble ecclesiastics (James 4). Moreover, the son and the father entered unto a maiden, to violate and defile the holy name of God. We often read that our father is the Jewish people, as Paul says: I do not want you to be unaware, brothers, that our fathers were all under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and all were baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea (I Cor. X, 1, 2). And in another place: Ask your fathers, and they will tell you; your elders, and they will declare to you (Deut. XXXII, 7). And again: For your fathers, sons are born to you (Psal. XLIV, 17). And the Church of the Gentiles speaks: The sons of my mother fought against me (Song of Songs 1:5). Therefore we are sons, and the father is the Jewish people. We sin and commit a crime, when we enter into the observation of the Sabbath and circumcision, abolishing the ceremonies of the law with our parent, to whom the Apostle says: Behold, I Paul say to you, that if you be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing (Galatians 5:2, 4). And again: Those who are justified by the law have fallen from grace. Whoever enters the Church in such a way that he keeps the law in the gospel, he enters with the father to the virgin and commits fornication, and violates the name of the Lord. Hence those who say that they do not harm the Jews after the advent of Christ, if they believe in the Lord in such a way that they also keep the precepts of the Law, they contaminate the father and the son with one fornication. And they also tie their garments with ropes and make veils next to the altar, pretending the faith of Christ. For as many as have been baptized in Christ, have put on Christ (Galatians 3), and they oppose their garments, which have bound them with the cords of sins, to the eyes of those who see, so that their wicked deeds may not be seen: so that whoever looks at the altar may not suspect immorality. All heretics under the name of Christ do this, fornicating and obscuring the testimonies of the Scriptures with their errors and lies. Therefore, the apostles spread their garments on the colt of an ass, so that the Lord may sit more comfortably (Matthew 21), and he may trample the path adorned with the Law and the Prophets. On the contrary, heretics do not lay down their garments in the footsteps of the Savior; but they bind them next to the altar, and they pretend their sins, in order to drink the wine of deceit, or of the condemned, who, because they have departed from the Church, have been condemned. This wine is the wine of Sodom, the fury of dragons and adders, which whoever drinks it cannot be healed. But they drink the wine not in the house of God, where the temple is and Jerusalem; but in their own house of God, which they have fabricated for themselves with crafty speech.

2:9-11

(Verse 9 and following) But I destroyed the Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of cedar trees, and he was strong like an oak tree. And I destroyed his fruit from above and his roots from below. I am the one who brought you up from the land of Egypt and led you into the wilderness for forty years, so that you could possess the land of the Amorite. And I raised up prophets from among your sons and Nazirites from among your young men. LXX: But I destroyed the Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of the cedars, and he was strong as the oaks; and I destroyed his fruit from above, and his roots beneath. I brought you out of the land of Egypt, and led you forty years in the wilderness, that you might possess the land of the Amorites. And I took your sons as prophets and your young men as consecrated ones. Is it not true that you have sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of sandals? You have struck the heads of the poor, crushing them to the ground, and you have turned aside from the way of the humble. So much so that both father and son go to the same girl, defiling my holy name. Your garments are stained with the blood of the innocent and your clothes are polluted with adultery. You have bound yourselves with the chains of sin, committing adultery even in the sanctuary and joining injustice with drunkenness. You drink wine bought with foreign money in the house of your God. But on the contrary, I bestowed good things upon you in return for the evils you inflicted on me, so that I might destroy, before your presence, Seon, the king of the Amorites, who was so lofty and strong like a cedar and an oak, and I broke his fruit from above and his roots from below. I led you out of Egypt (Deut. 29), and for forty years I made you go around in circles to reach the holy land, so that you might possess the land of the Amorites, of which we have spoken before: which Moses divided to the sons of Reuben and Gad, and to half the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 32); and after so many benefits, I also added this, that I would take prophets for myself from your sons, and from your young men or chosen ones, I would make Nazirites, who the Seventy have interpreted as sanctified. And indeed, when it comes to praising God, the order of history must be preserved; but it often happens that what happened first is told last, and what is most recent is related to what came first. The seventy-seventh and one hundred and fourth psalms, where the power of signs is described, not the order, will teach us this, as well as the titles of the psalms, of which we will give just two examples: the third psalm and the fifty-first, where what happened first is narrated last, and what we read last is referred to in the beginning. For before we read in the book of Kings about Doeg the Edomite (1 Kings 21, 22), which is titled as the fifty-first psalm, how Absalom rose up against his father (2 Kings 15), which is mentioned in the title of the third psalm. And so the last Amorite was exterminated or erased, as is now first reported, and he made them go up from the land of Egypt and led them into the desert for forty years, we read about this in the beginning (2 Kings 21), which are called the last here with the order changed. Therefore, before God brought us out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, He exterminated before our face the Amorite, who is called bitter or insolent, that is, speaking, or notorious, and celebrated in frequent conversation. But this Amorite is also called Seon, an unfruitful and barren tree, not because it does not produce fruit, but because it produces bad fruit, of which it is said: Every tree that does not bear good fruit will be cut down and thrown into the fire (Matth. 3:10; 7:19). And concerning false prophets, we read: They come in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravenous wolves, by their fruits you shall know them (Matthew VII, 15, 16): namely, by their evil fruits. Therefore, whether they do not bear fruit, or they bear fruit but not good fruit: they are called fruitless trees. This is similar to Seon, about whom it is written: Now the axe is laid to the root of the trees (Luke III, 9), because he was a fruitless tree, and when the Lord struck, he was cut down, whose height is compared to that of cedars, of which we read: I have seen the wicked exalted, and lifted up as the cedars of Lebanon: and I passed by, and behold, he was not; and I sought him, and his place was not found (Psalm XXXVI, 35, 36). And he says that he passes beautifully, because he who passes from the world can say: Passing, I will see this great vision (Exod. III, 3), the cedar is removed, and the place of pride cannot be found. His strength, like that of the hardest and strongest oak tree. From which word, Philo, the most eloquent of the Hebrews, thinks that Esau is called 'δρ■ivov', that is, oaken and strong: although Esau can also be understood as 'πο■ημα', that is, a work, referring to evil deeds. About this strong and robust, the Lord speaks in the Gospel: When a strong armed man guards his courtyard, all the things he possesses are in peace; but if a stronger man comes and defeats him, he will take away all his weapons in which he trusted, and distribute his spoils. And the Lord has granted us that he would crush and take away the fruits of this Amorite Sihon, whom we have interpreted as the fruitless tree, because they were evil, so that no one, thinking them good, would eat and perish. He also cut and crushed its roots, so that nothing would grow afterward from the evil tree. The Lord Himself made us leave the world, and for forty years, which is always a number of affliction and fasting, mourning and sorrow, through tribulations and distress, to come into the holy land, so that we would possess the land of the Amorites first, and that region would become our possession, and later He would raise up Prophets from our descendants, all holy men who received the prophetic spirit, about whom we read more fully in the first Epistle to the Corinthians (I Cor. XIV). And from our young men, or chosen ones, let him take the Nazarites and the sanctified ones, who offer their souls to God as a sacrifice, and who do not touch wine that can intoxicate and disturb the state of mind, so that they may have the hair of Samson, in whose head (for the head of a man is Christ) strength and victory resided (Judges 16).

2:12

(Verse 12.) Is it not so, sons of Israel, says the Lord, that you offered wine to the Nazarenes and sent commands to the prophets, saying: Do not prophesy. Likewise, the Septuagint. I granted you so many benefits, that I would kill your enemies and give their land to you, and I would choose prophets and Nazarenes from your sons and young men, and I would consecrate them to my worship. Can you say that I have not done these things, and that I have denied my mercy towards you, by which you live? Why did you burst forth into such rage, that you would get my Nazarenes drunk with wine, whom the law commands not to drink anything that can intoxicate? (Num. VI): and you would command the prophets not to prophesy in my name. This is what the priest Amaziah of Bethel commanded the prophet Amos, whom we now have in our hands: and it was commanded by the king to Jeremiah, not to speak the words of the Lord to the people, to the extent that his words were even burned with fire. Tatianus, the leader of the Encratites, attempts to construct his heresy on this matter, stating that wine should not be drunk, since it is commanded by the law that Nazarenes should not drink wine, and now they are accused by a prophet who provides wine to the Nazarenes. If they follow the letter in all things and introduce Jewish fables into the churches of Christ, then they should also grow their hair long, abstain from eating dried and green grapes, and not approach their deceased mother and father. And if by chance they have done these things and have been overcome by human frailty or necessity, they should shave their heads, and all their days of dedication and work shall be void. But if they do not do these things, nor are they able to mix water with wine like the Jewish innkeepers, let them understand the shadows of truth, the grace of the Gospel, the necessity of the Law, and that drunkenness with which the vigor of the soul is intoxicated and overwhelmed by worldly cares, and let them command those prophets, saying: 'Do not prophesy, you who, overcome by envy, forbid learned men from speaking the word of doctrine.' And as the Lord says: 'Go and say to this people' (Is. VI, 9), they on the contrary command them not to speak in the name of the Lord, especially if the one teaching provides for the utility of the readers and listeners, not for shameful gain, fame, and boasting.

2:13-16

(Verse 13 onwards) Behold, I will roar underneath you, like a heavily loaded wagon roars with hay, and the fleet warrior shall perish, and the strong shall not retain his strength, and the mighty shall not save his soul, and the archer shall not stand, and the swift-footed one shall not be saved, and the rider of the horse shall not save his soul, and the strong of heart among the strong ones, shall flee naked on that day, says the Lord. LXX: Therefore, behold, I will roll under you like a wagon full of straw is rolled, and the swift one shall perish in flight, and the strong one shall not retain his strength, and the warrior shall not save his soul, and the archer shall not endure, and the swift-footed one shall not be able to be saved, and the horseman shall not save his soul, and his heart shall be found among the mighty, and the naked one shall flee on that day, says the Lord. With me granting benefits to you, and leading you out of the land of Egypt, and destroying the Amorite before your face, so that you could possess his land, and raising up prophets from your sons, and Nazarites from your young men, you made my Nazarites drink wine, and said to the prophets: Do not prophesy. Therefore, just as a cart is burdened with a load of straw or hay, and it screeches and makes a loud noise from afar, so I, unable to bear your sins any longer, and handing you over to the fire like straw, will cry out and say: The quick will perish in flight, whom the Hebrews understand to be Jeroboam the son of Nabath, who had previously fled to Egypt (1 Kings 11). But here we will not take the princes themselves, but their houses and offspring. And the strong will not retain his strength: strong is interpreted as Basan, who was very ready for war (3 Kings 15). And the mighty will not save his soul: they understand this as referring to Amri (or Omri) here. And the one holding a bow will not stand or sustain: they think this refers to Jehu son of Namsi (or Nemsis), who struck King Joram of Israel with an arrow (4 Kings 9). And he who is swift on his feet will not be saved: Manahen they understand, who vainly hastening directed gifts to the king of the Assyrians (2 Kings 15): And the rider of the horse will not save his life: this Phacee, the son of Romelia, they interpret, who united with Aram, that is, Syria, devastated many things under the reign of Achaz, king of Judah. And with a strong heart, he will flee naked among the strong on that day, says the Lord (Ibid.). Only Osee, who was the last king of the ten tribes, and who attempted to bring back the errant people to the worship of God (2 Kings 18), will go out as if naked from the fire. Moreover, he calls them naked because under him the ten tribes were captured. This is what the Hebrews assert, and as it has been handed down to us, we have faithfully explained it to our people. But now let us return to our own matter. God threatens to roll a cart over them, burdened with hay or straw, so that because they do not have grain to store in granaries, their hay and straw will be consumed by fire. This is the hay of which the prophet says: Let it become like the hay of buildings, which withers before it is uprooted (Ps. 128:6). And: All flesh is grass (Isaiah 40:6). But that straw is what the prophet mourns lamentably for when it catches fire, saying: Woe is me! for I have become like one who gathers straw in the harvest, and like grape clusters in the vintage, when there is no bunch to eat the firstfruit. Woe is me! my soul (added in some versions), for the kind-hearted person has perished from the earth, and there is no one who does what is right among humanity: all are judged by blood (Micah 7:1), and so on. This is hay and straw, of which the Apostle speaks: Each one's work will become manifest, for the Day will disclose it, because it will be revealed by fire. And the rolling cart, that is what we read about in Isaiah: Moab shall be trampled down as straw is trampled in the dung-pit. And in another place: I will make you like a new threshing sledge with sharp teeth; you shall thresh the mountains and crush them, and you shall make the hills like chaff. And after you have broken the mountains and hills, the swift flight shall cease, as Paul says: Do you not know that in a race all the runners compete, but only one receives the prize? So run that you may obtain it. And in another place: You were running well; who hindered you from obeying the truth (Gal. 5:7) ? And about himself, fearing, he said: Not that I have now received, or am already perfected; but I pursue, if I may apprehend, in which also I am apprehended by Christ Jesus (Phil. 3:12) . He did all these things, lest the flight from the swift be in vain: wherefore when he had now reached the end, and had received the reward of victory, he said securely: I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; as to the rest, there is laid up for me a crown of justice, which the Lord, the just judge, will render to me in that day; and not only to me, but to them also that love his coming (2 Tim. 4:7, 8) . If we flee with quickness, sin will not be able to apprehend us; but if malice binds our feet, we will speak with the prophet to God: Where shall I go from your spirit, and where shall I flee from your face (Ps. 138:7)? The Apostle speaks about wicked runners: It is not of the one who wills, nor of the one who runs, but of the one who has mercy of God (Rom. 9:16) . It follows: And the strong will not obtain his strength: not because he is strong, but because he boasts of being strong. Whether one trusts in their own strength and not in God's mercy, according to what is written: 'I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and the discernment of the discerning I will thwart' (1 Corinthians 2:19): not that true wisdom can perish, and the understanding of truth be rejected; but that the wisdom of those who consider themselves wise and trust in their own erudition may perish. Likewise, the strong or warrior who does not save his own soul is the one who does not possess the full armor of the Apostle: having a shield, but not faith; girded with a belt, but not in truth; clad in armor, but not in righteousness; wielding a sword, but not for salvation (Ephesians 6). A warrior of this sort does not sanctify battle, nor can he wage war in the name of the Lord, fighting against truth for the sake of lies. Such a warrior cannot say: Blessed be the Lord my God, who teaches my hands to fight and my fingers to war. My mercy and my refuge (Ps. CXLIII, 1). The heretics also have archers who, in vain, try to draw the bow, they cannot withstand the arrow of the Lord, as spoken by Isaiah: But I said, 'I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for nothing and vanity' (Isa. XLIX, 2). These are the archers, of whom David also sings: Look, the sinners have bent their bow, they have prepared their arrows in the quiver, to shoot at the upright in heart in the darkness (Ps. X, 2). And the swift (he says) will not be saved by his feet, who runs through the testimonies of the Scriptures because of the sharpness of his wit, and tries to oppress the truth with the eloquence of speakers or with the sophisms of the dialecticians, and is hindered in it and falls, because he trusts not in God but in his own feet. The horse also will not save his own soul, who disregards the saying through the prophet: The horse is a deceitful hope for salvation (Ps. 32:17). And he does not know that it is written: All who mounted horses have slumbered (Ps. 75:7). This one will not save his own soul; but perishing, he will hear: Some trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will call upon the name of the Lord our God. They are impeded and have fallen; but we have risen and have been raised up (Ps. 19:8-9). A strong man, even with a courageous heart, will flee when naked among the brave. This place can be interpreted in two ways: either he is able to escape because he has stripped himself of the old man and the garments of sins, and he is burdened by no weight, or on the contrary, he is naked and has lost the clothing of Christ, of which it is said in the Apostle: Put on Christ Jesus (Rom. XIII, 14) . And in another place: For if we are clothed, we shall not be found naked (II Cor. V, 3); his strength will be of no use to him; but on the day of battle and struggle, he will flee from those who pursue him, and not being able to resist the enemies without armor, he will show them his back.

3:1-2

(Chapter 3, verses 1-2) Listen to the word that the Lord spoke against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family that I brought out of the land of Egypt, saying: You alone have I known out of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities. LXX: Listen to this word that the Lord spoke against you, O house of Israel, and against all the tribe that I brought out of the land of Egypt, saying: However, I have known you among all the tribes of the earth; therefore I will avenge all your evils upon you. He addresses the sons of Israel, and in the following verse, he shows who these sons of Israel are: Above all, he says, the kindred that I brought out of the land of Egypt, which we must not only consider in the ten tribes, but in all twelve, including Judah and Benjamin. For he brought all out of the land of Egypt, and he says: Only, or as Symmachus interpreted: Only you have I known of all the kindreds of the earth. And because I have known only you, who are the Creator of all, and I have considered you my peculiar people, for this reason I will restore all your sins only upon you: For the mighty will powerfully endure torments (Wis. VI); but he who is the least, is worthy of mercy. And in Ezekiel we read: Begin from my sanctified ones (Ezek. IX, 6). And the judgment of God is said to begin from his house (I Pet. IV). Let this be said for now according to the history. Moreover, because hearing is understood in the Holy Scriptures, not only in the sense of perceiving with the ears of the flesh, but also in the sense of understanding, as the Lord says: He who has ears to hear, let him hear (Luke 8:8). Therefore, when the whole people saw the voice of God (Exodus 20), it was a direct message from the Lord to those who perceived God with their senses, namely those whom He brought out of the land of Egypt and from the power of Pharaoh (so that they would no longer serve mud and straw by building Egyptian cities), and those whom He knew from all the tribes of the earth, as the Apostle says: But now, having come to know God, or rather, having been known by God (Galatians 4:9). And in another place: He who is ignorant, will be ignored (I Cor. XIV, 38). Therefore, not all know God, but those who are worthy of His knowledge, as it is said in the Gospel: Depart from me, workers of iniquity, I do not know you (Luc. XIII, 27). For in being workers of iniquity, they are ignorant of God: therefore He says: Because I knew only you, and I had mine, I will visit upon you all your iniquities. Whom the Lord loves, He chastises, and He corrects every son whom He receives (Hebr. XII). And he said beautifully: I will visit, and I will not strike; for the plague of God is a visitation, and a healing. And he said, I will visit all your iniquities or sins, so that nothing may remain unstruck, so that nothing may not receive healing.

3:3-8

(Verse 3 onwards) Will two walk together unless they have agreed? Does a lion roar in the forest unless it has prey? Does a lion's cub give a cry from its den without capturing something? Does a bird fall into a trap on the ground without a trapper? Does a trap spring up from the ground before catching something? If a trumpet is blown in a city, will not the people be afraid? If there is calamity in a city, has not the Lord caused it? For the Lord God does nothing without revealing his secret to his servants the prophets. The lion roars, who will not fear? The Lord God has spoken, who will not prophesy? Amos: If two shall walk together, except they know each other? If the lion shall roar in his den, having no prey? If the lion's cub gives forth its voice from its lair, unless it has taken something? If a bird falls to the ground without a fowler? If a snare is laid upon the ground, unless it has caught something? If the trumpet sounds in the city, and the people do not fear? If there is wickedness in the city that the Lord did not make, because the Lord God will not do anything unless He reveals His teaching to His servant prophets. Will a lion roar, and who will not fear? The Lord God has spoken, and who will not prophesy? I read in the commentaries of someone who desired to convince of a difficult matter, about eight crimes, wickednesses, and sins: first, Damascus; second, Gaza, and the other cities of Palestine; third, Tyre; fourth, Edom; fifth, the sons of Ammon; sixth, Moab; seventh, Judah, that is, the two tribes; eighth, which is the last, Israel, that is, the ten tribes, with the same number of judgments, now given, and the first answering the first, that is, Damascus, the second answering the second, that is, Gaza, and the rest answering the rest. The one who wrote it knows whether it is true or not. However, another person thinks that the six examples given, of two people walking together on a road, and a lion roaring while leaping, and a lion cub making its voice when it catches something, and a bird caught by a bird catcher, and a snare set in the ground for catching prey, and a trumpet sounding in the city, and with these examples, a similar argument is given, that just as the previous things have a cause and do not happen unless those things have preceded them: likewise, no evil occurs in the city that has not been done by the Lord's command. There are those who consider the first example to contain doctrine, because two cannot walk together unless they have agreed to do so beforehand. He who made both one, and destroyed the middle wall of partition, and created of the two one new man (Ephesians 2): and made peace between them, and joined them together with the bond of charity, so that when they are together, the two may ask the Father and obtain whatever they have requested. These are the two sticks that are joined together in Ezekiel (Ezek.

VII), and the two peoples, the circumcision and the Gentiles, about whom the Lord speaks to Elijah: I have left for myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee before Baal (3 Kings XIX, 18). And in another place, God says: I was found by those who did not seek me; I appeared to those who did not ask for me (Isaiah LXV, 1). But when the two are brought together, they will cling to the Lord, and they will become one spirit: for he who clings to the Lord is one spirit (1 Cor. VI, 17). Therefore, these two who agree with each other and walk together in the way of Christ, cannot fear the attack of any adversaries. But if they are separated by discord, immediately the roaring lion will invade them, about which Peter the Apostle said: Your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour (1 Pet. 5:8). This roaring lion does not roam in cultivated fields, nor among vineyards, nor in olive groves, nor among fruit-bearing trees which praise God; but where there are forests and uncultivated ground, and where wild beasts dwell. And not only will they be exposed to the bites of the lion, but the lion cub will capture them and lead them to its den, fleeing from the light and going towards darkness. For everyone who sins loves darkness and hates the light (John 3), as we read in the psalm: You have set darkness, and it has become night: in it all the beasts of the forest will roam. The lion cubs roaring, to snatch and seek food from God (Psalm 104). For the lion cub seeks not the prey which it possesses and is under its power; but that it may snatch from the Church of Christ, of which it is written in Habakkuk: Its choice food (Hab. 1:16). The third punishment is for those whom discord has separated, that they lose their wings, on which they were previously carried aloft, and fall from heaven to earth, and are caught by the birdcatcher, who is better called the fowler, because he catches birds that are entangled in birdlime, which have descended willingly to earthly things. About which it is written in Proverbs: 'The nets are not unjustly spread for the birds' (Prov. I, 17, and XXIX, 5). For it is a just punishment for sinners, who, having the wings of doves, ought to fly through the air, that they are weighed down by the burden of sins and are brought down to earth, sticking to their vices. Concerning this, we read in the Apostle: 'He who joins himself to a harlot becomes one body with her' (1 Cor. VI, 16). The fourth punishment is for those who are in discord, so that they are caught in a snare not set in heaven, but on earth. Regarding this, the holy one rejoices and says: 'Our soul has been delivered as a sparrow from the snare of the hunters; the snare has been broken, and we have been set free' (Ps. CXXIII, 7). This is the broken snare, of which the Apostle speaks to believers: God will crush Satan beneath your feet quickly (Rom. XVI, 20). And again in David we read: They have set a stumbling block on my path (Ps. CXXXVI, 6). For they cannot deceive the simple ones of the believers unless they propose the name of Christ, so that while we think we find Christ, we may go on to the Antichrist. The fifth punishment is for those who have forsaken the peace, which surpasses all understanding (Philipp. IV), and which the Lord, going to the Father, left to the Apostles, saying: My peace I give to you, my peace I leave with you (John XIV, 27), so that as citizens of the Lord, they are terrified by the sound of the trumpet. For whatever is said in the Holy Scriptures, it is like a threatening trumpet, penetrating the ears of believers with a loud voice. If we are righteous, we are provoked to blessedness through the trumpet of Christ; if we are sinners, we hear what torments we will suffer. However, the evil that the Lord does in a city is not contrary to virtue, but it is affliction and torment, as we read: Each day has enough trouble of its own (Matthew 6:34), that is, tribulation and distress. And in the Prophet, we read: I am God who made light and darkness, who brings peace and creates evil (Isaiah XLV, 6, 7). Just as darkness is contrary to light and day, so war is contrary to peace, which in itself is not evil, but seems evil to those who suffer it. And so we know, from the holy Scriptures, that sometimes wickedness is not opposed to virtue, but is rather affliction, punishment, and distress. Let us take one more example from Jonah: And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil ways, and he repented of the evil which he had said that he would do unto them (Jonah III, 10). Surely there is the evil overthrow of the Ninevites, which God had threatened through the prophet, and it is not contrary to virtue, which pertains to sin, for which He threatened torment to sinners. It follows: The Lord God will not do a word unless He has revealed His secret, or His correction, to His servant prophets: not that God reveals to the prophets all that He does in heaven, or has already done before; but what He is about to do on earth. Noah revealed to his servant that he would bring a flood. Abraham and Lot revealed to their servants that Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboiim would be destroyed. Joseph revealed the interpretation of a dream of seven years of famine in Egypt. And Jonah revealed the destruction of Nineveh, so that those who heard of the coming punishments would either repent and avoid torment, or those who ignored them would be justly punished. And now the Lord reveals through his servant and prophet Amos what he will do to the ten tribes, that if they are converted to better things and forsake their idols, they may be delivered from the impending danger. And note that the merciful and gracious God always foretells the future so that he is not compelled to inflict punishments. And as for the heretics who slander the Creator as if he were severe and harsh, cruel and only a judge, because there is no evil in the state that he does not do, we refer this to the greatness of his mercy, that he does not inflict punishments unless he has foretold them beforehand. But whoever predicts does not want to punish the sinners. The lion, he says, will roar, and who will not be afraid? The Lord God has spoken, who will not prophesy? Who in this place is not accepted as being for the rare, but not for the impossible. For he who disregards the Lord due to his own stubbornness will not be afraid and will not prophesy. And the meaning is according to the story: if everything trembles at the voice of the lion, and all the nature of animals is frightened, shall we, by God's command to speak and announce to the people the coming punishments, not prophesy? Shall we not speak? I know that someone has written in his Commentaries about a roaring lion to be understood as the devil, and roaring towards those who are about to perish: but God, who speaks through the Prophets, should be referred to the Lord Savior, just as those who hear the roaring of the lion in a bad way and are captured unto death, so the holy ones should hear the Lord commanding in a good way and be saved.

3:9-10

(Vers. 9, 10.) Make it heard in the houses of Azotus, and in the houses of the land of Egypt, and say: Gather yourselves together upon the mountains of Samaria, and behold the many follies in the midst thereof, them that suffer wrong, and that oppress in the innermost parts thereof, and they have not known to do the right thing, saith the Lord: treasuring up iniquity and spoils in their houses. LXX: Declare ye in the countries of the Assyrians, and make it known in the land of Egypt, and say: Gather yourselves together upon the mountain of Samaria, and behold the many wonderful things in the midst thereof, and the oppressions in it, and they have not known the things that are to come in it, saith the Lord, who treasureth up iniquity and misery in their countries. We have already mentioned that the prophet Amos specifically, indeed a large part of the volume, prophesies to the ten tribes called Israel and Ephraim, and Samaria. Therefore, he is also commanded to announce now to Ashdod and the land of Egypt that follows. For Ashdod, the Seventy Assyrians wanting something, since Ashdod is called Esdod in the language of the Hebrews, and the Assyrians, Assur. For the buildings that are called Armanoth, they rendered regions, which are called Sadoth, and they have nothing in the word of similitude. He said, 'Tell them to gather all the nations that are nearby, and let them see the crimes of Israel, so that they do not think that God's judgment is unjust. Just as if he were to say, 'First see what they do, and then you can approve of my opinion.' And he introduced it beautifully: Over the mountains of Samaria, or the city that is now called Sebaste, then known as Samaria, or the whole province that is situated in the mountains: and see the many insanities in their midst, that they worship calves as gods and sacrifice their own children. Not content with this wickedness, they defame the poor in their own homes and do not know how to do what is right, storing up not gold and money, which are sometimes obtained through labor, but wickedness and plunder in their own houses: so that because they have deserted the worship of God and have worshipped idols, God may give them over to a reprobate mind, to do what is not fitting.' And since, according to the laws of tropology, Samaria is referred to as the heretics who falsely claim to be the keepers of God's commandments, the divine word commands that they preach among the Gentiles who do not have the knowledge of God, in whose doctrine there is a consuming fire, tribulation, and distress. So that they may consider the false Samaria and ascend to the mountains of its pride, and see the many insanities in the midst of the city, while each one imagines whatever he desires and worships his own creation - like Marcion who considers God to be good but inactive, like Valentinus who believes in thirty α■νς and an ultimate Christ, whom he calls an abortive, like Basilides who calls the omnipotent God by the wondrous name ■βρ■ξς and says that the annual course of the sun is contained within the circle, which the pagans call Με■θραν under the same number of other letters. And the follies of Iberians marvel at Balsamo Barbeloque. Are these not insanity and many insanities, with each person imagining whatever comes into their mind? They also endure slander in their innermost places, or the simple ones who believe are oppressed; while under the guise of truth they cultivate falsehood, and they do not know how to do what is right at all, because they have lost the path of truth, and they do not believe in the one who says: I am the truth (John 14:6): and they hoard for themselves the doctrines of wickedness, and they seize and enclose in their houses those whom they can deceive with false error. But if it pleases to read the Assyrians (which, however, is not found in Hebrew), let us say that they are those of whom it is written: I will bring upon you a great chief of the Assyrians, who said, With my strength I will act, and so on, so that the heretics may be captured by the Assyrian and held in the land of Egypt, from which they have already come to the Church and been released.

3:11

(Verse 11) Therefore thus says the Lord God: The land shall be troubled and surrounded, and your strength shall be taken away from you, and your houses shall be plundered. LXX: Therefore thus says the Lord God: Tyre and the surrounding land will be deserted by your strength, and your regions will be plundered. Regarding Tyre, which is written in Hebrew with two letters, Sade (ס) and Res (ר); and it is called Sor (סר): which both Aquila and the Seventy translated similarly: a Hebrew who instructed me in the Holy Scriptures interpreted it as tribulation, and we did not reject his opinion: for Symmachus, who is accustomed to follow not the wordplay, but the order of meaning, says, siege and encirclement of the land. For the siege, which is called πολιορκ■α by him, was placed by Theodotion who thought not Sar and Sor (which is called tribulation, or Tyre, but Sur should be read: which properly refers to a very hard rock, which is called ■κρ■τομος in Greek, and which we can call flint in Latin. Let us therefore speak about each one. The LXX said: Tyre and the land surrounding it. And the sentence seemed to hang: they added therefore of their own, it will be deserted: nor is it an error of the interpreters, where because of the ambiguity of the word, both tribulation and Tyre can be said. And the meaning is: Over the mountains of Samaria my people have done many insanities: slandering and completely ignoring what is right, and hoarding for themselves injustice and plunder: therefore they will be afflicted, or crushed, and surrounded by the Assyrian army, and, she says, strength will be taken away from you, o Samaria, o ten tribes, o once my people: and they will be plundered in your houses, which you have gathered through the tears of the wretched by means of slander. The heretics also will be afflicted on the day of judgment, and all their strength will be weakened, and what they had gained through plunder will be taken away, so that the people whom they had deceived may be freed: or certainly they will be afflicted every day by ecclesiastical men, and they will be surrounded by testimonies of the Scriptures, and strength of syllogisms, and clever words by which they had confirmed their own doctrine will be taken away from them. And their houses will be plundered: so that those who were taken from the Church may return to the Church.

3:12-13

(Vers. 12, 13.) Thus says the Lord: Just as a shepherd rescues from the mouth of a lion two legs or the tip of an ear, so will the sons of Israel who dwell in Samaria be rescued, on the corner of a bed and in Damascus on the sheets. LXX: Thus says the Lord: Just as a shepherd tears away from the mouth of a lion two legs or the tip of an ear, so will the sons of Israel who dwell in Samaria be torn away, in front of the tribe and in Damascus. In the beginning of Amos, where we discussed those verses: The Lord will roar from Zion, and from Jerusalem He will give His voice; and the beautiful pastures will mourn, and the top of Carmel will wither, we said that He was using his art of speaking so that, since as a shepherd of sheep He knew nothing more terrifying than a lion, He would compare the anger of the Lord to lions. According to this meaning, he now also takes an example from what he had often seen, and thus describes that the small remaining remnants of the Assyrians must be extracted by hand: just as if a shepherd, with all the other parts devoured, were to snatch two legs or the outermost part of the ear from the jaws of a lion. And with the example of comparison set aside, he says that the sons of Israel, specifically the ten tribes who dwell in Samaria, will be extracted in the same way, from the edge of the bed and from the grab at Damascus. What seems to me to be explained in this way: we read in Isaiah that Rezin king of Aram, that is, the Syrians, who reigned in Damascus, and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel, with the intention of fighting against Judah, came (Isa. VII): concerning whom the Lord directs Achaz king of Judah and Jerusalem not to be afraid of the two half-burnt torches: because as a sign of complete liberation, the Virgin's conception and childbirth are shown to him. Therefore, the children of Samaria dwell in the region and district of the bed, resting in the help of the Syrians, and promising victory to themselves in the bed of Damascus: just as one who is tired is refreshed in bed: so they fortified their weakened forces with the help of the neighboring nation. And in the same Isaiah, it is said by way of a type of future events, that a child will be born who, before he knows how to call his father and mother, will receive the spoils of Samaria and the power of Damascus, which, of course, fought against Jerusalem with united forces (Ibid.). For the blow of the bed and of Damascus, the Seventy translated it against the tribe and in Damascus: so that, according to the symbolism, we may refer the tribe to Judah, and Damascus to the calling of the Gentiles: from which one flock of the Lord was made, whose wild beasts often tear apart the sheep: from whose jaws scarcely two legs or the very tip of the ear are taken away. In the calf the path of teachings is shown, in the ear the sacraments of words. Therefore, even the apostles were commanded to walk without shoes and any skin of a dead animal on their bare feet (Matth. X). And it is said to the believers: He who has ears to hear, let him hear (Luc. VIII, 8). In the Apocalypse of John, we also read: He who has ears, let him hear what the Spirit says to the Churches (Apoc. II, 7). And more explicitly through the prophet: Set your words in the ears of your heart. Both heretics and their teachers rush to hinder this journey and to weave nets so that we may fall on the way that is Christ. But if a man from the church and a man of God come, and Samson, who is interpreted as 'sun', kills the lion: descending into the lake of the underworld, which cools the waters, he suffocates the lion in the time of snow, storm, and winter: so that we may be able to follow the Lord with sure foot and safe ears, and hear his words.

3:14-15

(Verse 14, 15.) Listen and testify in the house of Jacob, says the Lord God of hosts, because on the day when I begin to visit the transgressions of Israel upon him, I will also visit the altars of Bethel: and the horns of the altar shall be cut off, and shall fall to the ground: and I will strike the winter house with the summer house, and the houses of ivory shall perish: and many houses shall be destroyed, says the Lord. LXX: O priests, listen: testify in the house of Jacob, says the Lord God Almighty: because on the day when I will avenge the iniquities of Israel upon him, I will also avenge upon the altars of Bethel: and the horns of the altar shall be undermined, and shall fall upon the ground. I will confuse and strike the house with wings over the summer house, and the ivory houses will perish, and many other houses will be added, says the Lord. What is written at the beginning of the chapter according to the Septuagint is not found in Hebrew, but instead the word Ares () is read for this, which Aquila interpreted as bed; and I think the Septuagint used this Hebrew word, which some who did not understand read as ἐρεμς, that is, priests. But the prophetic word commands that they first listen, and then respond in the house of Jacob, that is, in the ten tribes that the Lord has spoken about. 'When I begin,' he says, 'to punish the transgressions or impieties of the house of Israel, and to give them what they deserve, and the time of captivity comes, then the altars of Bethel, where the golden calves were, will be destroyed, and the horns of the altar, which was also broken by Jeroboam's hand, will be cut off (3 Kings 13); and they will fall to the ground, shattered by the invading Assyrians.' And I will strike, he said, the winter house with the summer house, which we can simply understand literally: they had such great wealth that they had two houses, a winter house and a summer house, and some of them faced the North, while others faced the South, so that they could provide for the variations in weather, cold and heat, and the temperate climate. We can call the winter house the kingdom of Israel, where there was the cold of religion and worship of God, and the fierce storms of various winds; and the summer house, Judah and Jerusalem, where the temple was, and morning and evening burnt offerings were made, and the fervor of religion thrived. And they shall perish, he said, the ivory houses, which can also be supported by history. For we read that Ahab, king of Israel, indulged in such great delights that he made for himself an ivory house (3 Kings 22). Instead of ivory, we find the term 'tooth houses', that is, houses made of elephant tusks, in Hebrew. Concerning these, it is written in the forty-fourth psalm: From ivory houses: from which the daughters of kings have delighted you in your honor. When the Lord begins to visit the transgressions of Israel, who previously beheld God with their mind, he will also visit the altars of Bethel: not just one altar, as the Church has, but many altars of heretics. For as many altars as there are schisms, so many will the altars be stripped of their horns, which they boast of having through pride. And their horns will fall, that is, their arrogance, upon the earth; and it will strike the wintry house, those heretics who engage in continence and fasting, in dry diets and camel's hair garments, among whom are Tatianus and Manichaeus. And it will strike the summer house, that is, the Nicolaitans and Eunomians, and the followers of the old heresy, who, because of the gluttony of their bellies, indulge in every pleasure. And the ivory houses, which are composed of the skillful tooth and the splendor of rhetorical brilliance, will perish. And many buildings, which are dispersed throughout the whole world, will be scattered. For when one truth arises, many lies will be destroyed. Regarding the winter house, they have translated it as 'peripteros', which we have interpreted as 'winged', because it has small doors through the windows, and as if wings to repel the severity of the cold.

Book Two

Book Two

I read in a certain controversy: Weakness of the body also drags down the strength of the mind. On the contrary, the Apostle Paul says: When I am weak, then I am strong (2 Corinthians XII, 10); and: Power is made perfect in weakness (ibid., 9). For the spirit is against the flesh, and the flesh against the spirit (Galatians V); these are opposed to each other, so that we may not do what we want. Hence, it is also said in the Gospel: The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak (Matthew XXVI, 41). Old age brings many things with it, both good and bad. The good, because it frees us from shameless desires, imposes limits on gluttony, weakens the force of lust, increases wisdom, and gives us more mature advice; and with the body growing colder, it sleeps with the perpetual virgin Sunamite: despising luxury with Berzellai, it entrusts it to the young son Chamaam (also called Maacha), and does not want to cross the Jordan, and to leave its own boundaries, that is, its own territories, and go into foreign lands (II Kings XIX). But the evils that are considered to be the burdens of old age are as follows: frequent weaknesses, the most troublesome phlegm, which some Greeks call κρυζα, others φλογμα, dim eyes, sour foods, trembling hands at times, teeth bare of gums, and falling between meals. In addition to these, it is often plagued with stomach cramps and needle-like pains, as well as the pains of gout and arthritis, to the extent that it is unable to even hold a pen or a stylus; so that it is unable to walk with its own feet and appears to have lost a large part of its life, and many of its limbs are almost dead. Since these things are so, I will tolerate diseases more bearably in comparison to the most severe mistress of lust, as long as I am free from one and very grave desire. Indeed, old age sometimes suffers the incentives of vices: and no one is safe for a long time next to the holy martyr Cyprian, as danger is always close. But it is one thing to be tickled, another to be overwhelmed by pleasures. There, young age speaks with the apostle, who knows the needs of a youthful body: 'For what I want, I do not do, but what I do not want, I do' (Rom. VII, 15); and: 'Wretched man that I am, who will deliver me from this body of death?' (Ibid., 24) But here the rare sparkle of a shining light tries to revive among the ashes of the dead, yet it cannot ignite a fire. Therefore, Pammachus, listen to me, obtain for me from the Lord that I may deserve to have wisdom as my companion, of which it is written: Love her, and she will keep you; honor her, and she will embrace you (Prov. IV, 8): so that, with her help and partnership, I may complete the work begun in Amos, and the second book may take its beginning from the cattle of Bashan: so that, just as I have discussed in full discourse about the cattle or calves of Bethaven in the prophet Hosea, now I may also discourse about the fattest cattle.

4:1-3

(Chapter 4, Verse 1 onwards) Hear this word, you fat cows of Samaria, who oppress the poor, who crush the needy, who say to your husbands, 'Bring us something to drink!' The Lord God has sworn by his holiness: behold, days are coming upon you when they will take you away with hooks, even the last of you with fishhooks. And you will go out through breaches, each one straight ahead, and you will be cast out into Harmon, declares the Lord. LXX: Hear this word, you cows of Bashan ((Or Bashanites)), who are on the mountain of Samaria, who oppress the poor, and crush the needy, who say to your lords: 'Give us something to drink.' The Lord has sworn by his holiness, behold, days are coming upon you when they will take you away with hooks, even those with you in pots, you pestilent merchants, and you will be thrown naked one against another, and cast upon the mountain of Remmon, says the Lord. For the fat cattle, the Seventy interpreted it as Basan's; Aquila and Theodotio interpreted the Hebrew word Basan itself (); we followed the interpretation of Symmachus, who says, 'the well-nourished cows,' that is, fatted cows, we have interpreted as fat cattle. However, he speaks to the leaders of Israel and the best men of the ten tribes, who were occupied with pleasures and rapine, that they may hear the word of God, and know that they are not plowmen's oxen, but fat cattle of the herd, or those nourished in the pastures of Basan, which are the most fertile places for herbs: and by this he signifies that they are prepared not for agriculture, but for sacrifice and eating. You fat cows of Samaria are on the mountain, and you humble ones are crushed. And you say to your lords, that is, to the shepherds through whom we understand the kings, 'Give us, and we will drink,' that is, command and we will destroy everything. But from what he said, 'Give us, and we will drink,' and he did not say, 'Give us, and we will eat,' he signifies their drunkenness in wine and luxury, which overthrow the state of the mind. Therefore, the Lord God swore in His sanctuary, either in Himself, or in the Son, or in the Temple, or in every one who is holy and called the Temple of God, that the day is coming not far off and after many ages, but now imminent, the day of captivity and distress, in which the cows will be led with hooks, and the remains of them in boiling pots, for which it is also written in Hebrew and by Aquila, 'in the bowls of the fisherman.' Furthermore, those shields that are called Sannoth in Hebrew, Aquila interpreted as clypeos; Symmachus and the LXX [interpret as] weapons; only Theodotion [interprets as] dorata, which we have followed and interpreted as contos or hastas. However, this signifies that they are captured in battle, and are carried and taken away by the right of victory; still preserving the metaphor of cows that he had begun, so that just as he had said the cows were fat, he states that their flesh should be carried in contis velscutis. And just as a boiling pot wraps up small fish, so the cows of Basan are to be oppressed with no order of captivity. And what follows: And through the openings you will go out one against another, can be explained thus: The way of captivity is open to you, and when your pots are burned up, you will go out one against another, according to the Hebrew idiom, which for that which we mutually or reciprocally, woman and woman, that is, one against another, call. And he said, 'You will be cast into the places of Armenia, which are called Armona.' Finally, Symmachus interpreted it as follows: 'And you will be cast into Armenia, in place of which the Septuagint has the mountain of Remma, Aquila [has] the mountain of Armona, Theodotion [has] the mountain of Mona; but the fifth edition has translated it as the lofty mountain.' But the word of the Lord which commands the cows of Bashan to listen, according to the begun tropology, commands the heretics, who serve their belly and throat, and are rightly called very fat cows or disgraceful cows. For Basan, in fact, translates to 'shame,' which if we want to say means 'confusion,' we will interpret it more as Babylon than Basan. These fat cows, or rather dishonorable and dry ones, are located on the mountain of Samaria, which is also referred to in Hosea: Take away your calf, Samaria. And again in the same [book], Because your calf has led you astray, Samaria (Hos. VIII, 5, 6): and therefore on the mountain of Samaria, because they are always lifted up in pride and promise themselves lofty things. Samaria is also called a custodian, not because they guard the words of the Lord, but because they boast of being guardians of his precepts. They falsely accuse the needy and crush the poor. By the needy and poor, understand the ecclesiastical man who is content with the simplicity of truth and does not seek the wealth of heretical arguments or the brilliance of eloquence. These cows say to their masters: Bring us and let us drink. We can call their masters or leaders of perverse doctrines, Valentine, and Marcion, and Arius, and Eunomius, or those who support their wrongly invented teachings through multiple books. These Basanite cows say: Bring us, and let us drink. For if they do not give them, they do not have what they devour, indeed what they drink to become drunk. But in order that we may know that waters and cups signify doctrine, the Lord speaks to the Samaritan woman: Everyone who drinks from this water will thirst again; but whoever drinks from the water that I will give him will not thirst forever (John 4:13). Therefore, those who drink from the waters of the Samaritan, that is, of heretics, will always be thirsty and will not be able to refresh the heat of their dry throats, as Isaiah proclaims: As one dreams of drinking when thirsty, and when he arises, he is still thirsty, and his soul has hoped in vain; so will all the nations that fight against Jerusalem (Isaiah 29:8). For truly, he who drinks from the waters of heretics, and fights against the Church of God in Jerusalem, drinks in his dreams and his soul is deceived by empty images. And when he considers himself satisfied, then he will have the beginning of thirst. Hence it is said to the religious man: Drink the waters from your vessels, and let your own waters flow from the fountains of wells, and let them be for you alone (Prov. 5:15). And the Lord your God swears in his sanctuary against the fattened cows and the feasts that serve them, whether he swears by his saints, that the days of judgment and punishment will come upon them, to carry them in their arms, and to cast those who are with them into stewpots, or to carry them as well. And let those cows themselves be pestilent merchants, or let those who come to carry them be thrown out naked, seeing each other: let them be cast upon Mount Remman, says the Lord God. For we must say, according to the Septuagint, so that we do not seem to have proposed them in vain. When the day of judgment and vengeance comes against the heretics, then they will be taken away in arms, that is, with their weapons with which they fought against the Church; or, having been conquered by the armor of God and overcome by His warriors, they will be thrown into boiling pots to be burned and cooked, who were previously pestilent merchants; for they engaged in this trade in order to deliver those whom they had deceived to death. These are the ones of whom it is said: the sons of Heli, the sons of pestilence (1 Samuel II), who sat in the chair of pestilence (alternatively, pestilences). And when they have been sifted and burned, they will go out naked, having nothing of what they had previously presumed. And they will see their shame, and they will be cast upon the mountain of Remman, which is translated as sublimity, so that they may be crushed in their pride. Some interpret Remman as the sight of someone, that is, the vision of someone. For they could not see everything; but they promised themselves knowledge of a certain part, so that they might be projected into it, because they believed they knew it. We can, according to the letter, understand that when the days of captivity come upon the cows of Samaria, they will prevail over them in battle, and oppress them with their weapons, and in the encounter compel the defeated to go to fortified cities, which will be compared to boiling pots: just as Jerusalem, having its people shut in and besieged, is likened to a boiling pot full of meat; so the cities of Samaria will be compared to boiling pots, which will force the shut-in people to leave due to famine and plague, and to go into captivity seeing each other mutually, and be transferred to the mountains of Armenia, which are adjacent to Media and Persia.

4:4-6

(Verse 4 and following) Come to Bethel, and act wickedly: to Gilgal, and multiply transgression, and bring your morning sacrifices, your tithes for three days. And offer praise with leaven (Vulgate: with fermented dough), and call for voluntary offerings, and proclaim. For thus you have desired, O children of Israel, says the Lord God. Therefore, I have given you the stench of decay in all your cities and the lack of bread in all your places; and you have not returned to me, says the Lord. You entered Bethel and acted wickedly in Gilgal, multiplying your impious acts. And you brought your offerings in the morning, your tithes on the third day. And you read the law outside and made confessions. Proclaim that the children of Israel have loved these things, says the Lord God. And I will give you the astonishment of teeth in all your cities, and the lack of bread in all your places, and you have not returned to me, says the Lord. Let us lay the foundations of history first: O wretched Israel, captivity is now near to you, the Assyrian army is now advancing: do whatever you please, act impiously: freely fornicate with idols, so that the more shameless you are, the more just my sentence will appear above your torments. 'Come,' he says, 'to Bethel, where you have set up a golden calf, and act impiously towards God. Come to Gilgal, the place of idolatry, of which I spoke through Hosea: 'All their wickedness is in Gilgal' (Hosea 9:15).' And again in the same place: They were in vain in Gilgal, sacrificing to cows (Ibid., XII, 11). And when you come to Gilgal: multiply transgression. For whatever you do there is transgression against God, to whom you prefer idols. And bring your offerings in the morning, lest there be any delay in wickedness. On the third day, give your tithe: or, as Symmachus interpreted, give your tithe on the third day. The explanation of this place seems to us to be: in the Book of Leviticus it is commanded (Lev. VII) that certain offerings should not be reserved for another day, and that others should not remain until the third day: if they do, they shall be unclean. So the meaning is: Sacrifice unclean victims every day, and offer polluted sacrifices, and make a sacrifice of leaven as praise, which is not completely offered to God according to the precepts of Moses. For praise, Eucharist has been interpreted as thanksgiving, which in Hebrew is called Todah (). And he says to call them voluntary offerings, which the Hebrews call Nadaboth (), meaning spontaneous. But a voluntary sacrifice belongs to joy: which in Latin we can call a feast. And when you have done this, announce your impiety to everyone: so that you not only seem to have done it, but also to have taught others. But I command this, and I speak in an imperative manner, in order to satisfy your wishes, because you have acted and desired this way, O children of Israel, says the Lord God. Therefore, I have also given you a shock of teeth, which the Septuagint translated as 'astonishment', whom we have followed in this place because of the simplicity of the word: either the cleanliness of teeth, as Aquila and Symmachus interpreted it, in order to demonstrate the magnitude of hunger through clean teeth. And I made a scarcity of bread, not in one city, but in all your cities; neither in one place, but in all your places. And when I did this, it was not to punish, but to give an opportunity for repentance; yet you did not turn back to Me, says the Lord. This is what we have said according to the Hebrew text: let us now turn to the Seventy Interpreters, and briefly discuss what seems to us, according to the anagogical interpretation, in each (verse); for the greatness of the books does not allow us to say both in each edition. You entered into Bethel, that is, the house of God, which is understood as the Church: and you acted impiously towards the Lord, trampling upon His commandments. But in Galgala, which means revelation or scroll, you have multiplied impieties, claiming knowledge of the holy Scriptures for yourselves: and while you are exalting yourselves in pride, you have fallen to the lowest filth. Moreover, you have brought your morning offerings, your tithes on the third day, transformed into an angel of light: and you have confined the triple understanding of the Scriptures (which we have been commanded to write in our hearts in three ways) into a single interpretation. For we must understand Holy Scripture, first according to the letter, doing whatever precepts are in ethics. Secondly, according to the allegory, that is, the spiritual understanding. Thirdly, according to the future blessedness. But you, despising the first and the second day, compose for yourselves certain spiritual figments without foundation, and place a roof upon them without walls. Nor are they heretics, concerning whom and to whom it is said, being content with the end of ungodliness: but they have read outside the Church the law of God, and have attempted to join together confessions and testimonies to their own perverted heart: or they have sacrificed of the leaven, concerning which it is said in the Gospel, 'Beware of the leaven,' that is, the doctrine of the Pharisees. And they did these things not by error, but by study: not by chance will, but by the fullest charity of their ancestors. Hence the Lord threatens vengeance upon them: I will give you the astonishment of teeth, which in Greek is called 'γομφιασμός'. For if anyone, according to Ezekiel (Ezek. 18), eats a sour grape, his teeth will be astonished: so that those who abuse the testimonies of the holy scriptures, consuming them immature and without their sweetness, may lose the strength of their teeth: so that they are unable to chew tough things, which are beneficial to the whole body, and pass into the stomach. I will give you this wonder of teeth and scarcity of food in all cities, and in all your places, so that you may suffer the hunger of the Word of God, and its bread which descended from heaven (John VI), and of which it is written in the Psalms: Man ate the bread of angels (Psalm LXXVII, 15). All these things I have done not out of cruelty and savagery, as heretics may calumniate, but out of severity and seriousness of judgment, so that you may convert to me, according to what is written: I have struck your children in vain, they did not receive discipline (Jeremiah II, 30).

4:7-8

(Verse 7 onwards) I have also withheld rain from you, when there were still three months until the harvest. I caused it to rain on one city and not on another. One part was rained upon, while the part on which it did not rain became dry. So two or three cities went to another city to drink water, but were not satisfied. Yet you did not return to me, says the Lord. LXX: And I have withheld rain from you three months before the harvest. I have caused it to rain on one city and not on another city. Part of it will be irrigated, and part of it, upon which it does not rain, will dry up. And two or three cities will gather in one city, so that they may drink water and not be satisfied; and you have not returned to me, says the Lord. Not only have I caused astonishment of teeth in all your cities, and a scarcity of bread in all your places, but I have also prevented rain from you when there were still three months remaining until the harvest, which is called the late rain, and is especially necessary for the thirsty fields and Palestinian lands, so that when the grass swells in the harvest and the wheat bears fruit, it will wither due to excessive dryness. However, the significant time of spring at the end of the month of April, from which there are three months remaining until the harvest of wheat. May, June, July. For the harvest, seventy days, in their own way, were transferred to the vintage, which, if we accept it, is completely unusual and impossible next to all the regions of the East. For we have never seen rain at the end of June or in the month of July in these provinces, especially in Judea. Finally, in the Books of Kings, as a great sign and wonder, rain was brought about on the days of summer and harvest, when Samuel prayed (1 Samuel 12). And it was excessive to threaten now the dryness of the month of July, in which it had never given rain. It prevented rain, so that they would endure not only a shortage of bread, but also the heat of thirst and a scarcity of drinking. For in these places where we now live, besides small springs, all the water is in cisterns, and if divine wrath withholds rain, the danger of thirst is greater than that of hunger: which Scripture also mentions to have happened in the days of the prophet Elijah for three years and six months (3 Kings 17). And perhaps they might not think that this happened by the law of nature, and the course of the stars, and the variety of seasons, to rain on one city and its fields, and to suspend rain from another: so that two or three cities may go to another city and yet be not satisfied with the drinks of water. And when He has done these things, not for punishment but for healing, He rebukes those who persist in wickedness: and even so you have not returned to me, says the Lord. The Lord also forbids or restrains spiritual rains and all the riches of divine wisdom from the heretics; and He commands His clouds not to rain the showers of rain upon them before three months of harvest or vintage, so that they cannot come to the fruits of the mystery of the Trinity. And as this sun, which we see, completes its annual course until it returns to its original point, in twelve months, which consist of thirty days each; and the moon, which in Hebrew is called 'Jare', and in Greek 'μην', gave the name of months in both languages from its own name, and is illuminated by the sun's rays from that part which is near it, receiving more or less light according to the changing seasons: so also the Church, adorned by the splendor of the true Sun, completes the number of the twelve apostles. And so, the twelve tribes are called in Israel, and as a testimony of eternal memory, twelve stones are taken from the bed of the Jordan, to be placed in the location of the second circumcision (Joshua 4). But the Lord rains upon one city, the true Church of confession, and does not rain upon the other, which is in the assemblies of heretics. And while the former receives eternal rain, the latter is dried out by constant aridity: so that those who thirst, compelled by scarcity, may come to the city of the Lord, from which a most abundant fountain flows, irrigating the torrent of thorns. But this is the fountain which speaks through Jeremiah: They have abandoned me, the fountain of living water, and have dug for themselves broken cisterns that cannot hold water (Jeremiah 2:13). This fountain, flowing from one source, runs in threefold union: the fountains of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, which the psalmist yearns for in the manner of a thirsty deer, saying: As the deer longs for the streams of water, so my soul longs for you, O God (Psalm 42:1). And when two or three cities have journeyed to one city, in which there is an abundance of water, they will not be satisfied with hope, faith, and charity, because they have come not by choice, but by necessity, to seek divine grace.

4:9

(Verse 9) I struck you with scorching wind and with blight. The abundance of your gardens, vineyards, olive groves, and fig trees were eaten by the locusts, yet you did not return to me, says the Lord. LXX: I struck you with burning heat and with blight. You multiplied your gardens, vineyards, fig trees, and olive groves, yet you did not even turn to me, says the Lord. It was not only the past that I did to correct you; but whatever remained of the drought, I struck with scorching wind and blight. For vento urente, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion are interpreted as 'Septuaginta πύρωσιν,' which we can translate as 'combustion.' All of them translated 'Auruginem' as 'πικτερον,' except Theodotion, who translated it as 'χρῆσιν,' which means 'pallor.' And when they multiplied against the anger of the Lord, they consumed all the gardens, vineyards, fig trees, and olive trees with 'eruca,' which is further explained in Joel (Joel. I). And not even by means of wounds did they want to come to God, burdened as they were by the weight of evils. With this saying, let the heretics be confounded, who interpret the discipline of the Creator, and, so to speak, medicine, as cruelty. But the Lord spiritually strikes the heretics with the burning fire, about which the Apostle Paul said: It is better to marry than to be burned (1 Corinthians 7:9). And the prince of the apostles: Beloved, do not be surprised at the fiery ordeal that comes upon you for your testing (1 Peter 4:12), and like rust that, with bile poured out, changes the redness of blood into paleness, and allows nothing healthy in the body, so much so that even the sweetest honey seems bitter. And those who recently heard in the Church: Taste and see that the Lord is sweet: and they said: How sweet are your words to my throat, more than honey to my mouth (Ps. CXVIII)! Let them be called bitter, and their waters and rains not drip sweetness: let them not be from the promised land, which we read flows with milk and honey: but let them be called Mara, that is, bitterness. These multiplied gardens for themselves, into which Naboth ((Al. Nabutha)) did not want his vineyard to be changed, and so he wanted to die (III Kings XXI). For the one who is weak, let him eat vegetables (Rom. XIV). And because heretics are always swollen with pride, and falling into the judgment of the devil, they promise great things to themselves and invent images of good things, so that they may mix poison with honey: they boast that they have vineyards, olive groves, and fig orchards; but their vineyard is the vineyard of Sodom; their olive groves are not from good olives, but from wild olive trees, which the Apostle commands to be grafted onto the roots of good olive trees (Rom. XI). Figs also have such things, which fill the basket of the worst figs, which Jeremiah testifies that he cannot eat because of bitterness (Jerem. XXIX). When the Lord comes to them, he curses them with eternal drought (Mark. XI), so that they never bear fruit, lest they deceive passers-by with the greenness of their leaves. And so that we understand that the gardens of heretics and vineyards and olive groves and fig groves are referred to in a negative way, he adds the word 'yours' to each of these phrases, to show that they belong not to God but to the heretics: your gardens, your vineyards, your olive groves, and your fig groves: all of which have been ravaged by caterpillars, the final punishment of all; they do not fly away like locusts, and scattering in all directions, but rather remain and consume everything slowly, with a lazy and sluggish bite, all that is doomed to destruction. And when they had suffered these things, they did not even want to return to the Lord in this way.

4:10

I sent death upon you on the way of Egypt, I killed your young men with the captivity of your horses. And I made the stench of your camps go up into your nostrils, and you did not return to me, says the Lord. LXX: I sent death upon you on the way of Egypt, and I killed your young men with the captivity of your horses. And I led your camps in fire in my anger, and yet you did not return to me, says the Lord. Through all the whips and tortures Israel is educated: and at that time when they asked for help from the Egyptians, death was sent upon them, and their young men were struck down by the sword, and the captivity cruelly confined those horses which they had multiplied against God's commandment, so that the rottenness of the camps and the stench of the dying army would fill the nostrils of the living. And even after doing all this, to seize the wrongdoers and correct those who went astray, they did not return to Him, says the Lord. Not only at that time, but every day, he puts to death on the way of Egypt, so that one who treads the path of Egypt may hear, dying, the teaching of the Apostle: For the sin I am dead, I am dead; but in what I live, I live in God (Galatians II). And in another place: If we have died with Christ, we will also live with him (Romans VI, 8). And again: I always carry about in my body the dying of Jesus (II Corinthians IV, 10). And again: It is no longer I who live, but Christ lives in me (Galatians II, 20). The Lord wants to give us life through this death, so that, dying to sin, we may live for God. But we die to sin when we mortify our earthly members, that is, fornication, impurity, sensuality, idolatry and so on. We read in Isaiah, according to the Septuagint translators: otherwise in Hebrew it is expressed differently: 'I have sent death unto Jacob, and it has come upon Israel' (Isa. IX). Jacob is the name of the body that is being born; Israel is the name of blessing. For he wrestled all night and prevailed in the struggle (Gen. XXXII), and when the morning star arose, he could say with the Apostle: The night is far gone; the day is at hand (Rom. XIII, 12), therefore Israel, seeing God, received his name. Therefore death is sent first to Jacob, so that we may mortify our members upon the earth, and through the mortification of our bodily members, we may come to the death of Israel, so that all incentives of disturbances may die within us. God strikes whatever is strong in evil, and perversity rises up in youth, so that it does not reach old age, and He delivers horses to captivity, so that they do not slip into the abyss of hell; and He causes the stench of decay of their camps to rise up into their nostrils, so that they may recognize their own sins and feel the rottenness, and they may say with David: My wounds have putrefied and become corrupt because of my foolishness (Ps. XXXVII, 6). And when they have done all this according to the desire of the healer, they have not even turned back to Him, says the Lord.

4:11

(Verse 11) I will overthrow you as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and you will become like a bundle snatched from the fire, and yet you did not return to me, says the Lord. LXX: I will overthrow you as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and you will become like a bundle plucked from the fire, but even so you did not turn back to me, says the Lord. This is the ultimate remedy for the ten tribes, the heretics, and all sinners. After sending death along the way of Egypt and striking down their young men with the sword, and consuming their horses, and bringing the stench of their camps into their nostrils, and yet they did not return to Him, may He overthrow them as He overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. And when they are overthrown, for the likeness of the crimes of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the worst of their buildings is burned by divine fire, they themselves will be delivered like a bundle snatched from the fire. And how Lot, while Sodom was perishing, was saved, losing his possessions and part of his body, namely his wife, as we understand (Gen. XIX): so let all those who lose the riches of Sodom be found naked, according to what we read in the Apostle: If anyone's work which he has built endures, he will receive a reward: if anyone's work is burned, he will suffer loss: but he himself will be saved, yet so as through fire (I Cor. III, 14, 15). Therefore, whoever is saved by fire is snatched away like a torch from a fire. And concerning those people whom the Savior was rebuking in the Gospel, saying, 'If you were children of Abraham, you would do the works of Abraham' (John 8:39), John the Baptist says, 'Progeny of vipers, who warned you to flee from the coming wrath?' (Matthew 3:7, 8, 9) So produce worthy fruits of repentance, and do not say within yourselves, 'We have Abraham as our father.' For I tell you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham. Therefore, both Israel and all heretics, because they had the works of Sodom and Gomorrah, are overthrown like Sodom and Gomorrah: that they may be delivered, as it were, a brand plucked out of the fire. And this is what we read in the prophet: Sodom shall be restored to her former state (Ezek. 16:55): so that whoever is a Sodomite by his own fault, after the works of Sodom have burned in him, may be restored to his former condition.

4:12-13

(Verse 12, 13.) Therefore, I will do these things to you, Israel: but after I have done these things to you, prepare to meet your God, O Israel. For behold, he who forms the mountains and creates the wind, and declares to man what is his thought, who makes the morning darkness, and treads on the heights of the earth - the Lord, the God of hosts, is his name. LXX: Therefore, I will do these things to you, Israel: but because I will do these things to you, prepare to call upon your God, O Israel. For behold, He who strengthens the thunder, and creates the spirit, and proclaims His Christ among men, making morning, and mist, and ascending above the heights of the earth: The Lord God Almighty is His name. Because we have interpreted, after it is written in Hebrew 'Eceb', and Aquila interpreted it as 'afterwards', and Theodotion as 'finally', and the Septuagint yet 'in Hebrew it can be read as: Therefore I will do these things to you, Israel, afterwards, that is, much later, and in the last times, so that it may begin again from another beginning: And when I will do this to you, prepare to meet your God, O Israel.' And again, in that place where the Septuagint translated, prepare to invoke your God, and we have set it according to Theodotion, prepare to encounter your God, Symmachus and the Fifth Edition have translated, prepare to oppose your God: which is said in Hebrew, Hechin Lacerath Eloica (). Also, for the mountains which are called Arim in Hebrew, the Seventy alone translated it as thunder. But the reason why they said 'spirit' and we said 'wind', which is called Rua in Hebrew, is clear, because both wind and spirit are referred to by this word. And what follows, proclaiming his message to humanity, which we translate as interpreters, only the Seventy translated it, proclaiming his Christ to humanity: deceived by the similarity and ambiguity of words. For if we read his Christ, which in Hebrew is called Messiah (■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■), it is written with the letters Mem, Sin, Yod, Het, and Vav, which the Seventy presumed. But if, as in Hebrew, it is according to Aquila 'his speech', according to Symmachus 'his voice', according to Theodotion 'his word', according to the fifth edition 'his eloquence', all of which can be interpreted as 'his speech', it will be written with these letters: Mem, He, which is called Ma (■ ■ ■ ■), which means 'what' or 'something'. Then Sin, Iod, Heth, which we read as Sia (Σ ■ ■ α), that is, eloquence. But O, which is written with the single letter Vau, α ■ τ ο ■, that is, his, signifies, and at the same time is read mixed with Masio (Μ α σ ■ ω), having the second letter from the word He with more. We have talked about the variety of interpretation, which will be troublesome for the negligent and pleasing for the studious: now let's move on to the meaning of what has been written. I gave astonishment to your teeth, and you did not return to me, says the Lord. I withheld rain from you, and it rained on one city and not on another; one field had rain, but another had none and withered. So two or three cities staggered to one city to drink water, but were not satisfied; yet you did not return to me, declares the Lord. I struck you with blight and mildew; your many gardens and vineyards, your fig trees and olive trees the locust devoured; yet you did not return to me, declares the Lord. I sent among you a pestilence after the manner of Egypt; I killed your young men with the sword, and carried away your horses, and I made the stench of your camp go up into your nostrils; yet you did not return to me, declares the Lord. I will overthrow you as the Lord overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and you have become like a brand plucked from the fire, and yet you have not returned to me, says the Lord. Therefore, I will do this to you, O Israel; because you have despised the past, at least be corrected for what I am about to bring upon you. And when he says, 'I will do this to you,' he remains silent about what he will do, so that while Israel hangs in uncertainty about each specific type of punishment (which is all the more terrifying because they suspect everything), they may repent and so God does not inflict what he threatens. But after I have done what I promise you I will do, prepare to invoke the Lord your God. For everyone who calls upon the name of the Lord shall be saved (Joel 2). Whether you prepare to meet your God, and eagerly receive the Lord coming to you with all your heart. It is he who strengthens the thunder, or confirms the mountains, at whose voice the pillars of heaven and the foundations of the earth tremble (Eccl 16). It is he who creates the spirit, not the Holy Spirit in this place, as heretics suspect; but we understand it as the wind, or the spirit of man: for no one knows what is in man except the spirit that is within him; and the same spirit intercedes for us with inexpressible groanings (Rom 8). Certainly, we must receive the spirit, the soul, according to what is written: 'You will take away their spirit, and they will perish and return to their dust' (Ps. 104:29). And: 'Father, into your hands I commend my spirit,' and saying this, he breathed his last (Luke 23:46). And when he creates the spirit, he proclaims his word to mankind, or he proclaims the word of him who knows the secrets of thoughts, and understands what the hidden mind ponders in silent speech, according to what we read in Jeremiah according to the Hebrew: 'The heart of man (or of all and of every man) is small and unfathomable, who can know it?' I am the Lord, searching the heart and testing the reins (Jer. XVII, 9, 10). This is also testified in the one hundred and thirty-eighth psalm: Your eyes have seen my imperfect form. The meaning is: Before I was formed, before I was deformed in limbs, while I was still contained in the seed, your eyes saw me. And Jeremiah hears from the Lord: Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you, and before you came forth from the womb, I sanctified you, and I appointed you as a prophet to the nations (Jerem. I, 5). And the evangelist, seeing, said, 'The Lord knows their thoughts' (Luke 11:17). But if we read further, proclaiming man's speech according to what was said above, in which he says, 'The Lord God will not speak unless he has revealed his secret to his servants the prophets' (Isaiah 3:7). But the one who proclaims man's thoughts and speech, whether his own or another's, he is the one who makes the dawn and the sunrise, and covers everything with clouds, and walks above the heights of the earth; his name is the Lord God Almighty. For in the Septuagint it is read: Announcing in men his Christ: under which occasion heretics, want to create the Holy Spirit in order: creating the spirit, and announcing in men his Christ: so that he may be created, he may be announced in the peoples. To these things we will respond according to their meaning, and to the Vulgate edition: Who is the creator of all, and establishes the thunder, or forms the mountains, consequently brings forth the winds from his treasures, and as the founder of the universe, promises his Son Christ to men. But when Christ has been proclaimed, then the light of truth is opened to us, not perfectly; for now we see in part, and we know in part, and through a mirror and an image we contemplate those things that are to come (I Cor. XIII). Hence it follows: making morning and mist, and rising above the heights of the earth. For the Lord is high above the high things, and does not dwell in the lowly, He who is high; but the creator of mountains ascends to the mountains, in those who have a share in heavenly things, and walking in the flesh they do not live according to the flesh, but according to the spirit. But if we read according to Symmachus and Aquila: these things I will do to you, O Israel, afterwards, and when I have done these things to you, prepare yourself to oppose your God, it is to be understood thus: I have done this to correct you, as the past speech described, and because you did not want to return to me, I will do to you what is contained in my secret. You have killed the servants whom I sent to you: finally I will send my Son: but you, according to your usual custom, by which you always oppose the will of the Lord, prepare yourself to contradict and oppose your God: according to what is written: Behold, this child is destined for the fall and rise of many, and for a sign that will be contradicted (Luke 2:34). And he says this, not because he commands what should be done; but rather he foretells what he will do willingly, as if reproaching and accusing, so that at least when corrected he does not do what was foretold.

5:1-2

(Chapter 5, Verses 1-2) Hear this word, which I bring against you as a lamentation. The house of Israel has fallen, and it shall not rise again. The virgin of Israel is cast down upon her own land; there is no one to raise her up. LXX: Hear this word, which I will take up against you as a lamentation. The house of Israel has fallen, it shall not rise again. The virgin of Israel is cast down upon her own land, there is no one to raise her up. As for the order of the letters and the true beginning of the story, the ten tribes that are called Israel were led into captivity and have never returned to their own land. But the people of Israel are called the Virgin, not because they remained in the purity of virginity, but because they were once united with the Lord like a virgin. Therefore, the prophet is commanded to take up lamentation over them, so that they may not be restored to their former state. But as for spiritual understanding, the prophet takes up lamentation over all of Israel who once beheld God with their minds and then ceased to serve Him, according to what is commanded in Ezekiel (Ezek. 2), to devour the book in which lamentation, song, and woe were written both inside and outside. Understand within the following song of Solomon, which says: The king has brought me into his chamber (Song of Songs 1:4). And the forty-fourth psalm, in which it is written: All the glory of the daughter of the king is within. But whatever is read in the letter, and appears in the bark, and is not held in the marrow of the spirit, is outside. Therefore, both literally and figuratively, in all the books of the prophets, there is lamentation written over those who repent after sin: A song is worthy for those who are not stained by the filth of sins: Woe to those who do not repent; but according to the hardness of their heart, they store up wrath for themselves on the day of wrath. But if, as we have said, there is lamentation over those who repent; and repentance restores the health of the wounds: how is it said according to the Septuagint, The house of Israel has fallen, it will not rise again. The virgin of Israel has strayed in her own land, there is no one to raise her up? This can be explained as follows: After the house of Israel has fallen of its own will, it will by no means regain its former dignity; after the virgin of Israel has strayed in her own land, she will no longer be able to find anyone to raise her up. And consider the properties of words. He who is a house, and is counted among the crowd, is said to fall. But he who errs about the number of virgins, even for a light offense, cannot be raised up: not that he will not be raised up, but that the virgin of Israel will not be raised up, and the Lord of Israel will not rise. For the glory of the one who has always followed the Lord is not the same as the glory of the one who has strayed from the flock and then was carried back on the shoulders of the good shepherd (Luke 15). And through another prophet the Lord says: I desire the repentance of the sinner rather than death (Ezek. XVIII, 32). Repentance is better compared to death and hell, not to the most pure sanctity of the Church of Christ (which has no wrinkle or blemish). We say this, not to do away with the hope of repentance according to Novatus, but to make those who are more timid and solicitous, who, while hoping for the future, lose the present through the open door of repentance, and who could have remained without injury, but receive a wound unawares, and afterwards suffer with pain. There are many mansions in my Father's house (John XIV), and star differs from star in brightness; so also is the resurrection of the dead (1 Corinthians XV): shining like the sun and moon, evening and morning star. But those who repent after sinning will be equal to other stars according to the diversity of their merits.

5:3

(Verse 3) Because thus says the Lord God: The city from which a thousand went out shall be left with a hundred, and the city from which a hundred went out shall be left with ten in the house of Israel. Similarly in the Septuagint. The divine word gives the reasons why the fallen house of Israel shall not rise again, and why the wandering or cast-down virgin of Israel shall not have a saviour. It says: The city, it says, from which a thousand went out shall be left with a hundred, and the city from which a hundred went out shall be left with ten in the house of Israel. So that where there was once a multitude, because of excessive desolation, scarcely a tenth part remains. And let us not leave the letters of the sacraments of numbers untouched: the number seven is proven to be holy, even the Sabbath, on which God rested from all his works (Gen. II). And it commands that no servile work be done on it, except only that which pertains to the soul: and that we not bear burdens on it (Num. XV). Hence, even in the wilderness, the one who gathered wood on the Sabbath, which is destined to burn, is condemned by the judgment of the Lord. And seven weeks complete the number of holy Pentecost: and the Jubilee year of remission and the sounding of trumpets is woven with this number. In the seventh month, the tabernacles are also set up, and the Hebrew, after serving for six years, will be set free in the seventh year. This is also known in secular philosophy and in the books of the physicians, of whom Galenus, very eloquent and learned, wrote three books on judgments and critical days, in which he shows the power of the number seven, saying that the most intense fevers are resolved on the seventh day: or if the magnitude of the harmful fluid and phlegm is so great that it is in no way consumed by the heat of the first week, the last day of the second week is awaited, that is, the fourteenth. But if this disease, as Hippocrates says, conquers, they pass to the twenty-first day, that is, to the end of the third week: so from the beginning of the world, the days being numbered, all labors and troubles rest on the seventh number. Finally, the captivity of the people of Israel, the destruction of the temple, was completed in the seventieth year of desolation, and seven planets are said to wander according to the number of days. Tullius gives a more detailed account of the mysteries of this number in Scipio's dream, and Plato's Timaeus is very obscure, which even Cicero's golden mouth does not make clearer. Therefore, just as the number seven has its sacrament, so it is sanctified and perfected, and, so to speak, is the true number, which is preserved by union, and is enclosed within the majesty of one God. Hence the Son says: I am in the Father, and the Father in me (John 14:11): desiring that all should be one with the Father, he speaks to him: Father, grant that just as I and you are one, so may they be one in us (ibid. 17:21). Therefore, the first beatitude is to be in the first number, which is one and true; the second, in the second, that is, in the decade; the third, in the third, that is, in the hecatontade. For just as the decade is completed by the tenth union, so the hecatontade is built from ten decades. The fourth number, which is contained in a thousand, consists of ten hecatontades. Therefore, when someone repents, they rarely return from the thousand and fourth number to the hundredth and third number. Again, he who is in the hundredth, scarcely returns to the second number of the first decade, and so it happens that the house of Israel, which had fallen, cannot rise again, and the virgin of Israel, who had gone astray, does not have a restorer on the earth. For once someone has departed from union and has lost the glory of most pure virginity (of which the Apostle says: For I am jealous for you with a godly jealousy; for I betrothed you to one husband, so that to Christ I might present you as a pure virgin, 2 Corinthians 11), they will not be able to regain their former state and the blessedness of union. And it will scarcely be granted to them to return from a thousand to a hundred, and from a hundred to ten. I have spoken these things briefly so that I may not appear to have completely avoided tropology in this chapter on account of the difficulty of numbers.

5:4-5

(Vers. 4, 5.) Because thus says the Lord to the house of Israel: seek me, and you will live, and do not seek Bethel, and do not enter Galgala, and do not pass through Bersabee, because Galgala will be taken captive, and Bethel will be useless. LXX: Because thus says the Lord to the house of Israel: seek me, and you will live, and do not seek Bethel, and do not enter Galgala, and do not pass over the well of the oath, because Galgala will be taken captive, and Bethel will be as if it does not exist. It is the custom (Al. the habit) of the Scriptures always to join joyful things after sad things and after God has threatened with punishment, He calls those whom He has terrified to repentance, according to what we read in Isaiah: Woe, sinful nation, people full of sins, wicked seed, wicked children (Isa. I, 4). And when He has said, your land is desolate, your cities are consumed by fire, foreigners will eat your regions before you (Al. in your sight), He speaks to them promising better things: Be washed, be clean: remove your evils from your minds. Learn to do good (or do good): seek justice, judge the orphan, defend the widow: and come, let us reason together, says the Lord (Isaiah 1:17). Therefore, just as in Isaiah, he sustains those whom he had terrified with his severe voice with gentle speech, so also in this prophet, he says to them: The house of Israel has fallen, it will not be added that it may rise again; the virgin Israel has wandered on the earth, there is no one to raise her up. He does not speak to them and say: The house of Israel, that is, the ten tribes, seek me and you shall live; for in not seeking me, you are dead. And when you seek, you will find; and when you find, you will live. And do not seek Bethel, where the golden calf was, and Galgalam, the place of idolatry, of which I have spoken before: All their wickedness is in Galgal (Hosea 9:15). And you shall not go to Bersabee. In Bersabee, he says, there is a well of oath, you shall not go there: where if ever the tribe of Judah erred, they used to worship idols. But Israel was so inflamed with the worship of idols that he was not satisfied with his own idols, but he went to foreign ones. Finally, he said that Galgata will be led captive, and Bethel will be useless, or completely non-existent, when those idols are overthrown. He completely overlooked Bersabee; because, after the ten tribes were defeated, the city called Bersabee, which was in the tribe of Judah at that time, was neither captured nor destroyed. It should also be noted that in this passage the Seventy Interpreters have translated the name Bersabee as 'well of an oath,' and in subsequent passages they used the same name: 'Your God lives, Dan,' and 'the way to Bersabee lives.' But they put the road by Bersabee, because they were traveling from Israel to the farthest borders of Judah, which were in Geraris, and were connected to the desert of Egypt, in order to worship idols. And it is the place where Abraham lived: and because when he and Abimelech, having given seven sheep, swore an mutual covenant, it was called the well of the oath, or the well of the seventh, because of the number seven sheep (Genesis 25): for 'Sabe' signifies both. However, according to the allegorical interpretation of the laws, it is enjoined upon the house of Israel, that is, those who profess to have knowledge of God, not to seek Bethel, and not to enter into Galgal, and not to pass by or ascend to the well of the oath; but rather to seek God and live in him. However, they seek Bethel, which is interpreted as the house of God, those who say: The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord; and they trust in the buildings, of which the Lord spoke to his disciples: The days will come, in which there will not be left a stone upon a stone that will not be destroyed (Luke 21:6). And they enter into Galilee, who after the coming of Christ desire to be circumcised again. For in Galilee the people were circumcised a second time. Hence the place itself received its name: because the Lord took away the reproach of Egypt from them (Jos. 5). And in Beersheba, he says, you shall not pass unto the well of the oath: lest you consider those the borders of Judaea, which according to the letter of Scripture were promised from Dan to Beersheba. And do not say with the prophet: God is known in Judaea, his great name in Israel (Ps. 75:1); but listen to the apostles: Their sound has gone forth into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world (Ps. 18:4): for Galilee, that is, the circumcision of the flesh, will be led captive by the true circumcision of the heart; and Bethel, which you think is the house of God, will not remain, or, as I think better, will be useless, that is, Aven: so that it may by no means be called the house of God, but may be called the house of inutility, or of idols. Another way: Bethel seeks only the letter that sets in the west, and not the meaning, which is God, seeks in words: and it enters into Galgala, which aims for greater revelations, promising himself knowledge of the supernatural, and it passes, or ascends to the well, from which the Samaritan woman, desiring to draw water, which could not quench her thirst, did not know him, from whose belly spring forth rivers of living water into eternal life (John 4).

