

The Best Way to Come to Christ

by C.H. Spurgeon

To come to Christ effectively, one must come with the right motivation, intending to obtain the fullness of love and the uttermost of grace.

Scripture: Matthew 7:7, John 10:10, Romans 8:32, Ephesians 3:20, James 1:5

Topics: "Grace", "Abundance in Christ"

Description

C.H. Spurgeon emphasizes that the best way to come to Christ is with the intention of receiving the fullness of His grace and love, rather than merely seeking minimal relief or a chance at salvation. He encourages believers to approach Jesus with the expectation of obtaining all that He has promised, rather than settling for a mere fraction of His blessings. Spurgeon warns against the mindset of coming to Christ with limited desires, urging instead for a heart that seeks the complete plenitude of grace available in Him.

Transcript

The best way to come to Christ is to come meaning to get everything, and to obtain all the plenitude of grace, which he has laid up in store, and promised freely to give. Some poor souls who come to Jesus Christ seem as if they wanted a little relief from fear, a hope that they may just get saved, and a fair chance of going to heaven when they die. Pray do not come in that way, my dear friend. Come intending to obtain the fullness of love, the uttermost of grace.
