

January 28. 1678. the Womb of the Morning, and the Dew of Youth.

by Jane Lead

Through faith and prayer, we can tap into the eternal power of the Womb of the Morning, bringing healing and renewal to our lives.

Scripture: Psalm 110:3, Psalm 139:16, Ephesians 6:12, James 5:16

Topics: "Spiritual Renewal", "Divine Power"

Description

Jane Lead preaches about the transformative power of the eternal Morning Light breaking through the darkness of our minds, conceiving pure life within us. She shares a personal revelation about invoking the celestial dew to renew and restore youth and strength, overcoming fears and concerns through earnest faith and prayer. Jane encourages the congregation to strive together in prayer to stir up divine power, gaining dominion over adversities and conspiracies.

Transcript

This Word was opened to me. From the Womb of the Morning, thou hast the Dew of thy Youth. The Morning signifieth the Day breaking away from the Night, and so becomes a clear and distinct Light without Clouds, the everlasting Sun rising for to disperse all. Now this was shewn me to be that Light, which breaks through the darkness of our Minds, and becomes as an enclosed Womb, where the pure Life is conceived. For the Dew of this Morning-break makes it spring, as a tender Herb in a fresh and youthful Power.

And upon some occasion of fear, and concern, that was upon me for the Doctor, as to this visible Body declining through Age, and a spending pernicious Cough, that I saw inwardly might impair his Strength, and thereby stop the Spring of Coelestial Fire.

All which evil consequences I feared might him devour. This was made applicable to him, that from this eternal Morning-Womb his youth might spring and renew again, through the distilling Dew, falling from the Coelestial Element. Though his outward Life did seem to be breaking away, yet through earnest Faith and Prayer, this healing and recovering Dew may be brought down for his repair, and overthrow the malignity of the Stars.

Therefore strive together in Prayer, till ye do stir up both Fire and Air, that ye may have Dominion over all conspiracies in divine Power.