5:6

(Verse 6.) Seek the Lord, and live: lest the house of Joseph be burned with fire, and it devour, and there be none to quench it. LXX: Seek the Lord, and live: lest the house of Joseph be kindled with fire, and it consume it, and there be none to quench the house of Israel. Just as it is said from the person of God, 'Seek me, and you will live,' so the prophet speaks of the Lord, that they should seek him and live. For in seeking the Lord, they begin to live; but if they do not seek him, and therefore do not live, the house of Joseph will immediately be kindled like fire, which we must understand as referring to the ten tribes called Israel, who held the original name for the greater part of the people, because of Jeroboam, who was from the tribe of Ephraim and the house of Joseph. But there were two tribes which were ruled by the lineage of David, who was from the tribe of Judah, called Judah, and they possessed Jerusalem, in which the temple of God was. And when the house of Joseph is set on fire, it will devour and consume Bethel, of which I spoke earlier: Do not seek Bethel, and there will be no one to extinguish it, when it is set on fire by its kings. For in the Septuagint, instead of Bethel, the house of Israel is read, with those interpreting the meaning more than the word, so that, with the reign of Jeroboam and all the subsequent kings who succeeded him in power, the ten tribes, which are called Israel, may burn. This is the fire that is kindled, or shines and inflames the house of Joseph, so that Bethel is consumed, of which it is said elsewhere: Walk in the light of your fire, and in the flame that you have kindled (Isaiah 50:11). And because we have frequently referred the house of Joseph (because of Jeroboam, who separated the people of God from the lineage of David and made golden calves in Dan and Bethel, and said, there is no part for us in David, neither inheritance in the son of Jesse (1 Samuel 22:36)), to the person of heretics, who, with composed speech, have fashioned beautiful and attractive, and, so to speak, golden images, and worship the works of their own hands, and promise themselves an image under the form of cows for agriculture, it is said to them: Seek the Lord and live, the one who says: I am the way, the truth, and the life (John 14:16): so that after they have walked in him and found the truth, then those who were previously dead may begin to live. And if they do not do this, they will be burned by the fires of the devil, and no one will be able to be found from their leaders who have themselves been consumed by the heretical fire, who can extinguish the devouring flame of all, especially Bethel, which assumes for itself the false name of the house of God.

5:8-9

(Verse 8 onwards) You who turn judgment into wormwood and abandon righteousness on earth, who makes the Bear and Orion, who turns darkness into morning and darkens day into night. He who calls the waters of the sea and pours them out on the face of the earth: His name is the Lord. He who laughs at destruction, bringing devastation upon the strong. The One who brings judgment from on high and establishes justice on earth; the One who does all things, who transforms and turns the shadow of death into morning and darkens day into night. He who calls the water of the sea, and pours it out upon the face of the earth: The Lord is his name. He who brings destruction upon strongholds, and brings misery upon fortresses. In this place, the Hebrew truth diverges greatly from the Vulgate edition, as the discerning reader immediately understands without our prompting. Therefore, let us first explain according to the Hebrews, and then what seems to us in the translation of the Septuagint, if we are worthy of Christ revealing it to us. Let us say, the house of Joseph, that is, the house of Ephraim, and through this, the royal house, and Bethel, or as the Septuagint translated, the house of Israel, that is, both kings and peoples, worshippers and idols alike will be overthrown, who have provoked God to anger with their unjust judgment. And they turned the sweetness of judgment into the bitterness of wormwood, which is a type of very bitter herb, taking up wickedness, and abandoning justice. Now what is this justice, the following verse shows: The one who makes the Bear and Orion, and turns darkness into morning, and transforms day into night. Of whom it was said above: He who forms the mountains and creates the wind, and announces his word to man, making the morning mist, and walking on the highest points of the earth: The Lord God of hosts is his name, he is the Creator of the Bear, which in Hebrew is called Chima (כִּימָא), and in Symmachus and Theodotion it is translated as Pleiades. It is commonly known as Boötes: and what follows, Orion, which in Hebrew is called Chasil (חָסִיל), Symmachus interprets as absolute stars, Theodotion as the evening. However, the Hebrew, who has taught us in the holy Scriptures, thinks that Chasil should be interpreted as splendor, and generally signify shining stars. But when we hear about Arcturus and Orion, we should not follow the fables of poets, and the ridiculous and monstrous lies, with which they even try to defame the heavens and place the wages of prostitution among the stars, saying (Aeneid. book I and III):

Arcturus, the rainy Hyades, and the twin Bears: And Orion armed with gold looks upon them. But the Hebrew names, which are called differently among them, have been translated into the words of the mythological Gentiles into our language, which we cannot understand what is said, except through those words which we have learned and absorbed through usage and error. Hence, in the book of Kings, they have rendered the Hebrew word Raphaim into Greek as 'titans': which is a famous tale among the pagans, from which they write about the battle of the giants, and the Typhoean weapons, and the mountain of Etna placed on Enceladus, from whose movement Trinacria trembles. But this is the God, the creator of all things, who makes the Bear and Orion, who changes night into day and day into night, and nurtures the most bitter waters of the sea with ethereal heat, and distills them into the sweet taste of rain, like a medicinal gourd, which, by the heat of the higher circle, draws up moisture and blood aloft: from which we learn where the rains come from. And what follows: Who smiles upon vastness over strength, turns back to the present time, and there is order: Who is the creator of all things, also threatens captivity upon Samaria, and brings depopulation upon the mighty: for he turns judgment into wormwood, and leaves justice on the earth. Where we said, 'he who smiles,' Aquila interpreted as 'the one who smiles.' Properly, however, it is called 'a smirk,' which we can refer to as a smile when someone is angry, and with slightly parted lips pretends to smile in order to show the magnitude of their anger. Let us also say according to the Septuagint: 'God judges from on high when He judges the truth, and He renders to each one according to his deeds.' And everyone who desires to be an imitator and a son of His, and to be perfect just as His Father is perfect, who dwells in heaven (Matt. V), judges from on high and does not imitate that judge who did not fear God and did not respect man, and with a perverse judgment did not elevate his sentence to heaven but rather lowered it to the lowest levels (Luke XV). And what follows: and He has placed justice on earth, according to that which we must accept, that Christ has given us His righteousness, and has not rejected it: but has laid it on the earth, so that, with all iniquity overcome, He might make us heavenly from earthly. I think from this passage even a pagan poet has stolen, who, while expounding on the simplicity and blessedness of country folk, introduced.

Justice, surpassing the limits of the Earth, made its extreme footprints through them. And what they say, that He does everything and transforms everything, in one word they comprehend Arcturus and Orion, neglecting the proper names in Greek translation. But God transforms everything when He makes heavenly things from earthly ones, and bestows upon human beings the likeness of angels: when the moon shines with the brightness of the sun, and the sun has sevenfold light, when the animalistic, weak, and corruptible human is transformed into a spiritual, robust, and incorruptible being, changing glory but not nature: when the intelligent ones will shine like the splendor of the firmament, and what is written will be fulfilled: One glory of the sun, another glory of the moon, another glory of the stars. For star differs from star in brightness; so also is the resurrection of the dead (1 Corinthians 15:41). For when every creature shall be freed from the slavery of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. This is the God who transforms all things, also changing the shadow of death into light (Luke 1); for when those who sat in darkness and the shadow of death saw a great light, and those who were the children of night and darkness became the children of light and the children of day. This is God who also turns day into darkness: their day who said: Crucify, crucify him (John XIX, 6), remove such a person from the earth: when from the sixth hour the day turned into the darkness of Jewish blindness. And not only literally, but also according to a higher understanding, the light that rose for them in the Law and the prophets, turned into darkness, ignorant of what they read, what they heard, so that what was written about them may be fulfilled: Let their eyes be darkened so that they may not see: and their backs be constantly bent (Psalm LXVIII, 24). This God calls the water of the sea to Himself, and pours it out upon the surface of the earth, making the righteous out of sinners. To illustrate this, let us put forth just one example to emphasize brevity. The Apostle Paul, like a turbulent and fierce storm, pursued the raging waves of the sea and endeavored to oppress the Church of God. But when he was called by the Lord, he was poured out upon the entire surface of the earth to preach the Gospel from Jerusalem to Illyricum, and to build not upon another foundation where it had already been preached (Rom. XV); but rather to extend as far as Spain, and to run from the Red Sea, or rather from one ocean to another, imitating his Lord and the sun of righteousness, of whom we read: His going forth is from the end of heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it (Ps. XIX, 6), so that the earth would grow faint before him before his zeal for preaching. This God divides contrition over strength, so that he may make those who are strong in a bad way weak, and they may imitate the Apostle saying: When I am weak, then I am stronger (2 Cor. XII). For even the children of this world are wiser than the children of light in their generation (Luke XXVI). The strength of the body is weakness of the soul, and again the strength of the soul is weakness of the body. Therefore, the Lord, who dispenses all things by reason and truly does all things by judgment, divides contrition over the strong enemy, so that he may bring misery upon the fortification which he erected against the knowledge of God. Regarding this, we read in Proverbs: The wise man enters fortified cities and destroys the stronghold in which the wicked have put their trust (Prov. XXI, 22). This applies to all worldly strength, but it specifically applies to heretics who try to strengthen the falsehood of their doctrines with arguments, sophisms, and dialectical art. However, the wise man destroys it and with the help of God's aid, shows that all these fortifications are utterly vain, in order to bring misery upon them and, with their pride humbled, they can say with the Apostle: 'Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death?' (Rom. VII, 24).

5:10

(Verse 10) They hated the one who reproves at the gate, and they abhor the one who speaks truthfully. LXX: They hated the one who reproves at the gates, and they abhorred the holy word. These are the ones whom God derides with devastation and brings upon them destruction. They hate the one who reproves at the gate, that is, in judgment: either me, or other prophets who were sent to them, speaking truthfully or the flawless word, as Symmachus interpreted, or the holy speech, as Theodotion and the LXX translated. But at the gate, according to the ancient Jewish custom, there were judgments of the people, as we often read and frequently interpret, so that neither a farmer coming to court would be terrified by the crowded city and the new appearance, nor a dweller of the city would hurry far from the city and seek transportation for his livestock. This we have said according to the literal meaning. However, it is a great sin to hate someone who corrects, especially if they correct out of love and not out of hatred, if it is done in private to private, if with the inclusion of another brother, if afterwards in the presence of the Church, so that it may not seem like the accusation is made to detract from you but to bring forth the accusation for your improvement (Matthew 18). We often read in the Scriptures about the two gates, of death and of life, of vices and virtues, as in the Psalms: 'You have lifted me up from the gates of death, that I may declare all your praises in the gates of the daughter of Zion' (Isaiah 9:16). There is no doubt that it signifies the Church, the lofty mountain of Zion, and the city of the living God, heavenly Jerusalem, and the multitude of angels, and the early Church, who are enrolled in heaven. He who has been exalted in the gates of Zion will not be able to fear the gates of death, of which the Lord spoke to Peter: Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it (Matt. XVI, 18). Clearly in another psalm we learn about the gates of virtue: Open to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them and give thanks unto the Lord. This is the gate of the Lord; the righteous shall enter into it (Ps. XVII, 19). And finally, Wisdom, confident in the gates of the city, said: As long as the innocent possess justice, they shall not be confounded (Sap. VI, 11). I consider the gates of the city, that is, the souls of believers in Christ, to be virtues, through which Christ enters into believers. And because it is not written in which gates they hate the one who rebukes, whether in the wicked or in the good, we refer to both. The prophet accuses sinners standing at the gates of vices, and for this reason he is held in detestation by them. Or certainly the prophet himself stands at the gates and beginnings of virtues, and he is hated by those whom he rebukes, and it is not enough for sinners to hate the one who rebukes at the gates, unless they also abhor the holy word that is spoken from his mouth. For whoever does not receive the prophet does not receive the one who sent him (Matt. X). But if the holy word, or he who spoke perfectly, they abominated (moreover, the holy word is the Lord Jesus, of whom it is said: You will not allow your holy one to see corruption (Ps. XV, 10)), all the Jews saying anathema to Jesus, they abhor the word of God, which is both perfect and holy and immaculate. For the abomination of the sinner is piety. Whatever we have said about the Jews can be applied equally to the Gentiles and to heretics, all of whom abhor the holy Scriptures, in which the word of God is found. Some of them, while perversely interpreting what they read, place abomination in the House of God.

5:11-13

(Verse 11 and following) Therefore, because you plundered the poor and took the choice spoil from them, you will build houses of cut stone but not live in them. You will plant pleasant vineyards but not drink their wine, for I know your many crimes and powerful sins, you who oppress the righteous and take bribes, and push aside the needy in the gate. Therefore, the wise will be silent in that time, for it is an evil time. LXX: Therefore, because you struck the poor with fists, and took from them choice gifts, you built houses with hewn stones, but will not live in them. You planted desirable vineyards, but will not drink their wine; for I know your many wicked acts and your mighty sins: trampling the righteous, accepting bribes, and turning away the poor at the gates. Therefore, those who have understanding will keep silent at that time, for it is an evil time. Lest perhaps Israel might think that they were delivered to punishment by the enemies only for idolatry, he joins other things which he committed, having lost the religion of truth. 'You were ravaging,' he says, 'the poor so that you could take from him who scarcely had necessary food, and whatever precious and beautiful things you saw, you handed them over to your own uses. And from the price of those things which you were seizing and taking from the poor, you built houses with squared stone, so that by despoiling men, you could clothe walls with marble, which, because you built them from plunder, and not only a dwelling and a roof, which human weakness requires, but also beauty and delights, you prepared them suddenly for captivity or death, you will not dwell in them.' You have also planted very loving vineyards for future drinks, and you do not drink wine from them, because I know all your sins and crimes, and strong sins that provoke my wrath. You are enemies of justice, all of you who accept gifts and oppress the poor in judgment. Therefore, the poor and wise person, when he sees the judge who redeems him, will be silent in that time, because it is an evil time. Certainly, it should be understood in this way: what profit is there now in enumerating your sins, since there is already no remedy, and the enemy army surrounds the walls of your cities? We can also say this about heretics, who plunder the poor or strike his head with a raised hand, for this is what κατεκονδύλιζον means in Greek, according to what we read above, striking the head of the poor. For heretics do not strike anyone except the poor, who cannot withstand the threat: not in other members, but in the main part, the heart, and in the truth of faith. I consider them poor who, relying on simple faith alone, are unable to respond to the malice of heretics. And whatever good works they have prepared for the gifts of God, they will lose in the time of battle and struggle unless they resist their adversaries. Those adversaries, on the other hand, build homes for themselves through the composition and structure of words, in order to remain safe and secure. But they will not dwell in them, for they will be destroyed and overthrown by men of the Church. And they not only build houses, but also plant most loving and desirable vineyards, so that they may imitate the mysteries of Christ; but they do not drink wine from them, except what is the unstoppable fury of dragons. For the Lord expected these vineyards to bear fruit, and they brought forth not grapes, but thorns and briars: not judgment, but outcry, with which they blaspheme against their God with insane mouths. Therefore, they will not dwell in their houses, and they will not drink the wine of the vineyards they have planted, because the Lord has known many of their wickednesses. Here, knowledge is to be understood not according to what we read elsewhere: The Lord knows those who are his (2 Tim. 2:19), but according to the fact that nothing is hidden from God, and he knows all the secrets of sinners. 'I have known', he says, 'many impious acts: which are not only many, but also strong and oppressive, trampling on justice itself, or on the one who is just. And you receive, he says, a payment: for which all likewise transferred propitiation: we have said gift; but according to the language of the Scriptures, price is called ἑλλάγμα', which we also read in the Gospel: But what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Matt. 16:26)? Even the poor have turned aside at the gates: or as Symmachus interpreted, they have oppressed, so that they could sell judgments contrary to the truth of the law by means of bribes, falling into that which is written: Gifts blind even the eyes of the wise (Deut. XVI, 19). This is what heretics accept, so that they can turn the severity of the Scriptures, which threaten torment to sinners, into blessings; and while they promise prosperity to the rich, they are only harsh and severe with the poor. Therefore, when a knowledgeable and wise ecclesiastical man recognizes many impieties in what is called the house of God, and not only many, but also strong ones that can suppress justice, and the madness of scholars has gone so far that they accept bribes in court and do everything for gifts, and they also avoid the poor at the gates and disdain to hear them, let him be silent at that time, lest he give the holy to dogs, and cast pearls before swine (Matt. 7), who, when converted, will trample them and imitate Jeremiah saying: I was alone, for I am filled with bitterness (Jer. 15:17). And that in the Psalms: I am alone until I pass by (Is. 140:10).

5:14-15

(Vers. 14, 15.) Seek good, and not evil, so that you may live, and the Lord God of hosts will be with you as you said: Hate evil, and love good, and establish justice in the gates, perhaps the Lord God of hosts will have mercy on the remnant of Joseph. LXX: Seek good, and not evil, so that you may live, and the Lord God almighty will be with you, as you said: We have hated evil and loved good, and establish justice in the gates, so that the Lord God may have mercy on those who remain from Joseph. You say that God is with you because you are children of Abraham; listen to what follows: If you are Abraham's children, do the works of your father. What are the works of your father Abraham? Love what is good, and not what is evil. It is a great sin, not only to do evil, but also to love it. Many sin, and when the heat of desire is fulfilled, their conscience bites them, and they regret their sin. But there are those who not only do not feel sorry for doing what is evil, but they also boast in their wickedness, fulfilling what is written: When a sinner comes into the depths of impiety, he despises it. Seek good, therefore, and not evil. For if you seek good, in seeking good, you immediately repel evil. However, you would never seek good unless you had first repelled evil, fulfilling the words of the Psalmist saying: Turn away from evil, and do good (Ps. XXXVI, 27). And when you seek good and avoid evil, then you will live in him who says: I am the life (John XIV, 6). He seeks good who believes in him who speaks in the Gospel: I am the good shepherd (Ibid., X, 11). He who flees from evil repels it, of whom it is written: The world is placed in wickedness (1 John 5:16). And in the Lord's Prayer he says: Deliver us from evil (Matthew 6:13). And when you seek good and not evil, and live, then the Lord God of hosts will be with you, as you have said, because you are descendants of Abraham. It is not enough to seek good and not seek evil, unless you have ■πε■κησιν in both, so that you first hate evil, then love good. He hates evil, who is not overcome by pleasure alone, but he hates the works of pleasure: and he loves good, who does what is good not unwillingly, or out of necessity, or out of fear of the laws; but rather because it is good, so that he may have the reward of good work in his own conscience, and the love that he possesses for good. Therefore the Apostle says: 'God loves a cheerful giver' (2 Corinthians 9). For not every act of charity pleases God, unless it is offered with cheerfulness. And when you hate evil and love good, establish justice at the gates, of which it is said above, so that, with iniquity expelled, truth may return. And if you do this, perhaps the Lord God Almighty will have mercy on the remnants of Joseph from the tribe of Ephraim and the ten tribes, and they will be able to escape captivity. All these things can be applied to heretics, so that, leaving behind the error they have fabricated, they may return to the Church and hate their former doctrines, and love in the Church of the Lord the truth, and exercise true judgement at the gates of vices and virtues, leaving those behind and passing to these, and may hope for mercy those who have been able to escape from the jaws of the devil. By changing the order according to the LXX, the reading of this chapter can be made clearer: Just as you said, we have hated evil and loved good, so seek good and not evil, that you may live, and may the Lord God Almighty be with you, and bring justice in the gates, so that the Lord God Almighty may have mercy on the remnant of Joseph.

5:16-17

(Verse 16, 17.) Therefore, thus says the Lord God of hosts, the ruler: In all the streets there will be lamentation, and in all the public squares people will say, 'Alas! Alas!' They will summon the farmer to mourning and those skilled in lamentation to lament. And in all the vineyards there will be lamentation, for I will pass through your midst, says the Lord. LXX: Therefore, thus says the Lord God Almighty: In all the streets there will be lamentation, and in all the roads people will say, 'Alas! Alas!' The farmer will be called to mourning, and those who know lamentation to lament, and in all the streets there will be lamentation: for I will pass through the midst of you, says the Lord. I have commanded you to seek good, and not evil, so that you may live, and the Lord God of hosts will be with you. And again I say (lest you say you were only warned once): Hate evil, and love good, and restore justice in the gates; those who hated the one who rebuked in the gate, let the Lord have mercy on the rest of Joseph; and because you refused to do so, trampling on my commandments and turning against me, a turning away shoulder: therefore the Lord God Almighty, who is the Lord of hosts, says this: everywhere there is lamentation, everywhere there is mourning. The farmers will be called to mourn, and those who know the customs of the province will be called to incite tears, so that there will be mourning and lamentation not in all the streets, as was said above, but in the vineyards; where once there was material for joy, let it be the origin of tears. And all these things will happen, because I will pass through, says the Lord. The Hebrew word, 'I will pass through', which in their language is called Evor (עוור), whenever it is used in the Holy Scriptures in the person of God, is to be understood as punishment, so that it may not remain among them; but let it pass through and leave. And in other places according to the interpretation of Aquila, when God is angry, He calls His fury and wrath 'ἐνυπερθεσμός', which can all be applied to heretics, because they have refused to do both what is right and what is just, so there will be mourning in all their streets. For the wide and spacious road leads to destruction (Matthew 7); and each heretic and gentile has their own streets in their sand and fantasies, to which it is subsequently added: 'Woe, woe' will be said about everything that is outside. For those who are in the Church do not listen, which is the ultimate punishment; but if perhaps they have sinned, lamentation will be taken upon them. Therefore, however, it will be said outside or in all ways, woe, woe: because they do not have one way that leads to life, and which is the royal way, but crooked and perverse, and deviating to the right and to the left, while they do not hear the Lord saying: Do not be too righteous. And: The ways that are on the left are perverse. And they encounter a twofold woe, of the flesh and of the spirit, of the present age and of the future. When, on the other hand, ecclesiastics hear: Rejoice, I say again, rejoice (Philip. IV, 4). But even the farmer is called to mourning (for heretics indeed have their farmers, in whose fields thistles and thorns grow), and those who know how to lament are called to mourn, either for their own sins or for the sins of others; although we can take these things in a good sense, so that the man of the Church, powerful to provoke penance, may imitate his Lord saying: We have lamented, and you have not mourned (Luc. VII, 32), and let him mourn for the heretics, as King Saul of Israel once mourned for Samuel (I Reg. XV). And the Apostle says that he mourns over those who have not repented (II Cor. XII). And in all vineyards there will be lamentation, because the vineyards of Sodom are their vineyards. And for the wine of joy, which gladdens the heart of man, they have brought the wine of dragons and the incurable rage of asps. And all these things they will suffer; for the Lord will pass through their midst, so that he does not dwell among them, nor say: I will dwell in them, and walk among them. And behold, I am with you all days even to the consummation of the age. (Matthew 28:20)

5:18-20

(Verse 18-20.) Woe to those who long for the day of the Lord! Why do you long for it? That day will be darkness, not light. It will be as though a man fled from a lion only to meet a bear, as though he entered his house and rested his hand on the wall only to have a snake bite him. Will not the day of the Lord be darkness, not light— pitch-dark, without a ray of brightness? Woe to those who long for the day of the Lord! Why do you long for the day of the Lord? And this is darkness, and not light. As if a man should flee from the face of a lion, and a bear should meet him: or enter into the house, and lean with his hand upon the wall, and a serpent should bite him. Shall not the day of the Lord be darkness, and not light? and obscurity, and no brightness in it? Lest the tribe of Juda be thought to neglect men of his own stock, and to confer the speech of prophecy upon the ten tribes: Thou also shalt go to the king against Babylon, and shalt speak to him: There are gathered together all the kings of the earth against Jerusalem: how art thou fallen, thou virgin, daughter of Babylon, to be destroyed? Shall not day overtake thee suddenly, and thou perish with the sword? For there is not so much evil in the injury of captivity, as there is good in the things which the Lord promises after captivity: to which the prophet replied that it is in vain for them to wait for what will happen a long time after, in the coming of the Son of God after seventy years of captivity in Babylon, which will be followed by devastation, poverty, and countless miseries. For, he says, when those fleeing from the face of Nebuchadnezzar meet Assuerus, under whom the story of Esther is narrated, or when the empire of the Assyrians and Chaldeans is destroyed, the Medes and Persians will rise up. And when, during the reign of Cyrus, you returned, and at the command of Darius began to build the house of the Lord, and you placed all your trust in the temple, so that you may find rest in it and weary hands may rest upon its walls, then Alexander, the king of the Macedonians, also known as Antiochus Epiphanes, will come and dwell in the temple and will bite you like a snake, not outside in Babylon and Susa, but within the borders of the holy land (or yours). By these things it is proven that the day which you desire is not one of light and joy, but of darkness and sorrow. We have briefly stated these things according to history, so as not to completely leave the opinion of the Jews untouched. However, there is no doubt that all of our people understand the day of darkness, the day of judgment, about which Sophonias also writes: The great day of the Lord is near, it is also very swift: the voice of the day of the Lord is bitter and harsh (Sophon. I, 14). And Isaiah says: Behold, the day of the Lord comes, a day of incurable rage and wrath, to make the earth a desolation and to destroy sinners from it (Is. XIII, 9). At the same time, the confidence of the proud is shaken, who, in order to appear just in the eyes of men, usually wait for the day of judgment and say: Would that the Lord would come, that we may be allowed to be dissolved and be with Christ (Phil. I), imitating the Pharisee who spoke in the Gospel (Lk. XVIII, 11, 12): God, I give thanks to you, because I am not like other men, robbers, unjust, adulterers, and like this tax collector. They fast twice on the Sabbath: they give tithes of all that they possess. For from this very thing, because they long for the day of the Lord and do not fear it, they are judged worthy of punishment, because there is no one without sin among men, and the stars are unclean before him (Job 25). And he concluded all things under sin, so that he might have mercy on all (Galatians 3). Therefore, since no one can judge the judgment of God, and we will also have to give an account of every idle word (Matthew 12): and Job offered sacrifices daily for his children, lest perhaps they might think anything perverse against the Lord (Job 1), what audacity is it to hear among the Corinthians: You reign without us (I Corinthians 4, 8): and I wish you did reign, that we also might reign with you. Certainly, if their own conscience did not prick them, they ought to imitate Paul saying: 'Who is scandalized, and I am not on fire?' (2 Cor. 2:29) and to be concerned for all, so that, as lovers of themselves, they may not desire the torments of others, as if they themselves were the rulers, just as someone would want their homeland and city to be destroyed so that they alone may enjoy the friendship of the victors. We often say in times of distress and tribulation: 'Oh, if only it were allowed for me to depart from this body and be liberated from the miseries of this world', not knowing that as long as we are in this flesh, we have a place for repentance; but if we depart, we will hear that of the Prophet: 'But who will confess to you in hell?' (Ps. 6:6). This is the sadness of the world, which leads to death, as the Apostle does not want to perish the one who has fornicated with his father's wife (I Cor. V), as Judas perished unfortunate, who connected betrayal and murder with even greater sadness (Matth. XXVII), and murder worse than all other murders: so that where he thought to find a remedy, and death to be an end to his troubles, there he would find a lion and a bear and a snake. By these names it seems to me that either different punishments are being signified, or the devil himself, who is rightly called lion and bear and snake. And when we think that Isaiah says: Go, my people, into your chambers; shut the door, hide yourself for a little while, until the wrath of the Lord passes (Isa. XXVI, 20), and be as if in our house, as if resting in hell: then the snake will bite us, which in this place is called Nahas, and in Job is called Leviathan. We learn more fully about its nature and terror in the very volume itself. However, in the darkness and shadows that are contrary to light and splendor, the diversity of torments is explained.

5:21-22

(Verses 21, 22.) I hated and rejected your feasts, and I will not take the smell of your heavens. But if you bring me burnt offerings and your gifts, I will not accept them, and I will not look at the fat of your animals. LXX: I have hated and rejected your feasts, and I will not be pleased with your assemblies. And if you bring me burnt offerings and sacrifices, I will not receive them, and I will not look upon the pleasantness of your presence: This is specifically said against the tribe of Judah, and those who had migrated from Israel for the ceremonies of God, and yet did not depart from the high places, and worshipped idols, and defiled the sacrifices of God with the magnitude of their sins. For I never said concerning the oblations of the calves, which they offered in Dan and Bethel: If you offer to me holocausts and your offerings, I will not accept them. But God hates and not only hates, but also has cast away their festivals, those who flee from the lion and fall into the bear, and enter the house and are bitten by the serpent, because they do not celebrate the festivals of God, but their own festivals, says the Lord: I hate and have cast away your festivals. And it does not receive the assembly of such men, nor does it have a fragrance of good scent, and it abhors all their gifts, and it does not regard the richest offerings. Indeed, this happens not only to the people of that time, but also to us, if we commit similar offenses, and think that we can offer to God the gains from robberies and perjuries and wicked deeds, and redeem our sins, when we have read that Zacchaeus restored fourfold whatever he had stolen and offered half of his well-acquired possessions (Luke 19). For one could not offer what was wrongfully acquired in the gifts of God, unless one first returned it to its rightful owners, and afterwards fulfilled what is written: Honor the Lord with your just labors (Prov. III, 9); and: The redemption of a man's soul is his own riches (Prov. XIII, 8): for God does not accept the vows of a prostitute's earnings (Deut. XXIII). On the contrary, the just one can say: Let my prayer be directed as incense in your sight (Psal. CXL, 2). The speech of Judas, the traitor, was turned into sin: for it did not have a good odor; but it spoke through actions: 'My wounds have become foul and corrupt, because of my foolishness' (Psalm 38:6). All of this can also be said about heretics, who while fleeing from a lion, run into a bear, and upon entering a house which they think is the Church of God, they lean on walls which they themselves made, and they are bitten by a serpent. Darkness and gloom take away their light and day, so that tangible darkness surrounds them, and their beginnings are destroyed. God hates their sacrifices, and distances himself from them, and whenever they are gathered in the name of the Lord, he detests their stench and closes his nostrils. To hate, to distance oneself, and to not smell, is spoken in the likeness of human language, so that we may understand the attitude of God through our words. And if they offer burnt offerings, or appear to fast, or give alms, or promise chastity, which are true sacrifices, the Lord does not accept those, nor does he deem worthy to look at their fattest offerings. For God judges not the greatness of sacrifices, but the merits and reasons of those who offer them. Hence, the widow who in the Gospel (Luke 21) gave two small coins as an offering is preferred by the Savior over those who believed they were offering the fattest vows and the choicest sacrifices, when in reality they were giving very little, since she had given everything she had. These things are said more clearly and truly after the coming of the Lord to the Jewish people, who, with the temple and altar destroyed, believe they are offering sacrifices, which God abhors and rejects their festivals, and does not accept the aroma of their assembly when they gather and say, 'Crucify him, crucify him' (John 19:6) and 'His blood be on us and on our children' (Matthew 27:25). And if they offer holocausts in synagogues, and gifts in the councils of Satan, and the richest vows, the Lord does not regard them, just as He did not regard the gifts of Cain (Genesis IV). Those who worship the one true God and offer rightly, yet they are not regarded because they do not acknowledge the confession of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. But our offerings, that is, the Church, which we offer from our first fruits, are regarded by God, just as He once regarded the sacrifices of Abel.

5:23

(Verse 23) Take away from me the tumult of your songs, and I will not listen to the music of your harp. LXX: Take away from me the sound of your songs, and I will not listen to the melody of your instruments. Beautiful songs of the Levites, with which they praised God, he calls tumult and confused sound, because there is no beautiful praise in the mouth of a sinner, and they were accustomed to offer these same things to idols as well (Eccles. 15). The prayer and psalms of the Jews, which they sing in the synagogues, is a composed praise of heretics to the Lord, and, if I may say so, the grunts of their own and the braying of donkeys, whose songs are more comparable to the works of the Israelites. But receive psalms and songs, lyre and organs, either literally understood among the people of Israel, which were once made in the image of things to come, or spiritually understood in us and in heretics, which are heard by the Lord if we direct them with good works; if with evil, He closes His ears and does not deign to hear the songs of the wicked.

5:24

(Verse 24) And judgment will be revealed like water, and justice like a strong torrent. LXX: And it will roll like water, and justice like an impassable torrent. Just as water, when it flows downhill, uncovers what it previously covered and exposes it to the eyes of all, so will the judgment and justice of God, which once judged His own people, be revealed to all, and it will be carried like the strongest torrent. Whatever it seizes, it drags along with it, and it does not allow anything to stand in its way. But the judgment of the wicked is tossed like water according to the Septuagint; for it does not stand in one opinion, but is carried about by every wind of doctrine, condemning what it had once approved, and considering what it had formerly praised as worthless. Their justifications are compared not to pure and clear springs and rivers, but to turbid and muddy torrents, which do not have their own waters, but collect them from rocks, cliffs, and brambles. Whoever wishes to cross them will immediately be seized and thrown headlong, and with his feet overthrown, will not be able to say: He established my feet upon a rock (Ps. 123:5). For he will walk upon the sands, which do not have a foundation, and when he will be in danger, he will speak according to the Hebrews: A torrent has passed over my soul (Ps. 39:3). On the contrary, the judgments of the just are firm and unchanging, not flowing like water, and justice does not rush like an impassable torrent: The thoughts of the just are judgments (Prov. XII, 5).

5:25-27

(Verse 25 and following) Did you offer to Me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness for forty years, O house of Israel? You also took along the tabernacle of Moloch and the star of your god Rephan, the images which you made for yourselves. Therefore I will exile you beyond Damascus, says the Lord, whose name is the God of hosts. LXX: Did you offer to Me sacrifices and victims in the desert for forty years, O house of Israel, and take up the tabernacle of Melchom and the star of your god Repham, the figures of them which you made for yourselves. And I will transfer you beyond Damascus, says the Lord: God almighty is his name. From this place we learn that all the sacrifices and offerings that Israel made in the desert were not offered to God, but to their king Moloch, whose tabernacles they carried and worshiped the image of their idols and statues. And in the following statement, it shows what this image or idol is: The star of your God, which is called Chocab in Hebrew, that is, Lucifer, whom the Saracens have been worshiping until now. For what reason did the Lord make them migrate across Damascus, that is, to the Assyrians and Chaldeans: his omnipotence is demonstrated by the fact that he is the Lord God of hosts. We ask why they did not offer sacrifices and offerings to God in the desert; but to their king, whom they call Lucifer? From the time they transformed gold into the head of a calf, saying: These are your gods, Israel, who brought you out of the land of Egypt (Exod. III, 24), it is shown that everything they did was not for God, but for idols. And what we read afterwards that they offered certain things to the Lord, they did not do so willingly but out of fear of punishment, and by the killing of those who fell because of idols. But the Lord does not look at what is offered, but at the will of the one offering. Finally, wherever the opportunity arose, they always turned back in their hearts to Egypt, desiring garlic and onions, and cucumbers and Egyptian meat, and despising the manna that was given from heaven (Numbers 11). To understand this, let us turn to the story told by the first martyr of the Gospel, Stephen, worthy of his name, in the Acts of the Apostles: 'And they made a calf in those days, and offered a sacrifice to the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their hands. But God turned and delivered them up to serve the host of heaven, as it is written in the book of the Prophets: Did you offer victims and sacrifices to me for forty years in the desert, O house of Israel?' And you took up the tent of Moloch and the star of your god Rephan, the figures that you made to worship; and I will send you into exile beyond Babylon. It should not be thought that the first martyr erred, who, because it is written in the prophet: 'Beyond Damascus,' said 'beyond Babylon.' For he placed more emphasis on understanding than on the exact word, because they were led from Damascus to Babylon, or beyond Babylon. But in that place where Luke put Μολχ , and it is written in Hebrew as Melchechem (): Aquila and LXX translated Μολχμ : Symmachus and Theodotio, for your kings. Also, for what is read in the Septuagint as Rephan; Aquila and Symmachus translating the Hebrew itself, they put Chion (), Theodotio 'amau r sin', that is, darkness. Again, for Sochoth (), Aquila 'syskiasmoùs', that is, tabernacles: Symmachus and Septuagint, tabernacle: Theodotio translated it as vision. And this is to be observed in all holy Scriptures, that the apostles and apostolic men, in laying down testimonies from the Old Testament, do not consider the words but the meaning: nor do they follow the same paths of words, as long as they do not depart from the intended sense. But whatever is said literally against the Jewish people, all of this is to be referred to those who worship idols under the name of Christ, and who fabricate corrupt doctrines for themselves, carrying the tabernacle of their king, the devil, and the image of their statues and idols. For they do not worship one idol; but for the variety of teaching, they worship different gods, and the star of their god (2 Corinthians XI). He, being the angel of Satan, transforms himself into an angel of light, and falls from heaven like lightning (Luke X), and Antichrist imitates Christ. And he beautifully introduced what you have made for yourselves. For they have not received these things from God, but have imagined them in their own minds. Therefore, the Lord will cause them to migrate across Damascus, so that they do not drink the blood of the Lord, but go to Babylon, and listen to the prophet: A golden cup Babylon, intoxicating all nations (Jeremiah LI, 7). For Damascus, as we have often said, signifies drinking blood, or the blood of Cilicia, so that through penance we may be moved to drink the blood of the Lord.

6:1

(Chapter 6, Verse 1) Woe to those who are rich in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria, the notable men of the nations, who enter pompously into the house of Israel. The Septuagint version says: Woe to those who despise Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria, they have gathered the first fruits of the nations for themselves. The prophet's words are directed primarily to those who are the nobles and rulers in both peoples, and who indulge in the luxuries as an example of the rich man dressed in purple, who delighted in feasting and was so filled with pride that he disdained to even look at Lazarus, covered with sores at his gate, and would not give him even the scraps from his table (Luke 16). These are the heads of the people who trust in riches, and are wealthy in Zion, and have confidence in the mountain of Samaria, and enter triumphantly into the house of Israel, to show the swelling of their hearts and appear to be like the pompous feasts. According to the laws of tropology and the Septuagint interpreters, Zion refers to the Church, of which we read: He who lifts me up from the gate of death, that I may declare all your praises in the gates of the daughter of Zion (Psalm 9:15). But Mount Samaria, because of the pride and arrogance of the custodians of God's commandments, is understood to be about heretics who despise the Church; for God chose the weak of the world to confound the strong, and the foolish to destroy the wisdom of the wise and the understanding of the prudent (1 Corinthians 1). These have harvested the first fruits of the nations, to introduce them under the Christian name into their winepresses, where grapes are not crushed, but lost; where must is not expressed, but venom is. And they entered for themselves. Beautifully, he said to himself: for they did not enter for God, but they entered for themselves. Otherwise, they would have left for God, as they depart from the Church. And what follows, the House of Israel, according to the Septuagint, should be read at the beginning of the next chapter; according to the Hebrews, at the end of this chapter, which we have explained.

Book Three

Book Three

We have begun and, with Christ's help, we will complete the work of the twelve prophets in a disorderly and confused order. For we have not discussed them in the order in which they are read from beginning to end, but as we were able and as we were asked. First, I addressed Nahum, Micah, Zephaniah, and Haggai to the ever-diligent Paula and her daughter Eustochium. Second, I have assigned the two books of Habakkuk to Bishop Chromatius of Aquileia. Third, after a long period of silence, I explained Obadiah and Jonah to you, Pammachius, who commanded it. In the current year, which is named in the Fasti of the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Anitius Probus, I have interpreted the prophet Malachi to Exsuperius, the bishop of the Church of Toulouse, and to the monks Minervius and Alexander of the same city, Zacharias. And immediately going back to the beginning of the volume, I could not deny you Hosea, Joel, and Amos. And after a very serious illness of the body, I showed my recklessness by the speed of dictation: that which others do not dare to write by frequently turning the stylus, I committed to chance, which always follows those dictating, and makes the danger of audacity from talent and learning: since, as I have often borne witness, I am not able to bear the labor of writing with my own hand, in expounding the Holy Scriptures, composite words and adorned with rhetorical flourishes, but the erudition and simplicity of truth are sought.

6:2-6 (Vers. 2 seqq.) Go through Chalane, and see: and from there go to great Emath, and descend to Geth of the Philistines: to the best of their kingdoms, if their boundary is wider than your boundary. You who are separated on the day of evil, and approach the throne of wickedness. You who sleep on ivory beds, and indulge in your own beds: you who eat lambs from the flock, and calves from the middle of the herd: you who sing to the sound of the harp. Just as David thought he had the vessels of a song, drinking wine in cups, and they were anointed with the finest oil, and they did not suffer from the sorrow of Joseph. LXX: House of Israel, all of you pass over and see in Chalane, and pass through there to Emath Rabba, and descend to the best of the foreign Geth in all these kingdoms, if their boundaries are greater than your boundaries, you who come on an evil day, who approach and touch the lies of the Sabbath. You who sleep on ivory beds, and overflow with delights in your couches, and eat young goats from the flocks, and suckle calves from the midst of the herds, who make noise at the sound of the organ: as if they considered themselves stable, and not fleeting; you who drink refined wine, and anoint yourselves with the finest ointments, and do not grieve over the ruin of Joseph. Pass over all of you to Chalane, which is now called Ctesiphon, and pass over all. Who are these people? Both of those mentioned above: the nobles, the leaders of the people, and those of you who are wealthy in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria. Therefore, go to the city of Persis, and pay close attention, and from there, go to the great city of Emath, which is now called Antioch. It is called great, to distinguish it from the smaller Emath, which is called Epiphania. And to this day, for those traveling to Mesopotamia, the first stop is called Emmas, although the name has been corrupted; but it retains traces of its original name, whose region is called Reblatha, in which, in the presence of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Judah (or Judea), the sons were killed, and his eyes were blinded. And descend, he says, into Gath of the Philistines (2 Kings 25). You who dwell on Mount Zion and Mount Samaria, descend to the Philistines who dwell in the plains, and to the best of their kingdoms, which are subject to different cities: Gaza and Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath. And see if their territory is wider than yours, whether you or they possess the larger provinces. You, I say, you from the people of Israel, who are separated for the day of evil, namely the day of captivity, and approaching the throne of wickedness, going to the unjust judge, the king of Babylon. For those who are about to suffer these things, you now sleep on ivory beds and indulge in soft cushions, so that you may unite desire with sleep. For you do not eat to drive away hunger and sustain the human body, but for pleasure and luxury, so that whatever is tender and fat in herds and flocks may serve your gluttonous appetites. Your desires are not satisfied with the pleasures of sex, throat, and drink, but you must also soothe your ears with the songs of flutes, harp, and lyre, imitating what David did in the worship of God (1 Chronicles 23-26), finding the variations of the Levitical orders and instruments, you indulge in pleasure and luxury. And you drink wine from goblets, not to quench your thirst, but to intoxicate your mind. And you anoint yourselves, not to soothe the fatigue of the body, with pure oil, but with precious ointments. And when you are filled with these things, if you see any of the people perishing, you have no mercy on their suffering, but you treat them like dumb animals, and you allow them to perish in their own blood. This same sentiment is also expressed by the prophet Ezekiel in the example of the shepherds: They consume the milk of the sheep and clothe themselves with their wool, and they devour whatever is best, and they do not heal the wounded, nor mend the broken, nor seek out those who are perishing. Let us transfer all the things we have said according to the history, according to the Septuagint interpreters, to the allegory of the clouds. O house of Israel, you who have departed from me, who trust in the mountain of Samaria, who have harvested the firstfruits of the nations, go beyond and see, and proceed to many walls. For this is the interpretation of Emath Rabba: and then descend gently into the presses of those who fall while drinking. For Geth and the Philistines resound with this. And consider all things, especially the best (or all) kingdoms, or the best cities among all kingdoms; and consider if their boundaries are more numerous than yours. For if we wish to ponder with our mind, and to explore the wisdom of all nations, we will find that the boundaries of the Egyptians, Indians, and Persians are narrower than the holy boundaries of the Scriptures: Their sound has gone out into all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world. To those whom he had previously said: House of Israel, all of you pass through and see, from what vices they are commanded to pass over to better things, the following discourse describes: Those who come into an evil day, preparing for themselves their evil day according to their own vice: not that any day is inherently evil; but rather, each person prepares for themselves their own evil, according to what we read in Ecclesiastes: Do not say, 'The former days were better for me than these,' for it is not in wisdom that you ask about this (Ecclesiastes 7:11); for it is foolish to compare times, when it is within our power to either make a good day for ourselves or an evil one. These are those who approach and touch the sabbaths of falsehood. For just as the circumcision of the flesh is called, and the circumcision of the heart, and they are manifestly Jews, and in secret, one of which is rejected, and the other is approved: thus the sabbaths of the Lord are holy, and supported by truth, and the others are not holy and are falsehoods, which follow the idleness of the western letters. That which follows: those who sleep on ivory beds, we can interpret it as follows: He who is an athlete of the Lord, and exercises for the struggle, and prepares himself against opposing powers, sleeps on bare earth imitating Jacob (Gen. XXVIII); and he places a stone at his head, which the builders rejected, and it became the head cornerstone (Ps. CXVII, and Act. IV). But those who indulge in pleasures and luxury, and do everything for the sake of their stomach, sleep on ivory beds made from dead animals and cling to unclean bones; and because vices appear beautiful and delight in their present splendor, they rest on their beds and are weighed down by deep sleep. They do not eat solid and nourishing food, which strengthens the powers of those who wrestle, but rather soft and delicate food, such as young goats from the flocks and fattened calves, and tender ones, in fact still nourished by milk. For this is what μοσχῶρια γαλαθῆν signifies. Moreover, they clap their hands to the sound of the organ and the noise, as if all their works expect pleasure: and they do nothing but provide for the belly and lust. Nor does the wise reader immediately oppose us with this, and how it is written: Let the rivers clap their hands (Ps. XCVII, 8). And: All you nations, clap your hands (Ps XLVI, 1). And: Rejoice in God our helper (Ps. LXXX, 1). For there, they are not said to clap their hands to the sound of the organ; but to have one consent in praising God. He introduced the voice of the organs: they thought it was standing still, and not fleeing. For according to Epicurus, things of the world and all bodies flow and pass away in moments, and nothing remains in its own state, but everything either grows or diminishes, and they flow down like rushing waters. Hence we read also in secular literature (Virgil, Georgics III): But meanwhile it flies, irretrievable time flies. And in another place (Horace, Odes II, 14).

Alas, fleeting, Posthumus, Posthumus, the years slip away. For nothing is more fleeting than the century and the things of the century. While we hold onto them, we lose them, through infancy, childhood, youth, and the growing and maturing age, and the final years of old age, which Philo describes as the seven stages of human life, we are changed, and we run, and unknowingly we reach the boundaries of death. And what follows: Those who drink clarified wine can properly be referred to heretics, who approve some scriptures and reject others, desiring to drink clarified wines: since in the Holy Scriptures there is nothing turbid and muddy, but everything is most pure in the divine stream. Those who do not have the art of anointing, without any knowledge of the Scriptures, traditions, and teachings of the apostles, claim the dignity of priesthood and say that they are anointed by the Lord; and they contaminate the purest oil of their own understanding with the dregs. And when they do these things to the destruction of those whom they have deceived, they are not tormented by any pain; but they rejoice in the deaths of others and delight in the blood of the wretched. This beautiful sense in which it is said 'they thought as if things were standing, and not as if they were fleeing' is not found in Hebrew; but instead it is written: as David thought he had vessels of song. Therefore, it seems to me that the interpreters added it, who, in describing luxury, expressed a sentiment against vices and pleasures of this kind, so that they would not translate what was written, but would add or even change it, according to what seemed to them.

6:7-11

(Vers. 7 seqq.) Therefore now they will migrate to the head of the transmigrants, and the faction of the revelers will be removed. The Lord God has sworn by his own soul, says the Lord God of hosts: I detest the pride of Jacob, and I hate his houses, and I will deliver the city with its inhabitants: and if there are ten men left in one house, they shall die; and their close relative shall take them, and burn them, to carry out the bones from the house; and he who is in the innermost chambers of the house shall say: Is there still anyone with you? And he will answer: It is the end; and he will say to him: Be silent, and do not remember the name of the Lord. LXX: Therefore now the strong ones will be captives from the beginning, and the noise of horses will be taken away from Ephraim; because the Lord has sworn by himself, says the Lord God of hosts: because I will abhor all the reproach of Jacob, and I will hate his regions, and I will take away the city with all its inhabitants. And it shall come to pass, if ten men remain in one house, and they die; and the household members shall take them, and they shall make an effort to remove their bones from the house; and those who are in charge of the house shall say: Are there still any with you? And he shall say, by no means; and he shall say, Be silent, and do not mention the name of the Lord. Because of the higher causes that the prophetic discourse describes (of those who sleep on ivory beds, and revel on couches, and eat lambs from the flock, and calves from the midst of the herd, and sing to the sound of the harp and drink from bowls, and are anointed with the finest ointment, and yet suffer nothing in the destruction of their people, who are descended from Joseph), now the Lord threatens, and says: Because they have done these things and these things, now they shall migrate at the head of the exiles. And the meaning is this: Punishment is never delayed for the future, nor is it prophesied for long centuries to come. What is now imminent, is now coming, my words predict, that they will go in the beginning of the transmigration, namely the rulers and the powerful, of whom he said above: Hear this word, you fat cows, who are in the mountain of Samaria (Above, IV, 1). And again: Woe to you who are wealthy in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria: you nobles, heads of the people, who enter pompously into the house of Israel. You who are the first in wealth, will be the first to endure the yoke of captivity, according to what is written in Ezekiel: 'Begin from my sanctuary' (Ezek. IX, 6). Not from the saints, as many think; but from the destruction of the temple, which was holy. For the powerful will endure torments powerfully (Wisdom VI), and to whom much is entrusted, much will be demanded from him (Luke XII). And as it is said, the faction of the indulgent will be taken away, those who had one consent in taking pleasure and engaging in feasts and revelry: they will be taken away together, so that for those whose unity was in luxury, their punishment will also be united. As for why the LXX translated it, the neighing of the horse of Ephraim shall be taken away: which is not found in the Hebrew, and will be discussed by us as unnecessary when we begin to weave the tropology. The Lord has sworn by himself, or as we read in Hebrew, by his soul, according to what is written in Isaiah: My soul hates your new moons and your Sabbaths and your feast days (Isa. I, 13): not that God has a soul, but in order to speak in human terms. It is not surprising if it is said to have a soul, since even the other parts, which are less valuable than the soul, such as the feet, hands, stomach, and other organs, attest to having themselves. But if those who deny that Christ had a human soul oppose us, saying that God was in the human body instead of a soul, let them hear that in Christ the substance of the soul is demonstrated: just as the members of his body had substance. In God the Father, however, the head, feet, and other things that are said to be, are not members, but the diversity of efficient acts is indicated by the words used to describe them: similarly, the soul is not substantial, but the seat of the inner mind and the place where thoughts reside, through which God reveals His will. Therefore the Lord, the God of hosts, that is, Sabaoth (which the Seventy translated as powers), swore that he detests the pride of Jacob and hates his dwellings. This is Jacob according to the previous chapter, where it is written: And they allowed nothing to prevail over the affliction of Joseph, or the ten tribes, or certainly the entire house of the twelve tribes. And he will deliver the city with its inhabitants; either Samaria, or certainly Jerusalem, or both in common. As for the time of the Lord Savior, after whose coming and passion God detested all the pride and injury of Jacob, because they cried out against him, the son of a carpenter and a Samaritan and possessed by a demon (Matthew 13; John 8): therefore Jerusalem was handed over to the Roman armies with its inhabitants. And to such an extent did the wrath of God rage against them, that even if ten men were to remain in one house, they would also die, and the neighbor or neighbor would burn the corpses of the dead to remove the bones from his house, because they are not able to remove the whole bodies due to the crowds of the dying. And when he has become tired from carrying [the body], let him ask the person who is in the innermost part of the house if there are any bodies left for him to hand over, and let that person respond: It is over, I no longer have anyone to give to you for burial; and before he swears that he does not have [any bodies], let that person, who asked the question and was outside, and did not know [that there were no bodies], order him and say: Be silent, and do not remember the name of the Lord. But he mentions this in order to show that even those who are not compelled by the weight and necessity of evil do not want to confess the name of the Lord, and that the name of God has come into such great oblivion among the people of Israel that it does not even deign to be heard in a simple oath. We have drawn fine lines of history, now let us imprint the hand of allegory. The leaders of heretics, who devoured my people because of their pleasures, and allowed nothing to stand in the way of Joseph's torment, will be led first to punishment, and the neighing of the horse will be taken away from Ephraim: which is understood in holy scriptures in two ways, either in the pride and power of those who neigh, or in the magnitude of lust. In the pride and consent of evil people, as it is written: Some trust in chariots and some in horses (Psalm 20:7). And: A deceitful horse for salvation (Ps. XXXII, 17). And to the kings of Israel, it is commanded that they not multiply horses for themselves (Deut. XVII). And in the book of Job, the voice of the horse is compared to the sound of the trumpet (Job. XXXIX). In Zachariah also we read, which is confirmed by the testimony of the Gospel, and it is referred to the presence of the Savior: Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion: proclaim, O daughter of Jerusalem. Behold, your King comes to you righteous and Savior: He is gentle, and riding on a donkey and the foal of a donkey: and he will destroy the chariots from Ephraim, and the horses from Jerusalem (Zach. IX, 9). But the magnitude of lust and unrestrained desire for sexual intercourse, as Jeremiah, describing the luxurious adulterers, declared: Each one neighs over the wife of his neighbor (Jer. V, 8). The coming of Christ subdues such horses, as does the wrath of God. And the Lord swears by Himself (since He has no one greater to swear by) that He abhors all heretical blasphemies and hates all their regions (Heb. VI). For whatever they speak is injustice, and worthy of God's hatred. And He will take away their city and their assemblies with those who dwell in it, and the people indeed, and the leaders, even if there were ten men left (for if they had been in Sodom and Gomorrah, no fire would have come down upon them), they will all die the same death that leads to Tartarus, of which Ezekiel writes: The soul that sins, it shall die. Their relatives and domestics bury the bones of these people, of whom it is said: Let the dead bury their own dead (Luke 9:60). And the one who is outside and does not enter the house of the dead; but rather casts out the dead outside, the one who burns the dead gives orders, and reduces them to ashes, and breaks their bones, so that he may remain silent; and the most pure name of God not be defiled by the mouth of the dead. For to the sinner, God says: Why do you declare my righteousness, and take my covenant in your mouth? (Psalm 50). Wherefore, we also must provide, that we may not bury the dead dead, but rather, that as living, we may bring forth to life those who are dead. And if we do not do this, it is commanded to us and it is said: Be silent, for we are judged unworthy of the name of God.

6:12-14

(Verse 12 onwards) For behold, the Lord will command and strike down the great house with ruins, and the small house with breaches. Can horses run on rocks, or can it be plowed with oxen? For you have turned justice into bitterness, and the fruit of righteousness into wormwood. You who rejoice in nothingness, who say: Have we not taken horns for ourselves in our strength? Behold, I will raise up against you, O house of Israel, declares the Lord God of hosts, a nation, and they will oppress you from the entrance of Hamath to the brook of the wilderness. LXX: Therefore, behold, the Lord will command and will strike the great house with ruins and the small house with breaches. Will horses run on rocks? Will men be silent at women? For you have turned justice into bitterness and the fruit of righteousness into wormwood. You who rejoice in nothing good, who say, 'Have we not relied on our own strength?' For behold, I will raise up against you, O house of Israel, declares the Lord God of hosts, a nation, and they shall oppress you from Lebo-hamath to the brook of Egypt. Because you have sprung into such rage that, even in the time of death and impending evils, you were unwilling to utter the name of the Lord, therefore the Lord will command and strike the greater house with ruins, and the lesser house with divisions. If He commands, how does He strike? If He strikes, how does He command? But in that which He commands and orders to His ministers, He Himself seems to strike. Just as in commanding the Father and acting through the Son, He Himself who commanded does the work, the verse being fulfilled: He spoke, and they were made; He commanded, and they were created (Ps. 148:5). For all things were made through him, and without him was made nothing that was made (John 1). And in Egypt, where the firstborn who were killed by the destroyer are reported to be referred to, the Lord testifies that he himself killed them (Exodus 12). So also in the present place the Lord commands, and he himself strikes through his ministers the greater house with ruins, that is, the ten tribes, who were called Israel, and the lesser house with divisions, the two tribes, who were governed by the lineage of the house of David. And note the properties of each. Israel, because it had sinned more, is struck by ruins and is handed over to eternal captivity. But the house of Judah, in which the temple exists, and which had sinned in part, is held in captivity for seventy years and is not struck by ruins but by divisions. For a divided house can be repaired: ruins require not so much restoration as rebuilding. He compares the ruins and divisions of both houses to horses and oxen, of which the former cannot run on rocks, and the latter are so untamed that they do not accept the yoke on their necks, and since they are wild oxen, they are unwilling to plow the earth due to their fierceness. But you, though horses and buffalo cannot change their nature, have changed the nature of God, turning the sweet into the bitter and the fruit of his justice into wormwood, which is a very bitter herb. You who take delight in things that are nothing, like golden calves and idols, which are nothing, as Esther said to the Lord: Do not give your scepter to those who are not (Esther 14:11), or in nothing and falsehood. You who think you have taken horns and kingship and power by your own strength, with which you can scatter your enemies. Therefore, because you have done these things, behold, I will raise up against you, O great house and O lesser house, that will be struck by ruin and division, that is, O house of Israel and all twelve tribes, the most savage nation of Assyrians and Chaldeans, who will crush and overthrow you from beginning to end, from head to tail, from the borders of your land, which face the sun, to the desert river, or the West, as the LXX translated, that is, from Emath to Rhinocorura, between which the river Nile, or the stream coming from the desert, enters the sea. We have mentioned Emath above Epiphania, which got its name from Antiochus who was called Epiphanes. However, those who think that this refers to the house of Israel and the ten tribes, cannot explain how it is said in the threat against the ten tribes that they should be crushed from Epiphania to the borders of Egypt. These borders do not include only the ten tribes, but all twelve, including Judah and Benjamin. Some people, according to the allegory, believe that the large house and the smaller house symbolize the Jewish people and the Church gathered from the Gentiles. They are called 'great' because of their ancestors, the law, and the prophets. We are called 'lesser' because we were without the Testament and the commandments of God, of which we also read in the Song of Songs: 'My sister is little and has no breasts' (Song of Songs 8:8). If the great and small house, gathered into one family of God, does not have discipline and does not follow God's commandments, it will be struck by ruins and divisions. Whenever, therefore, the house of God, which is the Church, collapses and is torn apart, either in persecutions or in heresies and schisms, it shows the hand of God striking: which if we want to avoid, let us listen to and follow the comparison and example. They are not able to pursue on the rocks of the horse. Christ is the rock (I Cor. X), who gave to his apostles that they also be called rock: You are Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church (Mat. XVI, 18). Those who are in these stones, called horses, about which we have spoken above, will not be able to pursue him, their courses hindered and falling down through each stone. Let us come to another comparison, according to our custom, discussing the edition of the Seventy Interpreters, lest if we adhere too much to the Hebrew, we seem to have deceived the reader's diligence, and by not mentioning the Vulgate edition, we appear to have proposed it in vain. But they will certainly be silent in women, he said, no doubt meaning horses, about which he had spoken above. If they pursue horses on rocks. These horses, that is, contrary strengths, who go mad for women when they see a masculine spirit, and having been strengthened by the power of God, are not bold enough to approach. But when they see a effeminate mind, weakened by ointments and pleasures, and turned towards feminine softness, they immediately go mad and cannot hold themselves back; and they long for lust. It follows: Because you have turned judgment into fury. Judgment turns into fury for the one who judges in anger, and the Lord says: You shall not show partiality in judgment (Deut. XVI, 19). And in another place: You shall not pity the poor in judgment; for it is God's judgment (Exod. XXIII, 3): with an angry mind he descends to judge, indeed, without knowing the cause, nor does he know the truth of the judgment, he prejudices what sentence he should pass: he also turns the fruit of justice, which is most sweet, into bitterness. What we have said about one virtue, let us understand about the others as well: prudence, courage, temperance. Whoever is angry cannot enjoy their fruits, and when they do, they will be bitter. Hence it is said in Isaiah: Woe to those who call sweet bitter, and bitter sweet (Is. 5:20). This is what those say who do not consider the causes in judging, but rather the individuals, and they turn the fruit of Christ's righteousness, which is most sweet, into bitterness. Therefore, whoever is guided in judgment by either blood ties or friendship, on the other hand, is led by hostile hatred or enmities, perverts the judgment of Christ, who is justice, and turns its fruit into bitterness. Those who do this rejoice in no good word, or, as Symmachus translated, irrationally, and proudly say: Have we not had horns in our strength? But let the righteous glory in the Lord and say: In you we will scatter our enemies with horns. And in another place (Al. in the same place): For I will not hope in my bow, and my sword will not save me (Ps. 43, 6, 7). Hence, in Exodus according to the Hebrew and the Aquila edition, we read: And Moses did not know that the appearance (Al. face) of his face was horned (Exod. 34, 29), which truly could be said: In you I blow away my enemies with a horn. We also read in another place: And he will exalt the horn of his people; And: He will exalt the horn of his Christ (Ps. 148, 14, and 1 Sam. 2, 10), and the horn of the altar, and clean horned animals, which are offered only to God, whose interpretation is not of this time. Because of these great sins and extreme pride, which speaks unrighteousness against God and exalts its mouth, the Almighty Lord God declares that he will raise up the most savage nation, which will crush and afflict them, indeed, even prevent them from entering into Emath, and as far as the Western torrent. Emath is interpreted as a wall or fortified town. Therefore, they will be forbidden from seeking refuge in the most savage nation, to whom punishments have been assigned, to flee to the fortified city, which is the celestial Jerusalem, lest they enter and be saved, similar to that chapter which we read in Genesis, where God placed Cherubim and a flaming sword (Gen. II), which turned to guard the way to the tree of life, so that the one who had been expelled from paradise would by no means enter there unworthy. And what follows: We will interpret the 67th Psalm, in which it is written: Sing to the Lord, sing a psalm to his name: make a way for him who ascends upon the west: the Lord is his name (Psalm 67:5). For unless evil works have died in us, Christ will not ascend upon us. And when they have died, and we have Christ as our charioteer: then as we make progress and advance to better things, it will be commanded in the same psalm: Sing to God, sing psalms to the Lord who ascends upon the heaven of heavens towards the east (Psalm 67:33, 34). And in the mysteries, first we renounce him who is in the West, and who dies for our sins, and thus turned towards the East, we make a covenant with the sun of righteousness, and we promise to serve him. Regarding the stream of the West, Symmachus interpreted it as a valley plain: Theodotio, a stream in Arabia: Aquila, a stream that is in the plain. With these words, it is shown that those who are not excluded from the walled city cannot die to sin, nor can they reach the plain and level stream of the desert, which is called the stream of pleasure, according to what we read: You shall make them drink from the stream of your pleasure (Psalm 36:9).

7:1-3

(Chapter 7, verses 1-3) The Lord God showed me these things: And behold, a swarming locust at the beginning of the late crops, after the king's mowings. And it came to pass, when it had finished consuming the grass of the land, that I said: Lord God, please be merciful, I beseech You: who will raise up Jacob, for he is small? The Lord had pity on this: it shall not be, said the Lord. LXX: Thus the Lord showed me: And behold, a swarm of locusts was coming in the morning, and behold, one Gog, the king, was a bruchus. And it shall come to pass, when it is accomplished, that it shall consume the grass of the earth. And I said: Lord God, be merciful, who shall raise up Jacob, for he is little. Be sorry for us, O Lord, upon this: and upon this let it not be, saith the Lord. The prophetic word not only predicts things that will happen in the distant future, but also those that are near and will immediately follow the prophecy. For we humans often think more about ourselves than about future generations, as Ezechias says: Let there be peace in my days (2 Kings 20). So that those who have witnessed the fulfilled events that were previously announced, may turn to the worship of God, in whom the truth of prophecy resides. Therefore, the Lord revealed that Sennacherib, the king of the Assyrians, would come with an infinite army, like a swarm of locusts, to annihilate everything, just as a locust devours all when it begins to rain late in the season, when the people of Israel needed the extreme mercy of Almighty God. However, the one who commands and creates this swarm of locusts is the Lord. The locust comes at the beginning of the late rain, when everything is green and the whole field is giving birth, and the flowers of different trees burst into their own kind of fruit. And to summarize in one word what I want to convey, they promise abundance of all things, flowers of trees, and the crops of the fields. But these locusts, which fly in early spring, are followed by countless beetles, which come after the late rain, and are called the barber or the king's barber because they devastate everything and leave nothing of the green grass on the earth. This barber, or haircut, Isaiah calls a sharp razor (Isa. VII), which will shave all the hair and the beard of the body of the children of Israel. And when, he says, I doubted what this razor was, he immediately brought in the king of Assyria. Therefore, the razor and barber of the king is the army of the Chaldeans, which has devastated everything like a locust, not only crops, but also wood, hay, and straw. And it came to pass, when the locust had finished eating the grass of the earth, and the prophet understood what he saw, he turned to prayer and said: Lord God, be merciful, I beseech you. I do not want my words to be fulfilled in the subversion of my people. I do not want to be chosen from the number of shepherds to announce the ruin of the ten tribes. For who can raise up Jacob, except for you alone? When everything collapses, there is no one who can restore it. Jacob is weak and is frequently destroyed by attacks from the enemy. But when he prays and sheds tears from his inner self, the Lord takes pity on him and responds: I will not destroy all of the people of Israel, there will be saved remnants. Certainly, it must be understood in this way: he saw two things that would happen at the same time. First, a locust, then a caterpillar. He prayed to the Lord for both, and only one was heard, so that the caterpillar would not devour everything to the point of annihilation. However, the flying locust would devour some things and leave others untouched. It seems to me that the 70 interpreters understood the Hebrew word Gozi (), which is interpreted as a barber or tonsure, as Gog, considering the letter Zai as Vau, and compared the countless multitude of caterpillars to the most savage Gog nation, which is described as devastating the land of Judea. But what Aquila wanted to say, I do not quite understand, unless perhaps he placed the word 'Gozi' instead of 'Gaza,' and gradually 'Gaza' was corrupted by error. Let us also say spiritually: those who have committed serious sins after the works of justice (as it is said in the prophet: 'Sow for yourselves righteousness, reap the fruit of unfailing love, and break up your unplowed ground; for it is time to seek the LORD, until he comes and showers his righteousness on you' - Hosea 10, and Jeremiah 4), are brought forth with offspring or a generation of morning locusts when the darkness of night passes, and they begin to recognize their own sins, because they did not repent. And because they did not repent, the bruchus is brought forth, which is called King Gog. But 'Gog' is translated into our language as 'roof,' a certain proud and arrogant strength. And when the hay and stubble of our land are consumed, whoever have been holy for the people will pray for forgiveness and say: Lord God, be merciful. For who else can raise up Jacob (Isa. X)? Who can heal the woman with an issue of blood, except you alone, at whose touch her health is immediately restored (Luke VIII)? For Jacob is small, or of small number, because there remain no or few traces of virtues in them. May you feel remorse, Lord, regarding this, for which you have threatened to do to your people. However, we must understand God's repentance in the Scriptures as we do sleep and anger: not that God feels remorse or changes his mind, as he speaks through the prophet: I am God, and I do not change (Mal. III, 6). And to whom we say: But you are the same, and your years will not fail (Ps. CI, 28); but rather that, when we turn to better things, it is he himself who repents of his decision, so that he does not give rewards to the righteous that he promised, if they turn to wickedness, nor does he inflict punishment on the sinner that he has threatened, if he turns to salvation. He is said to those who are going to repent: Do not give sleep to your eyes, nor slumber to your eyelids, so that you may be freed like a gazelle from the traps, and like a bird from the snare (Prov. VI, 4, 5). If he who despises the Lord's commandments first, and then, when he is in distress, begins to wake up, he awakens the Lord who is sleeping to him, and says: Arise, why do you sleep, Lord (Ps. XLIII, 23)? On the other hand, he who treasures up wrath for himself on the day of wrath, will feel God's anger (Rom. II). But if he repents, anger will turn into mercy, and the Lord will change with our troubles and virtues into both punishment and mercy.

7:4-6

(Vers. 4 seqq.) This the Lord God showed me, and behold, the Lord God called for judgment by fire, and it devoured the great deep and will consume it together with a portion. And I said: O Lord God, please cease; who will raise up Jacob since he is small? The Lord had mercy on this also, but even this shall not be, said the Lord God. LXX: Thus the Lord God showed me, and behold, He called for judgment by fire, and it devoured the great deep and consumed a portion. And I said: O Lord God, stop, who will raise up Jacob, since he is small? Let it repent thee, O Lord, upon this: and let it not be, saith the Lord, God of hosts. First the Lord shewed the prophet the workman of the locust in the beginning of the germination of the late crop, and after the late crop, the cutting off of the king or kingdom, and to express the word from word, the cutting off of the king Sennacherib, by which he sheared and laid waste all the ten tribes. Now the same Lord sheweth Nebuchadnezzar, yea, he calleth and commandeth him to come against Judah and Jerusalem. However, he calls upon the fire to set ablaze the temple and Jerusalem, and to carry out judgment in the fire against those who were once his people. And when the fire came for judgment, to fulfill the command of the Lord, it consumed a great abyss, and it also consumed a part, all the cities of Judah, and a part of the Lord's which was called his temple. And when the prophet saw this, he said to the Lord, not as before, be propitious, I beseech you, but be still, or cease; so that he may obtain by his prayers the person whom he had already seen begin to cease: especially since there is no other who can raise up the lying down and little and humiliated Jacob, except the Lord who is able to bring back the captive and those transported into Chaldea into the land of Judah. Because once, according to the prophet Hosea and the Psalmist saying: The sons of Ephraim, bending and shooting with the bow, turned back in the day of battle (Psalm 77, 9), we have attributed the ten tribes to the person of the heretics, who were called Israel, and the two, over which Judas presided, to the Church and the sinners of the Church, who indeed confess the right faith, but are in need of purging themselves from the filth of vices with flames: for this reason now the Lord shows that he calls himself to the fire of judgment, so that the fire may prove the quality of each one's work (1 Corinthians 3), and that which is written may be fulfilled: Walk in the light of your fire, and in the flame you have kindled (Isaiah 50, 11). And it is said to Babylon: You have coals of fire, you shall sit upon them; they shall be to you for help (Isai. XLVII, 14, sec. LXX) . And in the psalm, The deceitful tongue, full of lies, is said to be purified by the fire of coals: What shall be given to you, or what shall be added to you, for a deceitful tongue? The sharp arrows of the mighty with coals of desolation (Ps. CXIX, 3, 4) . About these coals of the altar, the coal of the desolating coals of the two Testaments is taken with a pair of tongs, and the unclean lips of Isaiah are purified, so that he may be able to prophesy the word of the Lord (Isai. VI). But the fire, summoned for judgment, first devours the abyss, that is, all kinds of sins, wood, hay, straw, and then it consumes at the same time the part, that is, it reaches the saints, who are considered as the possession of the Lord and as part of him; for it is the time for judgment to begin from the house of the Lord. And in Ezekiel it is commanded to those who will suffer punishment: Begin from my own sanctified ones (Ezek. IX). And in the Apostle Paul we read: If anyone's work is burned up, he will suffer loss, though he himself will be saved, but only as through fire (I Cor. III). And when we all have been in sin, and we have lied in the truth of judgment, our Lord will have mercy on us, and because we are children, He will raise us up at the time of resurrection, or He will raise us up through the virtues in which we lay in vices, with the Lord promising this and saying: But even this will not be. He said well, but He also said: because He had already said above: this will not be. For He will not be angry forever, nor will He threaten eternally (Ps. 102). He has not dealt with us according to our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. As far as the east is from the west, so far has he removed our transgressions from us. As a father has compassion on his children, so the Lord has compassion on those who fear him.

7:7-9

(Verse 7 and following) This is what was shown to me: And behold, the Lord stood (in the Latin Vulgate, 'standing') on a wall made of stones, and in his hand was a trowel of a mason. And the Lord said to me, 'What do you see, Amos?' And I said, 'A trowel of a mason.' And the Lord said, 'Behold, I will set a trowel in the midst of my people Israel. I will not add to pass over him anymore, and the high places of idols will be demolished, and the sanctuaries of Israel will be deserted, and I will rise up against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.' LXX: Thus the Lord showed me: And behold, a man standing on a adamantine wall, and in his hand a diamond. And the Lord said to me: What do you see, Amos? And I said: A diamond. And the Lord said to me: Behold, I will cast a diamond in the midst of my people Israel. I will no longer pass by him, and the altars of laughter will be scattered, and the sacrifices of Israel will be desolate, and I will rise up against the house of Jeroboam with the sword. Before we discuss adamant, which Symmachus and the Septuagint translated as Enach in Hebrew, it should be briefly stated that this word was translated by Aquila as γινωσιν and by Theodotion as τηκεμενον: the former meaning tinning, the latter meaning rotting; like that frying pan (which we read about in Ezekiel 4) where the siege of the people is symbolized, is also referred to as fritura (or signetur), both in the ten tribes and in the kingdom of Jeroboam (who was the grandson of Jehu, under whom this prophecy is seen) in 2 Kings 1, by the term stannaturae. Therefore the Lord is seen standing on the top of a wall made of tin or lead, and in his hand is a trowel or a mason's tray, with which walls are usually covered, and not only to receive beauty, but also strength against the damage of rain and frequent storms. We read in Ezekiel (Chapter XIII) that the Lord threatens that when a storm and hail arise, it will by no means harm or cover the wall of Israel, but will let it be scattered by the rain. And now the one of whom it is written says: He will be called the Builder of the wall, the cornerstone, the builder of the house, who will place a measuring line in the midst of his people Israel, and will make them cease and be dormant, so that he will no longer bring upon them the burden and will clothe and protect them with his help. And when the Lord withdraws his protection, and, so to speak, removes the covering of the wall, then the high places of the idols, which are called Bamoth in Hebrew, will be demolished, and the holy places of the ten tribes will be desolated, so that Dan and Bethel will be destroyed, where the golden calves were worshiped. We have said that as much as we were able, we shall tell what has been handed down to us from the Hebrews according to history. Let us move on to the anagoge, from Xenocrates, who writes a few words about the nature of stones and precious gems: 'The diamond is a stone of its own name, which we can call indomitable in Latin: because it yields to no material, not even to iron. For if it is placed on an anvil and struck with a strong blow of a hammer, the anvil and hammer receive a wound before the diamond is crushed.' And when fire consumes everything and consumes all metals, it makes adamant harder, so that not even the excessive force can dull a small corner of it. I have seen a diamond in gold the size of a thousand millia: and while gold nearby is consumed by long use and excessive age, the diamond alone is not worn down, and no file can diminish it: on the contrary, it wears down the file, and whatever it touches, it leaves a mark. This stone is the hardest and most untameable, yet it is dissolved by the blood of goats alone, and when placed in warm blood, it loses its strength. But he is small and unseemly, having a rusty color and the brilliance of crystal. Four kinds of diamonds are described. The first is Indian; the second is Arabic; the third is Macedonian; the fourth is Cyprian, possessing varying degrees of hardness depending on the quality of the regions. It is also said to detect poisons and resist the evil arts, similar to amber. Such is our Lord and Savior: who, being in the form of God, did not consider equality with God something to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in human likeness, and being found in human form: he humbled himself, becoming obedient to death, even death on a cross (Philippians 2). Of whom Isaiah writes: He has no beauty or majesty to attract us to him, nothing in his appearance that we should desire him. He was despised and rejected by mankind, a man of suffering, and familiar with pain. Like one from whom people hide their faces he was despised, and we held him in low esteem. (Isaiah 53:2). This refers to Christ standing on the adamant wall, that is, on his holy apostles, whom he enabled to be called adamant and to say that they were not overcome by anyone, asking, 'Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?' tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? And again: I am convinced that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord (Rom. VIII, 35 seqq.). And even Peter, who was the strongest diamond, the gates of hell did not prevail against him (Matt. XVI). Here is a man and Lord, who stands upon an adamant wall, holding in his hand an adamant, which unless held by the hand of God and aided by his help, loses all strength, as the Lord says in the Gospel: No one can snatch them out of my Father's hand (John 10:29). And he is so strong that it can be said to him: If you pass through fire, the flame will not burn you (Isaiah 43:2). And the more he is beaten by temptations, the stronger he becomes, and he delights in the name of the Savior amidst the lashes. And since it cannot be overcome by anyone, it is dissolved by the heat of deadly lust alone. For this is said to be the nature of the blood of goats and of the goat itself, that it is very hot for lust, and what fire cannot tame, only its blood dissolves. Therefore, the Lord places such a diamond in the midst of his people Israel, and it does not pass beyond it, nor does he allow the altars, which are worthy of ridicule and mockery, to be destroyed, and he may strike down with the sword all the mysteries of the heretics and the household of Jeroboam, who first separated the people of God, and overthrow them.

7:10-13

(Verses 10 onwards) And Amaziah the priest of Bethel sent a message to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, 'Amos has rebelled against you in the midst of the house of Israel. The land is not able to bear all his words. For thus Amos says: 'Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive from their own land.'" Then Amaziah said to Amos 'You seer, go, flee away to the land of Judah. There eat bread, and prophesy there. But never again prophesy at Bethel, for it is the king's sanctuary, and it is the royal residence.'" LXX: And Amasias sent priests from Bethel to Jeroboam, the king of Israel, saying: Amos is gathering groups against you in the midst of the house of Israel; the land cannot endure all his words. For Amos says: Jeroboam will die by the sword, and Israel will be led captive out of its own land. And Amasias said to Amos: You see, go forth and depart (or go) to the land of Judah, and there live and prophesy there; but do not continue to prophesy in Bethel, for it is the king's sanctuary and the house of the kingdom. The proverb of Solomon, or rather the commandment, is: Do not argue with the bad, lest they hate you (Prov. IX, 8): And on the contrary, he has commanded about the good: Argue with the wise, and they will love you. In another place also: Whoever rebukes, he says, the ways of a person, will have more favor than the one who speaks what is pleasing (Prov. XXVIII, 23). Therefore, even Amos spoke to the people with the desire for correction, and he threatened terrible things from the words of God, so that those who repent would return to God and forsake idols. Then the priest of Bethel, where the golden calf was, whom Jeroboam the son of Nebat had made (3 Kings 12), and others who had succeeded him in power, sent to Jeroboam the grandson of Jehu, to inform him, saying: Amos has rebelled against you, and he is making assemblies and gatherings in the midst of your kingdom, Israel, and he speaks so boldly that the land of your kingdom cannot bear his words. Yet he dares to send to the king of Israel as if he were a high priest, fearing that if the people turn to the worship of God, he will lose his priesthood glory. And when he has heard the two, the high places will be demolished with idols, whether it is the laughter of altars or the sanctifications, or the ceremonies of Israel will be desolated, and I will rise up against the house of Jeroboam with the sword, because the idols are completely destroyed, over which Amaziah the priest presided, and may God rise up against Jeroboam with the sword, unless he repents: for he does not command harm from his own, but rather he seems to grieve only at the insult to the king. For, Amos says, these things are spoken. You are mistaken, slanderer. In all his words, he does not speak as if he were a prophet himself, but always prefaces them with: Thus says the Lord. Therefore, he recalls that Amos the prophet has spoken, in order to provoke the king to seek vengeance. What did Amos say? Jeroboam will die by the sword. And in this, you are lying: for he did not say, 'he will die'; for if he had said this, it seemed that he did not take repentance upon himself; rather, the Lord will rise up against the house of Jeroboam with the sword: threatening punishment, not imposing it. He said not, In the sword shall Jeroboam die, but, I will arise in the sword over the house of Jeroboam. For Jeroboam indeed is not dead by the sword, but his house, that is, the son of Zacharias, was destroyed by God's striking. And Israel, he said, shall be carried away captive out of his own land: add also the rest, if he does not repent. Moreover, Jeroboam, despising the empty commands of Amos, did not want to respond to what he had commanded: hence he assumes for himself the authority of the priestly office, and speaks to Amos: Thou seest, go: flee into the land of Judah. The prophets, as we have often said, were formerly called seers, because they saw with the eyes of their heart the things that were going to happen. Let the wise reader ask why he calls the seer a prophet and forces him to come out of the land of Israel? To this, one must respond: either he says it in mockery, suggesting that he lies about everything; or because he saw that there were many people who gladly listened to him. This is why he reported to the king, 'Amos is conspiring against you.' He does not dare to openly commit an injustice, lest he appear to harm those who listen to him. Go, he said, to the land of Judah, where you were born, where the insane are gladly heard: and eat your bread there, or live there, or certainly practice your craft by which you can find food for yourself, and prophesy there, for you have many whom you are accustomed to deceive. But in Bethel, where I am the priest, you shall no longer add to prophesy, for it is the sanctification of the king and the house of the kingdom. And this false priest speaks as if flattering the royal authority, so as not to say: the sanctification is of our God and the house of the idol; but of the king and the house of the kingdom: all those who worship false gods have this custom, that they attribute their pride to kings, and what they themselves do, seems to have been done by the king. All that we have interpreted about Amasias, Jeroboam, Israel, and Amos must be referred to heretics in a rhetorical manner: of whom the priest Amasias sometimes sends to the heretical king Jeroboam, and accuses the heretical patron and holy men and preachers of faith before him, and orders the teachers not to preach in Israel or go against the will of the king; because Bethel, that is, the house of God, and the false Church, is the sanctification of the king and the house of the kingdom. For they are wont to say: 'The Emperor communicates to us, and if anyone resists them, they immediately accuse them: so are you acting against the Emperor? Do you despise the commands of Augustus?' And yet, let us consider that many Christian kings, who persecuted the Church of God, and endeavored to establish Arian impiety throughout the whole world, surpass in wickedness Jeroboam, the king of Israel. For he despised the commands of the false priest and did not want to respond to his suggestion. But they, along with many of their fellow Amasian priests, killed the prophet Amos and the priests of the Lord with hunger and shortage, imprisonments and exiles.

7:14-17

(v. 14 onwards) And Amos answered and said to Amaziah, 'I am not a prophet, nor am I the son of a prophet, but I am a herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. And the Lord took me from following the flock, and the Lord said to me (the Vulgate adds 'the Lord'): Go, prophesy to my people Israel. Now hear the word of the Lord: You say, 'Do not prophesy against Israel, and do not preach against the house of idolatry.' Therefore thus says the Lord: 'Your wife shall be a prostitute in the city, and your sons and daughters shall fall by the sword, and your land shall be divided by a measuring line; and you yourself shall die in an unclean land, and Israel shall surely go into exile away from its land.' LXX: And Amos answered, and said to Amasiah: I was not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but I was a shepherd, and I gathered sycamore fruit ((or: a kind of wild fruit)), and the Lord took me from among the flock, and the Lord said to me: Go, and prophesy to my people Israel, and now hear the word of the Lord: you say, Do not prophesy against Israel, and do not preach against the house of Jacob. Therefore, thus says the Lord: Your wife will commit adultery in the city, and your sons and your daughters will fall by the sword, and your land will be divided by a measuring line, and you will die in an unclean land; but Israel will be led captive from their own land. The Scripture recounts this which the blessed apostles did when the Scribes and Pharisees forbade them to teach in the name of Jesus; and they responded, saying: It is necessary to obey God rather than men. (Acts 4:16) We also know that the prophet Amos did this, who, being forbidden by the high priest of idols, prophesied in Bethel; he not only prophesied, but also showed that he feared God more by sending him, than by prohibiting him; and boldly and freely he himself denounced the punishment that he had tried to forbid and hinder the word of God. Not only, he said, am I not a prophet, or was not (one of whom is of humility, the other of truth) nor the son of a prophet, nor descended from the prophetic lineage; but when I was a shepherd and was pasturing the herds in the meadows, the Lord took me following the flocks. For the term 'shepherd,' which is called 'Bocer' in Hebrew, Aquila and Symmachus and Theodotion, and the fifth edition translated it as 'herdsman,' who pastures herds; not sheep. The Seventy alone have called him 'shepherd' (α■π■λον), who is properly the shepherd of goats, from the α■πολ■α (the high country), which of course means a flock that grazes in high places, showing that herds of goats always climb steep rocks and lofty heights. But since he continues: 'And the Lord hath brought me forth from the sheep' (■κ τ■ν προβ■των), he seems to suggest sheep more than goats, although in the beginning we read in Leviticus that sheep and goats are designated by the name of cattle. For thus the Lord speaks. If someone offers from the sheep, that is, from the flock, to the Lord a lamb or a kid, and a sheep or a goat (Leviticus 1:10). Furthermore, what he says, 'plucking mulberries', which Aquila interpreted as 'inspecting sycomores', and Symmachus, having sycomores, some have explained it in such a way that 'mulberries' are understood to be a type of tree that grows in the plains of Palestine, and they bring forth wild figs if they are not plucked, which become extremely bitter and are infected by mosquitoes. But for us, since the solitude in which Amos stayed does not produce any such tree, it seems more fitting to say brambles, which cause delay and provide consolation for the hunger and scarcity of the shepherds. However the reader wishes to understand it, it must be said that the Lord took on a humble and rustic shepherd, and sent him to his people Israel, and commanded him to go out from his land and journey to Samaria, and there prophesy about what is to come. Therefore, as the Lord said, you tell me, Amos: Do not prophesy against Israel, and do not drop dew upon the house of idols. Listen to what the Lord threatens against you. Concerning the house of idols, it is written in Hebrew as Beth Isaac, that is, the house of laughter (for Isaac is interpreted as laughter), which the Septuagint translated as the house of Jacob, substituting one name for another and not understanding the meaning. Again, where it says, 'Do not drop dew,' Symmachus interpreted it as 'Do not rebuke.' But to drip prophets, the language of the Scriptures is: that they do not pour out all of God's wrath at once, but rather proclaim it in small drops. Therefore, because you have said to me, 'You will not prophesy; your wife will fornicate in the city,' which Symmachus has interpreted better as 'she will be prostituted,' not that she will commit fornication herself, but that she will endure prostitution inflicted by others in a passive manner. However, it is a great pain and an incredible disgrace when a husband, in the midst of the city and in the presence of everyone, cannot prevent harm to his wife. Your sons and your daughters, he says, will also fall by the sword. There is not as much pain in a raped daughter as there is in a polluted wife, nor is there as much pain in a wife who is killed as there is in slaughtered sons. For a husband would rather hear of his wife being killed than being defiled. And this is not enough for him to feel wronged, unless his land is also divided by enemies with a rope and receives new cultivators. Even Amaziah himself, who now boasts in the power of the priesthood, will not die in his own land, but will be led captive and die in a land polluted by idols, and he will not die until he sees the people he deceived serving and captive. According to allegory, Amasias the priest is interpreted as strong and rigid ((or cold)), because he forbids the rebellious and fierce ecclesiastical man and true prophet from speaking the words and teaching of God and correcting the erring people. His wife, the false Church, will openly engage in fornication with everyone. And his sons and daughters, whom he has generated badly in error, will be struck by the sword of the Lord. His land and all his possessions will also be a portion of demons, and he himself will die in a defiled land that does not have the indwelling of God, but is contaminated by the errors of a corrupt religion, and every people who assumes a false name for itself, Israel, will migrate as captives from their land, so that they do not serve God, but submit their necks to the yoke of heretics and demons.

8:1-3

(Chapter 8, verses 1 and following) This is what the Lord God showed me: Behold, a basket of summer fruit. And he said, 'Amos, what do you see?' And I said, 'A basket of summer fruit.' Then the Lord said to me, 'The end has come upon my people Israel; I will not pass by them anymore. The songs of the temple shall become wailings in that day,' declares the Lord God. 'Many shall be the dead bodies, cast out in every place. Silence!' LXX: This is what the Lord God showed me: Behold, a basket of summer fruit. And he said, What do you see, Amos? And I said, A bird trap. And the Lord said to me: The end is coming upon my people Israel; I will no longer pass by them. The ceilings of the temple will wail on that day, says the Lord God. Many will fall; I will bring silence to every place. Just as Jeremiah sees with the staff of the watchmen, or the nut, because he watched over the sins of his people, so now Amos looks upon Judah and Israel together under the guise of a hook, which in Hebrew is called Chelub and is translated as a bird trap by the Septuagint; since the bird catcher is properly called Moces, as we read earlier in this same prophet: If a bird falls to the ground without a bird catcher. And the sense is this: Just as the branches of trees are drawn towards the apples to be picked, so I have drawn near the time of captivity. And so that we may know that this is what we say, God himself interprets what the vision, which the prophets had shown, signifies. The end has come upon my people Israel. And what follows: I will not pass through him anymore, signifies that he will no longer pass through the iniquities of his people, nor neglect them, nor allow their crimes to go unpunished. And not only does it seem to be said about the ten tribes, it also says: The hinges of the temple will creak, or the rafters on that day, says the Lord. But this must be understood with great excess, because such a heavy burden of evils is looming: that even the hinges of the doors themselves and the lofty rafters will howl, and they will feel an incredible devastation: when many will die, and with the inhabitants captured or killed, silence will be thrown everywhere. But if we want to read the vase of the bird-catcher instead of the hook of the apples, it must be said that just as bird-catchers attract flying birds through the air with birdlime or nets, and when they are soaring higher they pull them down to the ground, so God through Sennacherib or Nebuchadnezzar, whom we now understand as bird-catchers, first captured, bound, transferred, and killed his own free people, whom he had previously elevated through obedience to the Law. For nets are not unjustly stretched out for birds. And this is not only to be referred to the time of the captivity of Babylon, but also to the coming of the Lord Savior, when they said: Take away such a one from the earth: crucify him, crucify him (John 19:15), and they destroyed the wings of the dove. And the end came upon them, and the final captivity, and the Lord did not spare them. And the hinges of the temple wailed, or the ceilings of the temple, falling upon the slain people. And in every place there was silence, with the Jews having Moses and the Prophets, and those without the Word of God: reading the letter, and losing the spirit, when their table became a snare, and a retribution, and a ruin, and their eyes were blinded so that they could not see, and their ears were stopped so that they could not hear; and their backs were bent so that they could not look up to heaven, but rather always lay on the ground like that woman in the Gospel who had a spirit of infirmity (Mark 7), and their ears were stopped so that they could not hear; and their backs were bent so that they could not look up to heaven, but rather always lay on the ground like that woman in the Gospel who had a spirit of infirmity. And the anger of God was poured out upon them, and the fury of his wrath caught hold of them, so that their habitation became deserted, and in their tents there was no inhabitant: for when the time was fulfilled, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, and I will send a famine upon the land: not a famine of bread, nor a thirst of water, but of hearing the word of the Lord (Hosea, ch. 4, v. 11) : of which, if we shall have arrived at the end, more fully is to be explained. Therefore, seeing this, that God spared not the natural branches, let us fear that the same may happen to us, and let us avoid the snares of the fowler; and let us say to the Lord: Be not silent, neither be thou still, O God, and depart not from me; lest being like unto them that go down into the pit (Psalm 27:1). In the whole world there has fallen a stupor of the Jewish people: wherever they are, they are the mute and dumb images of what they used to be. Blaspheming against Christ, they invoke a malediction in their synagogues and in their prayers. That their interpretation of the Scriptures may find no entrance anywhere, what new thing is said by them that have no faith? For they bore witness to what they understood not; and like human beings, they rendered judgment as diviners.

8:4-6

(V. 4, seqq.) Listen to this, you who crush the poor and make the needy of the earth fail, saying: When the month passes, we will sell our goods, and on the Sabbath, we will open the granary to decrease the measure and increase the weight; we will use deceitful scales to possess the poor in silver and sell the refuse of wheat. LXX: Listen to this, you who crush the poor in the morning and oppress the needy from the land, saying: When the month passes, we will trade and on the Sabbath, we will open the granary to make the measure smaller and the weight greater; we will use dishonest scales to possess the poor in money and the needy for shoes, and we will engage in every sale. Let the hook of the apples not appear in vain, and let the vessel of the bird catcher be shown, and through these things, the impending captivity is briefly described as the cause of offense to God. Oh, you Juda, oh you Israel, hear the crimes you have committed, rising in the night, for prayer and hymns to God: you have the zeal to oppress or crush the poor, so that they, consumed by hunger and poverty, may be taken from the land. You who wait for the new moon to engage in business, and increase interest on loans, and open your storehouses on the Sabbath, and give more grain in return, and turn the sacred festivals of God into sordid profits for your own gain: you who make the measure smaller when selling goods, and use heavier weights when receiving, and use unfair scales in order to possess the money of the poor, and hold people in such low regard that you fulfill what was said above about you: Because you sold the just for silver, and the poor for shoes: you have leaped into such greed for profit that you sell to the poor not the grain which sustains human bodies, but the refuse and chaff of the grain, mixing dust and bran. Indeed, we sometimes see even perverse teachers and rulers, who dominate the clergy without the fear of God, of whom Jeremiah speaks: Their shepherds have not benefited them (Jer. XII, 13, LXX), making a profit out of piety. They sit in the temple like moneychangers, not in cages but in seats as if they were masters, selling the gifts of the Holy Spirit. They give a smaller and larger measure to the poor, either too little or nothing at all, but to the rich and those from whom they seek profit, they speak with lengthy sermons like preachers. And for the sake of money, they crush the heads of the poor and trample on them, not offering them the Lord's grain that strengthens the heart of man, but rather feeding them scraps and the cheapest dust with eager mouths. They even sell things that are worthless, despite the fact that the Lord commanded his apostles, 'Freely you have received, freely give' (Matt. X, 8).

8:7-8

(Verse 7, 8.) The Lord has sworn by the pride of Jacob: Surely I will never forget any of their works. Shall not the land tremble concerning this, and every inhabitant mourn? And it shall rise up wholly like the River, and it shall be driven out and fall like the River of Egypt. Septuagint: The Lord has sworn by the pride of Jacob: Surely I will not forget all your works forever. And the land shall not be shaken because of this, and every inhabitant shall mourn, and it shall rise up like a consuming River, and it shall fall like the River of Egypt. The Scripture describes God swearing repeatedly. First in Genesis: the Angel of the Lord called to Abraham from heaven, saying: 'By myself I have sworn, declares the Lord: because you have done this and have not withheld your son, your only son, I will surely bless you, and I will surely multiply your offspring as the stars of heaven and as the sand that is on the seashore' (Genesis 22:16-17). And in the 109th Psalm: The Lord has sworn and will not change his mind: 'You are a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek' (Psalm 110:4). Now, whoever it is that wrote the letter to the Hebrews, discussing it says: Since he had no one greater by whom to swear, he swore by himself (Heb. 6:13). And in this same prophet above we read: The Lord swore in his sanctuary, or by his sanctuary: because behold days shall come upon you and they will take you away in arms, or spears, and the rest. Therefore, he who had sworn previously in his sanctuary, or by his sanctuary, now swears against the pride of Jacob: so that if they do not believe the one threatening, they may believe the one swearing in human likeness: who assumes an oath at that time when trust is not placed in their simple words. It is not surprising, therefore, if God is said to swear, when he sleeps with those who sleep, and watches over those who are awake: and it is said that he is angry with those who have stored up wrath for themselves on the day of wrath (Rom. II) . He swears that he will not forget their works until the end; for God resists the proud, but gives grace to the humble (Jacob. IV) ; but let them remember all the sins they have committed, and bring them to the end and the time of judgment. Hence, those who repent ((or endure patiently)) pray: Do not remember our old iniquities (Psal. LXXVIII, 8) , especially when the earth itself is moved and disturbed against the proud, not the tenant or stranger, but its inhabitant: and let the completion rise like a river, and let it descend like the river of Egypt: so that those who repent may ascend with the rising river: but those who persist in their sins may descend like the river of Egypt, and be swallowed up by the sea. And by this, it is shown that the pride of Jacob, against which the Lord swears, is to be devoured by eternal punishments.

8:9-10 (Verse 9, 10.) And it shall come to pass on that day, says the Lord (Vulgate adds God): The sun will be darkened at noon, and I will make the earth go dark in the midst of light. I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation. I will bring sackcloth upon every waist, and baldness upon every head. I will make it like the mourning for an only son, and the end of it like a bitter day. LXX: And it shall come to pass on that day, says the Lord God: the sun will be darkened at noon, and darkness will come over the earth in the midst of light. I will turn your festivals into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation. I will bring sackcloth upon every loins, and baldness upon every head. I will make it like the mourning for a beloved one, and those who are with him like a day of sorrow. That day, which is called the day of captivity, signifies the day when both peoples will be led into Assyria and Chaldea, where the sun will set at noon due to the magnitude of sadness, and clear light will fill everything, while darkness will envelop all. On that day, their festivities and all their songs will be turned into mourning and lamentation. And they will wear sackcloth on their backs or loins, and according to the custom of ancient mourners, they will have baldness on their heads, which we also read that Job did for the deaths of his children (Job 1). And so great will be the magnitude of mourning and sadness, that it will overcome the grief of a mother and a most beloved only son dying: and all things will be filled with lamentation and bitterness. We can understand this place also in the Passion of the Lord, when the sun withdrew its rays at the sixth hour, and the one not daring to look at his hanging Lord on the cross. (Luke 23): when darkness filled all things, and their festivities and songs, surpassing Vespasian and Titus, were transformed into mourning and sorrow: when all things were filled with tears, penitence, and sackcloth, and they had bald heads, who previously adorned their hair in the Nazarene style, nourished for the Lord. Then the firstborn Son of God, the people of Israel, who had extended their hand to the Only Begotten and true Son of God, was handed over to eternal mourning: and his last moments, along with those who were with him, were filled with bitterness. Now, those who rejected the sun of justice are left in darkness: we, who were sitting in the shadow of death, have seen a great light (Isaiah 9), and all their festivities have been transferred to the mysteries of the Church, so that, while they weep, we may sing praises to the Lord. They are girded with ropes and cilices: for us it is said with the apostles: Let your loins be girded ((or girt)), and lamps burning in your hands (Luke 12:35). We are girded with the truth of Christ, fulfilling that which is written: Stand fast therefore in the truth, girding your loins with truth (Ephesians 6:14). But they, on the other hand, are surrounded by the lie of the devil for the sake of truth. Our head, of whom the Savior speaks: But the very hairs of your head are all numbered (Matthew 10:30), has perpetual hair, and in our head, which is Christ, we possess strength to slay the lion. But they slept in the concubine's synagogue, and their hair was cut off by the devil, losing the power of their heads, losing their eyes with their strength, about whom it is written in Ecclesiastes: The eyes of the wise are in their head; but the fool walks in darkness. Their companions are in mourning, our companions are clothed in garments of joy.

8:11-12

(Verse 11, 12) Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord, when I will send forth (Vulgate: send) a famine upon the land: not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. In that day, the fair virgins and young men shall faint for thirst. Those who swear by the guilt of Samaria, and say, 'As your god, Dan, lives,' and, 'As the way of Beersheba lives,' they shall fall and never rise again. LXX: Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord God, when I will send a famine on the land: not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord. And the waters shall be stirred up from the sea to the sea, and from the north to the east they shall go to and fro, seeking the word of the Lord, but they shall not find it. In that day, the fair virgins and young men shall faint with thirst, those who swear by the sin of Samaria and say: As your god lives, O Dan, and as your god lives, O Bersabee. And they shall fall, and not rise again. In Hebrew, there are no waters, and 'propitiation,' which we translate as forgiveness, and in Hebrew is called 'Asamath', signifies idol: which is the beginning of sins. The old story tells, both in Latin and Greek, and of all barbarian nations, nothing is harsher than hunger, which often compels the besieged to feed on human flesh, and to act according to their cruel nature: so that even parents do not spare their young children, and the marital affection tears apart the limbs of the beloved wife who was once loved. If hunger of bodies causes this, what should be said about the hunger of souls? which on the day of the resurrection of the Lord oppressed the people of the Jews, and joined with the most burning hunger, the thirst of those who do not have the bread that descends from heaven, and those waters that flowed from the belly of Jesus. The Law has been taken away from them, and the Prophets have fallen into eternal silence: they move from sea to sea, and from the British Ocean to the Atlantic Ocean, that is, from the West to the South, and from the North to the East, foreigners throughout the whole world, are unable to find the word of God. In what place shall we ask the Jews where they think that day signifies, in which they endure the hunger of hearing the word of God: especially when they read the Scriptures and follow the humility of the letters? To them we suggest that the predicted hunger is spiritual understanding, in which Christ is seen, the passion of the Lord is found and the resurrection is discovered. They go around the world and seek the word of the Lord, and do not find it: because they have denied the Word of the Lord, which was done in the hands of all the prophets, which was in the beginning with the Father, which was made flesh, and dwelt among us (John I). At that time, beautiful virgins and young men, both chosen and educated (for this is what 'Baurim' signifies), became scarce due to thirst. The beautiful virgins represent the synagogues, and the chosen ones represent the teachers of the people. When they became scarce, they taught that the curses of Deuteronomy were fulfilled among the Jewish people (Deut. XXVII, XXVIII, XXIX). These chosen ones and teachers swore by the idol of Samaria, namely the golden calves, and said: 'May your God, Dan, live in the borders of the land of Judah, where Paneas is now, and at that time the golden calf was worshipped there. And may your way, Bersabee, live, for they rarely traveled there due to its long and difficult journey, both the just and unjust kings of Judah.' And because they have done this, therefore they shall fall down, and shall not rise again, that is, they shall not regain the state which they had before. But the Lord sends famine into the land over those who are earthly-minded: and it is not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord, when because of the sins of the people the teaching fails in the Churches. And from sea to sea, that is, from the salty and most bitter waves to the sea they reach: not encountering rivers, not sweetest and various springs, but again flowing toward bitter things. And from the North to the East, desiring to abandon the North (which is the most harsh wind and is called the right one by the ignorant) and to reach the East, which they will not be able to find, because they do not travel in a straight path, but wander on winding paths, and not holding to the royal road, they are led astray by crooked windings. At that time the souls of virgins would fail, whom the Apostle calls incorrupt: and he desires them to possess eternal chastity, writing to the Corinthians: For I have espoused you to one man, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. But I fear lest as the serpent seduced Eve by his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted, and fall from the simplicity that is in Christ (II Cor. X, 2, 3). And if all virgins were beautiful or good, he would never have said that good virgins would fail; but he placed good virgins in contrast to bad ones, who are holy in body and spirit. There are five foolish virgins who did not prepare oil for their lamps (Matthew 23). But those are good and beautiful virgins who had the light of virtues and entered the bridegroom's chamber. But the virgins will fail because they will not find the word of the Lord. From this we understand that when there is no teaching in the Churches, chastity will perish, purity will die, and all virtues will depart, because they have not eaten the word of the Lord. Whoever eats it will be satisfied, as Solomon says: The righteous person satisfies his soul, but the souls of the wicked will be hungry (Proverbs 13:2). And David, who reached old age, freely sang: I was young and now I am old, yet I have not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his descendants begging for bread (Psalm 37:25). How many martyrs perished of hunger in persecutions and lacked the sustenance of these bodies? Therefore, about the bread that comes down from heaven, it is said that whoever eats it will neither hunger nor thirst. With the virgins failing, the young men will also fail, those who had previously conquered the world. And they will fail because they swear by the idol of Samaria, which we always understand to be in the person of heretics, as the same prophet says: Woe to those who despise Zion and rely on the mountain of Samaria (Amos 6:1). For heretics despise the Church of God and rely on the falsehood of their teachings, raising themselves against the knowledge of God, dividing His people, and saying: We have no share in David, no inheritance in the son of Jesse (1 Kings 12:16). If anyone swears by the sin of Samaria and says, 'As the Lord lives, Dan, and as the way of Beersheba lives,' that person will fall and will not rise again. Dan could not find a possession in the last borders of Judah, as it is written in the book of Judges (Judges 18), and it is interpreted as judgement. And Beersheba, due to the variation of accents, is translated into our language as 'well of the oath' or 'well of satisfaction' or 'well of the seventh.' Therefore, heretics at the ends of the holy Scriptures thirst, despising the judgement of God and desiring the way of Beersheba, which was in the tribe of Judah. And desiring to imitate many sacraments of the Church, they claim to be satisfied and filled. To them, the Apostle Paul reproaches: Already you are satisfied, already you have become rich (1 Corinthians 4:8), and they swear in the name of the Lord, who once fell because they regarded their idols as their god and will not rise again. But those who want to repent and do not say, 'As the Lord lives, Dan, and as the way of Beersheba lives,' will hear through Jeremiah: Can one who falls not rise again? Or one who turns away not return? (Jeremiah 8:4).

9:1

(Chapter 9, Verse 1) I saw the Lord standing upon the altar, and he said: Strike the hinge, and let the thresholds tremble: for greed is at the head of all, and with the sword I will kill their last one. There will be no escape for them: they will flee, and no one who flees will be saved. LXX: I saw the Lord standing upon the altar, and he said: Strike upon the mercy seat, and the vestibules will be shaken: and scatter upon the heads of all, and with the sword I will kill the rest of them. He shall not flee from those who flee; and he shall not be saved from those who are saved. He who, with Ezekiel and John the Baptist, has seen the heavens opened (Ezek. I; Mat. III), and the veil that was placed before the face of Moses (Exod. XXXIV), has been taken away from his eyes, so that what is written may be fulfilled: The commandment of God is a clear light illuminating the eyes (Ps. XVIII, 9); this person will see the Lord standing upon the altar, and commanding the prophet, or, as many believe, the angel who is bound to administer the punishments for sins, to strike the hinges of the temple, or the mercy seat, and cause its lintels or vestibules to tremble. And when, he says, the temple has been dissolved and destroyed because of the wickedness of men, and my wrath has begun from my sanctuary, let everyone recognize that they cannot escape, with greed possessing all things, and that their final end is death, and no defenses can help them escape the judgment of God: and what we read according to the Septuagint, that he dispersed it among the heads of all, their heads are beautifully divided, who by their own choice have separated themselves from him who is the head of all, and have said: We have no king except Caesar (John 19:15), who with impious voice cried out: Crucify, crucify such a one. And: His blood be upon us, and upon our children. All of these things we can refer to the heretics, whose altar is struck, and all initiations and sacraments are profaned, who have greed in their heads, with the partridge crying out through them, and gathering those whom she did not bring forth, and making riches without judgment (Jer. XVII). Therefore, the Lord will also destroy his final remains or relics, so that the begun chapter may be completed, and his end will be foolish. But when the Lord strikes the hinges and wields his sword against them, there will be no one who can escape or deflect the impending sword of the Lord. And at the same time, it should be noted that, while the Lord is standing on the altar, the propitiatory or hinges of the temple are struck first, then the vestibules are shaken, thirdly the heads of all are divided, and fourthly those who remain are killed with the sword. For unless the Lord tramples the arrogance of heretics with his foot and strikes their perverse and wicked doctrine with the spiritual sword, and divides their masters, who are accepted as leaders, among themselves, and strikes them in a good way, the disciples cannot be brought to life, according to what is written: I will kill and give life: I will strike and heal (Deut. XXXII, 39). The teachers are killed and beaten so that the students may live: the heads are divided so that the other members may be healed.

9:2-5

(Vers. 2 seqq.) If they descend to the depths, my hand will bring them up from there. And if they ascend to heaven, I will bring them down from there. And if they hide themselves on the top of Carmel, I will search and take them from there. And if they hide from my sight at the bottom of the sea, I will command the serpent to bite them. And if they go into captivity before their enemies, I will command the sword to kill them. I will set my eyes upon them for evil and not for good. And the Lord, the God of hosts, who touches the earth and it withers, and all who dwell in it mourn, and it rises like the Nile, and sinks again, like the river of Egypt. Seventy: If they are buried in Sheol, from there my hand will pluck them up; and if they ascend to heaven, from there I will bring them down. If they hide themselves on the top of Carmel, from there I will search them out and take them; and if they hide from my sight at the bottom of the sea, from there I will command the serpent, and it shall bite them; and if they go into captivity before their enemies, from there I will command the sword, and it shall kill them; and I will fix my eyes upon them for evil and not for good. And the Lord God Almighty, who touches the earth and shakes it, and all its inhabitants will mourn, and their end will come like a flood, and their downfall like the river of Egypt. He who said before, there will be no escape for them, now cuts off their escape into separate parts, and hyperbolically testifies that even if they do this and that, they will not be able to escape. If they descend to the depths, he says, my hand will bring them out from there: not because anyone is able to be pulled back from the depths before the day of resurrection, but because even those in the depths are under His power. We learn that what was foretold about Dathan and Abiron has come to pass, whom the gaping earth swallowed up while they were still alive (Numbers 16). And if they were to ascend, it is said, even to the heavens, I will bring them down from there; for Enoch and Elijah, taken up with their bodies into heaven (Genesis 5; 2 Kings 4), are governed by the will of God. Consider the different realms: we descend to hell, we ascend to heaven; we are brought forth from hell, we are brought down from heaven. In the former, there is extreme despair; in the latter, there is the greatness of pride. If they should hide in the summit of Carmel, or near the borders of Phoenicia in the northern region, or towards the south due to the vastness of the desert, where Nabal the Carmelite used to live (1 Samuel 25), then, he says, I will search and take them away: and if they attempt to avoid the eyes of God in the depths of the sea (Jonah 1), or as I speak of the prophet, in Tarshish, there I will command the serpent, which here signifies Leviathan or a whale, to come against the enemies through the serpent and the whale. And he will bite them, that is, he will devour them with his jaws. And lest we feel any captivity from the enemies through the things he said above, Scripture opens up what he had previously said in riddles. And if they go into captivity before their enemies, there I will command the sword, and it will kill them, so that they may not think of the end of their evils as servitude; but let the hostile sword also pierce the captured ones: and those who are able to survive and escape death, may not escape the gaze of God, but he shall set his eyes upon them for evil, and not for good, so that he may always visit them and compel them to penance through torments. And the almighty God declares that He will do these things, at whose touch and command the foundations of the earth are shaken or decay, and all its inhabitants are filled with weeping and mourning. He speaks these words to show the magnitude of His divine power, not that He actually desires to do what He threatens; for His powers do not fulfill His will. But if the earth decays or trembles, even insensible nature perceives its Creator; how much more so does man, a fragile creature whose spiritual treasure is enclosed in earthen and corporeal vessels? And just as the river of Egypt flows into the sea and is sucked up, so too the land of Israel, of which it was said above: Whoever touches the land and decays, shall go into captivity and be devoured by enemies; in a metaphorical sense, what is possessed emerges from what is possessed, as indicated by divine speech. And we have interpreted these things in accordance with the order of the following history, as best we could, although our understanding may have failed in some instances. Furthermore, David explains the entire extent of this place, saying: Lord, you have tested me and you know me (Ps. 139:1). And immediately he adds: Where can I go from your spirit? Or where can I flee from your face? If I ascend to heaven, you are there; if I make my bed in Sheol, you are there. If I rise on the wings of the dawn and settle on the far side of the sea, even there your hand will guide me; your right hand will hold me fast (cf. Psalms 139:7-10). In Deuteronomy, we read something similar: This commandment that I am commanding you today is not too hard for you, nor is it too far away. It is not in heaven, that you should say, 'Who will go up to heaven for us, and get it for us so that we may hear it and observe it?' (cf. Deuteronomy 30:11-12). Nor is it placed beyond the sea, so that you may say: Who will go across the sea for us and bring it to us, that we may hear it and do it, but the word is very near you, in your mouth and in your heart, that you may do it (Deuteronomy XXX, 11, 12). For when the soul, released from the bodily bonds, has the freedom to fly wherever it wishes or is compelled to go, due to its subtle substance, will it be led to the underworld (of which it is written: Let sinners be turned into hell, all the nations that forget God (Psalm IX, 18)). And, in hell, who will confess to you? (Psalm 6:6) And, your glory descended into hell. (Psalm 48:18) Certainly, he will be lifted up to heavenly things, where spiritual wickedness is in the heavens, and if he desires to claim the knowledge of true circumcision, for this is interpreted as Carmelus, and with contempt for humility, he will dwell in the mountains, and there he will not be able to escape the searching hand of God. But if, in despair of salvation, he attempts to avoid the eyes of the Lord and reaches the furthest boundaries of false waves, even there the Lord will command the twisted and ancient serpent (Revelation 20), who is the enemy and avenger, and he will bite her. Also, she will be punished by the sword of the Lord for her vices and sins, and He will set His eyes upon her for evil, not for good, so that through torture and punishment she may return to the Lord. And when Almighty God touches their land and shakes it, and causes all earthly things to wither, understanding their crimes, they will turn to mourning, and the Lord Himself will ascend and descend twofold. He will ascend over the saints like a river of consummation, that is, of the earth, in order to consume their earthly works. He will descend upon sinners like the river of Egypt, so that they may be cast into the bitterness of torment by the force of the Lord.

9:6

(Verse 6.) He who builds his ascent in heaven and establishes his foundation on earth: he who calls the waters of the sea and pours them out upon the face of the earth: The Lord is his name. LXX: He who builds his ascent in heaven and establishes his promise on earth: he who calls the water of the sea and pours it out upon the face of the earth: The Lord Almighty is his name. The Lord God Almighty, who looks upon or touches the earth and moves it, is the one who daily builds his ascent in heaven and says in the Gospel: My Father is still working, and I am working as well (John 5:17). And not only did God build Eve from Adam's rib as a figure of the Church (Gen. II), but He daily builds believers and members of His body, and lifts them from the earth to heaven, so that He Himself may ascend in them. The Lord ascended into heaven with Enoch (Gen. V), ascended with Elijah (IV Kings II), ascended with Moses, whose burial place could not be found on earth because he had ascended to heaven (Deut. XXXIV). He ascended with Paul, who was a chosen vessel, and was transformed from a persecutor into an apostle (2 Cor. 12). He was caught up to the heights, so that he ascended to the third heaven, and through the Holy Spirit and the Son, he reached the Father, and heard unspeakable words, the mysteries of the Trinity, which are not lawful for humans to hear. Therefore, he who ascends daily in the holy ones, has established his bundle on the earth, of which it is said in the Gospel: Fear not, little flock, for it has pleased my Father to dwell in you (Luke 12:32). This bundle is bound together by the one religion of the Lord. From this, the religion itself received its name from being bound and united in the bundle of the Lord. Moreover, according to the Seventy, it founded its promise upon the earth so that all the promises that the holy prophets sang with their mouths may not be empty sounds and the mere names of tropology, but be poured out upon the earth. And when they have the foundations of history, then they may receive the summit of spiritual understanding: that truly Christ was born of the Virgin, truly raised Lazarus from the dead, truly healed the woman with a flow of blood at his touch, truly the blind saw upon the coming of the Lord, the lame ran, the contracted hands were extended, the leprosy was cleansed; even though according to tropology the divine word is born every day from the virginal soul, every day those dead to sin and bound by the cords of vices may be ordered to come forth from the tomb of their crimes, every day the works of blood may be restrained, the blind may see in the faith of Christ, the lame may run in the way of the Lord, and the withered hands of greed may be stretched out for almsgiving, and the leprosy of Mary, which contaminates whatever it touches, may receive its former purity (Num. 12). But this Lord also calls the most bitter waters of the sea, and pours them out upon those who have turned their faces to the Lord. He calls them bitter waters so that he may make them sweet and brings forth winds from his treasuries and commands the heavy waters to be suspended in the height with its saltiness, straining and boiling them with ethereal heat, and dispenses them as rain, and sends them down upon the face of the earth, so that dry things may be moistened by rains, and where sin has abounded, grace may superabound.

9:7-8

Are you not like the children of Ethiopia to me, O sons of Israel, says the Lord? Did I not bring up Israel from the land of Egypt, and the Philistines from Cappadocia, and the Syrians from Cyrene? Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from the face of the earth: yet will I not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, says the Lord. LXX: Are you not like the children of Ethiopia to me, O sons of Israel, says the Lord? Did I not bring up Israel from the land of Egypt, and the Philistines from Caphtor and the Syrians from Kir? Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are on the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from the face of the earth. Yet I will not completely destroy the house of Jacob, says the Lord. As for Cyrene, Aquila and the fifth edition have put the Hebrew word itself, Cir (), and the Septuagint the pit, that is, βυθον, Theodotion the wall, Symmachus Cyrene: whom we also followed in this place. I will conclude the understanding of this whole passage that I have proposed, and of all that is contained in this chapter, with a brief discourse, up to the point where it is written: Those who say, 'Evil will not come to us, and the sword will not come upon us,' so that we may know what is said: I am the Lord God Almighty, who cannot be hidden, who touches the earth and it quakes; who builds my ascension in heaven; who calls forth the waters of the sea and pours them out upon the face of the earth; whose name is the Lord, who am the creator of all things: I fashioned all peoples from the same clay and generated them by an equal lot. Finally, I have brought together the Ethiopians, Palestinians, Syrians, and Jews, who are distant in location and body, under the law of mortality. I also exchange and move my slaves here and there at my own discretion, and transfer them to all provinces. Do not become proud because I led you out of Egypt and did not allow you, as my chosen people, to serve Pharaoh: I have done the same with the Palestinians, whom the Seventy foreigners transported, who are called Caphthorim in Hebrew, in order to transfer them from Cappadocia and settle them in the regions of Palestine. I also transferred the Syrians, that is, the Aramaeans, from Cyrene. From this, those who have become equal in status will be punished by the judgment of my equal justice, and I will overthrow all impious kingdoms without discrimination of persons. But you, O sons of Israel, of whom I said: My firstborn son is Israel (Exod. IV, 22). And: Out of Egypt I called my son (Hosea XII, 1), I will strike with a rod, and I will visit your sins; but I will not destroy you forever, and I will not take away my mercy from you (Ps. LXXXVIII), and like those shaken and sifted in a sieve, I will cleanse and choose, so that whoever is a stone, and strengthened by repentance, will not fall from my sieve; but whoever falls like dust to the ground, let them be struck by the sword, so that they may die, the sinners of my people, not because they have sinned before, but because they have persevered in sins until death. But everyone in Israel, who sees God with their mind and is led out of Egypt, if they desire the vices of Egypt and the delights of the world, not only return to Egypt, but also to Ethiopia, in which, according to Jeremiah (Chap. 13), they cannot change their skin; they are saved by the coming of Christ, and what is written is fulfilled in him: Ethiopia will stretch out her hands to God (Psalm 68:31). And when they worship him, it will be said of them: The Ethiopians will fall before him (Psalm 72:9). Those who have fallen down and carried victims from Ethiopia across the rivers to the Lord, will be able to say: I am dark and beautiful, because the sun has made me pale (Song of Solomon 1:4). For bodies withering in shadows and idleness cannot endure the temptations and heat of the world; but those that are prepared for struggle and contests, having been dried by the sun, overcome the injustices of the world and obtain the blessing of the Holy Spirit, as it says to the just: The sun shall not scorch you by day, nor the moon by night (Psalm 121:6). Therefore, the Ethiopians are turned into the children of God, if they repent, and the children of God are turned into Ethiopians, if they have fallen into the depths of sins. For the Creator God Himself turns the Cappadocians into Palestinians, and those who were engaged in the coldness of faith, and were subjected to the harsh northerly wind, He made to fall, and having set aside their pride, they felt the judgment of the Lord. He also transferred the Syrians, that is, the lofty and sublime ones, who were called Aramaeans, from Cyrene to a weak wall, or that which threatened the most bitter sea, and was near the Syrtes, and was held in a pit next to seventy (others), into a good direction, so that He might make them lofty. For the eyes of the Lord are over all kingdoms of sin, which the devil shows to the Lord (Matthew 4), and about which the Apostle says: Sin does not reign in your mortal body, to obey its desires (Romans 6:12). However, when he visits sinners with his rod and crushes and strikes those who remain in sin, he does not allow those souls who are called the house of Jacob, who supplant sin and overcome in battle, and attack the heel of the bloody brother, to perish forever.

9:9-10

(Verses 9, 10.) Behold, I will give the command, and I will shake the house of Israel among all the nations, as grain is shaken in a sieve, and not a pebble will fall to the ground. All the sinners of my people will die by the sword, those who say: 'No disaster will come near or overtake us.' LXX: For behold, I will command and sift the house of Israel among all the nations, as one sifts with a sieve, and no fragment shall fall to the ground. All the sinners of my people shall die by the sword, who say: 'Evil shall not come near, nor shall any good come upon us.' God, who measures the waters with the palm of his hand, and the heavens with his span, and closes up the whole earth with his fist (Isaiah 40), he himself, by his greatness, will shake the edges of the earth to and fro like a sieve: so that the chaff and the filth of sinners falling to the ground, may leave behind pure wheat, which will be stored in the barns; or as the Septuagint translated, he will hold a fan in his hand and will cleanse his threshing floor and gather the wheat into his barns, but he will burn the chaff with unquenchable fire; concerning which the Lord speaks through Jeremiah: 'What has straw to do with the wheat?' (Jeremiah 23:28). Of this same thing, under the figure of another parable, that fishing-net shows, which is cast into the sea of this world, and draws forth fishes of every kind; and when the bad have been cast away, only the good are kept (Matthew 13). In the same way, the Lord has dispersed the wretched house of Israel throughout the whole world, and has shaken it in a sieve and fanned it with a winnowing fork; and the stones and pebbles not falling to the ground, those who are called sinners on account of the filth and dust shall die by the sword. And they endure this because they do not believe the prophecies of the prophets, nor do they think that the things which the Lord threatens through them will come to pass. And when they promise themselves prosperity, they will suffer evil afterwards, opposite to the saints who fear and do not sin, and therefore do not die by the sword, because they said: Evils will come near us, and punishments will come upon us, which our sins have deserved, about which God speaks more fully in Jeremiah: I will take up and speak against that nation and kingdom, to pluck up and to break down; if that nation turns from its evil, I will relent of the disaster that I intended to do to it (Jer. XVIII, 7, 8). Therefore God is not changed, who is always unchangeable; but we change him by our conversion. He rages, he gets angry, he threatens, and he says that he will inflict punishment: if we repent, he too will repent of his sentence. Again, next to the same Jeremiah (Chapter XVII), he promises prosperity: if we are dissolved in negligence, he will repent of his promise and change it. We can see an example of this in Nineveh and Jerusalem, some of whom were freed from impending punishments, while others lost what had been promised to their fathers.

9:11-13

(Vers. 11 seqq.) In that day I will raise up the fallen tent of David, and rebuild its broken walls, and restore what has collapsed, and rebuild it as it was in ancient times, that they may possess the remnant of Edom and all the nations who are called by my name, declares the Lord who is doing these things. LXX: In that day I will raise up the fallen tent of David, and rebuild its broken parts, and raise up what has been buried, and restore it as in the ancient days, that they may seek me, the remnant of humanity, and all the nations over whom my name has been called, declares the Lord who is doing all these things. Where the authority of the apostles prevails, especially that of Peter and James, whom the vessel of election calls the pillars of the Church (Galatians 2), there all suspicion of various explanations is to be removed, and what is expounded by such great men is to be followed. In the book of Acts, a question arose among the apostles as to why Paul and Barnabas had received men from the Gentiles without circumcision and observance of the Sabbath. Peter answered, as he should: and James, approving his opinion, spoke these words: Men, brothers, listen to me: Simon has related how God first visited the Gentiles to take from them a people for his name, and the words of the prophets agree with this, as it is written: After this, I will return and rebuild the fallen tent of David. I will rebuild its ruins and set it up again, so that the rest of mankind may seek the Lord, even all the Gentiles who are called by my name, says the Lord, who does these things, known from of old (Acts 15:13 and following). Therefore this tabernacle of David, which had fallen (had fallen, however, among those who say, it will not come near, and no evil will come upon us: those whom the Lord had shaken and tested with His sieve, and whose threshing floor of His majesty He had purged with His winnowing fan, and all sinners He had killed with the sword), now according to the custom of the Scriptures, after tortures, after punishments, promising prosperity and joy, declares that He will raise it up, and in the resurrection of the Lord restore all things, so that what had fallen in the synagogues may rise in the Churches, and believers may possess the remnants of Edom, and all nations, so that whatever remains of the bloody and earthly kingdom may be transformed into heavenly kingdoms, and all peoples who have forgotten the Lord may be converted and return to Him. But if we want to read according to the LXX, those who are left of mankind, and all the nations upon whom my name has been invoked, we should accept as those who have believed from the Jewish people, and as those who have not fallen like a small stone from the sieve, nor have been thrown out with the dust and chaff. For the remnants will be saved at the beginning of faith, and at the end of the world, so that when the fullness of the Gentiles comes in, then all Israel will be saved (Romans 11). But the name of the Lord which is invoked above the rest and above all nations, that is what the Savior says: Father, I have revealed your name to men (John 17:6). And so that I do not delay the rule of covenants with a long discourse, and in this prophet, and in the other things whatsoever are preached about the building of Jerusalem (the walls of Jerusalem) and the temple, and the blessedness of all things, the Jews in the last time promise themselves in vain expectation, and they mention things to be fulfilled carnally. But we who do not follow the letter that kills, but the life-giving Spirit, now in the Church we are convinced of fulfillment, and every day it is fulfilled in individuals who, falling through sin, are rebuilt through repentance.

9:14-15

(Verse 14, 15.) Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord, when the plowman shall overtake the reaper and the treader of grapes him who sows the seed; the mountains shall drip with sweet wine, and all the hills shall flow with it. I will bring back the captives of My people Israel; they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and drink wine from them; they shall also make gardens and eat fruit from them. I will plant them in their land, and no longer shall they be pulled up from the land I have given them, says the Lord your God. LXX: Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord, when the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him who sows seed; the mountains shall drip with sweet wine, and all the hills shall flow with it. I will bring back the captives of My people Israel; they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and drink wine from them; they shall also make gardens and eat fruit from them. I will plant them in their land, and no longer shall they be pulled up from the land I have given them, says the Lord your God Almighty. The raising up of the tent of David, which had fallen, and the rebuilding of what had been destroyed and overturned, is described as the abundance of all things, how those who previously went, went and wept, carrying their seeds, and those who come will come with joy, carrying their bundles; so that the threshing of the bundles may yield a harvest, whether the plowman is reaping and the grape is being gathered, and bring forth color in the time of sowing; or, more truly, that the wine presser may grasp the seed of the grape, and so all things may succeed one another, that no day may be without wheat, wine, and joy. At that time, grapes will be crushed in full winepresses, and must flowing with the blood of Christ and the martyrs will be poured out. And the one who crushes the grapes in this way will be the seedbed of the Word of God, so that their blood may cry out in the world more than the blood of Abel the just cried out. But whoever has rightfully ascended to the mountains of virtue will sweat with honey, indeed, will drip with the sweetness of the Word of God, of which it is written: 'Taste and see how good the Lord is' (Psalm 33:9), and 'How sweet are your words to my taste, sweeter than honey to my mouth' (Psalm 119:103). And those who are below the mountains, or rather, second from the mountains, which the bridegroom leaps over in the Cantic of Canticles (Song of Songs), and calls hills, they will be planted and will imitate the paradise of God: so that all the fruit of doctrine may hang on them. Then if anyone is held captive by unbelief, and has not yet believed in the name of the Lord, and is from the remnants of his people, the former Israel, he will return to the faith of Christ, so that he may hold in the Gospel what he heard in the Prophets. But the mountains shall drop sweetness, and the hills shall be planted with vineyards: after the conversion of the Lord, they shall build cities which were desolate before, and shall dwell in them: and they shall plant vineyards, and shall drink the wine of them: they shall make gardens, and eat the fruits of them. And I will plant them upon their own land: and I will no more pluck them out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God. (Amos 9:14-15) And in the Psalms it is said: The impetus of the river gladdens the city of God (Ps. XLV, 4). They will also plant a vineyard of Noah (Gen. IX), and they will drink its wine, and they will become intoxicated, and they will hear from the Lord Savior: Drink, my friends, and become intoxicated (Cant. V, 1). But they will drink the wine, which he promised to drink anew with his apostles in the kingdom of the Father (Mark XIV). This is the vineyard of Sorec, whose wine we drink daily in the mysteries. Not content with the happiness of these things, they will make delightful gardens and water them, so that no kinds of virtues are lacking in them, and they will eat their fruits. For whoever plants and waters, he himself also will eat. And when all these things are done by mountains and hills, giving forth sweetness, and by building cities, and by dwelling in them, planting vineyards, and drinking their wine, making gardens, and eating their fruits, then the Lord will plant these planters upon his land, of which it is said: I believe that I will see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living (Psalm 26:13). And in the Gospel: Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth (Matt. 5:4). But after he has planted them and their roots have grown deep, they will no longer be uprooted from the earth he has given them. From this we understand that the Church, even though it is shaken by persecutions, can never be destroyed; it may be tested, but it will not be overcome. And this will happen because the Lord God Almighty, or the Lord God of the Church, has promised to make it so, and his promise is the law of nature.

Commentary on Daniel

St. Jerome, Commentary on Daniel Early Church Fathers - Additional Texts (1958). pp. 15-157 [Translated by Gleason L. Archer] This text was transcribed by Roger Pearse, 2004. All material on this page is in the public domain - copy freely.

Verse numbers have been edited in this repository to conform to the KJV Bible (with the exception of the Prayer of Azariah in Chapter 3, which is kept as it was in Jerome's Bible) Table of Contents

- Prologue
- CHAPTER ONE
- CHAPTER TWO
- CHAPTER THREE
- CHAPTER FOUR
- CHAPTER FIVE
- CHAPTER SIX
- CHAPTER SEVEN
- CHAPTER EIGHT
- CHAPTER NINE
- CHAPTER TEN • CHAPTER ELEVEN • CHAPTER TWELVE • CHAPTER THIRTEEN • CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Prologue Porphyry wrote his twelfth book against the prophecy of Daniel, denying that it was composed by the person to whom it is ascribed in its title, but rather by some individual living in Judaea at the time of the Antiochus who was surnamed Epiphanes. He furthermore alleged that "Daniel" did not foretell the future so much as he related the past, and lastly that whatever he spoke of up till the time of Antiochus contained authentic history, whereas anything he may have conjectured beyond that point was false, inasmuch as he would not have foreknown the future. Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea, made a most able reply to these allegations in three volumes, that is, the eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth. Appollinarius did likewise, in a single large book, namely his twenty-sixth. Prior to these authors Methodius made a partial reply. But inasmuch as it is not our purpose to make answer to the false accusations of an adversary, a task requiring lengthy discussion, but rather to treat of the actual content of the prophet's message for the benefit of us who are Christians, I wish to stress in my preface this fact, that none of the prophets has so clearly spoken concerning Christ as has this prophet Daniel. For not only did he assert that He would come, a prediction common to the other prophets as well, but also he set forth the very time at which He would come. Moreover he went through the various kings in order, stated the actual number of years involved, and announced beforehand the clearest signs of events to come. And because Porphyry saw that all these things had been fulfilled and could not deny that they had taken place, he overcame this evidence of historical accuracy by taking refuge in this evasion, contending that whatever is foretold concerning Antichrist at the end of the world was actually fulfilled in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, because of certain similarities to things which took place at his time. But this very attack testifies to Daniel's accuracy. For so striking was the reliability of what the prophet foretold, that he could not appear to unbelievers as a predictor of the future, but rather a narrator of things already past. And so wherever occasion arises in the course of explaining this volume, I shall attempt briefly to answer his malicious charge, and to controvert by simple explanation the philosophical skill, or rather the worldly malice, by which he strives to subvert the truth and by specious legerdemain to remove that which is so apparent to our eyes.

I would therefore beseech you, Pammachius, as a foremost lover of learning, and Marcella, as an outstanding exemplar of Roman virtue, men who are bound together by faith and blood, to lend aid to my efforts by your prayers, in order that our Lord and Savior might in His own cause and by His mind make answer through my mouth. For it is He who says to the prophet, "Open thy mouth and I will fill it" (Psalm 81:10). For if He admonishes us, when we have been hailed before judges and tribunals, not to ponder what answer we are to give to them (Luke 12:11-12), how much more is He able to carry on His own war against blaspheming adversaries and through His servants to vanquish them? For this reason a great number of the Psalms also contain that Hebrew expression, lamanasse, rendered by the Septuagint as "To the end," but which rather is to be understood as "For victory!" For Aquila construed it as to nikopoio, that is, "To Him who grants the victory." Symmachus renders it as epinikion which properly signifies "Triumph and the palm of victory." But among other things we should recognize that Porphyry makes this objection to us concerning the Book of Daniel, that it is clearly a forgery not to be considered as belonging to the Hebrew Scriptures but an invention composed in Greek. This he deduces from the fact that in the story of Susanna, where Daniel is speaking to the elders, we find the expressions, "To split from the mastic tree" (apo tou skhinou skhisai) and to saw from the evergreen oak (kai apo tou prinou prisai), a wordplay appropriate to Greek rather than to Hebrew. But both Eusebius and Apollinarius have answered him after the same tenor, that the stories of Susanna and of Bel and the Dragon are not contained in the Hebrew, but rather they constitute a part of the prophecy of Habakkuk, the son of Jesus of the tribe of Levi. Just as we find in the title of that same story of Bel, according to the Septuagint, "There was a certain priest named Daniel, the son of Abda, an intimate of the King of Babylon." And yet Holy Scripture testifies that Daniel and the three Hebrew children were of the tribe of Judah. For this same reason when I was translating Daniel many years ago, I noted these visions with a critical symbol, showing that they were not included in the Hebrew. And in this connection I am surprised to be told that certain fault-finders complain that I have on my own initiative truncated the book. After all, both Origen, Eusebius and Apollinarius, and other outstanding churchmen and teachers of Greece acknowledge that, as I have said, these visions are not found amongst the Hebrews, and that therefore they are not obliged to answer to Porphyry for these portions which exhibit no authority as Holy Scripture.

I also wish to emphasize to the reader the fact that it was not according to the Septuagint version but according to the version of Theodotion himself that the churches publicly read Daniel. And Theodotion, at any rate, was an unbeliever subsequent to the advent of Christ, although some assert that he was an Ebionite, which is another variety of Jew. But even Origen in his Vulgate edition (of the Greek Old Testament) placed asterisks around the work of Theodotion, indicating that the material added was missing (in the Septuagint), whereas on the other hand he prefixed obeli (i.e., diacritical marks) to some of the verses, distinguishing thereby whatever was additional material (not contained in the Hebrew). And since all the churches of Christ, whether belonging to the Greek-speaking territory or the Latin, the Syrian or the Egyptian, publicly read this edition with its asterisks and obeli, let the hostile-minded not begrudge my labor, because I wanted our (Latin-speaking) people to have what the Greek-speaking peoples habitually read publicly in the regions of Aquila and Symmachus. And if the Greeks do not for all their wealth of learning despise the scholarly work of Jews, why should poverty-stricken Latins look down upon a man who is a Christian? And if my product seems unsatisfactory, at least my good intentions should be recognized. But now it is time for us to unfold the words of the prophet himself, not following our usual custom of setting everything forth in detail with an accompanying detailed discussion (the procedure followed in our commentary on the Twelve Minor Prophets), but rather employing a certain brevity and inserting at intervals an explanation of only those things which are obscure. In this way we hope to avoid tiring the reader with an innumerable abundance of books. And yet to understand the final portions of Daniel a detailed investigation of Greek history is necessary, that is to say, such authorities as Sutorius, Callinicus, Diodorus, Hieronymus, Polybius, Posidonius, Claudius, Theon, and Andronycus surnamed Alipius, historians whom Porphyry claims to have followed, Josephus also and those whom he cites, and especially our own historian, Livy, and Pompeius Trogus, and Justinus. All these men narrate the history involved in Daniel's final vision, carrying it beyond the time of Alexander to the days of Caesar Augustus in their description of the Syrian and Egyptian wars, i.e., those of Seleucus, Antiochus, and the Ptolemies. And if we are compelled from time to time to make mention of profane literature and speak of matters therein contained which we have formerly failed to mention, it is not by personal preference but by stark necessity, so to speak, in order to prove that those things which were foretold by the holy prophets many centuries before are actually contained in the written records of both the Greeks and Romans and of other peoples as well.

CHAPTER ONE

Verse 1. "In the third year of the reign of Joacim (Jehoiakim) king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came to Jerusalem and besieged it." Jehoiakim, son of the Josiah in whose thirteenth regnal year Jeremiah began to prophesy, and under whom the woman Hulda prophesied, was the same man as was called by the other name of Eliakim, and reigned over the tribes of Judah and Jerusalem eleven years. His son Jehoiachin surnamed Jeconiah, followed him in the kingship, and on the tenth day of the third month of his reign he was taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar's generals and brought to Babylon. In his place his paternal uncle Zedekiah, a son of Josiah, was appointed king, and in his eleventh year Jerusalem was captured and destroyed. Let no one therefore imagine that the Jehoiakim in the beginning of Daniel is the same person as the one who is spelled Jehoiachin in the commencement of Ezekiel. For the latter has "-chin" as its final syllable, whereas the former has "-kim." And it is for this reason that in the Gospel according to Matthew there seems to be a generation missing, because the second group of fourteen, extending to the time of Jehoiakim, ends with a son of Josiah, and the third group begins with Jehoiachin, son of Jehoiakim. Being ignorant of this factor, Porphyry formulated a slander against the Church which only revealed his own ignorance, as he tried to prove the evangelist Matthew guilty of error.

Verse 2. "And the Lord gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand." The fact that Jehoiachim is recorded to have been given over shows that it was not a victory for the might of his enemies but rather it was of the will of the Lord. "...and some of the vessels of the house of God, and he brought them to the land of Shinar to the house of his god, and he conveyed them into the treasure house of his god" (Gen. 11). The land of Shinar is a region of Babylon in which the plain of Dura was located, and also the tower which those who had migrated from the East attempted to build up to heaven. From this circumstance and from the confusion of tongues the region received the name Babylon, which, translated into our language, means "confusion." At the same time it ought to be noted, by way of spiritual interpretation, that the king of Babylon was not able to transport all of the vessels of God, and place them in the idol-house which he had built himself, but only a part of the vessels of God's house. By these vessels we are to understand the dogmas of truth. For if you go through all of the works of the philosophers, you will necessarily find in them some portion of the vessels of God. For example, you will find in Plato that God is the fashioner of the universe, in Zeno the chief of the Stoics, that there are inhabitants in the infernal regions and that souls are immortal, and that honor is the one (true) good. But because the philosophers combine truth with error and corrupt the good of nature with many evils, for that reason they are recorded to have captured only a portion of the vessels of God's house, and not all of them in their completeness and perfection.

Verse 3. "And the king said to Ashpenaz the overseer of his eunuchs, that he should out of the number of the children of Israel and, of the royal seed and (the seed of) the rulers bring in some young lads who were free from all blemish." Instead of Ashpenaz ("Asphanez") I found Abriesdri written in the Vulgate edition. For the word phorlhommin which Theodotion uses, the Septuagint and Aquila translated "the chosen ones," whereas Symmachus rendered "Parthians," understanding it as the name of a nation instead of a common noun. This is in disagreement with the Hebrew edition as it is accurately read; I have translated it as "rulers," especially because it is preceded by the words "of the seed royal." From this passage the Hebrews think that Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah were eunuchs, thus fulfilling that prophecy which is spoken by Isaiah regarding Hezekiah: "And they shall take of thy seed and make eunuchs of them in the house of the king of Babylon" (Isaiah 39:7). If however they were of the seed royal, there is no doubt but what they were of the line of David. But perhaps the following words are opposed to this interpretation: "...lads, or youths, who were free from all blemish, in order that he might teach them the literature and language of the Chaldeans." Philo supposes that Chaldee is the same thing as the Hebrew language, because Abraham came from the Chaldeans. But if we accept this we must ask how the Hebrew lads could now be bidden to be taught a language which they already knew; unless, perchance, we should say, as some believe, that Abraham was acquainted with two languages.

Verse 7. "And the overseer of the eunuchs imposed names upon them, calling Daniel Belteshazzar (Balthasar), and Hananiah Shadrach, and Mishael Meshach, and Azariah Abednego." It was not only the overseer or master of the eunuchs (as others have rendered it, the "chief-eunuch") who changed the names of saints, but also Pharaoh called Joseph in Egypt Somtonphanec (Genesis 41:45), for neither of them wished them to have Jewish names in the land of captivity. Wherefore the prophet says in the Psalm: "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" (Psalm 137:4). Furthermore the Lord Himself changes names benignly, and on the basis of events imposes names of special significance, so as to call Abram Abraham (Genesis 17:5), and Sarai Sarah (Genesis 17:15). Also in the Gospel, the former Simon received the name of Peter (Mark 3:16), and the sons of Zebedee are called "sons of thunder" (Mark 3:17) - which is not boanerges, as most people suppose, but is more correctly read benereem.

Verse 8. "Daniel, however, purposed in his heart that he would not be defiled by food from the king's table, nor by the wine which he drank, and he asked the chief of the eunuchs that he might not be polluted." He who would not eat or drink of the king's food or wine lest he be denied (especially if he should be aware that the wisdom and teaching of the Babylonians is mistaken), would never consent to utter what was wrong. On the contrary they speak it forth, not that they may follow it themselves, but in order to pass judgment upon it and refute it. Just as anyone would expose himself to ridicule if he being untrained in mathematics should desire to write in confutation of mathematicians, or, being ignorant of the teachings of philosophers should desire to write in opposition to philosophers. Hence they study the teaching of the Chaldeans with the same intention as Moses studied the wisdom of the Egyptians.

Verse 9. "God gave Daniel favor and compassion in the sight of the prince of eunuchs..." He who was taken into captivity on account of the sins of his forebears received an immediate recompense for the magnitude of his own virtues. For he had purposed in his heart that he would not be denied by food from the king's table, and preferred humble fare to royal delicacies; therefore by the bounteous bestowal of the Lord he received favor and compassion in the sight of the prince of the eunuchs. By this we may understand that if ever under pressing circumstances holy men are loved by unbelievers, it is a matter of the mercy of God, not of the goodness of perverted men.

Verse 12. "I beg thee, try us thy servants for ten days, and let pulse be given us to eat and water to drink." His faith was so incredibly great that he not only promised he would be in good flesh by eating the humbler food, but he even set a time-limit. Therefore it was not a matter of temerity but of faith, for the sake of which he despised the sumptuous fare of the king.

Verse 17. "But God gave these lads knowledge and learning in every book and branch of wisdom, and He gave to Daniel besides an understanding of all visions and dreams." Note that God is said to have given the holy lads knowledge and learning in secular literature, in every book and branch of wisdom. Symmachus rendered this by "grammatical art," implying that they understood everything they read, and by the Spirit of God could make a judgment concerning the lore of the Chaldeans. But Daniel had an outstanding gift over and above the three lads, in that he could astutely discern the significance of visions and dreams in which things to come are shown forth by means of certain symbols and mysteries. Therefore that which others saw only in a shadowy appearance he could perceive clearly with the eyes of his understanding.

Verse 18. "Therefore when the days had been completed at the end of which the king had bidden them to be presented to him, the chief of the eunuchs presented them in the presence of Nebuchadnezzar." By the "completed days" understand the period of three years which the king had appointed, so that after they had been nourished and trained for three years, they should then stand in the presence of the king.

Verse 20. "And every word of wisdom and understanding the king inquired of them, he found it in them ten times as great as all the soothsayers and magicians put together who were to be found in his entire realm." For "soothsayers" and "magicians" the Vulgate edition translated "sophists" and "philosophers" - terms to be understood not in the sense of the philosophy and sophistic erudition which Greek learning holds forth, but rather in the sense of the lore of a barbarian people, which the Chaldeans pursue as philosophy even to this day.

Verse 21. "Daniel therefore continued unto the first year of Cyrus the king." In the later discussion we shall explain how it was that Daniel who is here described as having continued till the first year of king Cyrus afterwards held office in the third year of that same Cyrus and is even recorded to have lived in the first year of Darius.

CHAPTER TWO

Verse 1. "In the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuchadnezzar saw a dream and his spirit was terrified, and his dream fled from him." If the three lads had entered before him at the end of three years, as he himself had commanded, how is it that he is now said to have seen the dream in the second year of his reign? The Hebrews solve the difficulty in this way, that the second year refers here to his reign over all the barbarian nations, not only Judah and the Chaldeans, but also the Assyrians and Egyptians, and the Moabites and the rest of the nations which by the permission of God he had conquered. For this reason Josephus also writes in the tenth book of the Antiquities: After the second year from the devastation of Egypt Nebuchadnezzar beheld a marvelous dream, and "his spirit was terrified and his dream fled from him." The impious king beheld a dream concerning things to come, in order that he might give glory to God after the holy man had interpreted what he had seen, and that great consolation might be afforded the captive (Jews) and those who still served God in their captive state. We read this same thing in the case of Pharaoh, not because Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar deserved to behold visions, but in order that Joseph and Daniel might appear as deserving of preference over all other men because of their gift of interpretation.

Verse 2. "Wherefore the king commanded that the soothsayers, the magi, the charmers, and the Chaldeans show the king his dream. And when they came, they stood in the presence of the king." Those whom we have translated as "soothsayers" (harioli) others have rendered as epaoidoi, that is, "enchanters." Well then, it seems to me that enchanters are people who perform a thing by means of words; magi are those who pursue individual lines of philosophic enquiry; charmers are those who employ blood and animal sacrifices and often have contact with corpses. Furthermore the term "astrologers" among the Chaldeans signifies, I believe, what the common people call mathematicians. But common usage and ordinary conversation understands the term magi as wicked enchanters. Yet they were regarded differently among their own nation, inasmuch as they were the philosophers of the Chaldeans, and even the kings and princes of this same nation do all they can to acquire a knowledge of this science. Wherefore also it was they who first at the nativity of our Lord and Savior learned of his birth, and who came to holy Bethlehem and adored the child, under the guidance of the star which shone above them (Matthew 2:1-12).

Verse 3. "And the king said to them, 'I have seen a dream, and from the confusion of my mind I do not know what I have seen.'" There remained in the king's heart only a shadow, so to speak, or a mere echo or trace of the dream, with the result that if others should retell it to him, he would be able to recall what he had seen, and they would certainly not be deceiving him with lies.

Verse 4. "The Chaldeans replied to the king in Syriac." Up to this point what we have read has been recounted in Hebrew. From this point on until the vision of the third year of King Balthasar which Daniel saw in Susa, the account is written in Hebrew characters, to be sure, but in the Chaldee language, which he here calls Syriac.

Verse 5. "If you do not show me the vision and its interpretation, ye shall perish and your homes shall be confiscated..." He threatened punishment and offered rewards, in order that if they should be able to tell him the dream, he might therefore believe also that which was uncertain, namely the meaning of the dream. But if they should be unable to tell the king what he in his mental confusion could not recall, they would also lose claim to trustworthiness in the interpretation they might give. At last there follows the statement:

Verses 9, 10. "Therefore tell me the dream, that I may be certain that ye are giving me its true interpretation. The Chaldeans therefore made this reply in the king's presence: 'There is no man on earth who would be able to fulfil what thou hast spoken, O king!'" The magi confess, along with the soothsayers - and all secular learning concurs - that foreknowledge of the future lies not in man's province but in God's. By this test it is proved that the prophets who proclaimed things to come spoke by the Spirit of God.

Verses 12, 13. "And when he had heard this, the king in a furious rage gave orders that all the wise men of Babylon should be slain. And when the decree went forth, the wise men were being slaughtered..." The Hebrews raise the question of why Daniel and the three lads did not enter before the king along with the other wise men, and why they were ordered to be slain with the rest when the decree was issued. They have explained the difficulty in this way, by saying that at that time, when the king was promising rewards and gifts and great honor, they did not care to go before him, lest they should appear to be shamelessly grasping after the wealth and honor of the Chaldeans. Or else it was undoubtedly true that the Chaldeans themselves, being envious of the Jews' reputation and learning, entered alone before the king, as if to obtain the rewards by themselves. Afterwards they were perfectly willing to have those whom they had denied any hope of glory to share in a common peril.

Verse 15. "And he inquired of him who had received authority from the king as to why so cruel a decree had gone forth from the presence of the king." Knowing that Daniel and the three youths possessed a knowledge and intelligence tenfold as great as that of all the soothsayers of Chaldea put together, the Chaldeans concealed from them the king's inquiry, lest they should receive preference over them in the matter of interpreting the dream. On this account Daniel inquired concerning the cruelty of the decree, being ignorant of the cause of his own peril.

Verses 16, 17. "Therefore when Arioch had explained the matter to Daniel, Daniel entered in and asked the king to grant him some time for the disclosure of the solution to the king. And he entered his home and disclosed the affair to his comrades, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah..." Daniel requested time, not that he might investigate secret things by the clever application of his intellect, but that he might beseech the Lord of Secrets. And for that reason he engaged Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah to join with him in supplication, to avoid the appearance of presuming upon his own merit alone, and to the end that those involved in a common danger might engage in common prayer.

Verse 19. "And Daniel blessed the God of heaven, and spoke, saying..." In contrast to those who occupy themselves with this world and delude the earthly minded with demonic arts and illusions, Daniel blessed the God of heaven. For the gods who did not create heaven and earth will pass away.

Verse 21. "And it is He who changes times and seasons, who transfers kingdoms and establishes kingdoms." Let us not marvel, therefore, whenever we see kings and empires succeed one another, for it is by the will of God that they are governed, altered, and terminated. And the cases of individuals are well known to Him who founded all things. He often permits wicked kings to arise in order that they may in their wickedness punish the wicked. At the same time by indirect suggestion and general discussion he prepares the reader for the fact that the dream Nebuchadnezzar saw was concerned with the change and succession of empires. "He gives wisdom to the wise and knowledge to those who acquire learning." This accords with the scripture: "The wise man will hear and increase his wisdom" (Proverbs 1:5). "For he who has, to him it shall be given" (Matthew 25:29). A soul which cherishes an ardent love of wisdom is freely infilled by the Spirit of God. But wisdom will never penetrate a perverse soul (Wisdom 3:1-13).

Verse 22. "It is He who reveals deep and hidden things, and He knows what is placed in the darkness, and with Him is the light." A man to whom God makes profound revelations and who can say, "O the depth of the riches of the knowledge and wisdom of God!" (Romans 11:33), he it is who by the indwelling Spirit probes even into the deep things of God, and digs the deepest of wells in the depths of his soul. He is a man who has stirred up the whole earth, which is wont to conceal the deep waters, and he observes the command of God, saying: "Drink water from thy vessels and from the spring of thy wells" (Proverbs 5:15). As for the words which follow, "He knows what is placed in the darkness, and with Him is the light," the darkness signifies ignorance, and the light signifies knowledge and learning. Therefore as wrong cannot hide God away, so right encompasses and surrounds Him. Or else we should interpret the words to mean all the dark mysteries and deep things (concerning God), according to what we read in Proverbs: "He understands also the parable and the dark saying." (Proverbs 1:6, LXX) This in turn is equivalent to what we read in the Psalms: "Dark waters in the clouds of the sky" (Psalm 18:11). For one who ascends to the heights and forsakes the things of earth, and like the birds themselves seeks after the most rarified atmosphere and everything ethereal, he becomes like a cloud to which the truth of God penetrates and which habitually showers rain upon the saints. Replete with a plenitude of knowledge, he contains in his breast many dark waters enveloped with deep darkness, a darkness which only Moses can penetrate and speak with God face to face (Exodus 33:11), of Whom the Scripture says: "He hath made darkness His hiding-place" (Psalm 18:11).

Verse 23. "I confess Thee, O god of my fathers, and I praise Thee because Thou hast granted me wisdom and strength." Lest it should seem to be an achievement of his own deserving, Daniel assigns it to the righteousness of his forefathers and to the faithfulness of God, Who takes pity upon their posterity even in exile.

"And now Thou hast shown me that for which we petitioned Thee. ..." That which the four of them had asked for is disclosed to the one, for the twofold purpose that he might escape any temptation to pride, on the ground of having obtained the request by himself, and also that he might render thanksgiving because he alone heard the secret of the dream.

Verse 24. "Destroy not the wise men of Babylon. Take me in before the king and I will set forth the explanation to the king. ..." He follows the example of the clemency of God, who intercedes in behalf of his persecutors, and is unwilling that those men should perish on whose account he himself had been threatened with death.

Verse 25. "I have found a man who belongs to the children of the captivity of Judah and who will set forth the explanation to the king." He credits his own diligence with what God's grace has bestowed, and he claims that he himself has done the finding, when actually Daniel had applied to him of his own volition that he might be presented to the king. This instance manifests the habitual reaction of messengers, for when they have good news to report, they wish it to appear their own doing. But the man who undertakes the explanation of the dream is certainly going to relate the dream beforehand. And note that Daniel is said to be of the children of Judah, rather than being a priest as the latter part of the story of Bel relates.

Verse 26. "Dost thou truly believe that thou canst show me the dream I have seen...." In framing his inquiry he adheres to logical sequence, so that he first asks for the dream, of which the magi had replied they were ignorant, and afterwards he asks for the interpretation of the dream. The implication is that after he has heard the dream, then he would believe also in the correctness of what was susceptible of varying interpretations.

Verse 27. "As for the secret for which the king is asking, neither the wise men nor the magi nor the soothsayers nor the diviners are able to declare it to the king." In place of diviners (haruspices), as we have rendered it, the Hebrew text has Gazareni, which only Symmachus has rendered as sacrificers, a class of people whom the Greeks usually call liver-diviners (epatoskopoi), and who inspect the inwards in order to make predictions from them concerning the future. By terming a mystery the category of a revealed dream, Daniel shows that whatever is hidden and unknown by men can still be called a "mystery." Moreover he obviates any evil suspicion on the king's part, lest he should imagine that human cleverness can discover something which is reserved to the knowledge of God alone.

Verse 28. "But there is a God in heaven who reveals mysteries." Therefore it is only in vain that thou inquirest (other MSS have: "that he inquire") of men as to something which is known only to God in heaven. Also, by indirectly drawing Nebuchadnezzar away from the worship of many gods, Daniel directs him to the knowledge of the one (true) God.

"Who hath shown thee, King Nebuchadnezzar, what is going to take place (the Vulg. reads: "the things which are going to take place") in the last times." Avoiding the blemish of adulation but cleaving to the truth, he courteously suggests that it is to the king, for it was to him that God had revealed secrets concerning what was to occur in the last times. Now either these "last days" are to be reckoned from the time when the dream was revealed to Daniel until the end of the world, or else at least this inference is to be drawn, that the over-all interpretation of the dream applies to that final end when the image and statue beheld is to be ground to powder.

"Thy dream and the visions of thy head upon thy bed were as follows." He does not say, "The visions of thine eyes," lest we should think it was something physical, but rather: "of thy head." "For the eyes of a wise man are in his head" (Ecclesiastes 2:14), that is to say in the princely organ of the heart, just as we read in the Gospel: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they are ones who shall see God" (Matthew 5:8). Again: "What are ye meditating in your hearts?" (Matthew 9:4). To be sure, other authorities in treating of this chapter, conjecture that the authoritative part of the soul (to hegemonikon) lies not in the heart but, as Plato says, in the brain.

Verse 29. "Thou, O king, didst begin to meditate upon thy bed as to what should come to pass hereafter." Instead of the true reading the Septuagint alone inserts the translation "in the last days" after the "hereafter." But if it be read thus, we must inquire quite carefully as to where "last days" have been written; and we would refute those who think the world will never be destroyed. For never would any days be called "the last days" if the world were everlasting. And as for the statement, "Thou, O king, didst begin to meditate," this would indicate the motives behind the dream; for it was for this reason that God revealed to him the secrets of the future, because the king himself wished to know what was going to happen. Also, in order that Nebuchadnezzar might marvel at the gracious gift of divine inspiration, he sets forth not only what the king had beheld in the dream, but also what he had thought to himself (beforehand).

"...and He who reveals secrets has shown thee what is to come to pass." The statement which we read in the Gospel, "Who maketh His sun to rise upon the wicked and the good" (Matthew 5:45), we realize to have been fulfilled in the case of Nebuchadnezzar also. For so great was God's mercy that He even revealed to Nebuchadnezzar secrets as to His own mode of government whereby he rules the world. Let us ask those who assert that men's characters belong to one extreme or the other, which character do they understand Nebuchadnezzar to have possessed, the good or the evil? If the good, why is he called an impious man? If the evil (which was certainly the case), why did God show forth His holy secrets to one who was evil and earthly, that is to say, earthen?

Verse 30. "Moreover this holy secret has not been revealed to me in virtue of any wisdom which inheres in me more than in all living men, but rather that the interpretation might be manifested to the king, and that thou mayest know the thoughts of thine own mind." The king had imagined that cleverness of the human intellect could embrace a knowledge of the future, and for that reason he had ordered the wise men of Babylon to be slain. Daniel therefore makes excuse for those who were unable to speak, and himself avoids the envy of others, lest any should imagine that he had said any of the things he was going to say by virtue of his personal wisdom. But the cause of the prophetic revelation was the earnest desire of the king, who wished to know the future. Consequently he does honor to the king, because he states that it was for the sake of the king's knowledge that the secrets have been revealed by God. And this fact should be pondered, that dreams in which any coming events are signified and in which truth is shown forth, as it were, through a cloud, are not manifest to the conjectures or dominion of the human mind but to the knowledge of God alone.

Verse 31. "Thou sawest, O king, and behold there was, as it were, a large statue." Instead of "statue," that is a sculptured effigy, the only rendering used by Symmachus, others have translated it as "image," intending by this term to indicate a resemblance to future events. Let us go through the prophetic interpretation, and as we translate Daniel's words, let us explain at some length the matters which he briefly states.

Verse 38. "Now thou art the head of gold." "The head of gold," he says "is thou, O king." By this statement it is clear that the first empire, the Babylonian, is compared to the most precious metal, gold.

Verse 39. "And after thee there shall arise another empire inferior to thee, made of silver." (The Vulgate LXX does not include "made of silver.") That is to say, the empire of the Medes and Persians, which bears a resemblance to silver, being inferior to the preceding empire, and superior to that which is to follow.

"And a third empire of bronze (the Vulgate LXX has "made of copper"), which shall rule over the entire earth." This signifies the Alexandrian empire, and that of the Macedonians, and of Alexander's successors. Now this is properly termed brazen, for among all the metals bronze possesses an outstanding resonance and a clear ring, and the blast of a brazen trumpet is heard far and wide, so that it signifies not only the fame and power of the empire but also the eloquence of the Greek language.

Verse 40. "And there shall be a fourth empire like unto iron. Just as iron breaks to pieces and overcomes all else, so it shall break to pieces and shatter all these preceding empires . . ." Now the fourth empire, which clearly refers to the Romans, is the iron empire which breaks in pieces and overcomes all others. But its feet and toes are partly of iron and partly of earthenware, a fact most clearly demonstrated at the present time. For just as there was at the first nothing stronger or hardier than the Roman realm, so also in these last days there is nothing more feeble, since we require the assistance of barbarian tribes both in our civil wars and against foreign nations. However, at the final period of all these empires of gold and silver and bronze and iron, a rock (namely, the Lord and Savior) was cut off without hands, that is, without copulation or human seed and by birth from a virgin's womb; and after all the empires had been crushed, He became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. This last the Jews and the impious Porphyry apply to the people of Israel, who they insist will be the strongest power at the end of the ages, and will crush all realms and will rule forever.

Verse 45. "The great God has shown to the king the events which shall hereafter come to pass, and the dream is true and its interpretation is reliable." Daniel again asserts that the revelation of the dream is not a matter of personal merit, but has been granted for the purpose of making the interpretation manifest to the king and of teaching the king that God alone is to be worshipped.

Verse 47. "Then King Nebuchadnezzar fell on his face and worshipped Daniel, and ordered sacrifices and incense to be offered up to him. Therefore the king spoke and said to Daniel." Porphyry falsely impugns this passage on the ground that a very proud king would never worship a mere captive, as if, forsooth, the Lycaonians had not been willing to offer blood sacrifices to Paul and Barnabas on account of the mighty miracles they had wrought (Acts 14:8-18). And so there is no need to impute to the Scripture the error of the Gentiles who deem everything above themselves to be gods, for the Scripture simply is narrating everything as it actually happened. However we can make this further assertion, that the king himself set forth the reasons for his worship and offering of blood-sacrifices when he said to Daniel:

"Truly thy God is the God of gods and the Lord of kings and a revealer of mysteries, since thou hast been able to disclose this holy secret." And so it was not so much that he was worshipping

Daniel as that he was through Daniel worshipping the God who had revealed the holy secrets . This is the same thing that we read Alexander the Great, King of the Macedonians, did in the high priesthood of Joaida . Or, if this explanation seem unsatisfactory, we shall have to say that Nebuchadnezzar, overwhelmed by the amazing greatness of the miracles, did not realize what he was doing, but coming to know the true God and Lord of kings he both worshipped His servant and offered him incense.

Verse 48. "Then the king elevated Daniel to a high position, and gave him many great gifts and set him up as governor over all the provinces of Babylon..." In this matter also the slanderous critic of the Church has ventured to castigate the prophet because he did not reject the gifts and because he willingly accepted honor of the Babylonians. He fails to consider the fact that it was for this very purpose that the king had beheld the dream and that the secrets of its interpretation were revealed by a mere lad, that Daniel might increase in importance and that in the place of captivity he might become ruler over all the Chaldeans, to the end that the omnipotence of God might be made known. We read that this same thing happened in the case of Joseph at the court of Pharaoh and in Egypt (Genesis 41:38-43), and also in the case of Mordecai at the court of Ahasuerus (Esther 8:1-2). The purpose was that the Jews, as captives and sojourners in each of these nations, might receive encouragement as they beheld men of their own nation constituted as governors over the Egyptians or the Chaldeans, as the case might be.

Verse 49. "Moreover Daniel made request of the king, and he appointed Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego over the public works of the province of Babylon. But Daniel himself was in the king's gate." Daniel does not forget those men with whom he had made intercession to the Lord, and who had shared his peril with him. And so he makes them judges over the province, while he himself does not leave (a variant reading is: "did not leave") the king's side.

CHAPTER THREE

Verse 1. "Nebuchadnezzar the king made a golden statue seventy cubits in height and six cubits in breadth." How soon he forgot the truth, when he had just been worshipping a servant of God as if he had been God Himself, but now commanded a statue to be made for himself in order that he personally might be worshipped in the statue! Now if this statue was of gold, and was of incalculable weight, it was intended to arouse amazement in the beholders and to be worshipped as God even though a mere inanimate object, whilst everyone would be consecrating his own avarice to it. On the other hand an opportunity of salvation was afforded to the barbarian nations through the opportune presence of the captive Jews (Col. iii), with the result that after they had first come to know the power of the one true God through Daniel's revelation of the dream, they might then learn from the brave example of the three youths to despise death, and to eschew the worship of idols.

"And he set it up in the plain of Dura in the province of Babylon." Instead of "Dura" Theodotion has "Deira," and Symmachus has "Durau," whereas the Septuagint renders it as the common noun peribolon, a word which we might render as "game-preserve" or "enclosure."

Verse 2. "Nebuchadnezzar sent therefore to the satraps, magistrates and judges, the dukes and potentates, and the prefects and all the princes of the various districts that they should gather themselves together." It is the higher ranks which stand in the greater peril, and those who occupy the loftier position are the more sudden in their fall. The princes are assembled to worship the statue in order that through their princes the nations also might be attracted into error, For those who possess riches and power are all the more easily overthrown because of their apprehension of being bereft of them. But after the magistrates are led astray, the subject populace perish through the evil example of their superiors.

Verses 4, 5. "And a herald proclaimed with mighty voice: 'To us the order is given, both peoples and tribes and languages, at what hour ye hear the sound of the trumpet...'" Not that the entire population of all the nations could have gathered on the plain of Dura and adored the golden statue, but rather, in the person of their leaders, all the tribes and peoples were supposed to have performed the act of worship. Now as I mentally run through all the Holy Scripture, I nowhere find (unless my memory fails me) a passage stating that any of the saints worshipped God Himself by falling prostrate; but only someone worshipping idols or demons or forbidden objects is said to have worshipped by falling prostrate. So also in this present instance that kind of worship is performed not once but several times as well. Moreover in the Gospel the devil says to the Lord, "All these things will I give Thee, if Thou fallest down and worshipping me" (Matthew 4:9). But this comment should also be made, that all heretics who devise a false doctrine with the brilliance of worldly eloquence, fashion thereby a golden statue, and to the best of their ability constrain men by their persuasiveness to fall down and adore the idol of deceit.

Verse 7. "After these things the people, therefore, as soon as they heard the sound of the trumpet and pipe..." We are to take this statement in the same sense as above, so that we understand that all the peoples were represented by their leaders. For of course it was impossible for all the nations to attend at one time.

Verse 8. "And straightway at that time there came certain Chaldeans and accused the Jews..." They were envious of these Jews because they had been in charge of the king's business in Babylon, and also they were offended by their foreign religion and aversion towards idols. They therefore find a pretext for accusing them to the king. The final consequence ensues.

Verse 12. "Now then, there are certain Jews whom thou hast appointed over the affairs of the district of Babylon, namely Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who have despised thy decree" (the Vulgate reads: "those men of thine have despised the decree, O king"). To a certain extent their statement amounts to this: "Those captives and slaves whom thou hast preferred before us and hast made to be governors have lifted themselves up in pride and despise thine orders, not serving thy gods, and not worshipping the golden statue thou hast set up." The assertion we made at the commencement of the commentary on the vision is more abundantly proved in this passage, namely that the gods of Nebuchadnezzar were not to be identified with the golden statue which he had ordered to be erected for the worship of himself, for in what follows the king himself says:

Verse 14. "Do ye not serve my gods, and do you not worship the golden statue which I have set up?..." Other authorities assert that it is the custom of Holy Scripture to speak of the one and same idol in the plural, just like the verse in Exodus concerning the calf: "These are thy gods, O Israel, who have brought thee out of the land of Egypt" (Exodus 32:4). Also in the Book of Kings, where Jeroboam is establishing the golden calf in Bethel, he is said to have fashioned idols (1 Kings 12:26-28). On the other hand a plurality of demons are addressed in the singular number, as in Isaiah: "He bows himself down and worships it, and as he makes his vow he says, 'Thou art my God!" (Isaiah 44:17).

Verse 15. "Prostrate yourselves and worship the statue I have made." Although he had up to this point given the youths his orders in angry fashion, yet he gives them room for a change of heart, so that their previous guilt might be pardoned if only they should fall down and worship. But if they should not deign to offer worship, the punishment of the fiery furnace lay at hand.

"And what God is there who shall rescue you from my hand?..." Why naturally, that same God whose servant thou didst just recently worship and Whom thou didst assert to be truly God of gods and Lord of kings.

Verse 16. "King Nebuchadnezzar, we ought not to render thee answer concerning this matter." In the Hebrew original there is no vocative "King" as there is in the Septuagint, lest they should seem to address the ungodly man with servile flattery or to term him a king who was trying to force them to wickedness. But if it be contended that the reading, "O king!" should be included, then we may say that the youths were not impudently challenging the king to shed their blood but rendering him due honor so as to avoid injury to the true religion of God. But as for their statement. "We ought not to render thee answer concerning this matter," the meaning is: "Thou hast no need to hear words from men whose bravery and firmness thou wilt presently test by actual deeds."

Verse 17. "For behold, our God whom we serve is able to rescue us from the furnace of burning fire and to free us from thy hands, O king!" Where he had imagined he was frightening mere youths, he perceives in them a nature of manly courage. Nor do they speak of deliverance as delayed to the distant future, but rather they promise themselves immediate succor, asserting, "For behold, our God whom we serve is the One who is able to free us both from the fearsome flames thou threatenest and from thy hands."

Verse 18. "But if He does not will to do so" - phrasing which admirably avoids the idea, "If He is not able," which would be inconsistent with what they had just asserted, "He is able to deliver us" - but rather they say, "If He does not will to do so." Thereby they indicate that it will not be a matter of God's inability but rather of His sovereign will if they do perish.

"Be it known to thee, O king, that we do not serve thy gods and do not worship the golden statue which thou hast set up." Whether we wish to read "statue" as Symmachus does, or "golden image" as the other authorities have rendered it, those who reverence God are not to worship it. Therefore let judges and princes who worship the statues of emperors or idols realize that they are doing precisely the thing which the three youths refused to do and thereby pleased God. And we should observe the proper significance of the issue involved: they assert that worshipping the mere image is equivalent to serving the false gods themselves, neither of which things is befitting to the servants of God.

Verse 19. "Then Nebuchadnezzar was filled with rage, and the aspect of his countenance was wholly altered." In certain Psalms the titles contain the notation; "On behalf of those who are to be wholly altered." And so the expression "wholly altered" is ambiguous, comprising both the idea of change for the worse or change for the better. Now of course the alteration of Nebuchadnezzar's visage cannot be reconciled with a favorable sense. And after all there are some authorities who refer even the Psalm-titles to a change for the worse, on the ground that those who by nature have known God have been changed by the vexation and fury of their mind to a position of hostility towards Christ and His saints.

Verse 20. "And he gave orders that the furnace be fired to sevenfold intensity beyond its usual temperature, and he commanded the strongest men in his army to bind the legs of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego and cast them into the furnace of flaming fire." Just as if the usual fire without multiplied intensity could not have consumed the youths' bodies! But a fury and rage which borders on madness can observe no bounds. Also he wished by the threat of intensified punishment to terrify those who seemed prepared for death.

Verse 21. "And straightway those men, bound up in their trousers and turbans and footgear and garments, were cast into the midst of the furnace of flaming fire..." Instead of sarbal, "trousers" interpreted by Symmachus as anaxy-rides ("trousers"), Aquila and Theodotion read simply saraballa rather than the corrupt reading sarabara. Now the shanks and shin-bones are called saraballa in the language of the Chaldeans, and by extension of the same word it is applied to those articles of clothing which cover the shanks and shins, as if they were to be called "shankies" and "shinnies" (crurales et tibiales). "Turban," however, is a Greek word, tiara which has by usage become a Latin word also, and Virgil says of it (Aeneid, VII): "Both scepter and sacred tiara." It was, however, a kind of skull-cap used by the Persian and Chaldean races.

Verse 22. "Then those same men who had cast Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were slain by the fiery flame." Of course this meant the same men of whom it was said above, "And he commanded the strongest men in his army to bind the legs of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego and cast them into the burning furnace of fire (another reading: into the furnace of flaming fire)." And so they were not any chance servants of his whom Nebuchadnezzar destroyed, but men who of all his army were strong and most ready for war. Not only was it intended that the miracle should strike terror but also that his own army might experience injury.

Verse 23. "But these three men, (here the Vulgate inserts: "that is,") Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, fell fettered into the midst of the furnace of flaming fire. And they were walking about in the midst of the flames praising God and blessing the Lord. And Azariah stood and prayed after this fashion, opening his mouth in the midst of the fire and saying..." It was a great miracle for men to be cast into a furnace bound and to fall headlong into the midst of the fire, only to have the bonds burn up by which they were bound, the bodies of the fettered withal remaining untouched by the timid flames. The Hebrew text goes only up to this point and the intervening passage which now follows as far as the end of the Song of the Three Youths is not contained in the Hebrew. Lest we seem to pass over it altogether, we must make a few observations.

Verse 26. "Blessed art Thou, O Lord God of our fathers, and Thy name is to be praised and glorified forever, for Thou art just in all that Thou hast done to us" (the Vulgate adds: "in our case"). Whenever we are oppressed by various anxieties, let us lovingly speak forth this sentiment with our whole heart, and whatever may have befallen us, let us confess that it is only right for us to endure it, that the scripture may be fulfilled in us: "The daughters of Judah have exulted and rejoiced in all Thy judgments, O Lord" (Psalm 97:8).

Verse 29. "For we have sinned and acted wickedly in departing from Thee, and we have forsaken Thee in all things." Now of course the three youths had not sinned, nor were they old enough when brought to Babylon to warrant being punished for their own faults. Consequently they were speaking as representatives of their people, in the same manner as the Apostle had to state: "For what I wish to do, that I do not; but what I do not want, that I carry into effect" (Romans 7:19), and so on with the rest of that same passage.

Verse 37. "Forasmuch, O Lord, as we have been diminished more than all the other races and abased in all the world this day because of our sins, and have at the present time neither prince nor prophet nor leader..." These verses are to be used whenever the churches suffer want (because of the sins of the people) of holy men, and of magistrates who are most learned in the law of God, and also whenever in times of persecution no sacrifice or oblation is offered up. Some authorities relate this passage to the heavenly Jerusalem, on the ground that the souls have been plunged to the earthly plane and find themselves in a place of tears and utter distress, and bewail the sins of by-gone years and the other things included in the prophetic discourse. But the Church of God has not accepted this view.

Verse 39. "But in a contrite heart and humble spirit let us be accepted, like as in the burnt offerings of rams and bullocks..." On the basis of the passage before us and also on the basis of what follows: "Bless the Lord, ye spirits and souls of the righteous," and also in view of the passage in Psalms: "The sacrifice for God is an anguished spirit, a contrite and abased heart God does not despise," (Psalm 51:17) certain authorities would have it that there resides in man a spirit, distinct from the Holy Spirit and different from the soul itself. But they will have to work out the difficulty of how there can be said to be two substances and two inner selves in one and the same man, entirely apart from the body and from the grace of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 46. "And the king's servants who had cast them in did not cease to make the furnace hot with naphtha and pitch." Sallust in his histories writes that naphtha is a kind of tinder in use among the Persians which furnishes the utmost encouragement to fires. Others are of the opinion that naphtha is the name applied to olive-pits which are thrown away when the dregs of the oil have dried up. In the same way, they assert, the Greek term pyrine is derived from its property of nourishing pyr, that is, "fire".

Verse 49. "But the angel of the Lord came down into the furnace with Azariah and his companions, and he smote the flame of the fire out of the furnace..." When the soul is oppressed with tribulation and taken up with various vexations, having lost hope of human aid and turned with its whole heart to God, an angel of the Lord descends to it. That is to say, the supernatural being descends to the aid of the servant and dashes aside the fierce heat of the violent flames, that the fiery shafts of the enemy utterly fail to pierce the inner citadel of our heart and we escape being shut up in his fiery furnace.

Verses 57, 58. "All ye works of the Lord, bless the Lord; laud Him and highly exalt Him forever. Praise Him, ye angels of the Lord; laud Him and highly exalt Him..." Having prefaced with general terms of praise, to the effect that every creature ought to praise the Lord, he addresses his exhortation in what follows to the various individual orders of creation: to the angels, the heavens, the waters and nature-forces, the sun and the moon, the rain-cloud and the dew, the wind, the fire and the billow, the cold and the heat, and all the rest too lengthy to include, so that he summons springs also and the seas, the sea-monsters and the birds, the beasts and flocks, to the praise of the Lord. He summons also the sons of men, and after the human race in general he specifies the race of Israel in particular, and of the Israelites themselves the priests and servants of the Lord, and the spirits and souls of the righteous, and those who are holy and of humble heart. And at the very last he specifies Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishael, who are summoned to praise the Lord for His present kindness. But all creation praises God not in word but in deed, inasmuch as the Creator is logically apprehended on the basis of His creatures, and in the various works and affections the grandeur of God is made manifest.

Verse 87. "Bless Him, ye saints and humble of heart..." We are taught to have humbleness of heart both by this present verse and also by the statement in the Gospel: "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest for your souls" (Matthew 11:29). But this humbleness of heart is the same thing as is elsewhere called poverty in spirit, so that we are not to be lifted up in pride or seek after glory by a pretended humility, but rather that we abase ourselves with our whole heart. Up to this point we have mentioned but briefly a few things from Theodotion's edition, since the confession and the praises of the three youths are passages not contained in the Hebrew. But from this point on we shall follow the authentic Hebrew itself.

Verses 91, 92 (=24, 25). "Then Nebuchadnezzar the king was astounded and hastily arose and said to his nobles: 'Did we not cast three men in shackles into the midst of the fire?'" After the princes have been punished, the king is rebuked, in order that he may glorify God while still alive. But he questions his nobles, by whose accusation and plot he had cast the three youths into the fiery furnace, so that when they reply that they had cast three youths into the furnace, he might announce and show forth to them (what had happened).

"And they said to the king in reply, 'Truly, O king!' The king answered (the Vulgate omits "the king"): 'Behold, I see four men unbound and walking about in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt, and the appearance of the fourth man is the likeness of a son of God.'" Let me say again, how wise was the fire and how indescribable the power of God! Their bodies had been bound with chains; those chains were burnt up, whereas the bodies themselves were not burnt. As for the appearance of the fourth man, which he asserts to be like that of a son of God, either we must take him to be an angel, as the Septuagint has rendered it, or indeed, as the majority think, the Lord our Savior. Yet I do not know how an ungodly king could have merited a vision of the Son of God. On that reasoning one should follow Symmachus, who has thus interpreted it: "But the appearance of the fourth is like unto the sons," not unto the sons of God but unto gods themselves. We are to think of angels here, who after all are very frequently called gods as well as sons of God. So much for the story itself. But as for its typical significance, this angel or son of God foreshadows our Lord Jesus Christ, who descended into the furnace of hell (Ephesians 4:9, 1 Peter 4:6), in which the souls of both sinners and of the righteous were imprisoned, in order that He might without suffering any scorching by fire or injury to His person deliver those who were held imprisoned by chains of death.

Verse 93 (=26). "Then Nebuchadnezzar approached unto the mouth of the burning fiery furnace and said: 'Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, servants of the Most High God, come forth and draw near!' And straightway Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego came forth from the midst of the fire." Being terrified with fear, the king does not address his request to the youths through any messengers, but himself calls upon them by name, addressing them as servants of the Most High God, and begging these very men to come forth whom he himself had cast bound into the furnace.

Verse 95 (=28). "Blessed be God (the Vulgate has "their God, namely") of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, Who hath sent His angel and rescued His servants who believed in Him..." The person whom he had previously called a son of God he here calls an angel, even though he had in the preceding passage described him as similar to a son of God rather than to God Himself. A second time, therefore, Nebuchadnezzar resumes a confession of faith in God, and as he condemns idols he praises the three youths who refused to serve or worship any god but their own God. Moreover he marvels that the fire was unable to affect the saints of God, for he says:

Verse 96 (=29). "I have therefore determined upon this decree (the Vulgate says: "have appointed this decree"): that any people, tribe or tongue which utters blasphemy against the God of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego shall utterly perish and his house shall be laid waste. For there is no other God who can save after such a fashion." Some authorities very wrongly apply this to the devil himself, asserting that in the consummation at the end of the world even the devil himself will receive a knowledge of God and will exhort all men to repent. These persons would have it that this is the king of Nineveh who finally descends from his proud throne and attains to the rewards of humility.

Verse 97 (=30). "Then the king promoted Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego to honor in the province of Babylon." Those commentators who say that the three youths were previously not judges set over the provinces but mere overseers of individual government agencies in Babylon, would have it that they were now appointed as judges over the provinces.

CHAPTER FOUR

Verses 1-3. "Nebuchadnezzar the king unto all the peoples, nations and languages who dwell upon the whole earth: peace be multiplied unto you. The Most High God hath performed signs and wonders towards me. Therefore I have thought it well to declare His signs, for they are great, and His marvels, for they are mighty, and His kingdom, because it is (the Vulgate omits "because it is") an eternal kingdom, and His dominion is from generation to generation." The epistle of Nebuchadnezzar was inserted in the volume of the prophet, in order that the book might not afterwards be thought to have been manufactured by some other author, as the accuser (Porphyry) falsely asserts, but the product of Daniel himself.

Verse 4. "I, Nebuchadnezzar, was at ease in my house and prospering in my palace." The narrative is clear indeed and requires but little interpretation. Because he displeased God, Nebuchadnezzar was turned into a madman and dwelt for seven years amongst the brute beasts and was fed upon the roots of herbs. Afterwards by the mercy of God he was restored to his throne, and praised and glorified the King of heaven, on the ground that all His works are truth and His ways are justice and He is able to abase those who walk in pride. But there are some who claim to understand by the figure of Nebuchadnezzar the hostile power which the Lord speaks of in the Gospel, saying: "I beheld Satan falling from heaven like lightning" (Luke 10:18). Likewise John in Revelation, in the passage where the dragon falls upon the earth drawing a third of the stars with him (Revelation 12:4). Likewise Isaiah: "How hath the morning star fallen, which used to rise early in the morning" (Isaiah 14:12). These authorities assert that it was absolutely impossible for a man who was reared in luxury to subsist on hay for seven years and to dwell among wild beasts for seven years without being at all mangled by them. Also they ask how the imperial authority could have been kept waiting for a mere madman, and how so mighty a kingdom could have gone without a king for so long a period. If, on the other hand, anyone had succeeded him on the throne, how foolish he would have to be thought to surrender an imperial authority which he had possessed for so long. Such a thing would be especially incredible since the historical records of the Chaldeans contain no such record, and since they recorded matters of far less import, it is impossible that they should have left things of major importance unmentioned. And so they pose all of these questions and offer as their own reply the proposition that since the episode does not stand up as genuine history, the figure of Nebuchadnezzar represents the devil. To this position we make not the slightest concession; otherwise everything we read in Scripture may appear to be imperfect representations and mere fables. For once men have lost their reason, who would not perceive them to lead their existence like brutish animals in the open fields and forest regions? And to pass over all other considerations, since Greek and Roman history offer episodes far more incredible, such as Scylla and the Chimaera, the Hydra and the Centaurs, and the birds and wild beasts and flowers and trees, the stars and the stones into which men are related to have been transformed, what is so remarkable about the execution of such a divine judgment as this for the manifestation of God's power and the humbling of the pride of kings? Nebuchadnezzar says, "I was at ease in my house and prospering in my palace..." or as Theodotion renders it "upon my throne." Now those who follow the interpretation we are opposing understand by the devil's home this world of ours. Concerning the world Satan himself in the Gospel says to the Savior: "All these things have been given over to me" (Luke 4:6). Likewise the Apostle says: "The world lieth in the Wicked One" (1 John 5:19).

Verse 5. "I beheld a dream which terrified me, and my thoughts while upon my bed..." Let our opponents answer what kind of a dream the hostile power would have seen, unless perhaps everything he appears to possess in this world is a mere shadowy dream.

"And the visions of my head greatly disturbed me." Note how Nebuchadnezzar realized that his visions were not those of his eyes and heart, but rather of his head, because it was for the glory of God's future servants that these secrets were being revealed to him.

Verse 8. "Then at last my associate, Daniel, whose name according to the name of my god is Belteshazzar, entered before my presence." With the exception of the Septuagint translators (who for some reason or other have omitted this whole passage), the other three translators have translated the word as "associate" (collega). Consequently by the judgment of the teachers of the Church, the Septuagint edition has been rejected in the case of this book, and it is the translation of Theodotion which is commonly read, since it agrees with the Hebrew as well as with the other translators. Wherefore also Origen asserts in the ninth book of the Stromata that he is discussing the text from this point on in the prophecy of Daniel, not as it appears in the Septuagint, which greatly differs from the Hebrew original, but rather as it appears in Theodotion's edition.

"...(Daniel) who has within him the spirit of the holy gods; and I related the dream unto him..." Corresponding to the rendering here given, "of the holy god," we read in Chaldee (in which Daniel was composed) the words elain cadisin ('l-h-y-n q-d-y-sh-y-n), which means "holy gods" and not "holy God," as Theodotion rendered it. Nor is it surprising if Nebuchadnezzar made such a mistake, and supposed that any force he perceived to be higher than himself were gods, rather than God. Lastly he states also in his following words: "Belteshazzar, thou chief of the soothsayers, whom I know to possess within thee the spirit of the holy gods." Belteshazzar was chief of the soothsayers or enchanters, as others have rendered it. It is not surprising if he had been appointed chief over all the soothsayers since he had at the king's order been taught the wisdom of the Chaldeans, and had besides been found ten times wiser than all the rest. Let us ask of those who do not concede any historical basis for this vision, what Nebuchadnezzar it was who saw the dream, and who the Daniel was who declared his dream and foretold things to come. And how did it come to pass that this same Daniel (whose fortitude was, at least according to them, to be understood as divine in origin) was appointed chief of the soothsayers by Nebuchadnezzar, and called his companion?

Verse 10. "I saw, and behold there was a tree in the midst of the earth, and its height was very great..." It was not only of Nebuchadnezzar, King of the Chaldeans, but also of all impious men that the prophet says: "I beheld the impious man highly exalted and lifted up like the cedars of Lebanon" (Psalm 37:35). Such men are lifted up, not by the greatness of their virtues, but by their own pride; and for that reason they are cut down and fall into ruin. Therefore it is good to follow the teaching of our Lord in the Gospel: "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart" (Matthew 11:29). But as for the fact that, according to Theodotion, he mentions his kutos or height - or else his kureia, as he himself later renders it, that is to say, his dominion (a word we have translated as "his appearance") - those same detractors of the historicity of this passage slanderously assert that Nebuchadnezzar's dominion never possessed the entire world. He did not rule over the Greeks or barbarians, or over all of the nations in the north and west, but only over the provinces of the East; that is to say, over Asia, not over Europe or Libya. Consequently all these slanders require to be understood as attributable to the devil, for actually we ourselves should accept all this as spoken by way of hyperbole, having in view the arrogance of the impious king, who in Isaiah (chap. 14) makes as great a boast as this, claiming that he possesses the very heaven itself, and the whole earth besides, as if it were a nest full of birds' eggs.

Verses 13, 14. "And behold, a watchman and a holy one descended from heaven, and he cried out with a loud voice and spoke as follows: 'Cut down the tree and chop off its branches...'" Instead of "watchman" Theodotion uses the Chaldee word itself, hir, which is written with the three letters 'ayin, yodh, and resh. But it signifies the angels, because they ever keep watch and are prepared to carry out God's command. And so we too follow the example of the angels in their duties when we engage in frequent night-long vigils. Also it is said of the Lord: "He who keepeth Israel will neither slumber nor sleep" (Psalm 121:4). Lastly, we read a little later:

Verse 17. "In the decision of the watchmen, i.e., the angels, lies the decree and the speech and the petition of the holy ones." Moreover it is both Greek and Latin usage to call the rainbow iris, because it is said to descend to earth in a multicolored arch.

Verse 19. "Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, began quietly to meditate by himself for about an hour, and his meditations greatly troubled him. And the king answered and said, 'Belteshazzar, let not the dream or its interpretation disturb you.' Belteshazzar answered and said..." Daniel silently understood that the dream was directed against the king, and the pallor of his countenance showed forth the fear in his heart, and he felt sorry for the man who had conferred upon him the greatest of honor. And to avoid all appearance of taunting the king or glorying over him as an enemy, he only told him what he understood of the matter after he had begged to be excused.

"My lord, may this dream apply to those who hate thee, and its interpretation to thy foes." And so Nebuchadnezzar, seeing that Daniel was afraid of appearing to speak something of ill omen and against the king's interest, urged him to speak out plainly and truly what he understood of the matter without any apprehension.

Verse 20. "The lofty and vigorous tree which thou sawest, the height of which reached the heavens..." He explains the truth without insulting the king, so as to avoid appearing to charge the king with sinful pride, but rather with overweening greatness.

Verse 23. "Let him be bound with iron and with brass in the grass out of doors, and let him be sprinkled with dew of heaven, and let his feeding be with the wild beasts, until seven times pass over him." It was also written to the same effect above. And so those who object to the historicity of the narrative ask us how Nebuchadnezzar would have been bound with chains of iron and brass, or who would have bound him or tied him up with fetters. Yet it is very clear that all maniacs are bound with chains to keep them from destroying themselves or attacking others with weapons.

Verses 24, 25. "This is the interpretation of the sentence of the Most High which has come upon my lord the king. They shall cast thee forth from among men and thy habitation shall be with cattle and wild beasts..." Daniel moderates the severity of the sentence by complimentary language, so that (variant: and) after he has first set forth the harsher aspects, he may moderate the king's alarm by assurances of the kindlier treatment to follow. He draws the final inference:

Verse 26. "Thy kingdom shall remain unto thee, after thou shalt have acknowledged that power belongs to Heaven." Those who contest the historicity of this incident and would have it that the devil's original position of honor will be restored to him, make capital of this passage, on the ground that after Nebuchadnezzar has during the seven-year cycle endured torments and bestialization, feeding upon grass and hay, he makes a confession of the Lord and becomes the person he was before. But they are bound to answer the question how it can be consistent for the angels who have never fallen to have someone rule over them once more who has only through repentance been restored to favor.

Verse 27. "Wherefore, O king, let my counsel meet with thy favor, and make up for thy sins by deeds of charity, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor. Perhaps God will forgive thy transgressions." Since he had previously pronounced the sentence of God, which of course cannot be altered, how could he exhort the king to deeds of charity and acts of mercy towards the poor? This difficulty is easily solved by reference to the example of King Hezekiah, who Isaiah had said was going to die (Isaiah 38:1); and again, to the example of the Ninevites, to whom it was said: "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be destroyed" (Jonah 3:4). And yet the sentence of God was changed in response to the prayers of Hezekiah and the city of Nineveh, not by any means because of the ineffectualness of the judgment itself but because of the conversion of those who merited pardon. Moreover in Jeremiah God states that He threatens evil for the nation (Jeremiah 18:7-8), but if it does that which is good, He will alter His threats to bestow mercy. Again, He affirms that He directs His promises to the man who does good; and if the same man thereafter works evil, He says that He changes His decision, not with regard to the men themselves, but with regard to their works which have thus changed in character. For after all, God is not angered at men but at their sins; and when no sins inhere in a man, God by no means inflicts a punishment which has been commuted. In other words, let us say that Nebuchadnezzar performed deeds of mercy toward the poor in accordance with Daniel's advice, and for that reason the sentence against him was delayed of execution for twelve months. But because he afterwards while walking about in his palace at Babylon said boastingly: "Is this not the great Babylon which I myself have built up as a home for the king by the might of my power and the glory of my name?" therefore he lost the virtue of his charitableness by reason of the wickedness of his pride.

"It may be that God will forgive thy sins." In view of the fact that the blessed Daniel, foreknowing the future as he did, had doubts concerning God's decision, it is very rash on the part of those who boldly promise pardon to sinners. And yet it should be recognized that indulgence was promised to Nebuchadnezzar in return, as long as he wrought good works. Much more, then, is it promised to other men who have committed less grievous sins than he. We read in Jeremiah also of God's direction to the people of the Jews, that they should pray for the Babylonians, inasmuch as the peace of the captives was bound up with the peace of the captors themselves (Jeremiah 29:7).

Verses 31, 32. "While the saying was yet in the king's mouth, a voice from heaven assailed him: 'King Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken, thy kingdom shall pass away (variant reading: is passing away) from thee and they shall cast thee forth from among mankind.'" His arrogant boasting is immediately punished by the Lord. For this reason the execution of the sentence is not delayed, lest mercy towards the poor seem to have profited him not at all. But as soon as he has spoken in pride, he straightway loses the kingdom which had been reserved for him on account of his works of charity.

"...until thou dost recognize that the Most High reigns in the kingdom of men." In misery it comes as a great consolation to know, when one is in a painful situation, that a more favorable future will ensue. Yet Nebuchadnezzar's fury and madness were so pronounced that in time of affliction he would not have remembered the blessings which God had promised him.

Verse 34. "'I, Nebuchadnezzar, lifted mine eyes toward heaven, and my intelligence returned to me.'" Had he not raised his eyes towards heaven, he would not have regained his former intelligence. Moreover, when he says that his intelligence returned to him, he shows that he had lost not his outward appearance but only his mind.

"And His kingdom is from generation to generation." If we accept this expression in the Scriptures, "From generation to generation," as simply for what it is, then it unquestionably means "for all time to come." But if, on the other hand, "generation and generation" signifies (as we have often asserted) two generations, that of the Law and that of the Gospel, the question comes up as to how Nebuchadnezzar would have known of the unrevealed secrets ("sacraments") of God. But perhaps we might say this, that after he raised his eyes towards heaven and received back his former estate and exalted and blessed the ever-living God, he would not have failed to know this secret also.

Verse 35. "'For He does according to His will, just as among the powers of heaven, so also among the inhabitants of the earth...'" This too Nebuchadnezzar expresses like a worldling. For God does not simply do what He wishes, but rather God wishes only that which is good. Nebuchadnezzar, however, expressed himself in this way, in order that even while he declared God's power, he might appear to impugn God's justice, on the ground that he had suffered unmerited punishment.

Verse 36. "And my nobles and officers sought me out and I was restored to my kingdom, and all the greater magnificence accrued to me." Well then, according to those who argue against the historical character of this account, all the angelic powers are going to seek out the devil again, and he will increase to such a degree of might, that the very one who formerly exalted himself against God is going to be greater than he was before his sin.

Verse 37. "Now therefore I, Nebuchadnezzar, do praise, magnify and glorify the King of heaven, for all His works are true and His ways are judgment, and He is able to humble those who walk in pride." Nebuchadnezzar understood the reason why he had suffered in seven years' punishment, and for that reason he humbled himself, since he had exalted himself against God.

CHAPTER FIVE

Verse 1. "Belshazzar the king made a great feast for his one thousand nobles; and each one drank in the order of his age." It should be known that this man was not the son of Nebuchadnezzar, as readers commonly imagine; but according to Berosus, who wrote the history of the Chaldeans, and also Josephus, who follows Berosus, after Nebuchadnezzar's reign of forty-three years, a son named Evilmerodach succeeded to his throne. It was concerning this king that Jeremiah wrote that in the first year of his reign he raised the head of Jehoiachin, king of Judah, and took him out of his prison (Jeremiah 52:31). Josephus likewise reports that after the death of Evilmerodach, his son Neriglissar succeeded to his father's throne; after whom in turn came his son Labosordach. Upon the latter's death, his son, Belshazzar, obtained the kingdom, and it is of him that the Scripture now makes mention. After he had been killed by Darius, King of the Medes, who was the maternal uncle of Cyrus, King of the Persians, the empire of the Chaldeans was destroyed by Cyrus the Persian. It was these two kingdoms which Isaiah in chap. 21 (Isaiah 21:7) addresses as a charioteer of a vehicle drawn by a camel and an ass. Indeed Xenophon also writes the same thing in connection with the childhood of Cyrus the Great; likewise Pompeius Trogus and many others who have written up the history of the barbarians. Some authorities think that this Darius was the Astyages mentioned in the Greek writings, while others think it was Astyages' son, and that he was called by the other name among the barbarians. "And each one of the princes who had been invited drank in the order of his own age." Or else, as other translators have rendered it: "The king himself was drinking in the presence of all the princes whom he had invited."

Verse 2. "Being now drunken, he therefore gave order that the golden and silver vessels be brought in which his father, Nebuchadnezzar, had taken away from the temple which was in Jerusalem, in order that the king might drink from them..." The Hebrews hand down some such story as this: that up until the seventieth year, on which Jeremiah had said (Jeremiah 25:11) that the captivity of the Jewish people would be released (a matter of which Zechariah also speaks [Zechariah 1:12] in the first part of his book), Belshazzar had esteemed God's promise to be of none effect; therefore he turned the failure of the promise into an occasion of joy and arranged a great banquet, scoffing somewhat at the expectation of the Jews and at the vessels of the Temple of God. Punishment, however, immediately ensued. And as to the fact that the author calls Nebuchadnezzar the father of Belshazzar, he does not make any mistake in the eyes of those who are acquainted with the Holy Scripture's manner of speaking, for in the Scripture all progenitors and ancestors are called fathers. This factor also should be borne in mind, that he was not sober when he did these things, but rather when he was intoxicated and forgetful of the punishment which had come upon his progenitor, Nebuchadnezzar.

Verse 4. "They were drinking wine and praising their gods of gold, of silver, of bronze, of iron, of wood, and of stone." How great was their folly! As they drank from golden vessels, they were praising gods of wood and of stone. As long as the vessels had been in the idol-temple of Babylon, God was not moved to wrath, for they had evidently consecrated the property of God to divine worship, even though they did so in accordance with their own depraved views of religion. But after they defiled holy things for the use of men, their punishment followed upon the heels of their sacrilege. Moreover they were praising their own gods and scoffing at the God of the Jews, on the ground that they were drinking from His vessels because of the victory their own gods had bestowed upon them. Applying this figuratively, we should have to say that it applies to all the heretics or to any doctrine which is contrary to truth but which appropriates the words of the Biblical prophets and misuses the testimony of Scripture to suit its own inclination. It furnishes liquor to those whom it deceives and with whom it has committed fornication. It carries off the vessels of God's Temple and waxes drunken by quaffing them; and it does not give the praise to the God whose vessels they are, but to gods of gold and silver, of bronze, of iron, of wood, and of stone. I think that the golden ones are those which consist of earthly reason. The silver gods are those which possess the charm of eloquence and are fashioned by rhetoric. But those which bring in the fables of the poets and employ ancient traditions containing marked divergences from one another in respect to good taste or folly, such are described as bronze and iron. And those who set forth sheer absurdities are called wooden or stone. The Book of Deuteronomy divides these all into two classes, saying: "Cursed is the man who fashions a graven image and a molten image, the work of the hands of an artificer, and sets it up in a secret place" (Deuteronomy 27:15). For all heretics operate secretly and disguise their fallacious teachings, in order that they may from concealment shoot their arrows against those who are upright in heart.

Verse 5. "At that same hour some fingers appeared as if they were of a human hand, writing something over against the lampstand upon the surface of the wall of the king's palace. And the king watched the joints of the hand as it wrote." He puts it nicely when he says, "At that same hour," just as we earlier read concerning Nebuchadnezzar, "While the saying was yet in the king's mouth." This was in order that the offender might recognize that his punishment was not inflicted upon him for any other reason but his blasphemy. But as for the circumstance that the fingers seemed to be writing on the wall over against the lampstand, this was to avoid having the hand and the written matter appear at too great a distance from the light (to be clearly visible). And the fingers wrote upon the wall of the royal palace in order that the king might understand that the inscription concerned himself.

Verse 6. "Then the king's expression was altered..." Here too it is to be observed concerning those Psalms entitled: "For those who will suffer alterations (or vicissitudes)," that the alteration of fortune is not only the lot of the saint but also of the sinner. For we read in this connection: "King Belshazzar was considerably disturbed and his countenance was altered."

Verse 7. The king therefore cried out vehemently that the magicians should be brought in, and the Chaldeans and the soothsayers..." Forgetting about the experiences of Nebuchadnezzar, he was following after the ancient and ingrained error of his family, so that instead of summoning a prophet of God he summons the magicians and Chaldeans and soothsayers.

"...he shall be clothed in purple and he shall have a golden necklace about his neck." It is, of course, ridiculous of me to argue about matters of gender in a commentary on the prophets; but inasmuch as an ignorant but ostentatious critic has rebuked me for changing "necklace" (torquis) from feminine to masculine, I will make the brief observation that while Cicero and Vergil use "necklace" in the feminine, Livy uses it in the masculine.

"...and he shall be the third man in my kingdom..." That means either that he is to be third in rank after the king, or else one of the three princes of the realm - for we elsewhere read of the tristatani.

Verse 10. "Now the queen, by reason of what had happened to the king and his nobles, entered into the banquet-hall..." Josephus says she was Belshazzar's grandmother, whereas Origen says she was his mother. She therefore knew about previous events of which the king was ignorant. So much for Porphyry's far-fetched objection, who fancies that she was the king's wife, and makes fun of the fact that she knows more than her husband does.

Verse 11. "There is a man in thy kingdom who possesses within him the spirit of the holy gods." All the authorities except Symmachus, who adheres to the Chaldee original, render: "the spirit of God."

"...and in the days of thy father, wisdom, and knowledge were found in him..." She calls Nebuchadnezzar his father, according to the custom of the Scriptures, even though, as we remarked before, he was actually his great-grandfather. But Daniel's godly manner of life even amongst the barbarians is worthy of our imitation, for the very grandmother or mother of the king extolled him with such words of praise because of the greatness of his virtues.

Verse 17. "To this Daniel made answer before the king, saying: 'Thy gifts be unto thyself, and bestow the presents of thy house upon someone else..." We should follow the example of a man like Daniel, who despised the honor and gifts of a king, and who without any reward even in that early day followed the Gospel injunction: "Freely have ye received, freely give." (Matthew 10:8) And besides, when one is announcing sad tidings, it is unbecoming for him willingly to accept gifts.

Verse 19. "He slew whomever he would and smote to death whomever he wished to; those whom he wished he set on high, and brought low whomever he would." Thus he sets forth the example of the king's great-grandfather, in order to teach him the justice of God and make it clear that his great-grandson too was to suffer similar treatment because of his pride. Now if Nebuchadnezzar slew whomever he would and smote to death whomever he wished to; if he set on high those whom he would and brought low whomever he wished to, there is certainly no Divine providence or Scriptural injunction behind these honors and slayings, these acts of promotion and humiliation. But rather, such things ensue from the will of the men themselves who do the slaying and promoting to honor, and all the rest. If this be the case, the question arises as to how we are to understand the Scripture: "The heart of a king reposes in the hand of God; He will incline it in whatever direction He wishes" (Proverbs 21:1). Perhaps we might say that every saint is a king, for sin does not reign in his mortal body, and his heart therefore is kept safe, for he is in God's hand (Romans 6:1-23). And whatever has once come into the hand of God the Father, according to the Gospel, no man is able to take it away (John 10:28). And whoever is taken away, it is understood that he never was in God's hand at all.

Verses 22, 23. "'Thou too, his son, O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thine heart, even though thou knewest all these things, but hast lifted thyself up against the ruler of heaven..." Because thy great-grandfather, he says, lifted up his heart and hardened his spirit in pride, he therefore was put down from his royal throne and his glory was taken away, and so on (Jer. 4). Therefore in thy case also, because thou knewest these things about thy relative and didst understand that God resists the proud and gives grace to the humble, thou shouldest not have lifted up thy heart against the ruler of heaven and scoffed at His majesty and perpetrated the deeds which thou hast. Some authorities apply this passage to Antichrist, on the ground that he has imitated the pride of his father, the Devil, and has raised himself up against God. But they must deal with the question of whom Daniel represents, and who is to be understood as interpreting the inscription of God, and who these Medes and Persians are who put Antichrist to death and succeed to his royal power. For there is no doubt but what it is the saints who are to rule after the Antichrist.

Verses 25-28. "This is the inscription which has been set up: MANE, THECEL, PHARES. And this is the interpretation of the sentence: 'MANE' means that God has numbered thy kingdom and brought it to an end. 'THECEL' means it has been weighed in the scales and has been found deficient (Vulg.: thou hast been weighed and hast been found...). 'PHARES' means that thy kingdom has been removed and given to the Medes and Persians." The inscription of these three words on the wall simply meant: "Mane, Thecel, Phares"; the first of which sounds forth the idea of "number," and the second "a weighing out," and the third "removal." And so there was a need not only for reading the inscription but also for interpreting what had been read, in order that it might be understood what these words were announcing. That is to say, that God had numbered his kingdom and brought it to an end, and that He had seized hold upon him to weigh him in His judgment-scales, and the sword would slay him before he should meet a natural death; and that his empire would be divided among the Medes and Persians. For Cyrus, the king of the Persians, as we have already mentioned, overthrew the Chaldean Empire in alliance with Darius, his maternal uncle.

Verse 29. "Then at the king's order Daniel was clothed with purple and a golden chain was placed around his neck, and he was proclaimed to have authority as third ruler in the kingdom." Or else, it might be construed as having authority over a third part of the kingdom. At any rate he received the royal insignia of necklace and purple, with the result that he appeared more notable to Darius, who was to be the successor in the royal power, and all the more honorable because of his notability. Nor was it strange that Belshazzar should have paid the promised reward upon hearing sad tidings. For either he supposed that his predictions would take place in the distant future, or else he hoped he would obtain mercy by honoring the prophet of God. And if he did not obtain this boon, it was because his sacrilege toward God outweighed the honor he accorded to man.

Verses 30, 31. "On that same night Belshazzar, King of the Chaldeans, was slain, and Darius the Mede succeeded to his kingdom at the age of sixty-two." Josephus writes in his tenth book of the Jewish Antiquities that when Babylon had been laid under siege by the Medes and Persians, that is, by Darius and Cyrus, Belshazzar, King of Babylon, fell into such forgetfulness of his own situation as to put on his celebrated banquet and drink from the vessels of the Temple, and even while he was besieged he found leisure for banqueting. From this circumstance the historical account could arise, that he was captured and slaughtered on the same night, while everyone was either terrified by fear of the vision and its interpretation, or else taken up with festivity and drunken banqueting. As for the fact that while Cyrus, King of the Persians, was the victor, and Darius was only King of the Medes, it was Darius who was recorded to have succeeded to the throne of Babylon, this was an arrangement occasioned by factors of age, family relationship, and the territory ruled over. By this I mean that Darius was sixty-two years old, and that, according to what we read, the kingdom of the Medes was more sizable than that of the Persians, and being Cyrus's uncle, he naturally had a prior claim, and ought to have been accounted as successor to the rule of Babylon. Therefore also in a vision of Isaiah which was recited against Babylon, after many other matters too lengthy to mention, an account is given of these things which are to take place: "Behold I Myself will rouse up against them the Medes, a people who do not seek after silver nor desire gold, but who slay the very children with their arrows and have no compassion upon women who suckle their young" (Isaiah 13:17-18). And Jeremiah says: "Sanctify nations against her, even the kings of Media, and the governors thereof and all the magistrates thereof and all the land under the power thereof" (Jeremiah 51:28). Then follow the words: "The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor during the time of its treading; yet a little while, and the time of its harvesting will come" (Jeremiah 51:33). And in testimony of the fact that Babylon was captured during a banquet, Isaiah clearly exhorts her to battle when he writes: "Babylon, my beloved, has become a strange spectacle unto me: set thou the table and behold in the mirrors those who eat and drink; rise up, ye princes, and snatch up your shields!" (Isaiah 21:4-5).

CHAPTER SIX

Verse 1. "It pleased Darius to appoint over his kingdom one hundred and twenty satraps, that they might be throughout his whole kingdom; and over them there were three princes, of which Daniel was one." Josephus, of whom we made mention above, in writing an account of this passage, put it this way: Now Darius, who destroyed the empire of the Babylonians in cooperation with his relative, Cyrus, - for they carried on the war as allies - was sixty-two years of age at the time he captured Babylon. He was the son of Astyages, and was known to the Greeks by another name. Moreover he took away the prophet Daniel with him and took him to Media, and made him one of the three princes who were in charge of his whole kingdom. Hence we see that when Babylon was overthrown, Darius returned to his own kingdom in Media, and brought Daniel along with him in the same honorable capacity to which he had been promoted by Belshazzar. There is no doubt but what Darius had heard of the sign and portent which had come to Belshazzar, and also of the interpretation which Daniel had set forth, and how he had foretold the rule of the Medes and the Persians. And so no one should be troubled by the fact that Daniel is said in one place to have lived in Darius's reign, and in another place in the reign of Cyrus. The Septuagint rendered Darius by the name Artaxerxes. But as for the fact that a non-chronological order is followed, so that some history is narrated in the reign of Darius before material is given for Belshazzar's reign, whereas we are subsequently to read that he was put to death by Darius, it seems to me that the anachronism results from the fact that the author has brought all the historical portions together in immediate sequence. Therefore it is at the close of the earlier vision that he had stated: "And Darius the Mede succeeded to the realm at the age of sixty-two." And so it was under this Darius who put Belshazzar to death that the events took place of which we are about to speak.

Verses 3, 4. "Moreover the king was planning to set Daniel over the whole realm. Consequently the princes and satraps sought an opportunity to find out something against Daniel as touching the king..." Instead of "princes" - the rendering used by Symmachus - Theodotion translated it as taktikoi, and Aquila as synektikoi. And when I inquired as to who these tacticians or liaison princes might be, I read it more clearly specified in the Septuagint, which renders: "...and the two men whom the king had appointed with Daniel, and also the one hundred twenty satraps." And so it was the fact that the king was planning to appoint Daniel as chief ruler even over the two princes who had been associated with him in a triumvirate that gave rise to the envy and intrigue. They sought an opportunity to find out something against Daniel as touching the king. And in this passage the Jews have ventured some such deduction as this: the side of the king is tantamount to the queen or his concubines and other wives who slept at his side. And so they were seeking for a pretext in things of this sort, to see whether they could accuse Daniel of wrong in his speech or touch or movements of his head or any of his sensory organs. But, say the Jews, they could find no cause for suspicion whatsoever. Since he was a eunuch, they could not even accuse him on the score of lewdness. This interpretation was made by those, who make a practice of fabricating long tales on the pretext of a single word. I myself would simply interpret this as meaning that they were unable to discover any pretext of accusation against him in any matter in which he had injured the king, for the simple reason that he was a faithful man and no suspicion of blame was discoverable in him. Instead of "suspicion" Theodotion and Aquila have rendered "offense" (amblakema), which is essaitha in the Chaldee. And when I asked a Jew for the meaning of this word, he replied that the basic significance of it was "snare," and we may render it as a "lure" or sphalma, that is, a "mistake." Furthermore Euripides in his "Medea" equates the word amplakiai (spelling it with a p instead of a b) to hamartiai, that is to say, "sins."

Verse 5. "Therefore those men said: 'We will not find any pretext against Daniel, except perhaps in the law of his God.'" Blessed indeed is a life so led that even enemies can find no cause for accusation, except perhaps in matter pertaining to God's law.

Verse 6. "Then the princes and satraps privily withdrew to the king and thus spoke to him." It was well said that they privily withdrew for they did not come right out with what they were aiming at, but contrived their plot against a private enemy on the pretext of honoring the king.

Verse 8. "Now therefore, O king, confirm the measure and write the decree so that it may not be altered, according to the custom established by the Medes and Persians." It is perfectly evident, as we have remarked above, that there was only one kingdom of the Medes and Persians both, under the rule of Darius and Cyrus.

Verse 10. "Now when Daniel learned of it, that is, of the law which had been enacted, he entered his house, and with the windows in his upper room opened up in the direction of Jerusalem, he continued to bow his knees three times a day and worshipped, and made confession before his God just as he was previously accustomed to do." We must quickly draw from our memory and bring together from all of Holy Scripture all the passages where we have read of domata, which mean in Latin either "walled enclosures" (menia) or "beds" or "sun-terraces," and also the references to anogaia, that is, "upper rooms." For after all, our Lord celebrated the passover in an upper room (Mark 14:15, Luke 22:12), and in the Acts of the Apostles the Holy Spirit came upon the one hundred and twenty souls of believers while they were in an upper room (Acts 1:13). And so Daniel in this case, despising the king's commands and reposing his confidence in God, does not offer his prayers in some obscure spot, but in a lofty place, and opens up his windows towards Jerusalem, from whence he looked for the peace. He prays, moreover, according to God's behest, and also according to what Solomon had said when he admonished the people that they should pray in the direction of the Temple. Furthermore, there are three times in the day when we should bow our knees unto God, and the tradition of the Church understands them to be the third hour, the sixth hour, and the ninth hour. Lastly, it was at the third hour that the Holy Spirit descended upon the Apostles (Acts 2:15) . It was at the sixth hour that Peter, purposing to eat, ascended to the upper room for prayer (Acts 10:9). It was at the ninth hour that Peter and John were on their way to the Temple (Acts 3:1).

Verse 11. "Those men, therefore, conducted an inquisitive search and discovered Daniel in prayer and making supplication unto his God." From this passage we learn that we are not to expose ourselves rashly to danger, but so far as it lies in our power, we are to avoid the plots of our enemies. And so in Daniel's case, he did not contravene the king's authority in a public square or out in the street, but rather in a private place, in order that he might not neglect the commands of the one true God Almighty.

Verse 12. "'Hast thou not ordained, O king, that any man who makes a request of any other person besides thee, whether god or man, shall be thrown into the lion-pit?' The king answered them, saying..." They do not mention Daniel's name, so that when the king has made a general answer as to the order he gave, he may then be bound by his own word, and not deal with Daniel in any other fashion than he has stated.

"What you have said is true, according to the decree of the Medes and Persians, which it is not lawful to violate." We repeatedly take note of every passage which speaks of the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, so that we may dispose of the knotty problem of why Daniel speaks of the kingdom in one place as being under Darius, and in another as being under Cyrus.

Verse 13. "Then they answered before the king and said, 'Daniel, who is of the captivity of Judah, has paid no heed to thy law...' In order to magnify the dishonor involved in this contempt, they speak of the man who showed this contempt for the king's commands as a mere captive.

Verse 14. "And when the king heard this statement, he became quite grieved and applied himself on Daniel's behalf that he might deliver him." He realized that he had been tripped up by his own reply to their question, and also that envy was the motive of their plot. And so to avoid the appearance of acting against his own law, he wanted to deliver Daniel from danger by ingenuity and strategy rather than by exerting his royal authority. And so earnestly did he labor and strive that he would not accept any food, absolute monarch though he was, even until sunset. And as for the plotters, so firmly did they persist in their evil purpose that no consideration of the king's personal desire or of the damage he would sustain had any effect upon them.

Verse 15. "But those men, understanding the king's intent, said to him: 'Be it known to thee, O king, that no law of the Medes and Persians, nor any decree which the king has enacted, is capable of alteration.'" Just as the king understood that the princes were making their accusation out of motives of envy, so also they for their part understood what the king's purpose was, namely that he wished to rescue Daniel from imminent death. And so they allege that according to the law of the Medes and Persians, the commands of a king cannot be nullified.

Verse 16. "Then the king gave order, and they brought Daniel and cast him into the pit of lions. And the king said to Daniel: 'Thy God whom thou dost ever serve will Himself deliver thee.'" He gives way to the crowd and dares not to withhold from his plotting adversaries the death of his friend, and he commits to the power of God the purpose which he himself was unable to attain. Nor does he use the language of doubt, so as to say, "If He be able to deliver thee"; but rather he speaks with boldness and confidence and says, "The God whom thou dost ever serve shall Himself deliver thee." He had heard, of course, that three youths who were of a lower rank than Daniel himself had triumphed over the flames of Babylon. He had heard that many secrets had been revealed to Daniel, and therefore regarded him highly, and held him, captive though he was, in the greatest honor.

Verse 17. "A single stone was brought and placed over the opening of the pit, and the king sealed it with his ring..." He sealed with his ring the rock by which the opening of the pit was shut up, so that the enemies of Daniel might not make any attempt to harm him. For he had entrusted him to the power of God, and although not worried about lions, he was fearful of men. He also sealed it with the ring of his nobles, in order to avoid all ground for suspicion so far as they were concerned.

Verse 18. "And the king departed to his own house, and went to bed without partaking of supper..." How sincere was the king's good will, when he would not touch food night or day or grant his eyelids sleep, but as long as the prophet was in danger he himself remained in a state of sympathetic suspense. But if a king who knew not God did such a thing for another man whose deliverance he desired, how much more ought we to implore God's mercy for our own sins with fastings and watchings.

Verse 19. "Then the king arose at the break of dawn and proceeded with haste to the pit of lions." The term "pit" (lacus) implies a really deep depression, or dry cistern, in which the lions were fed. And so he proceeded hastily to the pit at the break of dawn, believing that Daniel was alive. But in Latin the word lacus is applied to a body of fresh water, such as Lake Benacus and Lake Larius, and the rest of them. The Greeks call it limne, that is, "a body of standing water" (stagnum).

Verse 20. "And approaching the pit, he called out to Daniel with a tear-choked voice and addressed him." By his tears he showed his inner emotion, and forgetting his royal dignity, the conqueror ran to his captive, the master to his servant.

"O Daniel, servant of the living God..." He calls Him the living God in order to distinguish Him from the gods of the Gentiles, who are but effigies of the dead.

"Dost thou deem that thy God, whom thou ever servest, has been able to deliver thee from the lions?" It was not that he had any doubts about the power of the God of whom he had previously affirmed, "Thy God, whom thou ever servest, will Himself deliver thee." But he phrased the sentence doubtfully in order that when Daniel made his appearance unharmed, the king's anger at the princes might seem the more justified, in proportion to the incredibility of the event.

Verse 21. "O king, live forever!" Daniel honors the one who accords honor to him, and prays for him eternal life.

Verse 22. "My God sent His angel and shut up the lions' mouths, and they did me no harm..." The fierceness of the lions was not altered, but their gaping jaws were closed by the angel, and also their voracious hunger, and that too for the reason that the prophet's good works had gone before him. And so his deliverance was not so much a matter of grace as of reward for his unrightness.

And these words might be uttered by every saint, for he has been snatched from the mouths of lions unseen and from the infernal pit, because he has trusted in his God.

Verses 25-27. "Then king Darius wrote unto all the peoples, tribes and language-groups who dwelt in all the earth, saying: 'Your peace be multiplied! I have enacted a decree that in all my empire and kingdom men are to dread and tremble before the God of Daniel. For it is He who is the living God and the One who abides forever, and His rule shall not be overthrown, and His power shall eternally endure. It is He who is the Deliverer and Savior, who performs signs and wonders in heaven and on earth, and who has delivered Daniel from the pit of lions.'" Just as in the case of Nebuchadnezzar's writing unto the language-groups and nations one authority has interpreted them to signify hostile powers, so also this same man interprets the action of Darius, on the ground that he summons them all to repentance. And he poses the question as to whether this will take place in this world or in the other world, or even after other worlds have intervened. We deem these speculations to be absurd and account them as empty fables, and make this single observation: that the reason why signs are performed amid barbarian peoples through the agency of God's servants is that the worship and religion of the only God may be proclaimed.

Verse 28. "Thereafter Daniel lived on until the reign of Darius and the reign of Cyrus the Persian." And so the statement which we read above at the end of the first vision, "And Daniel lived until the first year of King Cyrus," is not to be understood as defining the span of his life. In view of the fact that we read in the last vision: "In the third year of Cyrus, King of the Persians, a word was revealed to Daniel, whose surname was Belteshazzar"; this is what is meant, that up to the first year of King Cyrus, who destroyed the empire of the Chaldeans, Daniel continued in power in Chaldea, but was afterwards transferred to Media by Darius.

CHAPTER SEVEN

Verse 1. "In the first year of Belshazzar, King of Babylon, Daniel beheld a dream. And a vision of his head upon his bed. And when he wrote the dream down, he comprehended it in a few words and gave a brief summary of it, saying..." This section which we now undertake to explain, and also the subsequent section which we are going to discuss, is historically prior to the two previous sections. For this present section and that which follows it are recorded to have taken place in the first and third years of the reign of King Belshazzar (Jeremiah 39) [Jerome's citation of Jeremiah 39 seems quite pointless in this connection]. But the section which we read previously to the one just preceding this, is recorded to have taken place in the last year, indeed on the final day, of Belshazzar's reign. And we meet this phenomenon not only in Daniel but also in Jeremiah [cf. Jeremiah 35 and Jeremiah 34] and Ezekiel (Ezekiel 17), as we shall be able to show, if life spares us that long. But in the earlier portion of the book, the historical order has been followed, namely the events which occurred in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, and Belshazzar, and Darius or Cyrus. But in the passages now before us an account is given of various visions which were beheld on particular occasions and of which only the prophet himself was aware, and which therefore lacked any importance as signs or revelations so far as the barbarian nations were concerned. But they were written down only that a record of the things beheld might be preserved for posterity.

Verses 2, 3. "And during the night I saw in my vision, and behold, the four winds of heaven strove upon the great sea, and four great beasts were coming up out of the sea, differing from one another." The four winds of heaven I suppose to have been angelic powers to whom the principalities have been committed, in accordance with what we read in Deuteronomy: "When the Most High divided the nations and when He separated the children of Adam, He established the bounds of the peoples according to the number of the angels. For the Lord's portion is His people; Jacob is the line of His inheritance (Deuteronomy 32:8). But the sea signifies this world and the present age, overwhelmed with salty and bitter waves, in accordance with the Lord's own interpretation of the dragnet cast into the sea (Matthew 13:47-50). Hence also the sovereign of all creatures that inhabit the waters is described as a dragon, and his heads, according to David, are smitten in the sea (Psalm 74:13). And in Amos we read: "If he descends to the very depth of the sea, there will I give him over to the dragon and he shall bite him" (Amos 9:3). But as for the four beasts who came up out of the sea and were differentiated from one another, we may identify them from the angel's discourse. "These four great beasts," he says, "are four kingdoms which shall rise up from the earth." And as for the four winds which strove in the great sea, they are called winds of heaven because each one of the angels does for his realm the duty entrusted to him. This too should be noted, that the fierceness and cruelty of the kingdoms concerned are indicated by the term "beasts."

Verse 4. "The first beast was like a lioness and possessed the wings of an eagle. I beheld until her wings were torn away, and she was raised upright from the ground and stood on her feet like a human being, and she was given a human heart." The kingdom of the Babylonians was not called a lion but a lioness, on account of its brutality and cruelty, or else because of its luxurious, lust-serving manner of life. For writers upon the natural history of beasts assert that lionesses are fiercer than lions, especially if they are nursing their cubs, and constantly are passionate in their desire for sexual relations. And as for the fact that she possessed eagle's wings, this indicates the pride of the all-powerful kingdom, the ruler of which declares in Isaiah: "Above the stars of heaven will I place my throne, and I shall be like unto the Most High" (Isaiah 14:14). Therefore he is told: "Though thou be borne on high like an eagle, thence will I drag thee down" (Obadiah 1:4). Moreover, just as the lion occupies kingly rank among beasts, so also the eagle among the birds. But it should also be said that the eagle enjoys a long span of life, and that the kingdom of Assyrians had held sway for many generations. And as for the fact that the wings of the lioness or eagle were torn away, this signifies the other kingdoms over which it had ruled and soared about in the world. "And she was raised up," he says, "from the ground"; which means, of course, that the Chaldean empire was overthrown. And as for what follows, "And she stood upon her feet like a human being, and she was given a human heart," if we understand this as applying to Nebuchadnezzar, it is very evident that after he lost his kingdom and his power had been taken away from him, and after he was once more restored to his original state, he not only learned to be a man instead of a lioness but he also received back the heart which he had lost. But if on the other hand this is to be understood as applying in a general way to the kingdom of the Chaldeans, then it signifies that after Belshazzar was slain, and the Medes and Persians succeeded to imperial power, then the men of Babylon realized that theirs was a frail and lowly nature after all. Note the order followed here: the lioness is equivalent to the golden head of the image [in chap. 2].

Verse 5. "And behold another beast like a bear stood up on one side; and there were three rows in his mouth and in his teeth; and they said to him: 'Arise up and devour flesh in abundance.'" The second beast resembling a bear is the same as that of which we read in the vision of the statue (2:32): "His chest and arms were of silver." In the former case the comparison was based on the hardness of the metal, in this case on the ferocity of the bear. For the Persian kingdom followed a rigorous and frugal manner of life after the manner of the Spartans, and that too to such an extent that they used to use salt and nasturtium-cress in their relish. Let us consult the record of the childhood of Cyrus the Great (i.e., "The Education or Training" of Cyrus). And as for the fact that the bear is said to have "stood up on one side," the Hebrews interpret it by saying that the Persians never perpetrated any cruelty against Israel. Hence they are described in the Prophecy of Zechariah also as white horses (Zechariah 1:7-11). But as for the three rows or ranks that were in his mouth and between his teeth, one authority has interpreted this to mean that allusion was made to the fact that the Persian kingdom was divided up among three princes, just as we read in the sections dealing with Belshazzar and with Darius that there were three princes who were in charge of the one hundred and twenty satraps. But other commentators affirm that these were three kings of the Persians who were subsequent to Cyrus, and yet they fail to mention them by name. But we know that after Cyrus's reign of thirty years his son Cambyses ruled among the Persians, and his brothers the magi, and then Darius, in the second year of whose reign the rebuilding of the Temple was commenced at Jerusalem. The fifth king was Xerxes, the son of Darius; the sixth was Artabanus; the seventh, Artaxerxes who was surnamed Makrokheir, that is Longimanus ("Long-handed"); the eighth, Xerxes; the ninth, Sogdianus; the tenth, Darius surnamed Nothos ("Bastard"); the eleventh, the Artaxerxes called Mnemon, that is, "The Rememberer"; the twelfth, the other Artaxerxes, who himself received the surname of Ochus; the thirteenth, Arses, the son of Ochus; and the fourteenth, Darius the son of Arsamus, who was conquered by Alexander, the king of the Macedonians. How then can we say that these were three kings of the Persians? Of course we could select some who were especially cruel, but we cannot ascertain them on the basis of the historical accounts. Therefore the three rows in the mouth of the Persian kingdom and between its teeth we must take to be the three kingdoms of the Babylonians, the Medes, and the Persians, all of which were reduced to a single realm. And as for the information, "And thus they spake to him: 'Devour flesh in abundance,'" this refers to the time when in the reign of the Ahasuerus whom the Septuagint calls Artaxerxes, the order was given, at the suggestion of Haman the Agagite, that all the Jews be slaughtered on a single day (Esther 3:13). And very properly, instead of saying, "He was devouring them" the account specifies, "Thus they spake unto him..." This shows that the matter was only attempted, and was by no means ever carried out.

Verse 6. "After this I beheld, and lo, there was another beast like unto a leopard, and it had four wings of a bird all its own, and there were four heads to the beast, and power was given to it." The third kingdom was that of the Macedonians, of which we read in connection with the image, "The belly and thighs were of bronze." It is compared to a leopard because it is very swift and hormetikos, and it charges headlong to shed blood, and with a single bound rushes to its death. "And it had four wings..." There was never, after all, any victory won more quickly than Alexander's, for he traversed all the way from Illyricum and the Adriatic Sea to the Indian Ocean and the Ganges River, not merely fighting battles but winning decisive victories; and in six years he subjugated to his rule a portion of Europe and all of Asia. And by the four heads reference is made to his generals who subsequently rose up as successors to his royal power, namely Ptolemy, Seleucus, Philip, and Antigonus. "And power was given to it" shows that the empire did not result from Alexander's bravery but from the will of God.

Verse 7. "After this, I beheld in the night-vision, and behold, there was a fourth beast, terrible and wonderful and exceedingly strong. He had large iron teeth, devouring and crushing, and everything that was left he stamped to pieces under his feet." The fourth empire is the Roman Empire, which now occupies the entire world, and concerning which it was said in connection with the image, "Its lower legs were of iron, and part of its feet were of iron, and part of clay." And yet from the iron portion itself Daniel calls to mind that its teeth were iron, and solemnly avers that they were large in size. I find it strange that although he had set forth a lioness, a bear and a leopard in the case of the three previous kingdoms, he did not compare the Roman realm to any sort of beast. Perhaps it was in order to render the beast fearsome indeed that he gave it no name, intending thereby that we should understand the Romans to partake of all the more ferocious characteristics we might think of in connection with beasts. The Hebrews believe that the beast which is here not named is the one spoken of in the Psalms: "A boar from the forest laid her waste, and a strange wild animal consumed her" (Psalm 80:13). Instead of this the Hebrew reads: "All the beasts of the field have torn her." While they are all included in the one Empire of the Romans, we recognize at the same time those kingdoms which were previously separate. And as for the next statement, "...devouring and crushing, and pounding all the rest to pieces under his feet," this signifies that all nations have either been slain by the Romans or else have been subjected to tribute and servitude.

"...But it did not resemble the other beasts which I had previously seen" (Vulgate: "...which I had seen before it"). In the earlier beasts he had seen various symbols of fright-fulness, but they were all concentrated in this one.

"...and it had ten horns." Porphyry assigned the last two beasts, that of the Macedonians and that of the Romans, to the one realm of the Macedonians and divided them up as follows. He claimed that the leopard was Alexander himself, and that the beast which was dissimilar to the others represented the four successors of Alexander, and then he enumerates ten kings up to the time of Antiochus, surnamed Epiphanes, and who were very cruel. And he did not assign the kings themselves to separate kingdoms, for example Macedon, Syria, Asia, or Egypt, but rather he made out the various kingdoms a single realm consisting of a series. This he did of course in order that the words which were written: "...a mouth uttering overweening boasts" might be considered as spoken about Antiochus instead of about Antichrist.

Verse 8. "I was looking at the horns, and behold, another small horn rose up out of the midst of them, and three of the earlier horns were torn away before it. And behold, there were in that horn eyes like unto human eyes, and a mouth uttering overweening boasts." Porphyry vainly surmises that the little horn which rose up after the ten horns is Antiochus Epiphanes, and that the three uprooted horns out of the ten are Ptolemy VI (surnamed Philometer), Ptolemy VII (Euergetes), and Artaxias, King of Armenia. The first two of these kings died long before Antiochus was born. Against Artaxias, to be sure, we know that Antiochus indeed waged war, but also we know that Artaxias remained in possession of his original kingly authority. We should therefore concur with the traditional interpretation of all the commentators of the Christian Church, that at the end of the world, when the Roman Empire is to be destroyed, there shall be ten kings who will partition the Roman world amongst themselves. Then an insignificant eleventh king will arise, who will overcome three of the ten kings, that is, the king of Egypt, the king of Africa, and the king of Ethiopia, as we shall show more clearly in our later discussion. Then after they have been slain, the seven other kings also will bow their necks to the victor. "And behold," he continues, "there were eyes like unto human eyes in that horn." Let us not follow the opinion of some commentators and suppose him to be either the Devil or some demon, but rather, one of the human race, in whom Satan will wholly take up his residence in bodily form. "...and a mouth uttering overweening boasts..." For this is the man of sin, the son of perdition, and that too to such a degree that he dares to sit in the temple of God, making himself out to be like God (2 Thessalonians 2:3-4).

Verse 9. "I beheld until thrones were set up, and the Ancient of days took His seat. His garment was as white as snow, and the hair of His head was like pure wool. His throne was composed of fiery flames and its wheels were set on fire. From before His presence there issued forth a rushing, fiery stream." We read something similar in John's Apocalypse: "After these things I was immediately in the Spirit, and lo, a throne was set up in heaven, and one was seated upon the throne; and He who sat upon it had the likeness of jasper and sardine stone, and there was a rainbow round about the throne like the appearance of emerald. Around the throne there were twenty-four other thrones, and upon the twenty-four thrones there sat twenty-four elders, clothed in shining garments; upon their heads was a golden crown, and lightning flashes issued from the throne, and voices and thunder. And in front of the throne there were seven torches of burning fire, which were the seven spirits of God. And in front of the throne lay a glassy sea like unto crystal." (Revelation 4:2-6) And so the many thrones which Daniel saw seem to me to be what John called the twenty-four thrones. And the Ancient of days is the One who, according to John sits alone upon His throne. Likewise the Son of man, who came unto the Ancient of days, is the same as He who, according to John, is called the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, and the titles of that sort (Revelation 5:5). I imagine that these thrones are the ones of which the Apostle Paul says, "Whether thrones or dominions..." (Colossians 1:16). And in the Gospel we read, "Ye yourselves shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matthew 19:28). And God is called the One who sits and who is the Ancient of days, in order that His character as eternal Judge might be indicated. His garment is shining white like the snow, and the hair of His head is like pure wool. The Savior also, when He was transfigured on the mount and assumed the glory of His divine majesty, appeared in shining white garments (Matthew 17:2). And as for the fact that His hair is compared to perfectly pure wool, the even-handedness and uprightness of His judgment is shown forth, a judgment which shows no partiality in its exercise. Moreover He is described as an elderly man, in order that the ripeness of His judgment may be established. His throne consists of fiery flames, in order that sinners may tremble before the severity of the torments, and also that the just may be saved, but so as by fire. The wheels of the throne are set aflame, or else it is the wheels of His chariot which are aflame. In Ezekiel also God is ushered on the scene seated in a four-horse chariot (Ezekiel 1:4-28), and everything pertaining to God is of a fiery consistency. In another place also a statement is made on this subject: "God is a consuming fire" (Deuteronomy 4:24), that we might know that wood, hay and stubble are going to burn up in the day of judgment. And in the Psalms we read: "Fire goeth before Him, and He shall set aflame all His enemies round about Him" (Psalm 97:3). A rushing, fiery stream proceeded from before Him in order that it might carry sinners to hell (Gehenna).

Verse 10. "There were millions ministering unto Him, and a billion stood by His side." This was not intended to be a specific number for the servants of God, but only indicates a multitude too great for human computation. These are the thousands and tens of thousands of which we read in the Psalms: "The chariot of God is attended by ten thousands; thousands of them that rejoice. The Lord is among them" (Psalm 68:17). And in another place: "He who maketh His angels spirits, and His ministers a flaming fire" (Psalm 104:4). Now the duty of angels is twofold: the duty of one group is to bestow rewards upon just men; the duty of the other is to have charge over individual calamities.

"...The court was in session, and the books were opened." The consciences of men, and the deeds of individuals which partake of either character, whether good or bad, are disclosed to all. One of the books is the good book of which we often read, namely the book of the living. The other is the evil book which is held in the hand of the accuser, who is the fiend and avenger of whom we read in Revelation: "The accuser of our brethren" (Revelation 12:10). This is the earthly book of which the prophet says: "Let them be written on earth" (Jeremiah 17:13).

Verse 11. "I looked on because of the sound of the lofty words which that horn was uttering." The judgment of God descends for the humbling of pride. Hence the Roman Empire also will be destroyed, because the horn was uttering the lofty words.

"...And I saw that the beast was slain and its body perished." In the one empire of the Romans, all the kingdoms at once are to be destroyed, because of the blasphemy of the Antichrist. And the empire shall not be an earthly empire at all, but it is simply the abode of the saints which is spoken of here, and the advent of the conquering Son of God.

Verses 13, 14. "And behold, there came One with the clouds of heaven like unto the Son of man." He who was described in the dream of Nebuchadnezzar as a rock cut without hands, which also grew to be a large mountain, and which smashed the earthenware, the iron, the bronze, the silver, and the gold is now introduced as the very person of the Son of man, so as to indicate in the case of the Son of God how He took upon Himself human flesh; according to the statement which we read in the Acts of the Apostles: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up towards heaven? This Jesus who has been taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him going into heaven" (Acts 1:11).

"...And He arrived unto the Ancient of days, and they brought Him before His presence, and He gave unto Him authority and honor and royal power." All that is said here concerning His being brought before Almighty God and receiving authority and honor and royal power is to be understood in the light of the Apostle's statement: "Who, although He was in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men, and was found in His condition to be as a man: He humbled Himself, becoming obedient unto death, even to the death of the cross" (Philippians 2:6-8). And if the sect of the Arians were willing to give heed to all this Scripture with a reverent mind, they would never direct against the Son of God the calumny that He is not on an equality with God.

"...And He is the one whom all the peoples, tribes, and language-groups shall serve. His authority is an eternal authority which shall not be removed, and His kingdom shall be one that shall never be destroyed..." Let Porphyry answer the query of whom out of all mankind this language might apply to, or who this person might be who was so powerful as to break and smash to pieces the little horn, whom he interprets to be Antiochus? If he replies that the princes of Antiochus were defeated by Judas Maccabaeus, then he must explain how Judas could be said to come with the clouds of heaven like unto the Son of man, and to be brought unto the Ancient of days, and how it could be said that authority and royal power was bestowed upon him, and that all peoples and tribes and language-groups served him, and that his power is eternal and not terminated by any conclusion.

Verses 17, 18. "These four great beasts are the four kingdoms which shall arise from the earth. But the saints of the Most High God shall take the kingdom." The four kingdoms of which we have spoken above were earthly in character. "For everything which is of the earth shall return to earth" (Ecclesiastes 3:20). But the saints shall never possess an earthly kingdom, but only a heavenly. Away, then, with the fable about a millennium! (Revelation 20:4-6)

"...And they shall possess the kingdom unto eternity, even forever and ever..." If this be taken to refer to the Maccabees, the advocate of this position should explain how the kingdom of the Maccabees is of a perpetual character.

Verse 25. "And he shall utter (variant: "he utters") speeches against the Lofty One." Or else, as Symmachus has rendered it: "He utters speeches like God," so that one who assumes the authority of God will also arrogate to himself the words of divine majesty.

"...And he shall crush the saints of the Most High, and will suppose himself to be able to alter times and laws." The Antichrist will wage war against the saints and will overcome them; and he shall exalt himself to such a height of arrogance as to attempt changing the very laws of God and the sacred rites as well. He will also lift himself up against all that is called God, subjecting all religion to his own authority.

"...And they shall be delivered into his hand for a time, and times, and half a time." "Time" is equivalent to "year." The word "times," according to the idiom of the Hebrews (who also possess the dual number) represents "two years." The half a year signifies "six months." During this period the saints are to be given over to the power of the Antichrist, in order that those Jews might be condemned who did not believe the truth but supported a lie. The Savior also speaks of this period in the Gospel, saying: "Unless those days had been cut short, no flesh would be saved" (Matthew 24:22). In the final vision we shall assert the inappropriateness of this period to Antiochus.

Verse 26. "And the court will sit in judgment, that [Antichrist's] power may be taken away and be crushed in pieces and utterly perish even unto the end." This refers to Antichrist, that is, to the little horn which uttered the lofty words, for his kingdom is to be permanently destroyed.

Verse 27. "But kingdom and power and a vast realm comprising all that is under heaven shall be conferred upon the nation of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an eternal kingdom, and whom all kings shall serve and obey." Here the reference is to Christ's empire, which is eternal.

Verse 28. "Thus far is the end of the word." That is, "the end of that word and discourse which the Lord revealed to me in this present vision."

"...I, Daniel, was much troubled with my thoughts, and my countenance was altered within me; but I preserved the word in my heart." Up to this point the Book of Daniel was written in the Chaldee and Syriac language. All the rest that follows up to the very end of the volume we read in Hebrew.

CHAPTER EIGHT

Verse 1. "In the third year of the reign of King Belshazzar, a vision appeared to me. I, Daniel, after what I had seen at the first..." This vision came two years after the previous revelation, for the latter was beheld in the first year of Belshazzar, whereas this was beheld in the third year. And so he informs us: "...after that which I had seen at the first."

Verse 2. "I saw in my vision while I was in the castle of Susa, which is in the region of Elam" (Vulgate: "city of Elam"). Or else we may render, as Symmachus has translated it, "...in the city of Elam," from which of course the region took its name, just as the Babylonians were named from Babylon. So also the Elamites were thus named from Elam, in consequence of which the Septuagint translates it: "the region of Elamais." And Susa is the chief city of the region of the Elamites, and there, according to Josephus' account, Daniel erected a lofty tower fashioned of square blocks of marble, and of such outstanding beauty that it seems newly built even up to the present day. There also the remains of the kings of the Persians and Medes lie buried, and the custodian or sacristan and priest of that locality is a Jew. "While I was in the castle at Susa..." Not that the city itself is a castle, for as we have stated, it is a chief city of great power; but rather that the city is so solidly built that it looks like a castle.

"And I saw in the vision that I was over the gate of Ulai." Instead of this Aquila translated: "...over the Ubal of Ulai"; Theodotion rendered: "above Ubal"; Symmachus: "above the swamp of Ulai"; the Septuagint: "above the gate of Ulai." But it should be understood that Ulai is the name of a place, or else of a gate, just as there was in Troy a gate called the Skaia, and among the Romans there is one called Carmentalis. In each case the name has originated from special circumstances.

Verse 3. "And I lifted up my eyes and saw." Yet of course one only sees in dreams things which appear as shadowy representations, naturally, and as mere likenesses, rather than our being able to behold the reality of the objects themselves.

"And behold, a ram stood in front of the swamp (or: in front of the gate - the word being UBAL in the Hebrew), having lofty horns, one of which was higher than the other and growing yet larger." He calls Darius, Cyrus's uncle, a ram. He reigned over the Medes after his father, Astyages. And the one horn which was higher than the other, and growing still larger, signified Cyrus himself, who succeeded his maternal grandfather, Astyages, and reigned over the Medes and Persians along with his uncle, Darius, whom the Greeks called Cyaxeres.

Verse 4. "After this I saw the ram pushing with its horns westward and northward and southward..." Not that he saw the ram itself, that is, the ram of Cyrus or Darius, but rather the ram of the same kingdom as theirs, that is, the second Darius, who was the last king of the Persian power, and who was overcome by the king of the Macedonians, Alexander the son of Philip. And as to the fact that Darius was a very powerful and wealthy king, both the Greek and the Latin and the barbarian historical accounts so relate.

Verse 5. "And I myself understood..." On the basis of the previous visions which had symbolized the second kingdom by the ram and the he-goat, Daniel now also understood that he was looking at the empire of the Medes and Persians.

"And behold, there was a he-goat which was coming from the West above the surface of the whole earth, and yet without touching the ground..." So that no one will think that I am attaching a private interpretation to this, let us simply repeat the words of Gabriel as he explained the prophet's vision. He said, "The ram whom thou sawest to possess two horns is the king of the Medes and Persians." This was, of course, Darius the son of Arsames, in whose reign the kingdom of the Medes and Persians was destroyed. "There was in addition a he-goat, who was coming from the west," and because of his extraordinary speed he appeared not to touch the ground. This was Alexander, the king of the Greeks, who after the overthrow of Thebes took up arms against the Persians. Commencing the conflict at the Granicus River, he conquered the generals of Darius and finally smashed against the ram himself and broke in pieces his two horns, the Medes and the Persians. Casting him beneath his feet, he subjected both horns to his own authority.

"And (he had) a large horn..." refers to the first king, Alexander himself. When he died in Babylon at the age of thirty-two, his four generals rose up in his place and divided his empire among themselves. For Ptolemy, the son of Lagos, seized Egypt; the Philip who was also called Aridaeus (var.: Arius), the (half-) brother of Alexander took over Macedonia; Seleucus Nicanor took over Syria, Babylonia, and all the kingdoms of the East; and Antigonus ruled over Asia Minor. "But (they shall not rise up) with his power" (chap. 8:22), since no one was able to equal the greatness of Alexander himself. "And a long time afterward" there shall arise "a king of Syria who shall be of shameless countenance and shall understand (evil) counsels," even Antiochus Epiphanes, the son of the Seleucus who was also called Philopator.

Verse 9. After he had been a hostage to Rome, and had without the knowledge of the Senate obtained rule by treachery, Antiochus fought with Ptolemy Philometor, that is, "against the South" and against Egypt; and then again "against the East," and against those who were fomenting revolution in Persia. At the last he fought against the Jews and captured Judea, entering into Jerusalem and setting up in the Temple of God the statue of Jupiter Olympius. "...and against the power of heaven," that is, against the children of Israel, who were protected by the assistance of angels. He pushed his arrogance to such an extreme that he subjected the majority of the saints to the worship of idols, as if he would tread the very stars beneath his feet. And thus it came to pass that he held the South and the East, that is, Egypt and Persia, under his sway.

Verses 11, 12. And as for the statement, "And he glorified himself even against the Prince of Power," this means that he lifted himself up against God and persecuted His saints. He even took away the endelekhismos or "continual offering" which was customarily sacrificed in the morning and at even, and he prevailed to the casting down of the "place of His sanctuary." And he did not do this by his own prowess, but only "on account of the sins of the people." And thus it came to pass that truth was prostrated upon the ground, and as the worship of idols flourished, the religion of God suffered an eclipse.

Verse 13. "And I heard one of the saints speaking, and one saint said to another saint (I do not know which one), who was conversing with him." Instead of "another one which one I do not know" - the rendering of Symmachus (tini pote) which I too have followed - Aquila and Theodotion, and the Septuagint as well, have simply put the Hebrew word (p-l-m-n-y) phelmoni itself. Without specifying the angel's name, I should say that the author indicated some one of the angels or other in a general way.

"How long shall be the vision concerning the continual sacrifice and the sin of the desolation that is made, and the sanctuary and the strength be trodden under foot?" One angel asks another angel for how long a period the Temple is by the judgment of God to be desolated under the rule of Antiochus, King of Syria, and how long the image of Jupiter is to stand in God's Temple (according to his additional statement: "...and the sanctuary and the strength be trodden under foot?").

Verse 14. And he answered him, "Until the evening and the morning, until two thousand three hundred days; and then the sanctuary shall be cleansed." If we read the Books of Maccabees and the history of Josephus, we shall find it there recorded that in the one hundred and forty-third year after the Seleucus who first reigned in Syria after the decease of Alexander, Antiochus entered Jerusalem, and after wreaking a general devastation he returned again in the third year and set up the statue of Jupiter in the Temple. Up until the time of Judas Macca-baeus, that is, up until the one hundred and eighth year, Jerusalem lay waste over a period of six years, and for three years the Temple lay defiled; making up a total of two thousand three hundred days plus three months. At the end of the period the Temple was purged. Some authorities read two hundred instead of two thousand three hundred, in order to avoid the apparent excess involved in six years and three months. Most of our commentators refer this passage to the Antichrist, and hold that that which occurred under Antiochus was only by way of a type which shall be fulfilled under Antichrist. And as for the statement, "The sanctuary shall be cleansed," this refers to the time of Judas Maccabaeus, who came from the village of Modin, and who being aided by the efforts of his brothers and relatives and many of the Jewish people the generals of Antiochus not far above Emmaus (which is now called Nicopolis). And hearing of this, Antiochus, who had risen up against the Prince of princes, that is, against the Lord of lords and King of kings, was earnestly desirous of despoiling the temple of Diana which was located in Elimais, in the Persian district, because it possessed valuable votive offerings. And when he there lost his army, he was destroyed without hands, that is to say, he died of grief. As for the mention of evening and morning, this signifies the succession of day and night.

Verse 15. "And it came to pass that when I, Daniel, had seen the vision, I sought to understand it." He beheld the vision by way of a picture or likeness, and he failed to understand it. Consequently, not everyone who sees comprehends what he has seen; it is just as if we read the Holy Scripture with our eyes and do not understand it with our heart, "...And behold, one stood before me who resembled the appearance of a man." Angels, after all, are not actually men by nature, but they resemble men in appearance. For example, three persons appeared as men to Abraham at the oak of Mamre (Genesis 18:1-2), and yet they certainly were not men, for one of them was worshipped as the Lord. And so the Savior also stated in the Gospel: "Abraham beheld My day; he beheld it and rejoiced" (John 8:56).

Verses 16, 17. "And I heard the voice of a man in the midst of the Ulai, and he cried out and said: 'Gabriel, make this vision intelligible (Vulgate: make this man to understand the vision).' And he came and stood near to where I was standing." The Jews claim that this man who directed Gabriel to explain the vision to Daniel was Michael. Quite appropriately it was Gabriel, who has been put in charge of battles, to whom this duty was assigned, inasmuch as the vision had to do with battles and contests between kings and even between kingdoms themselves. For Gabriel is translated into our language as "the strength of, or the mighty one of, God." And so at that time also when the Lord was about to be born and to declare war against the demons and to triumph over the world, Gabriel came to Zacharias (Luke 1:11-20) and to Mary (Luke 1:26-27). And then we read in the Psalms concerning the Lord in His triumph: "Who is this king of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle; He is the King of glory" (Psalm 24:8). But whenever it is medicine or healing that is needed, it is Raphael who is sent, for his name is rendered as "the healing of," or "the medicine of God" - that is, if one cares to accept the authority of the Book of Tobias (Tobit 12:11-15). And then, when favorable promises are made to the people, and hilasmos, which we might render as "propitiation" or "expiation," is the thing required, then it is Michael who is directed to go, for his name means, "Who is like God?" Of course the significance of the name indicates the fact that the only true remedy is to be found in God.

"And he said to me: 'Son of man, understand that in the time of the end the vision shall be fulfilled.'" Inasmuch as Ezekiel and Daniel and Zechariah behold themselves to be often in the company of angels, they were reminded of their frailty, lest they should be lifted up in pride and imagine themselves to partake of the nature or dignity of angels. Therefore they are addressed as sons of men, in order that they might realize that they are but human beings.

Verses 18, 19. "And he touched me and stood me upon my feet, and said to me..." Overcome with terror, the prophet was lying on the ground face downward upon his hands and knees, but at the angel's touch he was raised up to a standing position in order that he might without perturbation attend to and understand what was spoken.

Verse 26. "Thou therefore seal up the vision, because it shall come to pass after many days." Having explained the vision which we have examined above to the best of our ability, the angel Gabriel adds at the end: "Thou therefore seal up the vision, because it shall come to pass after many days." By the mention of a seal, he showed that the things spoken were of a hidden character and not accessible to the ears of the multitude, or susceptible of comprehension prior to their actual fulfilment by the events themselves.

Verse 27. "And I, Daniel, languished and was sick for some days. And when I rose from my bed, I performed the king's tasks." This is the same thing as we read in Genesis about Abraham, for after he had heard the Lord speaking to him, he averred that he was but dust and ashes (Genesis 18:27). And so Daniel states that he languished as a reaction to the horror of the vision, and suffered illness. And after he had risen from his sick-bed, he says he performed the tasks assigned to him by the king, rendering to all men all that was due them and bearing in mind the gospel principle: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's" (Luke 20:25).

"And I was amazed at the vision, and there was no one who could interpret it." If there was no one who could interpret it, how was it that the angel interpreted it in the previous passage? What he means is that he had heard mention of kings and did not know what their names were; he learned of things to come, but he was tossed about with uncertainty as to what time they would come to pass. And so he did the only thing he could do: he marveled at the vision, and resigned everything to God's omniscience.

CHAPTER NINE

Verse 1. "In the first year of the Darius who was the son of Ahasuerus of the race of the Medes and who reigned over the kingdom of the Chaldeans, in the first year of his reign..." This is the Darius who in cooperation with Cyrus conquered the Chaldeans and Babylonians. We are not to think of that other Darius in the second year of whose reign the Temple was built (as Porphyry supposes in making out a late date for Daniel); nor are we to think of the Darius who was vanquished by Alexander, the king of the Macedonians. He therefore adds the name of his father and also refers to his victory, inasmuch as he was the first of the race of the Medes to overthrow the kingdom of the Chaldeans. He does this to avoid any mistake in the reading which might arise from the similarity of the name.

Verse 2. "I, Daniel, understood by the books the number of the years concerning which the word of the Lord had come to the prophet Jeremiah, that seventy years would be accomplished for the desolation of Jerusalem." Jeremiah had predicted seventy years for the desolation of the Temple (Jeremiah 29:1-10), at the end of which the people would again return to Judaea and build the Temple and the city of Jerusalem. But this fact did not render Daniel careless, but rather encouraged him to pray that God might through his supplications fulfil that which He had graciously promised. Thus he avoided the danger that carelessness might result in pride, and pride cause offense to the Lord. Accordingly we read in Genesis that prior to the Deluge one hundred and twenty years were appointed for men to come to repentance (Genesis 6:3); and inasmuch as they refused to repent even within so long an interval of time as a hundred years, God did not wait for the remaining twenty years to be fulfilled, but brought on the punishment earlier which He had threatened for a later time. So also Jeremiah is told, on account of the hardness of the heart of the Jewish people: "Pray not for this people, for I will not hearken unto thee" (Jeremiah 7:16). Samuel also was told: "How long wilt thou mourn over Saul? I also have rejected him" (1 Samuel 16:1). And so it was with sackcloth and ashes that Daniel besought the Lord to fulfil what He had promised, not that Daniel lacked faith concerning the future, but rather he would avoid the danger that a feeling of security might produce carelessness, and carelessness produce an offense to God.

Verse 4. "'I beseech Thee, O Lord God, who art mighty and terrible..." That is, Thou art terrible towards those who despise Thine injunctions.

"...Who keepest covenant and mercy towards those who love Thee and keep Thy commandments." It is not therefore the case that what God promises will come to pass without further ado, but rather, He fulfils His promises towards those who keep His commandments.

Verse 5. "'We have sinned, we have behaved wickedly and impiously, and we have departed..." He reviews the sins of the people as if he were personally guilty, on the ground of his being one of the people, just as we read the Apostle does also in his Epistle to the Romans.

Verse 7. "'Justice belongeth unto Thee, O Lord, but for us there is only confusion of face..." It is of course just that we suffer what we deserve.

Verse 8. "'Unto Thee belongeth mercy, O Lord our God, and also propitiation..." Concerning the same God of Whom he had previously said, "To Thee, O Lord, belongeth justice," he now says (since the Lord is not only just but also merciful): "To Thee belongeth mercy." He says this in order that he might call upon the Judge to show mercy, after His sentence has been imposed.

Verse 11. "'And (the curse) has come upon us drop by drop.'" That is, Thou hast not poured out upon us all of Thy wrath, for we should not have been able to bear it, but Thou hast poured forth a mere droplet of Thy fury, in order that we might return unto Thee once we have been immeshed in Thy snare.

"The malediction and the curse which were written in the book of Moses, the servant of God..." In Deuteronomy we read the curses and blessings of the Lord (Deuteronomy 27:11-28:14), which were afterwards uttered in Mount Gerizim and Ebal upon the righteous and upon the sinners.

Verse 13. "'All this evil has come upon us, and we have not entreated Thy face, O Lord our God, that we might turn back from our iniquities and consider Thy truth.'" Their obduracy was so great that even in the midst of their toils they would not entreat God, and even if they had entreated Him, it would not have been a genuine entreaty, because they had not turned back from their iniquities. Yet to consider the truth of God is equivalent to turning back from iniquity.

Verse 14. "'And the Lord hath kept watch over the evil and hath brought it upon us..." Whenever we are rebuked because of our sins, God is keeping watch over us and visiting us with chastenment. But whenever we are left alone by God and we do not suffer judgment but are unworthy of the Lord's rebuke, then He is said to slumber. And so we read in the Psalms as well: "The Lord has risen up as one who was slumbering or as a man out of a drunken sleep" (Psalm 78:65). For our wickedness and iniquity inflames God with wine, and whenever it is rebuked in our case, God is said to be keeping careful watch and to be rising up out of His drunken sleep, in order that we who are drunken with sin may be made to pay careful heed unto righteousness.

Verse 15. "'And now, O Lord our God..." Daniel remembers God's ancient kindness in order that he may appeal to Him for a similar act of clemency.

Verse 17. "'And show Thy face upon Thy sanctuary, which lies desolate.'" By deed fulfil that which Thou hast promised in word, for the approximate period of desolation has elapsed.

Verse 18. "For Thine own sake, O my God, incline Thine ear and hear; open Thine eyes and behold our desolation..." This appeal is couched in anthropomorphic language (anthropopathos), with the implication that whenever our prayers are heard, God seems to incline His ear; and whenever God deigns to have regard to us, He appears to open His eyes; but whenever He turns His face away, we appear to be unworthy of attention either from His eyes or His ears.

Verse 20. "Now while I was yet speaking and praying and confessing my sins and the sins of my people, Israel, so as to present (Vulg.: and was presenting) my petitions in the presence of my God on behalf of the holy mountain of my God..." And so, as we have pointed out above, he not only thought upon the sins of the people but also upon his own sins, as being one of the people. Or else it was by way of humility, although he had not personally committed sin; his purpose being to obtain pardon by reason of his humility. Observe what he said here: "I was confessing my sins." For there are many passages in Scripture where confession does not imply an expression of repentance so much as an expression of praise to God.

Verse 21. "While I was still speaking in my prayer, behold the man Gabriel, whom I had seen at the beginning of the vision." He calls the previous vision preceding this one the beginning. The effect of his prayer was considerable, and the promise of God was fulfilled which says, "While thou art yet speaking, lo, I am at hand" (Isaiah 58:9). And Gabriel appears not as an angel or archangel, but as a man (vir), a term used to indicate the quality of virtue rather than specifying his sex.

"...he quickly flew to me and touched me at the time of the evening sacrifice." It is stated that he flew, because he had made his appearance as a man. It is said that it was at the time of the evening sacrifice, in order to show that the prophet's prayer had persisted from the morning sacrifice even unto the evening sacrifice, and that God for that reason directed His mercy towards him.

Verse 22. "And He instructed me and spoke to me, saying..." The vision was so obscure that the prophet needed the angel's teaching.

"...Now, O Daniel, I have come forth that I may instruct thee and that thou mayest understand." That is, I have been sent to thee and have come forth, not from the presence of God in the sense of departing from Him, but only in the sense of coming unto thee.

Verse 23. "From the very beginning of thy prayers the word went forth and I myself have come to show it to thee, because thou art a man of desires." That is, at the time when thou didst begin to ask God, thou didst straightway obtain His mercy, and His decision was put forth. I have therefore been sent to explain to thee the things of which thou art ignorant, inasmuch as thou art a man of desires, that is to say a lovable man, worthy of God's love - even as Solomon was called Idida (var: Jedida) or "man of desires." (Song of Solomon 5:16) I have been sent because thou art worthy, in recompense for thine affection for God, to be told the secret counsels of God and to have a knowledge of things to come.

"Thou therefore pay heed to the word and understand the vision." Thus Daniel is told, "Pay diligent heed, in order that thou mayest hear and understand what thou seest." We too should do this, for our eyes have been blinded by the shadows of ignorance and the darkness of sins.

Verses 24-27. "Seventy weeks are shortened upon thy people and upon thy holy city, that transgression may be finished, and sin may have an end, and iniquity may be abolished, and everlasting justice may be brought to bear, and that the vision and prophecy may be fulfilled that the Holy One of the saints may be anointed. Know therefore and take note that from the going forth of the word to build up Jerusalem again, unto Christ the prince, there shall be seven weeks and sixty-two weeks, and the street shall be built again, and the walls, in distressing times. And after sixty-two weeks Christ shall be slain, and (the people that shall deny Him) shall not be His. And a people, with their leader that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary. And the end thereof shall be devastation, and after the end of the war there shall be the appointed desolation. And he shall confirm the covenant with many in one week; and in the middle of the week both victim and sacrifice shall fail. And there shall be in the Temple the abomination of desolation, and the desolation shall continue even unto the consummation and the end." Because the prophet had said, "Thou didst lead forth Thy people, and Thy name was pronounced upon Thy city and upon Thy people," Gabriel therefore, as the mouthpiece of God, says by implication: "By no means are they God's people, but only thy people; nor is Jerusalem the holy city of God, but it is only a holy city unto thee, as thou sayest." This is similar to what we read in Exodus also, when God says to Moses, "Descend, for thy people have committed sin" (Exodus 32:7). That is to say, they are not My people, for they have forsaken Me. And so, because thou dost supplicate for Jerusalem and prayest for the people of the Jews, hearken unto that which shall befall thy people in seventy weeks of years, and those things which will happen to thy city.

I realize that this question has been argued over in various ways by men of greatest learning, and that each of them has expressed his views according to the capacity of his own genius. And so, because it is unsafe to pass judgment upon the opinions of the great teachers of the Church and to set one above another, I shall simply repeat the view of each, and leave it to the reader's judgment as to whose explanation ought to be followed. In the fifth volume of his Tempora ["Chronology"], Africanus has this to say concerning the seventy weeks (and I quote him verbatim): "The chapter which we read in Daniel concerning the seventy weeks contains many remarkable details, which require too lengthy a discussion at this point; and so we must discuss only what pertains to our present task, namely that which concerns chronology. There is no doubt but what it constitutes a prediction of Christ's advent, for He appeared to the world at the end of seventy weeks. After Him the crimes were consummated and sin reached its end and iniquity was destroyed. An eternal righteousness also was proclaimed which overcame the mere righteousness of the law; and the vision and the prophecy were fulfilled, inasmuch as the Law and the Prophets endured until the time of John the Baptist (Luke 16), and then the Saint of saints was anointed. And all these things were the objects of hope, prior to Christ's incarnation, rather than the objects of actual possession. Now the angel himself specified seventy weeks of years, that is to say, four hundred and ninety years from the issuing of the word that the petition be granted and that Jerusalem be rebuilt. The specified interval began in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, King of the Persians; for it was his cupbearer, Nehemiah (Neh. 1), who, as we read in the book of Ezra, petitioned the king and obtained his request that Jerusalem be rebuilt. And this was the word, or decree, which granted permission for the construction of the city and its encompassment with walls; for up until that time it had lain open to the incursions of the surrounding nations. But if one points to the command of King Cyrus, who granted to all who desired it permission to return to Jerusalem, the fact of the matter is that the high priest Jesus and Zerubbabel, and later on the priest Ezra, together with the others who had been willing to set forth from Babylon with them, only made an abortive attempt to construct the Temple and the city with its walls, but were prevented by the surrounding nations from completing the task, on the pretext that the king had not so ordered. And thus the work remained incomplete until Nehemiah's time and the twentieth year of King Artaxerxes. Hence the captivity lasted for seventy years prior to the Persian rule. At this period in the Persian Empire a hundred and fifteen years had elapsed since its inception, but it was the one hundred and eighty-fifth year from the captivity of Jerusalem when Artaxerxes first gave orders for the walls of Jerusalem to be built. Nehemiah was in charge of this undertaking, and the street was built and the surrounding walls were erected. Now if you compute seventy weeks of years from that date, you can come out to the time of Christ. But if we wish to take any other date as the starting point for these weeks, then the dates will show a discrepancy and we shall encounter many difficulties. For if the seventy weeks are computed from the time of Cyrus and his decree of indulgence which effectuated the release of the Jewish captives, then we shall encounter a deficit of a hundred years and more short of the stated number of seventy weeks. If we reckon from the day when the angel spoke to Daniel, the deficit would be much greater. An even greater number of years is added, if you wish to put the beginning of the weeks at the commencement of the captivity. For the kingdom of the Persians endured for two hundred and thirty years until the rise of the Macedonian kingdom; then the Macedonians themselves reigned for three hundred years. From that date until the sixteenth (i.e., the fifteenth) year of Tiberius Caesar, when Christ suffered death, is an interval of sixty years. All of these years added together come to the number of five hundred and ninety, with the result that a hundred years remain to be accounted for. On the other hand, the interval from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes to the time of Christ completes the figure of seventy weeks, if we reckon according to the lunar computation of the Hebrews, who did not number their months according to the movement of the sun, but rather according to the moon. For the interval from the one hundred fiftieth year of the Persian Empire, when Artaxerxes, as king thereof, attained the twentieth year of his reign (and this was the fourth year of the eighty-third Olympiad), up until the two hundred and second Olympiad (for it was the second year of that Olympiad which was the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar) comes out to be the grand total of four hundred seventy-five years. This would result in four hundred ninety Hebrew years, reckoning according to the lunar months as we have suggested. For according to their computation, these years can be made up of months of twenty-nine (variant: twenty-eight) and a half days each. This means that the sun, during a period of four hundred ninety years, completes its revolution in three hundred sixty-five days and a quarter, and this amounts to twelve lunar months for each individual year, with eleven and a fourth days left over to spare. Consequently the Greeks and Jews over a period of eight years insert three intercalary months (embolimoi). For if you will multiply eleven and a quarter days by eight, you will come out to ninety days, which equal three months. Now if you divide the eight-year periods into four hundred seventy-five years, your quotient will be fifty-nine plus three months. These fifty-nine plus eight-year periods produce enough intercalary months to make up fifteen years, more or less; and if you will add these fifteen years to the four hundred seventy-five years, you will come out to seventy weeks of years, that is, a total of four hundred and ninety years."

Africanus has expressed his views in these very words which we have copied out. Let us pass on to Eusebius Pamphili, who in the eighth book of his Euangelike Apodeixis [the full title was Euangelikes Apodeixeos Proparaskeue or "Preparation for the Demonstration of the Gospel"; the Latin title is Praeparatio Evangelica] ventures some such conjecture as this: "It does not seem to me that the seventy weeks have been divided up without purpose, in that seven is mentioned first, and then sixty-two, and then a last week is added, which in turn is itself divided into two parts. For it is written: 'Thou shalt know and understand that from the issuing of the word (command) that the petition be granted and Jerusalem be built until Christ the Prince there shall be seven weeks and sixty-two weeks.' And after the rest which he relates in the intervening section, he states at the end: 'He shall confirm a testimony (covenant) with many during one week.' It is clear that the angel did not detail these things in his reply to no purpose or apart from the inspiration of God. This observation seems to require some cautious and careful reasoning, so that the reader may pay diligent attention and inquire into the cause for this division (variant: vision). But if we must express our own opinion, in conformity with the rest of the interpretation which concerns this present context, in the angel's statement: 'From the issuing of the word that the petition be granted and that Jerusalem be built, until the time of Christ the Prince,' we are only to think of other princes who had charge of the Jewish people subsequent to this prophecy and subsequent to the return from Babylon. That is to say, we are to think of the arkhierais and pontiffs to whom the Scripture attaches the title of christs, by reason of the fact that they have been anointed. The first of these was Jesus the son of Jehozadak, the high priest, and then the rest who had that office up until the time of the advent of our Lord and Savior. And it is these who are intended by the prophet's prediction when it states: 'From the issuing of the word that the petition be granted and Jerusalem be built even unto Christ the Prince there shall be seven weeks, and sixty-two weeks.' That is to say, the purpose is that seven weeks be counted off, and then afterward sixty-two weeks, which come to a total of four hundred and eighty-three years after the time of Cyrus. And lest we appear to be putting forth a mere conjecture too rashly and without testing the truth of our statements, let us reckon up those who bore office as christs over the people from the time of Jeshua, the son of Jehozadak, until the advent of the Lord; that is to say, those who were anointed for the high priesthood. First, then, as we have already stated, subsequent to Daniel's prophecy, which occurred in the reign of Cyrus, and subsequent to the return of the people from Babylon, Jeshua the son of Jehozadak was the high priest, and together with Zerubbabel, son of Shealtiel, they laid the foundations of the temple. And because the undertaking was hindered by the Samaritans and the other surrounding nations, seven weeks of years elapsed (that is to say, forty-nine years), during which the work on the temple remained unfinished. These weeks are separated by the prophecy from the remaining sixty-two weeks. And lastly, the Jews also followed this view when they said to the Lord in the Gospel-narrative: 'This temple was built over a period of forty-six years, and shalt thou raise it up in three days' (John 2:20). For this was the number of years which elapsed between the first year of Cyrus, who granted to those Jews who so desired the permission to return to their fatherland, and the sixth year of King Darius, in whose reign the entire work upon the temple was finished. Furthermore Josephus added on three more years, during which the periboloi (precincts) and certain other construction left undone were brought to completion; and when these are added to the forty-six years, they come out to forty-nine years, or seven weeks of years. And the remaining sixty-two weeks are computed from the seventh year of Darius. At that time Jeshua the son of Jehozadak, and Zerubbabel (who had already reached his majority) were in charge of the people, and it was in their time that Haggai and Zechariah prophesied. After them came Ezra and Nehemiah from Babylon and constructed the walls of the city during the high priesthood of Joiakim, son of Jeshua, who had the surname of Jehozadak. After him Eliashib succeeded to the priesthood, then Joiada and Johanan after him. Following him there was Jaddua, in whose lifetime Alexander, the king of the Macedonians, founded Alexandria, as Josephus relates in his books of the Antiquities, and actually came to Jerusalem and offered blood-sacrifices in the Temple. Now Alexander died in the one hundred and thirteenth Olympiad, in the two hundred thirty-sixth year of the Persian Empire, which in turn had begun in the first year of the fifty-fifth Olympiad. That was the date when Cyrus, King of the Persians, conquered the Babylonians and Chaldeans. After the death of the priest Jaddua, who had been in charge of the temple in Alexander's reign, Onias received the high priesthood. It was at this period that Seleucus, after the conquest of Babylon, placed upon his own head the crown of all Syria and Asia, in the twelfth year after Alexander's death. Up to that time the years which had elapsed since the rule of Cyrus, when computed together, were two hundred and forty-eight. From that date the Scripture of the Maccabees computes the kingdom of the Greeks. Following Onias, the high priest Eleazar became head of the Jews. That was the period when the Seventy translators (Septuaginta interpretes) are said to have translated the Holy Scriptures into Greek at Alexandria. After him came Onias II, who was followed by Simon, who ruled over the people when Jesus the son of Sirach wrote the book which bears the Greek title of Panaretos ("A Completely Virtuous Man"), and which is by most people falsely attributed to Solomon. Another Onias followed him in the high priesthood, and that was the period when Antiochus was trying to force the Jews to sacrifice to the gods of the Gentiles. After the death of Onias, Judas Maccabaeus cleansed the Temple and smashed to bits the statues of the idols. His brother Jonathan followed him, and after Jonathan their brother Simon governed the people. By his death the two hundred and seventy-seventh year of the Syrian kingdom had elapsed, and the First Book of Maccabees contains a record of events up to that time. And so the total number of years from the first year of Cyrus, King of Persia, until the end of the First Book of Maccabees and the death of the high priest Simon is four hundred twenty-five. After him John occupied the high priesthood for twenty-nine years, and upon his death Aristobulus became head of the people for a year and was the first man after the return from Babylon to associate with the dignity of high priesthood the authority of kingship. His successor was Alexander, who likewise was high priest and king, and who governed the people for twenty-seven years. Up to this point, the number of years from the first year of Cyrus and the return of the captives who desired to come back to Judaea is to be computed at four hundred and eighty-three. This total is made up of the seven weeks and the sixty-two weeks, or sixty-nine weeks altogether. And during this whole period high priests ruled over the Jewish people, and I now believe that they are those referred to as christ-princes. And when the last of them, Alexander, had died, the Jewish nation was rent in this direction and that into various factions, and was harrassed by internal seditions in its leaderless condition; and that too to such an extent that Alexandra, who was also called Salina, and who was the wife of the same Alexander, seized power and kept the high priesthood for her son, Hyrcanus. But she passed on the royal power to her other son, Aristobulus, and he exercised it for ten years. But when the brothers fought with each other in civil war and the Jewish nation was drawn into various factions, then Gnaeus Pompey, the general of the Roman army, came upon the scene. Having captured Jerusalem, he penetrated even to the shrine in the temple which was called the Holy of holies. He sent Aristobulus back to Rome in chains, keeping him for his triumphal procession, and then he gave the high priesthood to his brother, Hyrcanus. Then for the first time the Jewish nation became tributary to the Romans. Succeeding him, Herod, the son of Antipater, received the royal authority over the Jews by senatorial decree, after Hyrcanus had been killed; and so he was the first foreigner to become governor of the Jews. Moreover when his parents had died, he handed over the high priesthood to his children, even though they were non-Jews, utterly contrary to the law of Moses. Nor did he entrust the office to them for long, except upon their granting him favors and bribes, for he despised the commands of God's law." The same Eusebius offered another explanation also, and if we wanted to translate it into Latin, we should greatly expand the size of this book. And so the sense of his interpretation is this, that the number of years from the sixth year of Darius, who reigned after Cyrus and his son, Cambyses, - and this was the date when the work on the temple was completed - until the time of Herod and Caesar Augustus is reckoned to be seven weeks plus sixty-two weeks, which make a total of four hundred eighty-three years. That was the date when the christ, that is to say, Hyrcanus, being the last high priest of the Maccabaeian line, was murdered by Herod, and the succession of high priests came to an end, so far as the law of God was concerned. It was then also that a Roman army under the leadership of a Roman general devastated both the city and the sanctuary itself. Or else it was Herod himself who committed the devastation, after he had through the Romans appropriated to himself a governmental authority to which he had no right. And as for the angel's statement, "For he shall establish a compact with many for one week (variant: "a compact for many weeks"), and in the midst of the week the sacrifice and offering shall cease," it is to be understood in this way, that Christ was born while Herod was reigning in Judaea and Augustus in Rome, and He preached the Gospel for three years and six months, according to John the Evangelist. And he established the worship of the true God with many people, undoubtedly meaning the Apostles and believers generally. And then, after our Lord's passion, the sacrifice and offering ceased in the middle of the week. For whatever took place in the Temple after that date was not a valid sacrifice to God but a mere worship of the devil, while they all cried out together, "His blood be upon us and upon our children" (Matthew 27:25); and again, "We have no king but Caesar." Any reader who is interested may look up this passage in the Chronicle of this same Eusebius, for I translated it into Latin many years ago. But as for his statement that the number of years to be reckoned from the completion of the temple to the tenth year of the Emperor Augustus, that is, when Hyrcanus was slain and Herod obtained Judaea, amounts to a total of seven plus sixty-two weeks, or four hundred eighty-three years, we may check it in the following fashion. The building of the temple was finished in the seventy-sixth Olympiad, which was the sixth year of Darius. In the third year of the one hundred and eighty-sixth Olympiad, that is, the tenth year of Augustus, Herod seized the rule over the Jews. This makes the interval four hundred and eighty-three years, reckoning up by the individual Olympiads and computing them at four years each. This same Eusebius reports another view as well, which I do not entirely reject, that most authorities extend the one week of years to the sum of seventy years, reckoning each year as a ten-year period. They also claim that thirty-five years intervened between the passion of the Lord and the reign of Nero, and that it was at this latter date when the weapons of Rome were first lifted up against the Jews, this being the half-way point of the week of seventy years. After that, indeed, from the time of Vespasian and Titus (and it was right after their accession to power that Jerusalem and the temple were burned) up to the reign of Trajan another thirty-five years elapsed. And this, they assert, was the week of which the angel said to Daniel: "And he shall establish a compact with many for one week." For the Gospel was preached by the Apostles all over the world, since they survived even unto that late date. According to the tradition of the church historians, John the Evangelist lived up to the time of Trajan. Yet I am at a loss to know how we can understand the earlier seven weeks and the sixty-two weeks to involve seven years each, and just this last one to involve ten years for each unit of the seven, or seventy years in all. So much for Eusebius. But Hippolytus has expressed the following opinion concerning these same weeks: he reckons the seven weeks as prior to the return of the people from Babylon, and the sixty-two weeks as subsequent to their return and extending to the birth of Christ. But the dates do not agree at all. If indeed the duration of the Persian Empire be reckoned at two hundred and thirty years, and the Macedonian Empire at three hundred, and the period thereafter up to the birth of the Lord be thirty years, then the total from the beginning of the reign of Cyrus, King of the Persians, until the advent of the Savior will be five hundred and sixty years. Moreover Hippolytus places the final week at the end of the world and divides it into the period of Elias and the period of Antichrist, so that during the three and a half years of the last week the knowledge of God is established. And as for the statement, "He shall establish a compact with many for a week" (Daniel 9:27), during the other three years under the Antichrist the sacrifice and offering shall cease. But when Christ shall come and shall slay the wicked one by the breath of His mouth, desolation shall hold sway till the end. On the other hand Apollinarius of Laodicea in his investigation of the problem breaks away from the stream of the past and directs his longing desires towards the future, very unsafely venturing an opinion concerning matters so obscure. And if by any chance those of future generations should not see these predictions of his fulfilled at the time he set, then they will be forced to seek for some other solution and to convict the teacher himself of erroneous interpretation. And so, in order to avoid the appearance of slandering a man as having made a statement he never made, he makes the following assertion - and I translate him word for word: "To the period of four hundred and ninety years the wicked deeds are to be confined as well as all the crimes which shall ensue from those deeds. After these shall come the times of blessing, and the world is to be reconciled unto God at the advent of Christ, His Son. For from the coming forth of the Word, when Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, to the forty-ninth year, that is, the end of the seven weeks, waited for Israel to repent. Thereafter, indeed, from the eighth year of Claudius Caesar onward, the Romans took up arms against the Jews. For it was in His thirtieth year, according to the Evangelist Luke, that the Lord incarnate began His preaching of the Gospel (Luke 1). According to the Evangelist John (John 2 and 11), Christ completed two years over a period of three passovers. The years of Tiberius' reign from that point onward are to be reckoned at six; then there were the four years of the reign of Gaius Caesar, surnamed Caligula, and eight more years in the reign of Claudius. This makes a total of forty-nine years, or the equivalent of seven weeks of years. But when four hundred thirty-four years shall have elapsed after that date, that is to say, the sixty-two weeks, then Jerusalem and the Temple shall be rebuilt during three and a half years within the final week, beginning with the advent of Elias, who according to the dictum of our Lord and Savior (Luke 1) is going to come and turn back the hearts of the fathers towards their children. And then the Antichrist shall come, and according to the Apostle he is going to sit in the temple of God (II Thess. 2) and be slain by the breath of our Lord and Savior after he has waged war against the saints. And thus it shall come to pass that the middle of the week shall mark the confirmation of God's covenant with the saints, and the middle of the week in turn shall mark the issuing of the decree under the authority of Antichrist that no more sacrifices be offered. For the Antichrist shall set up the abomination of desolation, that is, an idol or statue of his own god, within the Temple. Then shall ensue the final devastation and the condemnation of the Jewish people, who after their rejection of Christ's truth shall embrace the lie of the Antichrist." Moreover this same Apollinarius asserts that he conceived this idea about the proper dating from the fact that Africanus, the author of the Tempora, whose explanation I have inserted above, affirms that the final week will occur at the end of the world. Yet, says Apollinarius, it is impossible that periods so linked together be wrenched apart, but rather the time-segments must all be joined together in conformity with Daniel's prophecy. The learned scholar Clement, presbyter of the church at Alexandria, regards the number of years as a matter of slight consequence, asserting that the seventy weeks of years were completed by the span of time from the reign of Cyrus, King of the Persians, to the reign of the Roman emperors, Vespasian and Titus; that is to say, the interval of four hundred and ninety years, with the addition in that same figure of the two thousand three hundred days of which we made earlier mention. He attempts to reckon in these seventy weeks the ages of the Persians, Macedonians, and Caesars, even though according to the most careful computation, the number of years from the first year of Cyrus, King of the Persians and Medes, when Darius also bore rule, up to the reign of Vespasian and the destruction of the Temple amounts to six hundred and thirty. When Origen came to deal with this chapter, he urged us to seek out what information we do not possess; and because he had no leeway for allegorical interpretation, in which one may argue without constraint, but rather was restricted to matters of historical fact, he made this brief observation in the tenth volume of the Stromata: "We must quite carefully ascertain the amount of time between the first year of Darius, the son of Ahasuerus, and the advent of Christ, and discover how many years were involved, and what events are said to have occurred during them. Then we must see whether we can fit these data in with the time of the Lord's coming."

We may learn what Tertullian had to say on the subject by consulting the book which he wrote against the Jews (Contra Judaeos), and his remarks may be set forth in brief: "How, then, are we to show that Christ came within the sixty-two weeks? This calculation begins with the first year of Darius, since that was the time when the vision itself was revealed to Daniel. For he was told: 'Understand and conclude from the prophesying of the command for me to give thee this reply...' Hence we are to commence our computation with the first year of Darius, when Daniel beheld this vision. Let us see, then, how the years are fulfilled up to the advent of Christ. Darius reigned nineteen years; Artaxerxes forty years; the Ochus who was surnamed Cyrus twenty-four years; Argus, one year. Then Darius II, who was called Melas, twenty-one years. Alexander the Macedonian reigned twelve years. And then after Alexander (who had ruled over both the Medes and the Persians, after he had conquered them, and had established his rule in Alexandria, calling it after his own name), Soter reigned there in Alexandria for thirty-five years, and was succeeded by Philadelphus, who reigned for thirty-eight years. After him Euergetes reigned for twenty-five years, and then Philopator for seventeen years, followed by Epiphanes for twenty-four years. Furthermore the second Euergetes ruled for twenty and nine years, and Soter for thirty-eight years. Ptolemy for thirty-seven years, and Cleopatra for twenty years and five months. Furthermore Cleopatra shared the rule with Augustus for thirteen years. After Cleopatra Augustus reigned forty-three years more. For all of the years of the reign of Augustus were fifty-six in number. And let us see (variant: we see) that in the forty-first year of the reign of Augustus, who ruled after the death of Cleopatra, Christ was born. And this same Augustus lived on for fifteen years after the time when Christ was born. And so the resultant periods of years up to the day of Christ's birth and the forty-first year of Augustus, after the death of Cleopatra, come to the total figure of four hundred and thirty-seven years and five months. This means that sixty-two and a half weeks were used up, or the equivalent of four hundred and thirty-seven years and six months, by the day when Christ was born. Then eternal righteousness was revealed, and the Saint of saints was anointed, namely Christ, and the vision and prophecy were sealed, and those sins were remitted which are allowed through faith in Christ's name to all who believe in Him." But what is the meaning of the statement that the "vision and prophecy are confirmed by a seal"? It means that all the prophets made proclamation concerning Himself, saying that He was going to come and that He would have to suffer. Hence we read shortly thereafter in this Tertullian passage, "The years were fifty-six in number; furthermore, Cleopatra continued to reign jointly under Augustus..." It was because the prophecy was fulfilled by His advent that the vision was confirmed by a seal; and it was called a prophecy because Christ Himself is the seal of all the prophets, fulfilling as He did all that the prophets had previously declared concerning Him. Of course after His advent and His passion (variant: the passion of Christ), there is no longer any vision or prophecy (variant: or prophet) which declares that Christ will come. And then a little later Tertullian says, "Let us see what is the meaning of the seven and a half weeks, which in turn are divided up into a subsection of earlier weeks; by what transaction were they fulfilled? Well, after Augustus, who lived on after Christ's birth, fifteen years elapsed. He was succeeded by Tiberius Caesar, and he held sway for twenty-two years, seven months and twenty-eight days. In the fifteenth year of his reign Christ suffered, being about thirty-three when He suffered. Then there was Gaius Caesar, also named Caligula, who reigned for three years, eight months and thirteen days. Nero reigned for nine years, nine months and thirteen days. Galba ruled for seven months and twenty-eight days; Otho for three months and five days; and Vitellius for eight months and twenty-eight days. Vespasian vanquished the Jews in the first year of his reign, bringing the number of years to a total of fifty-two, plus six months. For he ruled for eleven years, and so by the date of his storming Jerusalem, the Jews had completed the seventy weeks foretold by Daniel." As for the view which the Hebrews hold concerning this passage, I shall set it forth summarily and within a brief compass, leaving the credibility of their assertions to those who asserted them. And so let me put it in the form of a paraphrase (paraphrastikds) in order to bring out the sense more clearly. "O Daniel, know that from this day on which I now speak to thee (and that was the first year of the Darius who slew Belshazzar and transferred the Chaldean Empire to the Medes and Persians) unto the seventieth week of years (that is, four hundred and ninety years) the following events shall befall thy people in stages. First of all, God shall be appeased by thee in view of the earnest intercession thou hast just offered Him, and sin shall be canceled out and the transgression shall come to an end. For although the city at present lies deserted and the Temple lies destroyed to its very foundations, so that the nation is plunged into mourning, yet within a fairly short time it shall be restored. And not only shall it come to pass within these seventy weeks that the city shall be rebuilt and the Temple restored, but also the Christ, who is the eternal righteousness, shall be born. And so shall the vision and the prophecy be sealed, with the result that there shall be no more any prophet to be found in Israel, and the Saint of saints shall be anointed. We read concerning Him in the Psalter: 'Because God, even Thy God, hath anointed Thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows' (Psalm 45:7). And in another passage He says of Himself: 'Be ye holy, for I also am holy' (Lev. 19:2). Know therefore that from this day on which I speak to thee and make thee the promise by the word of the Lord that the nation shall return and Jerusalem shall be restored, there shall be sixty-two weeks numbered unto the time of Christ the Prince and of the perpetual desolation of the Temple; and that there shall also be seven weeks in which the two events shall take place which I have already mentioned, namely that the nation shall return and the street shall be rebuilt by Nehemiah and Ezra. And so at the end of the weeks the decree of God shall be accomplished in distressing times, when the Temple shall again be destroyed, and the city taken captive. For after the sixty-two weeks the Christ shall be slain, and the nation who shall reject Him shall go out of existence" - or, as the Jews themselves put it, the kingdom of Christ which they imagined they would retain shall not even be. And why do I speak of the slaying of Christ, and of the nation's utter forfeiture of God's help, since the Roman people were going to demolish the city and sanctuary under Vespasian, the leader who was to come? Upon his death the seven weeks or forty-nine years were complete, and after the city of Aelia was established upon the ruins of Jerusalem, Aelius Hadrian vanquished the revolting Jews in their conflict with the general, Timus Rufus. It was at that time that the sacrifice and offering (ceased and) will continue to cease even unto the completion of the age, and the desolation is going to endure until the very end. We are not, say the Jews, greatly impressed by the fact that the seven weeks are mentioned first, and afterwards the sixty-two, and again a single week divided into two parts. For it is simply the idiomatic usage of the Hebrew language, as well as of antique Latin, that in quoting a figure, the small number is given first and then the larger. For example, we do not, according to good usage say in our language, "Abraham lived a hundred and seventy-five years"; on the contrary the Hebrews say, "Abraham lived five and seventy and one hundred years". And so the fulfilment is not to follow the literal order of the words, but it shall be accomplished in terms of the whole sum, taken together. I am also well aware that some of the Jews assert that as for the statement about the single week, "He shall establish a covenant with many for one week," the division is between the reigns of Vespasian and Hadrian. According to the history of Josephus, Vespasian and Titus concluded peace with the Jews for three years and six month. And the three years and six months are accounted for in Hadrian's reign, when Jerusalem was completely destroyed and the Jewish nation was massacred in large groups at a time, with the result that they were even expelled from the borders of Judaea. This is what the Hebrews have to say on the subject, paying little attention to the fact that from the first year of Darius, King of the Persians, until the final overthrow of Jerusalem, which befell them under Hadrian, the period involved is a hundred and seventy-four Olympiads or six hundred ninety-six years, which total up to ninety-nine Hebrew weeks plus three years - that being the time when Barcochebas, the leader of the Jews, was crushed and Jerusalem was demolished to the very ground.

CHAPTER TEN

Verse 1. "In the third year of Cyrus, King of the Persians, a word was revealed unto Daniel, who was surnamed Belteshazzar, and it was a true word and great strength. For there is need of understanding in a vision." And how is it that we read at the end of the first vision, "And Daniel lived until the first year of Cyrus the King"? Well then, we understand that he enjoyed his former high position among the Chaldeans and was clothed in purple and fine linen right up until the first year of King Cyrus, when Cyrus overthrew the Chaldeans, and afterwards Daniel commenced service under Darius, the son of Ahasuerus of the Median line, who reigned over the kingdom of the Chaldeans. Or else, indeed, that Darius had already died in whose first year Daniel had learned of the mystery of the seventy weeks, and he is now relating that he beheld these things in the third year of King Cyrus. "And it was a true word and great strength" refers either to the strength of the God who was going to perform these things or to the strength of the prophet who would comprehend them.

Verses 2, 3. "In those days I, Daniel, mourned for the days of three weeks; I ate no desirable bread, and neither flesh or wine entered into my mouth; neither was I anointed with ointment until the days of three weeks were accomplished." By this example we are taught to abstain from the pleasanter types of food (I think that the term "desirable bread" is that inclusive) during a period of fasting, and that we neither eat flesh nor drink wine, and especially that we desire no anointing with ointments. This custom is maintained among the Persians and Indians even to this day, that they use ointment as a substitute for baths. Also, Daniel afflicted his soul for three consecutive weeks, so that his intercession might not appear cursory or casual. By inference, indeed, we ought to make the observation that a person in mourning who bemoans the absence of one betrothed partakes of no desirable bread though it comes down from heaven itself; neither does he touch solid food, which is to be understood in the sense of meat, nor does he drink any wine, which gladdens the heart of man, or make his face cheerful with oil (as we read in the Psalms: "That he may make the face cheerful with oil" Psalm 104:15). By means of such a fast as this the betrothed girl sheds tears which will be convincing, when her fiance has been taken from her. Daniel also did well to supplicate the Lord with boldness, inasmuch as in the first year of Cyrus's reign the captivity of the Jews had already been somewhat relaxed in its severity.

Verse 4. "And in the twenty-fourth day of the first month, I was beside the great river which is the Tigris." Ezekiel also had seen a great vision beside a river, the Chebar (Ezekiel 1:1). And it was by the stream of the Jordan that the heavens were opened to the gaze of our Lord and Savior and also to John the Baptist (Matthew 3:1-17). Therefore those critics should leave off their foolish objections who raise questions about the presence of shadows and symbols in a matter of historical truth and attempt to destroy the truth itself by imagining that they should employ allegorical methods to destroy the historicity of rivers and trees and of Paradise.

Verse 5. "And I lifted my eyes and saw." We must lift up our eyes if we are to be able to discern a mystical vision.

"And behold, a person clothed in linen." Instead of "linen," as Aquila rendered it, Theodotion simply puts baddim, whereas the Septuagint renders it as byssus, and Symmachus as exaireta (choice vestments), that is, "distinguished clothing" (praecipua). And instead of what we have rendered as, "Behold, a man," on the basis of the Hebrew text, Symmachus puts, "One like unto a man," inasmuch as he was not actually a man but only had the appearance of one.

"And his loins were girt about with pure gold." The Hebrew term for this is 'wpz or ophaz, a word which Aquila has rendered in this fashion: "And his loins were girt about with the color of ophax".

Verse 6. "And his body was like chrysolite." For "chrysolite," one of the twelve gems inserted in the oracular breastplate of the high priest, the Hebrew has trs'ys (tharsis) , a word which Theodotion and Symmachus simply left unchanged in transcription; but the Septuagint called it "the sea," according to the usage in the Psalms: "With a violent gale Thou dashest the ships of Tharsis in pieces," i.e., "the ships of the sea" (Psalm 48:7). Jonah, also, was desirous of fleeing, not to Tarsus, the Cilician city (as most people suppose, substituting one letter for another), nor to some region in India (as Josephus imagines), but simply out to the high seas in general (Jonah 1:3).

Verse 7. "And I, Daniel, alone saw the vision, for the men who were with me saw it not; but an exceeding great terror fell upon them, and they fled away and hid themselves." The Apostle Paul had a similar experience in the Book of Acts, in that while the others could see nothing, he alone beheld the vision (Acts 22:6-9).

Verse 10. "And behold, a hand touched me, and lifted me up upon my knees..." The angel appeared in the form of a man and laid his hand upon the human prophet as he lay upon the ground, in order that he might not be terrified, beholding a form like his own.

Verse 11. "And he said to me, 'Daniel, thou man of desires...'" It was fitting that he be addressed as a man of desires, for by dint of urgent prayer and affliction of body and the discipline of severe fasting he desired to learn of the future and to be informed of the secret counsels of God. Instead of "man of desires," Symmachus rendered it as "desirable man." The term is apt, for every saint possesses a beauty of soul and is beloved by the Lord.

Verse 12. "And he said to me: 'Fear not, Daniel, for from the first day when thou didst set thine heart to understand and to afflict thyself in the sight of thy God (variant: thy Lord), thy words have been heard and granted, and I have come forth in response to thy words" (Vulgate: on account of thy words). On the twenty-fourth day of the first month, that is, of Nisan, after three weeks or twenty-one days had elapsed, he beheld this vision, and he heard from the angel that on the very first day he had begun to pray and to afflict himself before God, his words had been heard and granted. The question arises why, if he had been heard, was the angel not sent to him right away. Well, by reason of the delay an opportunity was afforded him of praying to the Lord at greater length, so that in proportion as his earnest desire was intensified, he might by his effort the more fully deserve to hear. And as for the angel's statement, "And I have come in response to thy words," his meaning is this: "After thou didst begin to invoke God's mercy by good works and tearful supplication and fasting, then I for my part embraced the opportunity of entering in before God and praying for thee."

Verse 13. "But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me for twenty-one days." In my opinion this was the angel to whose charge Persia was committed, in accordance with what we read in Deuteronomy: "When the Most High divided the nations and distributed the children of Adam abroad, then He established the bounds of the nations according to the number of the angels of God" (Deuteronomy 32:8). These are the princes of whom Paul also says: "We speak forth among the perfect a wisdom which none of the princes of this world knew. For if they had known it, they would never have crucified the Lord of Glory" (1 Corinthians 2:6-8). And so the prince or angel of the Persians offered resistance, acting on behalf of the province entrusted to him, in order that the entire captive nation might not be released. And it may well be that although the prophet was graciously heard by God from the day when he set his heart to understand, the angel was nevertheless not sent to proclaim to him God's gracious decision, for the reason that the prince of Persia opposed him for twenty-one days, enumerating the sins of the Jewish people as a ground for their justly being kept in captivity and as proof that they ought not to be released.

"And behold, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to my assistance." That is, while the angel of the Persians was resisting thy petitions and my representations on thy behalf as I presented thy prayers to God, then there came to my assistance the angel Michael, who has oversight of the people of Israel. By chief princes we are of course to understand archangels.

"And I remained there close by the king of the Persians." He designates the angel or prince by the term "king of the Persians," and shows that he had tarried with Michael for a little as he spoke in opposition to the prince of the Persians.

Verse 14. "And I have come to teach thee what things shall befall thy people in the last days." The very petition which Daniel had requested is the thing which he deserves to hear from God, namely what is going to happen to the people of Israel, not in the near future, but in the last days, that is, at the end of the world.

Verse 16. "O my lord, at the sight of thee my joints are loosed..." Theodotion interprets it this way, in accordance with what we read in the One Hundred and Second Psalm: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless His holy name." (Psalm 103:1) For our inward nature must direct its gaze without, before we deserve to behold a vision of God; and when we actually have beheld a vision of God, then our inward nature is converted within us and we become wholly of the number of those concerning whom it is written in another Psalm: "All the glory of the daughter of kings is within, in golden borders" (Psalm 45:13).

Verse 19. "And as he spoke with me, I recovered strength and said, 'Speak, my Lord, for thou hast reassured me' And he said..." For unless the angel had reassured him by touching him like a son of man, so that his heart was freed of terror, he would not have been able to hearken to God's secrets. For that reason he now says, "Speak, for thou hast reassured me; for thou hast enabled me both to hear and understand what thou sayest."

Verse 20. "'Dost thou know why I have come to thee? And now I will return to fight against the prince of the Persians.'" What he means is this: I have indeed come to teach thee of the things thou hast received in answer to prayer; but I am going to return once more to contend against the prince of the Persians in the sight of God, for he is unwilling that thy people be released from captivity.

"For (Vulgate: Therefore) as I was coming away, the prince of the Greeks appeared and entered in (Vulgate: and came up)." He means, "I myself was departing from God's presence in order to announce to thee the events which are to befall thy people in the last days; and yet I am still not secure, since the prince of the Persians stands to plead against the granting of thy petitions and the acceptance of my advocacy on thy behalf. And behold, the prince of the Greeks, or Macedonians, had just come, and he entered in before God's presence to lodge accusation against the prince of the Medes and Persians, in order that the kingdom of the Macedonians might succeed in their place." Truly marvelous are the secret counsels of God, for it indeed came to pass that after the Jewish people had been freed from captivity, Alexander, king of the Macedonians, slew Darius and overthrew the kingdom of the Persians and Medes, so that the prince of the Greeks did overcome the prince of the Persians.

Verse 21. "Nevertheless I will relate to thee what has been set down in the Scripture of truth." That is, this is the order which the words follow. The fulfilment is still in doubt. For even though thou dost beseech the Lord and I present thy prayers to Him, yet the prince of the Persians takes his stand on the opposite side, and is unwilling that thy people be freed from captivity. But because the prince of the Greeks has come, and in the meantime is contending against the prince of the Persians, and also because I have Michael there as my assistant, I shall, during their mutual conflict, report to thee the coming events which God has foretold to me and has bidden me relate to thee. And let no one be disturbed by the question as to why mention is made of the prince of the Greeks or Hellenes rather than of the Macedonians, for Alexander, king of the Macedonians, did not take up arms against the Persians until he had first overthrown Greece and subjected it to his power.

"And no one is my helper in all these things except Michael, your prince." He implies, "I am that angel who presents thy prayers to God, and I have no other helper in petitioning God on your behalf except the archangel Michael, to whose charge the Jewish nation has been entrusted. And meanwhile the prince of the Greeks is engaged in a common effort with me at this particular time, contending against the prince of the Persians. We should review our ancient history and consider whether by any chance that was the date of the conquest of the Persians by the Greeks. According to the Vulgate edition (of the Septuagint), this same vision is reckoned as extending to the end of the book, that is, the vision which appeared to Daniel in the third year of Cyrus, King of the Persians. On the other hand, according to the Hebrew original, the ensuing sections are separate from this, and recorded in an inverted order. The causes for this phenomenon we have already mentioned; that is, the matters here recorded are related as having occurred in the first year of the Darius who overthrew Belshazzar, not in the third year of Cyrus.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Verse 1. "And from the first year of Darius the Mede, I stood up that he might be strengthened and confirmed." Daniel implies, "From the first year of the reign of Darius, who overthrew the Chaldeans and delivered me from the hand of my enemies to the extent of his ability (for even his sealing of the pit of lions with his signet ring was for my protection, lest my adversaries should slay me), I for my part stood before God, and I besought God's mercy upon him, in view of the man's love for me, in order that either he or his kingdom might be strengthened and confirmed. And since I persevered in my prayer, I was answered by God and given to understand the following information. After all, it is a customary thing with the prophets to bring in new speakers abruptly and without warning. So it is in Psalm Thirty-one: for when the prophet has petitioned God and said: "Thou art my refuge from my tribulation which compassed me about; O Thou, who art my rejoicing, deliver me from those who now encompass me," then God is abruptly brought in as the speaker, replying, "I will give thee understanding, and I will instruct thee in this way in which thou shalt go; I will fasten Mine eyes upon thee" (Psalm 32:7-8). So also here, as the prophet relates, "From the first year of Darius the Mede, I stood up and interceded that he might be strengthened and that his rule might be confirmed," God suddenly responds:

Verse 2. "And now I shall proclaim the truth to thee." And the meaning is this: "Because thou desirest to know what shall befall the kings of Persia, hearken thou to the order of events and hear the answer to thy request."

"And behold, three more kings shall arise in Persia, and the fourth shall be enriched exceedingly above them all, and when he shall have grown mighty through his wealth, he shall stir up all men against the kingdom of Greece." He states that four kings shall arise in Persia after Cyrus, namely Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, and the Magus named Smerdis, who married Pantaptes, the daughter of Cambyses. Then, when he was slain by seven Magi and Darius had succeeded to his throne, the same Pantaptes married Darius, and by him gave birth to Xerxes, who became a most powerful and wealthy king, and led an innumerable host against Greece and performed those deeds which are related by the Greek historians. For in the archonship of Callias he destroyed Athens by fire, and about that same time waged the war at Thermopylae and the naval battle at Salamis. It was in his time that Sophocles and Euripides became famous, and Themistocles fled in exile to Persia, where he died as a result of drinking the blood of a bull. And so that writer is in error who records as the fourth king that Darius who was defeated by Alexander, for he was not the fourth king, but the fourteenth king of the Persians after Cyrus. It was in the seventh year of his rule that Alexander defeated and slew him. Moreover it should be observed that after he has specified four kings of Persia after Cyrus, the author omits the nine others and passes right on to Alexander. For the Spirit of prophecy was not concerned about preserving historical detail but in summarizing only the most important matters.

Verses 3, 4. "But there shall rise up a strong king and shall rule with great power, and he shall do whatever he pleases. And when he shall have arisen, his kingdom shall be broken." He clearly refers to Alexander the Great, king of the Macedonians, and son of Philip. For after he had overcome the Illyrians and Thracians, and had conquered Greece and destroyed Thebes, he crossed over into Asia. And when he had routed Darius's generals and taken the city of Sardis, he afterwards captured India and founded the city of Alexandria. And then, when he had attained the age of thirty-two and the twelfth year of his reign, he died of poison.

"And it shall be divided towards the four winds of heaven, but not unto his own posterity nor according to his power with which he had borne rule." After Alexander his kingdom was divided towards the four winds, namely to the east, the west, the south, and the north. In Egypt, that is in the south, Ptolemy the son of Lagos was the first to become king. In Macedonia, that is in the west, the Philip who was also called Aridaeus, a brother of Alexander, became king. The king of Syria and Babylon and the remoter regions, that is, the east, was Seleucus Nicanor. Antigonus was king of Asia Minor and Pontus and of the other provinces in that whole area, that is, in the north. So much for the various regions of the world as a whole; but from the standpoint of Judea itself, the north would be Syria and the south would be Egypt. And as for the statement, "But not unto his own posterity," the implication is that Alexander would have no children, but rather, his kingdom would be rent asunder and fall to others who were not of his family, except of course for Philip, who kept Macedonia. Nor would it be according to the power of him who had borne rule, for the kingdom became feebler by division into four parts, for they constantly fought among themselves and raged with internecine fury.

"For his kingdom shall be rent in pieces (variant: destroyed), and that too among strangers besides these." Besides the four kingdoms of Macedonia, Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt, the kingdom of the Macedonians was torn asunder among other rulers of less prominence and among petty kings. The reference here is to Perdiccas and Craterus and Lysimachus, for Cappadocia, Armenia, Bithynia, Heracleia, Bosphorus and various other provinces withdrew themselves from the Macedonian power and set up various kings for themselves.

Verse 5. "And the king of the South shall be strengthened." The reference is to Ptolemy, son of Lagos, who was the first to become king in Egypt, and was a very clever, mighty and wealthy man, and possessed such power that he was able to restore Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, to his kingdom after he had been driven out, and also to seize Cyprus and Phoenicia. And after he had conquered Demetrius, the son of Antigonus, he restored to Seleucus that portion of his kingdom which Antigonus had taken away from him. He also acquired Caria and many islands, cities, and districts unnecessary to detail at this time. But no further notice is taken of the other kingdoms, Macedonia and Asia Minor, because Judaea lay in a midway position and was held now by one group of kings and now by another. And it is not the purpose of Holy Scripture to cover external history apart from the Jews, but only that which is linked up with the nation of Israel.

"And one of his princes shall prevail over him, and he shall rule with great power, for his dominion shall be great." The person mentioned is Ptolemy Philadelphus, the second king of Egypt and the son of the former Ptolemy. It was in his reign that the Seventy (Septuaginta) translators are said to have translated the Holy Scripture into Greek. He also sent many treasures to Jerusalem for the high priest Eleazar, and votive vessels for the Temple. The curator of his library was Demetrius of Phalerum, a man of reputation among the Greeks as an orator and philosopher. Philadelphus is reported to have possessed such great power as to surpass his father Ptolemy. For history relates that he possessed two hundred thousand infantrymen, twenty thousand cavalry, and even two thousand chariots and four hundred elephants, which he was the first to import from Ethiopia. He also had a thousand five hundred war galleys of the type now known as Liburnian, and a thousand others for the transporting of military provisions. So great was his treasure of gold and silver that he received a yearly revenue from Egypt amounting to fourteen thousand eight hundred talents of silver, as well as grain in the amount of five or ten hundred thousand artabae (a measure containing three and a half modii).

Verse 6. "And at the end of the years they shall be leagued together (or, as Theodotion renders: And after his years they shall be united). And the daughter of the king of the South shall come to the king of the North in order to make friendship, but she shall not obtain strength of arm nor shall her seed endure. And she herself shall be handed over, as well as her young men (Vulgate: youths) who brought her and who were strengthening her in (these) times." As we have already said, it was Seleucus, surnamed Nicanor, who first ruled over Syria. The second king was Antiochus, who was called Soter. The third was Antiochus himself, who was called Theos, that is the Divine. He was the one who waged numerous wars with Ptolemy Philadelphus, who was the second ruler in Egypt, and he also fought with all the Babylonians and the men of the East, And so after many years Ptolemy Philadelphus wished to have done with this vexatious struggle, and so he gave his daughter, named Berenice, in marriage to Antiochus, who had already had by a previous wife, named Laodice, two sons, namely Seleucus, surnamed Callinicus, and the other, Antiochus. And Philadelphus conducted her as far as Pelusium and bestowed countless thousands of gold and silver by way of a dowry, from which circumstance he acquired the nickname of phernophoros or Dowry-giver (dotalis). But as for Antiochus, even though he had said he would regard Berenice as his royal consort and keep Laodice in the status of a concubine, he was finally prevailed upon by his love for Laodice to restore her to the status of queen, along with her children. But she was fearful that her husband might in his fickleness restore Berenice to favor once more, and so she had him put to death by her servants with the use of poison. And she handed over Berenice and the son whom she had born by Antiochus to Icadio and Genneus, princes of Antiochus, and then set up her elder son, Seleucus Callinicus, as king in his father's place. And so this is the matter referred to in this passage, namely that after many years Ptolemy Philadelphus and Antiochus Theos would conclude a friendship, and the daughter of the king of the South, that is Ptolemy, would go to the king of the North, that is Antiochus, in order to cement friendly relations between her father and her husband. And the text says that she will not be able to gain her end, nor shall her posterity remain upon the throne of Syria, but instead both Berenice and the men who had escorted her thither shall be put to death. And also the king, Antiochus, who had strengthened her, that is, through whom she could have obtained the mastery, was killed by his wife's poison.

Verses 7-9. "And a plant of the bud of her roots shall arise, and he shall come with an army and shall invade the province of the king of the North. And he shall abuse them and shall prevail. And he shall also carry away captive into Egypt their gods and their sculptures and their precious vessels of gold and silver; he shall prevail against the king of the North. And the king of the South shall enter into the kingdom and shall return to his own land." After the murder of Berenice and the death of her father, Ptolemy Philadelphus, in Egypt, her brother, who was also named Ptolemy and surnamed Euergetes, succeeded to the throne as the third of his dynasty, being in fact an offshoot of the same plant and a bud of the same root as she was, inasmuch as he was her brother. He came up with a great army and advanced into the province of the king of the North, that is Seleucus Callinicus, who together with his mother Laodice was ruling in Syria, and abused them, and not only did he seize Syria but also took Cilicia and the remoter regions beyond the Euphrates and nearly all of Asia as well. And then, when he heard that a rebellion was afoot in Egypt, he ravaged the kingdom of Seleucus and carried off as booty forty thousand talents of silver, and also precious vessels and images of the gods to the amount of two and a half thousand. Among them were the same images which Cambyses had brought to Persia at the time when he conquered Egypt. The Egyptian people were indeed devoted to idolatry, for when he had brought back their gods to them after so many years, they called him Euergetes (Benefactor). And he himself retained possession of Syria, but he handed over Cilicia to his friend, Antiochus, that he might govern it, and the provinces beyond the Euphrates he handed over to Xanthippus, another general.

Verse 10. "And his sons shall be provoked, and they shall assemble a multitude of great armies, and he shall come with haste like a flood. And he shall return and be stirred up, and he shall join battle with his army." After the flight and death of Seleucus Callinicus, his two sons, the Seleucus surnamed Ceraunus and the Antiochus who was called the Great, were provoked by a hope of victory and of avenging their father, and so they assembled an army against Ptolemy Philopator and took up arms. And when the elder brother, Seleucus, was slain in Phrygia in the third year of his reign through the treachery of Nicanor and Apaturius, the army which was in Syria summoned his brother, Antiochus the Great, from Babylon to assume the throne. And so this is the reason why the present passage states that the two sons were provoked and assembled a multitude of very sizable armies. But it implies that Antiochus the Great came by himself from Babylon to Syria, which at that time was held by Ptolemy Philopator, the son of Euergetes and the fourth king to rule in Egypt. And after he had successfully fought with his generals, or rather had by the betrayal of Theodotius obtained possession of Syria (which had already been held by a succession of Egyptian kings), he became so emboldened by his contempt for Philopator's luxurious manner of life and for the magical arts which he was said to employ, that he took the initiative in attempting an invasion of Egypt itself.

Verses 11, 12. "And the king of the South, being provoked, shall go forth and shall prepare an exceeding great multitude, and a multitude shall be given into his hand. And he shall take a multitude, and his heart shall be lifted up, because (Vulgate: and) he shall cast down many thousands. But he shall not prevail." The Ptolemy surnamed Philopator, having lost Syria through the betrayal of Theodotius, gathered together a very great multitude and launched an invasion against Antiochus the Great, who now bears the title of king of the North, at the region where Egypt borders upon the province of Judaea. For owing to the nature of the region, this locality lies partly to the south and partly to the north. If we speak of Judaea, it lies to the north of Egypt and to the south of Syria. And so when he had joined battle near the town of Raphia at the gateway of Egypt, Antiochus lost his entire army and was almost captured as he fled through the desert. And after he had conceded the loss of Syria, the conflict was finally brought to an end upon the basis of a treaty and certain conditions of peace. And this is what the Scripture means here by the statement that Ptolemy Philopator "shall cast down many thousands" and yet shall not prevail. For he was unable to capture his adversary. The sequel now follows.

Verses 13, 14. "And the king of the North shall return and shall prepare a much greater multitude than before, and in the end of times and years he shall come in haste with a large army and great resources. And in those times many shall rise up against the king of the South." This indicates that Antiochus the Great, who despised the worthlessness of Ptolemy Philopator (for he had fallen desperately in love with a lute-player named Agathoclea and also her brother, retaining Agathocles himself as his concubine and afterwards appointing him as general of Egypt), assembled a huge army from the upper regions of Babylon. And since Ptolemy Philopator was now dead, Antiochus broke his treaty and set his army in motion against Philopator's four-year-old son, who was called Epiphanes. For so great was the dissoluteness and arrogance of Agathoclea, that those provinces which had previously been subjected to Egypt rose up in rebellion, and even Egypt itself was troubled with seditions. Moreover Philip, King of Macedon, and Antiochus the Great made peace with each other and engaged in a common struggle against Agathocles and Ptolemy Epiphanes, on the understanding that each of them should annex to his own dominion those cities of Ptolemy which lay nearest to them. And so this is what is referred to in this passage, which says that many shall rise up against the king of the South, that is, Ptolemy Epiphanes, who was then a mere child.

"Moreover the children of the transgressors of thy people shall lift themselves up, that they may fulfil the vision, and then fall to ruin (Vulgate: and they shall fall to ruin)." During the conflict between Antiochus the Great and the generals of Ptolemy, Judaea, which lay between them, was rent into contrary factions, the one group favoring Antiochus, and the other favoring Ptolemy. Finally the high priest, Onias, fled to Egypt, taking a large number of Jews along with him, and was given by Ptolemy an honorable reception. He then received the region known as Heliopolis, and by a grant of the king, he erected a temple in Egypt like the temple of the Jews, and it remained standing up until the reign of Vespasian, over a period of two hundred and fifty years. But then the city itself, which was known as the City of Onias, was destroyed to the very ground because of the war which the Jews had subsequently waged against the Romans. There is consequently no trace of either city or temple now remaining. But as we were saying, countless multitudes of Jews fled to Egypt on the occasion of Onias's pontificate, and the land was filled with a large number from Cyrene as well. For Onias affirmed that he was fulfilling the prophecy written by Isaiah: "There shall be an altar of the Lord in Egypt, and the name of the Lord shall be found in their territories" (Isaiah 19:19). And so this is the matter referred to in this passage: "The sons of the transgressors of thy people," who forsook the law of the Lord and wished to offer blood-sacrifices to God in another place than what He had commanded. They would be lifted up in pride and would boast that they were fulfilling the vision, that is, the thing which the Lord had enjoined. But they shall fall to ruin, for both temple and city shall be afterwards destroyed. And while Antiochus held Judaea, a leader of the Ptolemaic party called Scopas Aetholus was sent against Antiochus, and after a bold campaign he took Judaea and took the aristocrats of Ptolemy's party back to Egypt with him on his return.

Verses 15, 16. "And the king of the North shall come, and shall cast up a mound and capture the best fortified cities, and the arms of the South shall not withstand. And his chosen ones shall rise up to resist, and they shall have no strength. And he shall come upon him and do according to his own desire, and there shall be none to stand against his face. And he shall stand in the glorious land and it shall be consumed by his hand." Purposing to retake Judaea and the many cities of Syria, Antiochus joined battle with Scopas, Ptolemy's general, near the sources of the Jordan near where the city now called Paneas was founded, and he put him to flight and besieged him in Sidon together with ten thousand of his soldiers. In order to free him, Ptolemy dispatched the famous generals, Eropus, Menocles and Damoxenus (Vulgate: Damoxeus). Yet he was unable to lift the siege, and finally Scopas, overcome by famine, had to surrender and was sent away with his associates, despoiled of all he had. And as for the statement, "He shall cast up a mound," this indicates that Antiochus is going to besiege the garrison of Scopas in the citadel of Jerusalem for a long time, while the Jews add their exertions as well. And he is going to capture other cities which had formerly been held by the Ptolemaic faction in Syria, Cilicia and Lycia (variant: Lydia). For at that time Aphrodisias, Soloe, Zephron, Mallos, Anemurium (variant: Anemurum), Selenus, Coracesium, Coricus, Andriace, Lymira, Patara (variant: Patra), Xanthus, and finally Ephesus were all captured. These things are related by both Greek and Roman historians. And as for the statement, "And he shall stand in the glorious land, and it shall be consumed (or, finished) by his hand," the term "glorious land," or, as the Septuagint interprets it, "the land of desire" (that is, in which God takes pleasure) signifies Judaea, and particularly Jerusalem, to which Antiochus pursued those men of Scopas's party who had been honorably received there. Instead of the phrase, "glorious land," as Aquila rendered it, Theodotion simply puts the Hebrew word itself, Sabin; instead of that Symmachus translated it "land of bravery."

Verses 17-19. "And he shall set his face to come and possess all his kingdom, and he shall make upright conditions with him. And he shall give him the daughter of women, that she may overthrow him" (Vulgate: it). That is to say, the intention is to overthrow him, that is, Ptolemy, or else to overthrow it, that is, his kingdom. Antiochus not only wished to take possession of Syria, Cilicia, and Lycia, and the other provinces which had belonged to Ptolemy's party, but also to extend his empire to Egypt. He therefore used the good offices of Eucles of Rhodes to betroth his daughter, Cleopatra, to young Ptolemy in the seventh year of his reign; and in his thirteenth year she was given to him in marriage, professedly endowed with all of Coele-syria and Judaea as her marriage-portion. By pleonasm she is called a daughter of women, just as the poet says:

...Thus she spake with her mouth... And with these ears did I drink in her voice.

"And she shall not stand, neither shall she be for him. And he shall turn his face to the islands and shall capture many; and she shall cause the prince of her reproach to cease, and his reproach shall be turned upon him. And he shall turn his face to the empire of his own land; and he shall stumble and fall, and shall not be found." For he was unable to take possession of Egypt, because Ptolemy Epiphanes and his generals detected the strategem and followed a cautious policy. And besides, Cleopatra inclined more to her husband's side than to her father's. And so he turned his attention to Asia Minor, and by carrying on naval warfare against a large number of islands, he seized Rhodes, Samos, Colophon (variant: Colophonias and Bocla), Phocaea and many other islands. But he was opposed by Lucius Scipio Nasica and also his brother, Publius Scipio Africanus, who had vanquished Hannibal. For since the consul Nasica, the brother of Africanus, was of a somewhat sluggish disposition, the Roman senate was unwilling to entrust to him a war against so mighty a king as Antiochus. Africanus therefore offered to assume the post of deputy on a voluntary basis, in order to obviate any damage that his brother might cause. Consequently Antiochus was vanquished and commanded to confine his rule to the other side of the Taurus range. And so he took refuge in Apamia and Susa and advanced to the easternmost cities of his realm. And during a war against the Elymaeans he was destroyed together with his entire army. And so this is what the Scripture refers to in this passage, when it states that he would capture many islands, and yet because of the Roman conqueror he would lose the kingdom of Asia; and that the disgrace he had inflicted would come back upon his own head; and that in the end he would flee from Asia Minor and return to the empire of his own land, and would then stumble and fall, so that his place would not be found.

Verse 20. "And there shall stand up in his place one most vile and unworthy of kingly honor, and in a few days he shall be destroyed, not in rage nor in a battle." The reference is to the Seleucus surnamed Philopator, the son of Antiochus the Great, who during his reign performed no deeds worthy of Syria or of his father, but perished ingloriously without fighting a single battle. Porphyry, however, claims that it was not this Seleucus who is referred to, but rather Ptolemy Epiphanes, who contrived a plot against Seleucus and prepared an army to fight against him, with the result that Seleucus was poisoned by his own generals. They did this because when someone asked Seleucus where he was going to get the financial resources for the great enterprises he was planning, he answered that his financial resources consisted in his friends. When this remark was publicly noised abroad, the generals became apprehensive that he would deprive them of their property and for that reason did him to death by nefarious means. Yet how could Ptolemy be said to rise up in the place of Antiochus the Great, since he did nothing of the sort? This is especially improbable since the Septuagint translated: "And there shall stand up a plant from his root," that is, "of his issue and seed," who should deal a severe blow to the prestige of the empire; "and within a few days he shall be destroyed without wrath or battle." The Hebrews claim that it is Trypho who was intended by the man who was most vile and unworthy of kingly honor, for as the boy-king's guardian he seized the throne for himself.

Verse 24. "And there shall stand up in his place one despised, and the kingly honor shall not be given him; and he shall come privately and shall obtain the kingdom by fraud. And the arms of the fighter shall be overcome before his face and shall be broken, and the prince of the covenant as well. And after friendly advances he shall deal deceitfully with him, and shall go up and shall overcome with a small people. And he shall enter into rich and prosperous cities, and shall do things which his fathers never did, nor his fathers' fathers. He shall scatter their spoil and their booty and their wealth, and shall undertake plots against the best fortified cities, and shall continue thus for a time." Up to this point the historical order has been followed, and there has been no point of controversy between Porphyry and those of our side (variant: and us). But the rest of the text from here on to the end of the book he interprets as applying to the person of the Antiochus who was surnamed Epiphanes, the brother of Seleucus and the son of Antiochus the Great. He reigned in Syria for eleven years after Seleucus, and he seized Judaea, and it is under his reign that the persecution of God's Law is related, and also the wars of the Maccabees. But those of our persuasion believe all these things are spoken prophetically of the Antichrist who is to arise in the end time. But this factor appears to them as a difficulty for our view, namely the question as to why the prophetic discourse should abruptly cease mention of these great kings and shift from Seleucus to the end of the world. The answer is that in the earlier historical account where mention was made of the Persian kings, only four kings of Persia were presented, following after Cyrus, and many who came in between were simply skipped over, so as to come quickly to Alexander, king of the Macedonians. We hold that it is the practice of Scripture not to relate all details completely, but only to set forth what seems of major importance. Those of our school insist also that since many of the details which we are subsequently to read and explain are appropriate to the person of Antiochus, he is to be regarded as a type of the Antichrist, and those things which happened to him in a preliminary way are to be completely fulfilled in the case of the Antichrist. We hold that it is the habit of Holy Scripture to set forth by means of types the reality of things to come, in conformity with what is said of our Lord and Savior in the Seventy-first Psalm, a psalm which is noted at the beginning as being Solomon's, and yet not all the statements which are made concerning can be applied to Solomon. For certainly he neither endured "together with the sun and before the moon from generation to generation," (Psalm 72:5) nor did he hold sway from sea to sea, or from the River unto the ends of the earth; neither did all the nations serve him, nor did his name endure before the sun; neither were all the tribes of earth blessed in him, nor did all races magnify him. But in a partial way these things were set forth in advance, by shadows as it were, and by a mere symbol of the reality, in the person of Solomon, in order that they might be more perfectly fulfilled in our Lord and Savior. And so, just as the Savior had Solomon and the other saints as types of His advent, so also we should believe that the Antichrist very properly had as a type of himself the utterly wicked king, Antiochus, who persecuted the saints and defiled the Temple. Let us therefore follow along with the explanation point by point, and let us briefly observe in the case of each item what it signifies to those of the other school of thought and what it signifies to those of our school, in accordance with each of the two explanations. Our opponents say that the one who was to "stand up in the place of" Seleucus was his brother, Antiochus Epiphanes. The party in Syria who favored Ptolemy would not at first grant him the kingly honor, but he later secured the rule of Syria by a pretense of clemency. And as Ptolemy fought and laid everything waste, his arms were overcome and broken before the face of Antiochus. Now the word arms implies the idea of strength, and therefore also the host of any army is known as a hand. And not only does the text say that he conquered Ptolemy by fraud, but also the prince of the covenant he overcame by treachery, that is, Judas Maccabaeus. Or else this is what is referred to, that after he had secured peace with Ptolemy and he had become the prince of the covenant, he afterwards devised a plot against him. Now the Ptolemy meant here was not Epiphanes, who was the fifth Ptolemy to reign in Egypt, but Ptolemy Philometor, the son of Antiochus' sister, Cleopatra; and so Antiochus was his maternal uncle. And when after Cleopatra's death Egypt was ruled by Eulaius, the eunuch who was Philometor's tutor, and by Leneus, and they were attempting to regain Syria, which Antiochus had fraudulently seized, warfare broke out between the boy Ptolemy and his uncle. And when they joined battle between Pelusium and Mt. Casius, Ptolemy's generals were defeated. But then Antiochus showed leniency towards the boy, and making a pretense of friendship, he went up to Memphis and there received the crown after the Egyptian manner. Declaring that he was looking out for the lad's interests, he subjected all Egypt to himself with only a small force of men, and he entered into rich and prosperous cities. And so he did things which his father had never done, nor his fathers' fathers. For none of the kings of Syria had ever laid Egypt waste after this fashion and scattered all their wealth. Moreover he was so shrewd that he even overcame by his deceit the well-laid plans of those who were the boy-king's generals. This is the line of interpretation which Porphyry followed, pursuing the lead of Sutorius with much redundancy, discoursing of matters which we have summarized within a brief compass. But the scholars of our viewpoint have made a better and correcter interpretation, stating that the deeds are to be performed by the Antichrist at the end of the world. It is he who is destined to arise from a small nation, that is from the Jewish people, and shall be so lowly and despised that kingly honor will not be granted him. But by means of intrigue and deception he shall secure the government and by him shall the arms of the fighting nation of Rome be overcome and broken. He is to effect this result by pretending to be the prince of the covenant, that is, of the Law and Testament of God. And he shall enter into the richest of cities and shall do what his fathers never did, nor his fathers' fathers. For none of the Jews except the Antichrist has ever ruled over the whole world. And he shall form a design against the firmest resolves of the saints and shall do everything for a time, for as long as God's will shall have permitted him to do these things.

Verses 25, 26. "And his strength and his heart shall be stirred up against the king of the South with a great army. And the king of the South shall be aroused to war with many and very strong auxiliary forces; and they shall not stand, for they shall form designs against him. And they that eat bread with him shall destroy him, and his army shall be crushed, and many shall fall down slain." Porphyry interprets this as applying to Antiochus, who set forth with a great army on a campaign against his sister's son. But the king of the South, that is the generals of Ptolemy, were also roused to war with many and very powerful auxiliary forces, but they could not stand against the fraudulent schemes of Antiochus. For he pretended to be at peace with his sister's son and ate bread with him, and afterwards he took possession of Egypt. But those of our view with greater plausibility interpret all this as applying to the Antichrist, for he is to be born of the Jewish people and come from Babylon, and is first of all going to vanquish the king of Egypt, who is one of the three horns of which we have already spoken earlier.

Verses 27-30. "And the heart of the two kings shall be to do evil, and they speak falsehood at one table, and they shall not prosper, because as yet the end is unto another time. And he shall return into his land with much riches." There is no doubt but what Antiochus did conclude a peace with Ptolemy and ate at the same table with him and devised plots against him, and yet without attaining any success thereby, since he did not obtain his kingdom but was driven out by Ptolemy's soldiers. But it cannot be proved from this set of facts that the statement of this Scripture was ever fulfilled by past history, namely that there were two kings whose hearts were deceitful and who inflicted evil upon each other. Actually, Ptolemy was a mere child of tender years and was taken in by Antiochus' fraud; how then could he have plotted evil against him? And so our party insist that all these things refer to the Antichrist and to the king of Egypt whom he has for the first time overcome.

"And his heart shall be against the holy covenant, and he shall succeed and return into his own land. At the time appointed he shall return and shall come to the South; but the latter time shall not be like the former. And the galleys shall come upon him, and the Romans, and he shall be dealt a heavy blow." Or, as another has rendered it, "...and they shall threaten him with attack." Both the Greek and the Roman historians relate that after Antiochus had been expelled from Egypt and had gone back once more, he came to Judaea, that is, against the holy covenant, and that he despoiled the Temple and removed a huge amount of gold; and then, having stationed a garrison in the citadel, he returned to his own land. And then two years later he gathered an army against Ptolemy and came to the South. And while he was besieging his two nephews, the brothers of Ptolemy and sons of Cleopatra, at Alexandria, some Roman envoys arrived on the scene, one of whom was Marcus Popilius Laenas. And when he had found Antiochus standing on the shore and had conveyed the senatorial decree to him by which he was ordered to withdraw from those who were friends of the Roman people and to content himself with his own domain, then Antiochus delayed his reply in order to consult with his friends. But Laenas is said to have made a circle in the sand with the staff which he held in his hand, and to have drawn it around the king, saying, "The senate and people of Rome give order for you to make answer in this very spot as to what your decision is." At these words Antiochus was greatly alarmed and said, "If this is the good pleasure of the senate and people of Rome, then I must withdraw." And so he immediately set his army in motion. But he is said to have been dealt a heavy blow, not that he was killed but that he lost all of his proud prestige. As for the Antichrist, there is no question but what he is going to fight against the holy covenant, and that when he first makes war against the king of Egypt, he shall straightway be frightened off by the assistance of the Romans. But these events were typically prefigured under Antiochus Epiphanes, so that this abominable king who persecuted God's people foreshadows the Antichrist, who is to persecute the people of Christ. And so there are many of our viewpoint who think that Domitius Nero was the Antichrist because of his outstanding savagery and depravity.

"And he shall return and shall be angry at the covenant of the sanctuary, and he shall succeed; and he shall return and take thought concerning (Vulgate: against) those who have abandoned the covenant of the sanctuary." We read of these matters at greater length in the exploits of the Maccabees (1 Maccabees 1:20-64), where we learn that after the Romans expelled him from Egypt, he came in anger against the covenant of the sanctuary and was welcomed by those who had forsaken the law of God and taken part in the religious rites of the Gentiles. But this is to be more amply fulfilled under the Antichrist, for he shall become angered at the covenant of God and devise plans against those whom he wishes to forsake the law of God. And so Aquila has rendered in a more significant way: "And he shall devise plans to have the compact of the sanctuary abandoned."

Verse 31. "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall defile (Vulgate: that (?) they may defile) the sanctuary of strength, and they shall take away the continual sacrifice, and shall place there the abomination unto desolation." Instead of "arms," another writer has rendered it as "seed," so as to imply descendants and progeny. But those of the other viewpoint claim that the persons mentioned are those who were sent by Antiochus two years after he had plundered the Temple in order to exact tribute from the Jews, and also to eliminate the worship of God, setting up an image of Jupiter Olympius in the Temple at Jerusalem, and also statues of Antiochus himself. These are described as the abomination of desolation, having been set up when the burnt offering and continual sacrifice were taken away. But we on our side contend that all these things took place in a preliminary way as a mere type of the Antichrist, who is destined to seat himself in the Temple of God, and make himself out to be as God. The Jews, however, would have us understand these things as referring, not to Antiochus Epiphanes or the Antichrist, but to the Romans, of whom it was earlier stated, "And war galleys shall come," whether Italian or Roman, "and he shall be humbled." Considerably later, says the text, a king, Vespasian, shall emerge from the Romans themselves, who had come to Ptolemy's assistance and threatened Antiochus. It is his arms or descendants who would rise up, namely his son Titus, who with his army would defile the sanctuary and remove the continual sacrifice and devote the temple to permanent desolation. By the terms siim (Siyyim) and chethim (Kittiyim), which we have rendered as "galleys" and "Romans," the Jews would have us understand "Italians" and "Romans."

Verse 32. "And ungodly men shall deceitfully dissemble against the covenant. But the people who know their God shall prevail and succeed." And in Maccabees we read that there were some who, to be sure, pretended that they were custodians of God's law, and later they came to terms with the Gentiles; yet the others adhered to their religion. But in my opinion this will take place in the time of the Antichrist, when the love of many shall wax cold. It is concerning these people that our Lord says in the Gospel, "Dost thou think that the Son of man, when He comes, will find faith upon the earth?" (Luke 18:8).

Verse 33. "And they that are learned among the people shall teach many and they shall fall by the sword and by fire and by captivity and by spoil for many days." The books of Maccabees relate the great sufferings the Jews endured at the hands of Antiochus and they stand as a testimony of their triumph; for they endured fire and sword, slavery and rapine, and even the ultimate penalty of death itself for the sake of guarding the law of God. But let no one doubt that these things are going to happen under the Antichrist, when many shall resist his authority and flee away in various directions. The Jews, of course, interpret these things as taking place at the destruction of the Temple, which took place under Vespasian and Titus, and they claim that there were very many of their nation who knew their Lord and were slain for keeping His law.

Verses 34, 35. "And when they shall have fallen, they shall be relieved with a small help; and many shall be joined to them deceitfully. And some of the learned shall fall, that they may be refined as by fire and that they may be chosen and made white even to the time before appointed, because there shall yet be another time." Porphyry thinks that the "little help" was Mattathias of the village of (variant: mountain of) Modin, for he rebelled against the generals of Antiochus and attempted to preserve the worship of the true God (1 Maccabees 2:1-41). He says he is called a little help because Mattathias was slain in battle; and later on his son Judas, who was called Maccabaeus, also fell in the struggle; and the rest of his brothers were likewise taken in by the deceit of their adversaries. Consult the books of Maccabees for the details. And all these events took place, he asserts, for the purpose of testing and choosing out the saints, that they might be made white until the time before appointed, inasmuch as victory was deferred until another time. Our writers, however, would have it understood that the small help shall arise under the reign of the Antichrist, for the saints shall gather together to resist him, and afterwards a great number of the learned shall fall. And this shall take place in order that they may be refined as by fire in the furnace, and that they may be made white and may be chosen out, until the time before determined arrives - for the true victory shall be won at the coming of Christ. Some of the Jews understand these things as applying to the princes Severus and Antoninus, who esteemed the Jews very highly. But others understand the Emperor Julian as the one referred to; for after they had been oppressed by Gaius Caesar and had steadfastly endured such suffering in the afflictions of their captivity, Julian rose up as one who pretended love for the Jews, promising that he would even offer sacrifice in their temple. They were to enjoy a little help from him, and a great number of the Gentiles were to join themselves to their party, although falsely and insincerely. For it would only be for the sake of their own idolatrous religion that they would pretend friendship to the Jews. And they would do this in order that those who were approved might be made manifest. For the time of their true salvation and help will be the coming of the Christ; for the Jews mistakenly imagine that he (i.e., their Messiah) is yet to come, for they are going to receive the Antichrist (when he comes) (1 Corinthians 11).

Verse 36. "And the king shall do according to his will, and he shall be lifted up and shall magnify himself against every god; and he shall speak arrogant words against the God of gods, and shall manage successfully until the wrath be accomplished (Vulgate: indignation); for the determination is made." Or else, as another has translated it: "for in him shall be the consummation." The Jews believe that this passage has reference to the Antichrist, alleging that after the small help of Julian a king is going to rise up who shall do according to his own will and shall lift himself up against all that is called god, and shall speak arrogant words against the God of gods. He shall act in such a way as to sit in the Temple of God and shall make himself out to be God, and his will shall be prospered until the wrath of God is fulfilled, for in him the consummation will take place. We too understand this to refer to the Antichrist. But Porphyry and the others who follow his lead suppose the reference to be to Antiochus Epiphanes, pointing out that he did raise himself up against the worship of God, and pushed his arrogance so far as to command his own statue to be set up in the Temple in Jerusalem. And as for the subsequent statement, "And he shall manage successfully until the wrath be accomplished, for the consummation shall be in him," they understand it to mean that his power will endure until such time as God becomes angry at him and orders him to be killed. For indeed Polybius and Diodorus, who composed the histories of the Bibliothecae (Libraries), relate that Antiochus not only took measures against the God of Judaea, but also was impelled by an all-consuming avarice to attempt the plunder of the temple of Diana in Elymais, because it was so wealthy. But he was so beset by the temple guard and the neighboring populace, and also by certain fearful apparitions, that he became demented and finally died of illness. And the historians record that this befell him because he had attempted to plunder the temple of Diana. But we for our part maintain that even though this thing befell him, it did so because he had perpetrated great cruelty upon the saints of God and had defiled His Temple. For we ought not to suppose that it was because of something he only attempted to do but from which he then desisted by an act of repentance, but rather because of something he actually did he was punished.

Verses 37-39. "And he shall make no account of the god of his fathers, and he shall be engrossed in lust for women; nor shall he have regard for any of the gods, for he shall rise up against everything. But he shall worship the god Maozim in his place, and a god which his fathers knew not shall he worship with gold and silver and precious stones and things of great price. And he shall take measures to fortify Maozim, together with a strange god whom he has acknowledged. And he shall increase glory and shall grant them power over many and shall divide the land as a free gift." Instead of our rendering, the Septuagint translates: "...and he will not be subject to the lusts of women." And again, instead of "the god Maozim (m'dym)," as the Hebrew has it, Aquila renders, "the God of mighty powers (fortitudinum)," whereas the Septuagint says, "the most mighty God." But because there is an ambiguity of position in the Hebrew original of the phrase we rendered by, "And he shall be engrossed in lust for women," Aquila renders it simply word for word (in Greek): "And he shall have no understanding with regard to the god of his fathers, and in regard to the desire of women and in regard to every god he shall have no understanding"; that is (in Latin): "And concerning the god of his fathers he shall not understand, and concerning the lust for women, and concerning every god he shall not understand." There are two interpretations current concerning these words, that he cherished lust for women, and that he cherished no lust for them. If we read it one way and understand it as an apo koinou: "And he shall have no knowledge concerning a lust for women," then it is more easily applied to the Antichrist; i.e., that he will assume a pretense of chastity in order to deceive many. But if we read it in this fashion: "And occupied with lust for women," understanding, "...he shall be," then it is more appropriate to the character of Antiochus. For he is said to have been an egregious voluptuary, and to have become such a disgrace to the dignity of kingship through his lewdness and seductions, that he publicly had intercourse with actresses and harlots, and satisfied his sexual passions in the presence of the people. As for the god Maozim, Porphyry has offered an absurd explanation, asserting that Antiochus's generals set up a statue of Jupiter in the village of Modin, from which came Mattathias and his sons; moreover they compelled the Jews to offer blood-sacrifices to it, that is, to the god of Modin. The next statement, "...and he shall worship a god whom his fathers did not know" is more appropriate to the Antichrist than to Antiochus. For we read that Antiochus held to the religion of the idols of Greece and compelled the Jews and Samaritans to worship his own gods. Likewise in regard to the statement, "...and he shall take measures to fortify Maozim, together with a strange god whom he has acknowledged; and he shall increase glory and grant them power over many, and shall divide the land as a free gift," Theodotion has interpreted as follows: "And he shall conduct these affairs so as to fortify garrisons with a strange god, and with them he shall manifest and increase glory; and he shall cause them to bear rule over many and divide up the land as a free gift." Symmachus rendered it "refuges" instead of "garrisons." Porphyry explained this as meaning that the man is going to fortify the citadel in Jerusalem and will station garrisons in the rest of the cities, and will instruct the Jews to worship a strange god, which doubtless means Jupiter. And displaying the idol to them, he will persuade them that they should worship it. Then he will bestow upon the deluded both honor and very great glory, and he shall deal with the rest who have borne rule in Judaea, and apportion estates unto them in return for their falsehood, and shall distribute gifts. The Antichrist likewise is going to make lavish bestowal of many rewards upon those whom he has deceived, and will divide up the land to his soldiery. And those whom he will not be able to subject to himself by fear he will subject through their cupidity.

Verses 40, 41. "And at the predetermined time the king of the South shall war against him, and the king of the North shall come against him like a tempest with chariots, with horsemen and with a great navy; and he shall invade lands and destroy them and pass through. And he shall enter into the glorious land, and many shall fall." Theodotion rendered: "...and many shall be enfeebled." And according to Aquila, the many that fell are to be understood as cities or districts or provinces. This too is referred by Porphyry to Antiochus, on the ground that in the eleventh year of his reign he warred for a second time against his nephew, Ptolemy Philometor. For when the latter heard that Antiochus had come, he gathered many thousands of soldiery. But Antiochus invaded many lands like a mighty tempest, with his chariots and horsemen and large navy, and laid everything waste as he passed through. And he came to the glorious land, that is, Judaea, which Symmachus rendered as "land of strength." In place of this Theodotion used the Hebrew word itself, Sabai (variants: Sabam and Saba) (sby). And Antiochus used the ruins of the wall of the city to fortify the citadel, and thus he continued on his way to Egypt. But those of our viewpoint refer these details also to the Antichrist, asserting that he shall first fight against the king of the South, or Egypt, and shall afterwards conquer Libya and Ethiopia, for these constitute the three broken horns about which we read previously. And then he shall come to the land of Israel, and many cities or provinces shall be given into his hands.

"And only these cities shall be saved from his hands: Edom, Moab, and the principality of the children of Ammon." They say that in his haste to fight Ptolemy, the king of the South, Antiochus left untouched the Idumaeans, Moabites, and Ammonites, who dwelt to the side of Judaea, lest he should make Ptolemy the stronger by engaging in some other campaign. The Antichrist also is going to leave Idumaea, Moab, and the children of Ammon (i.e., Arabia) untouched, for the saints are to flee thither to the deserts.

Verses 42, 43. "And he shall lay his hand upon the lands, and the land of Egypt shall not escape; and he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt. And likewise he shall pass through the Libyans (Vulgate: Libya and Ethiopia) and the Ethiopians." We read that Antiochus partially accomplished this. But as for the added detail, "He shall pass through the Libyans and Ethiopians," our school insists that this is more appropriate to the Antichrist. For Antiochus never held Libya, which most writers understand to be North Africa, nor Ethiopia; unless, of course, his capture of Egypt involved the harrassment of those provinces of Egypt which lay in the same general region as Ethiopia, and which lay as distant neighbors to it, on the other side of the deserts. Hence there is no assertion of his conquering them, but only the statement that he passed through the Libyans and the Ethiopians.

Verses 44, 45. "And tidings from the East and from the North shall trouble him. And he shall come thither with a great host to destroy and slay very many. And he shall pitch his tent in Apedno between the two seas, upon the famous and holy mountain; and he shall come even unto its summit, and none shall help him." Even for this passage Porphyry has some nebulous application to Antiochus, asserting that in his conflict with the Egyptians, Libyans, and Ethiopians, passing through them he was to hear of wars which had been stirred up against him in the North and the East. Thence he was to turn back and overcome the resistance of the Aradians, and lay waste the entire province along the coastline of Phoenicia. And then he was to proceed without delay against Artaxias, the king of Armenia, who was moving down from the regions of the East, and having slain a large number of his troops, he would pitch his tent in the place called Apedno which is located between the two broadest rivers, the Tigris and the Euphrates. But it is impossible to state upon what famous and holy mountain he took his seat, after he had proceeded to that point. After all, it cannot be shown that he took up his seat between two seas, and it would be foolish to interpret the two seas as being the two rivers of Mesopotamia. But Porphyry gets around this famous mountain by following the rendering of Theodotion, who said: "...upon the sacred Mount Saba between the two seas." And even though he supposes that Saba was the name of a mountain in Armenia or Mesopotamia, he cannot explain why it was holy. To be sure, if we assume the right of making things up, we can add the detail which Porphyry fails to mention, that the mountain, forsooth, was called holy, because it was consecrated to idols in conformity with the superstition of the Armenians. The account then says: "And he shall come even unto the summit of that same mountain," - supposedly in the province of Elam, which is the easternmost Persian area. And there when he purposed to plunder the temple of Diana, which contained countless sums of money, he was routed by the barbarians, for they honored that shrine with a remarkable veneration. And Antiochus, being overcome with grief, died in Tabes, a town in Persia. By use of a most artificial line of argument Porphyry has concocted these details as an affront to us; but even though he were able to prove that these statements applied to Antiochus instead of the Antichrist, what does that matter to us? For do we not on the basis of all the passages of Scripture prove the coming of Christ and the falsehood of the Antichrist? For assume that these things did refer to Antiochus, what injury does that inflict upon our religious faith? Is it not true that in the earlier vision also, which contained a prophecy fulfilled in Antiochus, there is some reference to the Antichrist? And so let Porphyry banish his doubts and stick to manifest facts. Let him explain the meaning of that rock which was hewn from the mountain without hands, and which grew to be a great mountain and filled the earth, and which smashed to pieces the fourfold image. And let him say who that Son of man is who is going to come with clouds and stand before the Ancient of Days and have bestowed upon him a kingdom which shall never come to an end, and who is going to be served by all nations, tribes, and language-groups. Porphyry ignores these things which are so very clear and maintains that the prophecy refers to the Jews, although we are well aware that they are to this very day in a state of bondage. And he claims that the person who composed the book under the name of Daniel made it all up in order to revive the hopes of his countrymen. Not that he was able to foreknow all of future history, but rather he records events that had already taken place. Thus Porphyry confines himself to false claims in regard to the final vision, substituting rivers for the sea, and positing a famous and holy mountain, Apedno even though he is unable to furnish any historical source in which he has read about it. Those of our party, on the other hand, explain the final chapter of this vision as relating to the Antichrist, and stating that during his war against the Egyptians, Libyans, and Ethiopians, in which he shall smash three of the ten horns, he is going to hear that war has been stirred up against him in the regions of the North and East. Then he shall come with a great host to crush and slay many people, and shall pitch his tent in Apedno near Nicopolis, which was formerly called Emmaus, at the beginning of the mountainous region in the province of Judaea. Finally he shall make his way thence to go up to the Mount of Olives and ascend to the area of Jerusalem; and this is what the Scripture means here: "And when he has pitched his tent..." at the foothills of the mountainous province between two seas. These are, of course, that which is now called the Dead Sea on the east, and the Great Sea on the shore of which lie Caesarea, Joppa, Ashkelon, and Gazae. Then he shall come up to the summit thereof, that is of the mountainous province, or the apex of the Mount of Olives, which of course is called famous because our Lord and Savior ascended from it to the Father. And no one shall be able to assist the Antichrist as the Lord vents his fury upon him. Our school of thought insists that Antichrist is going to perish in that spot from which the Lord ascended to heaven. Apedno is a compound word, which upon analysis yields the meaning of "his throne" (the Greek thronou autou), or (in Latin) "thy throne". And the meaning is that he shall pitch his tent and his throne between the seas upon the famous, holy mountain. Symmachus translated this passage as follows (in Greek): "And he shall stretch out the tents of his stable between the seas in the holy mountain of power, and he shall come even unto its height"; which means in Latin: "And he shall stretch forth the pavilions of his cavalry between the seas, upon the holy mountain of power, and shall come even unto the apex of the mountain." Theodotion renders it: "And he shall pitch his tent in Aphedanum between the seas in the holy Mount Saba, and he shall come to the region thereof." Aquila says: "And he shall set up the tent of his headquarters in (Greek) Aphadanon between the seas, in the glorious, holy mountain, and he shall come even unto its border." Only the Septuagint frees itself from the problem about the name by translating: "And he shall establish his tent there between the seas and the holy mountain of desire and he shall come to the hour of his final end." Adhering to this rendering, Apollinarius omits all mention of the name Apedno. I have gone into this matter at some length not only for the purpose of exposing Porphyry's misrepresentation (for either he was ignorant of all these matters or else he pretended not to know them) but also to show the difficulty in Holy Scripture. And yet men who altogether lack experience lay special claim to understanding it apart from the grace of God and the scholarship of preceding generations. Now it should be observed that Hebrew has no letter P, but uses instead the letter phe, which has the force of the Greek phi. It is simply that in this particular place the Hebrews write the letter phe, yet it is to be pronounced as p. But that the Antichrist is going to come to the summit of the holy, famous mountain and perish there is a fact upon which Isaiah expatiates more fully, saying: "The Lord shall in the holy mountain cast down the face of the ruler of the darkness which is over all races, and him who rules over all peoples, and the anointing which is applied against (variant: with which he was anointed against) all the nations."

CHAPTER TWELVE

Verses 1-3. "But at that time shall Michael rise up, the great prince, who stands for the children of thy people, and a time shall come such as never occurred from the time that nations began to exist even unto that time. And at that time shall thy people be saved, even everyone who shall be found written in the book. And many of those who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some unto life everlasting, and others unto reproach, that they may behold it always. But those who are instructed shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that instruct many as to righteousness, as the stars for all eternity." Up until this point Porphyry somehow managed to maintain his position and impose upon the credulity of the naive among our adherents as well as the poorly educated among his own. But what can he say of this chapter, in which is described the resurrection of the dead, with one group being revived for eternal life and the other group for eternal disgrace? He cannot even specify who the people were under Antiochus who shone like the brightness of the firmament, and those others who shone like the stars for all eternity. But what will pigheadedness not resort to? Like some bruised serpent, he lifts up his head as he is about to die, and pours forth his venom upon those who are themselves at the point of death. This too, he declares, was written with reference to Antiochus, for after he had invaded Persia, he left his army with Lysias, who was in charge of Antioch and Phoenicia, for the purpose of warring against the Jews and destroying their city of Jerusalem. All these details are related by Josephus, the author of the history of the Hebrews. Porphyry contends that the tribulation was such as had never previously occurred, and that a time came along such as had never been from the time that races began to exist even unto that time. But when victory was bestowed upon them, and the generals of Antiochus had been slain, and Antiochus himself had died in Persia, the people of Israel experienced salvation, even all who had been written down in the book of God, that is, those who defended the law with great bravery. Contrasted with them were those who proved to be transgressors of the Law and sided with the party of Antiochus. Then it was, he asserts, that these guardians of the Law, who had been, as it were, slumbering in the dust of the earth and were cumbered with a load of afflictions, and even hidden away, as it were, in the tombs of wretchedness, rose up once more from the dust of the earth to a victory un hoped for, and lifted up their heads, rising up to everlasting life, even as the transgressors rose up to everlasting disgrace. But those masters and teachers who possessed a knowledge of the Law shall shine like the heaven, and those who have exhorted the more backward peoples to observe the rites of God shall blaze forth after the fashion of the stars for all eternity. He also adduces the historical account concerning the Maccabees, in which it is said that many Jews under the leadership of Mattathias and Judas Maccabaeus fled to the desert and hid in caves and holes in the rocks, and came forth again after the victory (I Macc. 2.) These things, then, were foretold in metaphorical language as if it concerned a resurrection of the dead. But the more reasonable understanding of the matter is that in the time of the Antichrist there shall occur a tribulation such as there has never been since nations began to exist. For assume that Lysias won the victory instead of being defeated, and that he completely crushed the Jews instead of their conquering; certainly such tribulation would not have been comparable to that of the time when Jerusalem was captured by the Babylonians, the Temple was destroyed, and all the people were led off into captivity. And so after the Antichrist is crushed and destroyed by the breath of the Savior's mouth, the people written in God's book shall be saved; and in accordance with the merits of each, some shall rise up unto eternal life and others unto eternal shame. But the teachers shall resemble the very heavens, and those who have instructed others shall be compared to the brightness of the stars. For it is not enough to know wisdom unless one also instructs others; and the tongue of instruction which remains silent and edifies no one else can receive no reward for labor accomplished. This passage is expressed by Theodo-tion and the Vulgate edition in the following fashion: "And those who understand shall shine forth like the radiance of the firmament, and many of the righteous like the stars forever and ever." Many people often ask whether a learned saint and an ordinary saint shall both enjoy the same reward and one and the same dwelling-place in heaven. Well then, the statement is made here, according to Theodotion's rendering, that the learned will resemble the very heavens, whereas the righteous who are without learning are only compared to the brightness of the stars. And so the difference between learned godliness and mere godly rusticity shall be the difference between heaven and the stars.

Verse 4. "But Thou, O Daniel, shut up the words and seal the book, even to the time appointed. Many shall pass over, and knowledge shall be manifold." He who had revealed manifold truth to Daniel now signifies that the things he has said are matters of secrecy, and he orders him to roll up the scroll containing his words and set a seal upon the book, with the result that many shall read it and inquire as to its fulfilment in history, differing in their opinions because of its great obscurity. And as for the statement, "Many shall pass over" or "go through," this indicates that it will be read by many people. For it is a familiar expression to say: "I have gone through a book," or, "I have passed through an historical account." Indeed this is the idea which Isaiah also expressed in regard to the obscurity of his own book: "And the sayings of that book shall be like the words of a book that is sealed. And if they shall give it to an illiterate man, saying, 'Read it,' he will reply, 'I do not know how to read.' But if they give it to a man who does know how to read and say, 'Read the book,' he will reply, 'I cannot read it, because it is sealed up'" (Isaiah 29:11-12). Also in the Revelation of John, there is a book seen which is sealed with seven seals inside and outside. And when no one proves able to break its seals, John says, "I wept sore; and a voice came to me, saying, 'Weep not: behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, has prevailed to open the book and break its seals'" (Revelation 5:1-5). But that book can be opened by one who has learned the mysteries of Scripture and understands its hidden truths, and its words which seem dark because of the greatness of the secrets they contain. He it is who can interpret the parables and transmute the letter which killeth into the spirit which quickeneth.

Verses 5-6. "And I Daniel looked, and behold as it were two other persons were standing, one on this side upon the river-bank, and the other upon that side, on the other bank of the river. And I said to the man that was clothed in linen, that stood upon the waters of the river, 'How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?'" Daniel saw two angels standing on either side upon the bank of the river of Babylon. Although it is mentioned here without specifying its name, I suppose that in line with the preceding vision it would be the Tigris River, which is called Eddecel (H-d-q-l) in Hebrew. Yet Daniel does not address his question to those who were standing upon either bank, but rather to the one whom he had seen at the beginning, who was clothed in vesture of linen or byssus, which is called baddim (b-d-y-m) in Hebrew. And this same angel was standing upon the waters of the river of Babylon, treading upon them with his feet. From this fact we understand that the former pair of angels whom he saw standing upon the bank and did not question or deem worthy of interrogation were the angels of the Greeks and Persians. But this first angel was the gracious one who had presented Daniel's prayers before God during the twenty-one days while the angel of the Persians was opposing him. And Daniel was asking him about these wonders spoken of in the present vision, as to the time when they should be accomplished. Porphyry, of course, assigns this time to the period of Antiochus, after his usual fashion, whereas we assign it to the time of Antichrist.

Verse 7. "And I heard the man that was clothed in linen, that stood upon the waters of the river: when he had lifted up his right hand and his left hand to heaven and had sworn by Him that liveth forever, that it should be unto a time and times and half a time." Porphyry interprets a time and times and half a time to mean three and a half years; and we for our part do not deny that this accords with the idiom of Sacred Scripture. For we read in an earlier section that seven times passed over Nebuchadnezzar, that is, the seven years of his existence as a wild beast. The expression was also used in the vision of the four beasts, the lion, the bear, the leopard, and the other beast whose name was not specified but which represented the kingdom of the Romans. Right afterwards the statement is made concerning the Antichrist that he will humble kings and utter speeches against the Exalted One and will crush the saints of the Most High; moreover he will imagine that he can alter times and laws. And the saints shall be turned over to his power unto a time and times and half a time. And the court will sit for judgment, in order that power may be removed and utterly broken and vanish away until the very end. And clearly the reference is to the coming of Christ and the saints when it is said: "But kingdom and power and the greatness of the kingdom which lies beneath the whole heaven shall be bestowed upon the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; and all the kings shall serve and obey Him." If therefore the earlier references which were plainly written concerning the Antichrist are assigned by Porphyry to Antiochus and to the three and a half years during which he asserts the Temple was deserted (cf. Verse 1, above), then he is under obligation to prove that the next statement, "His kingdom is eternal, and all kings shall serve and obey him," likewise pertains to Antiochus, or else (as he himself conjectures) to the people of the Jews. But it is perfectly apparent that such an argument will never stand. We read in the books of Maccabees - and Josephus also concurs in the same opinion (Book 11, chap. 10) - that the Temple in Jerusalem lay defiled for three years, and under Antiochus Epiphanes an idol of Jupiter stood within it; that is to say, from Chislev, the ninth month, of the one hundred forty-fifth year of the Macedonian rule until the ninth month of the one hundred forty-eighth year, which amounts to three years. But under the Antichrist it is not stated that the desolation and overthrow of the holy Temple shall endure for three years, but for three years and a half, that is, one thousand two hundred and ninety days.

"And when the scattering of the band of the holy people shall be accomplished, all these things shall be fulfilled." When it is stated that the people of God shall have been scattered - either under the persecution of Antiochus, as Porphyry claims, or of Antichrist, which we deem to be closer to fact - at that time shall all these things be fulfilled.

Verses 8-10. "And I heard, and understood not. And I said, 'O my lord, what shall happen after these things?' And he said, 'Go, Daniel, for the words are shut up and sealed until the time of the end. Many shall be chosen and made white and shall be tried as fire; and the wicked shall deal wickedly. And none of the wicked shall understand, but the learned shall understand.'" The prophet wished to comprehend what he had seen, or rather, what he had heard, and he desired to understand the reality of the things to come. For he had heard of the various wars of kings, and of battles between them, and a detailed narrative of events; but he had not heard the names of the individual persons involved. And if the prophet himself heard and did not understand, what will be the case with those men who presumptuously expound a book which has been sealed, and that too unto the time of the end, a book which is shrouded with many obscurities? But he comments that when the end comes, the ungodly will lack comprehension, whereas those who are learned in the teaching of God will be able to understand. "For wisdom will not enter the perverted soul, nor can it impart itself to a body which is subject to sins."

Verse 11. "And from the time that the continual sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination unto desolation shall be set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." Porphyry asserts that these one thousand two hundred and ninety days were fulfilled in the desolation of the Temple in the time of Antiochus, and yet both Josephus and the Book of Maccabees, as we have said before, record that it lasted for only three years. From this circumstance it is apparent that the three and a half years are spoken of in connection with the time of the Antichrist, for he is going to persecute the saints for three and a half years, or one thousand two hundred and ninety days, and then he shall meet his fall on the famous, holy mountain. And so from the time of the removal of the endelekhismos, which we have translated as "continual sacrifice," i.e., the time when the Antichrist shall obtain possession of the world (variant: the city) and forbid the worship of God, unto the day of his death the three and a half years, or one thousand two hundred and ninety days, shall be fulfilled.

Verse 12. "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh unto a thousand three hundred and thirty-five days." He means that he is blessed who waits for forty-five days beyond the predetermined number, for it is within that period that our Lord and Savior is to come in His glory. But the reason for the forty-five days of inaction after the slaying of the Antichrist is a matter which rests in the knowledge of God; unless, of course, we say that the rule of the saints is delayed in order that their patience may be tested. Porphyry explains this passage in the following way, that the forty-five days beyond the one thousand two hundred and ninety signify the interval of victory over the generals of Antiochus, or the period when Judas Maccabaeus fought with bravery and cleansed the Temple and broke the idol to pieces, offering blood-sacrifices in the Temple of God. He might have been correct in this statement if the Book of Maccabees had recorded that the Temple was polluted over a period of three and a half years instead of just three years (I Mac. 4).

Verse 13. "But thou, Daniel, go thy way until the time appointed, and take thy rest (Vulgate: thou shalt rest) and thou shalt stand in thy lot unto the end of the days." Instead of this Theodotion translated it: "But go thy way and take thy rest, and thou shalt rise up again in thy turn at the end of the days." From this remark it is demonstrated that the whole context of the prophecy has to do with the resurrection of all the dead, at the time when the prophet also is to rise. And it is vain for Porphyry to claim that all these things which were spoken concerning the Antichrist under the type of Antiochus actually refer to Antiochus alone. As we have already mentioned, these false claims have been answered at greater length by Eusebius of Caesarea, Apollinarius of Laodicea, and partially also by that very able writer, the martyr Methodius; and anyone who knows of these things can look them up in their writings. Thus far we have been reading Daniel in the Hebrew edition; but the remaining matter to the end of the book has been translated from Theodotion's edition.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Verses 1, 2. "Now there was a man that dwelt in Babylon whose name was Joakim; and he took a wife whose name was Susanna, the daughter of Helcias, a very beautiful woman and one who feared the Lord" (Vulgate: God). Having expounded to the best of my ability the contents of the book of Daniel according to the Hebrew, I shall briefly set forth the comments of Origen concerning the stories of Susanna and of Bel contained in the Tenth Book of his Stromata. These remarks are from him and one may observe them in the appropriate sections (i.e., of Origen's work).

Verse 3. "And being righteous folk, her parents had educated their daughter in conformity with the law of Moses (Vulgate: because they were righteous, they had instructed...." This verse should be used as a testimony in order to urge parents to teach their daughters in accordance with God's law and holy Word, as well as their sons.

Verse 5. "And there were two of the elders of the people (the Vulgate omits: of the people) who were appointed judges that year." There was a Jew who used to allege that these men were Ahab and Zedekiah (variant: Alchias and Zedekiah), of whom Jeremiah wrote: "The Lord do to thee as Ahab and Zedekiah, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire because of the iniquity they had wrought in Israel and because they had committed adultery (variant: were committing adultery) with the wives of their citizens" (Jeremiah 29:22-23).

"It was concerning them that the Lord said that iniquity came forth from Babylon on the part of the ancient judges who appeared to govern the people. They used to frequent the house of Joakim..." Very appropriately it is not said of these sinful elders, "They governed the people," but rather, "They appeared to govern." For those who furnish good leadership to the people are the ones who govern them, but those who merely have the title of judge and lead the people unjustly only appear to govern the people rather than actually doing so.

Verse 8. "And they were inflamed with lust for her, and they perverted their own mind and turned their eyes away that they might not look toward heaven nor remember just judgments." What the Greeks call pathos we render more correctly by "emotion" than by "passion." And so it was this emotion, this lustful desire, which aroused or even smote the hearts of the elders. But in order that they might lay some basis for it in their hearts and might plan how to satisfy their desires, they perverted their own minds. And as their minds were subverted, they turned away their eyes that they might not regard heavenly things or remember righteous judgments, or God, or honor, or character, the factors for good which are inherent in all men. "And behold, Susanna was taking a walk according to her custom." It has been stated already that Susanna was actually in the habit of taking walks in the mornings. For the sake of pleasing those people who seek out Scriptural precedent for everything we do, it would not be inappropriate to seize upon this passage about taking walks, and say that it is a good thing for a person to take walks for the invigorating of his body. Origen says that he has taken this particular passage from the Septuagint; by this statement he shows that he has not discussed the rest of the chapter on the basis of the Septuagint translation.

Verse 19. "Susanna sighed and said: 'I am straitened on every side.'" Anyone who has attained to the acme of perfect virtue never says that she is faced with a crisis of decision, when she is unable to escape the hands of adulterers who say, "Consent to us and have intercourse with us; for otherwise, if thou art unwilling, we will witness against thee that a young man was with thee and thou sentest away thy maidens from thee for this purpose." It is of course a characteristic of human frailty to fear a death which is inflicted upon one because of his uprightness. To be sure we might interpret her distress as arising not from the prospect of death but from the contumely and disgrace which would be heaped upon her by those accusers who would claim: "A young man was with her, and she sent away her maidens for that reason."

Verse 22. "'For if I do this, it is death to me; but if I do not..." She speaks of sin as death. For just as in the case of one who commits adultery, the adultery means death, so also every sin which results in death is to be equated with death. And we believe we die as often as we sin unto death. And therefore on the other hand we rise again and are made alive just as often as we perform deeds which are worthy of life.

Verse 23. "'But it is better for me to fall into your hands without doing the deed than to sin in the sight of the Lord.'" In the Greek the word is not haireretoron, or "better", but haireton, which we may render by "good". And so she chose her words well when she avoided saying, "It is better for me to fall into the hands of my enemies, the elders, than to sin in the sight of the Lord"; for thus she avoided calling something better in comparison with sin, which was not a good thing at all. But, she remarks, it is good for me not to do the wicked thing, and to fall into your clutches without sinning in God's sight. Therefore one should not use the comparative and say, "It is better for me to fall into your clutches than to sin in God's sight," but rather the positive, "It is good for me not to do the wicked thing and fall into your clutches, rather than to commit sin in God's sight."

Verse 24. "And Susanna cried out with a great voice..." Her voice was great, not because of the intense vibrations it sent through the air nor because of the outcry that came from her lips, but because of the greatness of the chastity with which she called out to the Lord. And so for this reason the Scripture did not attribute a great voice to the outcry of the elders, for the following statement is merely: "The elders also cried out against her."

Verse 42. "But Susanna cried out with a great voice..." Her voice was rendered the clearer because of the emotion of her heart, the honest sincerity of her avowal, and the uprightness of her conscience. And so, although men would not listen to it, her outcry to God was great.

Verse 45. "And as she was being led away to die, the Lord raised up the holy spirit of a young boy." By this language it is shown that the Holy Spirit did not then enter into Daniel, but rather that He was already within him, and only because of the tenderness of his years He had remained inactive. Nor could He show forth His works until an occasion arose and the Lord stirred him up on behalf of the holy woman.

Verse 46. "And he cried out with a great voice: 'I am innocent of the blood of this woman...'" Because the Holy Spirit was roused up within him and dictated to the boy what he should say, his voice was great. And if there is any place in Holy Scripture where the voice of a sinner is called great, it has (yet) to be noted.

Verses 54-59. "'Tell me under which tree thou sawest them conversing with each other.' And he answered, 'Under the mastic tree.' And Daniel said to him, 'Well hast thou lied against thine own head; for behold, the angel of God, having received His sentence from Him, shall cleave thee in twain.' And a little while later the other elder said, 'Under the holm tree.' And Daniel said to him, 'Well hast thou lied against thine own head; but the angel of the Lord waiteth with a sword to sever thee in twain.'" Since the Hebrews reject the story of Susanna, asserting that it is not contained in the Book of Daniel, we ought to investigate carefully the names of the trees, the skhinos and the prinos, which the Latins interpret as "holm-oak" and "mastic-tree," and see whether they exist among the Hebrews and what their derivation is - for example, as "cleavage" , and "cutting" or "sawing" is derived from "holm tree" in the language of the Greeks. But if no such derivation can be found, then we too are of necessity forced to agree with the verdict of those who claim that this chapter was originally composed in Greek, because it contains Greek etymology not found in Hebrew. But if anyone can show that the derivation of the ideas of cleaving and severing from the names of the two trees in question is valid in Hebrew, then we may accept this scripture also as canonical.

Verse 60. "And the whole congregation (Vulgate: assembly) cried out with a great voice and blessed God, who saveth those who trust in Him..." If the whole congregation put them to death, the view which we mentioned earlier is apparently refuted, namely that these were the elders Ahab and Zedekiah, in conformity with Jeremiah's statement (Jeremiah 29:22). The only other possibility is that instead of taking the statement, "They killed them," literally, we interpret it as meaning that they gave them over to the king of Babylon to be put to death. That would be just like when we say that the Jews put the Savior to death; not that they smote Him themselves, but they gave Him over to be slain and cried out, "Crucify Him! Crucify Him!" (John 19:15).

Verse 63. "But Helcias and his wife praised God for their daughter Susanna..." Like true saints they praise God after a worthy fashion, not simply on the ground of Susanna's deliverance from the clutches of the elders - for that would hardly be sufficient matter for praise or of any decisive importance, even if she had not been so delivered - but rather on the ground that no immorality was found in her.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Verse 18. "And as soon as he had opened the door, the king looked upon the table and cried out with a great voice: 'Great art thou, O Bel, and there is no deceit with thee.'" The statement of Scripture in this passage, "He cried out with a great voice," may seem, because of its reference to an idolator ignorant of God, to refute the observation put forth a little previously, that the expression "great voice" is found only in connection with saints. This objection is easily solved by asserting that this particular story is not contained in the Hebrew of the Book of Daniel. If, however, anyone should be able to prove that it belongs in the canon, then we should be obliged to seek out some answer to this objection.

Commentary on Ecclesiastes v2

Commentary on Ecclesiastes by Saint Jerome of Stridon, Presbyter, addressed to Paula and Eustochium.

Latin Text from public domain Migne Editors, Patrologiae Cursus Completus.

Translated into English using ChatGPT.

Table of Contents

- Preface
- (Chap. I.)
- (Chap. II.)
- (Chap. III.)
- (Chap. IV)
- (Chap. V.)
- (Chap. VI.)
- (Chap. VII.)
- (Cap VIII)
- (Chap. IX.)
- (Chap. X.)
- (Chap. XI.)
- (Chap. XII.)

Preface

I remember about five years ago when I was still in Rome, reading Ecclesiastes of the holy Blesilla, in order to provoke her to contempt for this world, and to consider everything she saw in the world as worthless. She asked me to explain the obscure parts, like a commentator, so that she could understand what she was reading without me. Therefore, since she was suddenly taken from us by death before our work was finished, and since we, O Paula and Eustochium, did not deserve to have such a partner in our lives, I was struck dumb with such a wound. Now, I am in Bethlehem, a more noble city, and I return that memory and gratitude to both her and to you. By way of introduction, I must point out that I have followed no one's authority, but have rather adhered to the custom of the Seventy Interpreters, while translating from the Hebrew. Only in those places where they differed little from the Hebrew text. Occasionally, I have also consulted Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, so as not to discourage the reader with excessive novelty, or, on the other hand, to pursue the streams of opinions, contrary to my own conscience, by disregarding the source of truth.

(Chap. I.)

(Chapter 1.) The words of the Son of David, the King of Jerusalem. The Scriptures most clearly teach that he was called Solomon by three names: peaceful, that is, Solomon (); and Ididia (), that is, beloved of the Lord; and what is now called Coeleth (), that is, Ecclesiastes. However, Ecclesiastes is called in the Greek language, which means gathering, that is, gathering the Church, which we can now call the preacher, because he speaks to the people, and his speech is not directed specifically to one, but generally to all. Moreover, he was called peaceful and beloved of the Lord because there was peace in his kingdom and the Lord loved him. For both the forty-fourth and the seventy-first psalms are titled as beloved and peaceful. Although they pertain to the prophecy of Christ and the Church, surpassing the happiness and strength of Solomon; nevertheless, they were written according to the history of Solomon.

Therefore, he published three volumes according to the number of words: Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Songs. In Proverbs, he teaches about little things and instructs about duties through sentences. Therefore, his speech is frequently repeated to his son. In Ecclesiastes, he instructs a man of mature age, so that he does not consider anything in worldly matters to be perpetual, but rather temporary and short-lived, as we see everything. Finally, when the man is already consummated and has surpassed the age, he unites him with the bride in the embrace in the Song of Songs. For unless we first abandon vices and renounce the vanities of the world, preparing ourselves for the coming of Christ, we cannot say: "Let him kiss me with the kiss of his mouth" (Cant. I, 1). Not far from this order, philosophers instruct their followers: first teaching ethics, then interpreting physics; and those whom they see to have made progress in these, they lead on to logic. And it should also be noted that the titles of the author's books are different. For in Proverbs it is noted: Proverbs of Solomon son of David, king of Israel. But in Ecclesiastes: Words of the Teacher son of David, king of Jerusalem: for it is unnecessary here to mention Israel, which is found incorrectly in Greek and Latin manuscripts. And in Song of Songs neither son of David nor king of Israel or Jerusalem is prescribed, but only Song of Songs of Solomon. For just as the Proverbs and the simple instruction pertain to the twelve tribes and to all of Israel, and just as the contempt of the world only befits the metropolitans, that is, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so the Song of Songs is specifically suitable to those who desire only heavenly things. It pertains to beginners, and to those making progress, and it is the authority that will rightfully claim the dignity of a father and the kingdom of its own. However, for the perfect ones, where the disciple is taught not by fear but by love, their own name is enough, and they are an equal teacher, and they do not know themselves to be king. These (things) for now according to the letter.

Furthermore, according to spiritual understanding: peaceful and beloved by God the Father, and our Churchman is Christ; who, demolishing the middle wall and abolishing enmities in the flesh, made both one, saying: My peace I give to you, my peace I leave to you (John 14:27). Concerning whom the Father said to the disciples: This is, he said (Matthew 3:17), my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: hear him, who is the head of the whole Church: Not to the synagogue of the Jews, but to the multitude of the Gentiles speaking, the king of the living stones of Jerusalem; not of that Jerusalem, of which he himself says: Jerusalem, Jerusalem, you who kill the prophets (Matthew 23:37); and: Behold, your house will be left to you desolate (ibid., 38): but of that Jerusalem, by which he forbids swearing; because it is the city of the great king. Here is the son of David, to whom the blind men in the Gospel cried out: Have mercy on us, son of David (Matthew 9:27); and the whole crowd resounded with one voice: Hosanna to the son of David (Matthew 21:9). In short, the word of God does not come to him as it did to Jeremiah and the other Prophets, but because he is rich, and king, and mighty (he is indeed the Word and wisdom, and the other virtues), he speaks words to the men of the Church: he hints at words to the Apostles, of whom it is sung in the Psalm: Their sound has gone out into all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world (Psalm 19:4). Therefore, some people believe that we are enticed by this book towards pleasure and indulgence. However, on the contrary, everything that we perceive in the world is declared to be empty. We should not eagerly pursue those things which, while possessed, will ultimately perish.

Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity. If all that God has made is very good, how is everything vanity, and not only vanity, but also vanity of vanities? Just as in the Song of Songs, among all songs, an excellent song is shown; so in the vanity of vanities, the magnitude of vanity is shown. Something similar is written in the Psalm: Nevertheless, all is vanity, every living man (Psalm XXXVIII, 6). Man's life is vanity; therefore, in death, vanity of vanities. In Exodus, we read about the glorified face of Moses, which the children of Israel could not look upon. Paul the Apostle compares this glory to the glory of the Gospel and says it is not glory: 'For that which was glorified is not glorified in this part, by reason of the excellent glory' (2 Corinthians 3:10). Therefore, we can say that heaven, earth, seas, and all that is contained within this world may be considered good in themselves, but when compared to God, they are worthless. And how, if seeing the little flame of a lamp, I would be content with its light, and later, when the sun rises, I would not perceive what was shining, and I would also see the lights of the stars being covered by the sun's light: in this way, looking at the elements and the manifold variety of things, I indeed admire the magnitude of the works; but reflecting that all things pass away, and the world grows old with its end, and that God alone always is what He was, I am compelled to say not once, but twice: Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. In Hebrew, the phrase 'vanity of vanities' is written as 'Abal Abalim'. Except for the Septuagint translators, all have similarly rendered it as 'vapor of vapors' or 'vapors'. We can also refer to it as the vapor of smoke and thin air, which quickly dissipates. Therefore, from this word, transience and nothingness of the universe are shown. For the things that are seen are temporary, but the things that are not seen are eternal. Perhaps because creation is subject to vanity, it groans, struggles, and awaits the revealing of the sons of God. And now we know in part and prophesy in part. All things are in vain until what is perfect comes.

What remains for a man in all his toil, for which he toils under the sun? After the general sentence that all is vanity, it begins with humans: that they in vain sweat in the labor of this world; gathering riches, educating children, striving for honor, constructing buildings, and in the midst of their work being suddenly taken by death hear: Fool, this very night your soul will be demanded from you: and the things you have prepared, whose will they be? (Luke 12:20) Especially since they bring nothing with them from all their work, but return to the ground naked from where they were taken.

One generation goes, and another generation comes; but the earth remains forever. As one dies, another is born; and as you see those whom you have seen, you begin to see those whom you have not seen. What is more vain than this vanity, that the earth remains, which was made for the sake of humans: and even the human, the master of the earth, suddenly dissolves into dust? Otherwise, the first generation of the Jews fades away, and a generation from the gathered nations takes its place: but the earth remains as long as, with the Synagogue receding, the whole Church enters in. For when the Gospel has been preached in the whole world, then the end will come. But with the coming of the consummation, heaven and earth will pass away. And notably, it does not say: the earth stands in ages, but in the age. Furthermore, we praise the Lord, not in one age, but in ages of ages. The sun rises, and the sun sets, and it leads to its place, and it rises again there. The sun itself, which was given to mortals for light, indicates its own destruction every day with its rising and setting. After it has dipped its burning wheel in the ocean, it returns to the place from which it came through unknown paths to us: having completed the circle of the night, it quickly breaks forth again from its chamber. For that reason, following the Vulgate edition, it leads to its place, while in Hebrew it is written as Soeph (סוּפֶה), which Aquila interprets as ἐσπνε, that is, breathes in. But Symmachus and Theodotion object, namely because the sun returns to its place and breathes from where it had previously departed. However, all of this is done in order to teach that, through the changes of time and the rising and setting of the stars, human life slips away and perishes while it remains ignorant. Otherwise, the Sun of justice, in whose wings there is healing, rises for those who fear God and cuts down the false prophets at noon. And when it has risen, it draws us towards its place. To the Father, namely. For He came for this purpose, to lift us up from earth to heaven and to say, 'And I, when I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all people to myself.' (John 12). It is not surprising, therefore, that those who believe are drawn to the Son, since even the Father Himself draws them to the Son; for no one can come to me unless the Father who sent me draws them. (John 6:44). Therefore, this sun, which we have said sets for some and rises for others, once killed Jacob, the patriarch, when he was leaving (or returning) from the holy land, and again rose for him when he entered the land of promise from Syria. (Genesis 28). Then Lot also, since (Al. when) he had gone out of Sodom and came to the city, which, in order to hasten, had been commanded to him, went up to the mountain, and the sun went out over Segor.

He goes towards the south, and turns towards the north: the spirit goes by turning, and the spirit returns to its own circles. From this we can estimate that during the winter time the sun runs to the south, and during the summer it is close to the north, and does not have its beginning during the autumn equinox: but first, when the zephyr wind breathes, everything bursts forth in the time of spring. But as he says: the spirit goes by turning, and returns to its own circles, whether he called the sun itself the spirit, which animates, breathes, thrives, and completes its yearly orbits in its course, as the poet says (Aeneid. III):

Meanwhile, the great sun revolves around the year: and elsewhere (Georgics II). And the year rolls around in its own footsteps; either because of the shining globe of the moon and the stars of Titania. The spirit within nourishes: infused throughout the limbs, it moves and mingles with the great body; it speaks not of the annual course of the Sun, but of its daily paths. For it travels in an oblique and broken line from south to north, and thus returns to the east. In another way: when the Sun runs through the south, it is closer to the Earth; when it runs through the north, it is raised high. Therefore, perhaps for those who are constricted by the cold of winter and tribulations (for evil burns upon the Earth from the north) this Sun of justice is closer to them; but for those who dwell in the northern part and are deprived of summer heat, it moves far away and returns through its own circles from whence it came. For when it draws all things to itself, and illuminates all with its rays, there is a restoration of the principal thing, and God is all in all. Symmachus interpreted this passage as follows: It goes to the south and goes around to the north; the wind goes as it walks, and it returns through the things it went around.

All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full. To the place from which the rivers come, there they return again, in order to go away. Some people think that the fresh waters that flow into the sea are either consumed by the scorching sun from above or that they are the nourishment of the salty sea. Behold our Ecclesiastes, the creator of these waters, he says that they return to the heads of fountains through hidden veins, and from the abyssal womb they always boil up at their beginnings. But the Hebrews think that by a metaphor the names of torrents and seas are signified concerning men, because they return to the land from which they were taken; and they are called torrents, not rivers, because they quickly fall away, yet the land is not filled with the multitude of the dead. Moreover, if we ascend to higher things, rightly do the troubled waters return to the sea from which they had stood still. And, if I am not mistaken, nowhere is a torrent read without the addition in a good sense. For you will give them to drink from the stream of your delights, as it is said with the addition of delights (Psalm 35, 9). And on the other hand, the Savior is handed over to the stream of Cedron (John 18, 1). And during the time of persecution, Elijah hides by the stream of Chorath, which itself also dries up (1 Kings 17, 3). But the insatiable sea is not filled, just as in Proverbs the daughters of the leech (Proverbs 30, 15). Not every man is capable of speaking profound words. The eye is not satisfied by seeing, and the ear is not filled by hearing. It is difficult not only to know about physical things, but also about ethical things. Neither words can explain the causes and natures of things, nor can the eye, as the dignity of the thing demands, look at them, nor can the ear, with the teacher instructing, reach the highest knowledge. For if now we see in a mirror in enigma, and know in part and prophesy in part, consequently neither words can explain what it does not know; nor the eye, in which it is blind, see; nor the ear, about which it doubts, be filled. At the same time, it should be noted that all words are serious and must be learned with great effort, contrary to those who think that knowledge of the Scriptures comes to them easily and without effort.

What is that which has been? It is that which will be. And what is that which has been made? It is that which will be made. And not everything new is under the sun. It seems to me, from what he has previously mentioned, about the generation and generation, the mass of the earth, the rising and setting of the sun, the course of rivers, the size of the ocean, and all that we learn either through thought, sight, or hearing, to speak universally, that there is nothing in the nature of things that has not already existed. For from the beginning of the world both men and women are born and die, and the earth is balanced upon the waters, and the sun rises and sets. And to not go through more, and to fly for the birds, and to swim for the fishes, and to walk for the land creatures, and to crawl for the serpents, it is granted by God the craftsman. What similar saying to this the Comic poet says:

Nothing is said that has not been said before. (Terence, in the Prologue of Eunuchus). When my teacher Donatus was explaining this verse: 'Pereant, inquit, qui ante nos nostra dixerunt.' But if nothing new can be said in words, how much more in the administration of the world, which was so perfectly made from the beginning that God rested from His works on the seventh day! I read in a certain book: If everything that has been made under the sun already existed in past ages before it was made, and man was already made after the sun was established: therefore, man existed before it was made under the sun. But it is excluded, that by this reasoning, both beasts and mosquitoes, and small and large animals, were said to have existed before the sky. Unless perhaps it responds to this, it is shown from the consequences that the speech is not about other animals, but about the human Ecclesiastae. For he says: Not everything new under the sun, that speaks and says: Behold, this is new. But animals do not speak, only humans do: if animals were to speak and say that something is new, and the sentence could be dissolved, then nothing new would be under the sun. Is there any word of which it is said, 'See, this is new': it has already been in the ages which were before us. Symmachus translated this more clearly: Do you think that there is anyone who can say, 'See, this is new', and it has already happened in the world that existed before us. But it agrees with what has gone before, that nothing new is made in the world: nor is there anyone who can exist and say, 'Look, this is new', for indeed everything that he thinks is new has already been in previous ages. Nor should we suppose that the signs, wonders, and many other things that happen by the will of God in the world have already happened in earlier centuries; and that Epicurus has found a place, who asserts that the same things happen and will happen through countless cycles, in the same places and through the same causes. Otherwise, both Judas would have often betrayed and Christ would have suffered many times for us, and other things that have happened and will happen would also repeat themselves in the same cycles. But it must be said that by the foreknowledge and predestination of God, those things have already happened which are future. For those who were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, they already existed in previous ages.

There is no memory of the first things, and indeed of the things that are to come. There will be no memory of them among those who are to come in the future. Just as the past is hidden from us in oblivion, so too those things that are happening now or that are to come, those who are yet to be born will not be able to know them, and everything will pass by in silence, and they will be hidden as if they had never existed. And that saying will be fulfilled: Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. For even the Seraphim cover their faces and feet, because the first and last things are veiled. But according to the Seventy Interpreters, who said: 'There will be no memory of the first, indeed, of the last who are to come, there will be no memory of them with those who are to come in the last' (Matthew 20:16): the meaning of this passage from the Gospel is that those who are first in this age will be the last of all. And because God, as a generous and merciful being, remembers even the least and all, he will not give as great glory to those who, due to their vice, deserved to be the last, as he will to those who, by humbling themselves, wanted to be the last in the world. Therefore, it is said in the following: There is no memory of the wise with the foolish forever.

I, Ecclesiastes, was king over Israel in Jerusalem. So far, in general, the preface addresses everyone who is disputing (Al. disputing): now it turns to itself, and teaches who he is, how he came to know everything by experience. The Hebrews say that this book is of Solomon, repenting that he, relying on wisdom and riches, offended God through women. And I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom concerning all things that are done under heaven: this sore travail hath God given to the sons of man to be exercised therewith. The word 'Anian' Aquila, the Seventy, and Theodotion have alike translated περισπασμ■ν as 'distraction,' which the Latin Interpreter has rendered as 'distention,' because the human mind, distracted by various cares, is torn asunder.

But Symmachus translates it as 'occupation.' Therefore, since it is mentioned multiple times in this volume, whether it be occupation, or tension, or whatever else we may have said, let everything be referred to the higher meaning. Therefore, Ecclesiastes gave his mind first to seeking wisdom, and extending beyond what is allowed, he wanted to understand the causes and reasons: why the innocent are afflicted by demons, why both the just and the wicked are equally consumed by shipwrecks. Whether these things, and similar ones, happen by chance or by the judgment of God. And if by chance, where is providence? if by judgment, where is the justice of God? Desiring to know these things, I understood the unnecessary worry and anxiety that torments us by various means, given to us by God, so that we may desire to know what it is not lawful to know. But, as the preceding reason is well stated, this is a tension given by God. For, as it is written in the Epistle to the Romans: For this reason, God handed them over to shameful passions (Rom. I, 6). And again: For this reason God gave them up to a debased mind, to do what ought not to be done (Ibid., 28). And then: Therefore God gave them up to the lusts of their hearts to impurity (Ibid., 24). And to the Thessalonians: Therefore God sends them a strong delusion (II Thess. II, 10). And beforehand the reasons are shown why either they are delivered to the passions of dishonor, or to a debased mind, or to the lusts of their hearts, or whatever they did to receive the operation of error. And therefore, at present, God has given humans this bad situation, so that they are distressed in it, because they have done these or those things of their own free will and choice.

I have seen all the works that have been done under the sun, and behold, all is vanity and a striving after wind. We are compelled by necessity to discuss more frequently than we want about Hebrew words. For we cannot know the meaning unless we learn it through words. Rooth, Aquila, and Theodotion translated $\nu\omicron\mu$ as 'pasture', and Symmachus translated it as 'grazing'. But the Seventy Interpreters did not express the Hebrew language, but the Syrian, saying 'preference'. Therefore, whether it be farming or grazing, the term is derived from pastio, which connotes preference rather than presumption. It is said that each person does what they want and what seems right to them, and that people are led in different directions by their own free will, and all things are futile under the sun, while we ourselves are displeased with the boundaries of good and evil. A Hebrew teacher, who guided me in reading the holy Scriptures, told me that the word written above, Rooth, in this context signifies more affliction and wickedness than passion and preference: not from evil, which is contrary to good, but from that which is written in the Gospel: Each day has enough trouble of its own (Matthew 6:34). What the Greeks more significantly call $\kappa\alpha\kappa\omicron\upsilon\chi\alpha\nu$, it means: I have considered everything that happens in the world, and I have found nothing else but vanity and wickedness, that is, the miseries of the spirit, by which the soul is afflicted with various thoughts. The wicked cannot be adorned, and lack cannot be counted. Whoever is wicked, unless they are corrected first, cannot be adorned. The righteous receive adornment, the crooked receive correction. One is not called wicked unless they are deviated from what is right. This is in contrast to heretics, who introduce certain natures that do not receive health. And because lack, that is, what is missing, cannot be counted: therefore only the firstborn of Israel were counted. But women, and slaves, and children, and the common people from Egypt, were not a fullness, but a diminution of the army, being passed over without number. There can also be this meaning here: Such wickedness is present in the capacity of this world, that the world can hardly return to its original state of goodness, nor can it easily receive its order and perfection, in which it was first created. Otherwise, if everyone is restored to wholeness through repentance, only the devil will remain in his error. For all things that have been done under the sun, have been overturned by its judgment and the spirit of wickedness, while sins are multiplied by its prompting. Finally, the number of deceivers and those who have been snatched from the flock of the Lord by it is so great that it cannot be comprehended by calculation.

I spoke with my heart, saying: Behold, I have been magnified, and I have added wisdom above all who were before me in Jerusalem, and my heart has seen much wisdom and knowledge. Solomon was wiser, not Abraham, and Moses, and the other Saints, but those who were before him in Jerusalem. We also read in the books of Kings that Solomon had much wisdom, and he asked for this gift from God above all others. Therefore, the eye of the heart of the world beholds much wisdom and knowledge; for it does not say: I have spoken much wisdom and knowledge; but, My heart has seen much wisdom and knowledge. For we are not able to express everything that we feel. And I gave my heart, to know wisdom, and knowledge, and errors, and folly: I have learned that this also is a vexation of the spirit. Contraries are understood by contraries. And the first wisdom is to be without folly. But folly cannot be without wisdom, unless one understands it. Therefore, many harmful things are created in order that, while we avoid them, we may be instructed in wisdom. Therefore, Solomon's study was equal, to know wisdom and knowledge, and in the opposite, errors and folly, so that his true wisdom would be proven in desiring some things and avoiding others. But in this also, as in other things, he says that he has been driven by winds, and has not been able to fully grasp the truth. It is enough to have discussed about the presumption of the spirit, or the passion of the wind, which is often mentioned in this book.

Because in the multitude of wisdom, there is a multitude of madness; and he who increases knowledge, increases sorrow. The more one has attained wisdom, the more one is indignant to submit to vices and to be far from the virtues that it requires. But because the powerful endure torments powerfully, the more one is trusted, the more is demanded from him. Therefore, he who increases knowledge also increases sorrow, and he is grieved with sorrow according to God, and he mourns over his most grievous sins. And the Apostle also says: 'And who is there to make me glad but the one who is made sorry by me?' (II Cor. II, 2) ? Perhaps this should also be understood, that a wise man should feel pain at having his wisdom lie hidden in secret and profound depths, and should not reveal it to minds as light is to the eyes; but rather, through certain trials and unbearable exertions, it should arise through constant meditation and study.

(Chap. II.)

(Chapter II) I said in my heart: Come now, I will test you with pleasure, and see what is good. And behold, even this is vanity. After I searched through wisdom and knowledge and discovered that there is labor and sorrow, and that nothing else but empty and endless striving, I turned to pleasure, to indulge in luxury, gather wealth, and pursue fleeting pleasures before I die. But even in this I recognized my own vanity, as past pleasure does not bring joy in the present, and once exhausted, it does not satisfy. Not only bodily pleasure, but also spiritual temptation is experienced by the possessor, so that I may be kept humble by the goading sting and the angel of Satan may buff me, lest I become haughty (2 Corinthians 12:7). Hence, Solomon also says: Do not give me riches or poverty (Proverbs 30:8). And immediately adds: Lest I be satisfied and deny you; and say, Who sees me? (Ibid., 9). Indeed, the devil falls through the abundance of goods. And in the Apostle it is written: Lest being puffed up with pride, he fall into the judgment of the devil (I Tim. III, 6), that is, into the same judgment into which the devil fell. But we can also say this: the reason why spiritual joy is now called vanity, like other things, is because we see it through a mirror and in an enigma. However, when it is revealed face to face, it will no longer be called vanity, but truth.

I said that laughter is madness and a source of joy, what are you doing? When we read madness in Hebrew, it is מולל (molal), which Aquila translates as πλάνησιν, meaning error; Symmachus translates it as θόρυβον, meaning tumult. However, the Septuagint and Theodotion, as in many other places, also agree on translating it as περιφορῶν, which we can express word for word as circumlation. So, just as those who are carried about by every wind of doctrine are unstable and tossed to and fro (Ephesians 4:14), those who laugh that laughter which the Lord says should be turned into weeping in the Gospel (Luke 6:25) are carried away by the error of the world and the whirlwind, not understanding the destruction of their sins or mourning over past vices. Instead, they believe that fleeting goods are eternal and rejoice in things that are more worthy of lamentation. This can also be applied to heretics, who, embracing false doctrines, promise themselves joy and prosperity.

I considered in my heart that I should indulge in wine and satisfy my desires, but my heart led me to wisdom. I wanted to pursue foolishness and see what good could come from it, what activities people could engage in during their lives. I desired to live a life of pleasure and free myself from all worries, to numb myself with indulgence like with wine. However, my thoughts and my natural reasoning, which God has also implanted in sinners, pulled me back and led me to seek wisdom and trample foolishness, so that I could understand what good people could accomplish in the course of their lives. However, he elegantly compared the pleasure to drunkenness. For drunkenness destroys the strength of the mind, which someone who is able can change with wisdom, and (as it is held in some books) obtain spiritual joy; they will be able to attain knowledge of what should be desired and what should be avoided in this life.

I have magnified my works: I have built houses for myself: I have planted vineyards for myself, and so on, up to the point where it is said: The eyes of the wise are in his head, but the fool walks in darkness. Before discussing each individual thing, it seems useful to me to briefly summarize everything in one discourse, and to bring the meaning together as if into one body, so that what is said can be more easily understood. I had all the things that are considered good in the world, as if I were a king and powerful. I built for myself high palaces, and I cultivated vineyards, mountains, and hills. And so that nothing was lacking for luxury, I planted gardens and orchards for myself, establishing various trees that, when collected, irrigated the waters into pools from above, so that the greenness might be nourished with moisture extending far. I also had an innumerable multitude of servants, whether bought or native, and many flocks of quadrupeds, namely cattle and sheep, as much as no king before me had in Jerusalem. But countless treasures of silver and gold were also accumulated, which various kings and nations had bestowed upon me as gifts and tributes. Hence it happened that, with excessive wealth, I was enticed to greater pleasures, and choirs of musical arts sang for me with the flute, lyre, and voice, and both sexes served at banquets. But as these things increased, wisdom was lacking in proportion. For whichever pleasure desire drew me to, I was carried away recklessly and headlong, and I thought that this was the fruit of my labors, to consume myself in lust and luxury. Finally, turning back to myself, and as if waking from a deep sleep, I looked at my hands and saw my works full of vanity, full of filth, full of the spirit of error. For I was not able to find any good thing that was considered good in the world. Therefore, considering the goods of wisdom and the evils of folly, I burst forth in praise of that man who, restraining himself after vices, can be a follower of virtues. For there is indeed a great distance between wisdom and foolishness, and as much as the difference between day and night, so are virtues separated from vices. Therefore, it seems to me that those who follow wisdom always raise their eyes to the sky, and have their mouths turned upwards, and contemplate those things that are above their own head. But those who are given to foolishness and vices, dwell in darkness, and roll in ignorance of things. I have magnified my works, etc. He magnifies his works, which are uplifted in the heavens according to the image of the Creator. And he builds houses, so that the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit may come and dwell in them. And he plants vineyards, to which Jesus ties his donkey.

I made gardens and orchards for myself: I planted in them every fruitful tree. In the house of the rich, there are not only golden and silver vessels, but also wooden and earthen ones (2 Timothy 20). Therefore, gardens are also made for the weakest and the infirm. For the weak person eats vegetables (Romans 14:2). Trees are planted, not all of them fruitful, as we have in Latin codices: but all fruits, that is, of various grains and fruits, because there are various graces in the Church: and another is the eye, another the hand, another the foot, and, whatever parts are more modest, we honor them more (1 Corinthians 12). Amongst the fruit-bearing trees, I consider wood of life to hold the highest place, which is wisdom. For if it is not planted in the middle, the other woods will dry out.

I made for myself pools of water, to irrigate from them a budding tree. The trees of the pools, the trees of the forests, which are not fruitful, which do not bear fruit, are not nourished by heavenly rain, or from the waters above, but by those which are collected in the pools from streams. For Egypt, humble and lying down, like a garden of vegetables, is irrigated by earthly waters and those coming from Ethiopia. But the land of promise, which is mountainous and upright, awaits temporary and late rain from the sky.

I was a merchant, and I had slaves, and maidservants, and native slaves, and indeed I had a large possession of cattle and sheep. If we wish to refer Ecclesiastes to the person of Christ, as we have said above, we can call his slaves those who have the spirit of fear in servitude and desire spiritual things more than they possess. But we can call maidservants those souls that are still devoted to the body and the earth. And those who are indeed of the Church, and slaves, and maidservants, of whom we have spoken, come before the native slaves: nevertheless, they have not yet been given freedom or nobility by the Lord. But there are also others in the household of the Church, like cattle and sheep, because of their work and simplicity: who labor in the Church without reason and knowledge of the Scriptures, but have not yet reached the point where they deserve to be called human and return to the image of the Creator. It is worth noting that the term 'multitude' is not used for servants, maids, and slaves, but is used for cattle and sheep. I had many possessions of cattle and sheep. For indeed in the Church there are more flocks than men; more sheep than slaves, maidservants, and household servants. But that which is said at the end:

Above all, those who came before me in Jerusalem. It does not pertain to the great glory of Solomon that he, with his father as the only king, was richer, because under Saul, Jerusalem was not yet ruled, and it was held by the Jebusites, who themselves had settled in the city. Therefore, it is necessary to discuss more deeply what Jerusalem is and how the Preacher, before all the kings who came before him in Jerusalem, was richer.

I gathered silver, and gold, and the possessions of kings and provinces. I made for myself male and female singers, and the delights of sons of men, ministers of wine and female servants. Scripture always sets silver and gold above words and understanding. Hence, in the sixty-seventh psalm, the dove, which is interpreted in spirit, has more visible and exposed wings that are stripped of silver, but conceals a more hidden meaning within the pale gold. But the substance of kings, and of provinces or regions, he gathered into the Church of believers; of those kings, of whom the psalmist sings: The kings of the earth stood up, and the princes met together against the Lord and against his Christ (Ps. II, 2): and of those regions to which the Savior commanded his eyes to be lifted up: for they are already white unto harvest (John IV). The substance of kings and the teachings of philosophers can be called the dogmas and secular knowledge, which Ecclesiasticus, a diligent man, understandingly apprehends the wise in their craftiness, and destroys the wisdom of wise men, and reproaches the prudence of the prudent (I Cor. I). Singers, both men and women, are those who sing with their spirit and with their mind. The male singer, like a strong and spiritual man, sings of higher things. The female singer, on the other hand, is still concerned with matter, which the Greeks call 'hyle'; and she cannot raise her voice to lofty heights. Therefore, whenever a woman is mentioned in the Scriptures and the weaker sex is referred to, let us understand it in terms of matter. Hence, Pharaoh does not want males to be brought to life, but only females, who are close to matter (Exod. I). And on the other hand, it is rarely reported that any of the Saints have begotten women. Only Zaphnath, who died in sin, begot all daughters (Num. XXV). Jacob, among the twelve Patriarchs, is the father of one daughter, and for her sake he faces danger (Gen. XXX). The delights of human children are also to be understood as wisdom, which has various orchards like paradise and multiple pleasures. And it is commanded of it: Delight in the Lord, and He will grant you the desires of your heart (Psal. XXXVI, 4). And in another place: With the torrent of your delights you will give them to drink (Psalm 37:2). Now concerning the pourers of wine and the pourers of wine (for the sake of distinction, I have wished to decline in the masculine, feminine gender, which the Latin language does not accept), Aquila interprets it differently than what is readily apparent. For he did not name men, namely, men and women, but rather the types of vessels, calling them κυλίκιον and κυλίκια, which is said in Hebrew Sadda () and Saddoth (). Finally, Symmachus, although the word cannot express the word, is not far from this opinion, saying: the shapes of the vessels, and the arrangements. Therefore, whether it is believed that Solomon had pitchers, cups, or bowls, which were arranged in the ministries, adorned with gold and precious stones: and that from one large bowl, called a crater, wine would be ladled into smaller bowls, and the crowd would receive the wine from the hands of the attendants. Therefore, since we interpret the Ecclesiastes in Christ, and wisdom invites us to drink from the mixed cup in Proverbs, now we must receive the great cup of the Body of the Lord, in which the pure Divinity, as it was in heaven, has been tempered with humanity for our sake. And through the Apostles, wisdom has been poured out to the believers in the whole world, in smaller cups, little cups, and cups. And I was magnified and added wisdom above all who were before me in Jerusalem, and indeed my wisdom stood by me. Ecclesiastes appears to not be suitable for the Lord, unless perhaps we connect it with this: And Jesus advanced in wisdom and age and favor (Luke 2:52). And: Therefore God has highly exalted him (Philippians 2:9). But when he says, those who were before me in Jerusalem, he speaks of those who governed the congregation of the Saints and the Church before his coming. If we understand the Scriptures spiritually, Christ is richer than all (as compared to men); if we understand them only carnally, the Synagogue is better understood than the Church. Therefore, he has taken away the veil that was placed over the face of Moses (Exodus 34), and he has made us see his face with full light (2 Corinthians 3). Moreover, for him to stand for wisdom means that the wisdom remained in him even when he took on flesh. He who has made progress in wisdom, wisdom does not stand still for him; but he who does not receive progress does not increase even by moments, but always remains in fullness, he can say: And wisdom stood by me. And all that my eyes asked for, I did not withhold from them; I did not prevent my heart from any joy, because my heart found joy in all my work. And this was my portion from all my work. The eyes of the soul and the mind desire a spiritual contemplation, which the ignorant sinner prohibits his heart from true joy. Therefore, the Ecclesiastes gave himself entirely to this, and in this world, he compensated for light tribulations with eternal glory. For this is our portion, and an everlasting reward, if we labor here for virtues. And I looked back at all the works that my hands had made, and in the labor in which I had toiled. Whoever works diligently and carefully in all things can say this. And behold, all is vanity, and the will of the spirit. And there is no abundance under the sun. Just as he considered all things as worthless, which are under the sun, and diverse due to the variety of wills. And there is no abundance under the sun (Psalm 19:6). Christ has placed his tabernacle in the sun. Therefore, whoever has not yet reached the brightness, order, and constancy of the sun, in this Christ will neither be able to dwell nor to abound. And I looked back, in order to see wisdom, and errors and foolishness: for who among men can go after his king and creator? For in the things above, until that place where Scripture says: The eyes of the wise are in his head, I had comprehended everything with one speech, desiring to indicate the meaning briefly, and because of that, I had briefly touched upon some things in accordance with the ■ναγω■, now I ought to explain it according to what I had started. For indeed, in this place the sense is very different from the Septuagint interpretation. But he says that after condemned delights and pleasures, he returned to the seeking of wisdom, in which he found more error and foolishness than true and certain prudence. For a man cannot know the wisdom of his creator and king as clearly and purely as he knows it, who is the author. Therefore, we think rather than understand what is true, and we estimate rather than know. And I saw that there is an abundance of wisdom compared to foolishness, just as there is an abundance of light compared to darkness. Although, he says, I have perceived that wisdom of men mixed with error, and that it cannot flow as purely into our minds as it does into our king and creator; nevertheless, I recognized that there is also a great difference between it and foolishness, as much as day can differ from night, light from darkness. The eyes of the wise are in their head, and the fool walks in darkness. And I know that the same fate happens to them all. The one who becomes a perfect man and deserves to have Christ as his head will always keep his eyes on Christ, and raising them up high, he will never think of earthly matters. When these things are so, and there is such a great distance between the wise and the fool, that one is compared to daylight and the other to darkness, the former raises his eyes to the heavens, while the latter lowers his to the ground. Suddenly, this thought came to me: why do the wise and the foolish share the same end, why do they suffer the same afflictions, the same fate, the same death, and the same sorrows oppress both of them. And I said in my heart, as the fool's fate, so it will also happen to me; why then have I been so wise? And I spoke in my heart, that this also is vanity. For there will be no remembrance of the wise or the fool forever, since in the days to come both will be forgotten. And how will the wise man die with the fool? I said, the wise and the fool, the righteous and the wicked, will all die the same way, and they will all experience the same evil in this world. So what advantage is there for me in being wise and working harder than others? Again, thinking and carefully considering within myself, I realized that my opinion was in vain. For the wise and the foolish will not have a similar memory in the future, when the consummation of the universe comes: and they will not be held in equal outcome, for one will go to refreshments, and the other will proceed to punishment. More clearly in this place, the Septuagint translators rendered the Hebrew sense, although they did not follow the order of the words: And why have I become wise? Then I spoke abundantly in my heart, for the fool speaks from abundance: for this too is vanity, because the memory of the wise man does not remain with the fool forever, and so on. Manifestly proving that his previous foolish opinion was false, he testifies that he spoke foolishly and erred, because he had felt that way before. And I hated life, because the work that is done under the sun is evil to me, for all is vanity and a chasing after the wind. If the world is in the power of the evil one, and even in this mortal body the Apostle laments, saying: Wretched man that I am, who will deliver me from this body of death? (Rom. VII, 24). Therefore, rightly does he hate everything that is done under the sun. For compared to the bliss of paradise and that life in which we enjoyed the spiritual fruits and delights of virtues, we are now like prisoners in a dungeon and in a valley of tears, eating bread in the sweat of our face. And I hated all my toil in which I toiled under the sun, seeing that I must leave it to the man who will come after me. And who knows whether he will be wise or a fool? Yet he will be master of all for which I toiled and used my wisdom under the sun. This also is vanity. It seems that wealth and possessions can be taken back, as in the case of a rich man who suddenly dies, leaving everything to an heir who may be wise or a fool, and who knows how they will use the fruits of our labor. What happened to Solomon also happened to Roboam: for he did not have a son worthy of his inheritance. From this we understand that even a father's son is not worthy of inheritance if he is foolish. But to me, who contemplates more deeply, it seems to speak of spiritual work, that a wise man labors in the Scriptures day and night, and writes books, so that he may leave a memorial of himself to his descendants, and yet they still fall into the hands of fools, who frequently, according to the perversity of their heart, seize the seeds of heresies from them, and calumniate the labors of others. For if the sermon now is about bodily riches, why was it necessary to speak about labor and wealth: And he shall rule over all my labor, in which I have labored, and in which I have become wise under the sun? What wisdom is there in gathering earthly riches? And I turned to consider all my labors that I had labored at under the sun, and behold, all is vanity and a pursuit of the wind, and there is no profit under the sun. For who is there of all men, that labors with the wisdom, and knowledge, and skillful work under the sun, and yet his portion passes to a man who has not labored in it? This also is vanity and a great evil. For what happens to man in all his labor and in the striving of his heart, which he labors at under the sun? For all his days are sorrows, and his occupation is vexation, and at night his heart does not rest; this also is vanity. He speaks above about an uncertain heir, because it is unknown whether he will be a foolish or wise master of another's labors. Now indeed he repeats the same thing, but in it there is a different meaning, that even if he leaves his substance and labors to a son, a relative, or a friend, nevertheless the matter returns to the same circle, so that one may enjoy the labor of another, and the sweat of the dead may be the pleasure of the living. Let each person consider and they will see how much they compose books by labor, how...

Often let him turn his pen again, [to write] those things worthy of being read; (From Horace, Satires, Book I, Satire 10). and let him give his share to the man who has not labored. For what, as I have already said, do wisdom, knowledge, and virtue pertain to the riches of the earth, in which he has testified to himself to have labored, when it belongs to wisdom, knowledge, and virtue, to trample on earthly things.

It is not good for a man, unless he eats, and drinks, and shows the good of his soul in his labor. And indeed I have seen this, because it is from the hand of God. For who will eat, and who will spare without Him? For God has given wisdom, and knowledge, and joy to the good man before His face, and He has given solicitude to the sinner, that he may increase and gather together what is given to the good man before the face of God. But even this is vanity and presumption of spirit. After I examined everything and realized that nothing is more unjust than one person enjoying the labor of another, it seemed to me that this is the most just thing in all matters and almost a gift from God, that each person should enjoy the fruits of their own labor, eating and drinking and, for a time, saving the wealth they have accumulated. For it is a gift from God to grant such a mind to a righteous man, that he may himself consume what he has sought through cares and sleepless nights. On the other hand, it is the wrath of God upon the sinner to gather wealth day and night and never make use of it, leaving it behind for those who are righteous in the sight of God. But even this, he says, carefully examining and seeing that all things end in death, I judged to be most vain. These things, meanwhile, according to the literal meaning, so that we do not seem to pass over the simple sense entirely, and while we pursue spiritual riches, to despise poverty in history. For what good is it, or what gift of God, to desire and snatch away pleasure with one's own resources, and to turn another's labor into one's own delights: and to think that this is a gift of God, if we enjoy the miseries and labors of others? Therefore, it is good to consume true food and true drink, which we find in the divine Scriptures from the flesh and blood of the Lamb. For who can eat or refrain when necessary without God? He who commanded that what is holy should not be thrown to dogs (Matthew 7:6), and teaches how provisions should be given to servants in due time (Matthew 24:45); and according to another interpretation, it is found that only as much honey should be eaten as is sufficient (Proverbs 25:16). But God gives wisdom, knowledge, and joy to a good man; unless he is good and corrects his own manners by his own free will, he does not deserve wisdom, knowledge, and joy, according to what is said elsewhere: Sow for yourselves in righteousness, reap in the fruit of life, enlighten yourselves with the light of knowledge (Hosea X,12, according to the LXX). For righteousness must be sown before, and the fruit of life must be harvested, and then the light of knowledge can appear. Therefore, as God gave wisdom in front of him, and so on, by forsaking the sinner to his own will, he caused the gathering of riches, and stitching together pillows with wicked doctrines from here and there. When the holy and pleasing to God man sees this, he understands that they are vain and composed of presumption. It is not surprising that he said: He gave anxiety to the sinner, and so on. For it is necessary to refer this to the sense I have often discussed: Therefore, it is given to him to have anxiety or affliction because he is a sinner, and the cause of the affliction is not in God, but in the one who sins willingly.

(Chap. III.)

(Chapter III.) It is the time of all things, and the time of every thing under the heavens. The uncertain and fluctuating state of human condition has been taught in the previous chapter: now it wants to show that all things in the world are contrary to it, and nothing stands perpetually, except for those things which are under the heavens and within time, because other spiritual substances are not contained by the heavens or time.

There is a time to give birth and a time to die. A time to plant and a time to uproot what is planted. There is no doubt that both the birth and death of humans are known and predetermined by God, and it is the same to give birth as it is to plant: to die, and to uproot what is planted. But because we read in Isaiah: We conceived and gave birth, and we brought forth from Your fear, O Lord. It must be said that once this birth, which is born out of fear, begins to love God, it dies. Perfect love casts out fear (1 John 4:18). The Hebrews understand all this, which is written about the opposition of times, until that place where it says: 'A time for war, and a time for peace' is understood about Israel. And because it is not necessary to explain and understand every verse, briefly touching on the broader discussion, leaving it to the reader's intelligence. There was a time for begetting and planting Israel, a time for dying, and a time for leading into captivity. A time for killing them in Egypt, and a time for delivering from Egypt. A time for destroying the temple under Nebuchadnezzar, and a time for building under Darius. A time for mourning the city's destruction, and a time for laughing and dancing under Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah. A time for scattering Israel, and a time for gathering together. A time for being encircled like a belt and girdle by God's people of Judah, and a time for leading them into the Babylonian captivity, and there rotting away across the Euphrates. Read περὶ ζώμας (lumbare) of Jeremiah (Jerem. XIII, 1 seqq.). A time to seek and save, and a time to lose, and a time to cast away. A time to tear apart Israel, and a time to mend again. A time to silence the Prophets, now in Roman captivity, and a time to speak to them, then when even in a hostile land they did not lack God's consolation and address. A time of love, when He loved them under their fathers, and a time of hate, for they laid hands on Christ. A time of war, when they will not repent, and a time of peace in the future, when the fullness of the Gentiles has come in, all Israel will be saved. A time to kill, and a time to heal. And a time to kill is also a time to heal, as it is written: I will kill, and I will make alive (Deut. XXXII, 19). He heals while provoking to penance. He kills, according to that sense: In the morning I would slay all the sinners of the earth (Psal. C, 8). A time to destroy, and a time to build. We cannot build good things unless we first destroy bad things. Therefore, this word was given by God to Jeremiah, that he should uproot, and dig, and destroy; and afterwards, build and plant (Jeremiah 1). A time to weep, and a time to laugh. Now is the time to weep, and in the future to laugh: Blessed are they that weep, for they shall laugh (Luke 6:21).

There is a time for mourning, and a time for dancing. Therefore, in the Gospel, those are reproached to whom the Lord says: We have mourned for you, and you have not wept; we have sung, and you have not danced (Luke 7:32). It is necessary to mourn for the present, so that later we may be able to dance with that dance with which David danced before the ark of the Covenant; and displeasing to the daughter of Saul, he pleased God even more (2 Samuel 6).

There is a time to scatter stones and a time to gather stones. I wonder how the eloquent man said something ridiculous in this place: He says it is about the destruction and building of Solomon's houses, that men now destroy, now build: some gather stones for constructing buildings, others tear down those that have been built, according to that saying of Horace (Epist. lib. II, ep. 1):

He destroys, he builds, he changes squares into rounds. He boils, and goes against the order of life. Whether he said this correctly or incorrectly, I leave it to the judgment of the reader. Let us follow the order of the previous explanation: Saying that it is the time to scatter and gather stones, according to what is written in the Gospel: God is able to raise up children of Abraham from these stones (Matthew 3:9). The time for scattering the pagan people, and the time for gathering them back into the Church. I read in a certain book (according to the Septuagint translators, who said: 'There is a time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones') the severity of the ancient Law tempered by the grace of the Gospel. For the Law is rigid, unkind, sparing no one, killing the sinners. The grace of the Gospel has mercy and incites to repentance. And this is the time for casting away or gathering stones, that stones are cast in the Law and gathered in the Gospel. Whether this has truly been said or not, let it be attributed to its author.

There is a time to embrace and a time to refrain from embracing. According to simple understanding, the meaning is clear, as the Apostle says in the same words: Do not defraud one another, except perhaps by agreement for a limited time, that you may devote yourselves to prayer (1 Cor. 7:5), to give attention to children, and again to self-control. Or there was a time to embrace, when that sentiment prevailed: Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth (Gen. 1:28). And it is time to be far from the embrace, when it comes: Time is restricted. It remains, so that even those who have wives may be as if they do not have (1 Corinthians 7:29). But if we desire to ascend to higher things, we will see wisdom embracing its lovers: Honor her, for it is said, and she will embrace you (Proverbs 4:8), and she will hold you closer in her arms and embrace. Furthermore, since the human mind cannot always strive toward the sublime, and think about divine and higher things, nor constantly be in contemplation of heavenly matters, but sometimes indulge in the needs of the body; therefore, it is time to embrace wisdom, and hold it more tightly, and it is time to relax the mind from the contemplation and embrace of wisdom, so that we may attend to the cares of the body, and to those things that our life needs without sin.

Time to acquire and time to lose. Time to guard and time to discard. Under different discourses, the same meaning is now, as before and after, in that which it says: Time to destroy and time to build. And then: Time to tear and time to sew. For just as the synagogue is destroyed in order to build the church, and there is a division from the law in order for the Gospels to be sewn together, which each Gospel writer accomplished by consulting the testimonies of the law and the prophets regarding the coming of the Lord: so there was also a time to seek and guard Israel, a time to lose and discard it. Indeed, a time to seek the people from the nations, and a time to lose the people of the Jews. A time to keep the believers from the nations, and a time to cast away the unbelievers from Israel.

There is a time for silence, and a time for speech. I believe in the Pythagorean philosophy, which dictates silence for five years, and then allows the learned to speak. It is said that this practice originated from their decree. Let us also learn to refrain from speaking, so that later we may open our mouths to speak. Let us remain silent for a certain time, and hang on to the words of our teacher. Nothing appears to be right for us, unless we learn it, so that after much silence, we may become masters of our disciples. Now truly, due to the daily worsening of the world's faults, we are teaching in the Churches what we do not know. And if, by the arrangement of words or by the prompting of the devil, who is a supporter of errors, we have stirred up the applause of the people, we consider ourselves to know against our conscience, what we could persuade others of. We do not learn all skills without a teacher; only this one is so cheap and easy that it does not require an instructor.

There is a time for loving and a time for hating. A time for loving after God, children, wife, relatives, and a time for hating them in martyrdom, when relentless piety opposes them for the confession of Christ. Or certainly a time for loving the Law, and the things that were commanded by the Law, circumcision, sacrifices, Sabbath, new moons, and a time for hating them, with the grace of the Gospel succeeding. Moreover, this can also be said, since now we see through a glass in an enigma (I Cor. XIII, 12), that the present time is for loving, and the future time will come, when, seeing face to face and making progress for the better, we will begin to hate and despise what we loved.

It is the time of war, and the time of peace. As long as we are in the present age, it is a time of war: but when we have migrated from this age, the time of peace will come. For in peace there is the place of God, and our city Jerusalem, which has received the name of peace (Ps. LXXV, 3) . Therefore, no one should now consider themselves safe: in the time of war, we must prepare and handle weapons, so that once victorious, we may find rest in peace. The abundance that exists is a result of people's work, in which they themselves toil. I have observed the occupation that God has given to the children of men, so that they may be occupied with it. God has made all things good in their time, and He has also put eternity in their hearts, so that man cannot discover the work that God has done from beginning to end. It is not unknown to me what has been said by many in this place, that God has granted occupation even to the teachers of perverse doctrines in this present age, so that the mind of man may not grow idle. And this is the good that God has done in His time, yet they are unable to comprehend the nature and knowledge of things. But I have been taught by a Hebrew, who is well-versed in the Scriptures, as follows: Since everything falls apart in its own time, and there is a time for destruction and building, weeping and laughing, being silent and speaking, and all the other things that are said about time, why do we foolishly strive and exert ourselves, thinking that the labors of a short life are perpetual? And we are not satisfied according to the Gospel, to be concerned with the evil of the day and not to think about tomorrow (Matthew). For what more can we have in this age by working, in which only this has been given to humans by God, that one person may have one thing and another another, in which they may be taught and exercise themselves? For indeed, everything that God has made is good, but good in its own time. It is good to be awake and to sleep; yet it is not always good to be awake or to sleep, for it is good for each thing in turn, as God has ordained. Moreover, God has given the world for humans to inhabit, that they may enjoy the changes of the seasons and not seek the reasons for the natural things, how all things came to be created. Therefore, He has made various things to grow, remain, and change from the beginning of the world to its end.

I know that it is not good, except to be joyful, and to do good in his life. And indeed every person who eats, and drinks, and shows goodness in all his work, is a gift from God. Therefore, man has been given as a cultivator and tenant of the world, so that he may enjoy the brief time of his life, and with the hope of a longer age cut off, he may look upon all that he possesses as if he were about to set off to other things, and may do as much good as he can in his life: nor is it in vain that he is tormented by thoughts of accumulating wealth. No one can believe that they can gain more from their own work than food and drink, and if they have spent anything from their possessions on good works, this alone is a gift from God. From these, not, as some think, for luxury and pleasure, and for despair, according to that of Isaiah: Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die (Isaiah 22:13), we are provoked like animals; but according to the Apostle: Having food and clothing, we are content with these (1 Timothy 6:8), so that whatever we can have above this, we may consume in supporting the poor and giving to the needy. Furthermore, because the flesh of the Lord is true food, and His blood is true drink, in accordance with the interpretation, this alone we have as a good in the present age, if we eat His flesh and drink His blood, not only in the mystery (Eucharist), but also in the reading of the Scriptures. For true food and drink, which is taken from the word of God, is the knowledge of the Scriptures. And let no one think that the prophecy of Balaam applies to this: There will be no sorrow or distress in Jacob (Num. 23:23). On the contrary, it is said to be the gift of God: If anyone eats and drinks and shows good in all his labor. For many are the tribulations of the righteous. And the Apostle complains about this, saying that he has labored and suffered in labor and pain (2 Cor. 2). But when the Lord delivers us from these in the future: There will be no labor in Jacob, nor pain in Israel. And how do we read that: Blessed are those who weep, for they themselves will laugh (Luke 6:21): and our laughter will follow the words of Job the prophet: The mouth of the truthful will be filled with joy (Job 8:21); so now we enjoy our labor in good works, through which we are constrained and pressed, so that later we may cease from laboring.

I have come to know that everything that God has made will exist forever; nothing can be added to it, nor can anything be taken away from it. God has made it so that people may fear Him. There is nothing new under the sun. The course of the sun, the cycles of the moon, the dryness of the earth, the greenness of the trees, all were born and created with the universe. And thus God has ordered all things by a certain reason and has commanded the elements to serve human needs, so that people, by seeing these things, may understand His providence (or prudence) and fear God, as they observe the equality, course, order, and constancy of creation. For the invisible things of God are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, his eternal power also and divinity (Rom. I, 20). But if we wish to read with the preceding finite sense, as if from the beginning: And God made it so that they might fear from his face, this sense is: God made all things so that men might fear from him, that they might deviate once God has ordained, to another. He wisely tempered it, saying: That they might fear from his face (Ps. XXXIII, 17). For the face of the Lord is against those who do evil.

What is, that which has been? It is the same as what is and what will be, for they have already been: and God will seek him who endures persecution. Whether past, present, or future, they themselves have been, are, and will be all things that we perceive. The sun that now rises, before we were in the world, it was, and after we have died, it will rise again. But we have named it the sun, so that from this we understand that the rest are the same as what has been. But if they seem to perish through the condition of death, they do not perish, because they grow again when revived, and nothing perishes forever, but is reborn and as it were revived with interest. For this is what he says: And God will seek him, who endures persecution; which is better expressed in Greek as καὶ ὅτι ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ διωκόμενου, that is, what has passed, what has been expelled, what has ceased to exist. But if this is said of all things in the world, there is no doubt that a dead person is reborn. But if anyone pleases to read from a different starting point: And God seeks him who suffers persecution, let him use this testimony in the persecution of the Gentiles, to console him who perseveres in martyrdom. And because all, according to the Apostle (II Tim. III), who desire to live piously in this world, suffer persecution, let them have consolation, because God seeks the one who patiently suffers persecution, just as He seeks the blood of the slain, and He comes to seek what is lost, and He carries the wandering sheep on His shoulders and brings it back to the flock (Luke XIX, XV). And still I have seen under the sun a place of judgment: there is impiety; and a place of justice: there is iniquity. I said in my heart: God will judge the just and the wicked; because there is a time for every will and for every work there. The meaning is clear, but it is obscured by the cloud of interpretation. Under the sun, he says, I sought truth and judgment, and I also saw that even among the judges themselves, truth does not prevail, but bribes. Or else, I assumed that something of justice was taking place in the present age, and that the pious would be rewarded for their merit now, or the impious punished for their wickedness: and on the contrary, I found something different than what I expected. For I saw the just suffer many evils here, and the impious reign for their wickedness. But afterwards, conversing with my heart and considering, I understood that God does not judge now in parts and individuals, but reserves judgment for the future time so that all may be judged equally, and receive according to their will and deeds there. For this is what it says: 'There is a time for every desire and every deed; and there, that is, in judgment, when the Lord begins to judge, then truth is to come, now injustice reigns in the world.' We read a similar statement in the Book of Sirach, which is titled 'The Wisdom of Sirach': 'Do not say, 'What is this?' or 'What is that?' for everything will be sought in its own time.'

I said in my heart concerning the speech of the sons of men, that God separates them, and to show that they themselves are like beasts. For the fate of the sons of men and the fate of animals is the same. As one dies, so does the other; both have the same breath, and there is no advantage for man over animals, for all is vanity. All go to one place; all are from the dust, and all return to dust. And who knows if the spirit of the sons of men goes upward, and if the spirit of the animals goes downward to the earth? It is not surprising that in the present life there is no distinction between the righteous and the wicked, and that virtues have no power, since everything is subject to uncertain fate. Even between animals and humans, they seem to be no different in terms of the worthiness of their bodies, and they share the same condition of birth and the same fate of death. Likewise, let us proceed to the light and let us be dissolved into dust. But if this seems to be the case, that the spirit of man ascends to heaven, and the spirit of animals descends to the earth, by what certain authority do we know this? Who can know whether it is true or false what is hoped for? However, he says this, not because he thinks the soul perishes with the body, or that a place is prepared for both animals and humans, but because before the coming of Christ, all things were equally led to the underworld. Hence, Jacob also says that he will descend to the underworld (Gen. XXXVII, and XLIV). Both Job, pious and impious, complain about being detained in Hell (Job. VII and XVII). And the Gospel testifies to the great chaos that is interposed among the dead, and to Abraham with Lazarus, and the rich man in torment (Luke XVI). And truly, before Christ opened those fiery wheels, and the gates of paradise with the thief, the heavens were closed, and the lowliness of the spirit of both man and beast was confined. And although it seemed that one thing would be dissolved, another would be reserved; nevertheless, it mattered little to perish with the body or to be held in the darkness of hell.

Let us examine each item, and briefly discuss the different style of speech in their proper order ((or, let us dissolve)). I said in my heart, concerning the eloquence of the sons of man, that God chose them. This alone, he says, God willed to be between humans and animals, because we speak, they are mute, we express our will with words, they are sluggish in silence. And although we are so different from beasts in speech, it is still shown to us that, according to the fragility of the body, we are like livestock. Just as an animal dies, so does a human, and one breath is for all, and this air by which we are nourished. For it says this: And one spirit is for all, and there is nothing more for a human than for an animal. Lest we think this is also said about the soul, he added: All things are made from the earth, and they will return to the earth. From the earth, however, nothing else is made except the body. And specifically about the body it is said: You are dust, and to dust you shall return (Gen. III, 11). But what seems to be blasphemous is this: Who knows whether the spirit of the sons of men goes upward, and whether the spirit of the animal goes downward to the earth? He does not contend that there is no difference at all between animals and humans in terms of the dignity of their souls, but by adding the word 'who' he wanted to demonstrate the difficulty of the matter. For the pronoun 'who' in the Holy Scriptures is always understood not as referring to the impossible, but to the difficult. So there: Who will declare his generation? (Isa. LIII, 8). And in the fourteenth psalm: Lord, who shall dwell in your tabernacle, and who shall rest in your holy mountain? (Psal. XIV, 1), and so on. And in Jeremiah, although it is different in Hebrew: He is a man, and who will know him? (Jerem. XVII, 9). Therefore, among humans and animals, the only difference is that the spirit of man ascends to heaven, and the spirit of the beast descends to the earth, and it is dissolved with the flesh: if, however, any man who is skilled in Ecclesiastical and heavenly disciplines, and a certain supporter of a doubtful matter. These are the words as they stand. But as for spiritual understanding: Because the Lord will save both men and animals (Psalm XXXV, 7); and in another place: I am like a beast before You, and I am always with You (Psalm LXXII, 23); and in all the prophets, men and animals are said to be saved in Jerusalem, and the land of promise is to be filled with flocks and herds; who knows whether the holy one, who is worthy of being called a man, ascends to heaven, and whether the sinner, who is called a beast, descends to earth? For it can happen in the uncertain state of this life, and in its slippery condition, that the just person falls, and the sinner rises, and sometimes it happens that the one who is more reasonable and educated in the Scriptures, that is, a man, does not live carefully according to his knowledge, and is led to the underworld, and each simpler and more rustic person, who is said to be comparable to a beast, lives better and is crowned with martyrdom and becomes a dweller of paradise. And I saw that there is nothing better for a person than to be happy in their work, for this is their lot. Who can bring them to see what will happen after them? As for us, we have set our minds to see what will happen after us. Symmachus, in his interpretation, has made it clearer, saying: to see the things that will happen after this. Therefore, there is nothing better in this life than for a person to be happy in their work, giving to the needy, and preparing treasures for themselves in the kingdom of heaven. This is the only portion that neither thief nor robber can possess, nor can a tyrant take it away, and it follows us after death. For when this life is dissolved, we cannot once again enjoy our labors or know what will happen in the future. Otherwise, influenced by my previous mistake and believing that there is no difference between humans and animals, I was led astray by this wrong opinion to say that nothing is good except for seizing present pleasure. For once we have been dissolved by death, we cannot enjoy these things from which we have departed ungrateful. Others have interpreted what he says about who will bring him to see those things which will happen after him for the sake of that understanding, so that they said it is better for man to enjoy his own labors; because this alone could take away from his substance. When death comes, he does not know with what heir he will die, whether he will enjoy his own wealth as a worthy or unworthy person.

(Chap. IV) (Chapter 4). And I turned and saw all the injustices that occur under the sun, and behold the tears of those who endure injustice, and there is no one to console them, and in the hands of their oppressors is their strength, and there is no comfort for them. After this reflection, I turned my mind and my eyes to see the oppressors and those who endure injustice. And behold, those who are unjustly oppressed, crying tears that they are only allowed to have in times of calamity, reveal the injustice of their situation, but they cannot find a comforter. And by how much greater the misery is, and the inconsolable pain, the slanderers see themselves as stronger in their wickedness. And this is the reason why they are unable to be comforted. This place is more fully explained by David in Psalm 72, and Jeremiah elaborates on it in his book. And I praised the dead, who are already dead, more than the living, who are still alive. And better off than both of them is the one who has not yet been born, who has not yet seen the evil work that is done under the sun. In comparison to the miseries that oppress mortals in this world, I judged the dead to be happier than the living, according to the words of Job in his dispute with the dead. There they rest, weary of body, along with those who were once imprisoned, now at peace, not hearing the voice of the oppressor (Job 3:17-18). However, better off are these two, namely the living and the dead, than the one who has not yet been born. For one still suffers evils, another has escaped as if naked from a shipwreck. Furthermore, the one who has not yet been born is happier in that he has not yet experienced the evils of the world. Now this is said, not because the one who has not yet been born exists before being born and is happier in that he is not yet burdened by the body, but because it is better to not exist at all, to have no sense of substance, than to exist or live unhappily. And the Lord speaks about Judas, signifying his future torments: It would have been better for that man not to have been born (Matt. XXVI, 24): because it would have been better for him not to exist at all, than to suffer eternal torment. However, others understand this passage in the following way: Those who say that those who have died are better than those who are alive, even though they were sinners before. For those who are still alive are said to be in battle and to be kept as if imprisoned in the body; those who have truly died are already secure, and have ceased to sin. Just as John, who was greater than all men born of women, is lesser than he who is the smallest in the kingdom of heaven, and freed from the burden of the body, does not know how to say with the Apostle: Wretched man that I am, who will deliver me from the body of this death? (Rom. VII, 14) But it is better than these two to be the one who is not yet born, nor has seen the evils by which men are oppressed in the world. For our souls, before they descend into these bodies, are among the heavenly beings and are blessed as long as they are held in the celestial Jerusalem and the angelic choir. And I saw all the labor and at the same time all the virtue of the work: because the rivalry of a man is from his companion; and indeed, this is vanity and presumption of the spirit. I turned again to other things, and I saw all the strength and glory of those who labor, and I realized that the good of one is the evil of another, while the envious person is tormented by another's happiness, and the glorious one is exposed to traps. For what is more vain, what is more unstable, and thus more futile, than for men to weep not over their own miseries or mourn their own sins, but to envy those who are better? A foolish person folds their hands and eats their own flesh (Prov. XXIV). This is someone who is described as lazy in Proverbs, holding their chest with their hands. They quickly experience poverty, and hyperbolically speaking, they eat their own flesh because of excessive hunger. They think it is better to have a handful of grain and live idly and lazily, rather than working with both hands. However, the whole point of this is to show that both the person who works and has something to show for it, and the person who wants to live peacefully, are vulnerable to envy and poverty respectively. And both are miserable, as one risks everything for wealth while the other is consumed by poverty. Certainly, one who envies the happiness of others, and is as if carried away by a frenzy of the spirit, and receives envy into their own bosom, and nourishes it in their heart: they consume their own soul and flesh. For the more happy they see the one whom they envy, the more they waste away and pine, and gradually drip with zeal and spite. In another sense: Hands are often received for works, as in this case: The word of the Lord that was made in the hand of Haggai (Haggai 1:1), whether his or this prophet's, did such works so as to be worthy, in whose work the word of the Lord was made. This also agrees with the words of David: 'Blessed be the Lord, my rock, who trains my hands for battle' (Psalm 144:1). Therefore, the foolish one has embraced his hands, that is, he has contracted them and did not want to extend them, thus not eating the labors of his hands that he does not have; but rather his own flesh, living according to the wisdom of the flesh, and nourishing himself with the works of the flesh. A handful with rest is better than the abundance of handiwork and the presumption of the spirit. It is better to have a little with righteousness than the many riches of sinners. And in Proverbs: Better is a little with righteousness than great revenues with injustice (Prov. XVI, 8). Righteousness elegantly has rest, while injustice has labor. And because the singular number is always accepted in good, but double in evil: therefore, a handful has rest, while two hands full of labor. And I turned myself, and saw vanity under the sun. There is one, and there is not a second, and indeed he has no son, nor brother, and there is no end to all his labor. And his eye is not satisfied with riches: and for whom do I labor, and deprive my soul of goodness. But even this is vanity, and it is a very evil affliction. I turned to others, and saw that they toil more than necessary, gathering wealth by fair means and foul, and not enjoying what they have gathered, possessing all things, yet being consumed by riches, saving for others, and not enjoying the fruits of their own labor, especially when they have neither son, nor brother, nor close relative who seems pious and deserving of their reserved labors. Therefore, nothing is found to be more empty than that man who accumulates wealth without knowing to whom he will leave it. Indeed, we can understand this according to the earlier interpretation both of those who write books and leave them to picky readers. Some interpret this passage from what it says: 'There is one, and there is not a second,' concerning the Savior, that he descended alone and without any companion to save the world. And although many are children of God, and are called his brothers by adoption, yet no one has been found worthy to be joined to him in this work. Whose labor has no end, bearing our faults and sins, and grieving for us; and his eye is not satisfied with riches, always desiring our salvation, and the more he sees someone sin, the more he urges them to repentance.

Two are better than one, because they have a good reward for their toil. For if they fall, one will lift up his fellow. But woe to him who is alone when he falls and has not another to lift him up! Again, if two lie together, they keep warm, but how can one keep warm alone? And though a man might prevail against one who is alone, two will withstand him—a threefold cord is not quickly broken. After the toils and miseries in which he who seeks wealth without a sure heir tortures himself, now the conversation turns to friendship. And it is said, what good there is in the companionship of friends, and in common solace, because one is supported by the help of the other's downfall, and he who has a faithful friend may better bear the cares of home and find rest in the same night, than he who relies solely on his own resources. And even if a stronger enemy arises against one, the weakness of the other is sustained by the solace of a friend. And the more two differ in one respect, if they are united by love, the more the companionship of three is also valuable. For true love, unharmed by any envy, increases in strength and power as it grows in number. And let these words be said simply for now.

Moreover, because in the previous section we have placed the intelligence of certain individuals above Christ, the rest must also be discussed in the same order. It is better to have two together than one. For it is better to have Christ dwelling within oneself than to dwell alone and be exposed to the snares of the adversary. Indeed, the reward of partnership is immediately shown in the very benefit of companionship. For if one falls, Christ raises up his partner. Indeed, woe to him who, when he falls, does not have Christ raising him up. And if even one falls asleep, that is, if he has been dissolved by death, and he has Christ with him, he is warmed and quickly revived. And if the devil stands stronger in resisting man, man will stand, and Christ will stand for his man, for his comrade. Not because the power of Christ alone against the devil is weak, but because free will is left to man, and as we strive, he himself becomes stronger in the battle. But if the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit also come, this fellowship is not immediately broken. However, although it is not immediately broken, it will eventually be broken. And in the apostle Jude there was indeed a triple cord: but because Satan entered into him after the morsel, that cord was broken. Moreover, what he says above: 'And indeed if two persons sleep, there will still be warmth for them: how will one person be warmed?' Let us take the example of Elisha, who contracted himself with a boy, and slept, and warmed his body, and thus revived the one rising (2 Kings 4). Therefore, unless Christ has slept with us, and has rested in death, we are not able to receive the warmth of eternal life. A poor and wise child is better than an old and foolish king, who does not know how to provide for the future. For he comes from the house of the conquered into the kingdom, because he was also born poor in his kingdom. I have seen all living beings who walk under the sun with the second adolescent, who will rise for him. There is no end for every people, for all who came before them. And indeed, the latter will not rejoice in him: but even this is vanity and the presumption of the spirit. Symmachus translated this passage as follows: It is better for a poor man to have wisdom than for an old and foolish king who does not know how to anticipate change. One exits the prison to reign: the other, although born a king, is oppressed by poverty. I have seen all the living who walk under the sun with the second youth who rises in his place. All the people who existed before both of them are infinite: and their descendants will not rejoice in him. But both the breeze and the gust of wind exist. My Hebrew friend, whom I often mention, when he read Ecclesiastes with me, testified that Baracibas, whom they greatly admire, delivered these things about the current place. The inner man is better, who arises in us after the fourteenth year of puberty, than the outward man, who is born from his mother's womb, who does not know how to refrain from vice, and who went forth from the house of conquerors, namely the mother's womb, in order to reign in vices. He who also became poor in his own power, committing all evils. I saw those who lived in the first man, and after turned to the second man, that is, who was generated as the descendant of the first: I understood that all sinned in the first man, before the second was born and became two men. But because they turned to better things, and after the letter Y of the philosophers, abandoning the left path, they strove toward the right summit, and followed the second, that is, the last man, they will not rejoice in him, that is, in the first. These two men the Apostle attests, and Leviticus does not remain silent: 'If a man, if he wishes this or that' (Leviticus 17). The holy man Gregory, Bishop of Rome, pupil of Origen in the Commentary on Ecclesiastes, understood this passage as follows: 'I indeed prefer a poor and wise young man over an old and foolish king, who never comes to mind that it is possible for anyone of those he has bound to come out of prison and for himself to fall from his unjust power thereafter.' For it sometimes happens that those who were under a wise youth are without grief, yet in such a way that they were previously under an old king. For those who were born later, because they did not experience past evils, cannot praise the youth who later arose, deceived by a perverse opinion and the attack of an opposing spirit.

Laodiceus the Interpreter, trying to express great matters in a brief speech, also spoke here in his usual manner: 'The sermon of the Ecclesiast, he says, is about the change of goods into evils, trying to portray the foolish person who, not considering the future, takes pleasure in the present and transient as if they were great and eternal. And after describing the various things that happen to people in their lives and change, he introduces a general judgment about death, that an innumerable multitude perish and gradually come to an end and pass away, each one leaving another in their place, and in turn that one leaving another as their successor dies.' »

Origen and Victorinus did not differ much in their opinions. After that general sentiment, which is clear to everyone: that it is better to be a poor and wise young man than an old and foolish king, and that it often happens that the wise man, even when he is released from the king's prison by his wisdom, rules as a wicked dictator, while the foolish king loses his power, which he held: they interpreted this passage about Christ and the devil, meaning that they believe Christ to be the poor and wise young man. Regarding the boy, it is written: 'Behold, it is a great thing for you to be called my son' (Isaiah 49:6). And regarding the poor, because he became poor even though he was rich (2 Corinthians 8:9). And regarding the wise, because he advanced in age and wisdom and grace before God and men (Luke 2:52). He was born in the reign of the old man. And therefore he says: 'If my kingdom were of this world, my ministers would certainly fight for me, so that I would not be handed over to the Jews. But now, my kingdom is not from this world' (John 18:36). In his foolish old man's kingdom, who showed him all the kingdoms of the world; and their glory, the best boy was born, and from the house of prisoners, of whom Jeremiah speaks in Lamentations, saying: That he might humble under his feet all the prisoners of the earth (Lam. III, 34), he went out to the kingdom, and went to a distant region, and against those who did not want him to reign over them, after some time the king returned. Therefore, foreseeing by the spirit, Ecclesiastes saw all the living who can be participants of the youth, saying: I am the life (John XIV, 6), and the foolish old king being dismissed, to follow Christ. And at the same time, two peoples from Israel are signified. The former, who existed before the advent of the Lord, and the latter, who will accept Antichrist instead of Christ: that the former is not completely rejected (for the first Church was gathered from the Jews and the Apostles) and in the end, the Jews, who will accept Antichrist instead of Christ, will not rejoice in Christ.

Guard your steps, when you go to the house of God, and draw near to listen. The sacrifice of fools is an abomination; for they do not know that they are doing evil. He gives precepts for life and does not want to offend us as we go to the church. It is not entering the house of God, but entering without offense that is praiseworthy. And if it were for everyone in the church of God to hear the sermon, He would never have added, 'Draw near to listen' (Exodus 24:2 and following). Finally, Moses alone approached to listen to God; the others were not able to approach. Those foolish ones who do not know the remedy for sin think they can satisfy God by offering gifts, and they are ignorant that this is also evil and sin, and they want to make amends not by obedience and good works, but by gifts and sacrifices that they have made. This is in agreement with what is said elsewhere: 'Obedience is better than sacrifice' (1 Samuel 15:21). And: I desire mercy, and not sacrifice (Hosea 6:6).

(Chap. V.) (Chapter 5) Do not hasten in your hour, and let your heart not hasten to speak a word in the presence of God, because God is in heaven, and you are on earth. For this reason, let your words be few, for a dream comes with a multitude of anxieties, and the voice of a fool with the multiplication of words. Many think that it is commanded in this place not to easily promise anything before God, and without considering our abilities, vow things that we cannot fulfill. For indeed God is present, and although He is in heaven, we seem to be on earth. However, we hear what we speak, and our foolishness is exposed by the multiplication of words. But others, understanding better, affirm this advice: let us not think or speak more about God than we are able, but let us acknowledge our weakness, that just as far as the heavens are from the earth, so our opinion is separated from His nature. Therefore, our words should be measured. For just as someone who has many thoughts frequently dreams about the things they think about, so too someone who desires to discuss more about divinity falls into foolishness. Indeed, it is like this: Our words should be few because even the things we believe we know, we see through a mirror and in an enigma, and we grasp them as if in a dream, which we consider ourselves to hold. And when we have spoken more (as it may seem to us), the end of our argument is foolishness. For from much talking we cannot escape sin. When you make a vow to God, do not delay in fulfilling it, for there is no pleasure in fools. Whatever you vow, fulfill it. It is better not to make a vow than to make one and not fulfill it. Simple understanding does not require interpretation. It is better not to promise than to make promises and not keep them, for they displease God and are regarded as foolish by others who do not fulfill their vows. And when it is said, 'There is no pleasure in fools,' it can be understood as 'There is no pleasure in fools' before God,' according to the words of the Apostle (1 Corinthians 16:22): 'And certainly, it was not the will of God that I should come to you now.' But if we wish to speak more carefully, it is prescribed to the Christian that he should fulfill his faith by works and not be like the Jews, who, promising and saying, 'We will do all that the Lord has commanded' (Exod. 24:3), worshipped idols. And after beating their servants and oppressing them with stones, they finally even killed the son of the head of the household. Therefore, it is better to weigh a double-minded opinion for a long time than to be easy with words and difficult in action. But he who knows his master's will and does not do it, will be beaten with many stripes. (Luke 12:47). Do not give your bone, so that you may make your flesh sin. And do not say in the presence of an angel, for it is ignorance; lest God become angry at your voice, and destroy the works of your hands. The Hebrew understands it this way: Do not promise what you cannot do. For words spoken do not pass in vain, but they are immediately carried by the present angel, who is the accompanying companion to each person, to the Lord. And you, who think to ignore God, by what you have promised, provoke Him to anger, so that all your works may be scattered. But in that which He says, 'Make not provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof,' He understood not that food is not to be provided for the flesh that it may not sin, as though He had said, 'Do not take food, that you may not sin'; but we understand it otherwise, viz. thus; that those are reproved who complain of their infirmity of the flesh, and allege that they are in a way necessitated by the necessities of the flesh to do what they do not wish to do, according to that of the apostle (Rom. 7:15): 'For that which I do, I know not: For what I would, that do I not.' Finally, in that place where it says: 'Do not speak in the presence of an angel, for it is ignorance,' the eagle, interpreting the Hebrew word 'Segaga' for ignorance, translated it as '■κο■σιον', which means involuntary or not spontaneous. For if you say this, you provoke God as the author of evil and sin, so that if He is angry and sees any good in you, He may take it away from your hands. Or certainly, perceiving such things, He may deliver you to a reprobate mind so that you may do things that are not fitting.

Because in the multitude of dreams and vanities, there are many words. But fear God. And this place is called in Hebrew. Do not do what has been said before, nor easily believe in dreams. For when you see different things during the night's rest, and your soul is disturbed by various terrors or incited by promises, disregard those things which are dreams. And fear only God. Whoever believes in dreams will surrender to vanities and follies. Otherwise: Because I have said and commanded: Do not give your mouth to cause your flesh to sin, and to seek various excuses: I now bring forward this, since in the dream of this life, and in the image of a shadow of a cloud, in which we live, we can find many things that seem plausible to us, and excuse our sins. Therefore, I warn you to only beware of this, not to think that God is absent, but to fear Him and to know that He is present in all your works: and that you, being created with free will, are not compelled, but willing to do what you do.

If you see the slander of the poor, and the robbery of justice, and injustices in the region, do not be surprised at the matter: for the Most High watches over the Most High, and he is higher than them, and the king has more power over all the land in the cultivated field. The tunic of Christ woven from above (John 19, Luke 8), could not be torn by those who crucified Him: and He who had cast out demons by whom the Savior had ordered to leave wearing the clothes of the Apostles. And so we strive, O men of the Church, not to tear our own garments, nor to sew together patches according to our own ideas, but to keep the one garment of the disputation intact, and to follow the same meaning and order. Above, it was said: Thou shalt not say in the sight of an angel, 'Ignorance is,' lest God be angry with thy voice and the rest; and he spoke against those who denied that human affairs are ruled by providence. Therefore, since a question was arising against this precept, why the just endure calumny and why judgments are unjust in the whole world, and why God does not punish, now he brings forward and answers what could be opposed, saying: If you see a poor man calumniated, who is blessed in the Gospel, and matters are carried on by force, not by justice, do not wonder, and let it seem something new to you. Indeed, the highest God looks down upon the highest ones, he who has placed his angels above judges and kings of the earth, who certainly can forbid injustice and have more power on earth than any human authorities. But since he preserves judgment in the end, and in the consummation of the world, when the harvest is ripe and the reapers come, he will command that the wheat be separated and the tares be given to the fire: therefore he now waits and delays his judgment, as long as this field of the world is cultivated. But as for the field being interpreted as the world, the Lord explained in the parable of the weeds and the wheat (Matt. XIII).

Whoever loves silver will not be satisfied with silver, and whoever loves wealth will not enjoy it. This too is vanity. For with the abundance of wealth comes the abundance of those who consume it, and what is the advantage to the owner except to see it with his own eyes? Wherever we place silver, according to the ambiguity of the Greek language, it can also refer to money: ■πρ■πιον indeed signifies both. Moreover, Tullius refers to those who have more money, i.e., possessions, as being called wealthy. For thus they used to call them in ancient times. But gradually, through misuse, the name has been applied to something else. Therefore, the avaricious person is described as someone who is never satisfied with wealth, and the more they have, the more they desire. Flaccus also agrees with this sentiment, saying (Horace, Book 1, Epistles, epistle 2, to Lelius): The greedy person always wants more. And it is a well-known fact that greed does not decrease with poverty or abundance. Therefore, as Ecclesiastes says, wealth is of no use to the possessor unless it allows them to see what they have. For the greater their possessions, the more servants they will have to devour the accumulated wealth. However, the possessor should only see what they have, as they cannot consume more food than one person can.

If one has eaten a little or a lot, sweet sleep comes to the worker. But the richness of the wealthy person does not allow them to sleep. Furthermore, there is still conversation about the wealthy and the greedy, and it is compared to the worker, who can eat a little or a lot without worry, because they digest any food with the labor of their work and enjoy sweet sleep. However, the wealthy person, bloated with excess and torn in different directions by thoughts, cannot sleep, with their stomach burning in the confines of indigestion and with uncooked food. Moreover, because sleep and the common end of this life are called rest, the rest of those who work in the present and engage in good works according to their ability will be better than their wealth, of which it is written: Woe to you, the wealthy, because you have received your consolation (Luke 6:24).

There is a very terrible burden that I have seen under the sun: wealth being hoarded by its owner to his own harm. And those riches perish in an unfortunate turn of events. He fathers a son but has nothing in his hands. As he came from his mother's womb, naked shall he return, to go as he came; he shall take nothing for his toil that he may carry away in his hand. This is also a very terrible burden: just as he came, so shall he go. And what gain is there to him who toils for the wind? And all his days he will eat in darkness, with much indignation, and with weakness, and with anger. Join with what follows: The Preacher describes a rich man who cannot even enjoy his own wealth and frequently comes into danger because of it, and he will not leave it to his heir, whom he has gathered; but he himself and his son, just as they came naked, so they will return to the earth, and nothing will accompany them of their labors. For is it not the worst of afflictions to be tormented by thoughts of wealth and toil in vain for perishable riches, which we cannot take with us when we die, only to acquire them in sadness, groaning, anger, and quarrels? And this is according to simple perception. But if we raise ourselves to a higher level, it seems to me that we can say the same about philosophers or heretics, who accumulate the riches of their doctrines to their own detriment, and are unable to obtain any lasting benefit for themselves or leave any lasting fruit for their followers. But both they themselves and their disciples return to the earth and lose the riches from him who said: I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and the discernment of the discerning I will thwart (1 Corinthians 1:19). Truly, just as they have come out of their mother's womb, that is, from the corrupt Church and its opposite, of which it is written: And the Jerusalem that is above is free, and she is our mother (Galatians 4:26), so they will go naked into the wind, and labor in vain. Those who have fallen away seeking to scrutinize (Psalm 64:7), and are carried about by every wind of doctrine, neither have light, but in darkness they consume their sacraments. They are always in weakness, always in anger, storing up wrath for themselves on the day of wrath, without having a merciful God.

Behold what I have seen to be good and fitting: to eat, to drink, and to find enjoyment in all the toil with which one toils under the sun the few days of his life that God has given him, for this is his lot. Everyone also to whom God has given wealth and possessions and power to enjoy them, and to accept his lot and rejoice in his toil—this is the gift of God. For he will not much remember the days of his life because God keeps him occupied with joy in his heart. In comparison to the one who feeds on his own resources in the darkness of his worries and endures with great weariness of life, he says that the one who enjoys the present is better. For here there is even a small pleasure in enjoying: but there only the magnitude of anxiety. And he gives reasons why the gift of God can be enjoyed by riches. For, he will not remember much of the days of his life. For indeed God calls him in the joy of his heart: he will not be in sadness, he will not be troubled by thoughts, drawn away by joy and present pleasure. But it is better to understand, according to the Apostle (I Cor. X, 3), that spiritual food and spiritual drink are given by God, and to see goodness in all our labor, because through great labor and study we are able to contemplate true goods. And this is our part, to rejoice in our study and labor. Although it may be good, yet it is not fully good until Christ is manifested in our life. Therefore, God will not remember much of the days of our life. Also, note that here περισπασμός is understood in a better sense as being occupied with true spiritual joy.

(Chap. VI.)

(Chapter VI) There is an evil that I have seen under the sun, and it is widespread among mankind. A man to whom God has given riches, wealth, and honor, so that he lacks nothing for his soul of all that he desires, yet God does not give him the power to enjoy them, but a stranger enjoys them. This is vanity and a grievous evil. If a man fathers a hundred children and lives many years, so that the days of his years are many, but his soul is not satisfied with life's good things, and he also has no burial, I say that a stillborn child is better off than he. For indeed he comes in vanity, and departs in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness. Moreover, he has not seen the sun, nor known it, more restful is he than the other. And if he were to live a thousand years twice over, and not see goodness, do not all things hasten to the same place? He describes the greedy rich man, and asserts that this evil is frequent among men, that nothing of those things which are considered goods in the world is lacking for him, and nevertheless he tortures himself with the most foolish stinginess, preserving things to be devoured by others. And he adds hyperbolically, that even if someone were to have a hundred children, and not, like Adam, nearly a thousand, but live for two thousand years, and his soul wastes away with desire and greed: the one who is aborted is of much worse condition, who as soon as he is born, perishes. For he neither sees evil, nor good: but this one, when he possesses good things, is always tormented by sadness and thoughtfulness; and the aborted one has more rest than that greedy long-lived one: and yet both are carried off by an equal end, while both here and the other are snatched away by a similar death. This can also be understood about Israel, to whom God has given the Law, and the Prophets, the Testament, and the promise, with the Savior saying: "For the kingdom of God will be taken away from you and given to a people producing its fruits" (Matthew 21:43). All these things have been translated to a foreign and alien people, and they see their blessings but do not enjoy them. And yet, we who were considered as illegitimate and new by those who boasted about their ancestors, saying "Our father is Abraham" (John 8:39), are also hastening to the same place as them, that is, to the judgment of God. But what he says in the middle: And indeed he had no burial; whether this signifies that that rich man did not think about his own death, and while he possesses everything, he is also greedy in the construction of a tomb; or whether it means that he is often killed by plots because of his wealth, and is cast out unburied; or, which I think is better, that he has done nothing good in his life, from which he can obtain a memory for himself among future generations, and not pass his life in silence, like animals, when he had the opportunity to appear that he had lived.

All of man's labor is in his mouth, and yet the soul is not satisfied. For what is wiser than a fool, what is poorer, except to know how to go against life? Everything that men labor for in this world is consumed by the mouth, and is handed over to the stomach to be digested. And when it has pleased the throat for a little while, it seems to give pleasure for as long as it is contained in the throat. But when it passes into the belly, the distinction among food ceases. And after all these things, the soul of the eater is not satisfied: whether it seeks what it has already desired, what it has eaten, and both the wise and the foolish cannot live without food, and the poor person seeks nothing else but how ((Al. what)) it can sustain the instrument of its body, and not perish from starvation: or whether the soul derives no benefit from the nourishment of the body, and food is common to both the wise and the foolish, and the poor person goes there where it has perceived wealth to be. But it is better understood about the Ecclesiastical man, who, being educated in the heavenly Scriptures, has all labor in his mouth, and his soul is not filled, while he always desires to learn. And in this the wise man has more than the fool: because when he feels himself to be poor (that poor man, however, who is called blessed in the Gospel), he hastens to grasp those things which are of life, and walks the narrow and narrow way which leads to life, and is poor in evil works, and knows where Christ, who is life, dwells. The appearance of the eyes is better than walking in the soul. But even this is vanity and presumption of the spirit. Symmachus clearly interprets this, saying: It is better to provide than to walk as one pleases; that is, it is better to do everything according to the sense, which is the eye of the soul, rather than follow the will of the heart. For this is to walk in the soul, as Ezekiel says: Those who walk in the will of their own heart. Certainly, it accuses him of arrogance and self-satisfaction, and claims that the one who foresees everything is better than the one who is pleased with nothing unless he himself has done it: than which nothing is worse, and more empty than every wind. Furthermore, here the presumption of the spirit is explained by Aquila and Theodotus as the passion of the wind, but Symmachus explains it as the affliction of the spirit. Moreover, it should be known that among the Hebrews, both spirit and wind are called by the same name, that is, Ruha.

What is to come is already named, and known, because he is a man and cannot be judged by a stronger one. It is openly preached about the coming of the Savior, that which is to come before he is seen in the body, is already named in the Scriptures and known to the prophets and saints of God, because he is a man and according to this, being a man, he cannot compare himself to the Father. And in the Gospel he says: The Father who sent me is greater than I (John 14:28). And in the following, it is commanded that we not seek beyond what is written about it for ourselves, lest a person want to know more than the Scripture has testified. For since we are ignorant of our state, and our life passes like a shadow, and the future is uncertain, it is not advantageous for us to inquire about things greater than we can. Some think that in this place it is signified that God already knows the name of all those who are going to be, and the human body surrounding them: and that a person cannot respond against their maker why they were made in such a way. For the more we inquire, the more we reveal our own vanity and superfluous words: and it is not that free will is taken away from us by God's foreknowledge, but rather that the causes precede why each thing is done in such a way. For there are many words multiplying vanity. What is more for a man? For who knows what is good for a man in life, in the number of days of his vain life? And he will make them like a shadow, because who will announce to a man what is after him under the sun? When, he says, a man is ignorant of his own state, and whatever he seems to know and perceive, the truth does not hold as it is, but he sees through a mirror, and shadow, and image, and does not know the future, and in much speaking does not escape sin; he should keep silence in his mouth, and believe that he has come, who is written, how, and how great, and what manner he has come, without seeking.

(Chap. VII.)

(Chapter VII) Good is the name above good oil, and the day of death above the day of his birth. Consider, he says, O man, your short days, and that you will quickly cease to exist, your flesh dissolved: make for yourself a longer reputation, so that just as an ointment delights the nostrils with its fragrance, so future generations may be delighted by your name. This was clearly interpreted by Symmachus, saying: A good name is better than well-scented ointment. Indeed, it is customary for the Hebrews to call a good ointment 'oil'. But when he says, 'And the day of death over the day of his birth', or rather, he shows this, that it is better to exit the world, and be free from troubles and the uncertain state of life, than to enter the world and endure all these things. Or certainly, what sort we will be in death is known: but in the beginning of birth, what sort we will be in the future, is unknown. Or, what birth binds to the body, death releases.

It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting, for death is the destiny of every person, and the living should take it to heart. It is more profitable to go to a funeral than to go to a feast, for there we are reminded of our condition and human fragility by the presence of a corpse. In a feast, however, even if we appear to have some fear, we lose it in the joy. Symmachus explained the last verse more clearly, saying: And the living will consider it in their minds. From these things it is clear that in the fact that he above seemed to approve of food and drink, he preferred not the pleasure of all things, as most people wrongly assume, but compared to greed and excessive frugality, even if it is brief, it is more, if one enjoys his own wealth even for a moment. For never would he have preferred sadness to mourning, if he thought that drinking and eating were of any importance.

Anger is better than laughter, because a sad face will be healed. Laughter dissolves the one who laughs: anger seizes and corrects. Let us be angry with ourselves, if ever we sin, let us be angry with others. Through sadness, indeed, the soul will become better, as Symmachus has interpreted. And therefore: Woe to those who laugh now, for they themselves will mourn (Luke VI, 25). The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning, and the heart of fools is in the house of mirth. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted (Matthew 5:5). Samuel also mourned for King Saul all the days of his life (2 Samuel 16). And Paul says of those who refused to repent after committing various sins that they should mourn (2 Corinthians 12). Therefore, let the heart of the wise go to the house of such a man who rebukes the sinner, in order to bring him to tears, who incites him to weep for his own sins, and not go to the house of mirth, where the teacher flatters and deceives, where he seeks not the conversion of the listeners, but applause and praise. Such a teacher is praised, rich in speech, rich in words, who, because he is satisfied, therefore receives his comfort. Finally, even the following verses agree with this exposition. For he says:

It is better to heed the rebuke of the wise, than to listen to the song of fools. For just as the sound of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of a fool. But even this is vanity. For it is better to be corrected by a wise person, than to be deceived by flattering adulation. This is similar to that: Wounds from a friend are better than kisses from an enemy (Prov. XXVII, 6). For just as the sound of burning thorns under a pot, produces an unpleasant noise, so do the words of a careless teacher fail to benefit their listeners, either in addressing the cares of the world, which are interpreted as thorns, encouraging them, or in preparing them for a future fire. Symmachus in response to what we have posited: Just as the sound of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of fools, interpreting this meaning that we have discussed above, says: For through the sound of the inexperienced, someone may be bound in chains, that is, a listener is more connected to the sound of such teachings, while each person is bound by the chains of their own sins. A calumny disturbs a wise man, and it destroys the heart of his fortitude (Prov. IX, 8). Now, take a wise man in progress, according to this: Rebuke a wise man, and he will love you. For a wise man, being perfect, does not need any rebuke, nor is he disturbed by any calumny. Let us use this verse, if ever we see a just and wise man enduring calumny, and being troubled by the injustice of judgment, and God does not immediately come to his aid. For, indeed, in the translations of the Septuagint, Aquila, and Theodotion, 'perdit cor ε■τον■αζ α■το■' is translated as 'loses the heart of his strength or vigor.' Symmachus says, 'perdit cor Matthana (),' which means 'loses the gift.' He combines both the Hebrew word and its interpretation, creating the sense that is written elsewhere: 'They blind the eyes even of the wise' (Deut. XVI, 19).

It is better to be at the end of a conversation than at the beginning. The conclusions are better in speech than the introduction. In these, the anxiety of the speaker ends, in the other, it begins. Or certainly like this: Whoever starts to listen to a conversation and goes to the teacher, is at the beginning; but whoever listens to the end is accomplished and perfected. But it can also be understood in this way: While we are in this world, whatever we know, is the beginning; but when what is perfect comes, we will be in the last and completed things. The Hebrew person explained this passage in the following verse: It is better to consider the end of the matter than the beginning, and to be patient rather than being carried away by the frenzy of impatience. We also learn from this little saying that there is no wisdom in people, since it is better to be silent than to speak; and because when the speech is finished, the hearer reflects within himself what was said: but when we begin to speak, we have not yet received any benefit.

Patience is better than a high spirit. Because it had previously given way to anger, saying: Anger is better than laughter, lest we think that anger, which is praised in passion, should now completely remove anger. For there, anger was set for the correction of sinners and the instruction of the lesser ones, but here it restrained impatience. However, patience is necessary not only in difficulties but also in happier times, so that we may not be elevated more than is proper. It seems to me that the one who is now called 'exalted in spirit' in the Gospel is opposed to the poor in spirit, who is also placed in the beatitude. Do not hasten in your spirit to become angry, because anger rests in the heart of fools. Not that it permits anger to be delayed, therefore now it says: Do not hasten in your spirit to become angry; but because when anger is raging and fresh, it is more easily appeased when delayed and can be taken away. And because anger is always joined with pride, desiring revenge, it said that patience is better than the one who is high-spirited, and now it gives a sign of foolishness: because even if someone is considered powerful and wise, if they are irritable, they are demonstrated to be foolish: for anger rests in the heart of fools. Do not say: what has happened: because the previous days were better than these; for you have not wisely asked about this. Do not prefer the old age to the present, because God is the creator of both. Virtues make good days for the living, vices make bad ones. Therefore, do not say that the days were better under Moses and Christ than they are now. For even at that time there were many unbelievers, and their days became evil, and now many believers are found, of whom the Savior says: Blessed are those who have not seen, and have believed (John 20:29). Otherwise: Thus you should live, so that the present days are always better for you than the past, lest when you begin to decline little by little, it may be said to you: You were running well, who hindered you from obeying the truth (Gal. V, 7)? And again: Having begun in the Spirit, are you now being made perfect by the flesh (Ibid. III, 3). Otherwise: Do not say that the times of Moses were better than the times of Christ, of the Law than of Grace. For if you wish to inquire into this, you act foolishly, not seeing how much the Gospel differs from the Old Testament.

Wisdom is good with an inheritance, and more for those who see the sun, because as the shadow of wisdom, so is the shadow of money: and what is more, the knowledge of wisdom will give life to its possessor. The wise man with riches has greater glory than the wise man alone. Some need wisdom, others need wealth, and he who is wise but not wealthy can indeed teach what is good, but sometimes cannot provide what is asked for. And therefore he says: Just as wisdom is a shadow, so is money a shadow, that is, just as wisdom protects, money also sometimes protects. And so as not to seem to have taken away from wisdom by subjecting it to a chance good (for it is not in our power to have wealth, which the unjust often possess more of), he demonstrates that wisdom is greater, saying: And moreover, the knowledge of wisdom will give life to the one who possesses it. In that, he says, wisdom is greater than wealth, because it sustains him who possesses it without any resources.

Some people interpret this passage as follows: He has placed inheritance in the place of good conversation, through which we are heirs of God, and co-heirs with Christ. Therefore, the Preacher wants to teach how great is the difference between those who deserve to see the sun of righteousness and have wisdom with good conversation, and those who, without wisdom, have only borrowed the study of life and conversation. Indeed, Daniel also shows this, saying: Those who understand my words will shine like the stars of heaven (Dan. XII, 3). As Theodotius translated: Like the splendor of the firmament. But those who make my words, like the stars of heaven. But we should take the shadow of silver, or money, according to interpretation, from which talents and minas are gathered in the parables of the Gospel (Matthew 25, Luke 19), so that when we are under the shadow of wisdom, and under the shadow of such silver: The sun does not burn us during the day, nor the moon during the night (Psalm 120). But this can also be said, because our life on earth is like a shadow. And the spirit of our countenance is Christ the Lord, to whom we said: In his shadow we will live among the nations. (Lamentations 4:20). All our protection on this earth is like a shadow, whether it be wisdom or the aforementioned silver, until the day dawns and the shadows are removed. Symmachus, in his own way, has also interpreted this more clearly, saying: Just as wisdom protects, so does money protect. The following verse clearly encourages the pursuit of knowledge.

Look at the works of God, for who can adorn one whom God has overturned? And in this place Symmachus translated it as follows: Learn the works of God, for no one can correct what he diminishes, that is, it is enough for you to know and understand from the Holy Scriptures themselves, or from the contemplation of the elements, what has been done: but not to inquire into the causes and reasons why each thing has been done thus, or should have been done differently than it was. For example, if someone wants to ask why God spoke to Moses in such a way, saying, 'Who made the mute and the deaf, the seeing and the blind? Is it not I, the Lord?' (Exod. IV, 12). And let them ask: Why were the blind and the deaf and the mute created in this way, and similar things? In this place, let us take a testimony from the sixteenth psalm, in which it is said to the Lord: 'With the holy you will be holy, and with the perverse you will be perverse.' And it must be said that the Lord is holy with those who are holy, and is perverse with those who by their own will have been perverse before. Moreover, as it is written in Leviticus: 'If they walk contrary to me and will not listen to me, I will bring my fury upon them and I will chastise them seven times for their sins.' (Lev. 26:27). This can also explain why the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh. Just as the same heat of the sun melts wax and hardens clay, and the wax melts and the clay hardens according to their nature, so the divine operation of the signs in Egypt softened the hearts of the believers and hardened the unbelievers, who, according to their hardness of heart and unrepentant disposition, stored up wrath for themselves on the day of wrath from these wonders, which they did not believe when they saw them happening. Be good in a day of goodness, and in a day of evil, be watchful. Indeed, God has made it fitting for him to speak, so that man may not find anything after him. I know that I have heard in the Church from him, who was thought to have knowledge of the Scriptures, these verses explained. 'While you are in the present age, and can do good works, labor so that later you yourself may be secure in the day of evil, that is, in the day of judgment, and see others tormented.' For just as God has made the present age, in which we can prepare the fruit of good works; so He has also made the future age, in which no opportunity for good works is given. It seems indeed that He was advising when He spoke to those who were listening: but to me it seems that there is another meaning, which Symmachus also translated, saying: Be good on a good day and consider a bad day. For God has made this similar to this, so that man would not find something to complain against Him. And, he says, endure both the good and the bad as they happen to you. And do not think that the nature of good or evil is impure, when this world consists of opposing elements: hot and cold, dry and wet, hard and soft, dark and light, bad and good. But God has done this so that wisdom may have a place in choosing the good and avoiding evil, and so that free will may be left to man, lest he should say that he was generated by God as insensitive and foolish. Rather, God made him diverse for this reason, so that man could not complain about his own condition. At the same time, this testimony will be connected to what was said before, in which he says: Who can restore what God has corrupted?

I have seen everything in the days of my vanity. The righteous perish in their righteousness, and the wicked live long in their wickedness. To this, the Savior says in the Gospel: 'Whoever finds their life will lose it, and whoever loses their life for my sake will find it' (Matthew 10:39). The Maccabees were seen to perish for the sake of God's law and righteousness, and the martyrs shed their blood for Christ. Conversely, those who in that time ate pork and sacrificed to idols after the Lord's coming were seen to live in this world and persist in their wickedness for a long time. But God's patience is hidden, and now He afflicts the saints so that they may receive evil in their lives, and does not visit sinners for their wickedness, but rather reserves them as victims, so that He may restore eternal blessings to them and inflict perpetual evil upon them. The Hebrews suspect the just ones to perish in their righteousness, thinking that while they believe they are acting justly, they are offering foreign fire. And they curse the impious long-lived Manasseh for his wickedness, who, after being restored to the kingdom, lived a long time thereafter. Do not be overly righteous, and do not inquire too much, lest you become astonished. If you see someone strict and harsh towards all the faults of his brothers, that he does not forgive in a sinful conversation, nor does he forgive due to natural occasional laziness, know that this person is more righteous than is just. For when the Savior commands, saying: Do not judge, so that you may not be judged (Luke 6:37); and let no one be without sin, even if his life were only a single day, it is inhumane justice to not pardon the fragility of human condition. Therefore, do not strive to be overly righteous, for it is a heavy burden and a small burden is displeasing to the Lord. Thus, even among philosophers, virtues are found in moderation, and anything that is excessive, whether it be upward or downward, is considered a vice. Furthermore, when he says, 'Do not seek more, lest you become troubled,' or, 'Do not be amazed,' he knows our mind cannot fully comprehend wisdom and teaches us to acknowledge the measure of our own frailty. Finally, Paul also asked him, who could know more than a man, saying: Why do you still complain? For who resists his will? He answered: O man, who are you to answer God (Rom. IX, 19), and so on. For if the one who is introduced as questioning had heard the reasons for the question from the Apostle, he might have been stunned and felt the grace to be useless. For it is also a gift, according to the same Apostle, which does not profit the one to whom it is given. The Hebrews interpret this commandment, that is: Do not be overly righteous, concerning Saul who showed mercy to Agag, whom the Lord had commanded to be killed (1 Samuel 15). But also that servant from the Gospel (Matthew 18), whom the Lord had forgiven, and he himself did not want to forgive his fellow servant, can be related to this verse, that he had been overly righteous. Do not act wickedly or be foolish; why will you die before your time? As the Lord says: I do not desire the death of the one who dies, but rather that he turn back and live (Ezek. XVIII, 32): Once is enough to sin; we must rise up after a fall. For if they know, those who dispute with physicians, that the swallow feeds its young from its beak, and the wounded wild goat seeks dittany, why do we ignore that the medicine of repentance has been proposed for sinners? But when he says, in regard to Moses and Aaron, 'Lest thou die in the time not thine own.' (Num. XVI); we know that Core and Dathan, and Abiron by reason of the sedition against Moses and Aaron, were suddenly devoured by the gaping earth, and for a warning to others were judged even in this life before the day of judgement. Therefore, what he says is this: Do not add sins to sins, lest you provoke God even here to inflict punishment on you.

It is good to hold on to that. And indeed, do not let go of your hand from this; for whoever fears God will go out to all things. It is good to do good to the righteous, but also to do good to sinners is not unjust. It is good to support the members of the faith, but also to give to everyone who asks, it is a commandment. For whoever fears God, and imitates his creator, who rains upon the just and the unjust, hastens to do good to all, without regard for persons. Otherwise: Because this wretched life is constantly varied by different events, both adversities and prosperity, a just mind should be prepared and should seek the mercy of the Lord, so that whatever happens, it may endure with a balanced mind. For whoever fears God is neither lifted up by prosperity nor oppressed by adversities.

Wisdom strengthens the wise person, surpassing the power of ten who are in the city: for there is no righteous man on earth who does good and does not sin. Therefore wisdom strengthens the just and the help of all the rulers of the city exceeds him, because although someone may be just, as long as he is in this flesh, he is subject to vices and sins, and needs greater protection. Alternatively, the ten who have power and reside in the city are angels, who have reached the perfect number of ten, and assist the human race. But if someone considers all help, the greatest help is the wisdom, that is, of our Lord Jesus Christ. For after the angels said: We have healed Babylon, and it was not healed, let us abandon it, and everyone go to their own land (Jer. 51:8), then the master of physicians himself descended, and sprinkled us with his blood, and with the blood that was soaked with sins, which we had spent all our substance on physicians, he healed us with the touch of his hem (Luke 8). But He healed in the city, that is, in this world, and strengthened the wise, or, as the Seventy translated, helped. For to everyone who has, more will be given, and he will have abundance. However, because the man placed in sins was in need, and fixed in the deep mire, he needed greater assistance; therefore Wisdom itself came. Otherwise: Above, He had said that good must be done both to family and to strangers. Therefore, someone could answer: If I want to do good to everyone, I do not have from where I can do it. The righteous person cannot possess such great riches which usually abound more for sinners; therefore now he says: Assist those whom you cannot help with material things, with advice and comfort. For wisdom can provide more in times of distress than any great powers. And do this with prudence. Indeed, the balance of justice is great, and it is important to give to whom, and how much, and for how long, and in what way, either in a matter or in advice. And indeed, in all the conversations they will have, do not give your heart, for you will not hear your servant cursing you. For often your heart knows that you have cursed others. Do what is commanded, and with the help of wisdom, prepare your heart for good or evil, and do not care about what your enemies say about you, or what the opinion of strangers is. For it is not the behavior of a wise man to listen to a murmuring servant, or to lend an interested ear to what is being said about him in his absence. For if he does this, he will always be in trouble, and his anger will be stirred up by the muttering of a servant. So it is also the behavior of a wise man to follow the path of wisdom and not to consider vain rumors. But it teaches by another example that a just man should not care deeply about what people say, saying: How does your conscience know that you have spoken about many things and often detracted from others: thus you must also forgive those who detract from you. And at the same time it teaches that one should not judge easily, and that if you have a beam in your eye, you should not speak about the splinter in someone else's eye.

I have tried all these things in wisdom, and I said: I will become wise, but wisdom itself has become further from me, more than it was before, and its depth is so profound, who will find it? It is said that even the books of the Kingdoms testify (3 Kings 3 and 4) that all men have sought wisdom and have tried to reach its end, but the more they have sought, the less they have found, and they have been immersed in the midst of darkness, surrounded by the shadows of ignorance. Another way: A man who has been educated in the Scriptures, the more he begins to know, the more darkness arises for him in these things every day. Another way: The contemplation of wisdom in this life is seen in a mirror and in an image: therefore, when I reflect on revealing knowledge face to face with Him in the future, then I clearly recognize that I now widely differ from His knowledge.

I have traveled around and searched my heart, in order to understand, contemplate, and seek wisdom and reason, and to know the wickedness of fools and the error of the foolish. And I have found woman to be more bitter than death, she is a trap and her heart is like snares, her hands are like chains. The righteous will be delivered from her, but the sinner will be trapped by her. Because the Septuagint put it: I have traveled around and searched my heart, in order to understand, Symmachus interpreted it, saying: I have passed through all things with my senses, to know, learn, and investigate. Therefore, since the Preacher had said above that he had tried everything in wisdom, and the more he sought it, the further it eluded him; now he also says that he sought something else in his wisdom, namely, that in human affairs evil precedes all evils, and that those things which hold dominion in impiety, folly, error, and madness. And he says that he found woman to be the head of all evils: for through her, death entered into the world, and she captures the precious souls of men. For all adulterers, indeed, adulterate, as if their hearts like an oven: which causes the hearts of young people to fly away. And when the thought of the wretched lover comes to mind, it draws him towards the precipice: and it does not allow him to look back at his own feet, but like a snare, it entangles the heart of the young man with its bond. For his hands are bound. Concerning this, the eagle interprets: His hands are bound, which is said in the Hebrew language as Assurim. For it can advise, but it cannot force violence: nor can it draw those who are unwilling to itself. The righteous and good person in the eyes of God will be saved from it; but the sinner, captured, will be led to death. Let us not lightly think that Solomon presented this judgment about women: he speaks from experience. Therefore, indeed, he offends God because he is captured by women. And this is according to the literal meaning. However, according to spiritual understanding, we understand by 'woman' any sin in general, and wickedness that sits under the appearance of a woman in Zechariah on the lead talent (Zech. 5:7): or we figuratively understand 'woman' to mean the devil, because of his effeminate power; or certainly idolatry, and to come closer, the Church of heretics, which calls the foolish in mind to itself, so that he may accept stolen bread and stolen water, that is, false sacrament and polluted baptism.

Behold, I have found this, says Ecclesiastes, one by one, to find the number that my soul has been searching for, and I have not found it. Among a thousand men I found one, but among all these I have not found a woman. Only this I have found: that God made man upright, and they have sought out many schemes. This, he says, I have found, diligently searching through everything, that by gradually sinning and adding one offense to another, we accumulate a great sum of sins. Indeed, they translated Essebon () with a unanimous voice, according to the ambiguity of the Hebrew language, we can say both the number, the sum, the ratio, and the thought. But this, he said, my soul has sought to find out if a righteous woman can be found. And when I could hardly find a few good men, such that only one could be found out of a thousand, I could not find a good woman at all. For all have been led not to virtue, but to luxury. And because the heart of man is set to evil from his youth (Gen. VIII, 21), and almost all have offended God: in this ruin of the human race, woman is more prone to falling. About whom even the pagan poet says:

...Varium et mutabile semper Femina...(Virg. IV, Aeneid. V. 35.) Et Apostolus: Semper, ait, discentes, et numquam ad scientiam veritatis pervenientes (II Tim. III, 7). Et ne videretur communem hominum damnare naturam, et Deum auctorem facere mali, dum talium conditor est, qui malum vitare non possint, argute praecavit, et ait, bonos nos a Deo creatos: sed quia libero sumus arbitrio derelicti, vitio nostro ad pejora labi, dum majora quaerimus, et ultra vires nostras varia cogitamus. Alternatively: Considering the reason for every thing with me daily, I have not been able to find a thought that is not disturbed by perverse thinking from outside. However, among a thousand men, I found one man who is formed according to the image of the creator: and among not just any thousand, but among a thousand men: a number that a woman cannot fulfill. And among a thousand who have not approached a woman, and therefore have remained very pure. But all these things are to be understood in a tropological sense. For in many studious persons (or studies) who sweat through everyday meditation, a pure thought is scarcely found, and a man worthy of the name. We can take thoughts to be men, and works to be women, and say that a pure thought of someone can hardly be found. For, because they are administered through the body, they are always mixed with some kind of error. But as for what we have said interpreting the Hebrew word: One by one, in order to find a number, or a sum, or a ratio, or a thought: Symmachus has interpreted it more clearly, to find an order one by one. For what we usually refer to in an absolute and neutral way, that is what I sought, that is what I wanted to find, the Hebrews pronounce it in the feminine gender, as in the psalm: One thing have I asked of the Lord, this I will seek (Psalm 27:4), because it is one.

(Cap VIII)

(Chapter 8) Who, like a wise man, and who knows the solution of a word? The wisdom of a person will enlighten their face, and the strong will change their appearance. Above, it was taught that it is difficult to find a good person, and the coming challenge was answered: that good people are created by God, but have fallen into sin by their own choice. Now, God enumerates what good things He has given to a person, as if boasting, namely wisdom, reason, and providence, to know the hidden mysteries of God, to enter into the secrets of His heart with understanding. But he speaks indirectly about himself, that no one has been so wise as he himself, and no one has known the solutions to problems in the same way, and his wisdom has been praised by all the people, which has not only been hidden internally, but has also shone on the surface of his body and in the mirror of his face, and has painted the wisdom of his mind on his face for all men to see. They have translated 'seventy' for 'what we have set': Who knows the wise. And concerning that which we said: And the strong will change his face, they have added: And the shameless will be hated for his countenance. And truly, although there are many who promise wisdom, it is difficult to find someone who can discern the true wise person from those who only appear wise. And although there are many who claim to be able to solve the hidden meanings of the Scriptures, it is rare to find someone who discovers the true solution. But what follows: The wisdom of a person will illuminate his face, and the wicked will be hated for his countenance, we can explain it in this way, by quoting the words of Paul: But we all, with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord (2 Corinthians 3:18): and of the Psalmist who sings: The light of your countenance has been signed upon us, Lord (Psalm 4:7). But this man speaks of no wisdom except the wisdom of God. And when it is the wisdom of God, according to the capacity of man, it begins to be his, who has deserved to have it. Every heretic and defender of false doctrine is shameless. Finally, Marcion and Valentinus claim to be of a better nature than the Creator. And this could be somewhat acceptable, if they claimed to have hope of attaining this, and not already possess it.

I guard the mouth of the king and the language of the oath of God. Do not rush to leave his presence, and do not stand in evil words, because he will do whatever he wants. As the king says, having power: and who will say to him, What are you doing? Indeed, it seems to be commanding according to the Apostle, obedience to kings and authorities (Titus, 3:1), especially the Seventy Interpreters saying in the imperative mode: Guard the mouth of the king; but I think it is now said about that king, about whom David says: Lord, the king will rejoice in your strength (Psalm 20:1). And in another place, so that it might signify the unity of the Father and the Son in one kingdom, Scripture recalls: 'Give your judgment to the king, O God, and your justice to the king's son' (Psalm 72:1). 'For the Father judges no one but has given all judgment to the Son' (John 5:22). The Son, who is the King and Son of God the Father, is to be obeyed and His will is to be carried out. And this is what is written in the Book of Tobit: 'To conceal the mystery of the king is good' (Tobit 12:7). And especially he warns us not to question why God has commanded each thing, but rather to hasten to fulfill whatever mandate he sees fit, with a pious mind. And in the law of the Lord will be his will. However, the Septuagint translated it differently, saying: Do not hasten to walk away from his presence, whether in an oath or in a word of God: know that the oath of God is written in the divine volumes. Therefore, this oath, sacred and secret, from the word of God, we should not disclose to anyone, and bring it forth into the public, and quickly form an opinion about it. Not to be hasty like Moses to see the face of God, but to endure until He Himself passes by, and only then to behold His aftereffects. Also, let us understand the following: 'Do not stand in evil speech,' and the rest, as referring to one who is led astray by the error of heresy, or to one who, although having faith in the Church, is nonetheless overcome by sins, so as to be faithless. Do not persist in detraction, nor in vulgar language, luxury, greed, or lust. If you persist, the king of vices and sin, the devil, will work your destruction, and do whatever he pleases. The one who keeps the commandment will not recognize evil: and he knows the time and judgment of the wise heart. It should be noted that 'will not recognize evil' is used to mean that he will not tolerate or be involved in it. Indeed, it is written about the Savior: 'He who knew no sin, for us he made sin' (2 Corinthians 5: 21). Symmachus also interpreted the word in this way, saying: 'The one who keeps the commandment will not experience anything evil.' He ordered to preserve the king's command, and to know what, and why, and at what time he commands.

Since every business has its time and judgment. For the affliction of man is great upon him, because he does not know what will happen in the future; for who can declare it to him? Although different events may occur, and the righteous cannot know what will happen to him, nor understand the causes and reasons of individual things (for no one is conscious of the future), nevertheless he knows that all things are done by God for the benefit of men, and are not disposed without his will. For it is a great affliction for the human race, as the poet says (Aeneid. X, 501): The mind of men is ignorant of the fate and the future of chance, hoping for one thing and experiencing another: it waits for the enemy from one place and is wounded by the spear of another. But as for what the Seventy Interpreters and Theodotion have said: Because the knowledge of man has many things over him, in Hebrew it has malice, not knowledge: but because the Hebrew letters Res and Daleth, except for a small apex, are similar, instead of Raath (), they read Daath (), that is, instead of malice, knowledge. He will understand this better who has knowledge of the same language. Also, what is written at the end of these verses: Because he does not know what has happened; and what will happen after him, who will announce it to him? We have now translated word for word from the Hebrew language, so that we may know another meaning, namely that we can know neither what has passed, nor what will be future, as they are future. A man does not have power over the spirit, to prevent the spirit, and he does not have power over the day of death, and there is no escape in war, and wickedness will not save one who has it. Our soul is not in our power, so that it may not be taken away from us, and when the spirit departs to the kingdom of the Lord, it is of no avail to shut our mouths and try to retain our fleeing life. And when death, the enemy of our life, and the adversary comes, we cannot accept a truce. Nor do former kings, who once ravaged everything with their impiety, have power to face death: but we will be dissolved into ashes and earth. Therefore, there is no need to mourn if we cannot know the future, and we are often oppressed by unjust and powerful people, since all things end with death, and the proud and powerful, who have plundered everything, cannot retain their own soul when it is seized. In another way: The spirit, who orders everything, cannot be prohibited by anyone and receive laws to breathe. About which it is said above: The spirit goes round by going round. In the day of death, we are not powerful; for in the day of life, the enemy is easily avoided. Similarly, whoever is in war and does not have the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding, will not have release, of which it is said to the bride: Your releases are a paradise with the fruit of apples (Song of Songs 4). And because impiety will not save someone who has it, piety will save them from being condemned. Impiety can be called the devil, and piety our Lord Jesus Christ.

I have seen all of these things, and I have devoted my heart to every work that has been done under the sun. And I have seen how one person dominates another, to oppress them. And then I have seen the wicked buried, and they came out of the holy place and were praised in the city, because they had done such things. But even this is vanity. Because there is no consequence for those who do evil, therefore the hearts of the children of men are filled with them, to do evil. I have given," says the writer, "my heart to observe everything that happens under the sun, and especially this, that one person has power over another to afflict and condemn whoever they wish. Therefore, when I directed my mind to contemplate these things, I saw the impious dead with such an opinion, and thus buried, as if they were considered holy on earth; who even when they were alive, were thought worthy of the Church and the temple of God. Moreover, walking in pride, they were praised in their evils, as it is written: 'The sinner is praised in the desires of his soul, and he who does wicked things is blessed' (Ps. IX, 24). But this happens for the following reason: because no one dares to contradict the sinners, nor does God immediately avenge the wickedness, but He defers punishment while waiting for repentance. But sinners, because they are not immediately rebuked and corrected, thinking that judgment will never come, persist in wickedness. We can use this testimony against the bishops, who have received power in the Church, and scandalize those whom they should have taught and encouraged towards better things. Often, these individuals are praised in the Church after death and are publicly proclaimed blessed for actions they likely did not do, either by their successors or by the people. And this, therefore, is vain, for they do not hear as they have done, nor are they immediately corrected in their sin (for no one dares accuse the superior), thus, as if they are holy and blessed, and walking in the commandments of the Lord, they increase sin with sins. Accusing a bishop is difficult. For if he has sinned, he is not believed, and if he is convicted, he is not punished.

Because the sinner commits evil a hundred times, and it is prolonged for him. From this I understand that it will be good for those who fear God, who will fear His presence. For because the sinner sins excessively, as it were, a hundred times, God gives room for repentance and does not immediately punish him in his wickedness, but waits for him to turn away from his iniquity. I understand how kind and merciful God will be towards those who have fear of Him and tremble at His word. Symmachus translated this passage as follows: For the wicked sinner is dead, having been granted long-suffering. Moreover, I know that it shall be well with those who fear God, who have feared his presence. But there will be no good for the wicked, nor shall it endure for a long time, for they have not feared the presence of God. And because it is clear what this passage means, it must be said that the Hebrew word 'Maath' (), which the Septuagint translated as 'mortuus est' ('is dead'), we have used a hundred times, Aquila and Symmachus and Theodotion have interpreted it as 'mortuus est' ('is dead'), so that the meaning is, he who sinned and did evil, is dead: in that he sinned, he died immediately. But according to the Septuagint translators, if he is dead, as it is, we will read from then on, according to some, the sense here is: The sinner does not sin for the first time when it appears to commit a sin, but he has already sinned before: Sinners are alienated from birth, they have strayed from the womb (Ps. 58:4); and they seek to interpret what follows: They have spoken lies, but it does not seem to have a simple explanation: for it does not seem to have a logical consequence to say that children, sinners as soon as they are born, speak falsehood. And it is not good for the wicked, and may his days not be prolonged like a shadow, who does not fear God's face. He curses those who do not have the fear of God, and wishes that punishment is not delayed, but that they are immediately taken away by death and receive the torments they deserve. The Apostle speaks in a similar manner: I wish those who disturb you would be cut off (Galatians 5:12). And elsewhere: Alexander the coppersmith showed me many evil things; may the Lord repay him according to his deeds (2 Timothy 4:14). It is necessary to investigate how these things have been spoken kindly. This according to the truth of the Hebrew sense. But if anyone follows the Seventy Interpreters, who, as if beginning from another sense, said: 'And I also acknowledge that it will be good for those who fear God, that they fear him, and it will not be good for the impious, and their days will not be prolonged in the shadow, because they do not fear the face of God.' This he can say: 'Indeed, those things will happen, which I previously mentioned; however, I most clearly know that it will be good for those who fear the face of God. For the countenance of the Lord is upon those doing evil.' (Ps. 33:17). And the wicked will not prosper; for they do not fear the face of God, and their days will not be prolonged in shadow, that is, the days of their life, which are like shadows to the living. For it is not those who live a long time who prolong their days, but those who make them great through the magnitude of their good works. Therefore, Jacob, confessing himself as a sinner, says: 'My days are few and evil' (Gen. XLVII, 9). And in the psalm of confession, he says: 'My days have declined like a shadow' (Ps. CI, 12), and I have withered like grass. Not because he sought a long life in the present, in which everything we live is brief and shadow, and image: For in image man walks (Ps. XXXVIII, 7): but because he fears for the length of his life in the future, where true life is, to be shortened.

Vanity of vanities, says the Preacher, vanity of vanities! All is vanity. What does man gain by all the toil at which he toils under the sun? A generation goes, and a generation comes, but the earth remains forever. The sun rises, and the sun goes down, and hastens to the place where it rises. The wind blows to the south and goes around to the north; around and around goes the wind, and on its circuits the wind returns. All streams run to the sea, but the sea is not full; to the place where the streams flow, there they flow again. All things are full of weariness; a man cannot utter it; the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing. What has been is what will be, and what has been done is what will be done, and there is nothing new under the sun. Is there a thing of which it is said, "See, this is new"? It has been already in the ages before us. There is no remembrance of former things, nor will there be any remembrance of later things yet to be among those who come after. The Gospel gives the example of the rich purple-clad man and the poor Lazarus (Luke 16). The 72nd psalm also speaks about this: why do bad things happen to the righteous and good things happen to the wicked? As for what we have set forth: Vanity of vanities, which is done on earth. Symmachus translated it absolutely, saying: It is difficult to understand what is done on earth. The Hebrews interpret the righteous who experience bad things and the wicked who receive the works of the righteous as the sons of Aaron and Manasseh, respectively, indicating that those who were sacrificing perished, while this man, after so much adversity and captivity, was restored to power. And I praised joy; for it is not good for man under the sun, except to eat, and to drink, and to rejoice. And it will go with him from his labor in the days of his life, which God has given him under the sun. This we have interpreted more fully above, and now we say strictly: it is allowed to prefer, though briefly and quickly to be finished, the pleasure of eating and drinking to the hardships of the world, and to those things that seem unjust in the world: for this alone seems to man to have from his labor, if he enjoys even a little refreshment. But this interpretation approves as miserable those who are fasting, hungry, thirsty, and mourning, whom the Lord calls blessed in the Gospel (Matthew 5) if it is understood in the following way, as it is written. And so let us spiritually receive food and drink, and let us find joy in them, which we can scarcely find in the toil of our lives. That these things should be understood as we have said is demonstrated by the following verse, in which it says: I gave my heart to learn wisdom and occupation, that is, that people on earth may be occupied and may meditate on the Scriptures day and night, so that often sleep may flee from the eyes in the quest for truth.

Therefore, I gave my heart to know wisdom and to see the task that has been done on the earth. For even in the day and in the night, he does not see sleep with his eyes. And I saw all the works of God: because man will not be able to find the work that has been done under the sun, in which man has labored. So that he may seek it, but he will not find. Indeed, even if a wise man says he knows, he will not be able to find it. He who seeks the causes and reasons of things, why this or that has happened, and why the world is governed by various events: why one is blind and weak, another is born seeing and healthy; why this person has poverty, that person has wealth; why this person is noble, that person is dishonored; gains nothing but torment in his own questioning, and holds disputation as torture, yet still does not find what he seeks... And when he claims to have known these things, then he begins in ignorance and remains in profound error. However, it shows that there are reasons for all things and justice for why each thing happens in a certain way, but these reasons are hidden and cannot be comprehended by humans.

(Chap. IX.) (Chapter 9) I have given all this in my heart, that I may consider everything: because the just, and the wise, and their works are in the hand of the Lord. And indeed love, and indeed hatred: no man knows all things in their face. Even Symmachus interpreted this passage more clearly, saying: I have set all these things in my heart, that I may weigh everything: for the just and the wise, and their works are in the hand of God. And moreover, man does not know friendships or enmities: but all things are uncertain before them, because similar things happen to both the just and the unjust. Furthermore, here is the sense: Indeed, I have given my heart to this and I wanted to know whom God would love and whom He would hate. And I found that the works of the righteous are indeed in the hand of God, and yet whether they are loved by God or not, they cannot know now, and they fluctuate in doubt, whether they endure what they endure for proof or for punishment. Therefore, in the future, they will know, and in their countenance is everything, that is, the knowledge of this matter precedes them when they depart from this life, for then is judgment, and now is the struggle. And whoever endures hardships, whether they endure them through the love of God, like Job, or through hatred, like many sinners, is now uncertain. In all events, one, just and unjust, good and evil, clean and polluted, sacrificing and not sacrificing. Thus good as a sinner, thus swearing as fearing an oath. Those things which are by themselves neither good nor evil, but are called middle by the wise of the world (because they happen equally to the just and the unjust) disturb even the simple, why they happen in this way, and therefore they do not consider it to be a judgment, since there is a future distinction in all things, and here all things are confused. But when he says that the outcome is the same for everyone, both the righteous and the wicked, whether it signifies hardships or death, therefore neither the knowledge of God's love nor hatred is in them. Also, sacrificing and not sacrificing, and the other things that are enumerated as opposites, are to be understood spiritually, according to the words: A contrite spirit is the sacrifice to God (Psalm 50:19). This is the worst thing under the sun: that there is one event for all. But also the hearts of the children of men are full of evil, and there are errors in their hearts throughout their lives, and afterwards to the dead. For who is there that communicates with all the living? And Symmachus has interpreted this more clearly, saying: But also the hearts of the children of men are filled with evil and insolence according to their hearts in their lives. But their ultimate end comes to the dead. For who can continue to live forever? Scripture repeats the same meaning that we discussed a little while ago, that when all things happen equally to everyone, and there is no distinction in enduring good or evil, or at least when we are taken from this world by equal death: nevertheless, we are still filled with errors, insolence, and wickedness, and after all these things we are suddenly snatched away by death, and we no longer can have fellowship with the living. Certainly, because common hardships oppress both the just and the unjust, therefore people are provoked to sin. And yet, after all their efforts, which are in vain unless they know, they descend into hell.

There is confidence, because a living dog is better than a dead lion: for the living know that they shall die, but the dead know nothing, and they have no more reward; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, their hatred, and their envy have already perished; neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun. For he had previously said, the heart of the sons of men is filled with evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead. Yet further he observes, that while men live they may be righteous, but after death there is no opportunity for doing good. For a living sinner can become better than a dead righteous person, if they choose to adopt their virtues. Or certainly, someone who boasted in wickedness, power, and insolence, and has died, can become better than the poorest and most despised person. Why? Because the living, in fear of death, can perform good deeds; but the dead are unable to contribute anything to what they once carried with them in life, and everything is enveloped in oblivion, as it is written in the psalm: 'I have been forgotten, like the dead from the heart' (Ps. XXX, 13). But both their love and their hatred, and their envy, and all that they could have in the world, ends with the coming of death: nor can they do anything justly anymore, nor sin, nor add virtues, nor vices. Although some may contradict this explanation, asserting that even after death we can still grow and decline, and in that which he now says: And there will be no part for them still in the world, in everything that has been done under the sun, they understand it in such a way as to say that in this world, and under this sun that we perceive, they have no communion; but rather have it under another world, of which the Savior says: I am not of this world (John 8:23); and under the sun of justice; and not excluding the opinion, which contends that after we have departed from this world, we can still harm rational creatures, and deserve punishment. The Hebrew interprets this verse differently, in which it is said: For a living dog is better than a dead lion, so it is explained among his own people: It is more useful for even an ignorant person who is still alive and can teach, than a perfect teacher who is already dead. For example, to understand the dog as any one of many teachers: and the lion as Moses, or any other prophet. But because we do not like this explanation, let us move on to something greater: and let us say that the Canaanite woman, to whom it was said: Your faith has saved you (Matthew 9:22), is the dog according to the Gospel; and the dead lion is the people of circumcision, as the prophet Balaam says: Behold, the people shall rise up as a young lion, and as a lion exulting (Numbers 23:24). Therefore, we are like living dogs among the nations: but the dead lion is the people of the Jews abandoned by the Lord. And this living dog is better with the Lord than that dead lion. For we, being alive, know the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit; but the dead know nothing, nor do they expect any promise or reward; their memory is complete. They do not remember what they should have known, nor does the Lord remember them anymore. Moreover, the love by which they once loved God has perished, and the zeal with which they boldly spoke: 'Do I not hate those who hate you, O Lord? And do I not loathe those who rise up against you?' (Psalm 139:21). And also their zeal, like that of Phinehas, and their trembling knees, like those of Mattathias. It is clear, however, that not all of them are part of this world. For they cannot say, 'My portion is the Lord' (Psalm 73:26).

Go and eat your bread with joy, and drink your wine with a merry heart, for God has already approved your works. Let your garments be white at all times, and let not oil be lacking on your head (Ecclesiastes 9:7). Until that place where it says: Like fish caught in a cruel net, and like birds trapped in a snare, so are the sons of men trapped in an evil time, when it suddenly falls upon them. Before we argue about each point, let us briefly summarize everything, so that it becomes clear in what sense all things are being said together. Because in the previous chapter it was stated that after people die, they are removed from the hearts of the living, and neither love nor hatred should be had towards them, according to the poet (Aeneid, II).

There is no struggle or escape for the defeated: and because they cannot do anything beyond the sun: now as if it were human error and habit, which urge each other to enjoy the goods of this world, it introduces, and it personifies (prosopopoeia) in the manner of rhetoricians and poets, saying: O man, because after death you are nothing, and death itself is nothing, listen to my advice, and while you live in this short life, enjoy pleasure, use feasts, suppress your worries with wine, and understand that they were given to you by God for your use. Wear white garments, anoint your head with ointments: enjoy the embrace of whatever women please you, and race through this vain and brief life with vain and brief pleasure. For beyond these things you will have nothing more to enjoy: whatever can delight you, seize it quickly, lest it perish. For you should not fear meaningless comments, for the account of each work, whether good or evil, must be rendered to you in the underworld. For there is no wisdom in death: no sensation remains after the dissolution of this life. And someone may say, as Epicurus and Aristippus and the Cyrenaics do, and the rest of the beasts called philosophers. But reflecting carefully within myself, I find that not, as some mistakenly believe, everything is done by chance, and that fortune plays a varied role in human affairs, but rather that everything is done by the judgment of God. For even if a swift runner were to think that he determines his own course with his feet, he does not. Nor let the strong trust in their own strength, nor let the wise esteem riches and wealth as being gathered by prudence; nor let the eloquent and learned think that they can find favor with the people through eloquence and learning; but let them consider that everything is done by God's disposition. And unless He governs all things according to His will, and builds the house, in vain do those labor who build it. Unless He keeps the city, in vain do those watch who keep it (Psalm 127:1). And so, it is not, as they think, one event and the uncertain state of this life: because when they do not consider it, they will come to judgment when suddenly taken by death. And just as fish are caught by a hook and birds are trapped in nets, and free birds are bound by a snare while they are unaware: so too, humans will be led to eternal punishments according to their deserts, when suddenly death comes and judgment falls upon them, who believed that all things were tossed about in an uncertain state. These things, according to the interpretation that we wanted to summarize briefly, are now to be understood individually, as if they were spoken not from someone else's, but from one's own person: Go, eat your bread in joy, and drink your wine with a merry heart; for God has already approved your works. For you have learned that all things come to an end in death, and there is no repentance in the realm of the dead, nor any opportunity for turning to virtue, while you are in this world, hasten, strive to repent: while you have time, work. For willingly God receives the repentant. Otherwise: And simply understanding is profitable, according to this: Whether you eat or drink or do anything, do all in the name of the Lord (1 Corinthians 10:31). And in another place: Drink wine with counsel. For true joy and good heart does not belong to one who excessively uses creatures. But it is better to think thus: Whose works have pleased God, will never lack for true bread and wine, which is tread from the vineyard of Sorek. Therefore, given this precept which says: You have desired wisdom, keep the commandments, and the Lord will minister it to you (Sirach 1:33): let us keep the commandments, and we will be able to find spiritual bread and wine. But whoever does not keep the commandments and boasts in the abundance of bread and wine, it is said to him through Isaiah: Do not say, 'I know it'; neither have you known, nor do you know, nor have I opened your ears from the beginning. For I know that you reject it (Isaiah 48:8, LXX version). Furthermore, what is said in the Septuagint: Come, eat your bread with joy; this is the voice of Ecclesiastes, who speaks in the Gospel: Whoever is thirsty, let them come to me and drink (John 7:37). And in Proverbs: Come, eat my bread and drink the wine I have mixed (Proverbs 9:5). Let your garments always be white, and let oil not be lacking on your head. And he says, have a clean body and be merciful. And so: Let there be no time in which you do not have white garments; beware lest you put on polluted clothing. For the sinful people are described to have rejoiced in dark clothing. But you must put on light and not the curse that is written over Judah: Let him be clothed with a curse, as with a garment (Ps. 109:18). Put on the bowels of mercy, kindness, humility, meekness, patience (Colossians 3). And when you have stripped off the old man with his deeds, put on the new man, who is renewed day by day. And as for what he says: And let not oil be lacking on your head: it must be understood that the nature of this oil is such that it nourishes both the light and dissolves the labour of the weary. It is a spiritual oil, oil of rejoicing, of which it is written: Therefore God, your God, has anointed you with the oil of gladness above your companions (Ps. 45:7). Our face is to be refreshed with this oil. This is to be anointing the head of the fasting person, which sinners cannot have, to whom it is said: 'It is not right to apply salve, nor oil, nor bandages' (Isaiah 1:6). For they have a contrary oil, which the righteous man detests, saying: 'The oil of the sinner shall not anoint my head' (Psalm 104:5). This oil the heretics have, and with it they desire to pour over the heads of the deceived.

Look at the life with the woman whom you loved all the days of your vain life, which were given to you under the sun: for this is your portion in life and in the labor that you labor under the sun. Follow wisdom and the knowledge of the Scriptures, and bind yourself to it in marriage, as it is said in Proverbs: Love it, and it will keep you; embrace it, and it will surround you (Prov. IV, 8). But the days of vanity, the days of this wicked world, signify. About this the Apostle does not remain silent.

But what he says: See the life with the woman whom you have loved, is ambiguously spoken, whether see and contemplate life, and your wife herself with you (for you cannot see life alone without such a wife), or consider both, and see life, and the woman in the days of your vanity. And he rightly advises that in the days of our vanity we seek true life with a wise wife. For this is our part, and this is the fruit of our labor, if in this shadowy life we are able to find true life. Do everything that your hand finds to do, do it in your strength: for there is no work, thought, knowledge, or wisdom in the underworld where you are going. Do whatever you can now and labor, for when you descend to the underworld, there will be no opportunity for repentance. This is similar to what the Savior commands: Work while it is day, for the night is coming when no one can work (John 9:4). And when it says 'in the underworld where you are going', understand that Samuel truly believed to have been in the underworld, and before the coming of Christ, all the righteous were held by the law of the underworld. Furthermore, the Apostle testifies that the saints are not held in hell after the resurrection of the Lord, saying: It is better to be dissolved and to be with Christ (Philippians 1:23). But whoever is with Christ is certainly not held in hell.

I turned and saw under the sun that there is no swift course, nor strong battle, nor bread for the wise, nor wealth for the prudent, nor favor for the knowledgeable: because time and chance happen to them all. He who is bound with iron fetters and burdened with heavy chains of lead: For iniquity sits upon a talent of lead (Zech. 5:7): and in the Psalm it says: As a heavy burden they have been burdened upon me (Psalm 38:5): he is not fit for that course, of which it is said: I have finished the course, I have kept the faith (2 Tim. 4:7). But whoever is light and his soul is not burdened, nevertheless he himself cannot reach the end without the help of God. And even when there is a battle against contrary powers, about which it is written: Sanctify the war (Jer. VI, 4): although he may be strong, he will not be able to overcome them by his own strength. Likewise, even a perfect man among the children of men and wise cannot have living and heavenly bread, unless he is encouraged by wisdom, saying: Come, eat my breads. And because they are riches, of which the Apostle says: Be rich in good works (I Tim. VI, 18): And elsewhere: You have become rich in every word and in all knowledge (I Cor. I, 5): it must be known that a prudent man cannot gather these riches unless he receives them from the Lord, whose riches they are. About which it is also said elsewhere: The redemption of a man's soul is his own wealth (Prov. XV, 8). Moreover, grace, unless it is accompanied by knowledge and granted by God, even though a learned man will not be able to find it. This is also known by Paul: I have labored more than all of them, but not I, but the grace of God that is with me (I Cor. XV, 10). And again: His grace in me was not empty. And finally, it is not known by man when the time comes, in which various events and the end of all follow. This is according to ■ναγω■v.

Moreover, to speak more simply, the Letter to the Romans is relevant to this place: Because it depends not on the one who wills or the one who runs, but on God who shows mercy (Rom. 9:16). And what he says: Bread is not for the wise, is proven daily by the example of many who, though they are very wise, still need the essentials. And, Grace is not for the knowledgeable. For you might see in the Church even the most ignorant people flourishing, who, because they have nourished the audacity of their forehead and the agility of their tongue, while they do not consider what they say, consider themselves to be wise and learned: especially if they have the favor of the crowd, which delights and is moved more by frivolous words. And on the other hand, a learned man hides in obscurity, suffering persecutions; and not only does he not have favor among the people, but he wastes away in poverty and need. These things happen because everything is carried on in an uncertain state, and there is no retribution for merits in the present, but in the future. And indeed, man does not know his own time, like fish that are caught in a terrible trap, like birds that are trapped in a snare: in the same way, the sons of men will fall in a bad time, when it will suddenly come upon them. Now we have already said that while men do not know, such distress or destruction will come to them. Furthermore, according to the allegory, it must be understood that the kingdom of heaven is like a net cast into the sea (Matthew 13). And on the other hand, heretics have a net by which they catch fish for their destruction. Their net is affable speech, flattering language, feigned or forced abstinences, humble clothing, imitation of virtues. And if they begin to discuss higher things and raise their voices in the air and seek the heights of God, they set a snare in the high places. Therefore, just as fish and birds are quickly caught by such a net and by such a snare: so when iniquity has multiplied and the love of many has grown cold, and signs and wonders have been done so as to deceive, if possible, even the elect (Matthew 24): it must be understood that even Ecclesiastical men, who are called sons of men and are of little faith, can quickly fall. It should also be noted that throughout the entire book, wherever it says 'sons of men' in Latin, it has 'son of man' in Hebrew, that is, 'son of Adam'. And almost the entire Scripture is full of this expression, calling the entire human race 'sons of Adam'. But I have seen this wisdom under the sun, and it is great in me. A small city with few men in it, and a great king came to it and surrounded it and built a great siege engine against it. And he found in it a poor and wise man, and this man saved the city by his wisdom, but no one remembered that poor man. While others say that everything is uncertain and the just have no advantage over the unjust, I have also proven wisdom in this: that it often happens that a city is small and its inhabitants few, and it is surrounded by a countless army of enemies, and the people inside are killed by siege and famine. And suddenly, contrary to everyone's expectations, a humble and poor man is found, who, because he has greater wisdom than all the rich, great, powerful, and proud people in danger, and fearing siege, thinks and investigates, and finds how to deliver the city from evil. And, oh ingratitude of mankind! After they have been set free and their captivity has been lifted, and their freedom has been restored to their homeland, no one remembers that wise poor man, no one gives thanks for their salvation. Instead, they honor the wealthy, who were unable to help in any danger. The Hebrew interpretation of this passage is different: 'A small city is a man, who is also called the microcosm among philosophers. And there are few men in it, who are the limbs that make up the man himself.' But when the great king, the devil, comes against her, and seeks a place by which he can break in, he finds within her a humble and wise, and quiet thought of the inner man, and he saves the city which was being besieged by enemies. And when a man is rescued from danger or persecution, or distress, or any adverse event or sin: that outward man, who is the enemy of that poor and wise man, does not remember the inner man, nor submits to his counsels: but again enjoys his own freedom. Otherwise: The city is small, and there are few men in it compared to the whole world. It is the Church: against which the great king, the devil, often rises up (not because he is great, but because he boasts of being great) and surrounds it with siege, either of persecution or some other kind of distress. And he finds in it a poor and wise man, the Lord Jesus Christ, who became poor for us (2 Corinthians 8:9) and is himself wisdom: and that poor man frees the city by his wisdom. How often have we seen the cunning lion sitting in ambush with the wealthy, that is to say, with the senators and princes of this age, and plotting against the Church, while the wisdom of this poor man crumbles? And when this poor man conquers and the city is restored to peace, hardly anyone remembers him, hardly anyone takes his commands into consideration. But yielding themselves entirely to luxury and pleasures, they seek riches, which do not free them in times of need. And I said, wisdom is better than strength, and the wisdom of the poor is despised, and his words are not heard. Although no one remembers the wisdom of that poor man, when all things are happy; but everyone admires power and wealth: yet I, according to all interpretations, honor contemptible wisdom and words that no one deigns to hear. The words of the wise are heard in silence, more than the shouting of a powerful person among fools. Whoever you see as a declaimer in the Church, and with a certain charm and elegance of words, excites applause, evokes laughter, and stirs the emotions of joy in the listeners: know that it is a sign of folly, both of the speaker and of those who hear. Indeed, the words of the wise are heard in silence and moderation: but the foolish, even if they are powerful, and have either the noise of their own voice or the acclamation of the people, will be counted among fools.

Wisdom is better than the weapons of war, and one who sins will lose much goodness. Now wisdom is also preferred over strength, and it is said to be more valuable in battles than the weapons of the fighters. But if one is foolish, even though small and insignificant, frequently through their foolishness, great wealth and riches are destroyed. And indeed, in Hebrew it can be read: And one who sins will lose much goodness, it must also be understood in this way: that because of one sin, many righteousnesses may be lost in retrospect, and virtues follow one another, and whoever possesses one, possesses them all. And whoever shall offend in one point, is become guilty of all.

(Chap. X.) (Chapter X.) Flies pollute the oil of composition: a little foolishness is precious above wisdom and glory. An example of the previous passage is given, in which it is said that by one fool many good things can be overturned, just as a bad person mixed with good things contaminates many, just as flies, if they die in ointment, destroy both its scent and color. And because wisdom is often mixed with cunning, and prudence has malice, it advises that we seek simple wisdom, and that it be mixed with the innocence of doves: that we be wise for good things, but simple for evil things. And the sense is: It is fitting for the just to have little of simplicity, and because of excessive patience, while reserving vengeance to God, to prefer to appear foolish rather than exercise malice immediately by avenging themselves under the veil of prudence. Otherwise: The flies which are mentioned near Isaiah (Chapter 7, 18) in the region of the river of Egypt, lose the sweetness of oil, leaving in each believer the odor and traces of their filth. From these flies, the prince of demons is also called Beelzebub (Matthew 12, 24), which is interpreted as either the idol of flies, or the man of flies, or the one who has flies. The heart of a wise person is in their right hand, and the heart of a foolish person is in their left. But on the way, when a fool walks, their heart diminishes: and they say, everyone is foolish. And in the Gospel, it is commanded that the left hand does not know what the right hand of the wise person does (Matthew VI, 3; V, 39). And when we are struck on the right cheek, we are not commanded to offer the left cheek to the one who strikes, but the other right one (Matthew V, 39). For the righteous person does not have the left hand in them, but everything in them is right. And when the Savior comes to judge, the lambs will stand on the right, but the goats will be on the left (Matt. 25:33). And in Proverbs it is written: The LORD knows the way of the righteous, but the way of the wicked will perish (Prov. 4:27). Therefore, whoever is wise always thinks about the future age, which leads to the right. But whoever is foolish, thinks about the present, which is placed on the left. The same philosopher and poet followed this, saying (Virgil, Aeneid VI): The right hand leads us beneath the walls of the great God (or great rich man) ((Alternative: stretches)). This path leads us to Elysium: but the left hand inflicts punishments on the wicked and sends them to impious Tartarus ((Alternative: leads)). Our own Firmianus also mentions the letter Y in his excellent work of his Institutes, and he extensively discusses about the right and left, that is, about virtues and vices. And we may not consider this little sentiment to be contrary to that in which it is said: Do not turn to the right hand, nor to the left (Prov. IV, 27). For here the right hand part is understood as good: but there, not so much the right hand, as the turning of the right hand, is being accused: let us not think ourselves wiser than necessary: because virtues are in the middle, and excessive behavior is always a vice. But in the following verse, where it says: But when a fool walks along the way, his heart lacks understanding, and he says: all foolishness is, or the fool, here is the meaning: The fool, as he himself sins, hopes that everyone sins in the same way, and judges everyone according to his own nature. Finally, Symmachus interpreted it thus: But when a fool walks along the way, he himself suspects everyone, because they are fools. But the Seventy translated it to another sense, saying: All that the fool thinks is most vain.

If the spirit with power ascends above you, do not abandon your place, for health causes great sins to rest. This Scripture now signifies the prince of this world and the ruler of these darknesses, and the one working in the children of diffidence, whom the Apostle also mentions (Ephesians 2:2 and 6:12). But if it ascends into our heart and the soul receives a wound of evil thought, we should not give it any further place, but fight against the very worst thought and free ourselves from the greatest sin, so that we do not fulfill the thought in deed. For it is one thing to sin in thought, another in deed. About which great sin is written in the psalm: If they have not dominated me, then I will be blameless, and I will be cleansed from the greatest offense (Psalm 18:4). Symmachus translated the Hebrew word 'Marphe', which all others translated as '■αμα', that is, health or healing, according to sense, and he said: If the spirit of the prince rushes upon you, do not leave your place: for modesty restrains great sins. That is, if the devil tempts your mind and incites you to lust, do not follow evil thoughts and enticing pleasure: but stand strong and firm, and extinguish the flame of pleasure with the coldness of chastity. The Hebrew in this place suspected something unknown. If you should receive any dignity in the world, and you are ordained greater among the people, do not leave your previous works, and do not begin to forget the virtues of old, and do not consider your previous labor as insignificant: because the remedy for sins is born from good conduct, and not from inflated and excessive dignity.

It is an evil that I have seen under the sun, as if ignorance were coming forth from the face of the powerful: to give foolishness in great heights, and for the rich to sit in lowly places. I have seen slaves on horses, and princes walking like slaves on the earth. For what reason, we have set forth: As if ignorance coming forth from the face of the powerful, Aquila and Theodotio and the Seventy were interpreted: As if not voluntary, that is, as involuntary, from the face of the prince. To this Symmachus adds, saying: It is a foolish thing to be placed in great elevation: for the rich ought to sit low. And he recalls perceiving this injustice in the world, in that it seems unfair the judgment of God: and whether by ignorance, or without His will, that in the powers of the world or in the leadership of the Church, those who are rich in speech and wisdom, may also be rich in good works, yet the lowly sit, and that any ignorant person may hold authority in the Church. However, the Apostle does not remain silent about this happening from the devil, who in this world has power, so that he may suppress even the powerful and learned men and not allow them to appear among the people. But those whom he knows to be imprudent in the churches, he makes them into elders, so that the blind may be led by the blind into the pit. This is also the meaning of what follows: I saw servants riding on horses, and princes walking like servants on the earth. Those who are slaves to vices and sins, whether so humble as to be counted as slaves by men, suddenly exalted by the devil, tread the public ways. And every noble and wise person, oppressed by poverty, walks in the path and performs the duties of a servant. The Hebrew exposed God as powerful and princely, from whose face ignorance seems to depart, because people think in this inequality of things, that he does not judge them justly and as is right. Furthermore, others think that they should be joined with the higher ones, that he himself may be powerful, of whom it is said before these verses: If the spirit of the one having power has ascended upon you, do not abandon your place. Therefore, let us not be sad if we seem humble in this world, knowing that we are being lifted up from the face of the devil and fools, and the rich are being thrown down; slaves are having the insignia of the masters, and princes of the slaves are entering into lowliness. However, it should also be noted that here the horse is taken in a good sense, as it says there: And your riding is salvation.

He who digs a pit will fall into it, and he who destroys a fence, a snake will bite him. The understanding is both simple and mystical. Indeed, elsewhere Solomon himself says: He who sets a trap will be caught in it (Eccli. XXVII, 29). And in the seventh psalm: He opened a pit and dug it, and fell into the hole he made. The breaking of the fence and the wall are the teachings of the Church, and the institution founded by the Apostles and Prophets, which he who dissolves and wishes to pass by, in that very act of neglect, is struck by the serpent. Concerning which serpent it is written in Amos: If it descends into the underworld, I will command the serpent, and it will bite them.

Whoever removes stones will grieve over them, and whoever splits wood will be endangered by them (Zech. IX, 16). The holy stones roll in Zachariah upon the earth. For they do not remain steadfast in that place, but they pass by and always strive for higher things, hastening to depart from here. Of these living stones, the city of the Savior is built in the Apocalypse (Ch. XXI, 18 seqq.), and the Apostle does not remain silent about the building of the Church. If therefore someone, perverted by heretical art, takes away these stones from the building of the Church (wherefore also Aquila and Symmachus expressly said: he who takes away stones, will be pained in them), afterwards he will suffer torments. But because the Scripture absolutely says: he who takes away stones, or he who transfers stones, and does not add good or bad ones; therefore, on the contrary, it must be understood that the ecclesiastical man, namely the bishop and presbyter, if according to the commandment of Leviticus (Chapter 14, 45), he takes away a stone from a leprous house, it must be crushed into ashes and dust: he will be pained in himself, because he is compelled to remove a stone from the Church of Christ, saying according to the Apostle: Rejoice with those who rejoice, mourn with those who mourn (Romans 12, 15); and, Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is scandalized, and I am not on fire? Also, by splitting wood, one will be in danger in them. Heretics are useless wood, and a forest without the usefulness of fruits. Therefore, even though he may be a wise and learned man, if he cuts down these woods with the sword of his speech, he will be in danger in them unless he pays close attention, especially if what follows happens to him: If the iron is rejected and its face is troubled, that is, if his argumentation is found to be weaker and lacking sharpness to separate opposing things: but the sharpness of his heart is dulled; it will pass over to the opposing side, and perverse strength will strengthen him. For this is what the Septuagint translators rendered: And by strength it shall be strengthened; and by excessive wisdom it shall begin to have strength, and wisdom, which is excessive, does not aid the possessor.

If iron is sharpened; and if it is not as before, but becomes dull, it will be strengthened by its virtues: and the remaining strength is wisdom. If, he says, someone realizes that they have lost knowledge of the Scriptures due to negligence, and the sharpness of their intelligence has become blunt: and if they do not remain disturbed, as they had already begun to be: it happens sometimes that when someone has a little knowledge, they become proud, cease to learn and read, and gradually, as nothing is added to them, it is taken away, and an empty heart remains devoid of teachings, and the iron that was sharp becomes dull: for idleness and laziness are like a kind of rust on wisdom. If, therefore, anyone has suffered this, let him not despair of a remedy for his health, but let him go to the doctor, and let him be instructed by him again, and after labor and industry, and excessive sweating, he will be able to regain the wisdom that he had lost. This is what is more significantly said in Hebrew: And he shall be strengthened by strengths, that is, by labor and sweating, and industry, and daily reading, he will attain wisdom, and his strength will have this end, to receive wisdom.

If a serpent bites in silence, it no longer has a tongue. The meaning here is simple: the serpent and the detractor are equal. Just as the serpent secretly inserts venom when it bites, so does the detractor, by secretly criticizing, pour out the poison of his own heart into his brother, and he has nothing more from the serpent. For when the tongue of a man is created to bless and build up his neighbor, he makes it equal to the serpent when he abuses its virtues for evil purposes. Otherwise: If someone, without anyone else knowing, is secretly bitten by the devil serpent and infected with the poison of sin; if the one who is struck keeps silent and does not repent, and does not want to confess his wound to his brother and master, the master and brother, who have the language to heal, will not be able to help him easily. For if the sick person is ashamed to confess his wound to the doctor, the medicine that the doctor does not know cannot heal it. The words of a wise mouth are pleasing, and the lips of a fool will bring him down. If foolishness were content with its own simplicity, it would have less evil. But now it wages war against wisdom, and whatever it sees of prudence in a learned man, driven by jealousy, it does not accept. For the wise man speaks words of knowledge and words of grace, which can provide benefit to the listeners, and the ears of a fool do not receive what is said as it is said; but on the contrary, they attempt to overthrow the prudent man and tear down one like themselves. And truly a wise man falls headlong when he speaks into the ear of the imprudent, and his words perish in the depths, so to speak. Therefore blessed is he who speaks into the ear of the listener. The beginning of his words is foolishness, and the end of his mouth is the worst error. And a fool multiplies words. A man does not know what has been done, and what will come after him, who will declare it to him? Still, there is a debate about the fool, whose lips bring down the wise, or according to another interpretation, make the fool himself fall. For the beginning of his speech is foolishness, and the end is the worst error; or as Symmachus translated, turmoil and a certain inconsistency of words; while he does not remain in the meaning, but thinks that he can escape sin in the multiplication of words. For when he does not remember the past, nor know the future, and is carried about in ignorance and darkness, promising himself false knowledge; in this he believes himself to be learned, in this he believes himself to be wise, if he multiplies words. This can also be applied to heretics, who do not understand the sayings of prudent men; but, preparing themselves for contradictory disputes, they mingle the beginning and end of speech with frivolity, noise, and error: and when they know nothing, they speak more than they know. The toil of fools afflicts those who do not know how to go to the city. Also, join these previous verses: either generally about all fools who are ignorant of God, or specifically about heretics. Read Plato; examine the cleverness of Aristotle, look closely at Zeno and Carneades, and you will prove that what is said is true: The toil of fools afflicts them. Indeed, they searched for truth with all their efforts; but because they did not have a guide and a path, and they believed that they could comprehend wisdom with human senses, they did not reach the city at all, of which it is said in the psalm: O Lord, in your city you will disperse their image (Psalm 73:20). For the Lord will scatter all the shadows and various images and personas that they have taken on in their various doctrines. Concerning this, it is written elsewhere: The rushing of the river brings joy to the city of God (Psalm 46:5). And in the Gospel: A city set on a hill cannot be hidden (Matthew 5:14). And in Isaiah: I am a strong city, a city that is under attack (Isaiah 27:30, LXX). Indeed, all the wise of the world and the heretics strive to attack this city of truth and wisdom, even though it is strong and robust. And what we said about philosophers, the same must be thought about heretics, who labor and afflict themselves in the study of the Scriptures in vain, since they wander in the desert and are unable to find the city. About their error the psalmist also speaks, saying: 'They have wandered in the desert, in a place without water; they have not found the way to the city and its habitation.' (Psalm 106:4).

Woe to you, land, whose young king and leaders devour in the morning. Blessed is the land, whose king, your son, feasts with nobles in due season, in strength and not in confusion. It seems indeed to condemn the rule of the young and to condemn the extravagant judges, that in some the wisdom of age is weak, and in others even mature age is weakened by pleasures. And on the contrary, it approves a prince of good character and a liberal education, and it proclaims judges who by no means put pleasure before the affairs of the citizens, but after much toil and the administration of the state, they are compelled to take food as if by necessity. But what seems more sacred to me is hidden in the letter, that young people are called in Scripture, who depart from the ancient authority and despise the hoary precepts of their parents: who, neglecting God's commandment, desire to establish the traditions of men. Concerning whom, in Isaiah (Chapter VIII), the Lord of Israel threatens, because he did not want the water of Siloam, which flows gently, and he turned away the ancient pool, choosing for himself the streams of Samaria and the torrents of Damascus. And I will give, saith he, their princes in youth: and their wise men shall rule over them (Isaiah 3:4). Read Daniel, and you will find the God of ancient days (Daniel 7). Read the Apocalypse of John, and you will find the head of the Savior white as snow, and his hair white as wool (Revelation 1). Also, Jeremiah, because he was wise, and his grey hairs were considered as wisdom, is forbidden to say that he is young (Jeremiah 1). Woe to the land whose king is the devil, who is always eager for new things and even rebels against his parent in Abessalon: which has judges and rulers who love the pleasures of this world, who say before the day of death comes: Let us eat and drink; for tomorrow we shall die (Isaiah 22:13). Behold the blessed land of the Church, whose king is Christ the Son of the nobles: descending from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as well as the lineage of prophets and all the saints, to whom sin did not have dominion; and therefore they were truly free. From them was born the Virgin Mary, more free, having no root, no offspring from her side: but all her fruit blossomed, speaking in the Song of Songs: I am the flower of the field, and the lily of the valleys. The princes also include the Apostles and all the saints, who have the king as their son, born of free women, not of the slave Hagar, but of the freedom of Sarah. They do not eat in the morning, nor quickly. For they do not seek pleasure in the present age, but they will eat in their own time when the time of retribution comes, and they will eat in strength, and not in confusion. Every good of the present age is confusion, the future is perpetual strength. This is what is said in Isaiah: Behold, my servants shall eat, but you shall be hungry: and again, behold, my servants shall rejoice, but you shall be put to shame. In laziness, the building will be humbled, and in the weakness of our hands, the house will drip. Our house, which was built with the stature of man, and the dwelling we have in the heavens, if we are lazy and slow to good works, will be humbled. And every building that should bear the summit aloft, falling to the ground, will oppress its inhabitant. And when the help of our hands and virtues is numb, all the storms from above rush down upon us like a whirlwind of rain. Furthermore, what we have interpreted in one man can be better applied to the Church: that through the negligence of its leaders, all of its greatness collapses, and there vices may be found where virtues were thought to exist. For they make bread and wine with laughter, so that the living may feast. And they obey silver in all things. I think that what follows depends on what has come before. For in laziness and in the negligence of the magisters, the Church is humiliated, and its highest point is brought down, and its beams are washed away, as we have explained above. Now, therefore, he speaks about these same magisters. And because it had been seen that he was accusing them, why they were silent and did not use the office of magisters, and the bishops and presbyters who were established in the Church did not labor in speech and teaching, as Titus is admonished to do (Titus 1:5), and Timothy is instructed not to neglect the grace which he had received by the laying on of hands: and also that they should value the presbyters and bishops in that they receive what is beneficial and seek double honor for those who labor in teaching and speech (1 Timothy 4:14); now, on the contrary, he accuses those who speak indeed in the Church and teach the people, but they teach those things which please the people to hear, that they may touch sinners in vice and stir up the noise of the listeners. Surely, when in the Church prayer (or speaker), and promises of blessedness, and the kingdoms of heaven to the multitude, it seems to you to make bread in laughter, and mix wine for the joy of the living? Whether it be that those who teach, acquire riches, and food, and wealth through pleasing promises: or that they make the bread of the Church, which is the bread of mourners and not of those who laugh (for blessed are those who mourn, for they themselves will laugh), in joy and rejoicing. But that which follows: everything obeys money or silver, is to be understood in two ways. Either that the doctors, once enriched by flattery, exercise dominion over the people: or certainly, because silver is always accepted in place of speech: For the words of the Lord are pure words: silver refined by fire, purified sevenfold. (Ps. II, 7): this confirms that the common people readily yield to eloquence and speech, which is composed of the foliage of words. Otherwise: Those who have a spouse with them, and therefore are prohibited from mourning and fasting, make bread with laughter. From this laughter, both Isaac received his name and they prepare the wine for those drinking in joy. Therefore, every holy man, who, as Christ commanded, is the teacher of the Church, makes bread with laughter and serves cups of wine in joy. Moreover, the money, to which all things obey, are the five talents from the Gospel, and the two, and one, which are given to the head of the household, and the ten minas, which are entrusted to the servants in business (Matt. XXV, 15. et seqq). In your mind, do not curse the king, and in the secrecy of your bedroom, do not curse the rich, for the bird of the sky will carry the message, and with wings, it will proclaim the word. And a simple instruction builds those who listen: let us not be overcome by anger and fury, to burst into curses and slander against kings and princes, for sometimes it happens against all expectation that those to whom we have cursed are informed, and we incur the danger of immoderate speech. But when he says, 'The bird of the sky will take away the voice, and having wings will proclaim the word,' it is to be understood hyperbolically, just as we often say that even the walls, to which we speak knowingly, will not conceal what they have heard. But it is better to hear this precept in such a way that we know it is a commandment for us: not only should we speak nothing rashly against Christ, but even in the secret depths of our hearts, though we may be weighed down by various tribulations, we should think nothing blasphemous or impious. And because we show love to Christ, we also owe it to our neighbor: For you shall love the Lord your God, and your neighbor as yourself, we are also commanded, so that we may not easily detract from the saints after the king: and that we may not harm those whom we see to be enriched with wisdom, knowledge, and virtues with the sharpness of our tongues: for the angels who go around the earth and are the administrators of spirits, speak in Zechariah: We have gone around the earth, and behold all the earth is inhabited, and silent (Zechariah 1:11): like birds, let our words and thoughts be carried to heaven: and let what we secretly think not escape the knowledge of God.

(Chap. XI.)

(Chapter XI) Send your bread upon the face of the water: for in the multitude of days you will find it. He encourages almsgiving because it should be given to everyone who asks and done discreetly. For just as the one who sows Beside the waters expects the fruit of the seed to come, so the one who gives to the needy does not sow a grain of seed, but himself sows bread, expecting a certain interest to be multiplied. And when the day of judgment comes, he will receive much more than he had given (or found). Otherwise: in whomever you see that water, of which it is said: Rivers of living water will flow from his belly (John 7:38), do not hesitate to provide the bread of wisdom, the reasonable bread, the bread of discourse. For if you do this frequently, you will find that you have not sown the seed of teachings in vain. I think something similar is said in Isaiah: Blessed is he who sows upon the water, where the ox and the donkey tread (Isaiah 32:20). That teacher is considered worthy of blessedness who sows upon the receptive hearts of the listeners, gathered from both the Jewish and the Gentile people.

Give a part (Al. parts) of seven, and indeed eight: because you do not know what evil may come upon the earth. And in Ezekiel, seven and eight steps are read for the ascent to the temple (Ezek. 40:26, 31). And after that ethical psalm, that is, the one hundred and eighty-fifth, fifteen steps of the psalm are counted, by which we are first instructed in the law, and when the number seven is completed, then we ascend to the Gospel by the number eight. Therefore, it is commanded that we believe with equal veneration in both instruments, namely the old and the new. The Jews accepted seven parts, believing in the Sabbath; but they did not accept eight parts, denying the resurrection of the Lord's day. On the contrary, heretics such as Marcion and Manichaeus, and all who tear apart the old Law with rabid mouth, accept eight parts, embracing the Gospel; but they do not attribute the same number to the sevenfold, rejecting the old Law. Therefore, let us believe in both Testaments. For we cannot understand worthy torments and a worthy punishment with our minds now, which are set aside for those who dwell on the earth, both for the Jews and for the heretics, one of whom denies one of the two. The Hebrews understand this place in the following way: Observe both the Sabbath and circumcision, lest if you should perhaps not do this, an unexpected evil come upon you.

If the clouds become full, they will pour rain upon the earth. And if a tree falls to the south or to the north: where it falls, there it will be. Keep the commandments that have been given to you above, so that the clouds may pour their rain upon you. For wherever you have prepared a place for yourself and a future dwelling, whether to the south or to the north: there, when you have died, you will remain. Otherwise: Therefore, we have said above: Send your bread upon the face of the water, and give to everyone who asks of you: for when the clouds are full, they bestow their riches upon mortals, and you, like a tree, even if you are long-lived, will not be forever, but suddenly, as the winds, so overturned by the storms of death, wherever you fall, there you will constantly remain, whether the final time finds you stern and fierce, or kind and merciful. Otherwise: It is said in the Psalms to God: Your truth reaches to the clouds (Psalm 36:6). And in Isaiah, God threatens the sinner of the vineyard: I will command the clouds, so that they do not rain on it (Isaiah 5:6). Therefore, the clouds are the Prophets, and every holy man, who, when he has gathered many disciplines in his heart, then he will be able to make the precepts of teachings rain and to say: Let my speech be awaited like rain, let it pour down on the earth (Deuteronomy 32:2): to which it is said: Let the earth hear the words of my mouth. But what follows: And if a tree falls to the south or to the north: in the place where the tree falls, there it will be: let us take the example of Habakkuk, in which it is written: God will come from Teman (Hab. III, 3), which other interpreters have stated as, God will come from the south. And as far as I can tell, the south is always understood in a positive sense. Hence, in the Song of Songs it is said: Arise, O north wind (Song of Solomon 4:16), that is, go away, and come, O south wind. Therefore, the wood that falls in this life and is cut by the condition of mortality either sinned before it stood and is placed in the northern part afterwards or if it brought forth worthy fruits from the south, it will lie in the southern region. There is no wood that is not either towards the north or towards the south. This same thing is also signified by that which is written in Isaiah: I will say to the north: Give up, and to the south: Do not withhold (Isaiah 43:6). For the south and east winds never drive ships to their destination, because it is necessary for them to be on other coasts, which are then led to the east and south. Therefore, the north wind brings its inhabitants to the south, and the southwest wind to the east. For they cannot make progress if they persist in their former abodes.

Whoever watches the wind will not sow, and whoever looks at the clouds will not reap. Whoever considers whom to benefit and does not grant himself to everyone who asks often passes by the one who deserves to receive (Luc. VI, 30). Otherwise: Whoever preaches the word of God only at the time when the people willingly listen and the second breath of rumor blows, is a neglectful and lazy sower. For in prosperity itself, while we are ignorant, adversity arises. But at the right time, or at the wrong time, in its own way, the word of God must be preached (2 Timothy 4:2): and the storm of adversities must not be taken into account at the time of faith. Concerning which it is said in Proverbs: Like a violent and useless rain: so those who abandon wisdom and praise wickedness (Proverbs 28:3-4). Therefore, without considering the clouds and fearing the winds, we must sow in the midst of storms. And we must not say: this time is convenient, this one is useless, since we do not know which way and which will is the spirit of the one who orders all things.

How do you not know the way of the spirit, and like the bones in the womb of a pregnant woman, you do not know the works of God, who creates all things? Just as you do not know the path of the spirit and the soul entering into the child, and you are ignorant of the varieties of bones and veins in the womb of a pregnant woman, how from a humble element the body of a man is transformed into various forms and limbs, and from the same seed, one part becomes soft in flesh, another hardens in bones, another throbs in veins, and another is bound in nerves: in the same way, you will not be able to know the works of God, who is the maker of all things. From this, it teaches that the opposite should not be feared, nor should judgment be made rashly about winds and clouds, which we have mentioned above: since the sower should proceed with his own course and path, and leave the outcome of the Lord's sentence. For it is not of the one who wills or the one who runs, but of God who shows mercy (Rom. IX, 16). In the morning, sow your seed, and in the evening, do not let your hand rest: for you do not know whether this, or that, will please, although both, as one good, is. And it is sweet to see the light, and good for the eyes to behold the sun: for if a man shall live many years, let him rejoice in all these, and remember the days of darkness, for they shall be many. All that comes to pass is vanity. Do not choose to whom you may do good, but even when you have done good, never cease from doing good deeds. May morning find justice, and evening gather the rising mercy of the sun. It is uncertain which work is more pleasing to God, and from which the fruit of justice is prepared for you. However, it may happen that both please God, not just one. Otherwise: Let there be equal effort for you in youth and in old age. Do not say: while I was able, I worked; I must rest in old age. For you do not know whether you please God in your youth or in old age. Frugality in youth is not profitable if old age is spent in luxury. For on whatever day the righteous man may have erred, the ancients cannot free him from death. But if you have always acted well according to both interpretations, and have followed an equal course in every age, you will see God the Father, the most sweet light; you will see Christ, the sun of righteousness. Moreover, if you live for many years and have all good things, or perform good works, and know that you will always die and before your eyes the coming of darkness always turns about: you despise present things as if they were fleeting, fragile, and perishable. Symmachus interpreted the end of this sentence as follows: If a man lives for many years and rejoices in all these things, he must remember the days of darkness: for they will be many, and in all of them it will come to an end. Another: Scripture promises in another place, God saying: I will give you both the former and the later rain (Deut. XI, 14), that is, the old Testament and the new, and with both I will water you by rain. Hence we are now admonished to read the old Law in this way, so that we do not despise the Gospel; to seek spiritual understanding in the old Instrument, so that we do not believe that the only thing that is said in the Gospel, in the Evangelists and the Apostles. For indeed it is ignorance for us in what manner knowledge is attributed to us by God and grace, and for him to be happy, who has shared both in common, and has made them as one body. He who has achieved this will see the light, will see Christ, the sun of justice. And if he lives for many years, he will be in the highest joy and delight, having knowledge of the Scriptures, and will be more compelled to this labor by the remembrance of the future judgment: because a perpetual time of darkness will come, and eternal punishments will be prepared for those who have not sown in the morning and in the evening, and have in no way shared in both: neither have they seen the light, nor the sun, from which the same light proceeds.

(Chap. XII.) (Chapter 12) Rejoice, young man, in your youth, and let your heart be good in the days of your youth. Walk in the ways of your heart and in the sight of your eyes. And know this, that God will bring you to judgment above all these things. And remove anger from your heart, and take away malice from your flesh, because youth and foolishness are vanity. And remember your Creator in the days of your youth, before the days of evil come and the years approach in which you will say: I have no pleasure in them. In this chapter, there was an explanation of various things and almost as many opinions as there are people. Because it would be tedious to list all the opinions and explain the arguments by which they wanted to support their opinions, it is enough to indicate to the wise what they thought and, as it were, to paint a brief map of the lands, showing the vastness of the whole world and the extent of the ocean in a small space. The Hebrews consider it pertinent to the Israelite people's commandment, which instructs them to enjoy their wealth before the time of captivity arrives and to exchange their youth for old age: to indulge in whatever is pleasurable or delightful to the heart and eyes while it is available, but in such a way that they know they will be judged by everyone. They should also flee both evil thoughts and desires, aware that folly is associated with youth. They should always remember their Creator before the days of Babylonian and Roman captivity arrive, when they will not be able to have their own will. And all this place from what he says: Before the sun is darkened, and the moon, and the stars, up to that place where Scripture commemorates: And the dust will return to its earth as it was, and the spirit will return to the Lord who gave it: they explain about the state of their condition. These things, as we have said above, are disjointed and lengthy, so we will touch on them briefly and succinctly. Rejoice therefore in your youth, O Israel, and do those things which have already been mentioned before captivity comes and your honor and glory fade away, and your judges and holy ones (whom they wish to be understood as the sun, moon, and stars) are taken away. Before Nebuchadnezzar comes, or Titus, son of Vespasian, called by the prophets and their prophecies fulfilled. On the day when the angelic guardians of the temple depart, and the strongest warriors in your army are troubled, and the words of the teachers and prophets, who used to receive the light of their visions from the heavens, will grow dim: when the gates of the temple are closed, and Jerusalem is humbled, and the Chaldeans come, provoked by the voices of Jeremiah like the song of a bird (Jeremiah 9), and the daughters of song in the choir of psalmists are silenced in the temple. At that time, when they come to Jerusalem, the enemies of God themselves will fear the greatness, and on the way they will hesitate, they will fear the destruction of Sennacherib. For this is what is said: They will fear the high places and be afraid on the way (Isaiah XXXVII). In those days, the almond tree will flourish, the staff and rod that Jeremiah saw in the beginning of his prophecy, and the caper will bear fruit (Jeremiah I), the friendship of God with Israel. What the caper desires for itself, however, will be more fully explained when we begin to speak of individual things. But all of this will happen to Israel: because man is about to depart to his eternal home, and to return from God's protection to the heavenly places. As he departs to his tent, they will go about in the street weeping and lamenting, and being surrounded by the siege of enemies. Therefore, rejoice, Israel, in your youth, before the silver cord is broken, that is, before your glory departs from you, before the golden ribbon is unraveled, that is, before the ark of the covenant is taken away: before the water jar is shattered at the spring, and the wheel is rolled upon the pool, that is, before you transgress the holy commandments of the law and the grace of the Holy Spirit departs, and before you return to Babylon, from where you came out of Abraham's loins, and you begin to be oppressed in Mesopotamia, from where you once set out: and may all the grace of prophecy, with which you were once inspired, return to its giver. The Jews still argue about this today, and they apply their own understanding to the meaning of this chapter. But we, returning to the order of the previous discussion, will strive to explain each point. Rejoice, young man, in your youth, and let your heart be cheerful in the days of your youth. Walk in the ways of your heart and in the sight of your eyes. And know this above all: God will bring you to judgment. It has been said that the light of this world is very sweet, and that man should rejoice in the days of his life and pursue pleasure with all his might. For the eternal night of death will soon come, when we will no longer be able to enjoy the things we have gathered and, like a shadow, everything we have experienced will pass away. Now therefore he encourages the man, and says: O young man, before old age and death approach you, rejoice in your youth, and take whatever seems good to your heart, and enjoy it as you please, with the things of the world. Again, lest it be thought that in saying this he is inciting man to luxury and falling into the doctrine of Epicurus, he removes this suspicion, adding: And know, that for all these things God will bring you to judgment. So, he said, abuse the things of the world, so that you know that you will be judged in the end. And remove anger from your heart, and take away malice from your body: because youth and foolishness are vanity. In anger, all disturbances of the mind are included. In the malice of the body, all the pleasures of the flesh are indicated. So therefore, he said, enjoy the goods of this world, so that you do not sin either by desire or by the flesh. Leave behind the old vices, with which you served vanity and foolishness in your youth: because youth is joined to foolishness. And remember your Creator in the days of your youth, before the days of trouble come and the years approach when you will say, 'I find no pleasure in them'— before the sun and the light and the moon and the stars grow dark, and the clouds return after the rain; when the keepers of the house tremble, and the strong men stoop, when the grinders cease because they are few, and those looking through the windows grow dim; when the doors to the street are closed and the sound of grinding fades; when people rise up at the sound of birds, but all their songs grow faint; when people are afraid of heights and of dangers in the streets; when the almond tree blossoms and the grasshopper drags itself along, and desire no longer is stirred. Then people go to their eternal home and mourners go about the streets. Remember him—before the silver cord is severed, and the golden bowl is broken; before the pitcher is shattered at the spring, and the wheel broken at the well, and the dust returns to the ground it came from, and the spirit returns to God who gave it. 'Meaningless! Meaningless!' says the Teacher. 'Everything is meaningless!'

Before the sun, and light, and moon, and stars grow dark, and the clouds return after the rain. If we understand this in the context of the general consummation of the world, this chapter is consistent with the words of the Lord, in which he says: 'There will be tribulation and distress, such as has not been from the beginning of the creation, but will never be. For the sun will grow dark, and the moon will not give its light, and the stars will fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens will be shaken' (Matth. XXIV), referring to the guardians of the house, so that the house may be understood as this world, and strong men, deceived by error, and the opposing strengths will be destroyed. But if the perfection of each individual is referred to the end of this life: both the sun, and the moon, and the stars, and the clouds, and the rain will cease for him who is dead. Otherwise: Rejoice, young man, O Christian people, and enjoy the good things that have been granted to you by God, and in all these things know that you will be judged by the Lord. And do not think that because the previous branches were broken off, and you have been grafted into the root of the good olive tree, that you are therefore secure: but remove from your heart and body pleasures and other vices, remembering your Creator, before the day of evil comes upon you, and the incurable, in which punishments are prepared for sinners: lest when you sin, the sun of justice at midday kills you, and the light of knowledge perishes, and the brightness of the moon, that is, the Church, is taken away, and the stars fall, of which it is written: In which you shine as luminaries in the world having the rule of life (Philippians 2:15). And elsewhere: one star differs from another star in glory. Before the clouds return after the rain (III Cor. XV, 1), [so that] the Prophets, who water the hearts of believers with their words and their rains, may not return to their seat once they have perceived that you are unworthy of their rain: to Him, namely, from whom they were sent. On the day when the guardians of the house are moved, and the men of valor perish. The guardians of the house can be understood as either the sun and moon, and the rest of the chorus of stars, or as the Angels who preside over this world. But the men of valor, whether interpreted as the strong men who will perish according to Symmachus, or as the demons who will wander according to Aquila, are also felt, having derived the name of the strong ones themselves from the strong devil. The Lord overcomes and binds him, as the parable of the Gospel says, and lays waste to his house (Luke 11). Otherwise: The guardians of the house, who refer everything that is written back to the body of man, believe that the ribs are meant, because the intestines are enclosed by them, and the entirety of the soft stomach is preserved. But they consider strong men to be the legs: they connect the sun, the moon, and the stars to the eyes, ears, nostrils, and all the senses of the head. However, they do this because they are compelled by necessity to understand not about angels and demons, the sun, the moon, and the stars, but about the body parts of man that follow. And the grinding will cease: for they are diminished: and they that look out of the windows are darkened. And in the consummation of the world, when the charity of many shall grow cold, and the souls of the masters, who can provide celestial food to the believers, shall be diminished and translated into heaven, then those who have partially looked upon the light of knowledge in this world shall be enveloped in darkness. For if it is said to Moses, 'I will put thee in a hole of the rock, and I will cover thee with my hand until I pass.' (Exod. XXXIII, 22): how much more does each soul see the truth through a hole and some dark caves! Alternatively: There are two grinding mills, of which one will be taken and the other left, the Gospel does not remain silent (Matthew 24:41). When these are diminished and have stopped, it is necessary that all the light of knowledge be taken away from the eyes. Alternatively: They think that the saying about milling teeth refers to the mills stopping because they have been diminished. When extreme old age has arrived, teeth also either wear down or fall out: with these ground up, the food is sent into the stomach. But as they grow darker, they believe they see through holes: because in those worn by age the eye grows dim, and the sight is obscure. And they will close the gates in the street in the humility of the grinding voice: and the voice of the bird will rise; and all the daughters of song will be silenced. When the voice of the grinder is weakened, and the teaching of the masters ceases, consequently all things will cease: among which, the gates will be closed in the street, so that, like the foolish virgins of the Gospel (Matthew 25), each one may have their street doors closed, and they will not be able to buy oil. Certainly, foolish virgins wandering in the street close the chamber of the bridegroom when they enter with him. For if the way that leads to life is narrow and confined, and the way that leads to death is broad and spacious (Matthew VII), then rightly, with the cooled charity of many, the door of teachings is closed in the streets. In the following verse, in that which he says: 'And he will rise at the voice of the bird, or the sparrow, let us use in time, if and when we see a sinner rising at the voice of the bishop or the priest through penance.' Moreover, we can also understand this extraordinarily, although we do not follow the context of the chapter, and accept it concerning the final resurrection when the dead will rise at the voice of the archangel. It is not surprising if we compare the trumpet of angels to a sparrow, since every voice compared to Christ is weak. And as far as I can recall, I have never known a sparrow to be read in a negative sense of the law. The righteous man speaks in the tenth psalm: In the Lord I trust; how do you say to my soul, 'Fly away to the mountain like a sparrow.' And elsewhere: I have watched, and have become as a solitary sparrow on the housetop (Psalm 101:8). Also, in another place: Even the sparrow has found a home for herself (Psalm 83:4). In another way: Closed doors in the streets want to receive the steps of the weak old man: that he may always sit and not be able to walk. Moreover, the humility of the grinding voice is interpreted from the jaws, because it cannot chew food and its voice is barely heard with constricted breath. Furthermore, he gets up at the sound of a bird, because, with the blood already freezing and the moisture drying up, which are the substances that nourish sleep, he awakens at the slightest noise, and in the middle of the night, when the rooster crows, he quickly gets up: unable to turn his limbs on the bed any more. He also becomes mute, or as it is better expressed in Hebrew, he becomes deaf to daughters of song, meaning that the hearing of the elderly becomes heavier, and they are unable to distinguish between voices, nor to take pleasure in songs. Indeed, this is what Berzellai says to David, not wanting to cross the Jordan. But even those from on high will fear and be afraid on the way. That is, they will not be able to enter the difficult path, and with weary knees and trembling step, even on a level road, they will fear stumbling. And the almond tree shall blossom, and the locust shall fatten, and the caper plant shall be dispersed: for man shall go to his everlasting home, and they shall go around the streets weeping. By metaphor, even now, the sermon is about the limbs of man. When old age comes, the hair turns gray, the feet swell, desire cools, and man is dissolved by death. Then he shall return to his own land and to the house of his everlasting tomb: with proper funeral rites, let a crowd of mourners precede the funeral procession. However, the flower of the almond, which we have placed for the dogs, is interpreted by some as a sacred thorn, because as the flesh of the nuts diminishes, the thorn grows and blossoms. Furthermore, when it says 'the locust will fatten up', it should be understood that in our codices it is written 'locust', which is an ambiguous word for them. It can be translated as either 'anklebone' or 'locust'. So how, in the beginning of Jeremiah, does the word 'Soced' mean both 'nut' and 'vigils' when the accent is changed? And it is said to him: Jeremiah, what do you see? And He answered: A nutcracker. And the Lord said to him: You have seen well: for I will watch over my word to perform it (Jerem. I, 11), or that one: and it has the etymology of a nut, that God will watch and repay the people what they deserve (Als. it is owed), and this is the occasion of the word. So now the ambiguity of the word through its etymology indicates swollen legs of the old and burdened with gout humors. Not that this happens to all old men, but that it often occurs, συνεκδοχικῶς on one side, may be called the whole. In that place where we have it, it is called capparis in Hebrew (צפאריס): which itself is also ambiguous, and is interpreted as love, desire, or longing, or capparis. And as we have said above, it signifies that the libido of old men diminishes and the organs of intercourse are weakened. This is because these words, when pronounced in their own terms, and almond, and locust, and capparis, have different meanings, and they are derived figuratively to refer to the senses that are fitting for an old man. It should also be known that where the Seventy Interpreters now placed the almond, the word itself is Soced, which is in the beginning of Jeremiah; but there it is turned into a hazelnut, here into an almond. Symmachus, sensing something different in this place, interpreted it much differently. For he says: 'Upon these things also they shall see from on high, and there shall be terror in the way, and the vigilant shall fall asleep, and the spirit of strength shall be dissolved. For a man shall go into the house of his eternity, and they shall go around in the street mourning.' Following the interpretation of Laodicea, it is neither pleasing to the Jews nor to the Christians: as it is far from the Hebrews, and it rejects following the Septuagint translators.

Before the silver cord is snapped, or the golden bowl is broken, or the pitcher is shattered at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern, and the dust returns to the earth as it was, and the breath returns to God who gave it. Vanity of vanities, says the Preacher, vanity of vanities! All is vanity. He concludes the sentence begun with the grand parenthesis (which he had inserted after the words: And remember your Creator in the days of your youth: before the days of trouble come and the years draw near when you will say, 'I have no pleasure in them'), with a similar ending, saying: Before the silver cord is snapped, or this or that happens. But the silver cord, this white life, and the breath that is given to us from heaven, it shows. The returning of the golden thread also signifies the soul that returns to where it came from. Furthermore, the two remaining things that follow, the breaking of the water jar above the fountain, and the breaking of the wheel above the lake, are mysteries of death by metaphor. For just as a water jar that is broken ceases to draw water, and a wheel by which water is lifted from a lake and wells, if it is broken: or as the Seventy Interpreters ((Others)) wished, if it is rolled up in its cord, the use of water is interrupted: so also when the silver cord is interrupted, and the stream of the soul returns to the source, the human being will perish. And as it follows more clearly: Dust will return to its own earth from which it was taken: and the spirit will return to the Lord who gave it. From this it is clear how ridiculous it is to think that souls are produced together with bodies and not by God, but by the parents of the bodies. For when the flesh returns to the earth and the spirit returns to God, who gave it, it is evident that God is the parent of souls, not humans. After describing the mortality of human beings, beautifully repeating the opening of his book, he says: Vanity of vanities, says Ecclesiastes, all is vanity. For when all the labor of mortals, which has been discussed throughout the entire volume, comes to this point, that they return as dust to their own earth, and their soul returns to the place from which it was taken, it is of great vanity to toil in this world and acquire nothing profitable. And furthermore, because the wise Ecclesiastes became: he taught knowledge to the people, and caused them to hear: and searching, he composed proverbs. Ecclesiastes sought much, in order to find the words of the will, and to correctly write the words of truth. The wisdom which Solomon surpassed all the human race with, now also in the end of his small work he professes that he was not content with the institution of the old Law: but he plunged himself into deep questions, and composed proverbs and parables to teach the people, promising one thing in the core and another on the surface. Indeed, we learn in the Gospels (Matthew 13 and 15) that proverbs do not always mean what is written. The Lord spoke to the people in parables and proverbs, but he explained them privately to the Apostles. Therefore, it is evident that the Book of Proverbs contains not straightforward instructions as some may think, but rather hidden teachings that need to be diligently sought out, like gold in the earth, a kernel in a nut, or a hidden fruit in the prickly coverings of chestnuts. In them, the divine meaning must be searched deeply. Moreover, he added that he wanted to understand the causes and nature of things, as well as the arrangement and wisdom of God: why each thing was made, or how it was made. He desired to know this so that, after the dissolution of body and soul, he hoped to see the return to heaven, saying: I will see the heavens, the work of your fingers (Psalm 8:4). This is what Solomon endeavored to find in the present, to comprehend with the human mind, enclosed in the barrier of the body, the truth known only to God. The words of the wise, like goads, and as if nails driven deep, are given by one shepherd to those who gather. Lest it seem that after the law of God a presumptuous teacher should suddenly burst forth and claim for himself the doctrine which Moses, not so much of his own accord as moved by the wrath of God, first undertook, and then was inspired by Him: he declares that his words are the words of the wise, which correct transgressors in the likeness of goads, and stir up the sluggish steps of mortals with the sharp sting. And so they are firm, as if nails driven deep into a solid surface, not to be presented by the authority of one, but by the counsel and consent of all the masters. And in order that human wisdom might not be despised, He said that it was bestowed by one Shepherd; that is, although many teach, yet the author of teaching is the Lord alone. This passage is directed against those who consider one God of the Old Testament and another of the Gospel, because one Shepherd has instructed the council of the wise. But both Prophets and Apostles are wise. It should also be noted that the words of the wise are said to sting, not to fondle, nor to touch lasciviously with a gentle hand, but to inflict pain and wounds upon those who are straying and, as we said above, are slow in repentance. Therefore, if someone's speech does not sting, but gives pleasure to the listeners, that is not the speech of a wise person. The words of the wise are like goads. Since they provoke the sinner to conversion, they are both strong and given by the counsel of the saints, and granted by one shepherd, and founded on a solid root. With this goad, not yet Paul, but still Saul, I believe he heard on the way the rebuke of error: 'It is hard for you to kick against the goad' (Acts 9:5).

And, my son, beware of being absorbed in these things. Making many books is not an end in itself, and much study is a weariness of the flesh. Besides these words which have been given by one shepherd and approved by the counsel and consensus of the wise, do nothing, claim nothing for yourself. Follow in the footsteps of the ancients and do not deviate from their authority. Otherwise, as you search through many things, an infinite number of books will confront you, pulling you into error and making you labor in vain. It certainly teaches that we should strive for brevity and focus more on the meaning rather than the words, against the philosophers and the learned men of this age, who try to assert the falsity of their doctrines through the vanity and multiplication of words. On the contrary, divine Scripture is contained within a concise circle, and the more it expands in meaning, the more it contracts in speech. For God has made the perfect and concise word on earth, and His word is near in our mouth and in our heart (Romans 10:8; Deuteronomy 30:14). Otherwise: Frequent reading and daily meditation tend to be more work for the soul than for the body. For just as whatever is done by hand and body is completed by the labor of the hand and body, so what pertains to reading is more the labor of the mind. From which it seems to me that things pertaining to the multitude of books should be understood differently than most people assume. It is customary with the Scriptures, even though there are many books, if they do not disagree among themselves and are written on the same subject, to call them one volume. Indeed, both the Gospel and the Law of the Lord, which converts souls (Psalm 18:8), are singularly called so, even though there are many Gospels and many commandments of the law. Thus, the volume sealed in the Book of Isaiah is all divine Scripture (Isaiah 29), and in one chapter of the books, Ezekiel and John partake (Ezekiel 8; Revelation 10). The Savior, also prophesied by the voices of all the saints who came before, says: In the book it is written about me (Psalm 39:9). Therefore, according to this understanding, I believe the command now is to not let more books be written. For whatever you say, if it is referred to Him who was in the beginning with God, and God the Word (Joan. I, 2), it is one volume: and countless books are called one Law, one Gospel. But if you argue about different and conflicting things, and with excessive curiosity you bring your mind here and there, even in one book, there are many books. Where it is said: From much talking you will not escape sin (Prov. X, 19). Therefore, in such books there is no end. For every good thing, and truth, has a certain end; but malice and falsehood are without end. And the more they are sought, the greater their series becomes. Concerning this matter, it is the study and meditation that is the labor of the flesh. Of the flesh, I say, not of the spirit. For indeed, the spirit also has its labor, according to what the Apostle says: But by the grace of God I am what I am: and His grace in me hath not been void. But I have labored more abundantly than all they: yet not I, but the grace of God with me (I Cor. XV, 10). And the Savior: I have toiled, crying out (Psalm 68:4). The end of the discourse of the word is very easy to hear: Fear God and keep His commandments. This is the duty of every man, because God will bring every deed into judgment, whether it is good or evil. The Hebrews say that among the other writings of Solomon, which have become old and have not remained in memory, this book seemed to be worthy of being forgotten, because it asserts the vanity of God's creatures and considers everything to be nothing, and it prefers passing food, drink, and worldly pleasures to everything. From this one chapter, it earned authority to be included in the number of divine volumes, as he condensed his entire argument and catalog into this recapitulation, and declared that the end of his discourse is very easy to hear and does not contain anything difficult in itself, namely that we should fear God and keep His commandments. For indeed, man was created ad hoc so that, understanding his creator, he might worship him with fear, honor, and the work of his commandments. For when the time of judgment comes, whatever has been done by us will stand before the judge and await a long-awaited sentence, and each one will receive according to his own work, whether he has done something evil or good. But for what we have set forth: Symmachus and the Seventy translated it as 'concerning every hidden thing, whether it be good or evil,' or certainly 'concerning every despised thing,' or at least 'concerning every unknown thing,' which we will also give an account of on the day of judgment, even of idle words and actions not done out of volition but out of ignorance. On the other hand: Because the fear of slaves is, and perfect love casts out fear (1 John 4:18), and in divine Scripture both for beginners and for the perfect, fear is called twofold: I think now that fear is said of the one who is perfected in virtues, according to this: Those who fear him lack nothing (Psalm 34:10). Or certainly, because he is still a man and has not yet received the name of God, he has this reason for his existence, that being placed in a body, he may fear God. Because every deed, that is, all men, God will bring to judgment over all things, which were arranged and spoken by him differently, whether in this way or that. Woe to those who call evil good, and good evil (Isaiah 5:20).

Commentary on Ecclesiastes

Jerome Commentary on Ecclesiastes

Translated by Robin McGregor.

Available in Latin from public domain Migne Editors, Patrologiae Cursus Completus.

PREFACE

I remember just five years ago when I was still at Rome¹ and studying virtuous Blesilla's book of Ecclesiastes that I taught her to think lightly of her generation and to esteem futile everything that she saw in the world. I remember too being asked by her to examine individually all the difficult passages in a short treatise so that she might be able to understand what she was reading without me always being present. Accordingly, since she was taken from us by her sudden death while I was still doing the preparation for my work, and since we, it seems, dear Paula and Eustochium, did not deserve to have such a companion in our lives, I then ceased from my work, silenced by the terrible grief of such a misfortune.

Now though, situated in Bethlehem, clearly a more holy city, I can fulfil that promise to the memory of Blesilla and to you, and remind you briefly that I have used no authority in this work, but have rather translated directly from the Hebrew itself and have adapted it to the traditional language of the Septuagint in those passages which do not differ greatly from the Hebrew. Occasionally I have taken account of the Greek versions, those of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion so that I do not deter the reader's enthusiasm with too much novelty. I have also not pursued those streams of conjecture, which lack a factual basis, for I do not believe this to be sensible.

CHAPTER 1

1:1. The words of Ecclesiastes, son of David, King in Jerusalem. The Scriptures state very clearly that Solomon was known by three names: 'Peace-making', that is 'Solomon'; 'Yedidia', that is 'beloved of Yahweh'; and the name used here 'Qoheleth', that is Ecclesiastes. He is called Ecclesiastes in Greek because he gathered together a crowd of people, a congregation, which we can call a demagogue because he spoke to the people and his sermon was not addressed specifically to one man but more usually to all men. Moreover he is called 'peace-making' and 'beloved of Yahweh' because there was peace during his reign and the Lord loved him. For also Psalms 44, and 71, are known by titles connected with love and peace-making. Although these psalms pertain to Christ and the Church they exhibit Solomon's joy and strength, and according to tradition were composed concerning Solomon.

He also produced an equal number of titles to the three volumes: Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Songs. He teaches for children in Proverbs and gives instruction in the form of maxims almost with a sense of duty, and his sermons here are repeated continually to his son. In Ecclesiastes he teaches a man of mature age that he should not think anything in the world to be perpetual, but that all things that we perceive are in fact vain and fleeting. In Song of Songs he embraces an elderly man in the covenant, who has already been prepared in spurning his times. For unless we first abandon our moral failings and renounce the pomposity of our world, and prepare ourselves so we are ready for the arrival of Christ, we will not be able to say: "let him kiss me from the kiss of his mouth"². Philosophers educate their followers in a manner similar to this type of instruction: first of all they teach ethics, then explain physics, and then anyone whom they see to excel in these first two they then go on to teach theology.

Moreover even this should be examined more closely because Solomon is named differently in the three books. In Proverbs for example he is thus named: The Proverbs of Solomon, the son of David, King of Israel.³ But in Ecclesiastes: The words of Ecclesiastes, son of David, King of Jerusalem. 'Israel' in fact is unnecessary here because it is not found in the Greek or Latin manuscripts. But in Song of Songs he is neither named 'son of David', not 'King of Israel' or 'King of Jerusalem', but only as The Song of Songs of Solomon. This is just as the Proverbs and the crude arrangement pertain to the twelve tribes and to the whole of Israel. And although the contempt of the world only comes to city-dwellers, these are the inhabitants of Jerusalem, therefore Solomon intends Song of Songs particularly for those who desire spiritual enlightenment. To those readers just embarking on their education paternal honour and the authority of the king are claimed in their own merit, but to those who have completed their learning, and in the case where the disciple has been enlightened not by fear, but by love, his own name suffices. Then, he is equal to his teacher and he is unaware that he is a king.

This is the case here. But in a more spiritual understanding Solomon was peace making and beloved of the Lord

God, and Ecclesiastes can be seen as our Christ too, who destroying the inner wall and expelling evil from his flesh, makes each of them one, saying -

"I give you my peace, I relinquish my peace to you"⁴, about which the Lord says to his disciples "This is my chosen son whom I love: listen to him" ⁵, and that is he who is father of the Church.

Speaking by no means to the Synagogue of the Jews but to the crowd of people the King of Jerusalem (that which was built out of the living rocks, not that about which he says "Jerusalem, Jerusalem, you that kill prophets" 6, and "Look, let your empty house be left for us" 7), but that by which it is forbidden to swear because it is the city of a great king. This is the son of David, to whom the blind cried out in the Gospel: "pity us, son of David"; and the whole crowd sang out in unison: "Hosanna to the son of David". Then there is the fact that the word of God does not come to him as is the case with Jeremiah and the other prophets, but on account of his being rich, being a king, holding power, his wisdom and his other virtues, he speaks to the men of the church himself, and he speaks words to the apostles about which Psalm 18.5 tells us: "their sound went out to the whole world and their words went to the ends of the earth". Some scholars think wrongly, therefore, that we are tempted into desire and luxury by this book, when it teaches quite to the contrary: everything we perceive in the world is vain; nor is it fitting for us to seek those things eagerly which perish while we possess them.

1:2. Vanity of vanities said Ecclesiastes, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. If all things that God made are truly good then how can all things be considered vanity, and not only vanity, but even vanity of vanities? Just as Song of Songs means a song that stands out from amongst all songs, so we see that in

"vanity of vanities" the degree of vanity is shown. It is also written similarly in Psalm 38.6:

"Nevertheless every living man is vanity." If living man is vanity then a dead man must be vanity of vanities. We read in Exodus that Moses' face is glorified so much that the children of Israel are not able to see him⁸. Paul the apostle said that his glory was not

